

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

CG.

Library of the College of New Jersey. 1889

Purchased in 1889

22 3382 113

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London
HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE
SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

•
TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XXIX

Orford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1886

[All rights reserved]

THE GRĪHYA-SŪTRAS

RULES OF VEDIC DOMESTIC CEREMONIES

TRANSLATED BY

HERMANN OLDENBERG .

PART I

SÂṆKHĀYANA-GRĪHYA-SŪTRA

ÂSVALĀYANA-GRĪHYA-SŪTRA

PÂRASKARA-GRĪHYA-SŪTRA

KHÂDIRA-GRĪHYA-SŪTRA

Orford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1886

[All rights reserved]

CONTENTS.

SÂÑKHÂYANA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	3
TRANSLATION	12

ÂSVALÂYANA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION	153
TRANSLATION	159

PÂRASKARA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION	263
TRANSLATION	269

KHÂDIRA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION	371
TRANSLATION	374

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East 437

* * The Second Volume will contain a GENERAL INTRODUCTION to the Grihya-Sûtras.

5021
798
vol. 29
(cop. 1)
8.1

SÂṆKHÂYANA-GR/HYA-
SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

SÂÑKHÂYANA-GRÎHYA-SÛTRA.

THE Grîhya-sûtra ascribed to Sâñkhâya, which has been edited and translated into German by myself in the XVth volume of the Indische Studien, is based on the first of the four Vedas, the Rig-veda in the Bâshkala recension¹, and among the Brâhmana texts, on the Kaushîtaka. Its reputed author, whom we ordinarily find called by his family name, Sâñkhâya, had the proper name Suyagñâ. This we may infer from the lists of Vedic teachers given in different Grîhya texts where they describe the Tarpana ceremony. Though in these lists the order of names varies very much, yet the two names Suyagñâ and Sâñkhâya are constantly placed side by side, so that this fact alone would render it probable that they belonged to the same person. Thus we read in the Sâñkhâya-Grîhya IV, 10 = VI, 1 :

Kaholaṃ Kaushîtakim, Mahâkaushîtakim, Suyagñâṃ Sâñkhâyânam, Âsvalâyanam, Aitareyam, Mahaitareyam.

Here we have grouped together the two Brâhmana authors (with the fictitious doubles, the great Kaushîtaki, the great Aitareya) and the two corresponding Sûtra authors belonging to the two chief branches of the Rig-veda literature; first comes one Brâhmana author (for Kahola Kaushîtaki is one person) with the Sûtra author connected with him, then the second Sûtra author and the corresponding Brâhmana teacher.

In the Sâmbavya-Grîhya (Indische Studien, XV, 154) the corresponding passage runs thus :

Gârgya- Gautama- Sâkalya- Bâbhavya- Mândattavya

¹ See IV, 5, 9.

[sic]- Mândûkeyâh Suyagñā- Sâmkhyâyana- Gâtukar-nyeyâh [sic] Paimga [sic]- Sâmbavy'-Aitareyâh.

The same Grîhya still more explicitly bears witness to the name of Suyagñā SâŒkhâyana, by adding at the end of the list from which these names are quoted the following words: Suyagñā Sâkhâyanas [sic] tri[pya]tu, i. e. 'May Suyagñā SâŒkhâyana satiate himself (with the water offering).'

In the Âsvalâyana-Grîhya III, 4, we read:

Kaholam Kaushîtakam Mahâkaushîtakam PaiŒgyam
MahâpaiŒgyam Suyagñānam SâŒkhâyānam Aitareyam Mahaitareyam.

We may also quote here a Kârikâ given by Nârâyana¹ in his great commentary on the SâŒkhâyana-Grîhya (I, 1, 10):

Atrâranipradânam yad adhvaryuh kurute kvakîti²

matam tan na Suyagñāsyā, mathitam so 'tra nekḥhati.

It would perhaps be hazardous to claim for the author of this Kârikâ the authority of an independent witness, for very likely he may have derived his knowledge from the lists of teachers which we have quoted before. But at all events the concordance of the three Grîhya texts furnishes a proof which, I think, cannot be set aside by another testimony which we must mention now. At the end of the Kaushîtaki-Âranyaka (Adhyâya 15) we find a Vamsa or list of the teachers by whom the knowledge contained in that Âranyaka is supposed to have been handed down. The opening words of this list run thus:

'Om! Now follows the Vamsa. Adoration to the Brahman! Adoration to the teachers! We have learnt (this text) from Guṇâkhyā SâŒkhâyana, Guṇâkhyā SâŒkhâyana from Kahola Kaushîtaki, Kahola Kaushîtaki from Uddâlaka Âruzi, &c.'

It is a very natural supposition that the author of this list intended to begin with the name of the Doctor eponymus, if we may say so, of the Sûtras of his school, and then to proceed to name the Doctor eponymus of the Brâhmanas, and after him the more ancient teachers and sages. But whether the author of this passage really supposed this Guṇākhyā Sāṅkhāyana to be the author of the Sāṅkhāyana-sūtras, or not, we shall be justified in following rather the unanimous statements of the texts previously quoted, and in accepting in accordance with them, as the full name of our Sūtrakāra, the name Suyagñā Sāṅkhāyana.

¹ Manuscr. Chambers 712 (Berlin Royal Library), fol. 12 b.

² Comp. Pâraskara-Grîhya I, 2, 5: arâranipradânam eke.

The Grīhya-sūtra which has been here translated presupposes, as all Grīhya-sūtras do, the existence of the Srauta-sūtra, with which it is intimately connected and which is referred to in the Grīhya in several instances¹.

Here the question arises whether the Grīhya-sūtra was composed by the same author to whom the authorship of the Srauta-sūtra belongs, so that the two texts form together, and would, in the conception of their author, be intended to form, one great body of Sūtras, or, on the other hand, whether the Grīhya-sūtra is a later addition to the Srauta-sūtra. On this question I have ventured, in the preface to my German edition of *Sāṅkhāyana*², to offer a few remarks which, however, I feel bound to say do not seem to myself quite decisive. I there pointed out that the Grīhya-sūtra contains a few aphorisms which we should rather expect would have found their place in the Srauta-sūtra, if the two texts were composed by the same author and on a common plan³. But, apart from the possibility that in a work of such considerable extent as that collection of Sūtras would be, such trifling incongruences or irregularities might very easily escape the attention even of a very careful author, there is still another objection that may be urged against the inference drawn by me from such passages. It can be shown⁴ that the Grīhya texts which we possess are based to some extent on one common original, from which they have taken verbatim, or nearly verbatim, a certain number of aphorisms. Thus if we were to suppose that Sāṅkhāyana,

¹ See, for instance, Grīhya I, 16, 1 (Srauta IV, 16, 2).

² Indische Studien, vol. xv, pp. 11, 12.

³ The Sūtras with reference to which I made that observation are I, 8, 14; 14, 13-15; II, 15, 10. Comp. Srauta-sūtra II, 7, 12; IV, 21.

⁴ I intend to give some proofs of this in the General Introduction to the Grīhya-sūtras which will be given in the second volume of these translations.

or whosoever the author of this Grîhya-sûtra may have been, found the aphorisms on which I once based my argument, in that original text, this would explain the occurrence of those passages in a portion of the great body of Sûtras different from that in which we should expect to meet them. Now several of the passages in question recur identically in other Grîhya texts, so that we may infer indeed that they are taken from that lost original, and we have no means to judge whether the other similar passages are not taken from it also. I believe, therefore, that the opinion which I once pronounced regarding the relation in which the two Sûtra texts stand to each other, cannot be vindicated, and that it is better to leave that question unanswered until perhaps further discoveries throw a new light on it.

For the reconstruction of the correct text of the Sâṅkhâ-yana-Grîhya, and occasionally also for its interpretation, it is of considerable importance that we possess, besides the Devanâgarî MSS. of the text and of the commentaries, a South Indian MS. written in the Grantha character (MS. Whish 78 in the library of the Royal Asiatic Society, London) which contains a Grîhya based on that of Sâṅkhâ-yana and following it, during the greater part of the work, nearly word for word¹. It is designated in the MS., at the end of the single Adhyâyas, as 'Kaushîtaka-Grîhya.' It therefore professes to follow the teaching of the same Brâhmana which is adhered to also by the Sûtra school of Sâṅkhâ-yana. A metrical commentary, which in the MS. follows after the text, names in its opening Sloka a teacher Sâmbavya as the author of this Sûtra. The Sloka runs thus:

Natvâ Kaushîtakâkâryam Sâmbavyam sûtakrîttamam grîhyam tadiyam samkshipya vyâkhyâsye bahuvismrîtam.
 ('Having bowed to the most excellent author of Sûtras, to Sâmbavya, the Âkârya belonging to the Kaushîtaka school, I shall compose a short commentary on his Grîhya, which has been forgotten by many.')

The name of this Sâmbavya does not occur among the teachers enumerated in the description of the Tarpana ceremony, neither in Sāṅkhāyana IV, 10, nor in Āsvalāyana III, 4; but in the list of the Sāmbavya-Gṛihya itself it is found (see above, p. 4); and besides it seems to me also to be mentioned in Āsvalāyana-Gṛihya IV, 8, 24, in which passage it will scarcely be considered too bold to conjecture Sāmbavya instead of Sāṃvatya.

¹ Comp. the statements given with regard to that text in my German edition of Sâṅkhâ-yana, Indische Studien, XV, 4 seq.

Though the MS. of the Sāmbavya-Gṛihya is very confused, and full of blunders of all sorts, yet it deserves to be attentively studied by all scholars who are accustomed to look, if not in theory yet in practice, on the agreement of a few Vedic text MSS., or of a few Indian commentaries, as if it had a claim to an unassailable authority to which European Orientalists would have no right to deny their faith. In the Sāṅkhāyana-Gṛihya a number of passages are found in which corrupt readings or perverse explanations are supported by all the Sāṅkhāyana MSS. and by all the Sāṅkhāyana commentaries, and if, by a rare and fortunate chance, the Sāmbavya Grantha MS., which is unaffected by the blunders of the Devanāgarī MSS., had not been discovered in the south of the peninsula, these readings and explanations would seem to rest on the unanimous agreement of tradition. Perhaps it seems unnecessary to dwell on this point, for very few Orientalists, if any, would be prepared to assert that Indian tradition is infallible. But when looking over many of the editions and translations of the Vedic texts, even such as have been published in the last years, one finds plentiful occasion to observe that in hundreds of passages tradition has been practically treated, by scholars of very high merit, as if it had an authority not very far removed from infallibility. A case like that of which we have to speak here, in which a whole set of MSS., and occasionally also of commentaries, can be tested by a MS. of a nearly related text, written in a different character and in a distant part of India, will strengthen our belief that we are right in judging for ourselves, even if that judgment should oppose itself to such authorities as Nārāyaṇa or Rāmaṇḍra or Gayarāma.

Perhaps it will not be out of place to add here, as an illustration of these remarks, a few observations on one of the passages in which the rejection of the traditional Sâṅkhâya reading, together with the traditional Sâṅkhâya explanation, is confirmed by the Sâmbavya MS., though no doubt, even without the aid of that MS., we ought to have formed the right conclusions for ourselves. At Sâṅkhâya II, 4, 1. 2 the traditional reading is :

Mama vrata hridayam te dadhâmi mama kittam anu kittam te astu | mama vâkam ekamanâ gushasva Brîhaspatish tvâ niyunaktu mahyam iti | kâmasya brahma-karyasyâsâv iti.

Sâṅkhâya is treating here of the Upanayana, or the initiation of the student who is received by a teacher and intends to study the Veda with him. The teacher on that occasion is to pronounce the Mantra which we have just transcribed, and which translated into English would run thus :

‘Under my will I take thy heart ; after my mind shall thy mind follow ; in my word thou shalt rejoice with all thy heart ; may Brîhaspati join thee to me.’ ‘Of the Brahma-karya of Kâma (or lust), N. N.1’

The MSS. give the end of the passage as we have printed it above, kâmasya brahma-karyasyâsâv iti. This Nârâyana explains in the following way. Brahma-karya here means the observances which the student has to keep through certain periods of time before the different texts which he has to learn can be taught him. First comes the Sâvitri verse, for which he prepares himself by observing the sâvitra vrata ; this lasts either one year, or three days, or the Sâvitri can also be taught him immediately (see chap. 5, 1-3). Then follows the sukriya vrata, of three days, or twelve days, or one year, or any other period of time according to the teacher’s pleasure (chap. 11, 10) ; by this vrata the student is enabled to study the main portion of the Veda. Finally come the sâkvara, vrâtika, aupanishada observances, each of which has to last one year, and which refer to the different parts of the Âranyaka (see chap. 11, 11 seq., and the sixth book). Now the formula of which we treat here refers principally to the sâvitra vrata. The teacher announces to the student how long he has to keep that vrata. He says (Sûtra 1), 'May Brihaspati join thee to me (Sûtra 2) for a brahma-kârya (i. e. a vrata) of such and such (kâmasya) a time (one year, three days, &c.), N. N. 1' Kâma (the pleasure) would thus stand here as an expletive which was to be replaced in each single case by the indication of the real space of time that depended on the teacher's pleasure ('... niyunaktu mahyam sâmvatsarikasya trairâtrikasya vânvakshikasya vâ sâvitrasya brahma-kâryasyâmukâmukasarmann iti vâkyasamyogo gñe-yak'). The same should take place at the corresponding forms of Upanayana which had to precede the entrance of the student upon the sukriya, sâkvara, &c. observances. This is the explanation of Nârâyana, with which Râma-kandra and all the other commentaries agree. It will scarcely be necessary to observe that the singular use of kâma, on which this traditional explanation rests, is neither in accordance with the meaning of the word, nor supported by any parallel texts. So, even before I had the opportunity of collating the Sâmbavya MS., I had no doubt that the system of the Vratas has nothing at all to do with our Sûtra, and that its text should be made intelligible by a slight alteration touching only the quantity of the a in two syllables, by writing, Kâmasya brahma-kâryasy asâv iti (thou art the Brahma-kârin of Kâma, N. N. 1), as we read in Âsvalâyana I, 20, 8, kasya brahma-kâryasi, prânasya brahma-kâryasi. Afterwards I found that the Grantha MS. of Sâmbavya gives the very reading which I had conjectured.

Passages like this are not very rare in the Grîhya-sûtras. In the other Sûtras we are not in the same favourable position of possessing a MS. which enables us, as the Grantha MS. of Sâmbavya does, to test their text.

We cannot conclude these introductory remarks without speaking of the later additions tacked on at the end of the original body of the *Sânkhâyana-Grîhya-sûtras*¹. There are unmistakable indications that the fifth and sixth books are later additions. The fifth book is designated as a parisishṭa in a Kārikā quoted by Nārāyaṇa:

¹ Comp. the remarks in my German edition of Sânkhâyana, Ind. Studien, XV, 7.

parisishṭād āvasathye pārvaṇātikrame karuḥ
*Vaisvānarāyāgnaye kṛāgnaye*¹ tantumatē tathā.

(‘According to the Parisishṭa, if one of the half-monthly sacrifices has been omitted, a mess of rice should be offered on the sacred domestic fire to Agni Vaisvānara and to Agni Tantumāt.’)

The passages of the ‘Parisishṭa’ here referred to are the two first aphorisms of V, 4:

‘Now if a half-monthly sacrifice has not been performed, one or the other of them, then a mess of rice (is to be offered)—

‘With (the words), “To Agni Vaisvānara svāhā! To Agni Tantumāt svāhā!”’

There are, besides, several passages in which Nārāyaṇa himself mentions the fifth book under the designation of *Parisheshādhyāya*². And even if we had not the authority of the Kārikā and of Nārāyaṇa, the contents alone of the fifth book would raise our suspicion against its genuineness. The matter ordinarily treated of in the Grīhya texts is brought to an end in Adhyāyas I–IV; in the fifth book we find diverse supplementary additions on points discussed before; rules, which no doubt would have been given at their proper place, had the fifth book been composed at the same time, and by the same author, as the preceding books³. Besides, we find different prāyaskitta oblations treated of, and a description of two ceremonies which are mentioned, as far as I know, in no other Grīhya-sūtra, but belong to the rites frequently described in such works as Purāṇas, Parisishṭas, and later Dharma texts: the consecration of ponds or wells (chap. 2), and the consecration of gardens (chap. 3).

There can thus be little doubt as to the secondary character of the fifth book. And this alone suffices to furnish an important argument in favour of the same view with regard to the sixth book also. This view is furthermore supported by the opening invocation in that book, addressed to Brahman and to a number of mythological beings and Vedic sages and teachers. It is evident that by such an invocation this book is characterised as a separate treatise, presupposing of course the main body of the Sāṅkhâya-sûtras, but not forming part of it in the same sense in which, for instance, the second or the third Adhyâya does. The object of that treatise is the exposition of the ritual connected with the study of the Rahasya texts. The sixth book, composed no doubt by a later adherent of the Sāṅkhâya school, returns, in fact, to, and enlarges on, matters that have already found their proper place in the original Gṛhya-sûtra at II, 12, and partly also at IV, 7.

¹ vāgnaye the MS.

² Nārāyaṇa on I, 9, 3; 10, 2.

³ The Paddhati inserts the paraphrase of several of these rules into the explanation of the first Adhyāya.

SÂÑKHÂYANA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

ADHYÂYA I, KHANDA 1.

1. Now henceforth we shall declare the Pākayagñas.

2. When (a pupil) is going to return (from his teacher), let him keep that fire (as his domestic fire) on which he has put the last piece of wood (as required by the regulations for a student),

3. Or (he should keep) his nuptial fire.

1, 1. The ceremonies to be treated of are defined here as the Pākayagñas (i.e. oblations of cooked offerings) just as in the opening sentence of the Pāraskara-Gr̥hya they are called gr̥hyasthâlpākās. This is indeed the most characteristic form of offerings belonging to the domain of the Gr̥hya ritual, though it would not be correct to state that the Gr̥hya-sūtras treat exclusively of sacrificial ceremonies of this kind.

2. As to the duty of the Vedic student of putting every day a piece of wood on the sacred fire of his teacher, see below, II, 6, 8, and compare the Gr̥hya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa II, 58. According to a Kārikā given by Nārāyaṇa, and the Karmaṇḍapā (I, 6, 13), the prescription of this Sūtra regarding the time for the kindling of the sacred fire refers exclusively to the case of vāgdāna (betrothal). Comp. also Dr. Bloomfield's note on the Gr̥hya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 76 (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXV, 560). In the Kārikā it is stated that if the betrothed girl dies after the fire has been kindled, but before the marriage, the sacrificer is not to forsake his fire, but to marry another girl; if he cannot find a bride, he should make the fire enter into himself according to the rules given by Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya V, 1, and himself become uttarāśramin, i.e. enter one of the two final Āśramas.

4. Some declare (that the domestic fire should be kindled) at the time of the division of the inheritance.

5. Or that after the death of the householder the eldest one himself (should kindle it).

6. (It should be kindled) on the day of the new moon of the month of Vaisākha or on another (new moon day).

7. Some say (that the fire should be kindled) according to the (sacrificer's) wishes under the (corresponding) constellation.

8. He should light his fire at one of the following places, viz. in the house of a Vaisya who is rich in

5. Nârâyana: 'If the fire has not been kindled at the time stated above, then, after the householder . . . i. e. the father, even if he should not have performed the âdhâna, or the elder brother has died, the eldest son (or the son who after his elder brother's death has become the eldest), after he has performed the Sapinâkaraṇa (for the dead father or brother; see below, IV, 3, and the ninth chapter of the Parishîṭa [book V]), even if he has not divided the inheritance with his younger brothers (so that the time stated in the fourth Sûtra would not have arrived), should kindle the fire himself, i. e. without an officiating priest (ṛtvig). . . . Or the Sûtra should be divided into two; prete vâ grihapatau (or after the death of the householder), and svayam gyâyân (the eminent one himself), i. e. of Brâhmanas, Kshatriyas, and Vaisyas a gyâyân, which means a most eminent person, a Brâhmana, performs the Pâkayagñas himself; for the two other castes the Pâkayagñas have to be performed through an officiating priest: this is the meaning of this svayam (himself).' I have given this note of Nârâyana as a specimen of the entirely arbitrary and obviously misleading explanations which are unfortunately so frequently found in this author, as indeed in most of the other Sûtra commentators. As to the true meaning of this svayam I still adhere to the explanation which I proposed in my German edition of the text (p. 118), that in case no division of the inheritance takes place, the sacred fire should be kindled on behalf of all the joint-proprietors, but that only the eldest brother should act personally (svayam).

8. Or, 'at (the fire of) a person rich in cattle, in the house of a Vaisya,' &c.? The commentators (see p. 118 of the German cattle, at a frying-pan, or (at the fire of) one who offers many sacrifices.

9. Some say that (the fire should be fetched from one of the above-mentioned places) in the evening and in the morning.

10. The inauguration (of the fire) by an evening offering should be learnt from the Adhvaryus, according to (my) teacher.

11. In the morning he shall offer a full oblation with a verse sacred to Vishnu, or silently.

12. The time for setting it (i.e. the domestic fire) in a blaze and for sacrificing on it has been explained by (the rules given with regard to) the Agnihotra.

edition) differ as to whether in puruṣa-vi-kula one or two alternatives are contained, and it is interesting to see that the Sûtra authors themselves differed in this respect ; Pâraskara (I, 2, 3), when declaring from what place the fire should be fetched, speaks of the house of a Vaisya rich in cattle ; Âśvalâyana, on the contrary, who in the Grhyasûtra does not expressly treat of the kindling of the domestic fire, in the corresponding passage of the Srauta-sûtra (II, 2, 1), gives the rule that the dakṣiṇâgni is to be fetched 'from the house of a Vaisya or from a rich person.'

9-11. I now differ from the opinion which I pronounced in my German edition with regard to the relation in which these three Sûtras stand to each other. I think they ought to be understood thus: 9. Some teachers say that the fetching of the fire from its yoni, as taught in Sûtra 8, ought to be done twice ; in the evening, so that the fire, after the necessary rites have been performed, goes out, and then again in the morning. 10. But my (the author's) teacher (comp. as to âkâryâh, Kâtyâyana's Srauta-sûtra I, 3, 7 ; Professor Garbe's note on Vaitâna-sûtra 1, 3) is of opinion that the fire should be fetched only once, and that with this fire the ceremonies which are taught by the Adhvaryus are to be performed in the evening (see, for instance, Kâty. IV, 7. 8, which passage is paraphrased here by Nârâyana). 11. In the morning (according to the same teacher, not, as I once understood this passage, according to the eke referred to in Sûtra 9), a full oblation is to be offered, &c.

12. Srauta-sûtra II, 6, 2 seq.

13. And 'invested with the sacrificial cord,' &c., all these rules, as far as they are applicable, should be applied (here also) in consequence of the unity of the ritual.

14. With regard to this they quote also (the following Sloka):

15. 'The kinds of Pākayagñas, the kinds of Haviryagñas, and again the kinds of Soma sacrifices, 'Twenty-one by number, these are proclaimed to be the kinds of sacrifice.'

KHANDA 2.

1. At the end of the sacrificial acts (follows) the distribution of food to Brāhmanas.

2. Voice, (pleasantness of) form, age, learning, moral character, (right) conduct are the qualities (required in the Brāhmanas who are to be invited thereto).

13. Srauta-sūtra I, 1, 6. 7: yagñopavītī devakarmāṇi karoti, prāñināvītī pitryāni, &c. The unity of the ritual of course means the unity of the two great domains of the Srauta and Gr̥hya ritual.

15. With regard to the twenty-one kinds of sacrifice compare, for instance, Gautama VIII, 18-20; Max Müller, Z.D.M.G. IX, p. lxxiii; Weber, Indische Studien, X, 326. The seven kinds of Pākayagñas are the Ashvakâ sacrifices (see below, III, 12 seq.), the sacrifices offered at each Parvan (I, 3), the Srāddha (or funeral) sacrifices (IV, 1 seq.), the sacrifice of the Srāvaṇī full moon (IV, 15), of the Âgrahāyaṇī (IV, 17 seq.), of the Kairī (IV, 19), and of the Âsvayugī (IV, 16). The seven Havis sacrifices (belonging, as is the case also with the third division of sacrifices, to the Srauta ritual) are the Agnyādheya, the Agnihotra, the sacrifices of the full and new moon, the Âgrayana, the three Kâturmāsya sacrifices, the Nirûdhasubandha, and the Sautrāmaṇī. The seven kinds of Soma sacrifices (of which the more ancient texts mention only three or four samsthās, see Weber, Indische Studien, IX, 120) are the Agnishoma, the Atyagnishoma, the Ukthya, the Shodasin, the Atirātra, the Aptoryāma.

3. Learning, however, outweighs every (other qualification).

4. A learned one should not be passed over.

5. 'The threefold (knowledge, viz. that) which refers to the deities, that which refers to the Ātman, and that which refers to sacrifice,

'(Handed down) in the Mantras and in the Brāhmaṇa : this is called learning.

6. 'A performer of the sacred rights, a man who has studied (the Veda), who is old in learning and devoted to austerities :

'He who gives food (even) once to such (a Brāhmaṇa), hunger will not befall that man any more.

7. 'Whatsoever deity he may wish to satiate at any sacrifice,

'Destining it to that (deity) in his mind, he shall give (the food) to a person like that.

8. 'An oblation deposited in a person like that will never miss its way to the deity ;

'Treasure of men, vessel of gods (in which they receive what is given to them) he is called.'

KHANDA 3.

1. Now (follow) the ceremonies of the days of the new and full moon.

He fasts.

2. In the morning, when the sun shines on the top of the great trees, that is the most auspicious time for all kinds of sacrifices, unless there be a special rule.

3, 1. Most probably this rule should be divided into two Sūtras, so that atha darsapūrṇamāsau would stand as the heading of the chapter; comp. below, chap. 18, 1, atha śaturthīkarma; chap. 24, 1, atha gātakarma, &c.

2. 'If this is expressly stated, the oblation is to be made in night-time ; for instance, at the Vāstoshpatiya ceremony it is stated, "The tenth oblation of the Sthālipāka, to Agni Svishṭakṛt at night" (see below, III, 4, 8).' Nārāyaṇa.

3. With a genial mind, clean, on a pure, protected spot, having cooked a full, thin mess of rice, he offers that cooked oblation to the deities of the festivals of the new and full moon, distributing it in the due way.

4. In the oblations of cooked food the acts of taking (the intended oblation), of putting it down (near the fire), and of sprinkling it (with water) are performed with regard to the deities of the (respective) Mantras.

3. On vighana, which I have translated thin, see the note in the German edition, pp. 119 seq.

The deities of the festivals of the new and full moon (i. e. of the rites which in the Srauta ritual correspond to that taught here) are, at the full moon, Agni and Agnīshomau, at the new moon, Agni, Vishṇu, and Indrāgnī, who are preceded in both cases by Agni and Soma as the deities of the two āgyabhāgas (see below, ch. 9, 7), and followed by Agni Svishṭakṛit. For more detailed statements see Hillebrandt, Das altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer (Jena, 1879), pp. 102 seq.

4. For instance, the taking of the portion of food destined to Agni should be performed with the Mantra: Agnaye tvā gushṭam grīhṇāmi, &c. A number of ceremonies common to the Sthālipāka ritual and to the ordinary ritual of Āgya oblations, such as the strewing of Kusa grass round the fire, the ceremonies regarding the Pavitras (strainers), &c., have to be supplied here from the Āgya ritual given below (ch. 7 seq.); this may be looked upon as an argument in favour of our conjecture which will be stated in the preface (vol. ii of the Gṛihya-sūtras), that our text, as probably is the case also with the Pāraskara-sūtra, is based on an original, the opening sentences of which are preserved to us in Sāṅkh. I, 5, 1-5 = Pāraskara I, 4, 1-5, so that the first chapters of Sāṅkhāyana, and among them the exposition of the festivals of the full and new moon, would have been prefixed to the original commencement of the text.

5. And the rules about the portions to be cut off (from the sacrificial food, are valid).

6. But before the sacrifices of the new and full moon one should make offerings to the deities of the Anvârambhantya ceremony.

7. The time for the new moon sacrifice is not elapsed until the full moon, nor that for the full moon sacrifice until the new moon.

8. And some say that the morning oblation may be made at the time of the evening oblation, in the case of danger.

9. But the time is fixed, as at the Agnihotra an expiation has been prescribed for him who has neglected the time.

10. At the two daily oblations one should use as sacrificial food either rice or barley or grains.

11. In case these are not at hand, other (sorts of sacrificial food are) not prohibited.

12. Some say that if he uses grains, he should wash them.

13. With the other (kinds of food) no such preparation takes place.

5. On the avadânadharmâs comp. Weber, Indische Studien, X, 95; Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 122 seqq.

6. The Anvârambhantya-îsh/i is the sacrifice taught in the Srauta texts which is to be performed before the sacrificer for the first time offers the Darsapûrnamâsa sacrifice. See Weber, Indische Studien, X, 330; Hillebrandt, loc. cit., p. 185. The deities of this ceremony are Agnîvishṇu, Sarasvatî, and Sarasvat.

7. Comp. the expiatory sacrifice prescribed in the Parishatâ book, V, 4.

8. The text here passes over from the two monthly sacrifices to the two daily ones, which correspond to the Agnihotra of the Srauta ritual.

14. In the evening (he makes the oblation) to Agni, in the morning to Sûrya,
 15. And after both silently to Pragâpati.
 16. Some (say that) before the first oblation a piece of wood (is to be put on the fire).
 17. The sprinkling with water as indicated (in the Srauta-sûtra).

KHANDA 4.

1. When he has risen in the morning and has sipped water, let him daily repeat his recital.
 2. (This consists of, or is accompanied by, the following texts :) the two verses, 'To-day, god Savitar' (Rig-veda V, 82, 4-5); the hymn, 'Go away, Manasaspati' (X, 164); the hymn, 'Right and truth' (X, 190); the verses, 'Look down, ye Âdityas,' to the end of the hymn (VIII, 47, 11-18);

14, 15. These are the same deities who are worshipped also at the Agnihotra.

17. Srauta-sûtra II, 6, 9-11. Comp. p. 120 of the German edition.

4, 1. The Paddhati of Râmakandra understands svâdhyâyam adhîyâta as a prescription to perform the daily Brahmayagñâ (comp., for instance, Âsvalâyana-Gṛhya III, 2; Âpastamba I, 11, 22 seq.), which consists in the recitation of portions of the Veda; the hymns and verses stated in Sûtra 2 are, according to the same authority, to be repeated immediately after the recitation of the svâdhyâya ('svâdhyâyânantaram'). Nârâyana, on the contrary, considers that the svâdhyâya prescribed in Sûtra 1 consists of those very hymns and verses which are indicated in the second Sûtra. As to the Brahmayagñâ, he says that the ka at the end of the second Sûtra may be referred to it ('the word ka means that texts procuring a long life, such as Rig-veda I, 89, should be murmured, or an injunction of the Brahmayagñâ is intended'). At all events it is very difficult to believe that the recitation of the texts stated in this chapter should be quite independent from the daily Brahmayagñâ. About the performance of the Brahmayagñâ in our days comp. the note of Professor Bühler, Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. 43.

the verse, 'O Indra, the best treasures' (II, 21, 6); the verse, 'The swan dwelling in purity' (IV, 40, 5); the verse, 'Adoration to the great ones' (I, 27, 13); the verse, 'What we fear, Indra' (VIII, 50, 13); the verse, 'And of the sleep' (I, 120, 12); the verse, 'He who says to me, O king' (II, 28, 10); the hymn, 'Let glory be mine, Agni' (X, 128); and the five verses, 'Bliss may create for us' (V, 51, 11 seq.).

KHANDA 5.

1. There are four kinds of Pākayaḡñas, viz. the HUTA, the AHUTA, the PRAHUTA, and the PRÂSITA.

2. On the following five occasions, viz. the wedding, the tonsure (of the child's head), the initiation (of the Brahmaḡarin), the cutting of the beard, and the parting of the hair, (on these occasions) in the outer hall—

3. To a place that has been smeared (with cow-dung), which is elevated, and which has been sprinkled (with water), he carries forward the fire,

4. Having kindled it by rubbing, according to some teachers, at his marriage.

5. During the northern course of the sun, in the 5, 1. This Sûtra and the following ones down to the fifth are identical with Pâraskara I, 4, 1-5; it seems to me that we have here before us the opening Sûtras of a lost text from which this passage has been copied both by SâŒkhâyana and Pâraskara. Comp. the preface of the second volume of the Grîhya-sûtras.

With regard to the fourfold division of Pākayaḡñas stated here comp. below, chap. 10, 7.

2. Comp. the Kârikâ quoted by Nârâyana, 'vivâhâdishu bâhyo 'gnir mandape ka tad ishyata iti.'

3. On the Agni-praŒayana comp. the details given in the Grîhya-saŒgraha-parisishṡa (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenlândischen Gesellschaft, vol. xxxv), I, 64-69.

time of the increasing moon, on an auspicious day he shall seize the hand of a girl,

6. Who should possess (the auspicious) characteristics (required),

7. Whose limbs should be proportionate,

8. Whose hair should be smooth,

9. Who should also have at her neck two curls turned to the right.

10. (Of such a girl) he shall know that she will give birth to six men.

KHANDA 6.

1. If he will acquire a wife, let him recite over the wooers (whom he sends to the girl's father) when they go away, the verse, 'Thornless' (Rig-veda X, 85, 23).

2. When they arrive, they take flowers, fruits, barley, and a pot of water.

3. They say thrice, 'Here I am, sir!'

4. When these words have been uttered, they ask the girl in marriage, reciting the clan names, the dwellers turning their faces to the east, the visitors to the west.

5. When the matter pleases both sides, let them touch a full vessel into which have been put flowers,

9. On âvartau comp. the note in the German edition, p. 121.

6, 1. 'The wooers, i. e. his own father, &c.' Nârâyana.

3. 'When the father of the suitor and the others, together with their Âkârya, have arrived at the house of him who is to give away the girl, they station themselves in the hall, and the father of the suitor says thrice, "Here am I, N. N. (amukasarman), Sir!"—in these words he announces himself three times For at the house of the person who gives the girl away, there arrive also, in order to see the festivities, many other people. In order to distinguish himself from these, he pronounces his name.' Nârâyana.

fried grain, fruits, barley, and gold, and let them recite (the formula), 'Undisturbed art thou, the undisturbable vigour of the gods, not cursed, protecting against a curse, unexposed to a curse. Might I straightway attain to truth. Put me into prosperity.'

6. With the verse, 'Offspring may produce us' (Rig-veda X, 85, 43), the Âtârya of the girl's (family), standing up, places (the vessel) on her head (saying), 'Offspring I put into thee, cattle I put into thee, splendour and holy lustre I put into thee.'

KHANDA 7.

1. When assent has been declared (by the girl's father, the bridegroom) sacrifices.

2. He besmears a quadrangular space with cow-dung.

3. (Let him consider in the ceremonies to be performed,) of the two eastern intermediate directions, the southern one as that to which (the rites) should be directed, if the rites belong to the Manes,

6. The position of the words as well as the sense favours combining the genitive kanyâyâh with âkâryah, not with mûrdhani, though Râmakandra says that the varapakshâkârya is to be understood.

7, 1 seq. Here follows a description of the sacrifice which is to be performed when the girl's father has declared his assent (pratisrute) to give her away in marriage: this is the general model for all Grîhya sacrifices.—'Varo guhoti,' Nârâyana.

3. 'He here states an exception to the rule, "The ceremonies sacred to the Manes are directed towards the south" (Srauta-sûtra I, 1, 14) He should consider the south-eastern direction, sacred to Agni, as that to which the ceremonies are to be directed (prâkîm pûrvâm kalpayet) which are sacred to the Manes, such as

4. The northern one, if the rites belong to the gods,

5. Or rather the east (itself) according to some (teachers).

6. He draws in the middle (of the sacrificial ground) a line from south to north,

7. Upwards from this, turned upwards, to the south one line, in the middle one, to the north one.

8. These he sprinkles (with water),

9. Carries forward the fire with the verse, 'I carry forward Agni with genial mind; may he be the assembler of goods. Do no harm to us, to the old nor to the young; be a saviour to us, to men and animals,'

10. Or (he carries it forward) silently, prescribed in the Sūtra, "Let him make oblations every month to the Fathers" (IV, 1, 1) He states an exception to the rule, "The ceremonies sacred to the gods are directed towards the east" (Sraut. I, 1, 13) The northern of the two eastern intermediate directions, sacred to Īśāna, should be considered as that to which the ceremonies sacred to the gods, such as oblations, &c., are to be directed.'—Comp. Āsvalāyana-Sraut. I, 12, 4.

11. Then he wipes with his wet hand three times around the fire, turning his right side to it. This they call SAMŪHANA (sweeping together).

6-7. See the quotations from Rāmakaṇḍa's and Nārāyaṇa's commentaries, p. 123 of the German edition. An illustration of the form of the sthāṇḍila with the lines drawn thereon is given by Dr. Bloomfield in his note on the Gṛīhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 52 seq.; instead of the three lines, however, which are here prescribed in Sūtra 7, there are four indicated in accordance with the doctrine of that Parīśiṣṭa and of Gobhila himself, which are stated to be sacred to Prithivī, Pragāpati, Indra, and Soma, while the line turned from south to north is sacred to Agni.

9. On the Agni-praṇayana (carrying forward of the fire) see the Gṛīhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 64-69.

12. Once, turning his left side to it, in the rites belonging to the Manes.

KHANDA 8.

1. Now (follows) the strewing (of grass) around (the fire).

2. He strews eastward-pointed Kusa grass around it, in three layers or in five layers,

3. Beginning on the east side, then to the west, then to the west.

4. He covers the roots (of the grass-blades) with the points.

5. And all kinds of rites are to be performed beginning south, ending north.

6. He places the Brahman south with the words, BHŪR BHUVAH SVAH,

7. Adorns him with flowers,

8. Carries forward on the north side the Prāṇtā waters with the words, 'Who carries ye forward?'—

9. Takes up with the left hand the Kusa blades, and arranges them (on the ground) with the right hand,

8, 1. Comp. the passages quoted in Professor Eggeling's note on Satapatha Br. I, 1, 1, 22.

6. Ordinarily there was no real Brahman present, and his place was filled by a bundle of Kusa grass that represented him. Nārāyaṇa states that this bundle should consist of fifty blades of Kusa grass. Comp. also the Grhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 89-90.

8. Comp. the passages quoted by Dr. Bloomfield, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, vol. xxxv, p. 565, note 2.

9. This Sūtra shows that the paristarana, though already treated of in Sūtras 1-4, is not to be performed till after the 'carrying forward' of the Prāṇtā water. Comp. Nārāyaṇa's note on Sūtra 1 (p. 123 of the German edition). That this is indeed the order of the different acts is confirmed by Pāraskara I, 1, 2.

10. Bending his right knee,
11. The left when worshipping the Manes.
12. The strewing around (of the grass) is not necessary in the Āgya offerings,
13. Nor in the standing offerings, according to Māndūkeya.
14. He now measures off with the span (of his hand) two Kusa blades, which are not unequal, with unbroken points, bearing no young shoots in them, and severs them (from their roots) with a Kusa blade, saying, 'Purifiers are ye.'
15. There are two or three (of these Kusa strainers).
16. He holds them with their points to the east and sprinkles them (with water, saying), 'Belonging to Vishnu.'
17. With the two Kusa blades he sprinkles (water) around the fire three times, keeping his right side turned towards it,
18. Takes up the Āgya pot with the words, 'Milk of the cows art thou;'
19. Puts it on the fire with the words, 'For sap thee;'
20. Takes it from the fire towards the north with the words, 'For juice thee;'
21. And holding the two (Kusa) strainers with their points to the north, seizing them on both sides

13. 'In the standing offerings, such as the Vairvadeva sacrifice in the morning and in the evening.' Nārāyaṇa.

14-16. Vāgasaneyi Samhitā I, 12 a.

18. Vāg. Samh. IV, 3 a.

19. Vāg. Samh. I, 22 d.

20. Vāg. Samh. I, 30 c.

21. Vāg. Samh. I, 12 b.—The division of Sūtras 21 and 22 should be after iti, not, as the Indian tradition has it, after rasmibhiḥ.

with his two thumbs and fourth fingers, he bends them down, the points upwards, and dips them into the Āgya with the words,

‘By the impulse of Savitar I purify thee with this uninjured purifier, with the rays of the good sun.’

22. (This) preparation of the Āgya (takes place) each time.

23. Let him not offer (Āgya) which has not been (thus) prepared.

24. Also the waters in the Sruva spoon (he purifies) with the words, ‘(By the impulse) of Savitar (I purify) you.’

25. This (is called) the PRANĪTĀ and the PROKSHANĪ water.

KHANDA 9.

1. The Sruva spoon (serves as) a vessel.

2. According to the purpose the properties (of the different things to be used at each oblation) should be chosen.

3. Taking up Kusa blades with the left, and the 24, 25. Rāmakaṇḍa: ‘He pours water into the Sruva and purifies this also, as he had done with the Āgya (Sūtra 21) He then pours a little portion of that water on to the Pranīta water (see above, Sūtra 8), and with the rest, which is called the Prokshani water, he sprinkles the sacrificial food, the fuel, and the Barhis.’

9, 1. ‘When no special rule is stated, the Sruva is to be understood as the vessel (for the offering). Thereby the rule, “The Guhū is the vessel” (Srauta-sūtra III, 19, 5) is abolished (for the Grīhya rites).’ Nārāyaṇa.

3. The manner of holding the Sruva in which the Āgya is, is described by Kātyāyana, Sraut. I, 10, 6 seq., Stenzler’s note on Pāraskara I, 1, 4.

Sruva at its bottom with the right hand, with the words, 'The hand of Vishnu art thou'—

4. He offers with the Sruva the Âgya oblations.

5. Beginning from the north-west side of the fire he offers (the Âgya) unintermittingly on the south side (of the fire) with (the verse), 'Thou Agni art full of foresight' (Rig-veda I, 31, 10).

6. Beginning from the south-west side of the fire he unintermittingly offers on the north side with (the verse), 'To whom these snowy mountains' (Rig-veda X, 121, 4).

7. To Agni belongs the northern Âgya portion, to Soma the southern.

8. In the middle (are made) the other oblations,

9. (With the words,) 'Agni is the begetter; may he give to me N. N. as my wife; svâhâ!

'Soma is rich in wives; may he make me rich in wives by N. N.; svâhâ!

'Pûshan is rich in kindred; may he make me rich in kindred by the father, the mother, the brothers of N. N.; svâhâ!'

10. At the Âgya oblations the offering of the two Âgya portions and of the Svishṭakṛit oblation is not standing,

4. As to the characteristics of Âgya (sacrificial butter), which is the substance offered at most of the Grîhya sacrifices, comp. the statements of the Grîhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 105 seq.

5. Aviṣṭakṛinṇam (unintermittingly) is explained in Nâr.'s commentary by ekadhârayâ.

8 seq. Here are indicated the chief oblations of this sacrifice (anyâ âhutayaḥ pradhânabhûtaḥ, Nâr.), or the âvâpa (the insertion, Sûtra 12) which comes between the standing introductory and concluding oblations.

10. On Svishṭakṛit, comp. Weber, Indische Studien, IX, 217.

11. Nor in the standing oblations, according to Māṇḍūkeya.

12. The place for the insertion is the interval between the Mahāvyaḥṛitis, the general expiation, and the oblation to Prāgāpati.

11. See chap. 8, 13.

12. This Sūtra prescribes where the āvāpa, i.e. the special characteristic offerings of each sacrifice, is to be inserted between the regular offerings that belong to the standing model. The same subject is treated of in the Srauta-sūtra in the two rules, I, 16, 3 and 4: 'Whatsoever is offered between the two Āgya portions and the Svishṭakṛit, that is called āvāpa; this is the chief part (pradhāna) (of the sacrifice); the other (oblations) are subordinate thereto (tadaṅgāni).' The position of the āvāpa among the other oblations is indicated by Pāraskara in the following rule (I, 5, 6): 'Between the general expiation and the oblation to Prāgāpati, this is the place for the āvāpa.' (The word vivāhe at the end of this Sūtra seems to me to belong not to this rule, but to Sūtra 7.) Our Sūtra is identical with that of Pāraskara word for word; only instead of sarvaprāyaskitta, as Pāraskara has, we read here, mahāvyaḥṛitisarvaprāyaskitta. This means, I believe, that the āvāpa, preceded and followed by the Mahāvyaḥṛiti oblations (comp. below, I, 12, 13), should be placed between the Sarvaprāyaskitta and the Prāgāpatya oblation. The oblations made with the Mahāvyaḥṛitayas are four in number; the corresponding formulas are: bhûḥ svâhâ, bhuvaḥ svâhâ, svâḥ svâhâ, bhûr bhuvaḥ svaḥ svâhâ (comp. below, chap. 12, 12). The Sarvaprāyaskitta (general expiation) consists of two oblations, one with the three Mahāvyaḥṛitayas, the other with the verse ayâs kâgne, quoted in the Srauta-sūtra III, 19, 3, and in Āsvalâyana's Srauta-sūtra I, 11, 13. (On the Sarvaprāyaskitta in the Srauta ritual, compare Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 166.) The Prāgāpatya oblation is performed with the formula Prāgāpataye svâhâ. The discussions of Nārāyaṇa on this Sūtra (see p. 125 of the German edition) evidently fail to bring out the true meaning of the text; according to this commentator the oblations follow each other in this order: the two Āgyabhāgas, the principal oblations (pradhānâhutayaḥ), the Svishṭakṛit, the four Mahāvyaḥṛiti oblations, the two Sarvaprāyaskitta oblations, the Prāgāpatya oblation. Finally we may mention the corrupt form in which the corresponding passage of the Sāmbavya-sūtra is pre-

13. If the oblation consists in Āgya, let him seize the Kusa blades in his left hand with his right hand at their points and with the left at their roots, and let him wet their points (with Āgya) in the Sruva, the middle and the roots in the Āgya pot;

14. In the oblations of cooked food, however, the points in the Sruṣ, the middle in the Sruva, the roots in the Āgya pot.

15. When he then has thrown them (into the fire) with the words, 'Agni's garment art thou,'

16. And has put on (the fire) three pieces of wood,

17. (Water) is sprinkled round (the fire) as stated above.

18. Oblations for which only the deities are indicated, but no texts prescribed, are to be made merely with the word SvĀHĀ, 'To such and such a deity svāhā! To such and such a deity svāhā!'

19. The ritual (here) declared of the sacrifice (to served in the MS. There the two Sūtras 10 and 11 are placed before the Mantra in Sūtra 9. This Mantra then is given down to svāheti, then follows āgyena, which seems to me to form part of the same Sūtra, and to refer to the oblations to which the Mantra belongs. Then the MS. goes on: mahāvyaḥṛitishu sarvaprayaskittāram (sic) etad āvāpasthānam āgyahavishi vyāhritishu sarvaprayaskittāram (the syllables prayaskittāram seem to be expunged) svish/akṛito sthālīpāke. In the commentary I find the following Ślokas, which I give exactly as they are read in the MS.: tisrinām vyāhritīnām ka prayaskittāhutīr api yad antaram tad āpāpasthānam sarpiḥpradhānake. sthālīpāke vyāhritīnām yat tat svish/akṛitottaram āhutinām pradhānānām nānādaivataḥḥandasām yas tu kālās tad āvāpasthānam itākyate budhaiḥ tatas tat tam ma ārabhya prayaskittāhutiḥ kramāt.

17. See above, chap. 8, 17.

19. This Sūtra, though reckoned in the Indian tradition to be performed) when (the father's) assent (to give away his daughter) has been declared—

KHANDA 10.

1. Forms the standard for all sacrifices that procure happiness,
2. And for all Āgrya offerings,
3. For the sacrifice of animals which are tied to a branch,
4. And for the offerings of boiled (rice) grains and of cooked food.
5. These are performed, all the offerings of cooked food, without PRAYĀGA and ANUYĀGA oblations, without (the invocation of) the ILĀ, without NIGADA recitation, and without SĀMIDHENĪ verses.
6. There are also the following Ślokas :

chap. 9, seems to me clearly to belong to the next chapter, and to contain the subject, to which the predicate is given in 10, 1. For pratisrute, see chap. 7, 1.

10, 1. 'As in the Srauta ritual the sacrifice of the full and new moon forms the standard for the ishās, the parubandha, &c., thus the pratisrut-kalpa is the standard for the vikrītis of the Smārta ritual, such as the gâtakarman (chap. 24), &c.' Nârâyana.

3. 'It is the standard of the sacrifices prescribed in the rules, "The animal (offered) to the teacher is sacred to Agni; to an officiating priest, to Bṛhaspati, &c.'" Nârâyana. This refers to the sacrifice of animals which forms part of the Arghya ceremony; see II, 15, 4 seq.

4. Kârûnâm pâkayagñânâm ka. Nârâyana.

5. On the five Prayāgas and the three Anuyāgas (introductory oblations and oblations following on the principal offerings) prescribed in the Srauta ritual, comp. Hillebrandt's Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 94 seq., 134 seq. On the Ilā, see ibid., 122 seq.; on nigada, Weber's Ind. Studien, IX, 217, &c.; on the Sāmidhenī verses, Hillebrandt, loc. cit., pp. 74 seq. On this Sūtra compare also the passage in Kātyāyana's Srauta-sūtra, VI, 10, 22 seq.

7. ' (An oblation is called) HUTA, (if made) by the performing of the Agnihotra ; AHUTA (i.e. unsacrificed, if) by the Bali offering; PRAHUTA (i.e. sacrificed up, if) by a sacrifice to the Manes; PRĀSITA (i.e. tasted, if) deposited as an offering in a Brāhmaṇa.

8. 'Without raising his knees, with spread knees let him always offer his oblation ; for the gods never accept an offering (that has been made holding the hand) not between (the knees).

9. 'But when he has repeated a text sacred to Rudra, to the Rakshas, to the Manes, to the Asuras, or that contains an imprecation, let him touch water, and so also when he has touched his own body.'

KHANDA 11.

1. Now when the bride is to be carried away (to the bridegroom's house) that night, or on the next, or on the third night,

2. On that night, when (the darkness of) night is gone, they wash the girl up to her head with (water that has been made fragrant by) all sorts of herbs and the choicest fruits together with scents ;

7. Comp. chap. 5, 1.

8. Comp. the Grihya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 46, and the note, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XXXV, 556. Nārāyaṇa: dakṣiṇam bāhum gānvor antare kṛitvety arthaḥ, sarvadā sarvasminn api karmani havir homadrayam guhuyāt.

9. This verse is found also in the Karmapradīpa III, 8, 4.

11, 1. The ceremony described in this chapter is called Indrāṇi-karman. The goddess Indrāṇi is mentioned in Sūtra 4 among the deities to whom Āgya oblations are made.

2. Nirākāle, nirā madhyastham praharadvayam, tasmin kāle atīte. Nārāyaṇa.

On the anvārambha, comp. Weber's Indische Studien, IX, 224.

3. They put on her a newly-dyed garment or (a new one) which has not yet been washed ;

4. Then (the Âkârya of the bride's family) makes the girl sit down behind the fire, and while she takes hold of him he sacrifices with the Mahâvyâhṛtis, and then he makes Âgya oblations to Agni, to Soma, to Pragâpati, to Mitra, to Varuṇa, to Indra, to Indrâṇi, to the Gandharva, to Bhaga, to Pûshan, to Tvashṭar, to Br̥haspati, to the king Pratyânika.

5. After they have regaled four or eight women, who are not widows, with lumps of vegetables, Surâ, and food, these should perform a dance four times.

6. The same deities (they worship also) on behalf of the man,

7. And Vaisravana and Îsâna.

8. Then follows the distribution of food to Brâhmanas.

KHANDA 12.

1. The bridegroom, who has bathed and for whom auspicious ceremonies have been performed, is escorted by happy young women, who are not widows, to the girl's house.

2. To these he shall not behave unobsequiously, except where forbidden food or a transgression is concerned.

3. Having obtained their permission, he then gives her the garment with (the verse), 'The Raibhî was' (Rig-veda X, 85, 6).

4. The 'king Pratyânika' has given origin to a very curious misunderstanding in the Sâmbavya-Gr̥hya and its commentary; see p. 127 of the German edition.

4. With (the verse), 'Mind was the cushion' (ibid. 7) he takes up the salve-box.

5. The verse for the anointing is, 'May the Visve devâs anoint (or, unite),' (ibid. 47.)

6. 'As this (has protected) Sañ the beloved one, and Aditi the mother of noble sons, and Apâlâ who was free from widowhood, may it thus here protect thee, N. N.!'—with these words (the bridegroom) gives her into her right hand the quill of a porcupine (and) a string of three twisted threads,

7. With the verse, 'Shape by shape' (Rig-veda VI, 47, 18) a mirror into the left.

8. Her relations tie (to her body) a red and black, woollen or linen cord with three (amulet) gems, with the verse, 'Dark-blue and red' (Rig-veda X, 85, 28).

9. With the verse, 'Full of honey the herbs' (Rig-veda IV, 57, 3), (the bridegroom) ties (to her body) Madhûka flowers.

12, 5. On the ceremony of 'salving together' (samañgana), comp. Pâraskara I, 4, 14; Gobhila II, 2, &c. Professor Stenzler is certainly wrong in translating Pâraskara's samañgayati by 'heisst sie beide zusammentreten' (according to Gayarâma's explanation, sammukhîkaroti). It is clear from Sâṅkhâyana, that a real anointing of bridegroom and bride took place. This was performed, according to Gobhila, by the 'audaka' (this seems to be the same person that is mentioned in Pâraskara I, 8, 3), of whom it is said, pânigrâham (i. e. the bridegroom) mûrdhadese 'vasiñkati, tathetarâm. Nârâyana, on the contrary, in his note on our passage, says that it is the bridegroom who anoints the eyes of the girl with the verse quoted. But the word sam-añgana, and the obvious meaning of the whole rite, make it rather probable that both were anointed, and that this was done by a third person.

6. Comp. below, chap. 22, 8, where the use of a porcupine's quill is prescribed at the sîmantonnayana ceremony; and see chap. 22, 10.

10. At the wedding one cow, when the Argha ceremony has been performed; in the house one cow: these are the two Madhuparka cows.

11. (The bridegroom) makes the girl sit down behind the fire, and while she takes hold of him he makes three oblations with the Mahāvyaḥṛitis.

10. As to the meaning of arhayitvā I differ from the opinion of Nārāyaṇa (see his note on p. 127 of the German edition), who takes gām as the object of this verb (gām arhayitvā pūḡayitvā mātā rudrānām ity rikam gapitvā [comp. Pāraskara I, 3, 27]). The real meaning of arhayati is, to perform the Argha ceremony for a guest. Evidently in this Sūtra two different occasions are stated on which the Argha reception, eventually with the killing of a cow, should be performed; firstly, the bridegroom should be so received in the house of the bride's father; secondly, when the newly-married people have arrived at their own house, an Argha reception should there be offered to them, perhaps, as the commentaries state, by the Âtârya.

11. According to Nārāyaṇa it is the Âtârya who performs the rite prescribed in this Sūtra; Rāmaḥandra, on the contrary, refers it to the bridegroom, which seems to me right. Comp. Gobhila II, 1.

In Sâṅkhāyana's description of the wedding ceremonies the point at which the bride passes over from the paternal power into that of her new husband is not expressly indicated. Pāraskara (I, 4, 15) clearly indicates it (pitṛā prattām âdâya), and in the Parisishṭa of the Âsvalāyana-Gr̥hya this act of handing over the girl is treated of in detail (I, 22). On this depends the description in the Prayogaratna, fol. 69; comp. also Colebrooke's Miscell. Essays, I, 210. The Paddhati of Rāmaḥandra does not fail to mention the kanyâpradâna, but I do not think that the succession of the different rites is stated there correctly. According to the Paddhati the bridegroom goes to the house of the girl's father, and there, after the madhuparka has been offered, the bride is given over to him; he then (labdhavadhûkaḥ) goes (chap. 12, 1), accompanied by young women, to the kautukâgâra, where the ceremonies described in chap. 12, 3 seq. take place. Pāraskara, on the contrary, describes the handing over of the garments, the anointing, &c., as preceding the giving over of the girl, and indeed it is scarcely possible to see in the acts of dressing, adorning the girl, &c., in which both the bridegroom and her relations

12. A fourth (oblation) with (the three Mahāvya-hrītis) together is to be understood from this rule.

13. In this way, where no express rule is stated, in all sacrifices that procure happiness, one is to sacrifice before and afterwards with these same (Mahāvya-hrītis).

KHANDA 13.

1. 'Be queen with thy father-in-law,' with this verse (Rig-veda X, 85, 46) her father or brother sacrifices with a sword's point on her head, or with the Sruva, standing while she is sitting, with his face turned to the west, while her face is turned to the east.

2. 'I seize thy hand for the sake of happiness' (Rig-veda X, 85, 36), with these words (the bridegroom) seizes with his right hand her right hand with the thumb, both hands being turned with the palms upwards, he standing while she is sitting, with his face turned to the west, while her face is turned to the east.

3. And when he has murmured the following five verses,

4. (He continues thus,) 'This am I, that art thou; take part, anything but preparatory performances that precede the decisive moment. The sacrifice, on the contrary, which the bridegroom performs, according to chap. 12, 11, in common with his bride, seems to presuppose that he has already received her from her father; and the ceremonies described in chap. 13, the pānigrahaṇa, the pronouncing of the Mantra, chap. 13, 4, which reminds one of the Roman formula ubi tu Gaius, the seven steps—all that should be understood not as intended to establish the power of the husband over his wife, but as presupposing that power and showing an exercise of it.

13, 4. Nārāyaṇa states that here four Brāhmaṇas should repeat that art thou, this am I ; the heaven I, the earth thou; the Rik art thou, the Sāman I. So be thou devoted to me.

‘Well! Let us here marry. Let us beget offspring. Let us acquire many sons who may reach old age.’

5. (The Ākārya) fills, with the words bhūr bhuvaḥ svaḥ, a new water-pot,

6. Throws into it (branches) with milky sap and leaves, of a tree the name of which is masculine, together with Kusa grass,

7. And gold, according to some (teachers),

8. And hands it over to a student who observes silence.

9. They should walk round this Stheyā water, (placed) to the north-east, so that they turn their right sides towards it.

the Sūryā hymn (Rig-veda X, 85) to the bride. That, according to Sāṅkhāyana, that hymn is recited at the wedding, is clear from chap. 14, 12.

6. Sakshîrânt sapalâsânt sakusân. Nârâyana’s commentary divides sa kusân, and refers sa to the âkārya. But this sa would be superfluous, and the substantive to which sakshîrân and sapalâsân are to be referred, is, as both the nature of the case and the corresponding passages show, sâkhân and not kusân. Comp. the Srauta-sûtra IV, 17, 5: palâsasâkhâm sapalâsâm nikhâya, and a passage concerning the very rite here described, Āsvalâyana-parisish/a I, 24: audumbaryârddhayâ (read, ârdrayâ?) sâkhayâ sapalâsayâ sahiranyapavitrayâ sadûrvâpavitrayâ. The MS. of the Sâmbavya-sûtra has sakshîrân palâsân sakusân.

9. ‘The Stheyā water has to be so placed that when the bride and the bridegroom walk (their seven steps, see chap. 14, 5 seq.), their right sides are turned towards it.’ Nârâyana. Comp., regarding the Stheyā water and its bearer, the Grîhya-saṅgraha-parisish/a II, 26. 30. 35.

10. And after (the Ātārya) has placed a stone towards the northern direction,

11. (The bridegroom) makes her rise with the words, 'Come, thou joyful one,'

12. And makes her tread with the tip of her right foot on the stone, with the words, 'Come, tread on the stone; like a stone be firm. Tread the foes down; overcome the enemies.'

13. He then leads her round the fire so that their right sides are turned to it,

14. And gives her a second garment with the same text (chap. 12, § 3).

15. Her father or brother pours out of a basket fried grain mixed with Samī leaves into her joined hands.

16. The spreading under, the sprinkling over, and the second sprinkling over (are done) with Āgrya.

17. She sacrifices those (fried grains).

KHANDA 14.

1. 'This woman, strewing grains, prays thus, "May I bring bliss to my relations; may my husband live long. Svāhā!"'—while the husband murmurs (this) text, she sacrifices standing.

2. (All the ceremonies,) beginning from the tread-

17. I believe that the words forming this Sūtra, tāñ guhoti, are taken from the same lost old Gr̥hya text which Sāṅkhāyana has followed word for word also in I, 5, 1-5 and elsewhere. This is made probable by the comparison of Pāraskara I, 6, 2. The author of our text, while literally adopting the words of his original, has not quite succeeded in welding them together with his own statements; thus the sacrifice of grains is treated of in this Sūtra and in the first Sūtra of the next chapter, as if there were two different acts, while indeed it is one and the same.

14, 2. The treading on the stone is prescribed in chap. 13, 12.

ing upon the stone, (are repeated) in the same way for a second time,

3. And in the same way a third time.

4. Silently, if they like, a fourth time.

5. (The Ākârya ?) makes (them) step forward in a north-eastern direction seven steps (with the words),

6. 'For sap with one step, for juice with two steps, for the prospering of wealth with three steps, for comfort with four steps, for cattle with five steps, for the seasons with six steps. Friend be with seven steps.'

7. (The Ākârya ?) 'appeases' those (foot-steps) with water.

8. With the three Āpohishthiyâ verses (Rig-veda X, 9, 1-3) he wipes (them) with the Stheyâ water,

9. And sprinkles it on their heads.

10. (The bridegroom then) says, 'I give you a cow.'

11. Let him give something to the Brâhmaṇas each time at the Sthâlpâkas and other rites;

12. To him who knows the Sûryâ hymn the bride's shift.

5, 7. According to Nârâyana it is the teacher who makes them walk the seven steps; the Paddhati says that the bridegroom or the Ākârya causes her to do so. Comp. Pâraskara I, 8, 1; Āsvalâyana I, 7, 19, &c.

8. Comp. chap. 13, 9.

9. Probably we should read mûrdhanî (acc. dual.), not mûrdhani. Āsvalâyana has sirasî. Of course the heads of both the bridegroom and the bride were sprinkled with water; comp. Āsvalâyana I, 7, 20, &c.

12. The Sûryâ hymn is Rig-veda X, 85. Comp. the note above on chap. 13, 4.

13. A cow is the optional gift to be given by a Brāhmaṇa,
14. A village by a Rāganya,
15. A horse by a Vaisya.
16. A hundred (cows) with a chariot (he gives to a father) who has only daughters.
17. To those versed in the sacrificial rites he gives a horse.

KHANDA 15.

1. The three verses, 'I loosen thee' (Rig-veda X, 85, 24), when she departs from the house.
2. 'The living one they bewail' (Rig-veda X, 40, 10), if she begins to cry.
3. The wife then smears the axle of the chariot with clarified butter with this (verse), 'They feasted, they got drunk' (Rig-veda I, 82, 2), 13-15. These Sūtras, treating of the fee for the sacrifice, are identical with Pāraskara I, 8, 15-18. Apparently they are taken from the same lost original from which several identical passages in the Sūtras of Pāraskara and Sāṅkhāyana seem to be derived (see the notes on chap. 5, 1; 13, 7). They stand rather out of place here, for they return to the same subject which had already been treated of in Sūtra 10, though in that Sūtra, as very frequently is the case in our text and in similar ones, only the case of the bridegroom being a Brāhmaṇa has been taken notice of.

16. Comp. the passages quoted by Professor Stenzler on Pāraskara I, 8, 18. Nārāyaṇa has the following note: 'To a duhitṛimat, i.e. to the father of a girl who has no brother, he shall give a hundred cows and besides a chariot, in order to destroy the guilt brought about by marrying a girl who has no brother.' Possibly we should here emancipate ourselves from the authority of the commentators, and explain duhitṛimat 'he who gives his daughter in marriage,' the bride's father. Comp. Âpastamba II, 11, 18; II, 13, 12; Weber, Indische Studien, V, 343, note 2.

15, 3. Probably the use of this verse on this occasion rests on the assonance of its opening word akṣaṇ and akṣa (rathākṣa).

4. And with the two (verses), 'Pure are thy wheels,' 'Thy two wheels' (Rig-veda X, 85, 12. 16), of the two wheels the first with the first (verse) and the second with the second (verse),

5. And the two bulls.

6. After (the wife?) has put, with this (verse), 'In the box of the wheel' (Rig-veda VIII, 80, 7), a branch of a fruit-bearing tree into each of the holes destined for the pins,

7. Or, if (such branches) are (already) fixed, has recited (that verse) over them,

8. They then harness the two bulls with the two (verses), 'Harnessed be thy right one' (Rig-veda I, 82, 5-6), (the bridegroom) reciting the half-verse, 'White the two bulls' (Rig-veda X, 85, 10), over them when they have been harnessed.

9. Now should any part of the chariot break or burst, let him take the girl to the house of one who keeps the sacred fires,

10. And repair (the damage) with the verse, 'Cover thyself with the Khadiras' (Rig-veda III, 53, 19).

11. A knot with the verse, 'Him like a horse' (Rig-veda X, 143, 2).

12. He then murmurs the five verses, 'May prosperity give us' (Rig-veda V, 51, 11-15).

13. 'Adorned with Kimsuka flowers' (Rig-veda X, 85, 20), when she mounts the chariot;

14. 'May no waylayers meet us' (ibid. 32), at a cross-way;

15. 'Which the woman's' (ibid. 31), near a cemetery;

16. The half-verse, 'O tree with thy hundred

6. See Nārāyaṇa's note on samyâgarta, p. 129 of the German edition.

branches' (Rig-veda III, 8, 11), he mutters near a big tree;

17. 'The good protectress' (Rig-veda X, 63, 10), when she ascends a ship;

18. 'Carrying stones' (Rig-veda X, 53, 8), when she crosses a river;

19. Optionally (he) also (murmurs the same verse, if that is done) with the harnessed chariot;

20. 'Up may your wave' (Rig-veda III, 33, 13), at deep places (in the river);

21. And (at such places) let her not look out.

22. The seven verses, 'Here may delight' (Rig-veda X, 85, 27 seq.), when she has reached the house, omitting the verses already employed.

KHANDA 16.

1. 'A bull's hide'—this has been declared.

2. On that hide the husband makes her sit down and sacrifices, while she takes hold of him, four oblations (with the following formulas),

3. 'With god Agni, with the earth-world of the worlds, and the Rig-veda of the Vedas: therewith I appease thee, N. N., svâhâ!

'With god Vâyu, with the air-world of the worlds,

16, 1. In chap. 15, 22 it is said that the bride arrives at the house; in 16, 12, that she enters the house. Probably we are to understand, therefore, that the sacrifice prescribed in this chapter, Sûtras 2 seq., is performed before the house, like the Vâstosh-patîya karman (below, III, 4). The words, 'has been declared,' refer to the Srauta-sûtra (IV, 16, 2), 'Having spread a red bull's skin, with the neck to the north or to the east, with the hair outside, behind the fire, they sit down,' &c.

2. On anvârambha comp. the quotation in the note on chap. 11, 2.

with the Yagur-veda of the Vedas : therewith I appease thee, N. N., svâhâ !

‘With god Sûrya, with the heaven-world of the worlds, with the Sâma-veda of the Vedas : therewith I appease thee, N. N., svâhâ !

‘With god Kandra, with the world of the quarters (of the horizon) of the worlds, with the Brahma-veda of the Vedas : therewith I appease thee, N. N., svâhâ !’

4. Or, ‘Bhûh ! What harm dwells in thee, bringing death to thy husband, death to thy husband’s brother, that I make death-bringing to thy paramour, N. N., svâhâ !’—thus the first (of the before-mentioned formulas) may be joined with the first Mahâvyâhrîti, the second with the second, the third with the third, the fourth with (the three Mahâvyâhrîtis) together.

5. With (the verse), ‘With no evil eye’ (Rig-veda X, 85, 44), let him besmear (her) eyes with Âgya salve.

6. (The bridegroom,) having touched the ends of her hair with the three (verses), ‘How may us the resplendent one . . .’ (Rig-veda IV, 31, 1-3),

7. And having quickly recited the four verses, ‘And those divine medicines’ (Rig-veda VIII, 18, 8), at the end (of that text) with the word svâhâ (pours out) the remainder on (her) head.

8. Here some place a boy of good birth on both sides, in her lap, with this (verse), ‘Into thy womb’ (see below, chap. 19, 6),

8. It should be noted that the verse â te yonim is quoted here only with the Pratika, while its full text is given below, chap. 19, 6. Can the Sûtras describing this ceremony with the kumâra ubhaya-taḥ-sugâta be a later addition ?

9. Or also silently.

10. Into this (boy's) joined hands (the bridegroom) gives fruits and causes (the Brāhmaṇas) to wish an auspicious day.

11. Thus she becomes the mother of male children.

12. With the rest of the hymn, 'Stay ye here both' (Rig-veda X, 85, 42 seq.), they make them enter the house.

KHANDA 17.

1. With the verse, 'I praised Dadhikrāvan' (Rig-veda IV, 39, 6), let them drink together curds.

2. Let them sit silent, when the sun has set, until the polar-star appears.

3. He shows her the polar-star with the words, 'Firm be thou, thriving with me!'

4. Let her say, 'I see the polar-star; may I obtain offspring.'

5. Through a period of three nights let them refrain from conjugal intercourse.

6. Let them sleep on the ground.

7. Let them eat together boiled rice with curds, with the three verses, 'Drink and satiate yourselves' (Rig-veda VIII, 35, 10).

8. Let them serve the nuptial fire in the evening and in the morning with the words, 'To Agni svâhâ! To Agni Svishṭakṛt svâhâ!'

9. 'Let the two men Mitra and Varuṇa, let the two men, the Asvins both, let the man Indra and also Agni make a man grow in me. Svâhâ!'—with 17, 2, 3. I have changed in the translation the division of these Sûtras; the native authorities divide after dhruvadarsanât, while I propose to divide after astamite.

(these words she offers) the first oblation if she is desirous of pregnancy.

10. For ten days they are not to set out (from home).

KHANDA 18.

1. Now the rites of the fourth day.

2. When the three nights have elapsed, he makes offerings of cooked food (with the texts),

3. 'Agni! Thou art expiation; thou art the expiation of the gods. What substance dwells in her that brings death to her husband, that drive away from her.

'Vāyu! Thou art expiation; thou art the expiation of the gods. What substance dwells in her that brings sonlessness, that drive away from her.

'Sūrya! Thou art expiation; thou art the expiation of the gods. What substance dwells in her that brings destruction to the cattle, that drive away from her.

'To god Aryaman the girls have made sacrifice, to Agni; may he, god Aryaman, loosen her from this, and not from that place.

'To god Varuṇa the girls have made sacrifice, to Agni; may he, god Varuṇa, &c.

'To god Pūshan the girls have made sacrifice, to Agni; may he, god Pūshan, &c.'

4. The seventh oblation with the verse, 'Pragâ-pati' (Rig-veda X, 121, 10).

5. The eighth to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit.

18, 3. As to preto muñkâtu mâmutaḥ compare Pâraskara I, 6, 2: preto muñkâtu mâ pateḥ. This passage shows what itaḥ and amutaḥ refer to. Comp. Professor Weber's note 3 at Indische Studien, V, 347.

KHANDA 19.

1. Let him pound the root of the Adhyāṇḍā plant and sprinkle it at the time of her monthly period with the two (verses), 'Speed away from here; a husband has she' (Rig-veda X, 85, 21. 22), with svāhā at the end of each, into her right nostril.

2. 'The mouth of the Gandharva Visvāvasu art thou'—with these words let him touch her, when he is about to cohabit with her.

3. When he has finished, let him murmur,

4. 'Into thy breath I put the sperm, N. N. !'

5. Or, 'As the earth is pregnant with Agni, as the heaven is with Indra pregnant, as Vāyu dwells in the womb of the regions (of the earth), thus I place an embryo into thy womb, N. N. !'

6. Or, 'May a male embryo enter thy womb, as an arrow the quiver; may a man be born here, a son after ten months.

'Give birth to a male child; may after him (another) male be born; their mother shalt thou be, of the born, and (to others) mayst thou give birth.

'In the male verily, in the man dwells the sperm; he shall pour it forth into the woman: thus has said Dhâtār, thus Pragâpati has said.

'Pragâpati has created him, Savitar has shaped him. Imparting birth of females to other (women) may he put here a man.

'From the auspicious sperms which the men pro-

19, 6. The first verse is that quoted already at chap. 16, 8. The text of the verses quoted in this Sûtra is very corrupt; see the notes on p. 36 of the German edition.

duce for us, produce thou a son ; be a well-breeding cow.

‘ Roar, be strong, put into her an embryo, achieve it ; a male, thou male, put into her ; to generation we call thee.

‘ Open thy womb ; take in the man’s sperm ; may a male child be begotten in the womb. Him thou shalt bear ; (having dwelt) ten months in the womb may he be born, the most excellent of his kin.’

KHANDA 20.

1. In the third month the Pumsavana (i.e. the ceremony to secure the birth of a male child),

2. Under (the Nakshatra) Pushya or Sravana.

3. Having pounded a Soma stalk, or a Kusa needle, or the last shoot of a Nyagrodha trunk, or the part of a sacrificial post which is exposed to the fire,

4. Or (having taken) after the completion of a sacrifice the remnants from the Guhû ladle,

5. Let him sprinkle it into her right nostril with the four verses, ‘ By Agni may good’ (Rig-veda I, 1, 3), ‘ That sperm to us’ (III, 4, 9), ‘ May he succeed who lights fire’ (V, 37, 2), ‘ Of tawny shape’ (II, 3, 9), with Svâhâ at the end (of each verse).

20, 3. On suṅgâ compare the note of Nârâyana and the verse quoted from the Karmapradîpa, p. 131 of the German edition.

On kusakan/aka Nârâyana says, kusakan/akam kuso darbhas tasya kan/akāḥ sūkî (sûka, MS. Berol. Orient. fol. 602) tām vâ peshayitvâ. I do not understand why the commentators of Pâraskara, whom Professor Stenzler has followed in his translation of Pâr. I, 14, 4, make kan/aka equal to mûla.

5. Nasto dakshinataḥ stands here as in chap. 19, 1. Âsva-lâyana I, 13, 6 has dakshinasyâm nâsikâyâm, and so has also

KHANDA 21.

1. In the fourth month the Garbharakshana (i.e. the ceremony for the protection of the embryo),
2. Sacrificing six oblations from a mess of cooked food with (the six verses of the hymn), 'Agni, joined with the prayer' (Rig-veda X, 162),
3. With (the verses), 'From thy eyes, thy nose' (Rig-veda X, 163), verse by verse besmearing her limbs with Āgya salve.

KHANDA 22.

1. In the seventh month, at her first pregnancy, the Simantonnayana (or parting of the hair).
2. He causes her, after she has bathed and put on a (new) garment which has not yet been washed, to sit down behind the fire.
3. He sacrifices, while she takes hold of him, with the Mahāvyañritis.
4. He cooks a mess of food,
5. According to some (teachers) boiled rice with Mudga beans.
6. The implements used and the Nakshatra should be of male gender.
7. (He then sacrifices with the following texts,) 'May Dhâtār give to his worshipper further life and safety; may we obtain the favour of the god whose laws are truthful.
- 'Dhâtār disposes of offspring and wealth; Dhâtār has created this whole world; Dhâtār will give a Pāraskara I, 13. Comp. the natthukamma treated of in the Pāli Buddhist texts (Mahāvagga VI, 13) and in the medical literature.

son to the sacrificer : to him you shall sacrifice, an offering rich in ghee.'

(Besides) with the three verses, 'Negamesha, fly away' (Rig-veda Khailika sũkta, after X, 184, vol. vi, p. 31), and in the sixth place the verse, 'Pragâpati' (Rig-veda X, 121, 10).

8. (The husband then) parts her hair, upwards, beginning from the middle, with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, or with a Darbha needle together with unripe Udumbara fruits, with the words, 'Bhũr bhuva^h sva^h.'

9. He lays down (the thing he has used) in her lap,

10. Ties (the fruits) to a string of three twisted threads and fastens them to her neck with the words, 'Rich in sap is this tree ; like the sappy one be thou fruitful.'

11. (The husband) then says to lute-players, 'Sing ye the king—

12. 'Or if anybody else is still more valiant.'

13. Having poured fried grain into a water-pot, let him cause her to drink it with the six verses,

22, 8. Comp. above, chap. 12, 6.

10. Nârâyana: tisribhis tantubhir vritte sũtre udumbaraphalâni . . . gale . . . badhnâti. I have translated accordingly. Pâraskara I, 15, 6 uses the same expression trivrit. Professor Stenzler there translates it, on the authority of Gayarâma, 'dreifache Haarflechte,' and says in his note on that passage that, according to SâŒkhâyana, he would have to tie the things with a threefold string to the neck of the woman, as if SâŒkhâyana's statement were different from that of Pâraskara. But both authors have the same word, and only the commentators differ in their explanations thereof.

11. Âsvalâyana more explicitly says (I, 14, 6), Somam râgânam sangâyetâm iti.

13. In my German translation there is a mistake which should be corrected. I have there referred shalrika to the verses Râkâm

'May Vishnu take care of thy womb,' 'I call Rákâ' (Rig-veda X, 184, 1; II, 32, 4-8).

14. Let him then touch her (with the words),

15. 'The winged one art thou, the Garutmat; the Trivrit (stoma) is thy head, the Gâyatra thy eye, the metres thy limbs, the Yagus thy name, the Sâman thy body.'

16. Let him cause her to sing merrily,

17. Wearing, if she likes, many gold ornaments.

18. A bull is the fee for the sacrifice.

KHANDA 23.

1. Let him pound the roots of the plants kâkâtant, ~~ma~~kâkâtant, kosâtakt, of the egg-plant, and of the indigo plant, and besmear (therewith) the place in which she is going to be confined, in order to drive away the Rakshas.

KHANDA 24.

1. Now the Gâtakarman (i. e. ceremony for the new-born child).

aham, which are actually only five in number. The six verses are Vishnur yonim, &c., and the five verses mentioned.

15. Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ XII, 4.

16, 17. Nârâyana: modamânîm harshayuktâm tâm mân-galikair gîtair gâyayet . . . mahâhemavatîm bahvâbharaṇayuktâm vâ gâyayet.

24, 1. Comp. Dr. Speijer's essay on the Gâtakarman (Leiden, 1872). Nârâyana observes that, as it is prescribed below (chap. 25, 4) that a mess of food is to be cooked in the sûtikâgni, here the sûtikâgni is established, and sacrifice is performed therein. The Sûtra 1, 25, 4, from which it is to be inferred that the sûtikâgni should be kept, is considered, accordingly, as a Gñâpaka (see Professor Bühler's notes on Âpastamba I, 11, 7; Gautama

2. Let (the father) breathe three times on the new-born child and then draw in his breath with the words, 'Draw in your breath with the Rik, breathe within with the Yagus, breathe forth with the Sâman.'

3. Let him mix together butter and honey, milk curds and water, or grind together rice and barley, and give it to eat (to the child) thrice from gold (i.e. from a golden vessel or with a golden spoon),

4. With (the verse), 'I administer to thee honey food for the festival, the wisdom ("veda") raised by Savitar the bountiful; long-living, protected by the gods, live a hundred autumns in this world, N. N.!'—(with these words) he gives him a name beginning with a sonant, with a semivowel in it, consisting of two syllables, or of four syllables, or also of six syllables; he should take a *krî*t (suffix), not a taddhita.

5. That (name only) his father and his mother should know.

6. On the tenth day a name for common use, which is pleasing to the Brâhmanas.

7. Let him pulverise black and white and red hairs of a black ox, intermix (that powder) with those four substances (see Sûtra 3), and give it to eat (to the child) four times: such (is the opinion of) Mândûkeya.

I, 31; Nârâyana's note on chap. 25, 4, p. 133 of the German edition).

2. Abhyavânya should be corrected into abhyapânya, as in IV, 18, 1 nearly all the MSS. read nivâta instead of nipâta. The Sâmbavya MS. reads in the text, trîr abhyânyânuprânya; in the commentary trîr anyapânyânuprânyâ. Comp., on the terminology of the different vital airs, Speijer, Gâtakarma, p. 64 seq.; Eggeling, S. B. E., vol. xii, p. 20.

8. If he likes (let him do so) with the words, 'Bhûh! The Rîg-veda I lay into thee, N. N., svâhâ!

'Bhuvaḥ! The Yagur-veda I lay into thee, N. N., svâhâ!

'Svaḥ! The Sâma-veda I lay into thee, N. N., svâhâ!

'Bhûr bhuvaḥ svaḥ! Vâkovākya (colloquies), Iti-hâsa, and Purâṇa—Om! All the Vedas I lay into thee, N. N., svâhâ!'

9. The production of intelligence (is performed) by thrice saying in his right ear, 'Speech!'

10. And let him recite over (the child the following text), 'Speech, the goddess, united with mind, together with breath, the child, uttered by Indra—may she rejoice in thee, the goddess, for the sake of joy, the great one, the sweet sounding, the music, full of music, the flowing, self-produced.'

11. Let him tie a piece of gold to a hempen string,

12. And bind it to (the child's) right hand until (the mother) gets up (from childbed).

13. After the tenth day let him give it to the Brâhmanas,

14. Or keep it himself.

KHANDA 25.

1. After ten days the getting up (of the mother from childbed).

8. Vetî vikalpârthe. bhûr rîgvedam ityâdikaturbhir mantrair asāv ity atra pûrveva (read pûrvavat?) kumâranâmagrahanapûrvakam kumâram prârayet. Nârâyana.

12. Bâlasya dakshine haste. Nârâyana.

25, 1. After ten days the impurity (arauka) that falls on the mother at her confinement, ceases; see Gautama XIV, 16; Manu V, 62; Vasishṭha IV, 21.

2. Father and mother with washed heads, wearing (new) clothes which have not yet been washed;
3. And so also the child.
4. Let (the father) cook a mess of food in that same fire that has been kept from her confinement,
5. And let him make oblations to the Tithi of (the child's) birth and to three constellations with their (presiding) deities.
6. Let him place in the middle the oblation to that constellation under which (the child) is born; the deity, however, is constantly to precede (the corresponding Nakshatra).
7. (He then makes two other oblations with the verses,) '(May) this Agni, the excellent one, (give) thee to-day life for (our) prayers; give us life that we may live long,'—(and,) 'Life-giving, Agni, be strong by Havis; may thy face and thy seat be full of ghee; drinking ghee, the sweet honey of the cow, protect, as a father (protects) his son, here N. N.' The tenth oblation of the mess of cooked food with the verse, 'Thou, Soma, givest bliss to the old one' (Rig-veda I, 91, 7).
8. Having pronounced aloud (the child's) name,
9. And caused the Brâhmanas to say auspicious words,
10. And having sacrificed in the same way every month to the Tithi of (the child's) birth,
11. He sacrifices, when one year has expired, on the (ordinary) domestic fire.

4. Comp. the note on chap. 24, 1.

7. The first Mantra is corrupt; in the Âsvalâyana-Srauta-sûtra (II, 10, 4) its text runs thus, âyush te visvato dadhad ayam agni varenyah, &c. Comp. Atharva-veda VII, 53, 6.

11. 'The words "every month" (Sûtra 10) retain their value

KHANDA 26.

1. To Agni, to the Kṛittikâs.
2. To Pragâpati, to Rohini.
3. To Soma, to Mrigasiras.
4. To Rudra, to the Ârdrâs.
5. To Aditi, to the two Punarvasus.
6. To Bṛihaspati, to Pushya.
7. To the Serpents, to the Asleshâs.
8. To the Manes, to the Maghâs.
9. To Bhaga, to the two Phalgunîs.
10. To Aryaman, to the two Phalgunîs.
11. To Savitar, to Hasta.
12. To Tvashṭar, to Kitrâ.
13. To Vâyu, to Svâti.
14. To Indra and Agni, to the two Visâkhâs.
15. To Mitra, to Anurâdhâ.
16. To Indra, to Gyeshṭha.
17. To Nirṛiti, to Mûla.
18. To the Waters, to the Ashâdhâs.
19. To the Visve devâs, to the Ashâdhâs.
20. To Brahman, to Abhigit.

(here also). Thus the sûtikâgni is to be kept through one year. After the lapse of that year one should sacrifice every month on the domestic fire as long as his life lasts. As it is said "in the domestic fire," the sûtikâgni is not to be kept any longer.' Nârâyana.

26, 1. This chapter is not found in the Sâmbavya-Grîhya, and Nârâyana expressly designates it as kshepaka khanda. It is a sort of appendix to the Sûtras 25, 5. 6; a sacrifice having there been prescribed to three Nakshatras with their presiding deities, an enumeration of the Nakshatras and deities is here given. Compare, on similar lists, Weber's second article on the Nakshatras (Abhandlungen der Berliner Akademie der Wissenschaften, 1861), pp. 289 seq., 315, 367 seq.

21. To Vishnu, to Sravana.
22. To the Vasus, to the Dhanishthās.
23. To Varuna, to Satabhishag.
24. To Aṅga ekapad, to the Proshthapadās.
25. To Ahi budhnya, to the Proshthapadās.
26. To Pūshan, to Revatī.
27. To the two Asvins, to the two Asvins.
28. To Yama, to the Bharanīs.

KHANDA 27.

1. In the sixth month the Annaprāsana (i.e. the first feeding with solid food).

2. Goat's flesh, if he is desirous of nourishment,
3. Flesh of partridge, if desirous of holy lustre,
4. Fish, if desirous of swiftness,
5. Boiled rice with ghee, if desirous of splendour—
6. (Such) food, prepared with milk curds, honey, and ghee, he should give (to the child) to eat.

7. After he has made oblations with (the verses), 'Lord of food, give us food, painless and strong; bring forward the giver; bestow power on us, on men and animals;' 'Whatsoever' (Rig-veda IV, 12, 4); 'Even of great' (ibid. 5), 'Him, Agni, (lead) to long life and splendour; sharp strength (mayst thou), Varuna, king Soma, protection may Aditi, like a 27, 2-6. These rules stand here, in the beginning of the chapter, as introductory remarks; the act of feeding itself (Sūtra 10) does not follow till after the sacrifice and the other performances prescribed in Sūtras 7-9.

3. This rule evidently rests on the allusion of taittira (partridge flesh) to the Taittirīya school.

7. Both metre and construction show that the Pāda imam Agna āyushe varṇase is incomplete; the Sāmbavya-Grīhya and Taitt. Samhitā II, 3, 10, 3 add krīdhi after varṇase.

mother, afford to him, and all the gods that he may reach old age'—

8. And has recited over (the child) the verse, 'Powers of life, Agni' (Rig-veda IX, 66, 19),

9. And has set him down on northward pointed Kusa grass with (the verse), 'Be soft, O earth' (Rig-veda I, 22, 15)—

10. The act of feeding is performed with the Mahâvyâhr̥itis.

11. Let the mother eat the remnant.

KHANDA 28.

1. After one year the Kûḍâkarman (i.e. the tonsure of the child's head);

2. Or in the third year;

3. In the fifth for a Kshatriya;

4. In the seventh for a Vaisya.

5. Having placed the fire (in the outer hall; see chap. 5, 2)—

6. And having filled vessels with rice and barley, sesamum seeds and beans,

7. And having put down northwards bull-dung and a layer of Kusa grass for receiving the hair, a mirror, fresh butter, and a razor of copper,

8. He pours cold water into warm with (the verse), 'Mix yourselves, ye holy ones, with your waves, ye honied ones, mixing milk with honey, ye lovely ones, for the obtaining of wealth.'

9. 'May the waters moisten thee for life, for old age and splendour. The threefold age of Gamadagni, Kasyapa's threefold age, the threefold age of 28, 1. Kûḍâkarman literally means, the preparing of the lock or the locks (left when the rest of the hair is shaven).

Agastya, the threefold age that belongs to the gods, that threefold age I produce for thee! N. N.!'—with these words he sprinkles the right part of his hair three times with lukewarm water.

10. Having loosened the tangled locks, according to some (teachers), with a porcupine's quill,

11. And having anointed (his hair) with fresh butter,

12. He puts a young Kusa shoot among (the hairs) with the words, 'Herb, protect him!'

13. Having touched the hair and the Kusa shoot with the mirror,

14. He takes up the copper razor with the words, 'Sharpness art thou; the axe is thy father. Do no harm to him!'

15. With (the words), 'The razor with which in the beginning Savitar, the knowing one, has shaven the beard of king Varuna, and with which Dhâtar Brîhaspati has shaven Indra's head, with that, ye Brâhmanas, shave this (head) to-day; blessed with long life, with old age be this man N. N.!' he cuts the tips of the hairs and the Kusa shoot.

16. In the same way a second time; in the same way a third time.

17. In the same way twice on the left side.

18. Under the armpits a sixth and a seventh time at the Godânakarman (ceremony of shaving the beard).

19. The Godânakarman is identical with the Kûdâkarman.

15. The parallel texts show that instead of Brîhaspatir we have to read Brîhaspater, instead of adya, asya. So the correct translation would be, '... with what Dhâtar has shaven Brîhaspati's and Indra's head, with that do ye Brâhmanas shave this head of this (child).'

20. (It is to be performed) in the sixteenth or in the eighteenth year.

21. At the third turn of shaving, however, he gives a cow and a garment that has not yet been washed.

22. Silently the rites (are performed) for girls.

23. To the north-east, in a place covered with herbs, or in the neighbourhood of water they bury the hairs in the earth.

24. To the barber the vessels of grain. To the barber the vessels of grain.

24. See Sûtra 6.

ADHYĀYA II, KHANDA 1.

1. In the eighth year after the conception let him initiate a Brāhmaṇa,
2. With an antelope-skin,

1, 1. With regard to the standing terminology of the Upanayana, or the initiation of the student, we may observe that upa-nî does not mean, as, for instance, Professor Stenzler seems to understand it, 'to introduce a student to his teacher.' Thus Pâraskara's Sûtra II, 2, 1, ash/âvarsham brâhmaṇam upanayet, &c., is translated by that distinguished scholar, 'Den achtjährigen Brāhmaṇa soll er (beim Lehrer) einführen,' &c. (comp. also Ârvalâyana-Grîhya I, 19, 1). The texts clearly point to another translation of upa-nî, for they show that the person that introduces the student (upanayati or upanayate; the middle is used very frequently, for instance, Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 4, 1; Sâṅkh. II, 1, 25) is not the father or a relation of the youth who could be supposed to lead him to the teacher, but the teacher himself; he introduces (upanayati) him to the brahmaṇya, or introduces him with himself, and the student enters upon (upaity) the brahmaṇya, or enters with (upaity) the teacher; he who has thus entered upon studentship, is consequently designated as upeta (Sâṅkh. IV, 8, 1; Pâraskara III, 10, 10), and for the initiation, which is usually called upanayana, occasionally also the word upâyana is used (see the Mânava-Grîhya I, 22, quoted by Professor Jolly in his article, Das Dharma-sûtra des Vishṇu, p. 79). The following passages may be quoted here as supporting our opinion on this terminology. At Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 3, 13 Saukeya says to Uddâlaka Âruṇi, 'I will enter (as a student) with the reverend One' (upâyâni bhagavantam); and Âruṇi replies, 'Come, enter (with me)!' (ehy upēhi), 'and he initiated him' (tam hopaninye). Ibid. XI, 5, 4, 16 it is stated that according to some a teacher who has initiated a Brāhmaṇa as a student (brâhmaṇam brahmaṇyam upaniya) should abstain from sexual intercourse, for a student who enters upon studentship (yo brahmaṇyam upaiti) becomes, as it were, a garbha, &c. Finally we may add that the Buddhist terminology regarding the entering into the order or upon a life of righteousness is clearly connected with that followed, for instance, in the dialogue between

3. Or in the tenth year after the conception.
4. In the eleventh year after the conception a Kshatriya with the skin of a spotted deer,
5. In the twelfth year after the conception a Vaisya with a cow-hide.
6. Until the sixteenth year the time has not passed for a Brâhmaṇa,
7. Until the twenty-second for a Kshatriya,
8. Until the twenty-fourth for a Vaisya.
9. After that (time has passed), they become patitasâvitrika (men who have lost their right of learning the Sâvitri).

Saukeya and Âruri. As Saukeya there says, upâyâni bhagavantam, we frequently read in the Pâli books expressions like this, upemi Buddham saraṇam dhammañ kâpi anuttaram, &c. (Dhammap. Aṭṭhakathâ, p. 97, ed. Fausbøll), and as Âruri replies, ehi upehi, Buddha says to those who wish to be ordained, ehi bhikkhu, svâkkhâto dhammo, kara brahmacariyam, &c. (Mahāvagga I, 6, 32, &c.; S. B. E., vol. xiii, p. 74, note).

The counting of the years not from the birth but from the conception occurs both in the Brahmanical and in the Buddhist ordinances, comp. H. O., Buddha, sein Leben, seine Lehre, seine Gemeinde, p. 354, note 1. Several Gr̥hya texts (for instance, Âsv. I, 19, 1. 2) admit both ways of counting the years. The number of years given for the Upanayana of persons of the three castes (Brâhmaṇas 8–16, Kshatriyas 11–22, Vaisyas 12–24) is evidently derived from the number of syllables of the three metres which are so very frequently stated to correspond to the three castes, to the three gods or categories of gods (Agni, Indra, Visve devâs) &c., viz. the Gâyatri, the Trishubh, and the Gagati. This is a very curious example, showing how in India phantastical speculations like those regarding the mystical qualities of the metres, were strong enough to influence the customs and institutions of real life.

9 seq. All these are standing expressions recurring nearly identically in most of the Gr̥hya and Dharma-sûtras. In the rule contained in Sûtra 13 a number of the parallel texts have vivah-eyuḥ or vivâhayeyuḥ, others have vyavahareyuḥ. Comp. Vasishṭha XI, 75; Indische Studien, vol. x, p. 21.

10. Let them not initiate such men,
11. Nor teach them,
12. Nor perform sacrifices for them,
13. Nor have intercourse with them.
14. Or (let them initiate students of) all (castes) wearing a (new) garment that has not yet been washed.

And wearing a girdle.

15. The girdle of a Brâhmaṇa (shall be) made of Muñga grass,
16. That of a Kshatriya (shall be) a bowstring,
17. That of a Vaisya a woollen thread.
18. The staff of a Brâhmaṇa (shall be) made of Palâsa or of Bilva wood,
19. That of a Kshatriya of Nyagrodha wood,
20. That of a Vaisya of Udumbara wood.
21. That of the Brâhmaṇa shall reach the tip of the nose,
22. That of the Kshatriya the forehead,
23. That of the Vaisya the hair.
24. Or all (sorts of staffs are to be used) by (men of) all (castes).
25. Whatsoever (the student) wears at his initiation, is at the disposal of the teacher.

14. This Sûtra should rather be divided into two, as indicated in the translation. As to the mekhalâ (girdle) comp. below, chap. 2, 1.

21. There is no doubt that prâṇasammīto (which Nârâyana explains thus, 'prâṇa is the wind [or breath]; [the staff should] reach to the place where the wind leaves the body, i.e. to the tip of the nose') should either be corrected into, or explained as, ghrâṇasammīto; the Sâmbavya MS. has ghrâṇântiko brâhmaṇasya. Comp. Gautama I, 26, &c. The parallel texts agree in assigning the longer staff to the higher, not as Sâṅkhâyana does, to the lower caste.

26. Having had him shaved all round (his head) he should initiate him.

27. After (the student) has washed and adorned himself,

28. (And) after (the teacher) has sacrificed, both station themselves behind the fire, the teacher with his face turned to the east, the other with his face to the west.

29. Let him initiate him standing while (the other also) stands.

30. ['The firm, powerful eye of Mitra, glorious splendour, strong and prosperous, a chaste, flowing vesture, this skin I put on, a valiant (man).']

KHANDA 2.

1. 'Here has come to us, protecting (us) from evil words, purifying our kin as a purifier, clothing herself, by (the power of) inhalation and exhalation, with strength, this friendly goddess, this blessed girdle'—with these words, three times repeated, he ties the girdle from left to right thrice round.

26. After the introductory remarks given in the preceding Sûtras the ritual itself of the Upanayana is now described.

28. Nârâyana : hutvâ 'nâdesaparibhâshâtâh (see above, I, 12, 13) purastâtsamgñakam hutvâ agnim sthâpitâgnim (see above, I, 5, 2) gaghanena . . . tish/hatah.

30. This Sûtra is wanting in most of the MSS. (see the note, p. 48 of the German edition). It contains the Mantra with which the Agina (the hide mentioned in Sûtras 2, 4, 5 of this chapter) is put on. Nârâyana gives the Mantra which he says is taken from the Mâdhyandina-Grîhya (in the Pâraskara-Grîhya it is not found), after chap. 2, 3, and he states that the corresponding act to which it belongs has its place after the rites concerning the girdle (chap. 2, 1) and the sacrificial cord (2, 3).

2. (There should be) one knot, or also three, or also five.

3. He adjusts the sacrificial cord with (the words), 'The sacrificial cord art thou. With the cord of the sacrifice I invest thee.'

4. He fills the two hollows of (his own and the student's) joined hands (with water), and then says to him: 'What is thy name?'

5. 'I am N. N., sir,' says the other.

6. 'Descending from the same Rishis?' says the teacher.

7. 'Descending from the same Rishis, sir,' says the other.

2, 2. Rāmaṅdra: 'Let him make one, or three, or five knots, according to (the student's) Ārsheya,' i. e. accordingly as he belongs to a family that invokes, in the Pravara ceremony, one, or three, or five Rishis as their ancestors. Comp. Weber, Indische Studien, vol. x, p. 79.

3. On the sacrificial cord (upavīta) comp. the Grīhya-samgraha-pariśiṣṭa II, 48 seq.

4. Nārāyaṇa: Ākārya ātmano mānavakasya kâṅgalī udakena pūrayitvā, &c.

6, 7. A similar dialogue between the teacher and the student at the Upanayana is given in the Kausika-sūtra (ap. Weber, Indische Studien, X, 71). The student there says, 'Make me an Ārsheya (a descendant of the Rishis) and one who has relations, and initiate me.' And the teacher replies, 'I make thee an Ārsheya and one who has relations, and I initiate thee.' As in this passage of the Kausika-sūtra the teacher is represented as having the power of making, by the Upanayana ceremony, an Ārsheya of the student, thus, according to the view expressed by Professor Weber (loc. cit., p. 72 seq.), Sāṅkhāyana would even give it into the teacher's power to make the student his samānārsheya, i. e. to extend his own Ārsheya on as many pupils as he likes. Professor Weber understands the sixth Sūtra so that the teacher would have to say, samānārsheyo bhavān brūhi (Nārāyaṇa: bhavān brūhīti brahmākārī bhavān brūhīty ataḥ [Sūtra 8] simhāvalokananyāyenātrānushagryate). According to Rāmaṅdra's Paddhati he is

8. 'Declare (that thou art) a student, sir.'

9. 'I am a student, sir,' says the other.

10. With the words, 'Bhûr bhuvaḥ svaḥ' (the teacher) sprinkles thrice with his joined hands (water) on the joined hands (of the student),

11. And seizing (the student's) hands with (his own) hands, holding the right uppermost, he murmurs,

12. 'By the impulse of the god Savitar, with the arms of the two Asvins, with Pûshan's hands I initiate thee, N. N.'

13. Those who are desirous of a host (of adherents, he should initiate) with (the verse), 'Thee, (the lord) of hosts' (Rig-veda II, 23, 1).

14. Warriors with (the verse), 'Come here, do not come to harm' (Rig-veda VIII, 20, 1).

15. Sick persons with the Mahāvyaḥritis.

only to say samânârsheyaḥ). The student answers, samânârsheyo 'ham bho; Professor Weber, who supplies the imperative asâni, translates this, 'May I have the same Ârsheya, sir!'

I think it more natural to simply translate the teacher's question, 'Art thou samânârsheya?' (or, supplying bhavân brûhi from Sûtra 8, 'Declare that thou art samânârsheya'), and the student's reply, 'I am samânârsheya, sir!' Thus we ought possibly to consider these formulas, which state a fictitious, ideal samânârsheyatva of the teacher and the students as a trace, and as far as I can see as the only trace, of an ancient rule requiring a real samânârsheyatva of teacher and student. As long as the ritual differences between the different Gotras, of which, as is well known, only a few traces have survived in the Vedic tradition, had retained their full importance, it can indeed scarcely have been considered as admissible that a young Brâhmana should be confided to the guidance of a teacher who sacrificed and invoked the gods in another way than the customs of the pupil's own family required.

11. Nârâyana: dakshinottarâbhyâm dakshina uttara upari yayos tau dakshinottarau, &c.

KHANDA 3.

1. 'Bhaga has seized thy hand, Savitar has seized thy hand, Pūshan has seized thy hand, Aryaman has seized thy hand. Mitra art thou by right, Agni is thy teacher, and I, N. N., both of us. Agni, I give this student in charge to thee. Indra, I give this student in charge to thee. Sun, I give this student in charge to thee. Visve devās, I give this student in charge to you, for the sake of long life, of blessed offspring and strength, of increase of wealth, of mastership of all Vedas, of renown, of bliss.'

2. 'In Indra's course I move; in the sun's course I move after him'—with these words he turns round from left to right,

3. And grasping down with the span of his right hand over (the student's) right shoulder he touches the place of his heart with the words, 'May I be dear to thy inviolate heart.'

3, 1. Nārāyana : 'Instead of asau (N. N.) he puts the name of the student in the vocative case.' I think rather that the teacher here pronounced his own name. Comp. asāv aham bho, chap. 2, 5, &c., and the Mantra in Pāraskara II, 2, 20.

The text of the Mantra shows that the Âtārya here seizes the hand of the Brahmātārin; comp. Âsvalāyana I, 20, 4-6, where it is stated that he seizes the student's hand together with the thumb, quite in the way prescribed for the wedding at Sāṅkh. I, 13, 2. Comp. also Pāraskara II, 2, 17. Nārāyana : mānavakasya gr̥hita-sampūta evâkāryo Bhagas ta imam mantram gapan, &c.

2. Literally, 'he turns round, following his right arm.' Nārāyana here has the following note, 'Âtāryo baṭor dakshinām bāhum hastam aindrīm āvṛitam iti mantrenānvāvartayet. ayam arthaḥ, âtārya imam mantram gaptvâ tam baṭum ka vākayitvâ pradakshināvartam kārayet.' I believe that the commentator here, as he frequently does, instead of interpreting the text of Sāṅkhāyana, fathers

4. Having silently turned round from right to left,

5. And then laying his hand with the fingers upwards on his (i.e. the student's) heart, he murmurs :

KHANDA 4.

1. 'Under my will I take thy heart ; my mind shall thy mind follow ; in my word thou shalt rejoice with all thy heart ; may Bṛihaspati join thee to me.'

2. 'Thou art the Brahmakârin of Kâma, N. N. !'

3. With the same text (see chap. 3, 2) he turns round as before,

4. And touching with the span of his right hand (the student's) right shoulder, he murmurs :

on him statements belonging to other Sûtras, in this case probably to Âsvalâyana I, 20, 9. As our text has not anvâvartya but anvâvṛitya, and in the Mantra not âvartasva but âvarte, we must conclude that he turned round himself, and, as far as the statements of the text go, did not cause the pupil to do so.

5. The gesture is the same as that prescribed in the Pâraskara-Grihya I, 8, 8 to the bridegroom at the wedding ; the Mantra there is identical with Sânkh. II, 4, 1, the only difference consisting in the name of the god who is invoked to unite the two : at the wedding this is Pragâpati, of course, because he is 'lord of offspring,' at the Upanayana, Bṛihaspati, the Brahman κατ' ἐξοχήν among the gods. It is very natural that at the Upanayana and at the Vivâha, which both are destined to establish an intimate union between two persons hitherto strangers to each other, a number of identical rites should occur, for instance, the seizing of the hand ; see the note on Sûtra 1.

4, 1. Comp. Pârask. I, 8, 8, and the note on chap. 3, 3. See also Atharva-veda VI, 94, 2.

2. As to Kâmasya brahmakârya asi, see my remarks in the Introduction, p. 9.

3. He turns round as described, chap. 3, 2. Nârâyana here also explains paryâvṛitya paryâvartanam kârayitvâ. See our note above, loc. cit.

5. 'A student art thou. Put on fuel. Eat water. Do the service. Do not sleep in the day-time. Keep silence till the putting on of fuel.'

6. With (the words), 'Thine, Agni, is this piece of wood,' he puts the fuel on (the fire), or silently.

KHANDA 5.

1. After one year (the teacher) recites the Sāvitrī (to the student),

2. (Or) after three nights,

3. Or immediately.

4. Let him recite a Gâyatrī to a Brāhmaṇa,

5. A Trishṭubh to a Kshatriya,

6. A Gagatī to a Vaisya.

7. But let it be anyhow a verse sacred to Savitar.

8. They seat themselves to the north of the fire,

9. The teacher with his face turned eastward, the other westward.

5. According to Nārāyaṇa the student correspondingly answers, to the teacher's word, 'A student art thou,' 'I will' (asāni), to 'Put on fuel,' 'I will put it on,' &c. Eating water means sipping water after having eased oneself. On the putting on of fuel, comp. Sūtra 6 and chap. 10. The whole formula given in this Sūtra is already found in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XI, 5, 4, 5.

5, 1. The study of the Veda is opened by the Sāvitrī. Comp. Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, loc. cit., §§ 6 seq.

4-6. The Gâyatrī which the teacher shall recite to a Brāhmaṇa is the same verse of which it is said below, chap. 7, 11, that it belongs to Visvāmitra (Rig-veda III, 62, 10); the Trishṭubh which is taught to the Kshatriya is a verse ascribed to Hiranyastūpa, Rig-veda I, 35, 2; the Gagatī which is to be repeated to a Vaisya is Rig-veda IV, 40, 5, belonging to Vāmadeva, or Rig-veda I, 35, 9, belonging to Hiranyastūpa. See the note on chap. 7, 10.

9. The same position is prescribed, in the same words, for the study of the main part of the Veda, below, chap. 7, 3; during

10. After (the student) has said, 'Recite, sir!'—

11. The teacher, having pronounced the word OM, then causes the other one to say, 'Recite the Sâvitri, sir!'

12. He then recites the Sâvitri to him, the verse 'That glorious (splendour) of Savitar' (Rig-veda III, 62, 10); (firstly) pâda by pâda, (then) hemistich by hemistich, (and finally) without a stop.

KHANDA 6.

1. 'Waters are ye by name; happy ones are ye by name; sappy ones are ye by name; undecaying ones are ye by name; fearless ones are ye by name; immortal ones are ye by name. Of you, being such, may I partake; receive me into your favour'—with these words (the teacher) makes the student sip water three times,

2. And hands over to him the staff with the five the study of the Âraṇyaka the position is slightly different (VI, 3, 2). According to Nârâyana this Sûtra would contain a nishedha of the Sûtras 828 and 829 of the Rig-veda-Prâtisâkhyâ (p. ccxcii of Professor Max Müller's edition).

10, 11. The Indian tradition divides these Sûtras after âkâryaḥ, so that the words adhîhi bho would have to be pronounced by the teacher. Thus also Nârâyana explains, âkârya adhîhi bho 3 iti mânavaḥ uktvâ, &c. In my opinion it is the student or the students who say adhîhi bho. Thus the Prâtisâkhyâ (Sûtra 831, ed. Max Müller) says, 'They invite him with the words adhîhi bho 3, all the students the teacher, having embraced his feet.' Comp. also below, IV, 8, 12, the greater part of which Sûtra is word for word identical with these rules; VI, 3, 6; Gautama I, 46; Gobhila II, 10, 38.

6, 1, 2. Râmakāṇḍa : '... with this Mantra which the teacher tells him, and which he (the student) pronounces, he sips water verses, 'Blessing may give us' (Rig-veda V, 51, 11-15).

3. An optional gift is the fee for the sacrifice.

4. After (the teacher) has led him round the fire, turning his right side towards it, (the student) goes through the village to beg food.

5. (Let him beg,) however, of his mother first,

6. Or of a woman who will not refuse.

7. Having announced the alms to his teacher, he may eat (the food himself) with the master's permission.

8. The daily putting on of fuel, the going for alms, the sleeping on the ground, and obedience to the teacher: these are the standing duties of a student.

three times . . . He (the teacher) then gives him again the staff, which he had given him before silently.' I do not think that this double handing over of the staff agrees with the real meaning of the text; Gobhila also (II, 10) and Âsvalâyana (I, 22, 1) prescribe the dandapradâna after the repetition of the Sâvitri, without mentioning that the same had been already done before; Pâraskara II, 2, 11 speaks of the handing over of the staff before the recital of the Sâvitri, and does not state that it should be repeated afterwards.

All these ceremonies, the teaching of the Sâvitri as well as the dandapradâna, were considered as forming part of the Upanayana, even though a longer or shorter space of time (chap. 5, 1-3) might elapse between the first arrival of the student at the teacher's house and the performing of these rites. This follows from chap. 11, Sûtras 2-4.

2. These five verses have already occurred above at I, 15, 12.

3. Comp. I, 14, 13-15.

4 seq. On the student's begging of alms compare the more detailed rules in Pâraskara II, 5; Âpastamba I, 3, &c.

7. Comp. the passages quoted by Professor Bühler on Âpastamba I, 3, 31 (S. B. E., vol. ii, p. 12).

KHANDA 7.

1. Now (follows the exposition) of the study of the Veda.
2. Both sit down to the north of the fire,
3. The teacher with his face to the east, the other one to the west.
4. After (the student) has reverentially saluted the teacher's feet and has sprinkled his (own) hands (with water),
5. And has kneeled down with his right knee on young Kusa shoots at their roots,
6. And has grasped round (those Kusa shoots) in their middle with his hands, holding the right uppermost,
7. The teacher, having seized them at their tops

7, 1. Nârâyana: 'Now (atha), i. e. after the observance of the Sukriya vrata,' &c. On the Sukriya vrata which has to be undergone before the Anuvâkâna treated of in this chapter can be performed, see the note on chap. 4, 1, and below, chap. 11, 9. One would have expected that in the arrangement of Sâṅkhâya the rites belonging to the Sukriya vrata would precede the exposition of the Anuvâkâna. Perhaps it was in consequence of the exact analogy of the Sukriya with the Sâkvara, Vratika, Aupanishada vratas, that the description of the former has been postponed till the latter had to be treated of.

Râmakâṇḍa's Paddhati has the following remark here, 'Now the way of studying the Veda, called Anuvâkâna, is set forth. This can be done only after the Sukriya vrata has been enjoined on the student; before that nothing but the Sâvitri can be taught to him.'

2 seq. Comp. above, chap. 2, 8 seq.

4. The way in which this reverential salutation should be performed is described below, IV, 12, 1 seq.

6. On dakshinottarâbhyâm, see chap. 2, 11 and Nârâyana's note there.

with his left hand, and with his right hand sprinkling them with water, then makes the other say :

8. 'Recite the Sâvitṛī, sir!' says the other.

9. 'I recite the Sâvitṛī to thee!' says the teacher.

10. 'Recite the Gâyatrī, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the Gâyatrī to thee!' says the teacher.

11. 'Recite the verse of Visvâmitra, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the verse of Visvâmitra to thee!' says the teacher.

12. 'Recite the Rishis, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the Rishis to thee!' says the teacher.

13. 'Recite the deities, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the deities to thee!' says the teacher.

14. 'Recite the metres, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the metres to thee!' says the teacher.

15. 'Recite the Sruti, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the Sruti to thee!' says the teacher.

16. 'Recite the Smṛiti, sir!' says the other.

'I recite the Smṛiti to thee!' says the teacher.

17. 'Recite faith and insight, sir!' says the other.

'I recite faith and insight to thee!' says the teacher.

8 seq. Comp. Weber's Indische Studien, vol. x, p. 131 seq.

10. Comp. the note on chap. 5, 4-6. Nârâyana states, in accordance with these Sûtras of the fifth chapter, that in case the student belongs to the second or third caste, an Ūha (i.e. a corresponding alteration of the formulas; from the Srauta-sûtra, VI, 1, 3 the definition is quoted here sabdavikâram ūham bruvate) takes place. If he is a Kshatriya, he has to say, 'Recite the Trishubh, sir!'—'Recite the verse of Hiranyastûpa (Rig-veda I, 35, 2), sir!' A Vaisya has to say, 'Recite the Gagatī, sir!'—'Recite the verse of Hiranyastûpa (or, of Vâmadeva, Rig-veda I, 35, 9 or IV, 40, 5), sir!'

17. Comp. Indische Studien, X, 132, note 1.

18. In that way, according to what Rîshi each hymn belongs to and what its deity and its metre is, thus (with the corresponding indications of Rîshi, &c.) let him recite each hymn ;

19. Or also, if he does not know the Rîshis, deities, and metres, the teacher recites this verse, 'That glorious (splendour) of Savitar' (Rig-veda III, 62, 10), pāda by pāda, hemistich by hemistich, (and finally) without a stop, and says, when he has finished, 'This (verse belongs to) Savitar ; it is a Gâyatrî ; Visvāmītra is its Rîshi).'

18-20. I do not think that Professor Weber (Indische Studien, X, 132) has quite exactly rendered the meaning of these Sūtras when he says, 'The teacher then (i. e. after the formula of Sūtra 17 has been pronounced) teaches him first the Rîshi, the deity, and the metre of each Mantra. In case he does not know them himself for a Mantra, he recites the holy Sāvitrî (tat Savitur vareṇyam). After this he teaches him in due order either (1) the single Rîshis, i. e. the hymns belonging to each Rîshi, or (2) the single Anuvākas,' &c.—It does not seem quite probable to me that the student should have had to learn first the Rîshis, deities, and metres of the whole Veda, before the text of the hymns was taught him ; I rather believe that hymn by hymn the indication of the Rîshis, &c. preceded the anuvākana of the text itself, and with this opinion the statement of Nārāyaṇa agrees, 'Evam pūrvoktena prakāreṇa rîshidevatākṛṇḍaḥpūrvakam tam tam Agnim îla ityâdikam mantram mânavakâ-yâkâryo-nubhūyât.'

19. According to Nārāyaṇa by esheti (literally, 'This [is the Rîk]') it is meant that the teacher, after having recited the Sāvitrî in the three ways mentioned, should say to the student, 'This Rîk is in the Gâyatrî metre. If recited pāda by pāda, it has three pādas. Thus also this Rîk, if recited hemistich by hemistich, has two Avasānas (pauses), the first at the end of the hemistich, the second at the end of the third kṛāṇa (or pāda). Thus also this Rîk is recited without stopping ; at the end of the three kṛāṇas, or of the twenty-four syllables, the pause (avasāna) should be made. Thus I recite to thee the Sāvitrî ; I recite to thee the Gâyatrî ; I recite to thee the verse of Visvāmītra.' 'For,' adds Nārāyaṇa, 'if the Gâyatrî has been recited, the whole complex of the Veda being of that very

20. Let him thus recite (the hymns belonging to) each Rishi, or (each) Anuvāka ;

21. Of the short hymns (in the tenth Maṇḍala) an Anuvāka,

22. Or as much as the master may think fit.

23. Or optionally he may recite the first and last hymn of (each) Rishi,

24. Or of (each) Anuvāka,

25. (Or) one (verse) of the beginning of each hymn.

26. The teacher may optionally say at the beginning of the hymn, ' This is the commencement.'

27. This has been (further) explained in (the treatise about) the Rishisvādhyāya.

substance, a complete knowledge thereof has been produced.' The commentator then indicates a shorter form for the teacher's words which our Sūtra prescribes by esheti, ' This verse belongs to Savitar ; it is a Gâyatrī ; its Rishi is Viśvāmitra.'

21. The Kshudrasūktas are the hymns Rig-veda X, 129-191.

24 seq. This seems to be an abridged method by which students who had not the intention of becoming Vedic scholars, and probably chiefly students of the Kshatriya and Vaiśya caste, could fulfil their duty of learning the Veda ; a student who knew the first and last hymn of a Rishi, or of an Anuvāka, was, as would seem from these Sūtras, by a sort of fiction considered as though he had known the whole portion belonging to that Rishi, or the whole Anuvāka.

27. Nārāyaṇa explains Rishisvādhyāya by mantrasamhitā. He says, ' The Anuvāka na which has been declared here, is to be understood also with regard to the svādhyāya, i. e. to the Samhitā of the Mantras.' I think there is a blunder in the MS., and instead of tad api svādhyāye . . . gñeyam we ought to read tad rishisvādhyāye . . . gñeyam. In this case we should have to translate the quoted passage, ' . . . is to be understood with regard to the Rishisvādhyāya, i. e. to, &c.'—I think, however, that the true meaning of the Sūtra is different from what Nārāyaṇa believes it to be. The expression vyākhyātam apparently conveys a reference to another treatise in which the rules regarding the Rishisvādhyāya would seem to have been fully set forth. The Srauta-sūtra contains

28. When (the lesson) is finished, he takes the young Kusa shoots, makes of cow-dung a pit at their roots, and sprinkles water on the Kusa (shoots) for each hymn.

29. For the rest of the day standing and fasting.

KHANDA 8.

1. In the afternoon, having obtained by begging fried barley grains, he shall sacrifice them with his hand on the fire according to the rites of the Āgya oblations with the text, 'The lord of the seat, the no passage which could be the one here referred to; we may suppose, therefore, that either a chapter of a Prâtisākhya is quoted here, or a separate treatise on the special subject of the R̥ishisvādhyāya. References to such treatises are found in the Sūtra texts in several instances, of which the most important is that in the Gobhila-Grihya I, 5, 13, 'On what day the moon becomes full, the knowledge thereof is contained in a special text; that one either should study or ascertain when the Parvan is from those who have studied it.'

28. Nārāyaṇa: 'First stand the Mantras, then the Brāhmaṇa, because it contains the viniyoga (the ritual use of the Mantras), then the Smṛiti texts such as Manu, &c. When he has repeated these texts to the student, after the end of the Anuvākana, the teacher should take from the student the Kusa blades which had been taken up before for the sake of the Anuvākana (see Sūtras 5 seq.),' &c.—The teacher is made the subject of this rule also by Rāmakaṇḍa. On yathāśūktam Nārāyaṇa observes that according to some teachers these water oblations were directed to the R̥ishis of the different hymns (r̥ishīn uddisryeti keṣit). This statement seems to be countenanced by IV, 6, 6. Comp. the note below on IV, 9, 1.

29. 'This rule concerns the Brahmakārin.' Nārāyaṇa. See also Āsvalāyana I, 22, 11.

8, 1. This is the Anupravāṇīyahoma treated of by Āsvalāyana at I, 22, 12 seq. There it is stated that this sacrifice should be performed as well after the recitation of the Sāvitrī as after the other wonderful' (Rig-veda I, 18, 6 seq.), verse by verse, down to the end of the hymn,

2. Causing the teacher by (the gift of) food to pronounce auspicious wishes.

KHANDA 9.

1. In the forest, with a piece of wood in his hand, seated, he performs the Sandhyâ (or twilight devotion) constantly, observing silence, turning his face north-west, to the region between the chief (west) point and the intermediate (north-western) point (of the horizon), until the stars appear,

2. Murmuring, when (the twilight) has passed, the Mahâvyâhr̥itis, the Sâvitṛī, and the auspicious hymns.

3. In the same way in the morning, turning his face to the east, standing, until the disk of the sun appears.

10, 1. When (the sun) has risen, the study (of the Veda) goes on.

portions of the Veda, for instance, as the commentary there has it, after the Mahânâm̐s, the Mahâvrata, and the Upanishad have been recited. Nârâyana indicates the time of this sacrifice in the words, 'On that same fast-day (chap. 7, 29) in the afternoon.'

2. 'He shall, by pronouncing such words as svasti bhavanto bruvantu, dispose the teacher favourably so that he may say svastil' Nârâyana.

9, 1. On the Sandhyâ ceremony comp. chiefly Baudhâyana II, 7. Samitpâni of course is not samyatapâni, as Nârâyana explains it. On anvash/amadesa comp. Professor Stenzler's note on Âsvalâyana III, 7, 4.

2. The Svastyayanâs are texts such as Rig-veda I, 89; IV, 31.

10, 1. This Sûtra evidently should be placed at the end of the ninth chapter; comp. IV, 6, 9. The fact that, as the commentary observes, the words nityam vâgyatah (chap. 9, Sûtra 1) are to be

KHANDA 10.

2. Every day in the evening and in the morning,

3. He establishes the fire (in its proper place), wipes (with his hand the ground) round (it), sprinkles (water) round (it), bends his right knee,

4. (And puts fuel on the fire with the texts,) 'To Agni I have brought a piece of wood, to the great Gâtavedas; may he, Gâtavedas, give faith and insight to me. Svâhâ!

'Firewood art thou; may we prosper. Fuel art thou; splendour art thou; put splendour into me. Svâhâ!

'Being inflamed make me prosperous in offspring and wealth. Svâhâ!

'Thine is this fuel, Agni; thereby thou shalt grow and gain vigour. And may we grow and gain vigour. Svâhâ!'

supplied here also points in the same direction. That this Sûtra has nothing to do with the Agnipariśradyâ, of which the tenth chapter treats, becomes evident also from Râmakandra's Paddhati.

4. Nârâyana: samidham iti mantralingât samidhâm homaḥ, mantraprithaktvât karmaprithaktvam iti nyâyât.

In the Atharva-veda XIX, 64, 1 the MSS. have Agne samidham âhârsham. Professors Roth and Whitney have conjectured in this passage agre instead of Agne. It is shown by our passage and the corresponding ones in the other Sûtras that the true reading is Agnaye. Instead of âhârsham we should read âhârsham, as all the parallel texts have. In the passage 'Firewood art thou; might we prosper,' there is a play upon words untranslatable in English, 'edho-sy edhishîmahî.' Perhaps instead of samiddho mâṁ samardhaya we should read samṛiddho mâṁ samardhaya. As the Mantra referred to the Samidh-offering, samṛiddha could very easily be supplanted by the participle of sam-idh. In the parallel texts indicated p. 139 of the German edition it should be, Vâg. Samh. II, 14 a.

5. Having then sprinkled (water) round (the fire),
6. He approaches the fire with the verse, 'May Agni (vouchsafe) to me faith and insight, not-forgetting (what I have learned) and memory; may this praiseful Gâtavedas give blessing to us.'

[7. He makes with ashes the tripundhra sign (the sign of three strokes) which is set forth in the (treatise on the) Sauparnavrata, which is revealed, which agrees with the tradition handed down by the ancients, with the five formulas 'The threefold age' (see above, I, 28, 9), one by one, on five (places), viz. the forehead, the heart, the right shoulder and the left, and then on the back.]

8. He who approaches the fire after having sacrificed thus, studies of these Vedas, one, two, three, or all.

KHANDA 11.

1. Now (follows) the directing to the (special) observances.
2. The rules for it have been explained by the initiation.
3. He does not recite the Sâvitṛi.

7. This Sûtra is wanting in one of the Haug MSS. and in the Sâmbavya MS.; Râmakandra's Paddhati takes no notice of it. I take it for a later addition. It should be noticed that the words dakshinaskandhe . . . ka pañkâsu form a half Sloka.

11, 1. On the four Vratas, of which the Sukriya precedes the study of the main part of the Veda, the Sâkvara, Vrâtika, and Aupanishada that of the different sections of the Âranyaka, see the note on chap. 7, 1 and the Introduction, p. 8. On the name of the Sukriya Râmakandra says, sukriyasabdo vedavâñi, tatsam-bandhâd vratam api sukriyam.

- 2, 4. See the note on chap. 6, 1. 2.

4. Some say that the handing over of the staff forms the end (of this ceremony).

5. During the northern course of the sun, in the time of the increasing moon—

6. The teacher having abstained through one day and one night from sexual intercourse and from eating flesh—

7. With the exclusion of the fourteenth day and of the eighth (of the half-month),

8. And of the first and last, according to some (teachers),

9. Or on what day else the constellation seems lucky to him, on that day he shall direct (the student) to the duties of holiness according to the Sukriya rite.

10. Let him observe (those) duties through three days, or twelve days, or one year, or as long as the master may think fit.

11. The Sâkvara (observance), however, (is to be kept) one year.

12. (So also) the Vrâtika and Aupanishada (observances).

13. When the time has elapsed, when the duties

4. On the dandapradâna, see chap. 6, 2.

6. The pleonasm brahmaṣaryam upetya . . . brahmaṣârî should be removed by expunging brahmaṣârî, which is omitted in the Sâmbavya text. Comp. chap. 12, Sûtra 8; VI, 1, 2.

7. Comp. below, IV, 7, 7.

9. In the Sâmbavya text this Sûtra has a fuller form. It runs there thus, ' . . . he shall direct (the student) to the duties of holiness according to the Sukriya rite, the teacher saying, "Be a Sukriya-brahmaṣârin;" the other one replying, "I will be a Sukriya-brahmaṣârin." Thus also at the other observances he shall pronounce each time the name of the observance to which he directs him.'

10. Comp. above, II, 5, 1.

13. The Samyu Bârhaspatya, i.e. the verse beginning with the have been observed, when the Veda has been studied down to the Samyu-Bârhaspatya-(hymn), let (the teacher then), should he intend to instruct (the student) in the secret (part of the Veda), ascertain the time (through which the student has to observe the special rites) and the rules to be observed, from the (special) directions (that are handed down on this subject).

KHANDA 12.

1. After (the student) has eaten something in the morning, in the afternoon, to the north-east—words taḥ kham yor â vrinîmahe, is the last verse of the Rigveda in the Bâshkala redaction. See below, the note on IV, 5, 9.

On kâlaniyamam, see Nârâyana's note, pp. 140 seq. of the German edition.

12, 1 seq. The Indian tradition (with the exception only, as far as is known to me, of the Sâmbavya commentary) refers the ceremonies described in this chapter, like those treated of in chap. 11, as well to the Sukriya as to the Sâkvara and the other Vratas. This is not correct. The eleventh chapter gives the rites common to the four Vratas; the Sukriya vrata is connected with no special ceremonies beside those, so that the exposition of this Vrata is brought to an end in that chapter. The last Sûtra of chap. 11 marks the transition to the special rites which are peculiar to the three other Vratas, and are connected with the character of mystical secrecy attributed to the Âraṇyaka, and thus it is with the exclusion of the Sukriya that the twelfth chapter refers only to those Vratas. The difference which we have pointed out between the two chapters finds its characteristic expression in Sûtras 9 and 11 of chap. 11, compared with chap. 12, 13, 14; in the former Sûtras the statements there given are expressly extended to the Sukriya, the Sâkvara, the Vrâtika, and the Aupanishada, while in the latter passage mention is made first of the Mahânâmnîs, i.e. the text corresponding to the Sâkvara vrata, and then the uttarâni prakaraṇâni (the following sections) are referred to, i.e. the Mahâvrata and the Upanishad, so that the Sukriya vrata or the texts, the study of which is entered upon by that Vrata, are left out here.

There is a good deal of confusion in the several commentaries

2. Having sacrificed, the teacher then asks him with regard to those deities to whom he has been given in charge (see above, chap. 3, 1), 'Hast thou fulfilled the duties of holiness before Agni, Indra, the Sun, and the Visve devâs?'

with regard to the succession of the different ceremonies taught in this chapter. They all agree in stating that after the lapse of the year through which the Vrata is kept, a ceremony is performed called Uddîkshāṇikā, i. e. the giving up of the Dîkshā, or preparatory observance. This Uddîkshāṇikā consists chiefly in the teacher's ascertaining whether the student has fulfilled the duties involved by the Vrata (see Sûtras 2 and 3). Besides that, there is no doubt that a repetition of the Upanayana (chap. 11, 2) also formed part of the preparatory rites for the study of the Âraṇyaka. As to the way in which these different ceremonies and the other rites described in this chapter would have to be arranged according to our text, it is perhaps best to follow the statements given in an epitome from the bâlâvabodhanârtham Rîshidaivataâhânopaddhati (MS. Berol. Chambers, 199 a, fols. 13-16); the slight confusion therein is not difficult to get rid of. There we read, 'The Sâkvara, however, is to be kept one year (chap. 11, 11). When the Uddîkshāṇikā has been performed, and three nights (chap. 12, 6) or one day and one night (ibid. 7) have elapsed, the Upanayana should be performed as above (chap. 11, 2), with this difference that at the end of the formula mama vrata, &c. (chap. 4, 1) one should say, "May Brîhaspati join thee to me for the holy observance of the Sâkvara through one year, O Devadatta!" (On this formula, resting on a misunderstanding of chap. 4, Sûtra 2, see the Introduction, p. 8.) The rest is the same as at the Sukriya. Then, when the year (chap. 11, 11) has elapsed, and the Uddîkshāṇikā has been performed, and the three days or the night have passed (chap. 12, 6, 7), he should go out of the village... and in the north-eastern direction,' &c. (here follows the description of how the secret doctrines should be taught to the student, according to Sâṅkh. VI). The confusion showing itself in the double mention of the Uddîkshāṇikā, before and after the Upanayana, should no doubt be put to the account of the excerptor or perhaps even of the MS.; what the meaning of the original Paddhati was is sufficiently shown in the remarks on the following Vratas, for instance, on the Vrâtika (fol. 16), 'Now follows the Vrâtika vrata. It lasts one year (chap.

3. If he answers, 'I have fulfilled them, sir!'—
4. The teacher three times envelops, from the left to the right, with a fresh garment the face (of the student) who is standing behind the fire, in front of the teacher, with his face to the east.
5. He turns the skirt (of that garment) upwards so that it cannot slip down,
6. (And says :) 'Leaving off for three days the putting on of fuel, the going for alms, the sleeping on the ground, and the obedience to the teacher, fast in the forest, in a god's house or in a place where Agnihotra is performed, keeping silence, with earnest care.'

11, 12). When the Sâkvara has reached its end [here we find added at the margin of the MS., "After the Uddikshavikâ has been performed." These words ought not to be received into the text; in the corresponding passage on the Aupanishada vrata they are not found] he performs the whole ceremony, beginning from the smearing (of the Sthanḍila with cow-dung), the drawing of the lines, &c., as at the Upanayana . . . and then, when one year has elapsed, he performs the Uddikshavikâ, and the rules [given in chap. 12, 9 seq.] are observed as above.' I think that here the meaning of the text is correctly represented; first comes the Upanayana, then follows the Vrata lasting one year, then the Uddikshavikâ. After this ceremony the teacher gives to the student the directions mentioned in chap. 12, 16; then follow the three days, or the one night (chap. 12, 6. 7), and finally they both go out of the village to the north-east, and in the forest they recite the Rahasya.

On the whole ceremonies connected with the study of the Âraṇyaka the sixth book should be compared.

5. Nârâyana : Vastrasya darâḥ prântabhâga[m] uparishât kṛtvâ tathâ badhnîyâd yathâ na sambharyeta adhastân na patati tathâ vidheyam.

6. The things which the student here is ordered to leave off for three days are the same that are mentioned above, chap. 6, 8, as his standing duties. According to Nârâyana this would be the Âdesa mentioned in chap. 11, 13.

7. Here some (teachers) prescribe the same observances only for one night, during which he is to stand.

8. The teacher refrains from eating flesh and from sexual intercourse.

9. When those three days or that night has elapsed, going out from the village he shall avoid to look at the following (persons or things) that form impediments for the study (of the Veda) :

10. Raw flesh, a Kandâla, a woman that has lately been confined, or that has her courses, blood, persons whose hands have been cut off, cemeteries, and all sorts of corpse-like (animals ?) which enter (their dens ?) with the mouth first (?), keeping them away from the place where he dwells.

8. Comp. chap. 11, 6.

10. With Sûtikâ is meant a woman during the first ten days after her confinement, for which period the asauka lasts.—Apa-hasta is rendered by Nârâyana by kḥinnahasta; the comment on the Sâmbavya-Grihya mentions âyudhâṅkitahastâms ka. The translation of the last words of this Sûtra (sarvâni ka savarûpâni yâny âsyena na [or âsyena?] praviseyuh svasya vâsân nirasan) is absolutely uncertain. Nârâyana says that such animals as lions, serpents, &c. are designated in common use as savarûpâni. (This literally means, 'having the form of a corpse.' Immediately afterwards Nârâyana gives a nearly identical explanation of savarûpa as different from the one stated first. So perhaps we may conjecture that his first explanation rests on a reading sarpârûpâni; comp. the reading sarvarûpa of Pâraskara.) Of these the animals entering their dwelling-places with the mouth first (âsyena) are to be understood here as forming, when looked at, an impediment for the study. Nârâyana then says that other authorities understand sava in the sense of a dead human body; then savarûpâni are beings having the form thereof (tadrûpâni), such as dogs, jackals, &c. The words yâny âsyena praviseyuh signify that the study is impeded also on the sight of lions, tigers, &c.; for these enter their dwelling-places with their faces first (? anumukhaiḥ kṛitvâ). The words svasya vâsân nirasan mean,

[29]

G

11. Going out (from the village) in a north-eastern direction the teacher sits down on a clean spot, turning his face to the east.

12. When the sun has risen, he recites, in the way prescribed for the Veda-study, (the Āraṇyaka texts to the student) who is to keep silence and who wears a turban.

13. This rule is to be observed only for the Mahānāmni verses.

14. At the sections however that follow (after the *Mahānāmni*s) the other one hears while the teacher recites them for himself.

15. He gives (to the teacher) the turban, a vessel, a good cow.

16. (The teacher accepts the gifts) with the verses, according to Nār., 'when he—i. e. the teacher—goes out of his dwelling-place.' Rāmakaṇḍa says that savarūpa either means lions, snakes, and other dangerous animals, or nails, horns, and other such things that fall off or are severed from the body. The text of the Sāmbavya MS. is sarvāṇi ka syāmarūpāṇi yāvānyā (?) praviseyuḥ, which the commentary explains, sarvāms ka bhakshyavargāms ka. I think there can be little doubt that the text of Sāṅkhāyana is correct (except that some doubt will remain as to āsyena or āsyē na), the more so as the passage reoccurs, nearly identically, below at VI, 1, 4. 5. As to the translation we can only go so far as to venture the opinion that the Sāṅkhāyana text does not admit the interpretation given by Gayarāma, and accepted by Professor Stenzler (who compares Āpastamba I, 11, 27; Gautama XVI, 41) in Pāraskara II, 11, 3 for sarvarūpa, which consequently should, in our opinion, be rejected also in that passage of Pāraskara. For ascertaining the true meaning of savarūpa we shall have to wait until new parallel passages have been discovered.

12. The rules for the Anuvākana have been given above in chap. 7.

13. The Mahānāmni verses are given in the fourth Āraṇyaka of the Aitareyinas. See Sacred Books of the East, I, p. xliii.

‘Thou him’ (Rig-veda I, 18, 5), and, ‘High in the sky’ (Rig-veda X, 107, 2), or (he accepts them) all with the Pranava (i.e. the syllable Om).

17. Here some prepare a mess of rice for the Visve devâs at all sections (of the Âranyaka);

18. For the gods to whom he has been given in charge, according to Mândûkeya.

KHANDA 13.

1. Now (follow) the rules regarding the staff.

2. Let him not leave a passage between himself and the staff.

3. Now should any one of these things, viz. staff, girdle, or sacrificial cord, break or rend, the same penance (takes place) therefore which (has been prescribed) at the wedding with regard to the chariot.

4. If the girdle cannot be repaired, he makes another and speaks over it (the following verses):

5. ‘Thou who knowest the distinction of pure and impure, divine protectress Sarasvatî, O girdle, prolong my vow unimpaired, unbroken.

‘Thou, Agni, art the pure bearer of vows. Agni, carry hither the gods to our sacrifice and our oblation.

‘Bearing the vows, the infallible protector of vows, be our messenger, undecaying and mighty. Giving treasures, merciful, Agni, protect us, that we may live, Gâtavedas!’

6. And he ties the sacrificial cord to the staff.

7. Here it is said also :

18. Comp. the second Sûtra of this chapter.

13, 3. See above, I, 15, 9 seq.

8. 'Let him sacrifice the sacrificial cord and the staff, the girdle and also the skin in water after the completion of his vow with a Varuṇa-verse or with the essence (of the Vedas, i.e. the syllable Om).'

KHANDA 14.

1. Now (follows) the Vaisvadeva (sacrifice).
2. The rite of the sacrifice has been explained.
3. Let him pour oblations of prepared Vaisvadeva food in the evening and in the morning into the (sacred) domestic fire.
4. 'To Agni svâhâ! To Soma svâhâ! To Indra and Agni svâhâ! To Vishṇu svâhâ! To Bharadvâga Dhanvantari svâhâ! To the Visve devâs svâhâ! To Praçâpati svâhâ! To Aditi svâhâ! To Anumati svâhâ! To Agni Svishṭakṛit

8. Nârâyana here quotes Rig-veda I, 24, 6, which is the first verse in the Rig-veda addressed to Varuṇa (i.e. to Varuṇa alone, not to Mitra and Varuṇa, &c.).

14, 1. The rules regarding the Vaisvadeva sacrifice stand here, as I have already pointed out in the German edition, p. 142, in a very strange position amid the matter that concerns the student, and before the description of the ceremony that concludes studentship (the Samâvartana; III, 1). On the first word of the chapter, atha, Nârâyana observes that thereby the householder is marked as the subject of the following rules. It seems rather forced to explain the position of this chapter, as Nârâyana does, by pointing out that in some cases, for instance when the teacher is away on a journey, a student also can eventually be called upon to perform the Vaisvadeva sacrifice (comp. below, chap. 17, 3).

2. This Sûtra shows, according to Nârâyana, that the Vaisvadeva offering does not follow the ordinary type of sacrifice (the Pratisrute homakalpa, as it is termed above, I, 9, 19), but the form described in the Agnikâryaprakarana, above, chap. 10, 3 seq.

svāhā !'—having thus offered the oblations belonging to those deities,

5. He then shall offer Balis (i.e. portions of food) in the centre of the floor to the same deities; (then another Bali with the words,) 'Adoration to Brahman and to the Brāhmanas!' and (with the verse), 'Vāstoshpati, accept us' (Rig-veda VII, 54, 1) in the centre of the floor to Vāstoshpati.

6. He then distributes Balis, from the left to the right, through the different quarters (of the horizon, to the presiding deities) in due order (with the words),

7. 'Adoration to Indra and to those belonging to Indra! Adoration to Yama and to those belonging to Yama! Adoration to Varuṇa and to those belonging to Varuṇa! Adoration to Soma and to those belonging to Soma! Adoration to Bṛihaspati and to those belonging to Bṛihaspati!'

8. Then (turned) towards the disk of the sun, 'Adoration to Aditi and to the Âdityas! Adoration

5. 'He shall offer a Bali to those deities, i.e. to those ten deities to whom he has sacrificed, to Agni, &c. (see Sûtra 4), addressing them with the word, "Adoration (to such and such a deity)"—because in the other cases the word "adoration" (namaḥ) has been prescribed for the Bali.' Nârâyana.

6, 7. The distribution of Balis begins in the east, which is the part of the horizon sacred to Indra; it then proceeds to the south, the west, the north, which are sacred respectively to Yama, Varuṇa, and Soma. Finally the Bali belonging to Bṛihaspati and the Bârhaspatyas is offered, according to Nârâyana, to the north-east.

8. The commentators (see p. 142 of the German edition) differ as to whether âdityamandala means the disk of the sun towards which this Bali should be offered, or a place or an apartment of circular form (âdityamandalarûpe mandalâgâre, as in my opinion we ought to correct the reading in Nârâyana's note).

to the Nakshatras, to seasons, to months, to half-months, to days and nights, to years !'

9. 'To Pûshan, the path-maker; to Dhâtar, to Vidhâtar, and to the Maruts' — (thus) on the thresholds.

10. To Vishnu on the grindstone.

11. 'To the tree' — (thus) in the mortar.

12. 'To the herbs' — (thus) where the herbs are kept.

13. 'To Parganya, to the waters' — (thus) near the water-pot.

14. 'Adoration to Sri' — (thus) in the bed at the head, 'to Bhadrakâlî' at the foot.

15. In the privy, 'Adoration to Sarvânnabhûti !'

16. Then (he throws a Bali) into the air, in the evening with the words, 'To the night-walkers,' in the morning with the words, 'To the day-walkers,' and with the verse, 'Which gods' (Rig-veda I, 139, 11).

17. To the unknown deities to the north, and to Dhanapati (i.e. the Lord of treasures).

18. With the sacrificial cord suspended over the right shoulder he pours out the remnant to the south with the verse, 'They whom the fire has burnt' (Rig-veda X, 15, 14).

19. When he has made his offerings to gods, fathers (i.e. Manes), and men, let him give food to a Srotriya (i.e. to a learned Brâhmana).

20. Or let him give alms (of food) to a student.

21. Let him immediately afterwards offer food to a female under his protection, to a pregnant woman, to boys, and to old people.

21. Comp. Böhlingk-Roth s. v. suvasinî, and Professor Bühler's note on Gautama V, 25.

22. Let him throw (some food) on the ground for the dogs, for the dog-butchers, and for the birds.

23. Let him eat nothing without having cut off (and offered as a Bali) a portion thereof.

24. (Let him) not (eat) alone,

25. Nor before (the others).

26. With regard thereto it has been said also in the Rik, 'In vain the fool gains food' (Rig-veda X, 117, 6).

KHANDA 15.

1. Should any one of the six persons (mentioned in the Srauta-sûtra and in the Sûtras 4-9) to whom the Arghya reception is due, visit (him), let him make (ready) a cow, a goat, or what (sort of food) he thinks most like (thereto).

2. Let the Argha not be without flesh.

3. On the occasion of a sacrifice and of a wedding let (the guest) say, 'Make it (ready).'

22, 23. Probably these Sûtras should be divided after iti.

23. 'Pûrvam means, he should not eat before his relations (bandhubhyaḥ pûrvam prathamataḥ).' Nârâyana.

15, 1. This Sûtra presupposes the Srauta-sûtra IV, 21, 1: 'To six persons the Argha reception is due, viz. to the teacher, to an officiating priest, to the father-in-law, to a king, to a Snâtaka, to a friend.' Here the fourth person mentioned is the svasura, while in the Grihya text the expression vaivâhya is used. It is difficult not to believe that both words are used in the same sense, and accordingly Nârâyana says vivâhyaḥ svasuraḥ. Comp. Professor Stenzler's note on Pâraskara I, 3, 1; Âpastamba II, 8, 7; Gautama V, 27.

Sâmânyatamam sadrisatamam mâshâdikam (mâkhâdikam the MS.) annam. Nârâyana.

2, 3. These Sûtras are identical with Pâraskara I, 3, 29. 30. The following Sûtra of Pâraskara stands in the Sânkhâyana text as

4. The animal (offered) to the teacher is sacred to Agni;

5. If offered to an officiating priest, to Br̥haspati ;

6. If to the father-in-law, to Pragâpati ;

7. If to a king, to Indra ;

8. If to a friend, to Mitra ;

9. If to a Snâtaka, to Indra and Agni ;

10. Even if he performs more than one Soma sacrifice during a year, let only priests who have received (from him) the Arghya reception officiate for him, not such who have not received it.

11. Here it is said also :

Sûtra 10. Probably Pâraskara here represents the text which both Sûtrakâras follow, more exactly, and the enumeration given by Sâṅkhâyana in Sûtras 4-9 of the different categories of Arghyas with the corresponding deities, is an addition to that original stock of rules.

Apparently the two Sûtras 2 and 3 stand in contradiction to each other, as Sûtra 2 seems to prescribe that at the Argha meal in every case flesh should be given to the guest, and Sûtra 3 specifies only two occasions on which the killing of the Argha cow cannot be dispensed with. Perhaps the meaning is this, that it is not necessary, except in the cases of a sacrifice and of a wedding, to kill a cow expressly for that purpose, but that in any case, even if the cow offered to the guest be declined by him, the host should take care that some flesh be served at that meal. So says Nârâyana in his note on Âsvalâyana-Gr̥hya I, 24, 33, 'Pasukaranapakshe tanmâmsena bhoganam, utsarganapakshe mâmsântarena.' Similarly the Buddhists distinguish between eating flesh and eating the flesh of an animal expressly killed in order to entertain that very guest.

6. The literal translation of vaivâhya would be 'a person related by marriage.' But comp. the note on Sûtra 1.

8. Priya of course does not mean gâmâtar, as is stated in a number of commentaries. Gobhila says, priyo-tithiḥ.

11. Other persons, for instance a king, can claim the Argha reception not more than once a year. Comp. Âpastamba II, 8, 7 ; Gautama V, 28, 29, &c.

KHANDA 16.

1. 'At the Madhuparka and at the Soma sacrifice, at the sacred rites for fathers (Manes) and gods only animals may be killed, not elsewhere: thus has Manu said.

2. 'Both his teacher and his father, and also a friend who does not stay in his house as a guest: whatever these dispose, that let him do; such is the established custom.

3. 'Let him not consider as a guest a person living in the same village, or one that comes in returning from a journey; (but let him consider as a guest only) one who has arrived at his house where the wife or the fires (of the host) are.

4. '(The fire of) the Agnihotra, bulls, and a guest that has come in at the right time, children and persons of noble families: these burn up him who neglects them.

5. 'A bull, the Agnihotra, and a student, these three prosper only if they eat; there is no prosperity for them, if they do not eat.

6. 'Day by day the domestic deities approach the man who performs the domestic rites, in order to receive their share; (that) let him pour out to them.

KHANDA 17.

1. 'Even if a man constantly gather grass and perform the Agnihotra, a Brâhmaṇa who stays (in his house) without receiving honour takes away all his good works.

16, 3. Comp. Gautama V, 40, &c.

4. On the right time for the arrival of a guest, see Gautama, loc. cit.

2. 'One should give (even) if it were only a water-pot; one should sacrifice (even) if it were a piece of wood; (even) down to one hymn or to one Anuvâka the Brahmayagña is enjoined.

3. 'When on a journey let him not fast; (during that time) the wife keeps the vow. Let his son, his brother, or his wife, or his pupil offer the Bali oblation.

4. 'Those who perform this Vaisvadeva sacrifice in the evening and in the morning, they will prosper in wealth and (long) life, in fame and offspring.'

KHANDA 18.

1. A student who is going to set out on a journey, speaks thus to his teacher :

2. 'Of inhalation and exhalation'—(this he says) in a low voice; 'Om, I will dwell'—this aloud.

3. (The teacher) in a low voice (replies), 'To inhalation and exhalation I, the wide-extended one, resort with thee. To the protecting god I give thee in charge. God Savitar; this student belongs to thee; I give him in charge to thee; protect him; do not forsake him.'

4. 'Om, hail!' the teacher aloud. 'Hail!' the teacher aloud.

Here ends the Second Adhyâya.

18, 2. Perhaps vatsyâmi (I will dwell) is a sort of euphemism for pravatsyâmi (I will go away).

ADHYĀYA III, KHANDA 1.

1. A bath (shall be taken by the student) when he is going to return home (from his teacher).

2. 'A bull's hide'—this has been declared. On that hide he makes him sit down and have his hair and beard cut and the hair of the body and the nails.

3. Having had (the cut-off hair-ends, &c.) thrown away together with rice and barley, with sesamum-seed and mustard-seed, with Apāmārga and Sadāpushpī flowers,

4. Having sprinkled him (with water) with the Āpohishṭhīya-hymn (Rig-veda X, 9),

5. Having adorned him,

6. Having dressed him with two garments with (the verse), 'The garments both of you' (Rig-veda I, 152, 1),

7. He then puts on him a golden ornament (with the words), 'Giving life and vigour' (Vāgasaneyi Samhitā XXXIV, 50).

8. With (the verse), 'Mine, Agni, be vigour' (Rig-veda X, 128, 1), the veiling (of the head is done).

9. With (the verse), 'House by house the shining one' (Rig-veda I, 123, 4) (he takes) the parasol,

10. With (the verse), 'Rise up' (Rig-veda X, 18, 6), the shoes,

1, 2. Comp. above, I, 16, 1, and the note there.

4. Nārāyaṇa says here, enam mānavakam abhishikṣya abhishekam snānam kārayatvā. Comp. Pāraskara II, 6, 9 seq.

11. With (the verse), 'Long be thy hook' (Rig-veda VIII, 17, 10) he takes a bamboo staff.

12. Let him sit that day in solitude.

13. With (the verses), 'O tree! with strong limbs,' and, 'A ruler indeed' (Rig-veda VI, 47, 26; X, 152, 1) let him mount the chariot.

14. (Before returning home) let him first approach a place where they will perform Argha for him with a cow or a goat.

15. Or let him return (making his start) from cows or from a fruit-bearing tree.

16. With (the verses), 'Indra, give us best goods,' and, 'Be friendly, O earth' (Rig-veda II, 21, 6; I, 22, 15) he descends (from the chariot).

17. Let him eat that day his favourite food.

18. To his teacher he shall give (that) pair of garments, the turban, ear-rings and jewel, staff and shoes, and the parasol.

KHANDA 2.

1. If he wishes to have a house built, he draws with an Udumbara branch three times a line round (the building-ground) with (the words), 'Here I include the dwellings for the sake of food,' and sacrifices in (its) centre on an elevated spot,

2. (With the texts,) 'Who art thou? Whose art

12. Pratilîna evidently means the same thing that is so often expressed in the Buddhist texts by paṭisallîna.

18. The pair of garments are those referred to in Sûtra 6; on the turban see Sûtra 8. On staff and shoes comp. Sûtras 10, 11; on the parasol, Sûtra 9.

2, 1 seqq. On the house of the Vedic Indians, comp. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, pp. 148 seqq.

thou? To whom do I sacrifice thee, desirous of (dwelling in the) village? Svâhâ!

‘Thou art the gods’ share on this (earth). From here have sprung the fathers who have passed away. The ruler has sacrificed, desirous of (dwelling in the) village, not omitting anything that belongs to the gods. Svâhâ!’

3. Having had the pits for the posts dug,

4. He pours water-gruel into them,

5. And with (the verse), ‘This branch of the immortal one I erect, a stream of honey, promoting wealth. The child, the young one, cries to it; the cow shall low to it, the unceasingly fertile one’—he puts an Udumbara branch which has been besmeared with ghee into the pit for the right door-post.

6. ‘This branch of the world I establish, a stream of honey, promoting wealth. The child, the young one, cries to it; the cow shall low to it that has a young calf’—thus to the left.

7. In the same way at the two (pits) to the south, to the west, and to the north.

8. With (the verse), ‘This branch of this tree, that drops ghee, I erect in the immortal. The child, the young one, cries to it; cows shall flock to it, unceasingly fertile ones’—he erects the chief post.

9. ‘May the young child come to it, may the calf . . . ; may they come to it with a cup of Parisrut, with pots of curds.

9. On parisrut, see Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, p. 281. The words bhuvanas pari give no sense; Pâraskara probably gives the true reading, â vatso gagadaiḥ saha (III, 4, 4; comp. Sûtra 8: Vasûms ka Rudrân Âdityân Îrânam gagadaiḥ saha; gagada is explained in Gayarâma’s commentary by anuga, anuḥara). The word gagada of course was exposed to all sorts of corruptions:

KHANDA 3.

1. 'Stand here, O post, firm, rich in horses and cows, . . . ; stand safely, dropping ghee ; stand here, fixed in the ground, prosperous, long-lasting(?), amid the prosperity of people who satiate themselves. May the malevolent ones not reach thee!

'Hither are called the cows ; hither are called goats and sheep ; and the sweet essence (?) of food is called hither to our house.

'Stand fast in the Rathantara ; recline on the Vâmadevya ; establish thyself on the Bṛihat'—with (these texts) he touches the chief post.

2. When the house has been built conformably (to its proper dimensions), he touches the posts.

3. The two (posts) to the east with (the words), 'Truth and faith!'

4. Those to the south with (the words), 'Sacrifice and gift!'

5. Those to the west with (the words), 'Strength and power!'

6. Those to the north with (the words), 'The Brahman and the Kshatra!'

7. 'Fortune the pinnacle, law the chief post!'

thus the text of Âsvalâyana has gâyatâm saka ; the Atharva-veda (III, 12, 7) gagatâ saha ; and from this gagat to the bhuvana found in our text the way is not very long.

3, 1. According to Nârâyana the verse given in chap. 2, 9 forms one Mantra with those in 3, 1. The meaning of sîlamâvatî is uncertain. The word reoccurs in Rig-veda X, 75, 8. Pâraskara (III, 4, 4) has sûnṛitâvatî. On tilvila, comp. Rig-veda V, 62, 7. The following word is quite uncertain both as to its reading and its meaning. Comp. p. 143 seq. of the German edition. On kîlâla, comp. Zimmer, loc. cit. p. 281.

7. Comp. Pâraskara III, 4, 18.

8. 'Day and night the two door-jambs!'
9. 'The year the roof!'
10. With (the verse), 'A bull, an ocean' (Rig-veda V, 47, 3) let him bury an anointed stone under the pinnacle.

KHANDA 4.

1. At the sacrifice to Vâstoshpati—
2. Having established the (sacred) domestic fire outside with (the words), 'I place (here) Agni with genial mind; may he be the assembler of goods. Do no harm to us, to the old nor to the young; be a saviour to us, to men and animals!'
3. Having put a new water-pot on fresh eastward-pointed Kusa-grass,
4. And spoken over it (the words), 'Unhurt be our men, may our riches not be squandered!'
5. He sacrifices three oblations in the forenoon with the Stotriya text of the Rathantara with repetition and Kakubh-forming;
6. (Three oblations with the Stotriya) of the Vâmadevya at midday;
7. Of the Brîhat in the afternoon;
8. The four Mahâvyâhritis, the three verses, 'Vâstoshpati!' (Rig-veda VII, 54, 1-3), (the single verses,) 'Driving away calamity,' (and) 'Vâstoshpati, 4, 1. The sacrifice to Vâstoshpati is celebrated when the sacrificer enters his new house.

2. Comp. above, I, 7, 9.

5-7. On the way of reciting a Pragâtha, so as to form three verses, see Indische Studien, VIII, 25; Zeitschrift der deutschen Morg. Gesellschaft, XXXVIII, 476. The Stotriya of the Rathantara is Rig-veda VII, 32, 22 seq.; that of the Vâmadevya, IV, 31, 1-3; that of the Brîhat, VI, 46, 1 seq.

a firm post' (Rig-veda VII, 55, 1; VIII, 17, 14), and to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit a tenth oblation of cooked food at night.

9. Taking with himself his eldest son and his wife, carrying grain, let him enter (the house with the words),

'Indra's house is blessed, wealthy, protecting; that I enter with my wife, with offspring, with cattle, with increase of wealth, with everything that is mine.'

KHANDA 5.

1. 'To every able one, to every blissful one, to you I turn for the sake of safety, of peace. Free from danger may we be. May the village give me in charge to the forest. All! give me in charge to the great one,'—thus (he speaks) when leaving the village.

2. 'May the forest give me in charge to the village. Great one! give me in charge to the all'—thus (he speaks) when entering the village, not without (carrying) something (with himself, such as fuel, flowers, &c.)

3. I enter the blessed, joyful house, which does not bring death to men; manly (I enter) that which is rich in men. Bringing refreshment, dropping ghee (we enter the house) in which I shall joyfully rest'—this verse is constantly to be pronounced (when he enters the house).

5, 3. For anyeshv aham we should read perhaps yeshv aham. Āsvalāyana-Sraut. II, 5, 17 has teshv aham.

KHANDA 6.

1. One who has not set up the (sacred Srauta) fires, when setting out on a journey, looks at his house.

2. (He murmurs the text,) 'Do ye both, Mitra and Varuṇa, protect this house for me; unscathed, undisturbed, may Pûshan guard it till our return;'

3. And murmurs (the verse), 'Upon the path we have entered' (Rig-veda VI, 51, 16).

KHANDA 7.

1. When he then returns from his journey, he looks at his house (and says),

2. 'House, do not fear, do not tremble; bringing strength we come back. Bringing strength, joyful and wise, I come back to thee, to the house, rejoicing in my mind.

'That of which the traveller thinks, that in which dwells much joy, that I call the house. May it know us as we know it.

'Hither are called the cows; hither are called goats and sheep; and the sweet essence (?) of food is called hither to our house.'

3. Having approached the (sacred) domestic fire with the verse, 'This Agni is glorious to us, this is highly glorious. Worshipping him (?) may we suffer no harm; may he bring us to supremacy'—

4. Let him pronounce auspicious words.

5. When accepting the water for washing the feet he says, 'The milk of Virâg art thou; may I obtain

7, 2. On kîlâla, see chap. 3, 1.

5. Padyâ virâg is the Virâg metre, so far as it consists of the milk of Virâg; in me (may) the milk of Padyâ Virâg (dwell)!'

KHANDA 8.

1. When one who has not set up the (sacred Srauta) fires, is going to partake of the first-fruits (of the harvest), let him sacrifice to the Âgrayana deities with (Agni) Svishṭakṛit as the fourth, and with the word SvÂHÂ, on his (sacred) domestic fire.

2. Having recited over (the food) which he is going to eat (the formula), 'To Pragâpati I draw thee, the proper portion, for luck to me, for glory to me, for food to me!'—

3. He thrice eats of it, sprinkling it with water, with (the verse), 'From the good you have led us to the better, ye gods! Through thee, the nourishment, may we obtain thee. Thus enter into us, O potion, bringing refreshment; be a saviour to us, to men and animals!'

4. With (the verse), 'This art thou, breath; the truth I speak. This art thou; from all directions thou hast entered (into all beings). Thou driving away old age and sickness from my body be at home with me. Do not forsake us, Indra!'—he touches the place of the heart;

Pâdas; in this connection, of course, the phrase is intended besides to convey the meaning of 'the splendour which dwells in the feet.' Comp. Pâraskara I, 3, 12 and Professor Stenzler's note there. My German translation of this Sûtra of Sâṅkhâyana rests on a misunderstanding.

8, 1. The Âgrayaneshî is the corresponding rite of the Srauta ritual. Comp. Indische Studien, X, 343. The deities of that sacrifice are Indra and Agni; the Visve devâs; Heaven and Earth.

3. In the text read for tvayâ gvasena, tvayâ vasena.

5. With (the words), 'The navel art thou ; do not fear ; the knot of the breathing powers art thou ; do not loosen thyself,' (he touches) the navel ;

6. With the verse, ' Bliss with our ears ' (Rig-veda I, 89, 8), (he touches) the limbs as stated (in that verse) ;

7. Worshipping the sun with the verse, ' Yonder eye ' (Rig-veda VII, 66, 16).

KHANDA 9.

1. ' May the noisy (goddesses) keep you away from slaughtering hosts. May the entire share, O cows, that belongs to this lord of cows, suffer no harm among you—(and)

' May Pûshan go after our cows ' (Rig-veda VI, 54, 5)—this he shall speak over the cows when they go away (to their pasture-grounds).

2. ' May Pûshan hold ' (Rig-veda VI, 54, 10), when they run about.

3. ' May they whose udder with its four holes is full of sweet and ghee, be milk-givers to us ; (may they be) many in our stable, rich in ghee'—and, ' The cows have come ' (Rig-veda VI, 28), when they have come back.

4. The last (verse) when he puts them in (into the stable).

5. The hymn, ' Refreshing wind ' (Rig-veda X, 169), (he recites over the cows), when they are gone into the stable.

KHANDA 10.

1. The new moon that follows after the Phâlguna

9, 1. The noisy ones are the winds ; comp. the passage of Sâṅkhâyana-Srauta-sûtra, quoted p. 144 of the German edition.

full moon, falls under (the Nakshatra) Revatī: on that (new moon day) he shall have the marks made (on his cattle),

2. With (the words), 'Thou art the world, thousandfold prospering. To Indra may exertion (?) give thee. Inviolable art thou, unhurt, sap, food, protection. For as many (cows) I shall do this now, for more (than these) may I do it in the latest year.'

3. Of that (cow) that calves first let him sacrifice the biestings with the two verses, 'Yearly the milk of the cow' (Rig-veda X, 87, 17. 18).

4. If she brings forth twin-calves, let him sacrifice with the Mahāvyaâhr̥itis, and give the mother of the twins (to the Brâhmaṇas).

KHANDA 11.

1. Now (follows) the Vṛishotsarga (i.e. setting a bull at liberty).

2. On the Kârttika full moon day or on that day of the Âsvayuga (month) that falls under (the Nakshatra) Revatī—

3. He sacrifices, after having kindled amid the cows a well-inflamed fire, Âgya oblations (with the words),

4. 'Here is delight; take delight here. Svâhâ!

10, 2. The reading of tvâ sramo dadat is doubtful. See the Various Readings in the German edition.

11, 1. A part of this chapter is nearly identical with the corresponding section of the Kâṇhaka-gr̥ihya; see Jolly's article, Das Dharma-sûtra des Viṣṇu, &c. (Sitzung der philos. philol. Classe der Bairischen Academie, 7 Juni, 1879), p. 39. Comp. also Pâraskara III, 9; Viṣṇu LXXXVI, and Jolly's remarks, in Deutsche Rundschau X, p. 428.

Here is still-standing; here is (your) own still-standing. Svâhâ!

‘I have let the calf join its mother. May the calf, sucking its mother’s breast, support increase of wealth among us. Svâhâ!’

5. With the verse, ‘May Pûshan go after our cows’ (Rig-veda VI, 54, 5) he sacrifices from (a mess of sacrificial food) belonging to Pûshan.

6. Having murmured the Rudra-(hymns),

7. (He takes) a one-coloured, two-coloured, or three-coloured (bull),

8. Or one that protects the herd,

9. Or that is protected by the herd,

10. Or it may also be red.

11. It should have all its limbs complete, and be the finest (bull) in the herd.

12. Having adorned that (bull),

13. And the four best young cows of the herd, having adorned those too,

14. (He says,) ‘This young (bull) I give you as your husband; sporting with him, your lover, walk about. Do not desert us (?), being joined (with us) from your birth. In increase of wealth, in food may we rejoice. Svâhâ!’

15. When (the bull) is in the midst (of the cows), he recites over (them), ‘Refreshing,’ &c. (Rig-veda X, 169, 1 seq.) down to the end of the Anuvâka.

16. With the milk of all of them he shall cook milk-rice and feed Brâhmaṇas with it.

6. Rig-veda I, 43. 114; II, 33; VII, 46.

14. The translation ‘do not desert us,’ rests on the conjecture mâvasthâta; see the Various Readings, and the note on p. 145 of the German edition.

KHANDA 12.

1. After the Āgrahāyaṇī (or the full moon day of the month Mārgaśīrsha) (follow) the three Ashṭakās in the second fortnight (of the Mārgaśīrsha and of the two following months).

2. At the first of these he sacrifices vegetables,

3. With (the verse), 'She who shone forth first is this (earth); she walks, having entered into this (earth). The wife has brought forth (children), the new-creating mother. May the three powers follow her. Svāhā!'

4. Now (the oblation for Agni) Svishtakṛtī,

5. With (the verses), 'She in whom Yama, the son of Vivasvat, and all gods are contained, the Ashṭakā whose face is turned to all sides, she has satiated my desires.

'They call thy teeth "the pressing-stones;" thy 12, 1. On the Ashṭakā festivals, of which some texts reckon three, while others have four, comp. Weber, Naxatra (second article), pp. 337, 341 seq.; Bühler, S. B. E., II, p. 214; Ludwig, Rig-veda, vol. iv, pp. 424 seq.; Atharva-veda III, 10. The last Ashṭakā, which is celebrated in the dark fortnight of Māgha, is called Ekāshṭakā; this Ashṭakā is called the 'wife of the year,' 'the image of the year,' 'the disposer of the days.' If the Phālguna month is reckoned as the first of the year, this Ashṭakā precedes the year's beginning only by a few days; there are also some Vedic passages which point to the Ekāshṭakā's following shortly after the beginning of the year; see Weber, loc. cit., p. 342.

3. Instead of navakṛtī the parallel texts (except the Mantrabrāhmaṇa II, 2, 12) have navagat, which is explained by nūtanavivāhavaṭī (Ludwig, loc. cit.); the 'three powers' are understood by Mādhava (in the commentary on Taitt. Samh. IV, 3, 11) as Agni, Sūrya, and Kandra.

5. After pavamānaḥ there is evidently a word wanting that udder is (Soma) Pavamāna ; are the months and half-months. Adoration to thee, O glad-faced one! Svâhâ!

KHANDA 13.

1. At the middle (Ashṭakâ) and in the middle of the rainy season,

2. The four Mahâvyâhr̥tis (and) the four (verses), 'They who have thirsted' (Rig-veda X, 15, 9 seq.): having quickly recited (these verses) he shall sacrifice the omentum ;

3. Or (he shall do so) with the verse, 'Carry the omentum, Gâtavedas, to the Manes, where thou knowest them in the world of virtue. May streams of fat flow to them ; may the wishes of the sacrificer be fulfilled. Svâhâ!'

4. (Then follow) the four Mahâvyâhr̥tis (and) the four (verses), 'They who have thirsted' (see Sûtra 2): (thus is offered) an eightfold oblation of cooked food, together with the cut-off portions.

indicated the limb of the Ashṭakâ's body identified with the months and half-months.

13, 1. On madhyâvarsha, comp. Weber, loc. cit., pp. 331, 337. Nârâyana understands not 'in the middle of the rainy season,' but 'in the middle of the year' (see his note, p. 146 of the German edition). I cannot help thinking that the word madhyâvarshe, given by the MSS. here and in Pâraskara III, 3, 13, and explained by Nârâyana, is a corrupt reading which we should correct into mâghyavarsha ('the festival celebrated during the rainy season under the Nakshatra Maghâs'), or something like that. The MSS. of Âsvalâyana-Grihya II, 5, 9 have mâghyâvarsham, mâghâvarsham, mâdhyâvarsham. Vishnu (LXXVI, 1, comp. LXXVIII, 52, and Professor Jolly's note, Sacred Books of the East, VII, p. 240) mentions 'the three Ashṭakâs, the three Anvashṭakâs, a Mâgha day which falls on the thirteenth of the dark half of the month Praushṭapada.' Comp. Manu III, 273, varshâsu ka maghâsu ka ; Yâgñavalkya I, 260.

5. Or, 'Interposed are the mountains; interposed is the wide earth to me. With the sky and all the points of the horizon I interpose another one instead of the father. To N. N. svâhâ!

'Interposed to me are the seasons, and days and nights, the twilight's children. With the months and half-months I interpose another one instead of the father. To N. N. svâhâ!

'With the standing ones, with the streaming ones, with the small ones that flow about: with the waters, the supporters of all I interpose another one instead of the father. To N. N. svâhâ!

'Wherein my mother has done amiss, going astray, faithless to her husband, that sperm may my father take as his own; may another one fall off from the mother. To N. N. svâhâ!'—these four (verses) instead of the Mahâvyâhr̥itis, if (the sacrificer) is an illegitimate child.

6. Or milk-rice (should be offered).

7. On the next day the Anvashṭakya ceremony (i.e. ceremony following the Aṣṭakâ) in accordance with the rite of the Pindapitriyagñâ.

KHANDA 14.

1. On the last (Aṣṭakâ) he sacrifices cakes,
2. With the words, 'The Ukthya and the Atirâtra, the Sadyaḥkr̥i together with the metre—Aṣṭakâ!

5. Instead of 'N. N.' (the text has the feminine amushyai) the sacrificer inserts the name of his mother. For mâsâs, ardhamâsâs I propose to read, mâsais, ardhamâsais.

7. On Anvashṭakya, comp. Bühler, S. B. E., XIV, p. 55; Jolly, loc. cit., p. 59.

Preparer of cakes! Adoration to thee, O glad-faced one. Svāhā!'

3. A cow or a goat is the animal (to be sacrificed), or a mess of cooked food (should be offered).

4. Or he may optionally offer food to a cow.

5. Or he may optionally burn down brushwood in the forest and say, 'This is my Ash/akā.'

6. But let him not neglect to do (one of these things). But let him not neglect to do (one of these things).

Here ends the Third Adhyāya.

14, 3-6. This is one of the passages which the author has taken unchanged from a more ancient Sūtra ; see Âsv. II, 4, 8-11 ; Gobhila IV, 1 (end of the chapter). The Sūtras do not refer, as their position would seem to indicate, to the third, but to the second Ash/akā.

5. Comp. Weber, loc. cit., p. 342, note 1.

ADHYĀYA IV, KHANDA 1.

1. Let him offer (Śrāddha oblations) every month to the fathers.

2. Having invited an uneven number of Brāhmanas, versed in the Veda, at least three, to sit down as (representing) the fathers,

1, 1. Khandas 1-4 contain the rules regarding the Śrāddha oblations directed to the Manes. The dinners offered in connection with these Śrāddha sacrifices to Brāhmanas and also—though of this of course no notice is taken in Vedic texts—to Sramanas stood in the first line among the exhibitions of liberality of lay people towards priests and monks. Thus we find among the stock phrases that constantly reoccur in the Pāli Piṭakas, the mention of Samanas and Brāhmanas ‘who have eaten the food given to them out of faith’ (saddhādeyyāni bhogaṇāni bhuṅgitvā)—wherein the ‘food given out of faith’ (saddhādeyya) either chiefly or exclusively means the Śrāddha dinners, which are so called because the sacrificer gives them ‘full of faith’ (saddhāsamanvita, Manu III, 275) to the Brāhmanas and through them to the Manes.

The principal form of Śrāddha is that treated of in chap. 1, which is designated in other texts (see, for instance, Āsvalāyana-Grīhya IV, 7, 1) as pārvana śrāddha. There are, however, besides the parvan of the new moon, other times also considered as admissible for the performing of this monthly Śrāddha; see Gautama XV, 2 seq.; Āpastamba II, 16, &c.; and comp. on the Śrāddhas in general the passages quoted by Professor Jolly, Das Dharma-sūtra des Viṣṇu (Sitzung der Bair. Akademie, phil. Classe, 7 Juni, 1879), pp. 46 seq.; Max Müller, ‘India, what can it teach us?’ pp. 234 seq., 374 seq.

2. “As the fathers” means: he invites the youngest, middle-aged, and eldest Brāhmanas to sit down in the place of the father, the grandfather, and the great-grandfather’ (Nārāyaṇa). A similar explanation of pitṛivat is mentioned by Nārāyaṇa on Āsvalāyana-

3. And having strewn sesamum into an uneven number of water-pots,

4. He shall pour them out over the hands of the Brâhmanas, assigning (this gift) to them with the words, 'N. N.! This to thee!'

5. After this they should be adorned;

6. And after he has (respectfully) spoken to them, and has put food into the fire,

7. Assigning (the food) to them with the words, 'N. N.! This to thee!' he shall cause them to eat.

8. While they are eating, he shall murmur the Mahâvyâhritis, the Sâvitri, the Madhuvâtîya-verses (Rig-veda I, 90, 6 seq.), and verses addressed to the Manes and to (Soma) Pavamâna.

Grihya IV, 7, 2. My German translation of this Sûtra ought to be altered accordingly.

Besides the Brâhmanas mentioned in this Sûtra, who represent the fathers, according to all the commentaries, other Brâhmanas had to be invited as representing the Visve devâs. Nârâyana gives detailed statements as to the number of the paitrika and of the daivika Brâhmanas to be invited, and though at first sight a European reader would rather be inclined to doubt whether at the Śrâddha ceremony, as the author of the text intended to describe it, any Brâhmanas at all had to be present except the paitrikas, the Sûtra 2, 5 shows that the commentators are quite right in their statements regarding both categories of Brâhmanas.

5-7. It would be more natural to alter the division of the Sûtras, so as to bring âmantrya in the fifth, annañ ka in the seventh Sûtra. In this case we should have to translate: 5. After this, having (respectfully) spoken to them who have been adorned (by him with flowers, ornaments, &c.); 6. And having put (food) into the fire, 7. And having assigned the food to them, &c., he shall cause them to eat.—The respectful address mentioned in the fifth Sûtra consists, according to Nârâyana, in the announcement, 'Ye Brâhmanas, I will put (food) into the fire!' (comp. Âsv.-Grihya IV, 7, 18), which he subsequently does with the formulas, 'To Agni Kavyavâhana svâhâ! To Soma Pitrimat svâhâ! To Yama Ângirasvat Pitrimat svâhâ!' Comp. Baudhâyana II, 14, 8.

9. When they have finished with eating, he shall offer the lumps (of flour).

10. Before (their dinner he shall offer) the lumps, according to some (teachers).

11. Behind (these he places the lumps) for their wives, putting something between (these and the preceding ones).

12. To the Brāhmaṇas he shall announce the remnants.

13. The rites of the putting (of food) into the fire (see Sūtra 6), &c. have been declared (in the Srauta-sūtra) by the Pindapitriyagña.

KHANDA 2.

1. Now (follows) the Ekoddishṭa (i.e. the Srāddha ceremony directed to a single dead person),

2. With one strainer,

3. One (pot of) Argha-water,

4. One lump (of flour).

5. No inviting (takes place here), nor the putting

9. As to the way in which the Pindas should be offered, Nārāyaṇa refers to the Srauta-sūtra (IV, 4).

10, 11. Pindān evidently belongs to the tenth Sūtra, not, as the Indian tradition takes it, to the eleventh. Between the Pindas of the fathers and those belonging to the mothers he puts, according to Nārāyaṇa, for instance, Darbha grass.

13. Srauta-sūtra IV, 3 seq.

2, 1. Eka uddishṭo yasmin srāddhe tad ekoddishṭam (Nār.). This is the kind of Srāddha sacrifice which is to be performed for one twice-born during the first year after his death; see Manu III, 247; Yāgñavalkya I, 250.

3. This rule about the Argha water corresponds to those given with regard to the Pārvaṇa Srāddha in the Sūtras 3 and 4 of the preceding chapter.

5. 'Because the āvāhana (inviting) is forbidden here, it follows

(of food) into the fire, nor (do) the Viśve devās (take part in this ceremony). 'Relished?'—thus are they to be asked whether they are satiated. 'May it approach (the fathers),' instead of 'imperishable.'

6. 'Be satisfied,' when sending them away.
7. Thus through one year, when one has died.
8. And (then) omission of the fourth one.

KHANDA 3.

I. Now (follows) the Sapindāṅkarana (i.e. reception of a dead person into the community of Pinda-offerings with the other Manes).

that it must take place at the Pārvana Śrāddha ('Nār.). According to Rāmañdra's Paddhati he shall say to the Brāhmaṇas, 'I will invite hither the fathers;' and when they give their consent, he invites them with Rig-veda X, 16, 12. Comp. Yāgñavalkya I, 232 seq., &c. Regarding the Viśve devās comp. the note on chap. 1, 2; as to the trīptaprasna (the question whether they are satiated) comp. Manu III, 251; Yāgñ. I, 240. At the Pārvana Śrāddha, after the Brāhmaṇas have finished their dinner and rinsed their mouths, and after the Pindas have been offered, the sacrificer says, 'May what has been given at this Śrāddha to our father N. N., who belongs to the gotra N. N., be imperishable!' (comp. Yāgñ. I, 242.) This phrase is to be altered at the Ekoddishā Śrāddha in the way indicated in this Sūtra.

8. After the Ekoddishā Śrāddha has been performed for a dead person during the first year after his death, he is to be admitted, by the Sapindāṅkarana ceremony, among the other Manes, and receives thenceforward his Pinda together with them at the ordinary Pārvana Śrāddha. As the ritual of this Śrāddha requires that the number of the 'fathers' worshipped should be three, the accession of a new person makes necessary the omission of the pra-pratāmaha, who has now become fourth among the fathers.

3, 1. It appears to me that this whole chapter is a later addition to the original text. The last Sūtra of the preceding chapter, treating of the omission of the fourth 'father,' which forms, as shown in the preceding note, a consequence of the Sapindāṅkarana,

2. When one year has elapsed, or three half-months,
3. Or on a day when something good happens,
4. He fills four water-pots with sesamum, scents, and water,
5. Three for the fathers, one for the (newly) dead person,
6. And pours the pot that belongs to the (newly) dead person out into the pots of the fathers with the two verses, 'They who commonly' (Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ XIX, 45. 46).
7. Thus also the lump (of flour).
8. This is the Sapindîkarana.

KHANDA 4.

1. Now (follows) the Âbhyudayika (i.e. the Srâddha ceremony referring to good luck).

supposes this ceremony to be known and to require no special explanation. Had the intention of the author been to treat of the Sapindîkarana, this would have been the right place for mentioning the âturtavisarga, and not, as we really read it, the end of the chapter treating of the Ekoddishâ. As pointing in the same direction I will mention that the Sâmbavya-Gr̥hya, while giving the first, second, and fourth chapter of this Adhyâya, omits the third. Finally it seems decisive to me that the fifth (Parisishâ) book of the Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya treats of the Sapindîkarana in a whole chapter (V, 9), which shows that the text itself, as the author of the Parisishâ read it, gave no exposition of this ceremony.

2. Nârâyana says that tripaksha means either three pakshas, i.e. one month and a half, or one paksha deficient by three days, i.e. twelve days. We need not say that the latter explanation is inadmissible; it evidently rests on a wrong conclusion drawn from a passage of another Sûtra quoted by him, in which it is stated that the Sapindîkarana should be performed samvatsarânte dvâdasâhe vâ.

- 4, 1. The Âbhyudayika Srâddha has to be performed on such

2. In the fortnight of the increasing moon, on an auspicious day,

3. After the sacrifice to the mothers has been performed,

4. And an even number of (Brāhmaṇas) versed in the Veda have been invited to sit down ;

5. In the forenoon ;

6. The rite is performed from left to right.

7. The murmuring with the omission of the verses belonging to the Manes.

8. The Darbha blades are straight.

9. Barley is to be used instead of sesamum.

10. The lumps are mixed with curds, jujube fruits, fried grain.

11. On inviting (the Manes, he should say), 'The Nāndī mukha (glad-faced ?) Manes will I invite.'

12. 'May the Nāndī mukha Manes be rejoiced,' instead of 'imperishable.'

13. 'The Nāndī mukha Manes will I make speak,' when he makes (the Brāhmaṇas) speak.

14. '(Was it) well done ?'—thus are they to be asked whether they are satiated.

occasions as the birth of a son, the marriage of a son or a daughter, the performance of ceremonies such as the nāmakarman, kûḍākarman, &c. See Yâgñavalkya I, 249.

3. A Srāddha ceremony directed to the mothers here precedes that consecrated to the fathers.

6. Professor Stenzler's translation of Yâgñavalkya, loc. cit. (pradakṣhināvr̥tika = die Ehrfurcht beobachtend), has to be corrected according to this Sūtra.

7. See chap. 1, 8.

9. See chap. 1, 3.

11. Concerning the 'invitation' (āvāhana) see the note on chap. 2, 5.

12. See chap. 2, 5 and the note there.

13. 'When he causes them to say Svadhâ.' Nârâyana. Comp. Āsv.-Gr̥hya IV, 7, 30.

14. Comp. chap. 2, 5.

15. The rest is the same (as in the other kinds of Srâddha rites), as far as it is not prohibited (by contrary rules).

KHANDA 5.

1. Now (follows) the Upâkarana (i.e. the ceremony by which the annual course of study is opened).

2. When the herbs appear, under the Nakshatra Hasta or Sravana,

3. Let him make oblations of the flour of fried barley and of grains, mixed with curds and ghee, with the (whole) Veda, verse by verse: thus say some (teachers).

4. Or with the first verses of the Sûktas and Anuvâkas.

5. With the first verses of the Adhyâyas and of the sections belonging to the (different) Rishis, according to Mândûkeya.

6. But Kaushitaki has said :

7. 'I praise Agni the Purohita' (Rig-veda I, 1, 1), this one verse,

8. 'The Kushumbhaka (mongoose?) has said it;' 'If thou criest, O bird, announce luck to us;' 'Sung by Gamadagni;' 'In thy abode the whole world rests;'

5, 1. As to the Upâkarana, see the statements of Professor Weber in his second article on the Nakshatras, Abhandlungen der Berliner Akademie, 1861, p. 338, and of Professor Bühler in his notes on Âpastamba, S. B. E., II, pp. 110, 111.

2. The Nakshatra Sravana is evidently considered as particularly fit for this occasion because of its name containing an allusion to sruti, &c.

4. I have followed Nârâyana, but perhaps I ought to have translated, 'Sûktas or Anuvâkas,' and in the fifth Sûtra, 'Adhyâyas or the sections, &c.'

‘Come to our sacrifice, O you that are worthy of sacrifice, with care;’ ‘Whosoever, be he ours, be he alien;’ ‘Look on, look about;’ ‘Come here, Agni, the Maruts’ friend;’ ‘The oblation, O king, cooked for thee:’ each time two verses,

9. ‘That blessing and bliss we choose’—this one verse (the first and last verse of each Mandala).

10. (Taking something) of the remnants of the sacrificed (food) they partake of that sacrificial food with this (verse), ‘I praised Dadhikrāvan’ (Rig-veda IV, 39, 6).

11. They sip water, sit down,

12. Murmur the Mahāvyaḥrītis, the Sāvitrī, and the auspicious hymns commencing from the beginning of the Veda,

13. And cause the teacher to pronounce auspicious wishes.

9. According to Kaushītaki, the oblations are made with the first and last rikas of each Mandala. The last rik of the tenth Mandala quoted here, taḥ kham yor ā vrinīmahe, is different from the verse with which our Samhitā (the Sākala Samhitā of the Rig-veda) closes. It is well known that taḥ kham yor ā vrinīmahe is the last verse in the Bāshkala Sākhā which was adopted by the Sāṅkhāyana school (comp. Indische Studien, IV, 431; Weber, Verzeichniss der Berliner Sanskrit-Handschriften, p. 314, &c.; Indische Literaturgeschichte, second edition, Nachtrag, p. 2). It was also known long since that the Bāshkala Sākhā of the Rig-veda contains eight hymns more than the Sākala Sākhā. The Karāṇavyūha Bhāṣya (comp. Dr. von Schroeder’s Introduction to his excellent edition of the Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā, vol. i, p. xxiv), known to me through the kindness of Professor Weber, tells which eight hymns these are. There it is said (folio 22 of Professor Weber’s MS.) that in the Bāshkala Samhitā there followed after VIII, 48 the first two of the Vālakhilya hymns, after VIII, 94 the Vālakhilya hymns 3–7, and at the end of the whole collection the so-called samgñāna hymn (see Professor Max Müller’s edition, vol. vi, p. 32), which ends with the very verse quoted in our Sūtra, taḥ kham yor ā vrinīmahe.

14. Of this (ceremony) it is also said,

15. 'Desirous (of acquiring) for the hymns inexhaustible vigour, reverence, and also soundness, the Rishis, by the power of their austerities, have discovered the Upâkarman.

16. 'Therefore a constant performer of the six kinds of works should, in order that his Mantras might be successful, perform the Upâkarman—so they say—if he wishes for success of his (holy) works.

17. 'At the time of the Upâkarman and of the Utsarga an interruption (of the Veda-study) shall take place for (three days and) three nights, likewise at the Ashvakâs for one day and one night, and so on the last night of each season.'

KHANDA 6.

1. On the first day of the bright fortnight of Mâgha,

2. To the north-east,

3. In a place covered with herbs,

4. Having murmured the hymns sacred to the Sun, 'Upwards that Gâtavedas' (Rig-veda I, 50), 'The bright face of the gods' (I, 115), 'Adoration to Mitra's (eye)' (X, 37), 'From the sky (where he dwells) may Sûrya protect us' (X, 158),

16. The six kinds of works are, performing sacrifices (yagana), officiating at the sacrifices of others (yâgana), studying the Veda (adhyayana), teaching the Veda to others (adhyâpana), giving (dâna), and accepting gifts (pratigraha). Nârâyana.

17. Concerning the Utsarga, see chap. 6. This Sloka occurs also Manu IV, 119 with the reading kshapanam instead of kshapanam ('kshapanam khandasâm virâma anadhyâyah,' Nârâyana). Kshapanam is correct.

6, 1. This Khanda treats of the Utsarga, i. e. the ceremony performed at the end of the term.

5. And having thrown clods of earth (on the ground) to the different quarters (of the horizon), from the left to the right, with the hymn, 'A ruler indeed' (Rig-veda X, 152), verse by verse,

6. And having satiated (with water) the Rîshis, the metres, the deities, faith and insight, and the fathers man by man,

7. They interrupt (the study of) the hymns for six months and a half,

8. Or for five and a half.

9. But if they (wish to) recite them (nevertheless), let the recitation go on after a pause of one day and one night.

KHANDA 7.

1. Now the interruption (of the Veda recitation):—

2. In the case of prodigies until the same time (next day),

3. And in the case of other miracles ;

4. In the case of lightning, thunder, and rains (the recitation shall be interrupted) till the twilight has thrice passed;

5. At a Srâddha-dinner for one day ;

6. If a death (of relations) or birth has happened, for ten days ;

7. On the fourteenth days (of the fortnights), the new moon days, and the Ashṭakâ days,

6. On the tarpana, comp. chaps. 9 and 10.

7, 2. The translation of âkâlam given in my German edition (Während der betreffenden Zeit) is wrong : comp. the commentary there quoted at p. 150 ; Gautama XVI, 22 ; Professor Stenzler's note on Pâraskara II, 11, 2.

6. Agham sapindasodakayor maranam. Nârâyana.

7. According to Nârâyana the ka at the end of this Sûtra would

8. And on misty days.
9. And when the teacher has died, for ten days ;
10. When he has heard of it, for three days ;
11. And (on the death) of those whose family-head he is.
12. On receiving (gifts) as at the Srâddha.
13. On (the death of) a fellow-student ;
14. When he has followed (the funeral of) a dead person,
15. And when he has laid down the lumps of flour to the fathers.
16. At night ;
17. During twilight ;
18. On the full and change of the moon ;
19. After sunset ;
20. In the neighbourhood of a Sûdra ;
21. When the sound of a Sâman is heard ;
22. On a burial ground ;

be intended to convey the meaning that on the pratipad days of each fortnight the study should also be interrupted.

8. The translation of nabhya is quite conjectural. Nârâyana gives a different meaning to this word ; comp. p. 150 of the German edition.

11. Âkâryaputrâdayaḥ. Nârâyana.

21. The reason why the recitation of the Rig-veda is forbidden when the sound of a Sâman is heard, becomes manifest, for instance, from Âpastamba I, 10, 7, where the discontinuance of the Veda-study is prescribed when the barking of dogs, the braying of asses, the cry of a wolf, &c., the sound of musical instruments, of weeping, and of a Sâman is heard. Loud sounds like these would disturb the recitation of Rik or Yagus texts. A very curious opinion has been recently brought forward by Professor Aufrecht (see his edition of the Rig-veda, second edition, vol. ii, p. xxxviii) that the incompatibility of the recitation of Rik hymns and of Sâmans 'beruht auf der Kenntniss von der Willkür und der zum Theil unwürdigen Weise, in welcher der alte Text des Rig-veda in diesem Gesangbuche (i. e. the Sâmavedârṅkika) behandelt ist.'

23. In a wilderness which belongs to the village ;
24. In a village where a corpse is ;
25. On seeing forbidden sights ;
26. On hearing what is forbidden ;
27. On smelling a foul smell ;
28. If a high wind blows ;
29. If a cloud emits (heavy) rain ;
30. On a carriage road ;
31. And while the sound of a lute is heard ;
32. While being on a chariot ;
33. (In the neighbourhood) of a dog as (in that) of a Sûdra ;
34. Having climbed up a tree ;
35. Having descended into a pit ;
36. (Immersed) in water ;
37. While anybody cries ;
38. While suffering bodily pain ;
39. While he is naked ;
40. Whilst impure with the remnants of food ;
41. On a bridge ;
42. On the occasion of the shaving of the hair and the beard until the bath ;
43. While being rubbed ;
44. While bathing ;
45. When having sexual intercourse ;
46. While being anointed ;
47. (In the neighbourhood) of a man who has to touch corpses (a corpse-bearer, &c.), of a woman that has recently been confined, or that has her courses, as (in the neighbourhood) of a Sûdra ;

23. Grāmāranye grāmam (read, grāma?) evāranyam vanam tatra nâdhîyîta. Nârâyana.

29. Except during the rainy season. Nârâyana.

45. Nârâyana also understands maithuna, and I think that the German translation ought to be corrected accordingly.

-
48. With veiled hands ;
 49. In an army ;
 50. In presence of a Brāhmaṇa who has not had his meal, and of cows (that have eaten nothing) ;
 51. When (these impediments) have passed, let them (continue to) recite (the Veda).
 52. Should any of these cases arise against his will, let him (continue to) recite after having held his breath and looked at the sun.
 53. (The same rules hold good,) except (those regarding) lightning, thunder, and rain, for (the study of) the Kalpa. During the five months and a half (they have to behave) as while it rains.
 54. Thereof it is also said,
 55. 'Food, water, roots and fruits, and whatsoever else Śrāddha-food there may be : even when he has (only) accepted thereof, the study should be interrupted ; the Brāhmaṇa's hand is his mouth ; so it is taught.'
-

53. I think that this Sūtra contains two different rules which have to be separated, viz. 1. vidyutstanayitnuvarshavargam kalpe ; 2. varshavad arddhashash/heshu. The first of these rules would extend the cases of anadhyāya mentioned in this chapter to the study of the Kalpa-sūtra, except the cases of lightning, rain, &c. The second would refer to the five months and a half following on the Utsarga ceremony (comp. chap. 6, 8), and would imply that during this time the same texts are to be studied or not, according as their study is allowed or forbidden during rainfall : i. e. the study of the Samhitā is to be discontinued, while that of the Kalpa is allowed to go on. Rāmañdra and Nārāyaṇa differ from this interpretation ; see p. 151 of the German edition.

55. Comp. Manu IV, 117 ; Vasishṭha XIII, 16.

KHANDA 8.

1. And to (students) who have been duly initiated he shall set forth (the Veda) ;

2. The teacher sitting to the east or to the north, the other one to the south, with his face turned to the north.

3. Or two (students shall be so seated).

4. But more (than two) as there is room (for them).

5. He should not sit on a high seat in presence of a Guru,

6. Nor on the same seat (with him),

7. Nor with outstretched feet,

8. Nor stretching his arms under his knees,

9. Nor leaning his body (against a support),

10. Nor forming with his feet a lap,

11. Nor holding his feet like an axe.

12. After (the student) has said, 'Recite, sir!' the teacher shall cause him to pronounce the syllable OM.

13. 'OM,' replies the other.

14. Thereafter let him recite uninterruptedly.

15. When he has recited, he embraces (his teacher's feet),

16. Says, 'We have finished, sir!' and (goes away) according to his business.

8, 1. Nyâyena sishyadharmena upetâh prâptâs tebhyañ sishyebhyo vartayed adhyayanam âkâryañ pravartayet. . Nârâyana.

11. Karanam kuñârîkârûpam krîtvâ na pañhed ity arthañ. Nârâyana.

12. The words adhîhi bho (recite, sir!) are pronounced by the student ; this follows from the passages quoted in the note on II, 5, 10. Nârâyana states that those words are pronounced by the teacher (âkâryo guruñ sishyam adhyâpanârtham adhîhi bho 3 iti sabdam uktvâ . . .).

17. (He shall say,) 'Leave! Pause meanwhile!' according to some (teachers).

18. Let no one step between (a teacher and students) who study.

19. Let no one change his place during the recitation.

20. Should any fault be committed, let him fast three days, or one day and one night, repeat the Sâvitri as long as he can, and give something to the Brâhmanas; then after an interruption of one day and one night the study should go on.

KHANDA 9.

1. Having bathed,

2. And having submerged himself at the time prescribed for the bath, he satiates the deities :

19. The translation of âtmanam vipariharet is conjectural; comp. also Nârâyana's note, p. 151 of the German edition.

9, 1. It is not expressly stated in our text for what occasion the tarpana (i. e. satiating of deities, Rishis, &c. with water-offerings), which is treated of in chap. 9-10, shall be prescribed. The comparison of Baudhâyana II, 9 might perhaps lead us to believe that the ceremony in question is to be performed whenever the sacrificer takes a bath. But the two texts which are most closely connected with ours, the Sâmbavya and Âsvalâyana Grhyas, seem to point clearly to another conclusion. The Sâmbavya-sûtra transposes the rules about the tarpana to the place which would correspond to Sûtra II, 7, 28 of our text. The passage of the Sâmbavya-sûtra runs thus: mûle kundam krîtvâ yathoktam adbhîh parishîñkâty athemâs (so the MS.) tarpayati Agnih Pragâpatir Virûpâksha, &c. It ends: pitarañ pitamahâh prapitamahâh Pailañ Kaho/ah Kaushîtakañ (sic) Kaho/âya Kaushîtakaye svadhâstv iti pratipurusha (sic) pitrimś tarpayitvâ. The last words are taken from the Sûtra IV, 6, 6 of our text. Thus there can be no doubt that Sâmbavya intended to prescribe the tarpana for the conclusion of the vedâdhyayana. The same can be said of Âsvalâyana, who also by the position which he assigns to the tarpana sections (III, 4) brings it into a similar connection with the vedâdhyayana (see Nârâyana's commentary on Âsv., loc. cit.). We may also refer to the treatise about the study of the Âranyaka, which is appended to the Sâṅkhâya-Gr̥hya as its sixth book; there the tarpana is mentioned quite in the same connection (VI, 6, 10 seq.). I believe, therefore, that in our text, chapters 9 and 10 have found their place here as a sort of supplementary addition to chap. 6, 6, just as in the first book the list of Nakshatras seems likewise appended to the Sûtra I, 25, 5.

3. 'Agni may satiate himself; Vāyu may satiate himself; Sūrya may satiate himself; Vishṇu may satiate himself; Pragâpati may satiate himself; Virûpāksha may satiate himself; Sahasrâksha may satiate himself; Soma, Brahman, the Vedas, the gods, the Rishis, and all the metres, the word OM, the word VASHAT, the Mahâvyâhr̥itis, the Sâvitri, the sacrifices, heaven and earth, the Nakshatras, the air, days and nights, the numbers, the twilights, the oceans, the rivers, the mountains, fields, herbs, trees, Gandharvas and Apsaras, the serpents, the birds, the Siddhas, the Sâdhyas, the Vipras, the Yakshas, the Rakshas, the beings that have these (Rakshas, &c.) at their end, may satiate themselves.

'I satiate the Śruti; I satiate the Smṛiti; I satiate the firmness; I satiate the delight; I satiate

According to Nârâyana, snâtaḥ in the first Sûtra would refer to the bath which forms part of the Samâvartana ceremony (see III, 1, 1), so that it would be the Gr̥hastha, who has taken the Samâvartana bath, to whom the following rules refer.

3. Comp. the similar lists of Âsvalâyana, Gr̥hya III, 4; Sâm-bavya, quoted in my German edition of Sâṅkhâya, p. 153; and Baudhâya II, 9 (S. B. E., vol. xiv, pp. 252 seq.). The last seems to be the most modern.

It should be observed that the section of the list contained in this Sûtra, as well as that given below, chap. 10, 3, is divided into the success; I satiate the thought; I satiate belief and insight, and the memory, cows and Brāhmaṇas, movable and immovable things. All beings may satiate themselves!'—so far with the sacrificial cord suspended over the left shoulder.

KHANDA 10.

1. Now with the sacrificial cord suspended over the right shoulder,

2. Looking in the direction that belongs to the Manes (i.e. the south):

3. 'The (Rishis) of the hundred (Rikas), the (Rishis) of the middle (Mandalas), Gr̥tsamada, Viśvāmitra, Gamadagni, Vāmadeva, Atri, Bharadvāga, Vasishṭha, the Pragāthas, the (Rishis) of the Pavamāna hymns, the (Rishis) of the short hymns and of the long hymns, Sumantu, Gaimini, Vaiśampāyana, Paila, the Sūtras, the Bhāshyas, Gārgya, Babhru, Bābhrya, Mandu, Māndavya, Gārgī Vā-

two parts, in the first of which the name of the being to be worshipped is given in the nominative case, with the verb tripyatu, while in the second it stands in the accusative, with the verb tarpayāmi. The first part of this section contains the names of gods and of divine beings, such as the rivers, the mountains, &c.; in the second part are found abstract qualities or notions, such as matī, dhr̥iti, sruti. Similarly in chapter 10, 3 the Vedic poets, a few ancient teachers, and wise women, such as Gārgī or Sulabhā, form the first part of the list, and then follow, in the accusative case, the names of such doctors as Sāṅkhāyana, Āśvalāyana, Sākalya. In Āśvalāyana's Sūtra of the first of our two sections only the first part reoccurs, the second is omitted, while the second section is found there in its entirety, with the same difference of names given in the nominative and accusative cases. The conjectures, however, which I had once based on this difference (see my German edition, pp. 152, 153) as to the distinction of a more ancient part of the list, and of later supplements, are perhaps too hazardous.

kaknavi, Vadavâ Prâttheyi, Sulabhâ Maitreyi (may satiate themselves).

‘(I satiate) Kahola Kaushitaki, Mahâkaushitaki, Suyagñia Sāṅkhâyana, Āsvalâyana, Aitareya, Mahaitareya, Bhâradvâga, Gâtûkarnya, Paingya, Mahâpaingya, Bâshkala, Gârgya, Sâkalya, Mândûkeya, Mahâdamatra, Audavâhi, Mahaudavâhi, Sauyâmi, Saunaki, Sâkapûni, Gautami; and whatsoever other teachers there are, may they all satiate themselves.

4. ‘The fathers man by man.

5. ‘The ancestry of the father may satiate itself.

6. ‘The ancestry of the mother may satiate itself.’

KHANDA 11.

1. Let him not look at a naked woman, except during sexual intercourse,

2. Nor (look) at the sun while it rises or sets,

3. At an enemy,

4. At an evil-doer,

5. At a person that has to touch dead bodies.

6. Let him not talk with a woman who has recently been confined or who has her courses,

7. Nor with those (mentioned before).

8. Let him not eat food from which its strength is taken away.

9. Let him not do his work with implements wasted by use.

10. Let him not eat together (with his wife),

11, 1 seq. Rules of conduct for a Snâtaka, i. e. a man who has completed his studentship.

7. Etaiḥ pûrvoktaiḥ anâptâdibhir na samvadet. Nârâyana.

10. Nârâyana states that ‘with his wife’ is to be supplied to this Sûtra, which indeed is rendered probable through the comparison of Gautama IX, 32; Manu IV, 43, &c.

11. Nor remnants (of food).
12. Remnants of (food belonging to the) Manes, gods, guests, and servants he may eat.
13. Gleaning ears of corn, receiving alms unasked for, or for which he has asked the good, performing sacrifices for others, are the means of livelihood ;
14. (Of these) each preceding one is the more respectable.
15. Or if (his livelihood) cannot be gained (in one of the ways mentioned), let him follow the occupation of a Vaisya.
16. (He shall be) careful about his duties towards Manes and gods.
17. In due time (he shall) have intercourse with his wife.
18. He shall not lie down (to sleep) in the day-time,
19. Nor during the first or the last watch of the night.
20. Let him not sit on the bare ground.
21. He shall constantly perform the prescribed duties regarding the use of water.
22. (And constantly) have his sacrificial cord suspended over his left shoulder.
23. Let him not abandon his teacher,
24. Except on (his teacher's) command,
25. Or with (his) permission.

KHANDA 12.

1. Every day he shall respectfully salute his teacher,

11. Here also Nârâyana understands bhâryâyâ bhukta-sesham.

15. Comp. Professor Bühler's note on Gautama X, 5, S. B. E., vol. ii, p. 225.

19. Râtreḥ pûrvaprahare râtreḥ paśṁimaprahare ka. Nârâyana.

2. And his Gurus,
3. A Srotريا when meeting him,
4. When he returns from a journey, (also) one who is not a Srotريا.

5. In the words, 'I am N.N., sir!' pronouncing his own name, crossing his hands (so as to seize with his right hand the right foot, and with his left hand the left of the other person).

6. (The person who has been thus saluted, in reply addressing him with his name,) 'N.N.!' and seizing his hands, pronounces a wish to him.

7. Let him not go to a sacrifice without being chosen (thereto).

8. And let him beware of (doing) wrong.

9. Let him not go to assemblies of people.

10. If he has come upon (such assemblies), let him not point out (anything evil) against (anybody).

11. He shall not be a reviler, nor slanderous, nor a wanderer from house to house, nor a prattler.

12. He shall not walk alone,

13. Nor naked,

14. Nor with veiled hands.

15. Gods'-houses (he shall walk round) keeping the right side turned to them.

12, 5. Nârâyana : 'As to how that respectful salutation (abhivâdana) should be performed, he says . . . with his own right hand he touches the right foot of the Âtârya or other person (whom he salutes), and with his left hand the left foot (comp. Manu II, 72) (and says), "I am N. N. (amukasarman) of the Gotra N. N., sir ! I offer my respectful salutation !"'

6. 'The Âtârya or other person seizes the hands of the saluting person,' &c. Nârâyana.

10. See Nârâyana's commentary, p. 154 of the German edition.

16. Let him not run.
17. Let him not spit.
18. Let him not scratch himself.
19. Let him not look on urine and excrements.
20. Let him sit with veiled head,
21. Not on the bare (ground),
22. If he has only one garment, suspending his sacrificial cord on his ear,
23. Not turning his face to the sun,
24. Nor his rump,
25. In the day-time with his face to the north, at night to the south.
26. He shall not (eject) phlegm into water, nor in the neighbourhood (of water).
27. He shall not climb up a tree.
28. He shall not look down into a well.
29. He shall not go to an execution-place,
30. And in no case to a cemetery.
31. Let him bathe day by day with his clothes on.
32. When he has bathed, let him put on another garment before he is dry.

KHANDA 13.

1. Under (the Nakshatra) Rohiṇī he shall have the ploughing done.
2. Before it is done, he shall offer at the eastern boundary of his field a Bali to Heaven and Earth.
3. With a verse sacred to Heaven and Earth and with the words, 'Adoration to Heaven and Earth!' (he performs his) worship (to Heaven and Earth).

16. According to Nârâyana we should have to supply, 'while it is raining,' which is countenanced by a number of parallel texts, for instance, Âsv.-Grîhya III, 9, 6.

4. When the plough is being put into motion first, let a Brâhmaṇa touch the plough reciting this (verse), 'For luck may us the plough-shares' (Rig-veda IV, 57, 8).

5. 'Through the lord of the field'—with (this hymn) (Rig-veda IV, 57), verse by verse, to the different directions (of the sky), from left to right, worship is done.

KHANDA 14.

1. When going to cross water, he performs the Svastyayana (ceremony for lucky progress).

2. He sacrifices thrice with his joined hands full of water into the waters, with the words, 'Adoration to the Sea, the child of the reed! Adoration to Varuṇa, the lord of righteousness! Adoration to all rivers!'—

3. Murmuring, 'May Visvakarman, the father of them all, relish the food offered.'

4. Against the stream for flowing (waters); up into the air for standing ones.

5. Should he while crossing apprehend any danger, let him murmur the hymn of Vasiṣṭha, 'The eldest of which is the sea' (Rig-veda VII, 49); this (will serve to him as) a boat.

KHANDA 15.

1. The Śravana (oblation) he offers on the full moon day that falls under (the Nakshatra) Śravishṭhâs, of the flour of fried barley, or of cooked food,

2. With (the words), 'To Viṣṇu svâhâ! To (the Nakshatra) Śravana svâhâ! To the full moon of Śrâvana svâhâ! To the rainy season svâhâ!'

3. Having established the (sacred) domestic fire outside, and having mixed together fried grain and the flour of fried barley with butter, he sacrifices—

4. With (the words), 'To the Lord of the celestial Serpents svâhâ! To the celestial Serpents svâhâ!'

5. Having placed to the north of the fire a new water-pot on eastward-pointed, fresh Kusa grass,

6. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents wash himself! May the celestial Serpents wash themselves!'—he pours water into it.

7. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents comb himself! May the celestial Serpents comb themselves!'—he makes movements with a comb.

8. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents paint himself! May the celestial Serpents paint themselves!'—he pours out portions of paint.

9. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents tie (this) to (himself)! May the celestial Serpents tie (this) to themselves!'—he offers flowers.

10. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents clothe himself! May the celestial Serpents clothe themselves!'—he offers a thread.

11. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents anoint (his eyelashes)! May the celestial Serpents anoint (their eyelashes)!—he spirts out (small portions of collyrium) with a young Kusa shoot.

12. With (the words), 'May the Lord of the celestial Serpents look (at himself)! May the celestial Serpents look (at themselves)!—he makes them look in a mirror.

15, 7. For this signification of phaṇa, comp. Kullavagga V, 2, 3.

13. With (the words), 'Lord of the celestial Serpents, this is thy Bali! Celestial Serpents, this is your Bali!'—he makes a Bali-offering.

14. In the same way for the aerial (Serpents).

15. For those dwelling in the directions (of the horizon).

16. For the terrestrial ones.

17. (He repeats these Mantras) thrice each time, the first (part) with higher voice each time,

18. The second (part) with lower voice each time.

19. In this way he shall offer day by day with the spoon, in small portions, a Bali of the flour of fried barley with water, down to the Pratyavarohana (or the ceremony of the 'redescent'), at night, keeping silence.

20. And (his wife) shall put (it) down silently.

21. The close of the ceremony is the same as the beginning.

22. With (the verse), 'The good protectress' (Rig-veda X, 63, 10), let him ascend the (high) couch.

17, 18. The text has uḷḷaistarâm—uḷḷaistarâm, and nīḷaistarâm—nīḷaistarâm. Nârâyana (comp. the text of his scholion, p. 155 of the German edition) understands this in a different way; he says that in the water-pot mentioned in the fifth Sûtra two different sthânas are to be distinguished, a higher part of it and a lower (uttarâdharatayâ). Now when the sacrificer, for instance, as prescribed in Sûtra 6, invites the Lord of the celestial Serpents, and the celestial Serpents to wash themselves, the pouring out of water would have to be performed first thrice for the Lord of the celestial Serpents in the higher place, then thrice for the celestial Serpents in the lower place.

19. On the Pratyavarohana see chap. 17.

20. Nârâyana : vâgyamayuktâ yagamânapatnî evam balidravayâdikam upasâdayet.

22. 'From the Srâvanî till the Âgrahâyânî (see chap. 17, 1) one shall not sleep on the ground out of fear of the snakes.' Nârâyana.

KHANDA 16.

1. On the full moon day of Āsvayuga a milk-rice oblation to Indra.

2. Having sacrificed Āgya with (the words), 'To the two Asvins svâhâ! To the two Asvayug svâhâ! To the full moon of Āsvayuga svâhâ! To the autumn svâhâ! To Pasupati svâhâ! To the tawny one svâhâ!'—

3. He shall sacrifice a mixture of curds and butter with this hymn, 'The cows came hither' (Rig-veda VI, 28), verse by verse.

4. That night they let the calves join their mothers.

5. Then feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KHANDA 17.

1. On the Āgrahâyanî full moon day he shall re-descend,

2. (Or) under (the Nakshatra) Rohinî, or under the Proshthapadâs.

3. In the morning, having taken a handfull of Samî leaves, Madhûka flowers, reeds, Apâmârga plants, and of Sirîsha, Udumbara, Kusa shoots, and jujube fruits, and an earth-clod (taken) out of a furrow,

4. Having put (all that) into a water-pot,

16, 3. Ghrîtamisram dadhi prîshâtakam. Nârâyana. Comp. the Grihya-saṃgraha II, 59.

17, 1. The Pratyavarohana (i. e. redescent) here described is the ceremony performed at the end of the time during which sleeping on high bedsteads is prescribed (chap. 15, 22). Beginning from the Srâvanî full moon till the Pratyavarohana, the offerings to the Serpents mentioned above have to be repeated every day (chap. 15, 19); the Pratyavarohana is the concluding ceremony of these rites devoted to the Serpents.

5. And, after he has quickly repeated the Mahāvyaḥritis and the Sāvitrī, having repeatedly immersed (it) therein with this hymn, 'May he burn away from us pain' (Rig-veda I, 97), he shall drive away the evil from the persons standing under his protection, from left to right, and pour out (the water) to the north.

6. A Madhuparka is the fee for the sacrifice.

KHANDA 18.

1. 'May summer, winter and spring, autumn and rainy season be well-ordered to us. May we be under the safe protection of these seasons, and may they last (to us) through a hundred years. Svāhā!

'Beat away, O white one, with thy foot, with the fore-foot and with the hind-foot, these seven daughters of Varuṇa and all that belong to the king's tribe. Svāhā!

'To the white one, the son of Vidārva svāhā! To Vidārva svāhā! To Takshaka Vaisāleya svāhā! To Visāla svāhā!'—with (these words) he sacrifices (oblations) of Āgrya.

2. 'May a good winter, a good spring, a good summer be bestowed (on us). May the rains be to us happy rains; may the autumns be blessed to us.'

3. With (the verse), 'Blessing on us, Mitra' (Rig-veda I, 90, 9), he sweeps (the floor) with a Palāsa branch,

5. Saranyebhyo grīhebhyaḥ (read, grīhyebhyaḥ) sarvebhyaḥ sakāśāt, &c. Nārāyaṇa.

18, 1. This chapter continues the description of the Pratyavarohana begun in the preceding chapter.

Rāgabāndhavaiḥ, as our text has, should be corrected into rāgabāndhavīḥ; comp. Āsv. II, 3, 3.

4. Sprinkles (it with water) with (the verse), 'From the sea the wave' (Rig-veda IV, 58, 1),
5. And spreads out a layer (of straw) with (the verse), 'Be soft, O earth' (Rig-veda I, 22, 15).
6. They then lie down on their sides, the eldest one to the right hand—
7. With (the words), 'In the Brahman I establish myself, in the Kshatra,' on (their) right (sides);
8. With (the words), 'Among the horses I establish myself, among the cows,' on (their) left (sides);
9. With (the words), 'Among the cattle I establish myself, in prosperity,' on (their) right (sides);
10. With (the words), 'Among offspring I establish myself, in food,' on (their) left (sides).
11. With (the verse), 'Arise, the living' (Rig-veda I, 113, 16), they arise.
12. During that night they lie on that layer.
13. Afterwards where they like.

KHANDA 19.

1. On the full moon day of Kāitra,
2. (Taking) jujube leaves, and making of meal (images) of couples of animals as it happens.
3. A figure with prominent navel to Indra and Agni.
4. Balls to Rudra.
5. According to custom the Nakshatras and (their ?) images (?). According to custom the Nakshatras and (their ?) images (?).

Here ends the Fourth Adhyāya.

19, 2-5. Several points in the translation of these Sūtras are uncertain. See the extracts from the commentary of Nārāyaṇa, pp. 156 seq. of the German edition.

ADHYĀYA V, KHANDA 1.

1. Now when he intends to set out on a journey, he makes (his sacred) fire enter into himself, (or) into the two kindling sticks, or into (an ordinary) log of wood,

2. Once with (the text), 'Come, enter into my Prāṇas,' twice silently.

3. Or with (the verse), 'This is thy womb' (Rig-veda III, 29, 10) he warms the two kindling sticks,

4. Or an (ordinary log of) wood.

5. And before sunset the kindling (by attrition),

6. And at the time of the Vaisvadeva sacrifice.

7. Having carried a common fire to a place that has been smeared (with cowdung), which is elevated, and

1, 1. The ceremony of Samârohana, by which the duties towards the sacred fire are suspended, by causing the fire to 'enter' into the sacrificer's body, or into the two Araṇis, or into another piece of wood, is already mentioned in several passages of the Brâhmaṇa texts; comp. the quotations given by Professor Weber, Indische Studien, IX, 311. Comp. besides Āsvalâyana-Srauta-sûtra III, 10; Sâṅkhâyana-Sraut. II, 17. The Samârohana into the sacrificer's own body is done by warming the hands at the sacred fire; see Āsv., loc. cit., Sûtra 6. In the Sâṅkhâyana-Srauta-sûtra the corresponding rule, which regards there of course the Āhitâgni, runs thus, 'If he performs the Samârohana, he warms his hands at the Gârhapatya fire, and then touches his Prāṇas with the words, "Come, enter into my Prāṇas."' On the two other cases, see the Sûtras 3 and 4. Sûtras 2, 3, 5 are taken word for word from the Srauta-sûtra.

2. This Sûtra refers only to the case where he causes the fire to enter into himself.

5. Comp. the commentary on Āsv.-Sraut., loc. cit. 8. He makes the fire redescend from his body or from the Araṇis by performing the Manthana (kindling the fire by attrition of the Araṇis).

7. The Mantra alluded to here is given in the Srauta-sûtra. It which has been sprinkled (with water), he makes (the sacred fire) redescend (from its receptacle, with the formula), 'Redescend!'

8. If the fire goes out, he sacrifices the two Sarvaprâyasakitta oblations (oblations for general expiation) and (other oblations) with (the formulas), 'Protect us, Agni, that we may prosper. Svâhâ! Protect us that we may obtain all wealth. Svâhâ! The sacrifice protect, O resplendent one! Svâhâ! Protect everything, O hundredfold wise one. Svâhâ!'

9. In the case of a breach of his vow let him fast and sacrifice (an oblation) of Âgya with (the verse), 'Thou, Agni, art the lord of the vow' (Rig-veda VIII, 11, 1).

KHANDA 2.

1. Now about (the consecration of) ponds, wells, and tanks.

2. In the bright fortnight, or on an auspicious Tithi,

3. Having cooked barley-grains with milk,

4. He shall sacrifice with the two (verses), 'Thou runs thus, 'Redescend, O Gâtavedas; carry again offerings to the gods, knowing us. Long life, offspring, wealth bestow on us; uninjured shine in our dwelling!'

8-9. These Sûtras stand in no connection with the Samârohana treated of before.

On the two Sarvaprâyasakitta oblations see above, I, 9, 12 and the note there.

The vow spoken of in Sûtra 9 Nârâyana refers to the restrictions regarding the food which the sacrificer and his wife are to eat on the Upavasatha days, connected with the festivals of the full and new moon.

2, 1 seq. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Parisish/a IV, 9.

hast us, Agni' (Rig-veda IV, 1, 4, 5), (and with the verses), 'We propitiate thy wrath' (I, 24, 14), 'This my prayer, Varuna' (I, 25, 19), 'Loosen the highest, Varuna' (I, 24, 15), 'This prayer of the man who exercises himself' (VIII, 42, 3),

5. (And with the words), 'The domestic one, he who goes away from the house, the refreshing one, he who goes into the kennel, he who dwells in the kennel, he who comes out of it, the greedy one, the destroyer of enemies'—to the different directions (of the horizon), beginning with that belonging to Varuna (i. e. the west), from left to right.

6. In the centre he makes oblations with milk with (the verses), 'Having eyes all around' (Rig-veda X, 81, 3), 'This has Vishnu' (Rig-veda I, 22, 17),

7. Plunging (into the water) with (the verse), 'Whatever here' (Rig-veda VII, 89, 5).

8. A cow and a pair of clothes is the fee for the sacrifice.

9. Then feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KHANDA 3.

1. Now at (the consecration of) a garden : having established the (sacred) fire (in that garden),

2. (And) having prepared a mess of cooked food,

3. He shall sacrifice with (the formulas), 'To

5. These are names of Agni dwelling in the waters ; see Pâraskara II, 6, 10 ; Mantrabrâhmana I, 7, 1. Several of the names are here misspelled ; thus Grîhya, Apagrîhya should be, no doubt, Gohya, Upagohya, which is the reading given in Pâraskara, loc. cit.

3, 1 seqq. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Parisishâ IV, 10. Nârâyana uses for the ceremony here described the expressions Ârâmapratishâ, Ârâmotsarga.

Vishṇu svâhâ! To Indra and Agni svâhâ! To Visvakarman svâhâ!' (and with the verses), 'Whom the men' (Rig-veda III, 8, 6 seq.), verse by verse.

4. He recites over (the garden), 'O tree with thy hundred branches' (Rig-veda III, 8, 11).

5. The fee for the sacrifice is gold.

KHANDA 4.

1. Now if a half-monthly sacrifice has not been performed, one or the other of them, then a mess of rice (is to be offered as an expiation),

2. With (the words), 'To Agni Vaisvânara svâhâ! To Agni Tantumât svâhâ!'

3. In the case of an intermission of the (morning or evening) oblations—

4. (He shall make expiatory oblations), in the evening with (the formula), 'Enlightener of the darkness, adoration! Svâhâ!'

5. In the morning with (the formula), 'Enlightener of the morning, adoration! Svâhâ!'

6. After he has sacrificed as many oblations as there had been sacrifices (left out), the sacrifice (itself goes on) as (stated) above.

KHANDA 5.

1. If a dove or an owl sits down (on his house),

2. Let him sacrifice with (the hymn), 'O gods, the dove' (Rig-veda X, 165), verse by verse.

4, 6. Nârâyana: 'After he has thus taken and sacrificed as many Sruvas full of Âgya as there were sacrifices omitted through his guilt, the morning and evening sacrifices have to be performed as (stated) above (I, 3, 10) with oblations of rice or barley.'

3. If he has seen a bad dream or an occurrence boding misfortune,
4. Or when the cawing of a crow is heard in (the dead of) night,
5. And in the case of other prodigies,
6. Let him cook rice-grains with milk,
7. With the milk of a cow that has a calf of the same colour (with her own),
8. But in no case of a black (cow),
9. And let him sacrifice with the night-hymn (Rig-veda X, 127), verse by verse.
10. Having eaten the remnants of those oblations with the Mahāvyaḥrītis,
11. And having recited over his ears (the verse), 'Blessing with our ears' (Rig-veda I, 89, 8),
12. And over himself (the verse), 'May a hundred autumns be before us, ye gods' (ibid. 9),
13. He shall give something to the Brāhmaṇas.

KHANDA 6.

1. When a disease has befallen him,
2. Let him offer boiled rice-grains with Gavedhukā-grass with (the hymn), 'These (prayers) to Rudra, the strong one, with braided hair' (Rig-veda I, 114), verse by verse.

KHANDA 7.

1. If (his wife) gives birth to a child, without the Śimantonnayana having been performed,
2. (Or if) the Gâtakarman has not been performed (for the child),

7, 1. On the Śimantonnayana, see I, 22.

2. The Gâtakarman has been described I, 24.

3. He places, when ten days have elapsed since (the delivery), the little child in the mother's lap,

4. And after he has sacrificed with the Mahâ-vyâhṛitis, the sacrifice (that had been omitted, is performed) as (stated) above.

KHANDA 8.

1. If a post puts forth shoots,

2. Let him prepare a mess of cooked food and offer the boiled rice with the two (verses), 'In that way bringing forth deeds' (Srauta-sûtra III, 17, 1), 'Of tawny shape, weighty, a giver of vigour' (Rig-veda II, 3, 9).

3. Should the pot for the Pranîtâ water, the Âgya-pot, or any other earthen (vessel) be damaged and leak,

4. He sacrifices the two Sarvaprâyasâkitta oblations and recites the three verses, 'He who without' (Rig-veda VIII, 1, 12 seq.), over the broken (vessel).

5. Should the two (Kusa blades which are used as) strainers be spoiled before the completion of the sacrifice,

6. Let him sacrifice the Sarvaprâyasâkitta and make new ones with (the verse), 'In the water, Agni' (Rig-veda VIII, 43, 9).

KHANDA 9.

1. Now (follows) the Sapindîkarana.

3. On the ten days, comp. I, 25, 1 and the note there.

8, 3. On the Pranîtâ water, see above, I, 8, 8. 25.

4. Comp. I, 9, 12 and the note there.

5. See I, 8, 14 seqq.

6. See Sûtra 4.

9, 1 seqq. Comp. above, IV, 3 and the notes there.

2. Let him fill four water-pots (for the Manes) from the father upwards,

3. And prepare in the same way lumps (of flour),

4. And let him distribute the first lump on the (other) three with (the verses), 'They who commonly, concordantly (dwell) in Yama's realm, the fathers: for them be space, freedom, adoration, sacrifice established among the gods.

'They who commonly, harmoniously (dwell), the living among the living, mine: may their prosperity fall to my lot in this world through a hundred years'—

And with the two (verses), 'Equal the design' (Rig-veda X, 191, 3. 4).

5. In the same way the vessels with Argha water.

6. In the same way for the mother, for a brother, and for a wife that has died before (her husband), adding (the lump belonging to that person) to those (other) lumps.

KHANDA 10.

1. If the bees make honey in his house,

2. Let him fast and sacrifice a hundred and eight pieces of Udumbara wood, which are besmeared with curds, honey, and ghee, with the two (verses), 'No (harm) to us in our offspring' (Rig-veda I, 114, 8. 9).

3. And let him murmur the hymn, 'For welfare may Indra and Agni' (Rig-veda VII, 35); and (the same hymn should be used) at all (ceremonies), such as that of the sacrifice after assent has been declared (see above, I, 7, 1).

2. On these four vessels, see IV, 3, 4 seq.

5. These are the vessels mentioned in the second Sûtra.

10, 3. This is a supplementary rule belonging to the exposition of the general type of sacrifice. On the 'Pratisruta' sacrifice, see I, 7, 1 seqq.; I, 9, 19.

4. After he has sacrificed seventeen one span long pieces of Palāsa wood, he then seizes the Sruva.

5. Fifteen at the full and new moon sacrifices.

6. At the Ashṭakâ ceremony in the middle of the rainy season there may optionally be three (pieces of wood); the sacrifice as at the Pitriyagña.

KHANDA 11.

1. If an anthill arises in his house, the house should be abandoned.

2. Then, after having fasted three nights (and days), he should perform the great expiation.

Here ends the Fifth Adhyâya.

4. See I, 9, 1. 3.

6. Comp. III, 13, 1 with the note.

11, 2. Nârâyana understands the 'great expiation' as a rite directed to Ganesa and to the planets (comp. Yâgñavalkya I, 276 seq., 292, &c.); that this ceremony was known already to the author of this Sûtra seems very doubtful. Another 'mahâsânti' is frequently mentioned in the Kausika-sûtra (quoted in Böhlingk-Roth's Dictionary); comp. my German edition of Sâṅkhâya, p. 159.

ADHYÂYA VI, KHANDA 1.

1. Now, after having paid reverence to Brahman, to the Brahmarishi, to (those who descend from) Brahman's womb, to Indra, Pragâpati, Vasishtha, Vâmadeva, Kahola Kaushîtaki, Mahâkaushîtaki, Suyagña Sâñkhâyana, Âsvalâyana, Aitareya, Mahaitareya, Kâtyâyana, Sâtyâyana, Sâkalya, Babhru, Bâbhavya, Mandu, Mândavya, and to all the teachers of the past, we will henceforth explain the rules for the Âranyaka as forming the subject of Svâdhyâya (private recitation of a text).

2. The teacher abstains through one day and one night from sexual intercourse and from eating flesh.

3. Raw flesh, a Kandâla, a woman that has lately been confined, or that has her courses, seeing blood or persons whose hands have been cut off: (these persons and things he shall know form) impediments for the study.

4. And of the corpse-like (animals?).

5. Those which enter (their dens?) with the mouth first (?).

1, 1 seqq. Comp. the general remarks on this sixth book in the Introduction, p. 11.

For the names in the opening invocation, comp. above, IV, 10; on the Vratas and the study of the different Âranyaka sections chiefly treated of in this book, see above, II, 11. 12, and the Introduction, p. 8.

2. Comp. II, 11, 6.

3-5. Comp. II, 12, 10, and the note of Nârâyana, p. 160 of the German edition.

6. When he has vomited, or when his beard has been shaved,
7. When he has eaten flesh or partaken of a Srâddha or birth dinner,
8. During the days that immediately follow on (days of) study in the village,
9. Three nights (and days), if (he has been) put out of order,
10. (Or has been violently) seized by others,
11. And during the second half of the days that precede (?) the Parvan days,
12. And if fire-flames, lightning, thunder, (heavy) rains, and great clouds appear,
13. And if a storm (blows) that carries away pebbles, as long as that lasts.
- 2, 1. During four months after the full moon of Âshâdha let him not study.
2. Especially the Sakvarî verses (are concerned by what has been declared). Such are the rules.

KHANDA 2.

3. Let them go to a clean spot in the north-eastern direction, that receives its light from the east.
4. The drawing of water (should be done) before sunrise,

6. Comp. IV, 7, 42. See also Ait. Âraṇyaka V, 3, 9.

7. Comp. IV, 7, 5.

2, 2. It seems to me that this Sûtra should be divided into two (after sakvarya), so that the words iti niyamâḥ would correspond to iti bhâshikam, chap. 2, 13.

3. Comp. II, 12, 11. Perhaps the Petersburg Dictionary is right in proposing for prâggyotisham the translation, vor Anbruch des Lichtes. Nârâyana says, prâk purastât gyotir yasmin tam . . . pradesam.

5. And the entering into the circle with this verse, 'She who smells of salve' (Rig-veda X, 146, 6).

6. The circle should have its entrance to the east or to the north; it should be (praised as) excellent among the people, not too spacious, not too narrow.

7. The final expiation (should extend) to the Vâmadevya.

8. And the invitation to resume the recitation (is done in the following way):

9. After they have sipped water that stands outside the circle,

10. Let them resume the recitation, having performed the expiation.

11. If the vessel used in the expiation is damaged, sprinkling (with water forms) the expiatory act (to be performed for it).

12. (That) sprinkling, however, (one should perform) holding gold or a bunch of Darbha grass in his hand.

13. So far what pertains to the general rules. *

KHANDA 3.

1. Now after they have entered the circle—

2. The teacher sits down with his face to the east, the others, according to their rank, (sit down) towards the south, with their faces to the north.

5. The Mandala is a circular space marked by a line of water.

6. I am doubtful whether we should read vâ ganâgrîyam and translate as I have done in accordance with the note of Nârâyana, or if the reading should be vâ-ganâgrîyam, 'not in the presence of people,' so that ganâgrîya would mean ganânâm agre.

7. On the expiation (sânti) comp. chap. 3, 12.

3, 2, 3. Comp. IV, 8, 2-4.

3. If that is impossible, with their faces to all directions.

4. Let them expect the rising of the sun,

5. And when they behold it in its splendour,

6. Let them with (the words), 'Recite, sir!' seize with their hands, holding the right hand uppermost, the feet of the teacher, which have been washed, with the right (hand) the right (foot), with the left the left,

7. And having then put (the hands) into the vessel used for the expiation, into water in which pieces of Dûrvâ stalks are, let them begin their study, when their hands have ceased to drip.

8. This is the rite. But when they are tired, let one of them bring it about that the vessel used for the expiation be not empty.

9. And all (should do so) at the beginning and the end of (each) Adhyâya.

10. (All) that is done continuously, without interruption.

11. Now the expiation.

12. The syllable Om, the Mahâvyâhṛitis, the Sâvitri, the Rathantara, the Bṛihat, the Vâmadevya; Bṛihat and Rathantara with repetition and Kakubh-forming.

6. Comp. above, II, 5, 10, &c.

7. The translation of apinvamânaiḥ pâṇibhiḥ is conjectural. Nârâyana's explanation of apinvamâna by asamsṛishṭa is inadmissible.

10. Nârâyana explains this Sûtra in the following way. If it is impossible, for any reason, to recite the whole text, only the beginning and the concluding words of each Adhyâya (see Sûtra 9) are to be repeated; and these should be recited without interruption so as to form one continual text.

12. Comp. above, III, 4, 5.

13. These (holy words and verses) are (thus) made to attain (the number of) ten.

14. 'Of decades consists the Virâg'—thus says the Brâhmaṇa.

KHANDA 4.

1. 'Unerring mind, vigorous eye (is) the sun, the noblest of the stars. Inauguration, do no harm to me!'—with (these words) they look at Savitri (i. e. the sun).

13. The Gâyatrî is one verse; the Rathantara and the Brîhat are Pragâthas which are changed in the usual way into Triṅkas; the Vâmadevya is one Triṅka: thus the number of ten is obtained.

14. Kaush. Brâhmaṇa 17, 3; 19, 5.

4, 1. The formula 'Adabdhāmanah, &c. has to be recited before each of the single Âranyaka texts (the Sakvarî verses, the Mahâvratâ, &c.); to this formula are added, before or after it, as the case may be, other texts specified in the Sûtras 2-8. Of these there can be no doubt about the meaning of Sûtras 7, 8, treating of the introductory formulas of the Samhitâ section (Kaush. Âr. VII-VIII) and of the Manthâ section (ibid. IX): before the text adabdhāmanah, &c. are to be added, in the first case the formula ritam vadishyâmi, &c., in the second case two Rikas addressed to Savitri. These formulas and verses have been received into the Âranyaka text and are found there in the order here stated, at the beginning of books VII and IX. The meaning of the words samhitânâm tu pûrvam (Sûtra 7) having thus been established, I can see no reason why we should not interpret the words sakvarîṇâm tu pûrvam (Sûtra 3) quite in the same way. Thus the introductory benediction for the recital of the Sakvarî verses would consist, firstly of the verses stated in Sûtra 4, then of the formula adabdhāmanah, &c.; those verses would have to be repeated again after the Sakvarî verses (end of Sûtra 4). The recitation of the Mahâvratâ (Sûtras 1, 2) and of the Upanishads (Sûtra 5) is preceded by adabdhāmanah, &c., and then by the four verses stated in Sûtra 2. The interpretation which Nârâyana gives of this Sûtra is not quite the same as that which I have here proposed; see p. 163 of the German edition.

2. One (verse), 'You both the gladdening one' (Rig-veda X, 131, 4), and the three (verses), 'Blessing to us on the paths' (Rig-veda X, 63, 15-17) (are to be repeated before the recitation) of the Mahâvrata (chapter).

3. But (at that) of the Sakvarî (verses) before (the formula mentioned in the first Sûtra):

4. The three Trikas, 'To him, the thirsty one' (Rig-veda VI, 42, 1-3), 'The wealthiest (Soma), O wealthy one' (VI, 44, 1-3), 'Him who does no harm to you' (VI, 44, 4-6), (the verse), 'To him, to him the sap of the herb' (VI, 42, 4), (and the verse), 'Verily thou art a hero' (VIII, 81, 28)—thus for the Sakvarî (verses) before and afterwards.

5. Now for the Upanishad (texts)—

6. The same (recitation) as for the Mahâvrata.

7. For the Samhitâs, however, before (the text given in the first Sûtra the formula has to be recited), 'I shall speak right, I shall speak truth (&c.)'—this is the difference (in the case of the Samhitâs).

8. Now for the Mantha the two verses (have to be recited) before (the formula given in the first Sûtra), 'This we entreat of Savitar,' 'That glorious (splendour) of Savitar' (Rig-veda V, 82, 1; III, 62, 10).

4. According to the reading of some MSS. we should have to translate, or (the verse), 'Verily,' &c.

7. On the Samhitâs (Kaush. Âr. VII, VIII) see Max Müller, Rig-veda Prâtisâkhya, pp. 4 seq.; Ait. Âranyaka III (pp. 305 seqq., ed. Bibl. Ind.; Sacred Books of the East, I, pp. 247 seq.).

8. Regarding the description of the Mantha sacrifice (Kaush. Âr. IX) which has to be performed by one who wishes to attain greatness, comp. Satap. Brâhmana XIV, 9, 2; Kând. Up. V, 2, 4; Sacred Books of the East, I, p. 75.

9. With (the formula), 'Unerring mind' (see Sūtra 1), then follow the expiatory formulas that belong to the (different) sections.

10. (All) this on one day.

KHANDA 5.

Khanda 4, 11. Now if the time for rising has come, they drive away (all) evil,

12. Perform the standing expiation,

13. And look at the sun with (the words), 'From here I take out the brightness(?).'

Khanda 5, 1. - 'That (I place) within myself'—with (these words they turn their thoughts to the universal) Self that is placed (within themselves?)—three times repeated(?).

2. With (the formula), 'May happiness rejoice in me and glory; may happiness rejoice with me and glory;—

3. 'Together with Indra, with the hosts, with power, with glory, with strength I will rise'—he rises up.

11, 12. Nārāyaṇa has the following note: 'The evil which is attached to their body, such as dirt, they drive away, i.e. they remove it by means of their reciting (of the sacred texts), and then they perform the standing expiation which has been declared above, which begins with the syllable Om and with the Mahāvāhr̥tis' (see chap. 3, 12).

5, 1. Nārāyaṇa says that dadhe is supplied to this Mantra from the preceding Sūtra, and so indeed the Mantra is given in the Aitareya recension. The translation of abhinihitam trir hitam is merely tentative; see Nārāyaṇa's note, p. 165, of the German edition. Perhaps abhinihitam should be taken in its grammatical value, and the Sūtra should be translated, "That (I place) into myself (âtmani)"—with these words (they look) at themselves, pronouncing (the word âtmani) with Abhinidhâna, three times repeated(?). On abhinidhâna, comp. Professor Max Müller's edition of the Rîg-veda Prâtisâkhya, pp. cxvii seqq.

4. 'May happiness rise to me ; may glory rise to me'—when he has risen.

5. 'Hereby I shake off the hater, the rival, the evil one, and the bringer of misfortune'—with (this formula) having shaken the end of the garment,—

6. The hymn, 'Away those to the east' (Rig-veda X, 131), the two (verses), 'And may Indra have mercy upon us' (II, 41, 11. 12), the one (verse), 'Of what we are in fear, O Indra' (VIII, 50, 13)—(when these texts have been murmured), they look with (the verse), 'A ruler indeed, great art thou' (X, 152, 1) to the east ; with (the verse), 'The giver of bliss' (X, 152, 2) to the south, turned to the right ; with (the verse), 'Away the Rakshas' (X, 152, 3) to the west ; with (the verse), 'Destroy, O Indra, our' (X, 152, 4) to the north, turned to the left ; with (the verse), 'Away, O Indra' (X, 152, 5) to the sky, turned to the right.

KHANDA 6.

1. Having worshipped the Sun with (the verses), 'Savitri from the west,' 'This eye' (Rig-veda X, 36, 14 ; VII, 66, 16),

2. They turn away, come back, sit down.

3. With (the words), 'As the water is appeased'—they draw water out of the vessel used for the expiation,

4. Pour it out on the ground,

5. Spread (some) of that (water over the ground) with (the words), 'As the earth (is appeased),'—

6, 2. Nârâyana explains vyâvartamânâh by parâvartamânadharmayuktâh.

5. Perhaps we should read asyâm (scil. prithivyâm) abhi-

6. He (then) smears it on his right shoulder with (the words), 'Thus may peace dwell in me.'

7. In the same way a second time.

8. In the same way a third time.

9. 'Piece by piece thou art produced; piece by piece thou risest up; bring welfare to us, O house!'—with (this text they) take pieces of Dûrvâ stalks (out of the vessel of water), put them on their heads,

10. (And make water-offerings with the formulas), 'May Agni satiate himself; may Vâyu satiate himself; may Sûrya satiate himself; may Vishnu satiate himself; may Pragâpati satiate himself; may Virûpâksha satiate himself; may Sahasrâksha satiate himself; may all beings satiate themselves.'

11. (Then) Sumantu, Gaimini, Vaisampâya, Paila, and the other teachers (receive their offerings).

12. (Then) every one (worships in the same way) his fathers.

13. With (the text), 'To the sea you' (Sraut. IV, 11, 11) they pour out the water,

14. Murmur the Vâmadevya,

15. And separate according to their pleasure.

16. (The final benedictory formula runs thus), 'Through the power of wisdom, of Sruti and Smṛiti, as handed down by tradition, through (that power) which has its measure in (the Vedic texts) that have been gone through(?), and which is possessed of karshanti, and translate, 'they draw (lines of that water) on this (earth).'

6. Nârâyana says that all the students are to do so.

10. Comp. above, IV, 9. On the way in which this Tarpana is to be performed, Nârâyana refers to the Sûtra II, 7, 5.

11. Comp. above, IV, 10.

12. Comp. above, IV, 10, 4-6.

undisputed firmness, may peace be with us in welfare. Adoration be to gods, Rishis, Manes, and men ! May they whom we have adored, make happy life, beauty, health, peace, incolumity, imperishableness, vigour, splendour, glory, power, holy lustre, renown, age, offspring, cattle, adoration, increase. From wrongly spoken, wrongly used (prayer), from everything that is deficient or excessive, for the good of gods and Rishis, may the Brahman and Truth protect me ; may the Brahman and Truth protect me !'

End of the Sixth Adhyâya.

End of the Sâṅkhâyana - Grîhya.

ÂSVALÂYANA-GR/HYA-
SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

ÂSVALÂYANA-GRÎHYA-SÛTRA.

MOST of the questions referring to the Grîhya-sûtra of Âsvalâyana will be treated of more conveniently in connection with the different subjects which we shall have to discuss in our General Introduction to the Grîhya-sûtras. Here I wish only to call attention to a well-known passage of Shadgurusishya, in which that commentator gives some statements on the works composed by Âsvalâyana and by his teacher Saunaka. As an important point in that passage has, as far as I can see, been misunderstood by several eminent scholars, I may perhaps be allowed here to try and correct that misunderstanding, though the point stands in a less direct connection with the Grîhya-sûtra than with another side of the literary activity of Âsvalâyana.

*Shadgurusishya*¹, before speaking of Âsvalâyana, makes the following statements with regard to Âsvalâyana's teacher, Saunaka. 'There was,' he says, 'the Sâkala Samhitâ (of the Rig-veda), and the Bâshkala Samhitâ; following these two Samhitâs and the twenty-one Brâhmanas, adopting principally the Aitareyaka and supplementing it by the other texts, he who was revered by the whole number of great Rîshis composed the first Kalpa-sûtra.' He then goes on to speak of Âsvalâyana — 'Saunaka's pupil was the venerable Âsvalâyana. He who knew everything he had learnt from that teacher, composed a Sûtra and announced (to Saunaka that he had done so)².' Saunaka then destroyed his own Sûtra, and determined that Āsvalāyana's Sūtra should be adopted by the students of that Vedic Sākhā. Thus, says Shadguru-shya, there were twelve works of Saunaka by which a correct knowledge of the Rig-veda was preserved, and three works of Āsvalāyana. Saunaka's dasa granthās were, the five Anukramanīs, the two Vidhānas, the Bārhaddaivata, the Prātisākhya, and a Smārta work¹. Āsvalāyana, on the other hand, composed the Srauta-sūtra in twelve Adhyāyas, the Grihya in four Adhyāyas, and the fourth Āraṇyaka : this is Āsvalāyana's great Sūtra composition².

¹ See Max Müller's History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 230 seqq.; Indische Studien, I, 102.

² This seems to me to be the meaning of sûtram kṛtvâ nyavedayat;

Here we have an interesting and important statement by which the authorship of a part of the Aitareyāraṇyaka, which would thus be separated from the rest of that text, is ascribed, not to Mahidāsa Aitareya, but to an author of what may be called the historical period of Vedic antiquity, to Āsvalāyana.

But what is the fourth Āraṇyaka to which this passage refers? Is it the text which is now set down, for instance, in Dr. Rāgendralāla Mitra's edition, as the fourth Āraṇyaka of the Aitareyinas?

Before we give an answer to this question, attention must be called to other passages referring, as it could seem, to another part, namely, the fifth part of the Āraṇyaka.

Sāyana, in his great commentary on the Rig-veda, very frequently quotes the pañkamāraṇyaka as belonging to Saunaka. Thus in vol. i, p. 112, ed. Max Müller, he says : pañkamāraṇyaka aushnihatrikāsītir iti khande Saunakena sūtritam surūpakṛitnum ūtaya iti trīṇy endra sānasim rayim iti dve iti. There is indeed in the fifth Āraṇyaka a chapter beginning with the words aushnihî trikâsītî, in which the words quoted by Sāyana occur³. Similar quotations, in the case is similar to that where a pupil goes on his rounds for alms and announces (nivedayati) to his teacher what he has received. Prof. Max Müller translates these words differently; according to him they mean that Āsvalāyana 'made a Sūtra and taught it.'

¹ Comp. Prof. Bühler's article in the Journal As. Soc. of Bengal, 1866, pp. 149 seqq.

² Dvādarādhyāyakam sūtram katushkam grihyam eva ka katurthāraṇyakam kēti by Āsvalāyanasūtrakam.

³ See p. 448 of Dr. Rāgendralāla Mitra's edition in the Bibliotheca Indica.

which the fifth Āraṇyaka is assigned to Saunaka, are found in Sāyana's commentary on the Āraṇyaka itself; see, for instance, p. 97, line 19, p. 116, line 3.

Thus it seems that the authorship of both the fourth and the fifth Āraṇyaka was ascribed to teachers belonging to the Sūtra period of Vedic literature, viz. to Saunaka and to Āsvalāyana respectively. And so we find the case stated by both Professor Weber, in his 'Vorlesungen über indische Literaturgeschichte¹', and Dr. Rāgendralāla Mitra, in the Introduction to his edition of the *Aitareya Āraṇyaka*².

But we must ask ourselves: Are the two books of the Āraṇyaka collection, ascribed to those two authors, really two different books? It is a surprising fact that Shadgurusishya, while speaking of Āsvalāyana's authorship of the fourth book, and while at the same time intending, as he evidently does, to give a complete list of Saunaka's compositions, does not mention the fifth Āraṇyaka among the works of that author. In order to account for this omission the conjecture seems to suggest itself that Shadgurusishya, when speaking of the fourth Āraṇyaka as belonging to Āsvalāyana, means the same work which Sāyana sets down as the fifth, and which he ascribes to Saunaka. At first sight this conjecture may seem perhaps rather hazardous or unnatural; however I believe that, if we compare the two texts themselves which are concerned, we shall find it very probable and even evident. What do those two Āraṇyaka books contain? The fourth is very short: it does not fill more than one page in the printed edition. Its contents consist exclusively of the text of the Mahānāmni or Sakvari verses, which seem to belong to a not less remote antiquity than the average of the Rig-veda hymns. They can indeed be considered as forming part of the Rig-veda Samhitā, and it is only on account of the peculiar mystical holiness ascribed to these verses, that they were not studied in the village but in the forest¹, and were consequently received not into the body of the Samhitā itself, but into the Āraṇyaka. They are referred to in all Brāhmaṇa texts, and perhaps we can even go so far as to pronounce our opinion that some passages of the Rig-veda hymns themselves allude to the Sakvarī verses :

¹ 2nd edition, p. 53: Obwohl wir für das vierte Buch des letztern (i.e. of the Aitareya Āraṇyaka) sogar die directe Nachricht haben, dass es dem Āsvalāyana, dem Schüler eines Saunaka angehört, so wie auch ferner für das fünfte Buch desselben dieser Saunaka selbst als Urheber gegolten zu haben scheint, nach dem was Colebrooke Misc. Ess. I, 47 n. darüber berichtet.

² P. 11: If this assumption be admitted, the proper conclusion to be arrived at would also be that the whole of the fifth Book belongs to Saunaka, and the whole of the fourth Book to Āsvalāyana. P. 12: The writings of both Āsvalāyana and Saunaka which occur in the Āraṇyaka, etc.

yak kḷakvarīṣhu bṛihatā ravenendre sushmam adadhātā Vasishṭhāḥ (Rig-veda VII, 33, 4).

rikām tvah posham āste pupushvān gāyatram tvo gāyati sakvarīṣhu (Rig-veda X, 71, 11).

So much for the fourth Āraṇyaka. The fifth contains a description of the Mahāvratā ceremony. To the same subject also the first book is devoted, with the difference that the first book is composed in the Brāhmaṇa style, the fifth in the Sūtra style².

Now which of these two books can it be that Shadgurusishya reckons as belonging to the 'Āsvalāyanasūtraka?' It is impossible that it should be the fourth, for the Mahānāmni verses never were considered by Indian theologians as the work of a human author; they shared in the apauruṣheyatva of the Veda, and to say that they have been composed by Āsvalāyana, would be inconsistent with the most firmly established principles of the literary history of the Veda both as conceived by the Indians and by ourselves. And even if we were to admit that the Mahānāmni verses can have been assigned, by an author like Shadgurusishya, to Āsvalāyana,—and we cannot admit this,—there is no possibility whatever that he can have used the expression ‘Āsvalāyanasūtrakam’ with regard to the Mahānāmni; to apply the designation of a Sūtra to the Mahānāmni hymn would be no less absurd than to apply it to any Sūkta whatever of the Rik-Samhitā. On the other hand, the fifth book of the Āraṇyaka is a Sūtra; it is the only part of the whole body of the Āraṇyaka collection which is composed in the Sūtra style. And it treats of a special part of the Rig-veda ritual the rest of which is embodied in its entirety, with the omission only of that very part, in the two great Sūtras of Āsvalāyana. There seems to me, therefore, to be little doubt as to the fifth Āraṇyaka really being the text referred to by Shadgurusishya, though I do not know how to explain his setting down this book as the fourth. And I may add that there is a passage, hitherto, as far as I know, unnoticed, in Sāyana’s Sāma-veda commentary, in which that author directly assigns the fifth Āraṇyaka not, as in the Rig-veda commentary, to Saunaka, but to Āsvalāyana. Sāyana there says¹: yathā bahvrikām adhyāpakā mahāvrataprayogapratipādakam Āsvalāyananirmitam kalpa-sūtram aranye dhīyamānāḥ pañkamam āraṇyakam iti vedatvena vyavaharanti.

¹ See Sāṅkhāyana-Grīhya II, 12, 13.

² Thus Sāyana, in his note on V, 1, 1, says : Nanu prathamāraṇyakeṣu atha mahāvratam Indro vai Vratam hatvetyādinā mahāvrataprayogoḥ bhihitāḥ, pañcakameṣu tasyaivābhidhāne punaruktiḥ syāt. nāyam doshaḥ, sūtrabrāhmaṇa-rūpeṇa tayor vibhedāt. pañkamāraṇyakam rīshiproktam sūtram, prathamāraṇyakan tv apauruṣheyam brāhmaṇam. ata eva tatārthavādaprapañkena sahitaḥ vidhayaḥ śrūyante, pañkame tu na ko py arthavādoḥ sti . . . aranya evaitad adhyeyam ity abhipretyādhyetāra āraṇyakāndeṇtarbhāvādyādhiyate.

Instead of asserting, therefore, that of the two last Āraṇyakas of the Aitareyinas the one is ascribed to Saunaka, the other to Āsvalāyana, we must state the case otherwise: not two Āraṇyakas were, according to Sāyana and Shadgurusishya, composed by those Sūtrakāras, but one, viz. the fifth, which forms a sort of supplement to the great body of the Sūtras of that Karana, and which is ascribed either to Saunaka or to Āsvalāyana. Perhaps further research will enable us to decide whether that Sūtra portion of the Āraṇyaka, or we may say quite as well, that Āraṇyaka portion of the Sūtra, belongs to the author of the Srauta-sūtra, or should be considered as a remnant of a more ancient composition, of which the portion studied in the forest has survived, while the portion which was taught in the village was superseded by the more recent Āsvalāyana-sūtra.

¹ Sāma-veda (Bibl. Indica), vol. i, p. 19.

There would be still many questions with which an Introduction to Āsvalāyana would have to deal; thus the relation between Āsvalāyana and Saunaka, which we had intended to treat of here with reference to a special point, would have to be further discussed with regard to several other of its bearings, and the results which follow therefrom as to the position of Āsvalāyana in the history of Vedic literature would have to be stated. But we prefer to reserve the discussion of these questions for the General Introduction to the Grīhya-sūtras.

ÂSVALÂYANA-GRÎHYA-SÛTRA.

ADHYÂYA I, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. The (rites) based on the spreading (of the three sacred fires) have been declared ; we shall declare the Grîhya (rites).

2. There are three (kinds of) Pâkayagñas, the hutas, (i. e. the sacrifices) offered over the fire ; over something that is not the fire, the prahutas ; and at the feeding of Brâhmanas, those offered in the Brahman.

3. And they quote also Rikas, 'He who with a piece of wood or with an oblation, or with knowledge ("veda").'

1, 1. The spreading (vitâna or, as it is also called, vihâra or vistâra) of the sacred fires is the taking of two of the three sacrificial fires, the Âhavanîya fire and the Dakshinâgni, out of the Gârhapatya fire (see, for instance, Weber's Indische Studien, IX, 216 seq.). The rites based on, or connected with the vitâna, are the rites forming the subject of the Srauta ritual, which are to be performed with the three fires.

2. Comp. Sânkhâyana-Grîhya I, 5, 1 ; I, 10, 7. The division here is somewhat different from that given by Sânkhâyana ; what Sânkhâyana calls a huta, is here prahuta ('sacrificed up') ; the prahutas of Sânkhâyana form here no special category ; the prâsitas of Sânkhâyana are the brahmaṇi hutâs of Âsvalâyana. Thus Âsvalâyana has three categories, while Sânkhâyana (and quite in the same way Pâraskara I, 4, 1) gives four. Nârâyana mentions as an example of prahuta sacrifices the baliharana prescribed below, I, 2, 3.

3. Rig-veda VIII, 19, 5, 'The mortal who with a piece of wood, or with an oblation, or with knowledge worships Agni, who with adoration (worships him) offering rich sacrifices,' &c.

4. Even he who only puts a piece of wood (on the fire) full of belief, should think, 'Here I offer a sacrifice; adoration to that (deity)!'

(The Rik quoted above then says), 'He who with an oblation'—and, 'He who with knowledge;' even by learning only satisfaction is produced (in the gods).

Seeing this the Rishi has said, 'To him who does not keep away from himself the cows, to him who longs for cows, who dwells in the sky, speak a wonderful word, sweeter than ghee and honey.' Thereby he means, 'This my word, sweeter than ghee and honey, is satisfaction (to the god); may it be sweeter.'

(And another Rishi says), 'To thee, O Agni, by this Rik we offer an oblation prepared by our heart; may these be oxen, bulls, and cows.' (Thereby he means), 'They are my oxen, bulls, and cows (which I offer to the god), they who study this text, reciting it for themselves (as their Svâdhyâya).'

(And further on the Rik quoted above says), 'He who (worships Agni) with adoration, offering rich sacrifices.' 'Verily also by the performing of adoration (the gods may be worshipped); for the gods are not beyond the performing of adoration; adoration verily is sacrifice'—thus runs a Brâhmaṇa.

4. The words of the Rik, 'with an oblation,' are here repeated, the Vedic instrumental âhutî being replaced and explained by the regular form âhutyâ.

The following Rik is taken from the eighth Mandala, 24, 20. The god compared there with a rutting bull is Indra.

The following verse is Rig-veda VI, 16, 47; we may doubt as to the correctness of the explanation given in our text, by which it is referred to the persons studying the hymns of the Rishi. All these quotations of course are meant to show that the knowledge of the Veda and the performing of namas (adoration) is equivalent to a real sacrifice.

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. Now he should make oblations in the evening and in the morning of prepared sacrificial food,

2. To the deities of the Agnihotra, to Soma Vanaspati, to Agni and Soma, to Indra and Agni, to Heaven and Earth, to Dhanvantari, to Indra, to the Visve devâs, to Brahman.

3. He says Svâhâ, and then he offers the Balis—

4. To those same deities, to the waters, to the herbs and trees, to the house, to the domestic deities, to the deities of the ground (on which the house stands),

5. To Indra and Indra's men, to Yama and Yama's men, to Varuṇa and Varuṇa's men, to Soma and Soma's men—these (oblations he makes) to the different quarters (of the horizon, of which those are the presiding deities).

6. To Brahman and Brahman's men in the middle,

2, 1. This is the Vaisvadeva sacrifice; comp. Sâṅkhâya-Gr̥hya II, 14, &c.

2. The deities of the Agnihotra are Sûrya, Agni, and Pragâpati.

On Soma Vanaspati see the quotations given in Böhdlings-Roth's Dictionary s. v. vanaspati, 2.

3. I think the division of the Sûtras should be altered, so that svâheti would belong to Sûtra 2, and the third Sûtra would consist only of the words atha baliharanam. In this case we should have to translate,

(1) Now he should make oblations, &c.

(2) With the words, 'To the deities of the Agnihotra (i. e. to Agni, to Sûrya, to Pragâpati), to Soma Vanaspati, &c., svâhâ!'

(3) Then (follows) the offering of the Balis.

Comp. Sâṅkh.-Gr̥hya II, 14, 4. 5, which passage seems to confirm the view expressed here.

5. Manu III, 87.

7. To the Visve devās, to all day-walking beings—thus by day;
8. To the night-walking (beings)—thus at night.
9. To the Rakshas—thus to the north.
10. 'Svadhâ to the fathers (i. e. Manes)'—with these words he should pour out the remnants to the south, with the sacrificial cord suspended over the right shoulder.

KANDIKÂ 3.

1. Now wherever he intends to perform a sacrifice, let him besmear (with cowdung) a surface of the dimension at least of an arrow on each side; let him draw six lines thereon, one turned to the north, to the west (of the spot on which the fire is to be placed); two (lines) turned to the east, at the two different ends (of the line mentioned first); three (lines) in the middle (of those two); let him sprinkle that (place with water), establish the (sacred) fire (thereon), put (two or three pieces of fuel) on it, wipe (the ground) round (the fire), strew (grass) round (it), to the east, to the south, to the west, to the north, ending (each time) in the north. Then (follows) silently the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire).

2. With two (Kusa blades used as) strainers the purifying of the Âgya (is done).

3. Having taken two Kusa blades with unbroken tops, which do not bear a young shoot in them, of the measure of a span, at their two ends with his

3, 1. Comp. Sâṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 7, 6 seq., where the statements regarding the lines to be drawn are somewhat different, and the note there.

3. Comp. the description of this act of purifying the Âgya, which is in some points more detailed, in Sâṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 8, 14-21.

thumbs and fourth fingers, with his hands turned with the inside upwards, he purifies (the Āgya, from the west) to the east, with (the words), 'By the impulse of Savitrī I purify thee with this uninjured purifier, with the rays of the good sun'—once with this formula, twice silently.

4. The strewing (of grass) round (the fire) may be done or not done in the Āgya offerings.

5. So also the two Āgya portions (may optionally be sacrificed) in the Pākayagñas.

6. And the (assistance of a) Brahman (is optional), except at the sacrifice to Dhanvantari and at the sacrifice of the spit-ox (offered to Rudra).

7. Let him sacrifice with (the words), 'To such and such a deity svâhâ!'

8. If there is no rule (as to the deities to whom the sacrifice belongs, they are) Agni, Indra, Pragâpati, the Visve devâs, Brahman.

9. (Different Pākayagñas, when) offered at the same time, should have the same Barhis (sacrificial grass), the same fuel, the same Āgya, and the same (oblation to Agni) Svishṭakṛt.

10. With reference thereto the following sacrificial stanza is sung:

'He who has to perform (different) Pākayagñas, should offer them with the same Āgya, the same

4. Comp. Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 8, 12.

5. On the two Āgyabhâgas offered to Agni and Soma comp. below, chap. 10, 13; Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 9, 5 seq.

6. Comp. on these exceptions the Sûtras below, I, 12, 7; IV, 8, 15.

7. Comp. Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 9, 18.

9. On the oblation to Agni Svishṭakṛt, see Indische Studien, IX, 217.

Barhis, and the same Svishṭakṛit, even if the deity (of those sacrifices) is not the same.'

. KANDIKÂ 4.

1. During the northern course of the sun, in the time of the increasing moon, under an auspicious Nakshatra the tonsure (of the child's head), the initiation (of a Brahmaṅgîrin), the cutting of the beard, and marriage (should be celebrated).

2. According to some (teachers), marriage (may be celebrated) at any time.

3. Before those (ceremonies) let him sacrifice four Âgya oblations—

4. With the three (verses), 'Agni, thou purifiest life' (Rig-veda IX, 66, 10 seq.), and with (the one verse), 'Pragâpati, no other one than thou' (Rig-veda X, 121, 10).

5. Or with the Vyâhr̥tis.

6. According to some (teachers), the one and the other.

7. No such (oblations), according to some (teachers).

8. At the marriage the fourth oblation with the verse, 'Thou (O Agni) art Aryaman towards the girls' (Rig-veda V, 3, 2).

KANDIKÂ 5.

1. Let him first examine the family (of the intended bride or bridegroom), as it has been said above,

4, 1. Sâṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 5, 2-5.

5. With the words, bhûḥ, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ, and with the three words together.

6. Thus eight oblations are offered, four with the four *Rik*s quoted in the fourth Sûtra, and four with the Vyâhr̥tis.

7. Neither the oblations with the *Rik*s nor those with the Vyâhr̥tis.

5, 1. Srauta-sûtra IX, 3, 20, 'Who on their mother's as well as ‘Those who on the mother’s and on the father’s side.’

2. Let him give the girl to a (young man) endowed with intelligence.

3. Let him marry a girl that shows the characteristics of intelligence, beauty, and moral conduct, and who is free from disease.

4. As the characteristics (mentioned in the preceding Sûtra) are difficult to discern, let him make eight lumps (of earth), recite over the lumps the following formula, ‘Right has been born first, in the beginning; on the right truth is founded. For what (destiny) this girl is born, that may she attain here. What is true may that be seen,’ and let him say to the girl, ‘Take one of these.’

5. If she chooses the (lump of earth taken) from a field that yields two crops (in one year), he may know, ‘Her offspring will be rich in food.’ If from a cow-stable, rich in cattle. If from the earth of a Vedi (altar), rich in holy lustre. If from a pool which does not dry up, rich in everything. If from a gambling-place, addicted to gambling. If from a place where four roads meet, wandering to different directions. If from a barren spot, poor. If from a burial-ground, (she will) bring death to her husband.

on their father’s side through ten generations are endowed with knowledge, austerity, and meritorious works,’ &c.

4. I prefer the reading of the Bibliotheca Indica edition, countenanced by Nârâyana’s commentary, durvigñeyâni lakṣhaṇâṇi, &c. The lumps are to be taken from the eight places mentioned in Sûtra 5.

5. No doubt the correct reading is not that given by Nârâyana and accepted by Professor Stenzler, dvipravrâginî, but vipravrâginî, as four of Professor Stenzler’s MSS. read (see his Variae Lectiones, p. 48, and the Petersburg Dictionary s.v. vipravrâgin).

KANDIKĀ 6.

1. (The father) may give away the girl, having decked her with ornaments, pouring out a libation of water: this is the wedding (called) Brāhma. A son born by her (after a wedding of this kind) brings purification to twelve descendants and to twelve ancestors on both (the husband's and the wife's) sides.

2. He may give her, having decked her with ornaments, to an officiating priest, whilst a sacrifice with the three (Srauta) fires is going on: this (is the wedding called) Daiva. (A son) brings purification to ten descendants and to ten ancestors on both sides.

3. They fulfil the law together: this (is the wedding called) Prâgâpatya. (A son) brings purification to eight descendants and to eight ancestors on both sides.

4. He may marry her after having given a bull and a cow (to the girl's father): this (is the wedding called) Ârsha. (A son) brings purification to seven descendants and to seven ancestors on both sides.

5. He may marry her, after a mutual agreement has been made (between the lover and the damsel): this (is the wedding called) Gândharva.

6. He may marry her after gladdening (her father) by money: this (is the wedding called) Âsura.

6, 1. Comp. Vasishṭha I, 30; Âpastamba II, 11, 17; Baudhâyana I, 20, 2.

2. Vasishṭha I, 31; Âpastamba II, 11, 19; Baudhâyana I, 20, 5.

3. Baudhâyana I, 20, 3.

4. Vasishṭha I, 32; Âpastamba II, 11, 18; Baudhâyana I, 20, 4.

5. Vasishṭha I, 33; Âpastamba II, 11, 20; Baudhâyana I, 20, 6.

6. Vasishṭha I, 35 (where this rite is designated as Mânusha); Âpastamba II, 12, 1; Baudhâyana I, 20, 7.

7. He may carry her off while (her relatives) sleep or pay no attention: this (is the wedding called) Paisāka.

8. He may carry her off, killing (her relatives) and cleaving (their) heads, while she weeps and they weep: this (is the wedding called) Rākshasa.

KANDIKĀ 7.

1. Now various indeed are the customs of the (different) countries and the customs of the (different) villages: those one should observe at the wedding.

2. What, however, is commonly accepted, that we shall state.

3. Having placed to the west of the fire a mill-stone, to the north-east (of the fire) a water-pot, he should sacrifice, while she takes hold of him. Standing, with his face turned to the west, while she is sitting and turns her face to the east, he should with (the formula), 'I seize thy hand for the sake of happiness' seize her thumb if he desires that only male children may be born to him;

4. Her other fingers, (if he is) desirous of female (children);

5. The hand on the hair-side together with the

7. Baudhāyana I, 20, 9.

8. Vasishṭha I, 34 (where this rite is called Kshātra); Āpastamba II, 21, 2; Baudhāyana I, 20, 8. The text of this Sūtra seems to be based on a hemistich hatvā bhittvā ka śīrshāni rudadbhyo rudatīm haret; comp. Manu III, 33.

7, 3. Professor Stenzler is evidently right in taking asmānam as in apposition to drīshadam. Nārāyaṇa says, drīshat prasiddhā armā tatputrakaḥ. tatrobhayoḥ pratishṭhāpanam siddham.

The sacrifice is that prescribed in Sāṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 12, 11. 12. Regarding the rite that follows, comp. Sāṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 13, 2.

thumb, (if) desirous of both (male and female children).

6. Leading her three times round the fire and the water-pot, so that their right sides are turned towards (the fire, &c.), he murmurs, 'This am I, that art thou; that art thou, this am I; the heaven I, the earth thou; the Sâman I, the Rik thou. Come! Let us here marry. Let us beget offspring. Loving, bright, with genial mind may we live a hundred autumns.'

7. Each time after he has lead her (so) round, he makes her tread on the stone with (the words), 'Tread on this stone; like a stone be firm. Overcome the enemies; tread the foes down.'

8. Having 'spread under' (i.e. having first poured Âgya over her hands), her brother or a person acting in her brother's place pours fried grain twice over the wife's joined hands.

9. Three times for descendants of Gamadagni.

10. He pours again (Âgya) over (what has been left of) the sacrificial food,

11. And over what has been cut off.

12. This is the rule about the portions to be cut off.

13. 'To god Aryaman the girls have made sacrifice,

6. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya I, 13, 4. 9. 13.

7. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya I, 13, 12.

8. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya I, 13, 15. 16.

9. The two portions of fried grain poured over the bride's hands, together with the first (upastarana) and the second (pratyabhigârana) pouring out of Âgya, constitute the four Avattas, or portions cut off from the Havis. The descendants of Gamadagni were pañkâvattinas, i.e. they used to cut off five such portions (see Kâtyâyana I, 9, 3; Weber, Indische Studien, X, 95); so they had to pour out the fried grain three times.

13. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya I, 18, 3; 13, 17; 14, 1.

to Agni ; may he, god Aryaman, loosen her from this, and not from that place, Svâhâ !

‘ To god Varuṇa the girls have made sacrifice, to Agni ; may he, god Varuṇa, &c.

‘ To god Pûshan the girls have made sacrifice, to Agni ; may he, god Pûshan, &c.’—with (these verses recited by the bridegroom) she should sacrifice (the fried grain) without opening her joined hands, as if (she did so) with the (spoon called) Sruḥ.

14. Without that leading round (the fire, she sacrifices grain) with the neb of a basket towards herself silently a fourth time.

15. Some lead the bride round each time after the fried grain has been poured out : thus the two last oblations do not follow immediately on each other.

16. He then loosens her two locks of hair, if they are made, (i. e. if) two tufts of wool are bound round her hair on the two sides,—

17. With (the Rik), ‘ I release thee from the band of Varuṇa’ (Rig-veda X, 85, 24).

18. The left one with the following (Rik).

19. He then causes her to step forward in a north-eastern direction seven steps with (the words), ‘ For sap with one step, for juice with two steps, for thriving of wealth with three steps, for comfort with four steps, for offspring with five steps, for the seasons

14, 15. According to those teachers whose opinion is related in Sûtras 6–14, the leading round the fire, the treading on the stone, and the offering of fried grain (with the three parts of the Mantra, Sûtra 13) are repeated thrice ; then follows the offering prescribed in Sûtra 14, so that the last two offerings follow immediately on each other. This is not the case, if in the first three instances the order of the different rites is inverted, as stated in Sûtra 15.

In Sûtra 14 Nârâyana explains sûrpapuṣa by kona.

19. Sāṅkhâyaṇa-Grihya I, 14, 5. 6 ; 13, 2 ; Pâraskara I, 8, 1.

with six steps. Be friend with seven steps. So be thou devoted to me. Let us acquire many sons who may reach old age !'

20. Joining together their two heads, (the bridegroom? the Ākârya?) sprinkles them (with water) from the water-pot.

21. And she should dwell that night in the house of an old Brâhmana woman whose husband is alive and whose children are alive.

22. When she sees the polar-star, the star Arundhatti, and the seven Rishis (ursa major), let her break the silence (and say), 'May my husband live and I get offspring.'

KANDIKÂ 8.

1. If (the newly-married couple) have to make a journey (to their new home), let him cause her to mount the chariot with the (verse), 'May Pûshan lead thee from here holding thy hand' (Rig-veda X, 85, 26).

2. With the hemistich, 'Carrying stones (the river) streams; hold fast each other' (Rig-veda X, 53, 8) let him cause her to ascend a ship.

3. With the following (hemistich) let him make her descend (from it).

4. (He pronounces the verse), 'The living one they bewail' (Rig-veda X, 40, 10), if she weeps.

5. They constantly carry the nuptial fire in front.

20. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya I, 14, 9; Pâraskara I, 8, 5.

22. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya I, 17, 2 seq.; Pâraskara I, 8, 19.

8, 1. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya I, 15, 13.

2. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya I, 15, 17. 18.

4. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya I, 15, 2.

6. At lovely places, trees, and cross-ways let him murmur (the verse), 'May no waylayers meet us' (Rig-veda X, 85, 32).

7. At every dwelling-place (on their way) let him look at the lookers on, with (the verse), 'Good luck brings this woman' (Rig-veda X, 85, 33).

8. With (the verse), 'Here may delight fulfil itself to thee through offspring' (Rig-veda X, 85, 27) he should make her enter the house.

9. Having given its place to the nuptial fire, and having spread to the west of it a bull's hide with the neck to the east, with the hair outside, he makes oblations, while she is sitting on that (hide) and takes hold of him, with the four (verses), 'May Pragâpati create offspring to us' (Rig-veda X, 85, 43 seq.), verse by verse, and with (the verse), 'May all the gods unite' (Rig-veda X, 85, 47), he partakes of curds and gives (thereof) to her, or he besmears their two hearts with the rest of the Âgya (of which he has sacrificed).

10. From that time they should eat no saline food, they should be chaste, wear ornaments, sleep on the ground three nights or twelve nights;

11. Or one year, (according to) some (teachers); thus, they say, a Rîshi will be born (as their son).

12. When he has fulfilled (this) observance (and has had intercourse with his wife), he should give the bride's shift to (the Brâhmana) who knows the Sûryâ hymn (Rig-veda X, 85);

13. Food to the Brâhmanas;

6. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 15, 14.

8. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 15, 22; 16, 12.

9. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 16, 1. 2.

12. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 14, 12.

14. Then he should cause them to pronounce auspicious words.

KANDIKĀ 9.

1. Beginning from the seizing of (the bride's) hand (i. e. from the wedding), he should worship the domestic (fire) himself, or his wife, or also his son, or his daughter, or a pupil.

2. (The fire) should be kept constantly.

3. When it goes out, however, the wife should fast: thus (say) some (teachers).

4. The time for setting it in a blaze and for sacrificing in it has been explained by (the rules given with regard to) the Agnihotra,

5. And the sacrificial food, except meat.

6. But if he likes he may (perform the sacrifice) with rice, barley, or sesamum.

7. He should sacrifice in the evening with (the formula), 'To Agni svâhâ!' in the morning with (the formula), 'To Sûrya svâhâ!' Silently the second (oblations) both times.

KANDIKĀ 10.

1. Now the oblations of cooked food on the (two) Parvan (i. e. the new and full moon) days.

2. The fasting (which takes place) thereat has been declared by (the corresponding rules regarding) the Darsapûrnamâsa sacrifices.

9, 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya II, 17, 3.

4. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya I, 1, 12; Āsvalâya-Srauta II, 2.

5. Āsvalâya-Srauta II, 3, 1 seq. Nârâyaṇa: By the prohibition of meat which is expressed in the words 'Except meat,' it is to be understood that the food to be sacrificed, as stated in other Sâstras, may likewise be chosen.

3. And (so has been declared) the binding together of the fuel and of the Barhis,

4. And the deities (to whom those oblations belong), with the exception of the Upâmsuyâga (offerings at which the formulas are repeated with low voice), and of Indra and Mahendra.

5. Other deities (may be worshipped) according to the wishes (which the sacrificer connects with his offerings).

6. For each single deity he pours out four handful (of rice, barley, &c.), placing two purifiers (i. e. Kusa blades, on the vessel), with (the formula), 'Agreeable to such and such (a deity) I pour thee out.'

7. He then sprinkles them (those four portions of Havis with water) in the same way as he had poured them out, with (the formula), 'Agreeable to such and such (a deity) I sprinkle thee.'

8. When (the rice or barley grains) have been husked and cleansed from the husks three times, let him cook (the four portions) separately,

9. Or throwing (them) together.

10. If he cooks them separately, let him touch the grains, after he has separated them, (and say,) 'This to this god; this to this god.'

11. But if he (cooks the portions) throwing (them) together, he should (touch and) sacrifice them, after he has put (the single portions) into different vessels.

12. The portions of sacrificial food, when they

10, 3. See Ârvalâyana-Srauta I, 3, 28 Scholion; Kâty.-Srauta II, 7, 22.

4. See Hillebrandt, Das altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 111; my note on Sâṅkhâyana-Gṛihya I, 3, 3.

12. In the Mantra we have a similar play upon words (iddha, have been cooked, he sprinkles (with Âgya), takes them from the fire towards the north, places them on the Barhis, and sprinkles the fuel with Âgya with the formula, 'This fuel is thy self, Gâtavedas; thereby burn thou and increase, and, O burning One, make us increase and through offspring, cattle, holy lustre, and nourishment make us prosper. Svâhâ!'

13. Having silently poured out the two Âghâras (or Âgya oblations poured out with the Sruva, the one from north-west to south-east, the other from south-west to north-east), he should sacrifice the two Âgya portions with (the formulas), 'To Agni svâhâ! To Soma svâhâ!'

14. The northern one belonging to Agni, the southern one to Soma.

15. It is understood (in the Sruti), 'The two eyes indeed of the sacrifice are the Âgya portions,

16. 'Therefore of a man who is sitting with his face to the west the southern (i. e. right) eye is northern, the northern (i. e. left) eye is southern.'

17. In the middle (of the two Âgya portions he lit, or burning, and samedhaya, make us prosper) as in Sâṅkh.-Grîhya II, 10, 4.

13. Pâraskara I, 5, 3; Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 9, 5 seq.

14. Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 9, 7.

15. Professor Stenzler here very pertinently refers to Satapatha Brâhmana I, 6, 3, 38.

16. It is doubtful whether this paragraph should be considered as forming part of the quotation from the Sruti. The object of this passage is, in my opinion, to explain why the southern Âgyabhâga belongs to Soma, who is the presiding deity of the north, and the northern Âgyabhâga to Agni, the presiding deity of the south-east. Professor Stenzler's opinion about this paragraph is somewhat different.

17. Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 9, 8.

sacrifices the other) Havis, or more to the west, finishing (the oblations) in the east or in the north.

18. To the north-east the oblation to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit.

19. He cuts off (the Avadāna portions) from the Havis from the middle and from the eastern part ;

20. From the middle, the eastern part and the western part (the portions have to be cut off) by those who make five Avadānas ;

21. From the northern side the portion for Svishṭakṛit.

22. Here he omits the second pouring (of Āgrya) over (what is left of) the sacrificial food.

23. 'What I have done too much in this ceremony, or what I have done here too little, all that may Agni Svishṭakṛit, he who knows it, make well sacrificed and well offered for me. To Agni Svishṭakṛit, to him who offers the oblations for general expiation, so that they are well offered, to him who makes us succeed in what we desire ! Make us in all that we desire successful ! Svāhā !'

24. He pours out the full vessel on the Barhis.

25. This is the Avabhṛtha.

19, 20. See above, the note on I, 7, 9 about the Avadāna portions and the peculiar custom of the descendants of Gamadagni with regard to them.

22. Comp. above, I, 7, 10. 'Here' means, at the Svishṭakṛit oblation.

23. Comp. Pāraskara I, 2, 11 ; Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XIV, 9, 4, 24. On the oblations for general expiation (sarvaprāyaskṛittāhuti) comp. Sāṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 9, 12, and the note.

24. 'A full vessel which has been put down before, he should now pour out on the Barhis.' Nārāyaṇa.

25. This pouring out of the vessel holds here the place of the Avabhṛtha bath at the end of the Soma sacrifice. See Weber, Indische Studien, X, 393 seq.

26. This is the standard form of the Pākayagñas.
 27. What has been left of the Havis is the fee for the sacrifice.

KANDIKÂ 11.

1. Now (follows) the ritual of the animal sacrifice.
2. Having prepared to the north of the fire the place for the Sâmitra fire, having given drink (to the animal which he is going to sacrifice), having washed the animal, having placed it to the east (of the fire) with its face to the west, having made oblations with the two Rikas, 'Agni as our messenger' (Rig-veda I, 12, 1 seq.), let him touch (the animal) from behind with a fresh branch on which there are leaves, with (the formula), 'Agreeable to such and such (a deity) I touch thee.'
3. He sprinkles it from before with water in which rice and barley are, with (the formula), 'Agreeable to such and such (a deity) I sprinkle thee.'
4. Having given (to the animal) to drink of that (water), he should pour out the rest (of it) along its right fore-foot.
5. Having carried fire round (it), performing that act only (without repeating a corresponding Mantra), they lead it to the north.
6. In front of it they carry a fire-brand.

11, 2. The Sâmitra fire (literally, the fire of the Samitrî; who prepares the flesh of the immolated animal) is the one mentioned below in Sûtras 7 and 10. Comp. Indische Studien, X, 345. 'I touch thee' is upâkaromi; comp. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra VI, 3, 19. 26.

6. It seems that this fire-brand is the same which had been carried round the animal, according to Sûtra 5. Comp. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra VI, 5, 2-5.

7. This is the Sâmitra (fire).
8. With the two Vapâsrapantî ladles the 'performer' touches the animal.
9. The sacrificer (touches) the performer.
10. To the west of the Sâmitra (fire) he (the Samitrî) kills (the animal), the head of which is turned to the east or to the west, the feet to the north; and having placed a grass-blade on his side of the (animal's) navel, (the 'performer') draws out the omentum, cuts off the omentum, seizes it with the two Agnisrapants, sprinkles it with water, warms it at the Sâmitra (fire), takes it before that fire, roasts it, being seated to the south, goes round (the two fires), and sacrifices it.
11. At the same fire they cook a mess of food.
12. Having cut off the eleven Avadânas (or portions which have to be cut off) from the animal, from all its limbs, having boiled them at the Sâmitra (fire),

7. Comp. Sûtra 2.

8. On the two Vapâsrapants, comp. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra VI, 5, 7; Indische Studien, X, 345. The act which is here attributed to the kartri ('performer'), belongs in the Srauta ritual to the incumbencies of the Pratiprasthâtri.

10. On the way in which animals had to be killed at sacrifices, see Weber's Indische Studien, IX, 222 seq.

On the position of the head and the feet of the victim, comp. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra VI, 5, 16. 17.

According to Kâtyâyana VI, 6, 8 seq. a grass-blade is placed on the dead animal's body before the navel (agrena nâbhim); through that grass-blade he cuts into the body and draws out the omentum.

'That fire' is, according to Nârâyana, not the Sâmitra but the Aupâsana fire. In the same way in the Srauta ritual the warming of the omentum is performed at the Sâmitra, the boiling at the Âhavanîya fire. Kâtyâyana VI, 6, 13. 16.

11. The Aupâsana fire is referred to.

12. The eleven portions are indicated by Kâtyâyana, Srauta-sûtra VI, 7, 6.

and having warmed the heart on a spit, let him sacrifice first from the mess of cooked food (mentioned in Sūtra 11);

13. Or together with the Avadāna portions.

14. From each of the (eleven) Avadānas he cuts off two portions.

15. They perform the rites only (without corresponding Mantras) with the heart's spit (i.e. the spit on which the heart had been; see Sūtra 12).

KANDIKĀ 12.

1. At a Kaitya sacrifice he should before the Svishtakrit (offering) offer a Bali to the Kaitya.

2. If, however, (the Kaitya) is distant, (he should send his Bali) through a leaf-messenger.

14. 'A Pañkāvattin cuts off three portions. Having performed the Upastarana and the Pratyabhighârana (the first and second pouring out of Āgya) he sacrifices (the cut-off portions).' Nârâyana.

15. On the rites regarding the spit, see Kâtyâyana VI, 10, 1 seq.; Indische Studien, X, 346.

12, 1. There seems to be no doubt that Professor Stenzler is right in giving to kaitya in this chapter its ordinary meaning of religious shrine ('Denkmal'). The text shows that the Kaitya sacrifice was not offered like other sacrifices at the sacrificer's home, but that in some cases the offering would have to be sent, at least symbolically, to distant places. This confirms Professor Stenzler's translation of kaitya. Nârâyana explains kaitya by kitte bhava, and says, 'If he makes a vow to a certain deity, saying, "If I obtain such and such a desire, I shall offer to thee an Āgya sacrifice, or a Sthâlpâka, or an animal"—and if he then obtains what he had wished for and performs that sacrifice to that deity: this is a kaitya sacrifice.' I do not know anything that supports this statement as to the meaning of kaitya.

2. 'He should make of a leaf a messenger and a carrying-pole.' Nârâyana.

It is not clear whether besides this image of a messenger there was also a real messenger who had to carry the Bali to the Kaitya,

3. With the Rik, 'Where thou knowest, O tree' (Rig-veda V, 5, 10), let him make two lumps (of food), put them on a carrying-pole, hand them over to the messenger, and say to him, 'Carry this Bali to that (Kaitya).'

4. (He gives him the lump) which is destined for the messenger, with (the words), 'This to thee.'

5. If there is anything dangerous between (them and the Kaitya), (he gives him) some weapon also.

6. If a navigable river is between (them and the Kaitya, he gives him) also something like a raft with (the words), 'Hereby thou shalt cross.'

7. At the Dhanvantari sacrifice let him offer first a Bali to the Purohita, between the Brahman and the fire.

KANDIKÂ 13.

1. The Upanishad (treats of) the Garbhalambhana, the Pumsavana, and the Anavalobhana (i. e. the ceremonies for securing the conception of a child, the male gender of the child, and for preventing disturbances which could endanger the embryo).

2. If he does not study (that Upanishad), he or whether the whole rite was purely symbolical, and based on the principle: In sacris ficta pro veris accipiuntur.

3. Comp. Pâraskara III, 11, 10.

6. Pâraskara III, 11, 11,

7. Comp. above, chap. 3, 6.

13, 1. Nârâyana evidently did not know the Upanishad here referred to; he states that it belongs to another Sâkhâ. Comp. Professor Max Müller's note on Bṛihad Âraṇyaka VI, 4, 24 (S. B. E., vol. xv, p. 222).

2. 'He should give her the two beans as a symbol of the testicles, and the barley grain as a symbol of the penis.' Nârâyana.

should in the third month of her pregnancy, under (the Nakshatra) Tishya, give to eat (to the wife), after she has fasted, in curds from a cow which has a calf of the same colour (with herself), two beans and one barley grain for each handful of curds.

3. To his question, 'What dost thou drink? What dost thou drink?' she should thrice reply, 'Generation of a male child! Generation of a male child!'

4. Thus three handfuls (of curds).

5. He then inserts into her right nostril, in the shadow of a round apartment, (the sap of) an herb which is not faded,

6. According to some (teachers) with the Pragâvat and Gîvaputra hymns.

7. Having sacrificed of a mess of cooked food sacred to Pragâpati, he should touch the place of her heart with the (verse,) 'What is hidden, O thou whose hair is well parted, in thy heart, in Pragâpati, that I know; such is my belief. May I not fall into distress that comes from sons.'

5. Nârâyana (comp. also the Prayogaratna, folio 40; Âsvalâyana-Grîhya-Parisishṭa I, 25; MS. Chambers 667) separates this rite from the ceremony described in Sûtras 2-4. He says that Sûtras 2-4—as indeed is evidently the case—refer to the Pumsavana, and in Sûtra 5 begins the Anavalobhana (comp. garbhara-kshana, Sâṅkh. I, 21). To me it seems more probable that the text describes one continuous ceremony. There is no difficulty in supposing that of the Anavalobhana, though it is mentioned in Sûtra 1, no description is given in the following Sûtras, the same being the case undoubtedly with regard to the Garbhalambhana, of which a description is found in the Âsv.-Parisishṭa I, 25.

6. Two texts commencing â te garbho yonim etu and Agnir etu prathamah. See Stenzler's Various Readings, p. 48, and the Bibliotheca Indica edition, p. 61.

KANDIKÂ 14.

1. In the fourth month of pregnancy the Sîmantonnayana (or parting of the hair, is performed).

2. In the fortnight of the increasing moon, when the moon stands in conjunction with a Nakshatra (that has a name) of masculine gender—

3. Then he gives its place to the fire, and having spread to the west of it a bull's hide with the neck to the east, with the hair outside, (he makes oblations,) while (his wife) is sitting on that (hide) and takes hold of him, with the two (verses), 'May Dhâtri give to his worshipper,' with the two verses, 'I invoke Râkâ' (Rig-veda II, 32, 4 seq.), and with (the texts), 'Negamesha,' and, 'Pragâpati, no other one than thou' (Rig-veda X, 121, 10).

4. He then three times parts her hair upwards (i.e. beginning from the front) with a bunch containing an even number of unripe fruits, and with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, and with three bunches of Kusa grass, with (the words), 'Bhûr, bhuvaḥ, svar, om !'

5. Or four times.

6. He gives orders to two lute-players, 'Sing king Soma.'

7. (They sing,) 'May Soma our king bless the human race. Settled is the wheel of N.N.'—(here they name) the river near which they dwell.

14, 3. Comp. above, chap. 8, 9. Regarding the two verses Dhâtâ dadâtu dâsushe, see Sâṅkh.-Grihya I, 22, 7. The Negamesha hymn is Rig-veda Khailika sūkta, vol. vi, p. 31, ed. Max Müller.

7. Comp. Pâraskara I, 15, 8. The Gâthâ there is somewhat different. I cannot see why in the Âsvalâyana redaction of it nivish/aḥakrâsau should not be explained, conformably to the

8. And whatever aged Brâhmaṇa woman, whose husbands and children are alive, tell them, that let them do.

9. A bull is the fee for the sacrifice.

KANDIKÂ 15.

1. When a son has been born, (the father) should, before other people touch him, give him to eat from gold (i. e. from a golden vessel or with a golden spoon) butter and honey with which he has ground gold(-dust), with (the verse), 'I administer to thee the wisdom ('veda') of honey, of ghee, raised by Savitri the bountiful. Long-living, protected by the gods, live a hundred autumns in this world!'

2. Approaching (his mouth) to (the child's) two ears he murmurs the 'production of intelligence:' 'Intelligence may give to thee god Savitri, intelligence may goddess Sarasvati, intelligence may give to thee the two divine Asvins, wreathed with lotus.'

3. He touches (the child's) two shoulders with (the verse), 'Be a stone, be an axe, be insuperable gold. Thou indeed art the Veda, called son; so live a hundred autumns'—and with (the verses), 'Indra, give the best treasures' (Rig-veda II, 21, 6), 'Bestow on us, O bountiful one, O speedy one' (Rig-veda III, 36, 10).

4. And let them give him a name beginning with regular Sandhi laws, as nivish/akakrâ asau. The wheel of course means the dominion.

15, 1. Comp. Âsv.-Grîhya-Parisishṭa I, 26. I follow Professor Stenzler, who corrects maghonâm into maghonâ; comp. Sâṅkh.-Grîhya I, 24, 4.

3. Vedo may as well be the nominative of veda as that of vedas ('property').

a sonant, with a semivowel in it, with the Visarga at its end, consisting of two syllables,

5. Or of four syllables ;

6. Of two syllables, if he is desirous of firm position ; of four syllables, if he is desirous of holy lustre ;

7. But in every case with an even number (of syllables) for men, an uneven for women.

8. And let him also find out (for the child) a name to be used at respectful salutations (such as that due to the Âkârya at the ceremony of the initiation) ; that his mother and his father (alone) should know till his initiation.

9. When he returns from a journey, he embraces his son's head and murmurs, 'From limb by limb thou art produced ; out of the heart thou art born. Thou indeed art the self called son ; so live a hundred autumns !'—(thus) he kisses him three times on his head.

10. The rite only (without the Mantra is performed) for a girl.

KANDIKÂ 16.

1. In the sixth month the Annaprâsana (i.e. the first feeding with solid food).

2. Goat's flesh, if he is desirous of nourishment,

3. Flesh of partridge, if desirous of holy lustre,

4. Boiled rice with ghee, if desirous of splendour :

5. (Such) food, mixed with curds, honey and ghee he should give (to the child) to eat with (the verse), 'Lord of food, give us food painless and strong ;

16, 1 seq. Comp. Sâṅkh.-Gṛhya I, 27, 1 seq. The two texts are nearly word for word identical.

bring forward the giver ; bestow power on us, on men and animals.'

6. The rite only (without the Mantra) for a girl.

KANDIKÂ 17.

1. In the third year the Kaula (i.e. the tonsure of the child's head), or according to the custom of the family.

2. To the north of the fire he places vessels which are filled respectively, with rice, barley, beans, and sesamum seeds ;

3. To the west (the boy) for whom the ceremony shall be performed, in his mother's lap, bull-dung in a new vessel, and Samī leaves are placed.

4. To the south of the mother the father (is seated) holding twenty-one bunches of Kusa grass.

5. Or the Brahman should hold them.

6. To the west of (the boy) for whom the ceremony is to be performed, (the father) stations himself and pours cold and warm water together with (the words), 'With warm water, O Vāyu, come hither!'

7. Taking of that (water), (and) fresh butter, or (some) drops of curds, he three times moistens (the boy's) head, from the left to the right, with (the formula), 'May Aditi cut thy hair ; may the waters moisten thee for vigour!'

8. Into the right part (of the hair) he puts each

4. He cuts off the hair four times on the right side (Sûtras 10-14), three times on the left side (Sûtra 15) ; each time three Kusa bunches are required. This is the reason why twenty-one bunches are prescribed.

8. Each of the four times and of the three times respectively that he cuts off the hair ; see the preceding note.

time three Kusa bunches, with the points towards (the boy) himself, with (the words), 'Herb! protect him!'

9. (With the words,) 'Axe! do no harm to him!' he presses a copper razor (on the Kusa blades),

10. And cuts (the hair) with (the verse), 'The razor with which in the beginning Savitri the knowing one has shaved (the beard) of king Soma and of Varuṇa, with that, ye Brâhmaṇas, shave now his (hair), that he may be blessed with long life, with old age.'

11. Each time that he has cut, he gives (the hairs) with their points to the east, together with Samī leaves, to the mother. She puts them down on the bull-dung.

12. 'With what Dhâtṛi has shaven (the head) of Brîhaspati, Agni and Indra, for the sake of long life, with that I shave thy (head) for the sake of long life, of glory, and of welfare'—thus a second time.

13. 'By what he may at night further see the sun, and see it long, with that I shave thy (head) for the sake of long life, of glory, and of welfare'—thus a third time.

14. With all (the indicated) Mantras a fourth time.

15. Thus three times on the left side (of the head).

16. Let him wipe off the edge of the razor with (the words), 'If thou shavest, as a shaver, his hair with the razor, the wounding, the well-shaped, purify his head, but do not take away his life.'

13. Instead of yena bhûyas ka râtryâm, Pâraskara (II, 1, 16) has, yena bhûris karâ divam.

16. Comp. Pâraskara II, 1, 19; Atharva-veda VIII, 2, 17.

17. Let him give orders to the barber, 'With lukewarm water doing what has to be done with water, without doing harm to him, arrange (his hair) well.'

18. Let him have the arrangement of the hair made according to the custom of his family.

19. The rite only (without the Mantras) for a girl.

KANDIKÂ 18.

1. Thereby the Godânakarman (i.e. the ceremony of shaving the beard, is declared).

2. In the sixteenth year.

3. Instead of the word 'hair' he should (each time that it occurs in the Mantras) put the word 'beard.'

4. Here they moisten the beard.

5. (The Mantra is), 'Purify his head and his face, but do not take away his life.'

6. He gives orders (to the barber with the words), 'Arrange his hair, his beard, the hair of his body, and his nails, ending in the north.'

7. Having bathed and silently stood during the rest of the day, let him break his silence in the presence of his teacher, (saying to him,) 'I give an optional gift (to thee).'

8. An ox and a cow is the sacrificial fee.

18. On these family customs, see Grîhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa II, 40; Roth, Zur Literatur und Geschichte des Weda, p. 120; Max Müller, History of A. S. L., p. 54 seq.; Weber, Indische Studien, X, 95.

18, 4. See above, chap. 17, 7.

5. See chap. 17, 16.

6. According to Nârâyana, he says to the barber (chap. 17, 17), 'With lukewarm water doing what has to be done with water, without doing harm to him, arrange his hair, his beard, the hair of his body, and his nails, ending in the north.'

7, 8. On restrictions like that contained in the eighth Sûtra as to the object in which the vara (optional gift) had to consist, see Weber, Indische Studien, V, 343.

9. Let (the teacher) impose (on the youth the observances declared below) for one year.

KANDIKĀ 19.

1. In the eighth year let him initiate a Brāhmaṇa,
2. Or in the eighth year after the conception ;
3. In the eleventh a Kshatriya ;
4. In the twelfth a Vaisya.
5. Until the sixteenth (year) the time has not passed for a Brāhmaṇa ;
6. Until the twenty-second for a Kshatriya ;
7. Until the twenty-fourth for a Vaisya.
8. After that (time has passed), they become patitasāvitṛka (i.e. they have lost their right of learning the Sāvitrī).
9. No one should initiate such men, nor teach them, nor perform sacrifices for them, nor have intercourse with them.
10. (Let him initiate) the youth who is adorned and whose (hair on the) head is arranged, who wears a (new) garment that has not yet been washed, or an antelope-skin, if he is a Brāhmaṇa, the skin of a spotted deer, if a Kshatriya, a goat's skin, if a Vaisya.
11. If they put on garments, they should put on dyed (garments) : the Brāhmaṇa a reddish yellow one, the Kshatriya a light red one, the Vaisya a yellow one.
12. Their girdles are : that of a Brāhmaṇa made of Muñga grass, that of a Kshatriya a bow-string, that of a Vaisya woollen.

9. See below, chap. 22, 22.

19, 10. By the 'arranging of the hair' the cutting of the hair is implied, as is seen from chap. 22, 22.

13. Their staffs are : that of a Brāhmaṇa of Palāsa wood, that of a Kshatriya of Udumbara wood, that of a Vaisya of Bilva wood.

KANDIKĀ 20.

1. Or all (sorts of staffs are to be used) by (men of) all (castes).

2. While (the student) takes hold of him, the teacher sacrifices and then stations himself to the north of the fire, with his face turned to the east.

3. To the east (of the fire) with his face to the west the other one.

4. (The teacher then) fills the two hollows of (his own and the student's) joined hands with water, and with the verse, 'That we choose of Savitri' (Rig-veda V, 82, 1) he makes with the full (hollow of his own hands the water) flow down on the full (hollow of) his, (i.e. the student's hands.) Having (thus) poured (the water over his hands) he should with his (own) hand seize his (i.e. the student's) hand together with the thumb, with (the formula), 'By the impulse of the god Savitri, with the arms of the two Asvins, with Pūshan's hands I seize thy hand, N.N.!''

5. With (the words), 'Savitri has seized thy hand, N.N.!' a second time.

6. With (the words), 'Agni is thy teacher, N.N.!' a third time.

7. He should cause him to look at the sun while the teacher says, 'God Savitri, this is thy Brahma-kārin; protect him; may he not die.'

20, 2. He offers the oblations prescribed above, chap. 1, 4, 3 seq.

8. (And further the teacher says), 'Whose Brahma^harin art thou? The breath's Brahma^harin art thou. Who does initiate thee, and whom (does he initiate)? To whom shall I give thee in charge?'

9. With the half verse, 'A youth, well attired, dressed came hither' (Rig-veda III, 8, 4) he should cause him to turn round from the left to the right.

10. Reaching with his two hands over his (i.e. the student's) shoulders (the teacher) should touch the place of his heart with the following (half verse).

11. Having wiped the ground round the fire, the student should put on a piece of wood silently. 'Silence indeed is what belongs to Pragâpati. The student becomes belonging to Pragâpati'—this is understood (in the Śruti).

KANDIKĀ 21.

1. Some (do this) with a Mantra: 'To Agni I have brought a piece of wood, to the great Gâta-vedas. Through that piece of wood increase thou, O Agni; through the Brahman (may) we (increase). Svâhâ!'

2. Having put the fuel (on the fire) and having

11. On the wiping of the ground round the fire, comp. above, chap. 3, 1; Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gṛhya I, 7, 11. Nârâyana here has the following remarks, which I can scarcely believe to express the real meaning of this Sûtra: 'Here the wiping of the ground round the fire is out of place, because the Samskâras for the fire have already been performed. As to that, it should be observed that the wiping is mentioned here in order that, when fuel is put on the fire in the evening and in the morning, the sprinkling of water and the wiping may be performed. But on this occasion (at the Upanayana) the student does not perform the wiping, &c., and silently puts a piece of wood on that fire.'

touched the fire, he three times wipes off his face with (the words), 'With splendour I anoint myself.'

3. 'For with splendour does he anoint himself'—this is understood (in the Sruti).

4. 'On me may Agni bestow insight, on me offspring, on me splendour.

'On me may Indra bestow insight, on me offspring, on me strength (indriya).

'On me may Sûrya bestow insight, on me offspring, on me radiance.

'What thy splendour is, Agni, may I thereby become resplendent.

'What thy vigour is, Agni, may I thereby become vigorous.

'What thy consuming power is, Agni, may I thereby obtain consuming power'—with (these formulas) he should approach the fire, bend his knee, embrace (the teacher's feet), and say to him, 'Recite, sir! The Sâvitri, sir, recite!'

5. Seizing with his (i.e. the student's) garment and with (his own) hands (the student's) hands (the teacher) recites the Sâvitri, (firstly) Pâda by Pâda, (then) hemistich by hemistich, (and finally) the whole (verse).

6. He should make him recite (the Sâvitri) as far as he is able.

7. On the place of his (i.e. the student's) heart (the teacher) lays his hand with the fingers upwards, with (the formula), 'Into my will I take thy heart; after my mind shall thy mind follow; in my word thou shalt rejoice with all thy will; may Brîhaspati join thee to me.'

KANDIKÂ 22.

1. Having tied the girdle round him and given him the staff, he should impose the (observances of the) Brahmaçarya on him—

2. (With the words), ‘A Brahmaçarin thou art. Eat water. Do the service. Do not sleep in the day-time. Devoted to the teacher study the Veda.’

3. Twelve years lasts the Brahmaçarya for (each) Veda, or until he has learnt it.

4. Let him beg (food) in the evening and in the morning.

5. Let him put fuel on (the fire) in the evening and in the morning.

6. Let him beg first of a man who will not refuse,

7. Or of a woman who will not refuse.

8. (In begging he should use the words), ‘Sir, give food!’

9. Or, ‘(Sir, give) Anupravaçantiya (food).’

10. That (which he has received) he should announce to his teacher.

11. He should stand the rest of the day.

12. After sunset (the student) should cook the Brâhmaudana (or boiled rice with which the Brâhmanas are to be fed) for the Anupravaçantiya sacrifice (the sacrifice to be performed after a part of the Veda has been studied), and should announce to the teacher (that it is ready).

22, 9. Food for the Anupravaçantiya offering; see Sûtra 12.

10. Sâṅkhâya-Gr̥hya II, 6, 7; Pâraskara II, 5, 8.

12. ‘The student should, according to the rules for the Pâkayagñas, cook the Anupravaçantiya food and announce it to the teacher in the words, “The food is cooked.”’ Nârâyana.

13. The teacher should sacrifice, while the student takes hold of him, with the verse, 'The wonderful lord of the abode' (Rig-veda I, 18, 6).

14. A second time with the Sâvitri—

15. And whatever else has been studied afterwards.

16. A third time to the Rishis.

17. A fourth time (the oblation) to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit.

18. Having given food to the Brâhmanas he should cause them to pronounce the end of the Veda (study).

19. From that time (the student) should eat no saline food; he should observe chastity, and should sleep on the ground through three nights, or twelve nights, or one year.

20. When he has fulfilled those observances, (the teacher) performs (for him) the 'production of intelligence,' (in the following way):

21. While (the student) towards an unobjectionable direction (of the horizon) sprinkles thrice (water) from the left to the right with a water-pot round a

15. Nârâyana mentions as such texts especially those belonging to the Âranyaka, viz. the Mahânâmnyas, the Mahâvrata, and the Upanishad. But there is no reason why we should not think quite as well of the Rig-veda Samhitâ itself.

18. 'He should say, "Sirs! Pronounce the end of the Veda (study)." And they should reply, "May an end of the Veda (study) be made."' Nârâyana.

20. Comp. above, chap. 15, 2.

21. 'The objectionable directions are three, the south, the south-east, the south-west.' Nârâyana.

Susravas, which I have translated by 'glorious,' at the same time means, 'endowed with good hearing,' i.e. successful in study. The student therefore by the same word prays for glory and for success in Vedic learning.

Palâsa (tree) with one root, or round a Kusa bunch, if there is no Palâsa, (the teacher) causes him to say, 'O glorious one, thou art glorious. As thou, O glorious one, art glorious, thus, O glorious one, lead me to glory. As thou art the preserver of the treasure of sacrifice for the gods, thus may I become the preserver of the treasure of the Veda for men.'

22. Thereby, beginning with his having the hair cut, and ending with the giving in charge, the imposing of observances has been declared.

23. Thus for one who has not been initiated before.

24. Now as regards one who has been initiated before :

25. The cutting of the hair is optional,

26. And the 'production of intelligence.'

27. On the giving in charge there are no express rules (in this case);

28. And on the time.

29. (He should recite to him) as the Sâvitṛī (the Rik), 'That we choose of god Savitṛī' (Rig-veda V, 82, 1).

KANDIKÂ 23.

1. He chooses priests (for officiating at a sacrifice) with neither deficient nor superfluous limbs, 'who on

22. The rules stated above for the Upanayana, beginning with the prescription regarding the cutting of the hair (given chap. 19, 10 in the words, 'whose [hair on the] head is arranged; ' see the note there), and ending with the ceremony prescribed chap. 20, 8, are to be extended also to other cases of the imposing of a vow, such, for instance, as that mentioned chap. 18, 9.

25. See chap. 19, 10.

26. See above, Sûtra 20.

27. See chap. 20, 8.

28. See chap. 4, 1.

29. Instead of the ordinary Sâvitṛī, Rig-veda III, 62, 10.

23, 1. Comp. Srauta-sûtra IX, 3, 20; Grîhya-sûtra I, 5, 1.

the mother's and on the father's side (&c.),' as it has been said above.

2. Let him choose young men as officiating priests : thus (declare) some (teachers).

3. He chooses first the Brahman, then the Hotri, then the Adhvaryu, then the Udgâtri.

4. Or all who officiate at the Ahîna sacrifices and at those lasting one day.

5. The Kaushtakinas prescribe the Sadasya as the seventeenth, saying, 'He is the looker-on at the performances.'

6. This has been said in the two Rikas, 'He whom the officiating priests, performing (the sacrifice) in many ways' (Rig-veda VIII, 58, 1. 2).

7. He chooses the Hotri first.

8. With (the formula), 'Agni is my Hotri; he is my Hotri; I choose thee N.N. as my Hotri' (he chooses) the Hotri.

4. The Ahîna sacrifices are those which last more than one day, but not more than twelve days. (Indische Studien, IX, 373; X, 355.) The priests officiating at such sacrifices are the sixteen stated in the Srauta-sûtra IV, 1, 6. 7. Those besides the sixteen, though they are chosen (saty api varane) for taking part in the sacred performances, have not the rank of ritvijas (officiating priests); such are the Sadasya, the Samitri, and the Kamasâdhvaryavaḥ (schol. Srautas. loc. cit.). See Max Müller's History of A. S. L., pp. 450, 469 seq. As to the Sadasya, however, there was some difference of opinion (see the next Sûtra).

5. On the office of the Sadasya, see Indische Studien, X, 136, 144.

6. The two Rikas quoted here belong to the tenth among the Vâlakhilya hymns, a hymn omitted in many of the Rig-veda MSS. They give no special confirmation to the rules stated in our text, but contain only a general allusion to the unity of the sacrifice, which the various priests perform in many various ways.

7. 'If the four (chief) priests have to be chosen, the choosing of the Brâhmana stands first in order (see above, Sûtra 3); if all (the sixteen), then the choosing of the Hotri stands first in order.' Nârâyana.

9. With (the formula), 'Kandramas (the moon) is my Brahman; he is my Brahman; I choose thee N. N. as my Brahman' (he chooses) the Brahman,

10. With (the formula), 'Âditya (the sun) is my Adhvaryu; (he is my Adhvaryu, &c.)'—the Adhvaryu.

11. With (the formula), 'Parganya is my Udgâtri; (he is my Udgâtri, &c.)'—the Udgâtri.

12. With (the formula), 'The waters are my reciters of what belongs to the Hotrakas'—the Hotrakas.

13. With (the formula), 'The rays are my Kamasâdhvaryus'—the Kamasâdhvaryus.

14. With (the formula), 'The ether is my Sadasya'—the Sadasya.

15. He whom he has chosen should murmur, 'A great thing thou hast told me; splendour thou hast told me; fortune thou hast told me; glory thou hast told me; praise thou hast told me; success thou hast told me; enjoyment thou hast told me; satiating thou hast told me; everything thou hast told me.'

16. Having murmured (this formula), the Hotri declares his assent (in the words), 'Agni is thy Hotri; he is thy Hotri; thy human Hotri am I.'

17. 'Kandramas (the moon) is thy Brahman; he is thy Brahman (&c.)'—thus the Brahman.

18. In the same way the others according to the prescriptions (given above).

19. And if (the priest who accepts the invitation)

12. The twelve priests of the sixteen (see § 4 note) who do not stand at the head of one of the four categories. Those at the head are enumerated in the Sûtras 8-11.

13, 14. See above, § 4 note.

19. Priests who only perform the Agnâyadheya for a person, are, according to Nârâyana's note on this Sûtra, not considered as is going to perform the sacrifice (for the inviting person, he should add), 'May that bless me; may that enter upon me; may I thereby enjoy (bliss).'

20. The functions of an officiating priest are not to be exercised, if abandoned (by another priest), or at an Ahîna sacrifice with small sacrificial fee, or for a person that is sick, or suffering, or affected with consumption, or decried among the people in his village, or of despised extraction: for such persons (the functions of a Ritvig should not be exercised).

21. He (who is chosen as a Ritvig) should ask the Somapravâka, 'What sacrifice is it? Who are performing a sacrifice for him; consequently the formula given here is only to be used by priests who are elected for a Soma sacrifice. Stenzler translates, 'So spricht er, wenn er das Opfer durch sie vollziehen lassen will.' But this would be yakshya-mânah, not yâgayishyan.

20. The tradition takes nîkadakshinasya as in apposition to ahînasya, and I have translated accordingly. But I cannot help thinking that the two words should be separated, so that we should have to translate, 'or at an Ahîna, or for a person that gives small sacrificial fee.' Thus the Brâhmaṇa quoted by Âpastamba (see the commentary on the Pañikavimsa Brâhmaṇa, vol. i, p. 6, ed. Bibl. Indica) gives the following questions which the Ritvig to be chosen should ask, 'Is it no Ahîna sacrifice? Is the Ritvig office not abandoned by others? Is the sacrificial fee plentiful?' It is a very singular fact, that on the one hand the assistance of a number of Ritvigs was unanimously declared necessary for the performance of an Ahîna sacrifice, while on the other hand it was considered objectionable, at least among some of the Vedic schools, to officiate at such a sacrifice. See Weber's Indische Studien, X, 150, 151.

On a nudesyabhisasta Nârâyana says, sadesinâbhisastasyaivam eke. anye tu srâddhe pratishiddhasyety âhuḥ. It seems to me that anudesya (or rather ânudesya?) in Sânkhâyana-Sraut. V, 1, 10 (Indische Studien, X, 147) means the same, though the commentary on that Sûtra ascribes a different meaning to that word.

21. The Somapravâka is the messenger who invites the priests on behalf of the sacrificer to officiate at his intended Soma sacrifice. Comp. Indische Studien, IX, 308.

the priests officiating? What is the fee for the sacrifice?’

22. If (all the conditions) are favourable, he should accept.

23. Let (the officiating priests) eat no flesh nor have intercourse with a wife until the completion of the sacrifice.

24. ‘By this prayer, O Agni, increase’ (Rig-veda I, 31, 18)—with (this verse) let him offer (at the end of the sacrifice) an oblation of Âgya in (his own) Dakshinâgni, and go away where he likes;

25. In the same way one who has not set up the (Srauta) fires, in his (sacred) domestic fire with this Rik, ‘Forgive us, O Agni, this sin’ (Rig-veda I, 31, 16).

KANDIKÂ 24.

1. When he has chosen the Ritvijas, he should offer the Madhuparka (i. e. honey-mixture) to them (in the way described in Sûtras 5 and following);

2. To a Snâtaka, when he comes to his house;

3. And to a king;

4. And for a teacher, the father-in-law, a paternal uncle, and a maternal uncle.

5. He pours honey into curds,

6. Or butter, if he can get no honey.

7. A seat, the water for washing the feet, the Arghya water (i. e. perfumed water into which flowers have been thrown), the water for sipping, the honey-

24, 1 seqq. Comp. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya II, 15. The second Sûtra is paraphrased by Nârâyana thus, ‘To a person that has performed the Samâvartana (see below, III, 8), when he comes on that day to his house with the intention of forming a matrimonial alliance.’

mixture, a cow : every one of these things they announce three times (to the guest).

8. With (the verse), 'I am the highest one among my people, as the sun among the thunderbolts. Here I tread on him whosoever infests me'—he should sit down on the seat (made of) northward-pointed (grass).

9. Or (he should do so) after he has trodden on it.

10. He should make (his host) wash his feet.

11. The right foot he should stretch out first to a Brâhmaṇa,

12. The left to a Sûdra.

13. When his feet have been washed, he receives the Arghya water in the hollow of his joined hands and then sips the water destined thereto, with (the formula), 'Thou art the first layer for Ambrosia.'

14. He looks at the Madhuparka when it is brought to him, with (the formula), 'I look at thee with Mitra's eye.'

15. He accepts it with his joined hands with (the formula), 'By the impulse of the god Savitrî, with the arms of the two Asvins, with the hands of Pûshan I accept thee.' He then takes it into his left hand, looks at it with the three verses, 'Honey the winds to the righteous one' (Rig-veda I, 90, 6 seqq.), stirs it about three times from left to right with the fourth finger and the thumb, and wipes (his fingers) with (the formula), 'May the Vasus eat thee with the Gâyatrî metre'—to the east ;

16. With (the formula), 'May the Rudras eat thee with the Trishubh metre'—to the south ;

17. With (the formula), 'May the Âdityas eat thee with the Gâgatî metre'—to the west ;

18. With (the formula), 'May the Visve devâs eat thee with the Anushṭubh metre'—to the north.

19. With (the formula), 'To the beings thee'—he three times takes (some of the Madhuparka substance) out of the middle of it.

20. With (the formula), 'The milk of Virâḡ art thou'—he should partake thereof the first time,

21. With, 'The milk of Virâḡ may I obtain'—the second time,

22. With, 'In me (may) the milk of Padyâ Virâḡ (dwell)'—the third time.

23. (He should) not (eat) the whole (Madhuparka).

24. He should not satiate himself.

25. To a Brâhmana, to the north, he should give the remainder.

26. If that cannot be done, (he should throw it) into water.

27. Or (he may eat) the whole (Madhuparka).

28. He then makes a rinsing of his mouth follow (on the eating of the Madhuparka) with the water destined thereto, with (the formula), 'Thou art the covering of Ambrosia.'

29. With (the formula), 'Truth! Glory! Fortune! May fortune rest on me!'—a second time.

30. When he has sipped water, they announce to him the cow.

31. Having murmured, 'Destroyed is my sin; my sin is destroyed,' (he says,) 'Om, do it,' if he chooses to have her killed.

32. Having murmured, 'The mother of the Rudras, the daughter of the Vasus' (Rig-veda VIII, 22. On Padyâ Virâḡ, see the note on Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya III, 7, 5.

28. Comp. above, Sûtra 13.

101, 15), (he says,) 'Om, let her loose,' if he chooses to let her loose.

33. Let the Madhuparka not be without flesh, without flesh.

End of the First Adhyâya.

33. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya II, 15, 2.

ADHYÂYA II, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. On the full moon day of the Srâvana month the Srâvana ceremony (is performed).

2. Having filled a new jug with flour of fried barley, he lays (this jug) and a spoon for offering the Balis on new strings of a carrying pole (and thus suspends them).

3. Having prepared fried barley grains, he smears half of them with butter.

4. After sunset he prepares a mess of cooked food and a cake in one dish and sacrifices (the cooked food) with the four verses, 'Agni, lead us on a good path to wealth' (Rig-veda I, 189, 1 seqq.), verse by verse, and with his hand the (cake) in one dish with (the formula), 'To the steady One, the earth-demon, svâhâ!'

5. (The cake) should be (entirely) immersed (into the butter), or its back should be visible.

6. With (the verse), 'Agni, do not deliver us to evil' (Rig-veda I, 189, 5) he sacrifices over it (the butter) in which it had lain.

7. With (the verse), 'May the steeds at our invocation be for a blessing to us' (Rig-veda VII, 38, 7) (he sacrifices) the besmeared grains with his joined hands.

8. The other (grains) he should give to his people.

9. Out of the jug he fills the spoon with flour,

1, 1. Nârâyana's observation that the Srâvana full moon can fall also under certain other Nakshatras than Sravana itself, furnishes no reason why we should think here of solar months, as Prof. Stenzler proposes.

7, 8. See above, Sûtra 3.

9. See above, Sûtra 1.

goes out (of the house) to the east, pours water on the ground on a clean spot, sacrifices with (the formula), 'To the divine hosts of the serpents svâhâ!' and does reverence to them with (the formula), 'The serpents which are terrestrial, which are aerial, which are celestial, which dwell in the directions (of the horizon)—to them I have brought this Bali; to them I give over this Bali.'

10. Having gone round (the Bali) from left to right, he sits down to the west of the Bali with (the words), 'The serpent art thou; the lord of the creeping serpents art thou; by food thou protectest men, by cake the serpents, by sacrifice the gods. To me, being in thee, the serpents being in thee should do no harm. I give over the firm one (i.e. the spoon) to thee.'

11. 'Firm one, (I give) N. N. (in charge) to thee! Firm one, (I give) N. N. (in charge) to thee!'—with (these words he gives) his people, man by man, (in charge to the serpent god);

12. 'Firm one, I give myself in charge to thee!'—with these words himself at the end.

13. Let no one step between it (i.e. the Bali, and the sacrificer), until the giving in charge has been performed.

14. With (the formula), 'To the divine hosts of the serpents svâhâ!'—let him offer the Bali in the evening and in the morning, till the Pratyavarohana (i.e. the ceremony of the 'redescent').

15. Some count (the days till the Pratyavarohana)

14. On the Pratyavarohana, see the third chapter of this Adhyâya.

15. I.e. two Bali offerings for each day, one for the morning and one for the evening.

and offer the corresponding number of Balis already on that day (on which the Sravanâ ceremony is performed).

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. On the full moon day of Âsvayuga the Âsvayugi ceremony (is performed).

2. Having adorned the house, having bathed and put on clean garments, they should pour out a mess of cooked food for Pasupati, and should sacrifice it with (the formula), 'To Pasupati, to Siva, to Samkara, to Prishâtaka svâhâ!'

3. He should sacrifice with his joined hands a mixture of curds and butter (prishâtaka) with (the formula), 'May what is deficient be made full to me; may what is full not decay to me. To Prishâtaka svâhâ!'

4. 'United with the seasons, united with the manners, united with Indra and Agni, svâhâ!

'United with the seasons, united with the manners, united with the Visve devâs, svâhâ!

'United with the seasons, united with the manners, united with Heaven and Earth, svâhâ!'—with (these formulas) a mess of cooked food is offered at the 2, 2. 'The plural "They should sacrifice it" means, that while the sacrifice is performed by the householder, his sons and the other persons belonging to the house should touch him.' Nârâyana.

4. The Âgrayana sacrifice, which is offered when the sacrificer is going to partake of the first-fruits of the harvest, is treated of, with relation to a sacrificer who keeps the Srauta fires, in the Srauta-sûtra II, 9. This Sûtra in my opinion should be understood as a supplementary addition to that chapter. Nârâyana refers the rule here given to the case of any incident or danger (âpad) which prevents the sacrificer from performing the ceremony in its fuller form, as prescribed in the Srauta-sûtra.

Âgrayana sacrifice by one who has set up the (sacred Srauta) fires.

5. Also by one who has not set up the (Srauta) fires (the same offering is performed) in the (sacred) domestic fire.

KANDIKÂ 3.

1. On the full moon of Mârgaśr̥sha the 'redescent' (is performed)—on the fourteenth (Tithi),

2. Or on (the Tithi of) the full moon (itself).

3. Having again renovated the house by (giving a new) coating (to the walls), by spreading out (a new roof), and by levelling (the floor), they should sacrifice after sunset (oblations) of milk-rice with (the texts), 'Beat away, O white one, with thy foot, with the fore-foot and with the hind-foot, these seven daughters of Varuṇa and all that belong to the king's tribe. Svâhâ!

'Within the dominion of the white one no serpent has killed anything. To the white one, the son of Vidârva, adoration! Svâhâ!'

4. Here no oblation to (Agni) Svishtakṛit (is made).

5. 'May we be secure from Pragâpati's sons'—thus he murmurs while looking at the fire.

3, 1. On the ceremony of 'redescent,' comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya IV, 17; Pâraskara III, 2. The fourteenth Tithi of the bright fortnight, preceding the full moon, is referred to.

3. 'Again' refers to chap. 2, 2. As to the words 'they should sacrifice,' comp. the note on the same Sûtra. The first Mantra reoccurs in Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya IV, 18, 1. The text of the second should be, na vai svetasyâdhyâkâre, &c.; comp. Pâraskara II, 14, 5.

5. The serpents are the children of Kasyapa (i.e. Pragâpati) and Kadrû; see Mahâbhârata I, 1074 seqq.

6. (Saying), 'Be happy and friendly to us'—he should think in his mind of the winter.

7. To the west of the fire is a well-spread layer (of straw); on that he should sit down, murmur (the verse), 'Be soft, O earth' (Rig-veda I, 22, 15), and lie down (on that layer) with his people, with the head to the east and the face to the north.

8. The others, as there is room.

9. Or following on each other from the eldest to the youngest.

10. Those who know the Mantras, should murmur the Mantras.

11. Arising (they should) three times (murmur the verse), 'From that place may the gods bless us' (Rig-veda I, 22, 16).

12. The same (verse) a fourth time with their faces to the south, to the west, and to the north.

13. Having arisen, having murmured the hymns sacred to the Sun and the auspicious hymns, having prepared food and given to the Brâhmanas to eat, he should cause (them) to pronounce auspicious words.

KANDIKÂ 4.

1. On the eighth days of the four dark fortnights of (the two seasons of) winter and Śisira the Aṣṭakâs (are celebrated).

10. 'The Mantras beginning from "Be soft, O earth" (Sûtra 7) down to the auspicious hymns (Sûtra 13).' Nârâyana.

11. It follows from Sûtra 12 that they are to turn here their faces to the east.

12. They mutter one Pâda of that verse, which is in the Gâyatri metre, turned towards each of the three directions.

4, 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya III, 12 seqq. The four

2. Or on one (of these days).
3. The day before, he should offer to the Fathers (i. e. Manes)—
4. Boiled rice, boiled rice with sesamum seeds, rice-milk—
5. Or cakes made of four Sarâvas (of ground grain)—
6. Sacrificing with the eight (verses), 'May the lower (Fathers) and the higher arise' (Rig-veda X, 15, 1 seqq.), or with as many (verses) as he likes.
7. Then on the next day the Ash/takâs (are celebrated) with an animal (sacrifice) and with a mess of cooked food.
8. He may also give grass to an ox,
9. Or he may burn down brushwood with fire—
10. With (the words), 'This is my Ash/takâ.'
11. But he should not omit celebrating the Ash-takâ.
12. This (Ash/takâ) some state to be sacred to the Visve devâs, some to Agni, some to the Sun, some to Pragâpati, some state that the Night is its deity, some that the Nakshatras are, some that the Seasons are, some that the Fathers are, some that cattle is.
13. Having killed the animal according to the months of Hemanta and Sisira are Mârgasirsha, Pausha, Mâgha, and Phâlguna.

2. The statement of the Prayogaratna that in case the sacrificer should celebrate only one Ash/takâ festival, the Ash/takâ of the Mâgha month is to be selected, well agrees with the designation of this Ash/takâ as 'the one Ash/takâ' (ekâsh/takâ); see Weber, Naxatra II, 341 seq.; Indische Studien, XV, 145.

7 seqq. Comp. the nearly identical passage in Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya III, 14, 3 seqq. and the note there. Âsvalâyana evidently gives these rules not as regarding one special Ash/takâ but all of them.

13. Comp. above, I, 11, 1. 2. 10. As to the Mantra, comp. Sâṅkhâyana III, 13, 3.

ritual of the animal sacrifice, omitting the sprinkling (with water) and the touching of the animal with a fresh branch, he should draw out the omentum and sacrifice it with (the verse), 'Carry the omentum, Gâtavedas, to the Fathers, where thou knowest them resting afar. May streams of fat flow to them ; may all these wishes be fulfilled. Svâhâ !'

14. Then (follow oblations) of the Avadâna portions and the cooked food, two with (the two verses), 'Agni, lead us on a good path to wealth' (Rig-veda I, 189, 1 seq.), (and other oblations with the texts), 'May summer, winter, the seasons be happy to us, happy the rainy season, safe to us the autumn. The year be our lord who gives breath to us ; may days and nights produce long life. Svâhâ !

'Peaceful be the earth, happy the air, may the goddess Heaven give us safety. Happy be the quarters (of the horizon), the intermediate quarters, the upper quarters ; may the waters, the lightnings protect us from all sides. Svâhâ !

'May the waters, the rays carry our prayers (to the gods) ; may the creator, may the ocean turn away evil ; may the past and the future, (may) all be safe to me. Protected by Brahman may I pour forth songs. Svâhâ !

'May all the Âdityas and the divine Vasus, the Rudras, the protectors, the Maruts sit down (here). May Pragâpati, the abounding one, the highest ruler, bestow vigour, offspring, immortality on me. Svâhâ !

'Pragâpati, no other one than Thou (Rig-veda X, 121, 10).'

14. I read, as Prof. Stenzler and the Petersburg Dictionary do, svârâ ksharâni. Comp. Pâraskara III, 3, 6.

15. The eighth (oblation) is that to (Agni) Svi-shṭakṛit.

16. He should give to the Brâhmanas to eat : this has been said.

KANDIKÂ 5.

1. On the following day the Anvashṭakya (i. e. the ceremony following the Ashṭakâ, is performed).

2. Having prepared (a portion) of that same meat, having established the fire on a surface inclined towards the south, having fenced it in, and made a door on the north side of the enclosure, having strewn round (the fire) three times sacrificial grass with its roots, without tossing it, turning the left side towards the fire, he should put down the things to be offered, boiled rice, boiled rice with sesamum seeds, rice-milk, meal-pap with curds, and meal-pap with honey.

3. (The ceremony should be performed) according to the ritual of the Pindapitṛiyagña.

4. Having sacrificed (of those sorts of food) with the exception of the meal-pap with honey, let him give (lumps of those substances) to the Fathers.

5. And to (their) wives, with the addition of rum and the scum of boiled rice.

6. Some (place the lumps to be offered) into pits, into two or into six.

16. See above, chap. 3, 13.

5, 2. The meat is that of the animal killed on the Ashṭakâ day ; see chap. 4, 13.

3. This ritual is given in the Srauta-sûtra II, 6 seq.

4. He sacrifices the two oblations prescribed in the Srauta-sûtra II, 6, 12, to Soma pitṛimat and to Agni kavyavâhana.

7. In those situated to the east he should give (the offerings) to the Fathers.

8. In those to the west, to the wives.

9. Thereby the ceremony celebrated in the rainy season on the Mâgha day, in the dark fortnight after the full moon of Praushṭāpada (has been declared).

10. And thus he should offer (a celebration like the Anvashtakya) to the Fathers every month, observing uneven numbers (i. e. selecting a day with an uneven number, inviting an uneven number of Brâhmanas, &c.).

11. He should give food at least to nine (Brâhmanas),

12. Or to an uneven number ;

13. To an even number on auspicious occasions or on the performance of meritorious deeds (such as the consecration of ponds, &c.);

14. To an uneven number on other (occasions).

15. The rite is performed from left to right. Barley is to be used instead of sesamum.

KANDIKÂ 6.

1. When going to mount a chariot he should touch the wheels with his two hands separately with (the words), 'I touch thy two fore-feet. Thy two wheels are the Brîhat and the Rathantara (Sâmans).'

9. Comp. the note on Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya III, 13, 1.

10. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya IV, 1, 1.

13. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya IV, 4, 4.

15. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya IV, 4, 6. 9.

6, 1. 'He should touch at the same time the right wheel with his right hand, the left wheel with his left hand.' Nârâyana.

2. 'Thy axle is the Vâmadevya'—with (these words he touches) the two (naves) in which the axle rests.

3. He should mount (the chariot) with the right foot first, with (the words), 'With Vâyu's strength I mount thee, with Indra's power and sovereignty.'

4. He should touch the reins, or if the horses have no reins, (he should touch) the horses with a staff, with (the words), 'With Brahman's splendour I seize you. With truth I seize you.'

5. When (the horses) put themselves in motion, he should murmur, 'Go forward to thousandfold successful vigour, divine chariot, carry us forward!'—(and the verse), 'Free, strong be thy limbs!' (Rig-veda VI, 47, 26.)

6. With this (verse he should touch also) other articles of wood.

7. 'May the two oxen be strong, the axle firm' (Rig-veda III, 53, 17)—with (this verse) he should touch (each) part of the chariot (alluded to in that verse).

8. With (the verse), 'The earth, the good protectress, the unattained heaven' (Rig-veda X, 63, 10) (he should ascend) a ship.

9. With a new chariot he should drive round a widely known tree or round a pool that does not dry up, with his right side turned towards it, and then should fetch branches which bear fruits,

2. On the Vedic form of the chariot and of the wheels, comp. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, p. 247.

6. According to Nârâyana this Sûtra would refer only to other vehicles of wood, which he is directed to touch with that Rik when going to mount them. Perhaps the commentator is right; the wording of the Rik is well in keeping with his explanation.

10. Or something else that belongs to the household.

11. (He then) should drive (in that chariot) to an assembly.

12. Having murmured, while looking at the sun, (the verse), 'Make our renown highest' (Rig-veda IV, 31, 15), he should descend.

13. 'To the bull among my equals' (Rig-veda X, 166, 1)—(this verse he should murmur) while approaching (that assembly?).

14. 'May we be called to-day Indra's best friends' (Rig-veda I, 167, 10)—when the sun is setting.

15. 'Thus I address you, O daughters of heaven, while you arise' (Rig-veda IV, 51, 11)—when day appears.

KANDIKÂ 7.

1. Now the examination of the ground (where he intends to build a house).

2. (It must be) non-salinous soil of undisputed property,

3. With herbs and trees,

4. On which much Kusa and Virana grass grows.

5. Plants with thorns and with milky juice he should dig out with their roots and remove them—

6. And in the same way the following (sorts of plants), viz. Apâmârga, potherbs, Tilvaka, Parivyâdha.

7. A spot where the waters, flowing together from all sides to the centre of it, flow round the resting-place, having it on their right side, and then flow off to the east without noise—that possesses all auspicious qualities.

8. Where the waters flow off, he should have the provision-room built.

9. Thus it becomes rich in food.

10. On a spot which is inclined towards the south, he should have the assembly-room constructed ; thus there will be no gambling in it.

11. (But others say that) in such (an assembly-room) the young people become gamblers, quarrelsome, and die early.

12. Where the waters flow together from all directions, that assembly-room (situated on such a spot) brings luck and is free from gambling.

KANDIKÂ 8.

1. Now he should examine the ground in the following ways.

2. He should dig a pit knee-deep and fill it again with the same earth (which he has taken out of it).

3. If (the earth) reaches out (of the pit, the ground is) excellent ; if it is level, (it is) of middle quality ; if it does not fill (the pit, it is) to be rejected.

4. After sunset he should fill (the pit) with water and leave it so through the night.

5. If (in the morning) there is water in it, (the ground is) excellent ; if it is moist, (it is) of middle quality ; if it is dry, (it is) to be rejected.

6. White (ground), of sweet taste, with sand on the surface, (should be elected) by a Brâhmaṇa.

7. Red (ground) for a Kshatriya.

8. Yellow (ground) for a Vaisya.

9. He should draw a thousand furrows on it and should have it measured off as quadrangular, with equal sides to each (of the four) directions ;

10. Or as an oblong quadrangle.

11. With a Samī branch or an Udumbara branch he sprinkles it (with water), going thrice round it, so that his right side is turned towards it, reciting the Santātiya hymn.

12. And (so he does again three times) pouring out water without interruption, with the three verses, 'O waters, ye are wholesome' (Rig-veda X, 9, 1 seqq.).

13. In the interstices between the bamboo staffs he should have the (single) rooms constructed.

14. Into the pits in which the posts are to stand, he should have an Avakā, i. e. (the water-plant called) Sipāla put down; then fire will not befall him: thus it is understood (in the Śruti).

15. Having put (that plant) into the pit in which the middle-post is to stand, he should spread (on it) eastward-pointed and northward-pointed Kusa grass and should sprinkle (on that grass) water into which rice and barley have been thrown, with (the words), 'To the steady one, the earth-demon, svāhā!'

16. He then should, when (the middle-post) is being erected, recite over it (the two verses),

'Stand here, fixed in the ground, prosperous, long-

8, 11. The hymn of which all verses (except a few) commence with, and frequently contain, the word sam (Rig-veda VII, 35).

13. The bamboo staffs (vaṃsa) rest on the chief posts (sthûnâ); see chap. 9, 1. 2.

15. Comp. chap. 1, 4.

16. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya III, 3, 1 and the note there. How stâmirâvatîm should be corrected and translated is quite uncertain. Instead of poshasva Prof. Stenzler proposes to read poshasya, as Sâṅkhâyaṇa has; I have adopted this correction.—In the second verse gâyâtâm saha seems to be corrupt; comp. my note on Sâṅkhâyaṇa III, 2, 9. Instead of parisritah we should read, as Sâṅkhâyaṇa, Pâraskara, and the Atharva-veda (III, 12, 7) have, parisrutah.

lasting (?), standing amid prosperity. May the malevolent ones not attain thee!

‘To thee (may) the young child (come), to thee the calf. . . ; to thee (may) the cup of Parisrut (come); (to thee) may they come with pots of curds.’

KANDIKÂ 9.

1. (Over) the bamboo staff, when it is put on (the middle-post, he recites the hemistich),

2. ‘Rightly ascend the post, O staff, bestowing on us long life henceforward.’

3. On four stones, on which Dûrvâ grass has been spread, he should establish the water-barrel with (the words), ‘Arise on the earth’—

4. Or with (the verse), ‘The Araṅgara sounds, three times bound with the strap. It praises the welfare; may it drive away ill.’

5. He then should pour water into it with (the verse), ‘Hither may king Varuṇa come with the plentiful (waters); at this place may he stay contented; bringing welfare, dropping ghee may they lie down together with Mitra.’

6. He then ‘appeases’ it (in the following way).

7. He puts gold into water into which rice and barley have been thrown, and (with that water) he sprinkles it three times, going round it with his right side turned towards it, with the Santâtiya hymn.

8. And (so he does again three times) pouring out

9, 4. The meaning of Araṅgara is unknown to me; it seems to be a musical instrument. Comp. Atharva-veda XX, 135, 13.

6. The ground on which the house is to be built.

7. On the Santâtiya hymn, see above, chap. 8, 11.

8. This Sûtra is identical with chap. 8, 12.

water without interruption, with the three verses, 'O waters, ye are wholesome' (Rig-veda X, 9, 1 seqq.).

9. In the middle of the house he should cook a mess of food, sacrifice (therefrom) with the four verses, 'Vâstoshpati, accept us' (Rig-veda VII, 54, 1 seqq.), verse by verse, should prepare food, should give to the Brâhmanas to eat, and should cause them to say, 'Lucky is the ground! Lucky is the ground!'

KANDIKÂ 10.

1. It has been declared how he should enter the house (when returning from a journey).

2. The house, when he enters it, should be provided with seed-corn.

3. He should have his field ploughed under the Nakshatras Uttarâh Proshthapadâs, (Uttarâh) Phâlgunyas, or Rohinî.

4. In order that the wind may blow to him from the field, he should offer oblations with the hymn, 'Through the lord of the field' (Rig-veda IV, 57), verse by verse, or he should murmur (that hymn).

5. He should speak over the cows when they go away, the two verses, 'May refreshing wind blow over the cows' (Rig-veda X, 169, 1 seq.).

6. When they come back, (he should recite the following verses,)

'May they whose udder with its four holes is full

9. Comp. above, chap. 3, 13.

10, 1. See Srauta-sûtra II, 5, 17 seqq. It is there expressly stated that these rules refer also to an Anâhitâgni.

3. Sâṅkhâya IV, 13, 1.

5. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya III, 9.

6. Sâṅkhâya, loc. cit.—Should the reading upa maitu be corrected into upa maita?

of honey and ghee, be milk-givers to us ; (may they be) many in our stable, rich in ghee.

‘Come hither to me, giving refreshment, bringing vigour and strength. Giving inexhaustible milk, rest in my stable that I may become the highest one’—

And, ‘They who have raised their body up to the gods’—the rest of the hymn (Rig-veda X, 169, 3. 4).

7. Some recite (instead of the texts stated in Sûtra 6) the Âgâviya hymn.

8. He should approach their herds, if the cows do not belong to his Guru, with (the words), ‘Prospering are ye; excellent are ye, beautiful, dear. May I become dear to you. May you see bliss in me.’

End of the Second Adhyâya.

7. The hymn commencing â gâvo agman (hither came the cows) is Rig-veda VI, 28.

8. Perhaps the last words (which are repeated twice in order to mark the end of the Adhyâya) should be written sam mayi gâñîdhvam, ‘live with me in harmony together.’

ADHYÂYA III, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. Now (follow) the five sacrifices :
2. The sacrifice to the Gods, the sacrifice to the Beings, the sacrifice to the Fathers, the sacrifice to Brahman, the sacrifice to men.
3. Here now, if he makes oblations over the (sacred) fire, this is the sacrifice to the Gods.
If he makes Bali offerings, this is the sacrifice to the Beings.
If he gives (Pinda offerings) to the Fathers, this is the sacrifice to the Fathers.
If he studies (Vedic) texts, this is the sacrifice to Brahman.
If he gives to men, this is the sacrifice to men.
4. These (five kinds of) sacrifices he should perform every day.

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. Now the rules how one should recite (the Vedic texts) for one's self.
2. He should go out of the village to the east or to the north, bathe in water, sip water on a clean spot, clad with the sacrificial cord; he should spread out, his garment being not wet, a great quantity of Darbha grass, the tufts of which are directed towards the east, and should sit down thereon with his face turned to the east, making a lap, putting together his hands in which he holds purifiers (i. e. Kusa blades), so that the right hand lies uppermost.

3. In that he recites the Rikas, rivers of milk flow, as a funeral oblation, to his Fathers. In that (he recites) the Yagus, rivers of ghee—the Sāmans, rivers of honey—the Atharvan and Aṅgiras hymns, rivers of Soma—the Brāhmaṇas, Kalpas, Gāthās, Nârâsamsis, Itihâsas and Purâṇas, rivers of ambrosia.

4. After he has recited (those texts) as far as he thinks fit, he should finish with the following (verse), ‘Adoration to Brahman! Adoration be to Agni! Adoration to the Earth! Adoration to the Herbs! Adoration to the Voice! Adoration to the Lord of the Voice! Adoration I bring to great Vishṇu!’

KANDIKĀ 4.

1. He satiates the deities: ‘Pragâpati, Brahman, the Vedas, the gods, the Rishis, all metres, the word Om, the word Vashaṭ, the Vyâhr̥tis, the Sâvitṛt, the sacrifices, Heaven and Earth, the air, days and nights, the numbers, the Siddhas, the oceans, the rivers, the mountains, the fields, herbs, trees, Gandharvas and Apsaras, the snakes, the birds, the cows, the Sādhyas, the Vipras, the Yakshas, the Rakshas, the beings that have these (Rakshas, &c.) at their end.’

2. Then the Rishis: ‘The (Rishis) of the hundred (Rikas), the (Rishis) of the middle (Mandalas), Grit-

4, 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya IV, 9. Nârâyana: ‘Having finished (the Svādhyâya) he satiates with water oblations these deities.’

Pragâpati and the following words stand in the nominative; the verb to be supplied is tripyatu (tripyantu), ‘may he (they) satiate himself (themselves).’

2. Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya IV, 10. Sâṅkhâyana has pâvamânâḥ, ‘the (Rishis) of the Pavamâna hymns,’ but pragâthâḥ as Āsvalâyana has, and not as we should expect, prâgâthâḥ.

samada, Visvâmitra, Vâmadeva, Atri, Bharadvâga, Vasishtha, the Pragâthas, the Pavamâna hymns, the (Rishis) of the short hymns, and of the long hymns.'

3. (Then) with the sacrificial cord suspended over the right shoulder :

4. 'Sumantu, Gaimini, Vaisampâyana, Paila, the Sûtras, the Bhâshyas, the Bhârata, the Mahâbhârata, the teachers of law, Gânanti, Bâhavi, Gârgya, Gautama, Sâkalya, Bâbhravya, Mândavya, Mândûkeya, Gârgi Vâtaknavi, Vadavâ Prâtithyî, Sulabhâ Maitreyî, Kahola Kaushitaka, Mahâkaushitaka, Paingya, Mahâpaingya, Suyagña Sâṅkhâyana, Aitareya, Mahaitareya, the Sâkala (text), the Bâshkala (text), Sugâtavakra, Audavâhi, Mahaudavâhi, Saugâmi, Saunaka, Âsvalâyana—and whatsoever other teachers there are, may they all satiate themselves.'

5. After he has satiated the Fathers man by man, and has returned to his house, what he gives (then), that is the sacrificial fee.

6. And it is also understood (in the Sruti), 'May he be standing, walking, sitting, or lying, (the texts belonging to) whatsoever sacrifice he repeats, that sacrifice indeed he has offered.'

7. It is understood (in the Sruti), 'Regarding this (Svâdhyâya) there are two cases in which the study (of the sacred texts) is forbidden: when he is impure himself, and when the place is.'

4. The names from Kahola Kaushitaki down to Âsvalâyana stand in the accusative; tarpayâmi, 'I satiate N. N.' is to be supplied.

5. Nârâyana: 'He satiates his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, and goes to his house. What he then gives, for instance, food offered to guests, or given as alms (to religious beggars), is considered as the sacrificial fee for the Brahmayagña.'

6. Comp. Satapatha Brâhmana XI, 5, 7, 3. 4.

KANDIKĀ 5.

1. Now (follows) the Adhyāyopākaraṇa (i. e. the ceremony by which the annual course of study is opened);

2. When the herbs appear, (when the moon stands in conjunction) with Sravana, in the Srāvana month,

3. Or on the fifth (Tithi of that month), under (the Nakshatra) Hasta.

4. Having sacrificed the two Āgya portions, he should offer Āgya oblations (to the following deities, viz.) Sāvitrī, Brahman, Belief, Insight, Wisdom, Memory, Sadasaspati, Anumati, the metres, and the Rishis.

5. He then sacrifices grains with curds (with the following texts):

6. 'I praise Agni the Purohita'—this one verse (Rig-veda I, 1, 1),

7. 'The Kushumbhaka (mongoose?) has said it'—
'If thou criest, O bird, announce luck to us'—'Sung by Gamadagni'—'In thy abode the whole world rests'

5, 2, 3. Perhaps the division of these Sūtras should be altered, so that srāvanasya would belong to Sūtra 2. In this case we should have to translate, '2. When the herbs appear, (on a day on which the moon stands in conjunction) with Sravana. 3. Or on the fifth (Tithi) of the Srāvana month, under (the Nakshatra) Hasta.' Comp. srāvanasya pañcamîm, Pâr. II, 10, 2. If we count the month beginning with the bright fortnight, and assume that the full moon day of Sravana falls, as the name of the month implies, on Sravana, the fifth Tithi of that month will fall indeed on Hasta. Comp. on the dates of the Upākaraṇa, Prof. Weber's remarks, Die vedischen Nachrichten von den Naxatra II, 322, and on the special symbolical signification of the Nakshatra Sravana in this connection, my note on Sāṅkhâya IV, 5, 2.

4. On the two Āgya portions, comp. above, I, 3, 5; 10, 13 seqq.

7. Comp. Sāṅkhâya IV, 5, 8. The verses with which the oblations are performed, are the first and last verses of each Mandala.

—‘ Come to our sacrifice, O you that are worthy of sacrifice, with care ’—‘ Whosoever, be he ours, be he alien ’—‘ Look on, look about ’—‘ Come here, Agni, the Maruts’ friend ’—‘ The oblation, O king, cooked for thee ’—each time two verses ;

8. ‘ United is your will ’ (Rig-veda X, 191, 4)—this one verse ;

9. ‘ That blessing and bliss we choose ’—this one verse.

10. When he intends to study (the Veda together with pupils), he should, while the pupils take hold of him, sacrifice to those deities, and sacrifice to (Agni) Svishtakṛit, and partake of the grains with curds ; then (follows) the ‘ cleaning.’

11. Sitting down to the west of the fire on Darbha grass, the tufts of which are directed towards the east, he should put Darbha blades into a water-pot, and making a Brahmâṅgali (i. e. joining his hands as a sign of veneration for the Brahman), he should murmur (the following texts):

12. The Vyâhṛitis preceded by (the syllable) Om (stand first) ; (these) and the Sâvitṛi he should repeat three times and then recite the beginning of the Veda.

9. This is the last verse of the Rik-Samhitâ in the Bâshkala Sâkhâ. See my note on Sânkhâyana IV, 5, 9.

10. The expression, ‘ Those deities ’ would, according to Nârâyana, refer not only to the deities stated in Sûtra 4, but also to the deities of the first and last verses of the Mandalas (Sûtras 6 seqq.). On the grains with curds, comp. Sûtra 5. The technical sense of the ‘ cleaning ’ is explained in the Srauta-sûtra I, 8, 2 ; comp. Hillebrandt, Das altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 130, note 1. The sacrificer covers his joined hands with the Kusa grass spread out round the fire, and has water sprinkled on them.

11. On the term brahmâṅgali, comp. Manu II, 71.

13. In the same way at the Utsarga (i. e. at the ceremony performed at the end of the term of Vedic study).

14. He should study six months.

15. One who has performed the Samâvartana (should live during that time) according to the regulations for Brahma-kârins.

16. The others according to the rules.

17. Some say that he should have intercourse with his wife.

18. That (is a practice) sacred to Pragâpati.

19. This (Upâkarana) they call vâṛshika (i. e. belonging to the rainy season).

20. On the middle Ashvakâ they offer food to those deities, and descend into water.

21. They satiate those same deities (with water oblations),

22. (And besides) the Âkâryas, the Rishis, and the Fathers.

23. This is the Utsargana.

KANDIKÂ 6.

1. Instead of the Kâmya ceremonies (i. e. the ceremonies, prescribed in the Srauta-sûtra, by which

15. On the Samâvartana, see below, chap. 8 seq. The restrictions referred to consist in the interdiction of eating honey and meat, of having sexual intercourse, of sleeping in a bedstead and in the day-time, &c. Nârâyana.

16. I. e. the Brahma-kârins.

17. I. e. one who has performed the Samâvartana.

20. After the six months (Sûtra 14) have elapsed, on the Ashvakâ of Mâgha.

23. Or Utsarga, see Sûtra 13.

6, 1. Nârâyana divides this Sûtra into two: 1. atha kâmyânâm sthâne kâmyâh; 2. karavah.

special wishes are attained, oblations of) boiled (rice) grains, for the attainment of those wishes, (should be made by the Grîhya sacrificer).

2. He attains (thereby) those same wishes.

3. For a person that is sick, or suffering, or affected with consumption, a mess of boiled (rice) grains in six oblations (should he offered)—

4. With this (hymn), 'I loosen thee by sacrificial food, that thou mayst live' (Rig-veda X, 161).

5. If he has seen a bad dream, he should worship the sun with the two verses, 'To-day, god Savitri' (Rig-veda V, 82, 4, 5), and with the five verses, 'What bad dreams there are among the cows' (Rig-veda VIII, 47, 14 seqq.),

6. Or with (the verse), 'Whosoever, O king, be it a companion or a friend' (Rig-veda II, 28, 10).

7. When he has sneezed, yawned, seen a disagreeable sight, smelt a bad smell, when his eye palpitates, and when he hears noises in his ears, he should murmur, 'Well-eyed may I become with my eyes, well-vigoured with my face, well-hearing with my ears. May will and insight dwell in me!'

8. If he has gone to a wife to whom he ought not to go, or if he has performed a sacrifice for a person for whom he ought not to do so, or has eaten forbidden food, or accepted what he ought not to accept, or pushed against a piled-up (fire altar) or

8. Nârâyana is evidently wrong in explaining ḷaityam yûpañ ḷa by agniḷayanastham yûpam (which is not, as Prof. Stenzler takes it, der Opferpfahl auf einem Bestattungsplatze). Comp. Gobhila III, 3, 34; Grîhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa II, 4.

I have translated the second verse in Sûtra 8, as if the text had kalpantâm. The MSS. give kalpatâm. Atharva-veda VII, 67 has kalpayantâm.

against a sacrificial post, he should sacrifice two Āgya oblations with (the verses), ‘May my faculties return into me, may life return, may prosperity return; may my goods return to me; may the divine power return into me. Svâhâ!

‘These fires that are stationed on the (altars called) Dhishṇyâs, may they be here in good order, each on its right place. (Agni) Vaisvânara, grown strong, the standard of immortality, may he govern my mind in my heart. Svâhâ!’

9. Or (he may sacrifice) two pieces of wood,

10. Or murmur (the same two verses without any oblation).

KANDIKÂ 7.

1. If the sun sets while he is sleeping without being sick, he should spend the rest of the night keeping silence, without sitting down, and should worship the sun (when it rises) with the five (verses), ‘The light, O sun, by which thou destroyest darkness’ (Rig-veda X, 37, 4 seq.).

2. If (the sun) rises (while he is sleeping without being sick), being fatigued without having done any work, or having done work that is not becoming, he should keep silence, &c., as before, and perform his worship (to the sun) with the following four (verses, Rig-veda X, 37, 9 seq.).

3. Invested with the sacrificial cord, constantly fulfilling the prescribed duties regarding the use of 7, 2. Perhaps we should correct the text, akarmasrântam anabhirûpena karmasrântâ vâ vâgyata iti, &c.

3 seq. See Sâṅkhâyana-Gṛihya II, 9. There the same word anvash/amadesa occurs.

water, he should perform the Sandhyâ (or twilight devotion), observing silence.

4. In the evening he should, turning his face to the north-west, to the region between the chief (west) point and the intermediate (north-western) point (of the horizon), murmur the Sâvitṛī, (beginning) when the sun is half set, until the stars appear.

5. In the same way in the morning—

6. Standing, with his face turned to the east, until the disk (of the sun) appears.

7. If a dove flies against his house or towards it, he should sacrifice with (the hymn), 'O gods, the dove' (Rig-veda X, 165), verse by verse, or should murmur (that hymn).

8. 'We have thee, O Lord of the path' (Rig-veda VI, 53)—if he is going out for doing some business.

9. 'Bring us together, Pûshan, with a knowing one' (Rig-veda VI, 54)—if he wishes to find something lost, or if he has strayed.

10. 'Journey over the ways, Pûshan' (Rig-veda I, 42)—if he is going out on a long or dangerous way.

KANDIKÂ 8.

1. Now when returning (home from his teacher) he should get the following things, viz. a jewel (to be tied round the neck), two ear-rings, a pair of garments, a parasol, a pair of shoes, a staff, a wreath, (pounded seed of the Karañga fruit) for rubbing with, ointment, eye salve, a turban; (all that) for himself and for the teacher.

9. Mûḥa may either mean, 'having lost his way,' or 'bewildered in his mind.' Nârâyana prefers the latter explanation ('pragñâ-hinâ').

2. If he cannot get it for both, only for the teacher.
3. He then should get a piece of wood of a tree which is sacrificially pure, in a north-eastern direction—
4. Sappy (wood) if he wishes for the enjoyment of food, or for prosperity, or for splendour ; dry (wood), if for holy lustre,
5. (Wood) which is both (sappy and dry, in its different parts), if (he wishes) for both.
6. Having put the piece of wood on high, and having given a cow and food to the Brāhmanas, he should perform the ceremony of shaving the beard.
7. He should alter the texts so that they refer to himself.
8. With Ekaklītaka (he should perform the rubbing).
9. Having washed himself with lukewarm water, and having put on two (new) garments which have not yet been washed, with (the verse), ‘Garments with fat splendour you put on, (Mitra and Varuṇa)’ (Rig-veda I, 152, 1), he should anoint his eyes with (the words), ‘The sharpness of the stone art thou ; protect my eye.’
10. With (the words), ‘The sharpness of the stone

8, 6. ‘On high’ means ‘not on the ground’ (Nārāyaṇa). On the gaudānikam karma (the shaving of the beard), comp. above, Adhyāya I, Kandikā 18. The word ‘ceremony’ would mean here, according to Nārāyaṇa, that he should perform the rite alone, without observing such prescriptions as stated above, I, 18, 7.

7. Thus, instead of ‘Herb ! protect him!’ (I, 17, 8) he is to say, ‘Herb ! protect me!’ and so on.

8. Ekaklītaka is, according to Nārāyaṇa and the Prayogaratna, the seed of such a Karaṇḍa fruit (Pongamia Glabra, Vent.) which contains only one grain of seed. Such grains are pounded before he rubs himself therewith.

art thou ; protect my ear '—he should tie on the two ear-rings.

11. After having salved his two hands with ointment, a Brâhmana should salve his head first,

12. A Râganya his two arms,

13. A Vaisya the belly,

14. A woman her secret parts,

15. Persons who gain their livelihood by running, their thighs.

16. With (the formula), 'Free from pain art thou, free from pain may I become'—he should put on the wreath.

17. Not (such a wreath) which is called mâlâ.

18. If they call it mâlâ, he should cause them to call it srag.

19. With (the formula), 'The standing-places of the gods are you ; protect me from all sides'—he steps into the shoes, and with (the formula), 'The heaven's covering art thou'—he takes the parasol.

20. With (the formula), 'Reed thou art ; from the tree thou descendest ; protect me from all sides'—(he takes) a staff of reed.

21. Having with the hymn 'Giving life' tied the jewel to his neck and arranged the turban (on his head), he should standing put the piece of wood (on the fire).

21. On the hymn beginning with the words 'Giving life,' see Prof. Stenzler's note on this Sûtra. Its first verse is identical with Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ XXXIV, 50 (comp. also Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya III, 1, 7), and so are most of its verses found in that Samhitâ or in the Atharva-veda ; the whole of it occurs among the Rig-veda Khilas (vol. vi, p. 25, 2-12).

KANDIKÂ 9.

1. (He says), 'Memory and reproach and knowledge, faith, and wisdom as the fifth, what is sacrificed, and what is given, and what is studied, and what is done, truth, learning, vow—

'The vow which belongs to Agni together with Indra, with Pragâpati, with the Rîshis, with the royal ones among the Rîshis, with the Fathers, with the royal ones among the Fathers, with the human beings, with the royal ones among the human beings, with shine, over-shine, after-shine, counter-shine, with gods and men, with Gandharvas and Apsaras, with wild animals and domestic animals,—the vow, belonging to my own self, dwelling in my own self, that is my universal vow. Hereby, O Agni, I become addicted to the universal vow. Svâhâ!'

2. With (the hymn), 'Mine, Agni, be vigour' (Rig-veda X, 128, 1), verse by verse, he should put pieces of wood (on the fire).

3. He should pass that night at a place where they will do honour to him.

9, 1. "My memory and my non-memory, that is my double vow"—in this way the twelve (parts of which the first section of the Mantra consists) should be recited.' Nârâyana. I think the commentator is wrong here, and that section should rather be recited as it is given in the text without any alteration; it forms a regular Sloka. Agne instead of Agne is a conjecture of Prof. Stenzler, which I have adopted.

2. According to Nârâyana the hymn should be recited including the Khila, so that ten pieces of wood are offered. Now the hymn consists of nine verses; there can be, consequently, only one Khailika verse, which is, I suppose, the first verse of the Khila quoted above, p. 228.

3. By a Madhuparka (Nârâyana). Compare Sânkhâyana-Grihya III, 1, 14.

4. When, after having finished his (task of) learning, he has offered something to the teacher, or has received his permission, he should take a bath (which signifies the end of his studentship).

5. He (i.e. the Snâtaka) has to keep the following observances :

6. He shall not bathe in the night-time ; he shall not bathe naked ; he shall not lie down naked ; he shall not look at a naked woman, except during sexual intercourse ; he shall not run during rain ; he shall not climb up a tree ; he shall not descend into a well ; he shall not swim with his arms across a river ; he shall not expose himself to danger. 'A great being indeed is a Snâtaka'—thus it is understood (in the Śruti).

KANDIKÂ 10.

1. If (a student) wishes to be dismissed (by his teacher), he should pronounce before the teacher his (i.e. the teacher's ?) name—

2. (And should say), 'Here we will dwell, sir!'

4. Nârâyana : He makes an offer to the teacher in the words, 'What is it that I can do for you?'—and what the teacher tells him, that he does.

10, 1. Nârâyana refers this rule to a student who has performed the Samâvartana and wishes to go away. But a comparison of Sâṅkhâya-grîhya II, 18 seems to make it probable that the ceremony described here has nothing to do with the Samâvartana. I take this chapter rather for a description of the way in which a student has to take leave of his teacher when setting out on a journey. 'His name' is the teacher's name, according to Nârâyana.

2. Sâṅkhâya-grîhya II, 18, 1. Sâṅkh. has aham vatsyâmi ; Âsvalâyana, idaṃ vatsyâmaḥ. The commentator says that instead of idaṃ the Âśrama is to be named which the student chooses to enter upon, for instance, 'Devadatta, we will dwell in the state of a householder, sir!'

3. With a loud voice (the words) following after the name.

4. 'Of inhalation and exhalation'—(this he says) with a low voice,

5. And (the verse), 'Come hither, Indra, with thy lovely-sounding, fallow-coloured (horses)' (Rig-veda III, 45, 1).

6. The aged one then murmurs, 'To inhalation and exhalation I, the wide-extended one, resort with thee. To the god Savitri I give thee in charge'—and the verse.

7. When he has finished (that verse), and has muttered, 'Om! Forwards! Blessing!' and recited (over the student the hymn), 'The great bliss of the three' (Rig-veda X, 185)—(he should dismiss him).

8. On one who has been thus dismissed, danger comes from no side—thus it is understood (in the Sruti).

9. If he hears (on his way) disagreeable voices of birds, he should murmur the two hymns, 'Shrieking, manifesting his being' (Rig-veda II, 42, 43), and (the verse), 'The divine voice have the gods created' (Rig-veda VIII, 100, 11).

10. 'Praise the renowned youth who sits on the war-chariot' (Rig-veda II, 33, 11)—if (he hears disagreeable voices) of deer.

11. From the direction, or from the (being) from which he expects danger, towards that direction he should throw a fire-brand, burning on both sides, or having twirled about a churning-stick from the right to the left, with (the words), 'Safety be to me, Mitra

6. I have translated, as Prof. Stenzler has also done, according to Sāṅkhāyana's reading, prânâpânâ . . . tvayâ. The 'aged one' is the teacher, the verse that which is quoted in Sûtra 5.

and Varuṇa; encounter the foes and burn them up with your flame. May they find none who knows them and no support; divided by discord may they go to death'—

12. He turns the churning-stick downwards with (the verse), 'The combined wealth of both, heaped together' (Rig-veda X, 84, 7).

KANDIKÂ 11.

1. If unknown danger from all sides (menaces him), he should sacrifice eight Âgya oblations with (the formulas),

'Prithivî (the earth) is covered; she is covered by Agni. By her, the covered one, the covering one, I ward off the danger of which I am in fear. Svâhâ!

'Antariksha (the air) is covered; it is covered by Vâyu. By it, the covered, the covering, I ward off the danger of which I am in fear. Svâhâ!

'Dyaus (the heaven) is covered; she is covered by Âditya (the sun). By her, &c.

'The quarters (of the horizon) are covered; they are covered by Kāndramas (the moon). By them, &c.

'The waters are covered; they are covered by Varuṇa. By them, &c.

'The creatures are covered; they are covered by Prâṇa (the breath). By them, &c.

'The Vedas are covered; they are covered by the metres. By them, &c.

'All is covered; it is covered by Brahman. By it, &c. Svâhâ!'

11, 1. 'Covered' is vṛita; 'I ward off' is the causative of the same verb, vâraye.

2. Then, stationing himself towards the north-east, he murmurs the Svasti-Âtreya and, 'Of what we are in fear, Indra' (Rig-veda VIII, 61, 13 seqq.), down to the end of the hymn.

KANDIKÂ 12.

1. When a battle is beginning, (the royal Purohita) should cause the king to put on his armour (in the following way).

2. (The Purohita) stations himself to the west of (the king's) chariot with (the hymn ?), 'I have brought thee hither; be here' (Rig-veda X, 173).

3. With (the verse), 'Like a thunder-cloud is his countenance' (Rig-veda VI, 75, 1), he should tender the coat of mail to him.

4. With the following (verse) the bow.

5. The following (verse) he should cause him to repeat.

6. He should murmur himself the fourth.

7. With the fifth he should tender the quiver to him.

8. When (the king) starts, the sixth.

9. The seventh (he recites) over the horses.

10. The eighth he should cause (the king) to repeat while looking at the arrows;

2. The Svasti-Âtreya is the part of the hymn V, 51, which very frequently contains the word svasti (vv. 11-15). There is a Khila appended to that hymn (Rig-veda, vol. iii, p. 30), which, according to Nârâyana, is also to be murmured on this occasion.

12, 2. According to Nârâyana the Pratîka here signifies not the verse, but the whole hymn, though a whole Pâda is given (comp. Srauta-sûtra I, 1, 17).

11. (The verse), 'Like a serpent it encircles the arm with its windings' (Rig-veda VI, 75, 14), when he ties to his arm the leather (by which the arm is protected against the bow-string).

12. He then mounts up to (the king on his chariot), while he is driving, and causes him to repeat the Abhîvarta hymn (Rig-veda X, 174) and the two verses, 'He who, Mitra and Varuna' (Rig-veda VIII, 101, 3 seq.).

13. He then should look at him with the Apratiratha, Sâsa, and Sauparna hymns.

14. The Sauparna is (the hymn), 'May the streams of honey and ghee flow forwards.'

15. (The king) should drive (in his chariot successively) to all quarters (of the horizon).

16. He should commence the battle in the line of battle invented by Âditya or by Uśanas.

17. He should touch the drum with the three verses, 'Fill earth and heaven with thy roar' (Rig-veda VI, 47, 29 seqq.).

18. With (the verse), 'Shot off fall down' (Rig-veda VI, 75, 16), he should shoot off the arrows.

12. The Abhîvarta hymn begins with the word abhîvartena, and is ascribed to Abhîvarta Âṅgîrasa.

13. The Apratiratha hymn is Rig-veda X, 103 (ascribed to Apratiratha Aindra); the Sâsa, X, 152 (ascribed to Sâsa Bhâradvâga). On the Sauparna, see the next Sûtra.

14. This hymn is not found in any Vedic Samhitâ, as far as I know, nor does it occur in the Suparnâdhyâya. I have followed Prof. Stenzler's conjecture pra dhârâ yantu instead of pradhârayantu, which is confirmed by Sâyana's note on Aitareya Brâhmaṇa VI, 25, 7; VIII, 10, 4 (pp. 365, 399, ed. Aufrecht).

17, 18. According to Nârâyana the subject is the king.

19. 'Where the arrows fly' (l. l. v. 17)—this (verse) he should murmur while they are fighting.

20. Or he should teach (the king the texts mentioned). Or he should teach (the king).

End of the Third Adhyâya.

19. Here the subject is the Purohita.

ADHYÂYA IV, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. If disease befalls one who has set up the (sacred Srauta) fires, he should leave his home (and go away) to the eastern, or northern, or north-eastern direction.

2. 'The sacred fires are fond of the village'—thus it is said.

3. Longing for it, desirous of returning to the village they might restore him to health—thus it is understood (in the Sṛuti).

4. Being restored to health, he should offer a Soma sacrifice, or an animal sacrifice, or an ordinary sacrifice, and take his dwelling (again in the village).

5. Or without such a sacrifice.

6. If he dies, one should have a piece of ground dug up to the south-east or to the south-west—

7. At a place which is inclined towards the south or towards the south-east.

8. According to some (teachers), inclined towards south-west.

9. (The piece of ground dug up should be) of the length of a man with upraised arms,

10. Of the breadth of one Vyâma (fathom),

1, 1. Comp. Srauta-sûtra VI, 9, 1. The funeral rites according to the Grîhya-sûtras have been treated of by Prof. Max Müller, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. ix.

3. I.e. longing for the village. I here differ from Prof. Stenzler's translation, 'Indem sie, um nach dem Dorfe zu kommen, ihm Gutes wünschen.' Prof. Stenzler here follows Nârâyana, who has the following note, grâmam âgantum ikkanto-gnaya enam âhitâgnim âsamante, ayam agado bhaved iti.

4. Comp. Srauta-sûtra VI, 9, 7.

5. Srauta-sûtra VI, 10, 1.

11. Of the depth of one Vitasti (span).
12. The cemetery should be free from all sides.
13. It should be fertile in herbs.
14. But plants with thorns and with milky juice, &c., as stated above.
15. From which the waters flow off to all sides : this is a characteristic required for the cemetery (smaśâna) where the body is to be burned.
16. 'They cut off (from the dead body) the hair, the beard, the hairs of the body, and the nails'—this has been stated above.
17. (They should provide) plenty of sacrificial grass and of butter.
18. They here pour clarified butter into curds.
19. This is the 'sprinkled butter' used for the Fathers (i. e. Manes).

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. (The relations of the dead person) now carry (his sacred) fires and (his) sacrificial vessels in that direction.

12. Nârâyana: By the word smaśâna (cemetery) two different smaśânas are designated here, because below (Sûtra 15) a distinction is added (to the word smaśâna), in the words, 'This is a characteristic required for the smaśâna where the body is to be burned.' Thus the place where the body is burned, and the place where the gathered bones are deposited, both are called smaśâna.

14. See above, II, 7, 5.
15. See the note on Sûtra 12.
16. See the Srauta-sûtra VI, 10, 2.
17. Dvigulphaṃ barhir âgyañ ka. Nârâyana explains dvigulpha by prabhûta. Comp. bahulatrina, Kâtâyâna XXV, 7, 15.
18. 'Here' means, at a ceremony directed to the Manes. Nârâyana.

- 2, 1. In the direction stated above, chap. 1, 6.

2. After them aged persons forming an odd number, men and women not going together, (carry) the dead body.

3. Some (say) that (the dead body should be carried) in a cart with a seat, drawn by cows.

4. (Some prescribe) a she-animal for covering (the dead body with its limbs):

5. A cow,

6. Or a she-goat of one colour.

7. Some (take) a black one.

8. They tie (a rope) to its left fore-foot and lead it behind (the dead body).

9. Then follow the relations (of the dead person), wearing their sacrificial cords below (round their body), with the hair-locks untied, the older ones first, the younger ones last.

10. When they have thus arrived at the place, the performer (of the rites) walks three times round the spot with his left side turned towards it, and with a Sami branch sprinkles water on it, with (the verse), 'Go away, withdraw, and depart from here' (Rig-veda X, 14, 9).

11. To the south-east, on an elevated corner (of that place), he places the Âhavanîya fire,

12. To the north-west the Gârhapatyâ fire,

13. To the south-west the Dakshinâ fire.

14. After that a person that knows (how to do it), piles up between the fires a pile of fuel.

4. See chap. 3, 20-25.

10. Kartodakena (i. e. kartâ udakena) is evidently the right reading, not gartodakena.

12, 13. The words, 'on an elevated corner' (Sûtra 11) have to be supplied.

14. As to the pronoun enam, which refers, with an irregular

15. After sacrificial grass and a black antelope's skin with the hair outside has been spread out there, they place the dead body thereon, which they have carried so as to pass by the Gârhapatya fire on its north-side, turning its head towards the Âhavanīya.

16. To the north (of the body they place) the wife (of the deceased),

17. And a bow for a Kshatriya.

18. Her brother-in-law, being a representative of her husband, or a pupil (of her husband), or an aged servant, should cause her to rise (from that place) with (the verse), 'Arise, O wife, to the world of life' (Rig-veda X, 18, 8).

19. The performer (of the rites) should murmur (that verse), if a Sûdra (makes her rise from the pile).

20. With (the verse), 'Taking the bow out of the hand of the deceased' (Rig-veda X, 18, 9), (he takes away) the bow.

21. It has been stated (what is to be done) in case a Sûdra (should perform this act).

22. Having bent the bow, he should, before the piling up (of the things mentioned below, which are put on the dead body) is done, break it to pieces, and throw it (on the pile).

construction, to the dead person, comp. Satapatha Brâhmana XII, 5, 2, 7.

16. The wife is made to lie down on the pile.

18. Possibly the words devaraḥ and patisthânīyaḥ refer to two different persons, so that we should have to translate, 'Her brother-in-law, (or some other) representative of her husband, &c.'

19. This refers to the case of the aged servant. The word for which we have put Sûdra here and in Sûtra 21, is vr̥ishala.

22. See Sûtra 19.

KANDIKÂ 3.

1. He should then put the following (sacrificial) implements (on the dead body).

2. Into the right hand the (spoon called) Guhû.

3. Into the left the (other spoon called) Upabhrit.

4. On his right side the (wooden sacrificial sword called) Sphya, on his left (side) the Agnihotrahavanti (i. e. the ladle with which the Agnihotra oblations are sacrificed).

5. On his chest the (big sacrificial ladle called) Dhruvâ. On his head the dishes. On his teeth the pressing-stones.

6. On the two sides of his nose the two (smaller sacrificial ladles called) Sruvas.

7. Or, if there is only one (Sruva), breaking it (in two pieces).

8. On his two ears the two Prâsitraharanas (i. e. the vessels into which the portion of the sacrificial food belonging to the Brahman is put).

9. Or, if there is only one (Prâsitraharana), breaking it (in two pieces).

10. On his belly the (vessel called) Pâttri,

11. And the cup into which the cut-off portions (of the sacrificial food) are put.

12. On his secret parts the (staff called) Samyâ.

13. On his thighs the two kindling woods.

3, 1. On the different implements mentioned in the following Sûtras, comp. Prof. Max Müller's paper in the Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. ix, pp. vii seqq.; lxxviii seqq.

8. On the Prâsitra and the Prâsitraharanas, comp. Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 119 (with note 6), 120, 131.

14. On his legs the mortar and the pestle.
15. On his feet the two baskets.
16. Or, if there is only one (basket), tearing it (in two pieces).
17. Those (of the implements) which have a hollow (into which liquids can be poured), are filled with sprinkled butter.
18. The son (of the deceased person) should take the under and the upper mill-stone for himself.
19. And the implements made of copper, iron, and earthenware.
20. Taking out the omentum of the she-animal he should cover therewith the head and the mouth (of the dead person) with the verse, 'Put on the armour (which will protect thee) against Agni, by (that which comes from) the cows' (Rig-veda X, 16, 7).
21. Taking out the kidneys (of the animal) he should lay them into the hands (of the dead body) with the verse, 'Escape the two hounds, the sons of Saramâ' (Rig-veda X, 14, 10), the right (kidney) into the right (hand), the left into the left.
22. The heart (of the animal he puts) on the heart (of the deceased).
23. And two lumps (of flour or rice), according to some (teachers).

17. Nârâyana explains âsekanavanti by bilavanti. On prîshadâgya ('sprinkled butter') comp. the two last Sûtras of the first chapter.

19. The statement in Satapatha Brâhmana XII, 5, 2, 14 is somewhat different.

20. Anustaranyâ vapâm. See chap. 2, 4.

23. Nârâyana states that these lumps are not put, as one would be inclined to believe, on the heart, but into the hands of the deceased. Sûtra 24 shows that this interpretation is correct.

24. (Only) if there are no kidneys, according to some (teachers).

25. Having distributed the whole (animal), limb by limb (placing its different limbs on the corresponding limbs of the deceased), and having covered it with its hide, he recites, when the Pranîta water is carried forward, (the verse), 'Agni, do not overturn this cup' (Rig-veda X, 16, 8).

26. Bending his left knee he should sacrifice Âgya oblations into the Dakshina fire with (the formulas), 'To Agni svâhâ! To Kâma svâhâ! To the world svâhâ! To Anumati svâhâ!'

27. A fifth (oblation) on the chest of the deceased with (the formula), 'From this one verily thou hast been born. May he now be born out of thee, N. N.! To the heaven-world svâhâ!'

KANDIKÂ 4.

1. He gives order, 'Light the fires together.'

2. If the Âhavanîya fire reaches (the body) first, he should know, 'It has reached him in the heaven-world. He will live there in prosperity, and so will this one, i. e. his son, in this world.'

3. If the Gârhapatya fire reaches (the body) first, he should know, 'It has reached him in the air-world. He will live there in prosperity, and so will this one, i. e. his son, in this world.'

24. I. e. if there is no Anustaranî animal, which is considered as optional (see chap. 2, 4).

25. Comp. Kâtyâyana XXV, 7, 35.

27. He who is born out of the deceased, is Agni. See Satapatha Brâhmaṇa II, 3, 3, 5; and also XII, 5, 2, 15.

4, 2. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XII, 5, 2, 10.

3. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa I. I. § 9.

4. If the Dakshina fire reaches (the body) first, he should know, 'It has reached him in the world of men. He will live there in prosperity, and so will this one, i. e. his son, in this world.'

5. If (the three fires) reach (the body) in the same moment, they say that this signifies the highest luck.

6. While (the body) is burning, he recites over it the same texts, 'Go on, go on, on the ancient paths' (Rig-veda X, 14, 7).

7. Being burnt by a person who knows this, he goes to the heaven-world together with the smoke (of the funeral pile)—thus it is understood (in the Sruti).

8. To the north-east of the Âhavaniya fire he should have a knee-deep pit dug and should have an Avakâ, i. e. (the water-plant called) Śipâla put down into it. From that (pit) he (i. e. the deceased) goes out and together with the smoke he goes up to the heaven-world—thus it is understood (in the Sruti).

9. After he has recited (the verse), 'These living ones have separated from the dead' (Rig-veda X, 18, 3), they turn round from right to left and go away without looking back.

10. When they have come to a place where standing water is, having once (plunged into it and) emerged

4. Satapatha Brâhmana I. I. § 11.

5. Satapatha Brâhmana I. I. § 12.

6. 'The same texts' means that the texts indicated in the Srauta-sûtra VI, 10, 19 (twenty-four verses taken from the hymns X, 14, 16, 17, 18, 154) have to be recited.

8. Comp. above, II, 8, 14.

10. 'All the Samânodaka relations (see Manu V, 60), men and women, should pour out one handful of water each. Pronouncing from it, they pour out one handful (of water), pronounce the Gotra name and the proper name (of the deceased), go out (of the water), put on other garments, wring out (the old garments) once, lay them away with their skirts to the north, and sit down until the stars appear.

11. Or they may enter (their houses), when still (a part) of the sun-disk is seen,

12. The younger ones first, the older ones last.

13. When they have come to the houses, they touch a stone, the fire, cow's dung, fried barley, sesamum seeds, and water.

14. Let them not cook food during that night.

15. Let them subsist on bought or ready-made food.

16. Let them eat no saline food for three nights.

17. Let them optionally for twelve nights avoid the distribution of gifts and the study (of Vedic texts), if one of the chief Gurus (has died).

18. Ten days after (the death of) Sapindas, the Gotra name and the proper name of the deceased, saying, for instance, "Devadatta, belonging to the Gotra of the Kâryapas, this water is for thee!"—they sprinkle it out, with southward-turned faces.' Nârâyana.

12. Possibly praviseyuḥ (they should enter) belongs to this Sûtra. In Prof. Stenzler's edition and in the commentary of Nârâyana it is taken as belonging to Sûtra 11.

15. Vasishṭha IV, 15. Nârâyana here observes, 'Some authorities omit this Sûtra.'

17. 'Father and mother and the teacher who, after having performed the Upanayana for him, has taught him the whole Veda, are the chief Gurus. When these have died, they should avoid giving gifts and studying the Veda either for twelve nights, or for ten nights, this rule standing in correlation with the following one.' Nârâyana.

18. The Sapinda relationship is generally defined as the relationship within six degrees, though the statements in the different

19. And of a Guru who is no Sapinda,
20. And of unmarried female relations.
21. Three nights after (the death of) other teachers,
22. And of a relation who is no Sapinda,
23. And of married female relations,
24. Of a child that has no teeth,
25. And of a dead-born child.
26. One day, after (the death of) a fellow-pupil,
27. And of a Srotriya of the same village.

KANDIKĀ 5.

1. The gathering (of the bones is performed) after the tenth (Tithi from the death), (on a Tithi) with an odd number, of the dark fortnight, under a single Nakshatra.

2. A man into a male urn without special marks, a woman into a female one without special marks.

3. Aged persons of an odd number, not men and women together (gather the bones).

4. The performer of the ceremony walks three times round the spot with his left side turned towards texts do not exactly agree. See Âpastamba II, 15, 2 ; Manu V, 60 ; Gautama XIV, 13 (with Prof. Bühler's note, Sacred Books, vol. ii, p. 247, &c.).

21. Comp. Sûtras 17, 19.

5, 1. Nârâyana (comp. the Âsvalâyana-Gr̥hya-Parisishṭa III, 7) understands this Sûtra in a different way. 'After the tenth Tithi of the dark fortnight, on a Tithi with an odd number, i. e. on the eleventh, thirteenth, or fifteenth.' The single Nakshatras are those the name of which does not denote two Nakshatras (as, for instance, the two Ashâdhâs). Comp. Kâty.-Sraut. XXV, 8, 1 ; Manu V, 59.

2. Urns, with or without protuberances like female breasts, are considered as female or male accordingly.

3. See chap. 2, 2.

4. Comp. chap. 2, 10.

it, and sprinkles on it with a Samî branch milk mixed with water, with the verse, 'O cool one, O thou that art full of coolness' (Rig-veda X, 16, 14).

5. With the thumb and the fourth finger they should put each single bone (into the urn) without making a noise,

6. The feet first, the head last.

7. Having well gathered them and purified them with a winnowing basket, they should put (the urn) into a pit, at a place where the waters from the different sides do not flow together, except rain water, with (the verse), 'Go to thy mother Earth there' (Rig-veda X, 18, 10).

8. With the following (verse) he should throw earth (into the pit).

9. After he has done so, (he should repeat) the following (verse).

10. Having covered (the urn) with a lid with (the verse), 'I fasten to thee' (Rig-veda X, 18, 13), they then should go away without looking back, should bathe in water, and perform a Srâddha for the deceased.

KANDIKÂ 6.

1. They who have lost a Guru by death, or are afflicted by other misfortune, should perform on the new-moon day an expiatory ceremony.

2. Before sunrise they should carry their fire

7. Nârâyana explains pavana by sûrpa. He says that the 'performer' (kartri) repeats this and the following texts.

10. 'They should give a Srâddha to the deceased exclusively, according to the Ekoddishṭa rite.' Nârâyana.

6, 2. According to Nârâyana the fire means here not the sacred domestic fire, but a common kitchen fire. I doubt whether the together with its ashes and with its receptacle to the south with the half-verse, 'I send far away the flesh-devouring Agni' (Rig-veda X, 16, 9).

3. Having thrown that (fire) down at a place where four roads meet or somewhere else, they walk round it three times, turning their left sides towards it, beating their left thighs with their left hands.

4. They then should return home without looking back, bathe in water, have their hair, their beards the hair of their bodies, and their nails cut, and furnish themselves with new jars, pots, vessels for rinsing the mouth, wreathed with garlands of Sami flowers, with fuel of Sami wood, with two pieces of Sami wood for kindling fire, and with branches to be laid round the fire, with bull's dung and a bull's hide, fresh butter, a stone, and as many bunches of Kusa grass as there are young women (in the house).

5. At the time of the Agni(-hotra) he should kindle fire with the hemistich, 'Here may this other Gâtavedas' (Rig-veda X, 16, 9).

commentator is right. The ceremonies described in the following Sûtras seem to point rather to a renewal of the sacred Grihya fire, the old one having proved unlucky to the sacrificer. In the same way, in the Srauta ritual, a sacrificer who, after having performed the Âdhâna, has bad luck, performs the Punarâdheya.

3. Comp. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra V, 10, 15.

5. The text has agnívelâyâm, which Nârâyana explains by agnihotraviharanakâle aparâhne. He states that the fire should be produced by attrition of two new kindling woods (arazi), mentioned in Sûtra 4. The fire thus kindled is to be used, he says, as a kitchen-fire. Herein he seems to me to have misunderstood the meaning of the ceremony; see the note on Sûtra 2. The hemistich quoted in this Sûtra (which is the second half of the same verse of which the first half is prescribed in Sûtra 2) clearly points to the sacred quality of the fire in question; it runs thus, 'Here may this other Gâtavedas carry the offerings to the gods, the knowing one.'

6. Keeping that (fire) burning, they sit till the silence of the night, repeating the tales of the aged, and getting stories of auspicious contents, Itihâsas and Purâṇas, told to them.

7. When all sounds have ceased, or when (the others) have gone to the house or the resting-place, (the performer of the ceremony) should pour out an uninterrupted stream of water, beginning at the south side of the door, with (the verse), 'Spinning the thread follow the light of the aerial space' (Rig-veda X, 53, 6), (going round the house), ending at the north side of the door.

8. Having then given its place to the fire, and having spread to the west of it a bull's hide with the neck to the east, with the hair outside, he should cause the people belonging to the house to step on that (hide) with (the verse), 'Arise to long life, choosing old age' (Rig-veda X, 18, 6).

9. With (the verse), 'This I lay round the living' (Rig-veda X, 18, 4), he should lay branches round (the fire).

10. After having with (the words), 'A mountain (i. e. a stone) they shall place between themselves and death,' placed a stone to the north of the fire, and having sacrificed with the four (verses), 'Go hence, O death, on another way' (Rig-veda X, 18,

7. The person who pours out the water is, as Nârâyana says, the kartr̥i, i. e. the performer of the whole ceremony. The word cannot be translated, as Prof. Stenzler does, der Bestatter, no funeral ceremonies being here treated of.

8. See above, I, 8, 9. Here Nârâyana sees that the fire is the sacred one. He says, athasabdo'smin kâle.gnyantaram aupâsanam upasamâdadhyâd iti gñâpanârtham.

10. The words, 'A mountain,' &c., stand at the end of the verse quoted in Sûtra 9.

1-4), verse by verse, he should look at his people with (the verse), 'As the days follow each other' (ibid. 5).

11. The young women (belonging to the house) should, with each hand separately, with their thumbs and fourth fingers, with young Darbha blades, salve their eyes with fresh butter, and throw (the Darbha blades) away, turning their faces away.

12. (The performer of the ceremony) should look at them, while they are salving themselves, with (the verse), 'These women, being no widows, having noble husbands' (Rig-veda X, 18, 7).

13. With (the verse), 'Carrying stones, (the river) streams forward; take hold of each other' (Rig-veda X, 53, 8)—the performer (of the ceremony) first should touch the stone.

14. After that, stationing himself to the north-east, while (the others) go round with the fire, with bull's dung, and with an uninterrupted stream of water, repeating the three verses, 'O waters, ye are wholesome' (Rig-veda X, 9, 1 seqq.), he should murmur the verse, 'These have led round the cow' (Rig-veda X, 155, 5).

15. A tawny-coloured bull should he lead round—thus they say.

16. They then sit down at a place where they intend to tarry, having put on garments that have not yet been washed.

17. (There) they sit, avoiding to sleep, till sunrise.

18. After sunrise, having murmured the hymns sacred to the sun and the auspicious hymns, having prepared food, having made oblations with (the hymn), 'May he drive evil away from us with his shine' (Rig-veda I, 97), verse by verse, having given to the Brāhmaṇas to eat, he should cause (them) to pronounce auspicious words.

18. See above, II, 3, 13.

19. A cow, a cup of metal, and a garment that has not yet been washed, constitute the sacrificial fee.

KANDIKĀ 7.

1. Now at a Srāddha ceremony, at that which is celebrated on the Parvan day, or for the attainment of special wishes, or at the Ābhyudayika Srāddha (i. e. the Srāddha celebrated when some good luck has happened), or at the Ekoddishṭa Srāddha (the Srāddha directed to a single dead person)—

2. He causes Brāhmaṇas who are endowed with learning, moral character, and correct conduct, or with one of these (characteristics), who have been invited in time, who have taken a bath, washed their feet, and sipped water, to sit down, as representatives of the Fathers, with their faces turned to the north, one for each one of the Fathers, or two for each, or three for each.

3. The larger their number is, the greater is the reward (which the sacrificer is entitled to expect).

4. But in no case one (Brāhmaṇa) for all (the fathers).

7, 1. Comp. on the Srāddha ceremonies in general the note on Sāṅkhāyana-Grīhya IV, 1, 1, and the quotations given there. The Pārvaṇa Srāddha, which is celebrated on the new-moon day, is treated of by Sāṅkhāyana IV, 1, the Ābhyudayika Srāddha, IV, 4, the Ekoddishṭa Srāddha, IV, 2.

5. Optionally (he may invite only one Brâhmana) except at the first (Sṛâddha).

6. By (the exposition of) the Pinda sacrifice (the corresponding rules) have been declared (for the Sṛâddha ceremonies also).

7. Having given water (to the Brâhmanas),

8. Having given to them double-folded Darbha blades, and a seat,

9. Having (again) given water (to them),

10. Having poured water into three vessels of metal, of stone, and of earthen-ware, or (into three vessels) made of the same substance, over which he has put Darbha grass,

11. And having recited over (that water the verse), 'For luck and help the divine waters' (Rig-veda X, 9, 4), he pours sesamum seeds into it with (the formula), 'Sesamum art thou; Soma is thy deity; at the Gosava sacrifice thou hast been created by

5. Anâdye. Of the different interpretations of this word which Nârâyana gives, it may suffice here to quote two. The first Sṛâddha may either mean the Pârvana Sṛâddha, because this stands first among the different kinds of Sṛâddha ceremonies enumerated in Sûtra 1; or it may mean the Sapindâkaraṇa (see Sâṅkhâya IV, 3), for this is the first occasion on which a dead person receives Sṛâddha oblations together with two others of the Fathers.

6. The sacrifice to the Manes, as forming part of the Srauta ritual, is explained in the Srauta-sûtra II, 6 seq.

8. Yâgñavalkya I, 229.

9. Yâgñavalkya I, 230. The reading of several words of the Mantra is doubtful, and the parallel texts, as Prof. Stenzler has not failed to observe, differ; especially the words pratnavadbhiḥ prattaḥ seem to me to be corrupt. The word pratnavat is only known to the Petersburg Dictionary as having the meaning, 'containing the word pratna,' which will not do here. Thus, I think that the reading pratnam adbhiḥ priktâḥ should be adopted; the translation would be, 'Anciently thou hast been mixed with water.'

the gods. By the ancients thou hast been offered. Through the funeral oblation render the Fathers and these worlds propitious to us. Svadhâ! Adoration!'

12. (The different rites are performed) from the right to the left.

13. With (the part) of the other (i. e. left) hand between the thumb (and the fore-finger), because he wears the sacrificial cord over his left shoulder, or with the right hand which he seizes with the left (he offers the Arghya water to the Fathers with the words), 'Father, this is thy Arghya. Grandfather, this is thy Arghya. Great-grandfather, this is thy Arghya'—having first offered (ordinary) water (to the Fathers).

14. When he is going to hand over that (Arghya water to the Brâhmanas who represent the Fathers, he says once each time), 'Svadhâ! The Arghya water!'

15. Over (the Arghya water) which has been

12. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grîhya IV, 4, 6.

13. The part of the hand above the thumb is called the 'Tîrtha belonging to the Manes;' see, for instance, Baudhâyaṇa's Dharma-sûtra I, 8, 16. The sacrificer is here understood to wear his sacrificial cord suspended over the left shoulder (he is 'yâgñopavîtin'). But as the oblation here treated of is directed to the Manes, it is required that he should be prâkînâvîtin. Now he is considered as prâkînâvîtin, according to Nârâyana, not only if the cord is suspended over his right shoulder (which is the ordinary meaning of prâkînâvîtin), but also if the hand with which he performs the rites, and the shoulder over which he wears the sacred cord, are either both right or both left. Thus here, acting with the left-hand and wearing the cord over the left shoulder, he becomes prâkînâvîtin.

The last word (appûrvam) is separated by Nârâyana from the rest, so that it forms a separate Sûtra.

15. The sacrificer gives the water to the Brâhmanas, and these poured out, he should recite the verse, 'The celestial waters which have been produced on the earth, the aerial waters and the waters which are terrestrial, the gold-coloured ones, apt for sacrifice, may these waters bring us luck and be kind to us.' Pouring together what has been left (in the three Arghya vessels) he moistens his face with that water, if he desires that a son should be born to him.

16. 'He should not take up the first vessel, into which the Arghya water for the Fathers has been poured. Hidden the Fathers dwell therein: thus Saunaka has said.'

17. In that moment the gifts of perfumes, garlands, incense, lights, and clothes are offered (to the Brâhmanas).

18. Having taken some food (of the Sthâlpâka prepared for the Pindapitriyagña), and having besmeared it with ghee, he asks (the Brâhmanas) for their permission by saying, 'I shall offer it in the fire,' or, 'I will sacrifice my offering in the fire,' or, 'I will offer it in the fire.'

19. The permission (is given in the words), 'It may be offered,' or, 'Sacrifice thy offering,' or, 'Offer it.'

20. He then sacrifices in the fire as stated above, pour it out. Instead of prithivî sambabhûvuḥ (prithivî being intended as a locative; see Lanman, Noun-inflection in the Veda, p. 389) we should read, no doubt, as the parallel texts have, payasâ sambabhûvuḥ: 'The celestial waters which have united themselves with milk.'

16. This is a Sloka.

17. Manu III, 209; Yâgñavalkya I, 231.

20. The oblations alluded to in this Sûtra are prescribed in the Srauta-sûtra, II, 6, 12. They are directed to Soma pitrinat and to Agni kavyavâhana.

21. Or, if they give their permission, in the hands (of the Brâhmanas).

22. 'The mouth of the gods verily is the fire, the mouth of the Fathers is the hand'—thus says the Brâhmaṇa.

23. If in the hands, he assigns to them other food, after they have sipped water.

24. The food (is put together) with the food.

25. It is said, 'What is given away and offered, that brings prosperity.'

26. When he sees that they are satiated, he should recite (the verses) containing the word madhu, and (the verse), 'They have eaten, they have enjoyed themselves' (Rig-veda I, 82, 2).

27. Having asked them, 'Relished?' and having taken the food, whatever food he has used, together with the Sthâlipâka, in order to make lumps thereof, he should offer the rest (to the Brâhmanas).

28. After they have either accepted (that rest of food), or left it (to him), and have finished eating, he should, before they have sipped water, put down the lumps for the Fathers.

21. According to Manu (III, 212) this is done only in case there is no fire. Possibly abhyanugñâyâm belongs to Sûtra 20, so that we should have to translate, 'He then sacrifices . . . if they give their permission. Or in the hands.'

24. 'The food which is left from the oblations he puts with the food (Sûtra 23) which is to be eaten by the Brâhmanas, and has been put into the vessels.' Nârâyana.

25. Is srîshâm to be understood in the sense of visrîshâm? Nârâyana explains it by prabhûtam.

26. The verses containing the word madhu are Rig-veda I, 90, 6-8.

27. On the question, 'Relished?' compare Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya IV, 2, 5. For several kinds of Śrâddha ceremonies a Sthâlipâka is prescribed, for others it is not; for the Śrâddhas of the last kind the words 'Together with the Sthâlipâka' are not valid.

29. After they have sipped water, according to some (teachers).

30. Having strewn the food on the ground and suspended the sacrificial cord over his left shoulder, he should dismiss the Brâhmaṇas, (saying to them), 'Say Om! Svadhâ!'

31. Or, 'So be it! Svadhâ!'

KANDIKÂ 8.

1. Now the spit-ox (sacrificed to Rudra).

2. In autumn or in spring, under the (Nakshatra) Ârdra.

3. The best of his herd,

4. (An ox) which is neither leprous nor speckled;

5. One with black spots, according to some ;

6. If he likes, a black one, if its colour inclines to copper-colour.

7. He sprinkles it with water, into which he has thrown rice and barley,

8. From head to tail,

9. With (the formula), 'Grow up, agreeable to Rudra the great god.'

10. He should let it grow up. When it has cut its teeth, or when it has become a bull—

11. To a quarter (of the horizon) which is sacrificially pure,

12. At a place which cannot be seen from the village,

30. They reply, 'Om ! Svadhâ !'

8, 1. According to Nârâyana, the 'spit-ox' sacrifice is so called because it is offered to Rudra the spit-wearer.

5. Kalmâsho nâma kṛishṇabinduḷitaḥ. Nârâyana.

10. This Sûtra should rather be divided into two.

11. I. e. to the east or the north.

13. After midnight,
14. According to some, after sunrise.
15. Having caused a Brahman who is versed in learning and knows the practice (of this sacrifice), to sit down, having driven a fresh branch with leaves into the ground as a sacrificial post, (having taken) two creeping plants or two Kusa ropes as two girdles, and having wound the one round the sacrificial post, and tied the other round the middle of the animal's head, he binds it to the sacrificial post or to the girdle (which he had tied to that post) with (the formula), 'Agreeable to him to whom adoration (is brought), I bind thee.'
16. The sprinkling with water and what follows is the same as at the animal sacrifice.
17. We shall state what is different.
18. Let him sacrifice the omentum with the Pâtri or with a leaf—thus it is understood (in the Sruti)—
19. With (the formulas), 'To Hara, Mrida, Sarva, Siva, Bhava, Mahâdeva, Ugra, Bhîma, Pasupati, Rudra, Saṅkara, Îsâna svâhâ!'
20. Or with the last six (parts of that formula),
21. Or with (the formula), 'To Rudra svâhâ!'
22. Let him make Bali offerings towards the four quarters (of the horizon), to each on four rings of Kusa net-work, with (the formulas), 'The hosts, Rudra, which thou hast towards the eastern direction,

15. Round the middle of the head means, between the two horns. Nârâyana.

16. See above, I, 11.

22. This Bali offering is performed, according to Nârâyana, before the Svish/akrîṭ oblation of the chief sacrifice. On kusasûna the commentator has the note, 'Darbhastambais trîṇais ka kalpavad (or rather, as Prof. Stenzler writes, ka/akavad) grathitvâ sarveshâm agram grîhitvâ, ekîkrîtya grathitâḥ kusasûnâ ukṣante.'

to them this (offering is brought). Adoration to thee! Do no harm to me!' In this way the assigning (of the offerings is performed) according to the different quarters (of the horizon).

23. With the following four hymns he should worship the four quarters, viz. 'What shall we to Rudra,' 'These prayers to Rudra,' 'To thee, O father,' 'These songs to Rudra with the strong bow' (Rig-veda I, 43, 114; II, 33; VII, 46).

24. (This) worship to the quarters (of the horizon) (is performed) at all sacrifices to Rudra.

25. The husks and chaff (of the rice), the tail, the skin, the head, the feet (of the sacrificial animal) he should throw into the fire.

26. He should turn the skin to some use, according to Sāmvatya.

27. To the north of the fire, on rows of Darbha grass, or on rings of Kusa net-work, he should pour out the blood (of the sacrificial animal) with (the formula), 'Hissing ones! Noisy ones! Searching ones! Seizing ones! Serpents! What here belongs to you, take that.'

28. Then, turning to the north, (he assigns it) to the serpents (in the words), 'Hissing ones! Noisy ones! Searching ones! Seizing ones! Serpents! What here belongs to you, take that.'

Then the serpents take whatever has flowed down there of blood or of the contents of stomach and entrails.

29. All names, all hosts, all exaltations belong

26. Perhaps Sāmvatya is a mis-spelling of the name of the well-known Grīhya teacher Sāmbavya.

27. Darbhavâtâ is explained in the commentary by darbharâgi.

to him ;—to a sacrificer who knows that, he gives joy.

30. Even to a man who only with words sets forth (some part) of that (ceremony), he will do no harm ; thus it is understood (in the Sruti).

31. He should not partake of that (sacrifice).

32. They should not take anything belonging to it into the village. For this god will do harm to (human) creatures.

33. He should keep away his people from the vicinity (of the place where he has sacrificed).

34. On an express injunction, however, he should partake (of that sacrificial food), for it will bring luck.

35. This spit-ox sacrifice procures wealth, (open) space, purity, sons, cattle, long life, splendour.

36. After he has sacrificed, he should let loose another (animal).

37. He should not be without such an animal.

38. Then he will not be without cattle—thus it is understood (in the Sruti).

39. Muttering the Santâtiya hymn, he should go to his house.

40. If disease befalls his cattle, he should sacrifice to that same god in the midst of his cow-stable—

41. A mess of cooked food, which he sacrifices in its entirety.

32. Instead of abhimâruka we ought to read abhimânuka. See Aitareya Brâhmana III, 34, and the Petersburg Dictionary s. v. abhimânuka.

36. He should destine another young animal in the way stated above (Sûtras 7 seqq.) to a new Sûlagava sacrifice.

39. Rig-veda VII, 35. Comp. above, II, 8, 11.

42. Having thrown the sacrificial grass and the Âgya into the fire, he should lead his cows through the smoke.

43. Murmuring the Santâttya hymn, he should go in the midst of his cattle.

44. Adoration to Saunaka! Adoration to Saunaka!

End of the Fourth Adhyâya.

End of the Âsvalâyana-Grihya-sûtra.

PÂRASKARA-GRHYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PÂRASKARA-GR̥HYA-SŪTRA.

THE Gr̥hya-sūtra of Pâraskara, which belongs to the White Yagur-veda and forms an appendix to Kâtyâyana's Srauta-sūtra, has been edited, with a German translation, by the scholar who was the first to make a Gr̥hya text accessible to Orientalists and to begin to grapple with the first and most serious difficulties that beset its interpretation, and who has continued since to do more than any one else towards elucidating that important branch of Vedic literature. It would be very unbecoming in any one engaged in the study of Gr̥hya texts, not to acknowledge most warmly the debt of gratitude which he owes to Professor Stenzler. At the same time the respect due to the veteran editor and interpreter of Āsvalâyana and Pâraskara not only allows, but requires that one who proposes to himself the same task at which Prof. Stenzler has worked with so much learning, should state as clearly as possible what that distinguished scholar has left for others to do, and why one who prepares an English translation of Pâraskara has a very different task from merely translating into English the German translation of Prof. Stenzler.

If I may venture to express in one word the difference between Prof. Stenzler's method, as I understand it, for getting at the meaning of a doubtful or obscure passage, and the method which I have endeavoured to follow, I should say that with Prof. Stenzler the first step and,

I believe, in many cases also the last step is to ask how Gayarâma and Râmakrishna understand the passage in question, while I hold that we ought rather to make ourselves independent from those commentators in the sense in which Prof. Max Müller once expressed himself¹, 'not that I ever despise the traditional interpretation which the commentators have preserved to us, but because I think that, after having examined it, we have a right to judge for ourselves.' There exists a commentary on the Pâraskara-Grîhya which far surpasses in trustworthiness Gayarâma's Sagganavallabha and Râmakrishna's Samskâraganapati, and which is not composed by an author who, as says Goethe,

— im Auslegen ist munter;
Legt er nicht aus, so legt er unter.

But the leaves of that commentary are scattered through a good many volumes. Here we find a few lines of it in the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa or in Kâtyâyana's Srauta-sûtra; there Sânkhâyana or Âsvalâyana has preserved a word or a sentence that belongs to it; or the law-books of Manu or Yâgyavalkya help us to understand a difficult or doubtful aphorism of our text. In one word: the only true commentary on a work like Pâraskara's Grîhya is that which the ancient literature itself furnishes. No one will say that in Prof. Stenzler's translation and notes this commentary has not been consulted. But it has been consulted perhaps not quite as much as it ought to have been, and Râmakrishna and Gayarâma have been consulted too much. They have been consulted and followed in many instances, where a continued consideration of what can be the meaning of a word and what can not, and of what the parallel texts say with regard to the subject in question, would have shown that those commentators, instead of interpreting Pâraskara's meaning, father on him vague opinions of their own.

Perhaps it will not be out of place here to point our criticism, lest it should be deemed unjust, by a few remarks on a single passage of Pâraskara in which the difference of Prof. Stenzler's way of translating and of our own becomes manifest. Of the numerous passages which could be selected for this purpose, I choose Sûtra I, 2, 5, belonging to the description of the setting up of the sacred domestic fire. The text of that Sûtra runs thus :

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xv, p. 2, note 2.

5. aranipradânam eke.

Prof. Stenzler translates as follows :

‘Einige sagen, es müsse durch Reibhölzer erzeugtes Feuer sein.’

The two Sûtras which precede give a description of that ceremony from which evidently the opinion of the ‘eke’ mentioned in this Sûtra differs, or to which they find it necessary to add something. Those Sûtras run thus :

3. After he has fetched fire from the house of a Vaisya who is rich in cattle—

4. All ceremonies are performed as at the cooking of the kâtushprâsya food¹.

It seems evident that the Âkâryas to whom the opinion spoken of in Sûtra 5 belongs, add, or perhaps substitute, to the fetching of the fire which is to be worshipped as the sacrificer's domestic fire, from a rich Vaisya's house, another rite in which an arani, i. e. a stick for kindling the fire by attrition, is made use of in some way or other.

Now if this may be accepted as a vague expression of the general purport of the Sûtra, what is the literal meaning of the words? ‘Some (teachers),’ it says, ‘(prescribe) the pradâna of the kindling stick (or, of the kindling sticks).’

What does pradâna mean? Gayarâma says,

‘prasabda upasabdârthe. aranyupâdânakam eka âkâryâ iṅkṁhanti.’

¹ The food which is eaten by the four chief officiating priests of the Srauta ritual. For these priests a mess of food is prepared at the ceremony of the âdhâna of the Srauta fires.

That is: 'The word pra stands in the sense of the word upa. Some teachers desire that it (i.e. the fire) should have the kindling sticks as its physical basis¹.'

Thus, if Gayarâma is right, Prof. Stenzler's translation would be justified. But can we acquiesce indeed in simply accepting the commentator's opinion? Pradâna is pradâna and not upâdâna, as pradadâti is not upâdatte. Pradadâti means 'he hands over,' and pradâna 'the handing over.' This is an established fact, and an interpreter of a Vedic text should not allow himself to be induced by a statement like that of Gayarâma about the preposition pra standing in the sense of upa, to abate one iota of it. Thus we are obliged, until passages have been discovered which modify our knowledge of what pradâna means—but such passages most certainly will never be discovered—to translate:

5. Some (teachers say that) the handing over of the kindling sticks (takes place).

We should give that translation even if we were not able to find an explanation for it. It appears that Prof. Stenzler, as far as we can judge from his note, has not even thought of the possibility of disregarding the authority of Gayarâma and Râmakrîshna, or of looking through the parallel texts to see whether they do not throw light on what that 'handing over of the kindling sticks' signifies. The text to be consulted first is of course Kâtyâyana's Srauta-sûtra. As the Srauta ritual contains a description of an âdhâna which is in some way the prototype of the corresponding Grîhya ceremony, we may possibly expect to discover, in the course of that description, the statements regarding the arani-pradâna for which we are searching. Now Kâtyâyana², having described the setting up of the fire in the gârhapatyâgâra, states that at sunset the sacrificer and his wife sit down to the west of the fire which has just been established, and then the Adhvaryu hands over to them the two kindling sticks¹. The Paddhati, in describing that act, goes into further details. The Adhvaryu hands over to the sacrificer the two Araṇis, which, as required by custom, are wrapped up in new clothes. The wife takes the adharâraṇi from his hand and puts it on her lap; the sacrificer puts the uttarâraṇi on his lap, and they do homage to them with flowers, saffron, sandal wood, &c.; then, after the performance of some other ceremonies, they put the two Araṇis away on a chair or bench. The two Araṇis have to be kept by the sacrificer; if they are lost or burnt or destroyed in any other way, other Araṇis must be procured, and by their attrition a new fire must be kindled².

¹ Râmakrîshna also, according to Prof. Stenzler's note, explains pradâna by upâdâna, kârana, utpattisthâna.

² IV, 7, 15 seqq. The corresponding passage of the Paddhati is found at p. 35⁸ of Prof. Weber's edition.

Âpastamba likewise mentions, in his description of the *Agnyâdhâna*³, the handing over of the two Araṇis, and indicates a Mantra which the Adhvaryu recites in giving them to the sacrificer, and two other Mantras with the one of which the sacrificer receives them, while he recites the other over the Araṇis, after having taken them into his hands.

Finally we may quote here, as bearing witness to the custom of the Araṇipradâna, a passage taken from Nârâyana's commentary on the Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya. Though the decisive words in that passage rest only on the authority of the commentator and not of the Sûtrakâra himself, they deserve to be taken notice of, as they are not subject to the suspicion that they could be influenced by a misunderstanding of that very Sûtra of Pâraskara of which we are treating. Nârâyana says, in his explanation of Sâṅkhâyana I, 1, 10⁴: 'To the west of the fire the sacrificer, and southwards (of him) the wife sits down. The

¹ IV, 7, 22 : arvatthasamîgarbhâraṇî prayakṣati.

² See the commentary on IV, 7, 22, and the passages of the Karmapradîpa quoted there.

³ Srauta-sûtra V, 8, 7; vol. i, p. 255, of Prof. Garbe's edition.

⁴ Sâyamâhutisamskâro dhvaryupratyaya ity âtâryât.

handing over of the kindling sticks does not take place. For it is a fire fetched (from a Vaisya's house, &c.) which is inaugurated here¹. Then the commentator goes on to quote a Sloka :

‘The handing over of the Aranis which the Adhvaryu sometimes performs,

‘Is not in accordance with the opinion of Suyagña²; he does not approve of kindling the fire by attrition³.’

Thus, I think, no doubt can remain as to the real meaning of Pâraskara's Sûtra : it means what its words signify and what is in accordance with Kâtyâyana and Âpastamba, and it does not mean what the commentators most gratuitously would make it mean.

Perhaps I have dwelt here too long on the interpretation of a few words which are of no peculiar interest in themselves. But I venture to hope that the discussion on these words will serve as a specimen, by which the fundamental difference of two methods of handling our texts may be discerned. Let us never forget how much we owe to the scholars who have followed the first of these methods, but for ourselves let us choose the second.

¹ Agneḥ paskād yagamāno dakṣiṇataḥ patnī ka upavisati. arañipradānam na kartavyam. āhṛitasyāgner eva saṁskārah.

² On this name of Sāṅkhâyaṇa, see my Introduction to the translation of the Sāṅkhâyaṇa-Grhya, above, p. 3.

³ Atrāraṇipradānam yad adhvaryuḥ kurute kvaḥit, mataṁ tan na Suyagñasya mathitam so'stra nekkḥati.

PÂRASKARA-GR̥HYA-SÛTRA.

KÂṆDA I, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. Now henceforth the performance of the domestic sacrifices of cooked food (will be explained).

2. Having wiped (around the surface on which he intends to perform a sacrifice), having besmeared it (with cowdung), having drawn the lines thereon, having taken the earth out (of the lines), having besprinkled (the place with water), having established the (sacred) fire, having spread out the seat for the Brahman to the south, having carried forward (the Pranîta water), having spread (Kusa grass) round (the fire), having put down (the different things used at the sacrifice) according as they are wanted, having prepared two (Kusa blades used as) strainers, having consecrated the Prokshant

1, 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya I, 1; Âśvalâyana-Gr̥hya I, 1, &c. It seems to me that Professor Stenzler is not quite right in giving to the opening words of the text athâtaḥ, which he translates 'nun also,' the explanation: 'das heisst, nach Beendigung des Srauta-sûtra von Kâtyâyana.' I think rather it can be shown that ataḥ does not contain a reference to something preceding; thus the Srauta-sûtra, which forms the first part of the whole Sûtra collection, is opened in the same way by the words athâtoḍdhikâraḥ.

2. The description of the standard form of domestic sacrifice opens with an enumeration of the five so-called bhûsamskâra (parisamuhya, &c.). On the saṁṭhana (for parisamuhya is derived water, having sprinkled (with that water the sacrificial implements) according to what is needed, having poured out (the Âgya or sacrificial butter into the pot), and having put the sacrificial butter on the fire, he should (lustrate the butter by) moving a fire-brand round it.

3. Having warmed the (sacrificial spoon called) Sruva, having wiped it, having besprinkled it (with water), and warmed it again, he should put it down.

4. Having taken the Âgya from the fire, having purified it, having looked at it, and (having purified) the Prokshantî water as above, having taken up the Kusa blades with which he is to take hold (of the Âgya pot) by its under surface, having put pieces of wood on (the fire), and having sprinkled (water round it), he should sacrifice.

5. This is the rite wherever a sacrifice is performed.

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. The setting up of the Âvasathya (or sacred domestic) fire (is performed) at the time of his wedding.

from the root ūh, not from vah ; comp. below, II, 4, 2 : pâninâgnim parisamûhati), see Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 7, 11 ; Gr̥hya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 37, &c. On the lines drawn on the sacrificial surface, see Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 7, 6 seq. ; Âśvalâyaṇa I, 3, 1 ; Gr̥hya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa I, 47 seq.

4. Pûrvavat ('as above') can possibly, as Professor Stenzler understands it, have been said with regard to Kâtîyâṇa's rule, II, 3, 33 : Tâbhyâm (scil. pavitrâbhyâm) utpunâtî Savitur va iti. But it is also possible that the expression may refer to the second Sûtra of this chapter, where it is said, prokshantîh saṃskṛtîya. On upa-yamanân kusân, comp. Kâtîyâṇa I, 10, 6-8.

2, 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 1, 3.

2. At the time of the division of the inheritance, according to some (teachers).

3. After he has fetched fire from the house of a Vaisya who is rich in cattle,—

4. All ceremonies are performed as at the cooking of the kâtushprâsya food.

5. Some (say that) the handing over of the kindling sticks (should take place),

6. Because the Sruti says, 'There are five great sacrifices.'

7. Having cooked a mess of sacrificial food for the deities of the Agnâyâdheya, and having sacrificed the two Âgya portions, he sacrifices (the following) Âgya oblations :

8. 'Thou, Agni' (Vâg. Samhitâ XXI, 3); 'Thus

2. Sânkhâyana I, 1, 4.

3. Sânkhâyana I, 1, 8.

4. The kâtushprâsya food is prepared, at the time of the setting up of the Srauta fires, for the four chief officiating priests of the Srauta sacrifices. Comp. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa II, 1, 4. Kâtâyâna's corresponding rules with regard to the Âdhâna of the Srauta fires are found at IV, 7, 15. 16.

5. Comp. the remarks on this Sûtra, in the Introduction, pp. 265 seq.

6. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 6, 1: 'There are five great sacrifices which are great Sattras, viz. the sacrifice to living beings, the sacrifice to men, the sacrifice to the Manes, the sacrifice to the gods, the Brahmayagñâ.' As the Grihya ceremonies are included here under the category of mahâyagñâs or great sacrifices, they require, according to the teachers whose opinion is stated in Sûtra 5, a form of the Agnâyâdhâna (setting up of the sacred fire) analogous to the Agnâyâdhâna of the Srauta ritual, and containing, like that Âdhâna, the act of the Araṇipradâna or handing over of the kindling woods (Sûtra 5).

7. The deities of the Agnâyâdheya, or of the Srauta ceremony corresponding to the Grihya rite here treated of, are Agni pavamâna, Agni pâvaka, Agni sukî, Aditi. On the Âgyabhâgas, see Sânkhâyana I, 9, 7, &c.

8. The verses Vâg. Samh. XXI, 3, 4, the two verses quoted thou, Agni' (Vâg. Samhitâ XXI, 4); 'This, O Varuna' (XXI, 1); 'For this I entreat thee' (XXI, 2); 'Thy hundred' (Kâty.-Sraut. XXV, 1, 11); 'And quick, Agni' (Kâty. 1.1.); 'The highest one' (Vâg. Samh. XII, 12); 'Be both to us' (ibid. V, 3)—with (these verses he sacrifices) eight (oblations) before (the oblations of cooked food).

9. Thus he sacrifices also afterwards, after he has made oblations of the mess of cooked food to the deities of the Agnyâdheya.

10. And to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit,

11. With (the formulas), 'Into the quick one (has been put) Agni's (sacrificial portion) over which the word vashaṭ has been spoken;' 'What I have done too much;' 'O gods who know the way.'

12. Having sacrificed the Barhis, he partakes (of the sacrificial food).

13. Then food is given to the Brâhmanas.

Kâty. XXV, 1, 11, and fifthly the verse Vâg. Samh. XII, 12, are prescribed for the Sarvaprâyaścitta (or general expiatory ceremony), see Kâtyâyana 1.1.

11. Professor Stenzler, following Gayarâma, takes the whole as one Mantra, which he translates: 'Ungehemmet sei Agni's Spende, die durch die That ich überreich machte, bahnschaffende Götter!' But the words yat karmaṇâtyarîṛikam are the opening words of a Mantra quoted Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XIV, 9, 4, 24, (comp. also Âśvalâyana-Grîhya I, 10, 23; the connection in which atyarîṛikam there stands, shows that the word designates a mistake made in the sacrificial work by doing too much.) The words devâ gâtuvidaḥ are the Pratîka of Vâg. Samhitâ VIII, 21. Thus I have no doubt that also ayâsy Agner vashaṭkṛitam (or possibly ayâsy Agner (?) and vashaṭkṛitam (?)) is a Pratîka. Of course, the translation of these words must remain uncertain until the Mantra to which they belong has been discovered.

12. On the throwing into the fire of the Barhis, comp. Kâtyâyana III, 8.

KANDIKĀ 3.

1. To six persons the Arghya reception is due : to a teacher, to an officiating priest, to the father-in-law, to the king, to a friend, to a Snâtaka.

2. They should honour them (with the Arghya reception) once a year.

3. But officiating priests (they should receive) whenever they intend to perform a sacrifice.

4. Having ordered a seat to be got (for the guest), he says, 'Well, sir ! sit down ! We will do honour to you, sir !'

5. They get for him a couch (of grass) to sit down on, another for the feet, water for washing the feet, the Argha water, water for sipping, and the honey-mixture, i.e. curds, honey, and ghee, in a brass vessel with a brass cover.

6. Another person three times announces (to the guest) the couch and the other things (when they are offered to him).

7. He accepts the couch.

8. He sits down thereon with (the verse), 'I am the highest one among my people, as the sun among the thunder-bolts. Here I tread on whosoever infests me.'

9. With the feet (he treads) on the other (bundle of grass).

3, 1. On vaivâhya, which I have translated 'father-in-law,' comp. the note on Sâṅkhâyana II, 15, 1.

2, 3. Comp. below, Sûtra 31, and Sâṅkhâyana-Gṛîhya II, 15, 10.

6. Ârvalâyana-Gṛîhya I, 24, 7.

8. I have translated according to the reading of Ârvalâyana (l. 1. § 8), vidyutâm instead of udyatâm.

9, 10. There is no doubt that these Sûtras should be divided

10. When he is seated on the couch, he washes (for his guest) the left foot and then the right foot.

11. If (the host) is a Brâhmana, the right first.

12. (He does so) with (the formula), 'The milk of Virâg art thou. The milk of Virâg may I obtain. (May) the milk of Padyâ Virâg (dwell) in me.'

13. He accepts the Arghya water with (the words), 'Waters are ye. May I obtain through you all my wishes.'

14. Pouring it out he recites over (the waters the formula), 'To the ocean I send you; go back to your source. Unhurt be our men. May my sap not be shed.'

15. He sips water with (the formula), 'Thou camest to me with glory. Unite me with lustre. Make me beloved by all creatures, the lord of cattle, unhurtful for the bodies.'

16. With (the formula), 'With Mitra's' (Vâg. Samh., Kâṇvasâkhâ II, 3, 4) he looks at the Madhuparka.

17. With (the formula), 'By the impulse of the god Savitri' (Vâg. Samh. l. l.) he accepts it.

18. Taking it into his left hand he stirs it about thus: pādāyor anyam. viśtara āsînāya savyam pādāṃ prakshālyā dakṣiṇam prakshālayati. Thus it is said in the Khādira-Grîhya: viśtaram āstīrya . . . adhyāsita. pādāyor dvitīyā (scil. rikā) dvau ket. Gobhila has the Sûtra: pādāyor anyam.

11. The words brâhmanas ket refer to the host, as the comparison of Âsvalâyana I, 24, 11, shows.

12. Comp. Âsvalâyana l. l. § 22; Sâṅkhâyaṇa III, 7, 5.

13. The play on words (âpas=waters, avâpnānī=may I obtain) is untranslatable.

16. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya I, 24, 14.

17. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya I, 24, 15.

18. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya l. l. Annasane instead of annâsane is simply a mistake in spelling.

three times with the fourth finger of his right hand with (the formula), 'Adoration to the brown-faced One. What has been damaged in thee, when the food was eaten, that I cut off from thee.'

19. And with the fourth finger and the thumb he spirts away (some part of the Madhuparka) three times.

20. He partakes of it three times with (the formula), 'What is the honied, highest form of honey, and the enjoyment of food, by that honied, highest form of honey, and by that enjoyment of food may I become highest, honied, and an enjoyer of food.'

21. Or with (the verses) that contain the word 'honey,' verse by verse.

22. Let him give the remainder (of the Madhuparka) to a son or a pupil who is sitting to the north.

23. Or let him eat the whole of it (himself).

24. Or he should pour out (the remainder) to the east, at an unfrequented spot.

25. Having sipped water, he touches his bodily organs with (the formula), 'May speech dwell in my mouth, breath in my nose, sight in my eyes, hearing in my ears, strength in my arms, vigour in my thighs. May my limbs be unhurt, may my body be united with my body!'

26. When (the guest) has sipped water, (the host), holding a butcher's knife, says to him three times, 'A cow!'

27. He replies, 'The mother of the Rudras, the daughter of the Vasus, the sister of the Âdityas, the

21. These are the three verses, Vâg. Samhitâ XIII, 27-29.

22. Âsvalâyana-Gṛîhya I, 24, 25. 23. Âsvalâyana l.l. § 27.

24. Âsvalâyana l.l. § 26.

navel of immortality. To the people who understand me, I say, "Do not kill the guiltless cow, which is Aditi." I kill my sin and N.N.'s sin,—thus, if he chooses to have it killed.

28. But if he chooses to let it loose, he should say, 'My sin and N.N.'s sin has been killed. Om! Let it loose! Let it eat grass!'

29. But let the Argha not be without flesh.

30. On the occasion of a sacrifice and of a wedding let (the guest) say, 'Make it (ready).'

31. Even if he performs more than one Soma sacrifice during one year, let only priests who have received (from him) the Arghya reception, officiate for him, not such who have not received it; for this has been prescribed in the Sruti.

KANDIKÂ 4.

1. There are four kinds of Pâkayagñas, viz. the huta, the ahuta, the prahuta, and the prâsita.

2. On the following five occasions, viz. the wedding, the tonsure (of the child's head), the initiation (of the Brahma-kârin), the cutting of the beard, and the parting of the hair, (on these occasions) in the outer hall,

3. On a place that has been smeared (with cow-dung), which is elevated, and which has been sprinkled (with water), he establishes the fire,

29, 30. These Sûtras are identical with two Sûtras in the Sâṅkhâ-yana-Grîhya II, 15, 2, 3. See the note there. It seems to me inadmissible to translate § 29, as Professor Stenzler does: Der Argha darf aber nicht immer ohne Fleisch sein.

31. Sâṅkhâ-yana-Grîhya II, 15, 10.

4. 1-5. See Sâṅkhâ-yana-Grîhya I, 5, 1-5 and the notes.

4. Having kindled it by attrition, according to some teachers, at his marriage.

5. During the northern course of the sun, in the time of the increasing moon, on an auspicious day he shall seize the hand of a girl,

6. Under one of the (three times) three Nakshatras of which a constellation designated as Uttara is first,

7. Or under (the Nakshatras) Svâti, Mrîgasiras, or Rohiṇī.

8. Three (wives are allowed) to a Brâhmana, in accordance with the order of the castes,

9. Two to a Râganya,

10. One to a Vaisya,

11. One Sûdra wife besides to all, according to some (teachers), without using Mantras (at the ceremonies of wedding, &c.).

12. He then makes her put on the (under) garment with (the verse), 'Live to old age; put on the garment! Be a protectress of the human tribes against imprecation. Live a hundred years full of vigour; clothe thyself in wealth and children. Blessed with life put on this garment!'

13. Then the upper garment with (the verse), 'The goddesses who spun, who wove, who spread

6. I. e. under the constellations Uttaraphalgunî or the two constellations following it, Uttarâshâdhâ or the two constellations following it, Uttarabhâdrapadâ or the two constellations following it.

12. The words of the Mantra bhavâ krîshîṇâm abhisastipâvâ no doubt are an imitation of Rig-veda I, 76, 3, bhavâ yagnânâm abhisastipâvâ (where the words are applied to Agni). Thus the use of the masculine abhisastipâvâ with reference to the bride may be accounted for.

13. Comp. Atharva-veda XIV, 1, 45. This parallel passage shows us the way to correct the text of this very much corrupted Mantra.

out, and who drew out the threads on both sides, may those goddesses clothe thee for the sake of long life. Blessed with life put on this garment !'

14. (The bride's father?) anoints the two, (while the bridegroom recites the verse,) 'May the Visve devâs, may the waters unite our hearts. May Mâtariśvan, may Dhâtṛi, may Deshṛi (the 'showing' goddess) join us.'

15. (The bridegroom), having accepted her who is given away by her father, takes her and goes away (from that place) with (the verse), 'When thou wanderest far away with thy heart to the regions of the world like the wind, may the gold-winged Vaikarna (i.e. the wind?) grant that thy heart may dwell with me! N. N. !'

16. He then makes them look at each other (while the bridegroom repeats the verses), 'With no evil eye, not bringing death to thy husband, bring luck to the cattle, be full of joy and vigour. Give birth to heroes; be godly and friendly. Bring us luck, to men and animals.

'Soma has acquired (thee) first (as his wife); after him the Gandharva has acquired (thee). Thy third husband is Agni; the fourth is thy human husband.

14. The literal translation would be: 'He salves together (samañ-gayati) the two . . . May the waters salve together (samañgantu) our hearts.' It was a real anointing of the bridegroom and of the bride, that took place, and we cannot accept Professor Stenzler's translation (based on Gayarâma's note: samañgayati parasparam sammukhikaroti), by which the proper signification of samañgayati is effaced: Dann heisst (der Vater der Braut) sie beide zusammentreten. See the note on Sāṅkhâyaṇa-Grīhya I, 12, 5. The parallel passage of the Khândira-Grīhya runs thus: aparenâgnim auduko gatvâ pâṇigrâham mûrdhany avasiñked, vadhûm ka, samañ-gantv ity avasiktaḥ.

16. Comp. Rig-veda X, 85, 44. 40. 41. 37.

‘Soma has given thee to the Gandharva; the Gandharva has given thee to Agni. Wealth and children Agni has given to me, and besides this wife.

‘Pûshan! Lead her to us, the highly blessed one. Sâ na ûrû usatî vihara, yasyâm usanta/ praharâma sepam yasyâm u kâmâ bahavo nivishṭyâ (nivishṭâ ?) iti.’

KANDIKÂ 5.

1. Having led her around the fire, keeping it on his right side, according to some (teachers)—

2. Having pushed with his right foot a bundle of grass or a mat to the west of the fire, he sits down.

3. While (the bride) touches him, (the following oblations are made :) the two Âghâra oblations, the two Âgya portions, the Mahâvyâhṛitis, the general expiation, the Prâgâpatya oblation, and the Svishṭakṛit.

4. These are regular (oblations) at every sacrifice.

5. The Svishṭakṛit comes before the Mahâvyâhṛitis, if the sacrificial food is different from Âgya.

6. The place for the insertion (of the peculiar oblations belonging to the different sacrifices) is the interval between the general expiation and the oblation to Prâgâpati.

7. At the wedding (he may make oblations) with the Râshṭrabhṛit formulas (i.e. the formulas procuring royal power), if he likes, and with the Gaya and Abhyâtâna formulas (i.e. the formulas procuring

5, 3. See the note on Sâṅkhâya-Gr̥hya I, 9, 12.

6. See the note l. 1.—I have altered the division of Sûtras 6 and 7, so as to draw the word vivâhe to the seventh Sûtra. The rule in § 6 has an entirely general character; the formulas stated in § 7 are given for the particular occasion of the vivâha ceremony.

victory, and aiming [at the hostile powers]), if he knows them—

8. Because it has been said, 'By what sacrifice he wishes to attain success.'

9. (The Gaya formulas run thus): 'Thought and thinking. Intention and intending. The understood and understanding. The mind and the Sakvarî (verses). The new moon and the full moon. Bṛihat and Rathantara.

'Pragâpati, the powerful one in victorious battles, has given victories (or, the Gaya formulas) to manly Indra. To him all subjects bowed down; he has become powerful and worthy of sacrifice. Svâhâ!'

10. (The Abhyâtâna formulas run thus): 'May Agni, the lord of beings, protect me. May Indra, (the lord) of the noblest, Yama, of the earth, Vâyu, of the air, the Sun, of heaven, the Moon, of the Nakshatras, Bṛihaspati, of the Brahman, Mitra, of truth, Varuṇa, of the waters, the sea, of the rivers, food, the lord of royalty, protect me. May Soma, (the lord) of herbs, Savitṛi, of impulses, Rudra, of cattle, Tvashṭri, of forms, Vishṇu, of mountains, the Maruts, the lords of hosts, protect me. May the fathers,

8. Taittirîya Samhitâ III, 4, 6, 1 : 'By what sacrifice he wishes to attain success, at that (sacrifice) he should make oblations with them (i.e. with the Abhyâtâna Mantras): then he will attain success by that sacrifice.'

9. Instead of sa i havyaḥ we ought to read probably sa u havyaḥ, or, as the Taitt. Samh. III, 4, 4, 1 gives, sa hi havyaḥ. The Maitr. Samh. has vihavyaḥ (II, 10, 2).

10. The words, 'in this power of holiness . . . svâhâ!' are to be added to each member of the whole formula (comp. Atharva-veda V, 24). The expressions 'fathers' and 'grandfathers,' which are twice identically repeated in the translation, stand the first time for pitaraḥ pitâmahâḥ, and then for tatâs tatâmahâḥ of the Sanskrit text.

the grandfathers, the former, the later, the fathers, the grandfathers protect me here in this power of holiness, in this worldly power, in this prayer, in this Purohitaship, in this sacrifice, in this invocation of the gods. Svâhâ!—this is added each time.

11. (He then makes other oblations with the following texts :)

‘May Agni come hither, the first of gods. May he release the offspring of this wife from the fetter of death. That may this king Varuṇa grant, that this wife may not weep over distress (falling to her lot) through her sons. Svâhâ !

‘May Āgni Gârhapatya protect this woman. May he lead her offspring to old age. With fertile womb may she be the mother of living children. May she experience delight in her sons. Svâhâ !

‘Make, Agni, all ways of heaven and earth blissful to us, O thou who art worthy of sacrifices. What is great, born on this (earth), and praised, (born) in heaven, that bestow on us, rich treasures. Svâhâ !

‘Come hither, showing us an easy path. Give us bright, undecaying life. May death go away ; may immortality come to us. May Vivasvat’s son make us safe from danger. Svâhâ !’

12. And the (verse), ‘Another way, O death’ (Vâg. Samh. XXXV, 7), after the eating (of the remnant of the sacrificial food), according to some (teachers).

KANDIKÂ 6.

1. The girl’s brother pours out of his joined hands into her joined hands fried grain mixed with Samī leaves.

2. This she sacrifices, with firmly joined hands, standing, (while the bridegroom recites the verses,)

‘To the god Aryaman the girls have made sacrifice, to Agni; may he, god Aryaman, loosen us from here, and not from the husband. Svâhâ!

‘This woman, strewing grains, prays thus, “May my husband live long; may my relations be prosperous.” Svâhâ!

‘These grains I throw into the fire: may this bring prosperity to thee, and may it unite me with thee. May Agni grant us that. N. N.! Svâhâ!’

3. He then seizes her right hand together with the thumb, with (the verses),

‘I seize thy hand for the sake of happiness, that thou mayst live to old age with me, thy husband. Bhaga, Aryaman, Savitri, Purandhi, the gods have given thee to me that we may rule our house.

‘This am I, that art thou; that art thou, this am I. The Sâman am I, the Rik thou; the heaven I, the earth thou.

‘Come! Let us marry. Let us unite our sperm. Let us beget offspring. Let us acquire many sons, and may they reach old age.

‘Loving, bright, with genial minds may we see a hundred autumns, may we live a hundred autumns, may we hear a hundred autumns!’

KANDIKÂ 7.

1. He then makes her tread on a stone, to the north of the fire, with her right foot, (repeating the

2. Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 18, 3; 14, 1; Âśvalâyaṇa I, 7, 13.

3. Rig-veda X, 85, 36; Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 13, 4, &c.

7, 1. Âśvalâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 7, 7; Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 13, 12.

verse,) 'Tread on this stone ; like a stone be firm. Tread the foes down ; turn away the enemies.'

2. He then sings a song : 'Sarasvatî ! Promote this (our undertaking), O gracious one, bountiful one, thou whom we sing first of all that is, in whom what is, has been born, in whom this whole world dwells—that song I will sing to-day which will be the highest glory of women.'

3. They then go round (the fire) with (the verse, which the bridegroom repeats),

'To thee they have in the beginning carried round Sûryâ (the Sun-bride) with the bridal procession. Mayst thou give back, Agni, to the husbands the wife together with offspring.'

4. Thus (the same rites are repeated) twice again, beginning from the fried grain.

5. The fourth time she pours the whole fried grain by the neb of a basket (into the fire) with (the words), 'To Bhaga svâhâ !'

6. After he has led her round (the fire) three times, and has sacrificed the oblation to Pragâpati—

KANDIKÂ 8.

1. Then he makes her step forward in a northern direction seven steps (with the words),

'One for sap, two for juice, three for the prospering of wealth, four for comfort, five for cattle, six for the seasons. Friend ! be with seven steps (united to me). So be thou devoted to me.'

4. See chap. 6, 1.

5. Comp. Khândira-Grîhya I, 3 : sîrpena sishân agnâv opya prâ-gudîkâm utkramayet. See also Gobhila II, 2 ; Âsvalâyana I, 7, 14.

8, 1. The parallel texts have sakhâ and saptapadî for sakhe and saptapadâ of Pâraskara.

2. (The words), 'May Vishnu lead thee' are added to every part (of the formula).

3. From the moment of their going away a man who holds a water-pot on his shoulder, stands silent to the south of the fire;

4. To the north, (according to the opinion) of some (teachers).

5. From that (pot) he sprinkles her (with water) on her head (with the formula),

'The blessed, the most blessed waters, the peaceful ones, the most peaceful ones, may they give medicine to thee'—

6. And with the three (verses), 'Ye waters are' (Vâg. Samh. XI, 50-52).

7. He then makes her look at the sun with (the verse), 'That eye' (Vâg. Samh. XXXVI, 24).

8. He then touches her heart, (reaching) over her right shoulder, with (the words), 'Into my will I take thy heart; thy mind shall follow my mind; in my word thou shalt rejoice with all thy heart; may Pragâpati join thee to me.'

9. He then recites over her (the verse), 'Auspicious ornaments does this woman wear. Come up to her and behold her. Having brought luck to her, go away back to your houses.'

10. A strong man snatches her up from the

3. See above, I, 4, 15. The water mentioned here is designated as stheyâ âpah; see Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya I, 13, 5 seq.; Gr̥hya-samgraha II, 26. 35.

8. See the note on Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya II, 3, 3.

9. Rig-veda X, 85, 33.

10. The Atharva-veda (XX, 127, 12) has the reading pragâya dhvam instead of ni shîdantu (in the first Pâda); the second hemistich there runs thus: iho sahasradakshino • pi Pûshâ ni shîdati.

ground, and sets her down in an eastern or northern direction in an out-of-the-way house, on a red bull's hide, with (the words),

'Here may the cows sit down, here the horses, here the men. Here may sacrifice with a thousand gifts, here may Pūshan sit down.'

11. And what (the people in) the village tell them, that they should do.

12. For it is said, 'At weddings and funerals he shall enter the village ;'

13. (And) because the Śruti says, 'Therefore on these two occasions authority rests with the village.'

14. To the teacher (who helps at the wedding ceremonies) he gives an optional gift.

15. A cow is the optional gift to be given by a Brāhmaṇa,

16. A village by a Rāganya,

17. A horse by a Vaisya.

18. A hundred (cows) with a chariot (he gives to a father) who has only daughters.

19. After sunset he shows her the firm star (i.e. the polar-star) with (the words),

'Firm art thou ; I see thee, the firm one. Firm be thou with me, O thriving one !

12. I have ventured, differing from Professor Stenzler ('Bei der Hochzeit und auf der Leichenstätte richte er sich nach dem Dorfe'), to translate pravisaṭāt according to its original meaning. Could this possibly be a rule for Vānaprasthas who live in the forest and enter the village only on exceptional occasions?

15-17. Sāṅkhāyana I, 14, 13 seqq.

18. Sāṅkhāyana I, 14, 16. Comp. the note there.

19. In the text the word 'firm' (dhruva) is neuter in the two first instances, and refers to the 'firm star'; the third time it is feminine, referring to the bride. Pāraskara has the vocative poshye for the nominative poshyā of Sāṅkhāyana I, 17, 3; comp. above, § 1 sakhe for sakhā.

‘To me Br̥haspati has given thee; obtaining offspring through me, thy husband, live with me a hundred autumns.’

20. If she does not see (the polar-star), let her say notwithstanding, ‘I see,’ &c.

21. Through a period of three nights they shall eat no saline food; they shall sleep on the ground; through one year they shall refrain from conjugal intercourse, or through a period of twelve nights, or of six nights, or at least of three nights.

KANDIKÂ 9.

1. Beginning from the wedding the worshipping of the Aupâsana (i. e. sacred domestic) fire (is prescribed).

2. After sunset and before sunrise (the fire should

21. Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 17, 5, 6; Ârvalâyana I, 8, 10, 11.

9, 1. The expression which I have translated ‘beginning from the wedding’ is upayamanaprabhṛiti. The Indian commentators and Professor Stenzler explain the term upayamana as implying a reference to the Sūtra I, 1, 4, upayamanân kusân âdâya (‘having taken up the Kusa blades with which he is to take hold of the lower surface of the Âgya pot’). ‘The worshipping of the domestic fire,’ says Stenzler, following the native authorities, ‘consists in the rites which have been prescribed above (I, 1, 4), beginning from the word upayamana, i. e. in the taking up of the Kusa blades, the putting of wood on the fire, the sprinkling and sacrificing. As the rites preceding that word, such as the preparation of the sacrificial spoon (I, 1, 3), are hereby excluded, the oblations are offered with the hand.’ It would be easy to show that the upayamanâḥ kusâḥ have nothing at all to do with the regular morning and evening oblations of which these Sūtras treat. The comparison of Ârvalâyana-Gr̥hya I, 9, 1 (see also Manu III, 67, &c.) leaves no doubt that upayamana is to be understood here as derived from upayakṣati in its very frequent meaning of marrying. I have translated the Sūtra accordingly.

2. On the different statements of Vedic authors with regard to the proper time of the morning oblations, see Weber’s Indische Studien, X, 329.

be worshipped) with (oblations of) curds, (rice) grains, or fried grains.

3. (He sacrifices) in the evening with (the formulas), 'To Agni svâhâ! To Pragâpati svâhâ!'

4. In the morning with (the formulas), 'To Sûrya svâhâ! To Pragâpati svâhâ!'

5. 'Men are both Mitra and Varuṇa; men are both the Asvins; men are Indra and Sûrya. May a man be born in me! Again svâhâ!'—with (this verse) a wife who desires to conceive, (should offer) the first (oblation).

KANDIKĀ 10.

1. If (in the chariot) of a king the axle breaks, or something that is bound loosens itself, or the chariot is overturned, or if another accident happens, or (if one of these same things occurs) when a bride is carried home, he establishes the same fire, prepares Âgya, and sacrifices (two Âgya oblations) separately with the two Mantras, 'Here is joy' (Vâg. Samh. VIII, 51 a).

2. Having got ready another chariot, he (i.e. the Purohita or the bridegroom) should make the king or the woman sit down thereon with (the formula), 'In royal power' down to the word, 'in sacrifice'

5. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya I, 17, 9, where the reading and the construction slightly differ. The words punaḥ svâhâ at the end of the Mantra seem to be corrupt; the frequent repetition of pumâṃsam and pumân through the whole verse suggests the correction pumse svâhâ, or pumbhyaḥ svâhâ, 'to the man svâhâ!' or 'to the men svâhâ!'

10, 1. 'The same fire' is the senâgni (the fire belonging to the army) in the case of the king, the nuptial fire in the second case. The two Mantras are the two parts of Vâg. Samh. VIII, 51 a.

(Vâg. Samh. XX, 10), and with the (verse), 'I have seized thee' (ibid. XII, 11).

3. The two beasts that draw the chariot, constitute the sacrificial fee.

4. (This is) the penance.

5. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 11.

1. In the fourth night (after the wedding), towards morning, (the husband) establishes the fire within (the house), assigns his seat, to the south (of it), to the Brahman, places a pot of water to the north, cooks a mess of sacrificial food, sacrifices the two Âgya portions, and makes (other) Âgya oblations with (the following Mantras) :

2. 'Agni! Expiation! Thou art the expiation of the gods. I, the Brâhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. The substance which dwells in her that brings death to her husband, that extirpate in her. Svâhâ!

'Vâyu! Expiation! Thou art the expiation of the gods. I, the Brâhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. The substance which dwells in her that brings death to her children, that extirpate in her. Svâhâ!

'Sûrya! Expiation! Thou art the expiation of the gods. I, the Brâhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. The substance which dwells in her that brings death to cattle, that extirpate in her. Svâhâ!

'Kandra! Expiation! Thou art the expiation of the gods. I, the Brâhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. The substance which dwells in her that brings destruction to the house, that extirpate in her. Svâhâ!

‘Gandharva! Expiation! Thou art the expiation of the gods. I, the Brâhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. The substance which dwells in her that brings destruction to fame, that extirpate in her. Svâhâ!’

3. He sacrifices of the mess of cooked food with (the words), ‘To Pragâpati svâhâ!’

4. Each time after he has sacrificed, he pours the remainder of the oblations into the water-pot, and out of that (pot) he besprinkles her on her head with (the words), ‘The evil substance which dwells in thee that brings death to thy husband, death to thy children, death to cattle, destruction to the house, destruction to fame, that I change into one that brings death to thy paramour. Thus live with me to old age, N.N.!’

5. He then makes her eat the mess of cooked food with (the words), ‘I add breath to thy breath, bones to thy bones, flesh to thy flesh, skin to thy skin.’

6. Therefore one should not wish for sport with the wife of a Srotriya who knows this; for the other one is a person who knows this (and is thereby enabled to destroy a lover of his wife).

7. After he has led her to his house, he should cohabit with her after each of her monthly periods,

8. Or as he likes, because it has been said, ‘May we have intercourse as we like, until a child is born.’

4. The water-pot is that mentioned in Sûtra 1.

6. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa I, 6, 1, 18; XIV, 9, 4, 11 (=Brîhad Âraṇyaka VI, 4, 12; Sacred Books of the East, vol. xv, p. 218).

8. Taittirîya Saṃhitâ II, 5, 1, 5.

9. He then touches her heart, (reaching) over her right shoulder, with (the verse), 'O thou whose hair is well parted! Thy heart that dwells in heaven, in the moon, that I know; may it know me. May we see a hundred autumns; may we live a hundred autumns; may we hear a hundred autumns.'

10. In the same way afterwards.

KANDIKÂ 12.

1. At the beginning of each half-month he cooks a mess of sacrificial food, sacrifices to the deities of the festivals of the new and full moon (as stated in the Srauta ritual), and then sacrifices to the following deities: to Brahman, to Pragâpati, to the Visve devâs, and to Heaven and Earth.

2. To the Visve devâs a Bali is offered, to the domestic deities, and to Âkâsa (i.e. the Ether).

3. From the Vaisvadeva food he makes oblations in the fire with (the formulas), 'To Agni svâhâ! To Pragâpati svâhâ! To the Visve devâs svâhâ! To Agni Svishṭakṛit svâhâ!'

4. Outside (the house) the wife offers the Bali with (the formulas), 'Adoration to the wife! Adoration to the man! To every time of life, adoration! To the white one with the black teeth, the lord of the bad women, adoration!

'They who allure my offspring, dwelling in the village or in the forest, to them be adoration; I offer

9. See above, chap. 8, 8.

12, 1. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya I, 3, 3. The deities of the corresponding Srauta festivals are, at the full moon, Agni and Agni-shomau; at the new moon, Agni, Vishṇu, and Indrâgnî.

2. Comp. below, II, 9, 3.

3. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya II, 14, 3, 4.

a Bali to them. Be welfare to me! May they give me offspring.'

5. The remainder he washes out with water. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 13.

1. If she does not conceive, he should, after having fasted, under (the Nakshatra) Pushya, lay down (in his house) the root of a white-blooming Simhi plant, and on the fourth day, after (his wife) has bathed, he should in the night-time crush it in water and insert it into her right nostril with (the verse), 'This herb is protecting, overcoming, and powerful. May I, the son of this great (mother), obtain the name of a father!'

KANDIKÂ 14.

1. Now the Pumsavana (i. e. the ceremony to secure the birth of a male child),

2. Before (the child in his mother's womb) moves, in the second or third month (of pregnancy).

3. On a day on which the moon stands in conjunction with a Nakshatra (that has a name) of masculine gender, on that day, after having caused (his wife) to fast, to bathe, and to put on two garments which have not yet been washed, and after having in the night-time crushed in water descending roots and shoots of a Nyagrodha tree, he inserts (that into her right nostril) as above, with the two (verses), 13, 1. I have translated according to the reading of a similar Mantra found in the Atharva-veda (VIII, 2, 6), which no doubt is correct, sahasvatî instead of sarasvatî.

14, 3. The words 'as above' refer to chap. 13, 1.

‘The gold-child’ (Vâg. Samh. XIII, 4) and ‘Formed of water’ (ibid. XXXI, 17);

4. A Kusa needle and a Soma stalk, according to some (teachers).

5. And he puts gall of a tortoise on her lap.

If he desires, ‘May (the son) become valiant,’ he recites over him (i.e. over the embryo), modifying the rite (?), ‘The Suparna art thou’ (Vâg. Samh. XII, 4), (the Yagus) before (the formulas called) ‘steps of Vishnu.’

KANDIKÂ 15.

1. Now the Sîmantonnayana (or parting of the pregnant wife’s hair).

2. (It is performed) like the Pumsavana ;

3. In her first pregnancy, in the sixth or eighth month.

4. After he has cooked a mess of sacrificial food, containing sesamum and Mudga beans, and has sacrificed to Pragâpati, he parts for the wife, who is seated to the west of the fire on a soft chair, her hair upwards (i.e. beginning from the front) with a bunch containing an even number of unripe Udumbara

4. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 20, 3.

5. The commentators state that kûrmapitta (gall of tortoise) means ‘a dish with water.’ I place no confidence in this statement, though I cannot show at present what its origin is. I am not sure about the translation of vikṛityâ (or vikṛitya?). But it seems impossible to me that it should be the name of the metre Vikṛiti. ‘Steps of Vishnu’ is a name for the Yagus following in the Samhitâ on the one prescribed in this Sûtra. It begins, ‘Vishnu’s step art thou, &c.’ (Vâg. Samh. XII, 5).

15, 2. I.e. the Nakshatra under which the ceremony is performed, should be of male gender; the wife is to fast, &c. (see chap. 14, 3).

4. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 22, 8; Âsvalâyana I, 14, 4.

fruits, and with three bunches of Darbha grass, with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, with a stick of Vîratara wood, and with a full spindle, with the words, 'Bhûr bhuvaḥ svaḥ.'

5. Or (he parts the hair once) with each of the (three) Mahâvyâhṛitis.

6. He ties (the Udumbara fruits, &c.) to a string of three twisted threads with (the words), 'Rich in sap is this tree; like the tree, rich in sap, be thou fruitful.'

7. (The husband) then says to two lute-players, 'Sing ye the king, or if anybody else is still more valiant.'

8. Here some also prescribe a certain stanza (to be sung by the lute-players): 'Soma alone is our king. May these human tribes dwell on thy banks, O (river) whose dominion is unbroken, N.N.!'—here he names the name of the river near which they dwell.

9. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKĀ 16.

1. Soshyantîm adbhir abhyukshaty egatu dasa-mâsya iti (Vâg. Samh. VIII, 28) prâg yasyai ta iti (ibid. 29).

2. Athâvarâvapatanam, avaitu prîsni sevalam sune garâyv attave, naiva mâmsena pîvari na kasmims kanâyatam ava garâyu padyatâm iti.

3. When the boy is born, he performs for him, before the navel-string is cut off, the medhâganana

6. Sâṅkhâya I, 22, 10.

7. Sâṅkhâya l.l. §§ 11, 12; Âśvalâyana l.l. § 6.

8. Âśvalâyana l.l. § 7. I take avimuktaṭakre to be the vocative of the feminine.

16, 1. Satapatha Brâhmana XIV, 9, 4, 22.

2. Atharva-veda I, 11, 4.

(production of intelligence) and the âyushya (rite for procuring long life).

4. (The medhâganana is performed in the following way :) With his fourth finger and with (an instrument of) gold he gives (to the child) honey and ghee, or ghee (alone), to eat with (the formulas), 'Bhûh I put into thee; bhuva^h I put into thee; sva^h I put into thee. Bhûr bhuva^h sva^h everything I put into thee.'

5. He then performs the âyushya.

6. Near his navel or his right ear he murmurs: 'Agni is long-lived; through the trees he is long-lived. By that long life I make thee long-lived.

'Soma is long-lived; through the herbs he is, &c.

'The Brahman is long-lived; through the Brâhmanas it is, &c.

'The gods are long-lived; through ambrosia (amrita) they are, &c.

'The Rishis are long-lived; through their observances they are, &c.

'The Fathers are long-lived; through the Svadhâ oblations (or oblations made to the Manes) they are, &c.

'Sacrifice is long-lived; through sacrificial fee it is, &c.

'The ocean is long-lived; through the rivers it is long-lived. By that long life I make thee long-lived;'

7. And three times the verse, 'The threefold age' (Vâg. Samh. III, 62).

8. If he desires, 'May he live his full term of

4. Comp. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XIV, 9, 4, 23 seqq. (Brâhad Âraṇyaka VI, 4, 24 seqq.; S. B. E., XV, 222 seq.). The text has anâmikayâ suvarṇântarhitayâ, which literally is: with the nameless (or fourth) finger, between which (and the food) gold has been put.

life,' he should touch him with the Vâtsapra hymn (Vâg. Samh. XII, 18-29).

9. From the Anuvâka beginning with 'From heaven' (XII, 18 seqq.) he omits the last Rik (XII, 29).

10. Having placed five Brâhmanas towards the (five) regions, he should say to them, 'Breathe ye upon this (child).'

11. The (Brâhmana placed) to the east should say, 'Up-breathing!'

12. The one to the south, 'Back-breathing!'

13. The one to the west, 'Down-breathing!'

14. The one to the north, 'Out-breathing!'

15. The fifth one, looking upwards, should say, 'On-breathing!'

16. Or (the father) may do that himself, going round (his child), if he can find no (Brâhmanas).

17. He recites over the place at which (the child) is born: 'I know, O earth, thy heart that dwells in heaven, in the moon. That I know; may it know me. May we see a hundred autumns; may we live a hundred autumns; may we hear a hundred autumns.'

18. He then touches him with (the verse), 'Be a stone, be an axe, be imperishable gold. Thou indeed art the Self called son; thus live a hundred autumns.'

11 seqq. In translating the technical terms for the different kinds of breath, I adopt the expressions chosen by Professor Max Müller, S. B. E., XV, 94. As to the whole rite, comp. Satap. Br. XI, 8, 3, 6.

17. Comp. above, I, 11, 9. The comparison of the parallel Mantra leaves scarcely any doubt that veda (the first word of the verse) is the first, not the third person, and bhûmi the vocative case. Compare the vocative darvi of the Vâg. Samhitâ, while the Atharva-veda has darve. Lanman, Noun-Inflection, p. 390.

18. Satapatha Brâhmana XIV, 9, 4, 26; Âsvalâyana I, 15, 3.

19. He then recites over his mother (the verse), 'Thou art Idâ, the daughter of Mitra and Varuna; thou strong woman hast born a strong son. Be thou blessed with strong children, thou who hast blessed us with a strong son.'

20. He then washes her right breast, and gives it to the child with (the verse), 'This breast' (Vâg. Samh. XVII, 87);

21. The left (breast) with (the verse), 'Thy breast which' (ibid. XXXVIII, 5)—with these two (verses).

22. He puts down a pot of water near her head with (the verse), 'O waters, you watch with the gods. As you watch with the gods, thus watch over this mother who is confined, and her child.'

23. Having established near the door the fire that has been kept from (the wife's) confinement, he throws into that fire at the time of the morning and evening twilight, until (the mother) gets up (from childbed), mustard seeds mixed with rice chaff (pronouncing the following names of demons and goblins): 'May Sandâ and Marka, Upavîra, Saundîkeya, Ulûkhala, Malimluka, Dronâsa, Kyavana vanish hence. Svâhâ!

'May Âlikhat, Animisha, Kimvadanta, Upasruti, Haryaksha, Kumbhin, Satru, Pâtrapâni, Nrîmani, Hantrimukha, Sarshapârûna, Kyavana vanish hence. Svâhâ!'

24. If (the demon bringing disease) Kumâra attacks the boy, the father covers him with a net

19. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa l. l. § 27. Comp. Professor Max Müller's note, S. B. E., XV, 223 seq.

21. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa l. l. § 28.

23. On the sûtikâgni, comp. Satap. Br. l. l. § 23; Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya I, 25, 4, &c.

24. Kûrkura seems to me, and this is also Professor Stenzler's or with an upper garment, takes him on his lap, and murmurs : 'Kûrkura, Sukûrkura, Kûrkura, who holds fast children. Ket! ket! doggy! let him loose. Reverence be to thee, the Sîsara, barker, bender.

'That is true that the gods have given a boon to thee. Hast thou then chosen even this boy?

'Ket! ket! doggy! let him loose. Reverence be to thee, the Sîsara, barker, bender.

'That is true that (the divine she-dog) Saramâ is thy mother, Sîsara thy father, the black and the speckled (two dogs of Yama) thy brothers.

'Ket! ket! doggy! let him loose. Reverence be to thee, the Sîsara, barker, bender.'

25. He then touches (the boy) with (the words), 'He does not suffer, he does not cry, he is not stiff, he is not sick, when we speak to him and when we touch him.'

KANDIKĀ 17.

1. On the tenth day (after the birth of the child) the father, having made (his wife) get up, and having fed the Brâhmaṇas, gives a name (to the child),

2. Of two syllables, or of four syllables, beginning with a sonant, with a semivowel in it, with a long vowel (or) the Visarga (at its end), with a *Kṛî*t (suffix), not with a Taddhita ;

3. With an uneven number of syllables, ending in â, with a Taddhita (suffix) to a girl.

4. (The name) of a Brâhmaṇa (should end in) opinion, identical with kurkura, kukkura ('dog'). The Petersburg Dictionary explains it, 'Name eines die Kinder bedrohenden Dämons (vielleicht eine Personification des Hustens).'

17, 1. Comp. Gobhila II, 8, 14; Âsvalâyaṇa I, 15, 4.

sarman (for inst. Vishvasarman), that of a Kshatriya in varman (for inst. Lakshmiarman), that of a Vaisya in gupta (for inst. Kandragupta).

5. In the fourth month (follows) the going out.

6. He makes (the child) look at the sun, pronouncing (the verse), 'That eye' (Vâg. Samhitâ XXXVI, 24).

KANDIKÂ 18.

1. When he returns from a journey, he approaches his house in the manner stated above.

2. When he sees his son, he murmurs, 'From limb by limb thou art produced; out of the heart thou art born. Thou indeed art the Self called son; so live a hundred autumns!'

3. He then kisses his head with (the words), 'With the himkâra (the mystical syllable hin) of Pragâpati, which gives thousandfold life, I kiss thee, N. N.! Live a hundred autumns!'

4. And three times with (the words), 'With the himkâra of the cows.'

5. In his right ear he murmurs, 'Bestow on us, O bountiful, onward-pressing Indra, plentiful, rich treasures. Give us a hundred autumns to live; give us many heroes, strong-jawed Indra;'

6. In the left ear, 'Indra, bestow on us the best treasures, insight of mind, happiness, increase of wealth, health of our bodies, sweetness of speech, and that our days may be good days.'

7. For a girl he only kisses the head silently.

18, 1. See Kâtyâyana, Srauta-sûtra IV, 12, 22 seq.: With the words, 'House, be not afraid,' &c. (Vâg. Samh. III, 41) he approaches the house. With, 'For peace you' (III, 43) he enters it.

5. Rig-veda III, 36, 10.

6. Rig-veda II, 21, 6.

KANDIKĀ 19.

1. In the sixth month the Annaprāsana (or first feeding with solid food).

2. Having cooked a mess of sacrificial food, and sacrificed the two Âgyabhâgas, he offers two Âgya oblations, (the first with the verse,) 'The gods have generated the goddess Speech; manifold animals speak her forth. May she, the sweet-sounding, the cow that (for milk) gives sap and juice to us, Speech, the highly-praised one, come to us. Svâhâ!'

3. And the second (oblation) with (the verse), 'May vigour us to-day' (Vâg. Samhitâ XVIII, 33).

4. He then sacrifices (four oblations) of cooked food with (the formulas),

'Through up-breathing may I enjoy food. Svâhâ!

'Through down-breathing may I enjoy smells. Svâhâ!

'Through my eye may I enjoy visible things. Svâhâ!

'Through my ear may I enjoy renown. Svâhâ!'

5. After he has eaten (himself), he should set apart food of all kinds, and of all different sorts of flavour, and should give it to him (i.e. to his son) to eat,

6. Silently or with (the word), 'Hanta' (i.e. Well!). For it is said in the Sṛuti, 'Men (live on) the word hanta.'

7. (He feeds the child) with flesh of (the bird called) Bhâradvâgt, if he wishes (to the child) fluency of speech,

8. With flesh of partridge, if abundance of nourishment,

-
9. With fish, if swiftness,
 10. (With flesh) of (the bird) Kṛīkashâ, if long life,
 11. (With flesh) of (the bird) Âti, if desirous of holy lustre,
 12. With all, if desirous of all.
 13. Or each (sort of) food one by one. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas, or each (sort of) food one by one. Then feeding of the Brâhmanas.

End of the First Kânda.

KÂNDA II, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. When (the son) is one year old, the Kûdâkarana (i.e. the tonsure of his head, should be performed),
2. Or before the lapse of the third (year).
3. When he is sixteen years old, the Kesânta (i.e. the shaving of his beard, is to be done),
4. Or, according as it is considered auspicious by all (the different families).
5. After food has been distributed to the Brâhmanas, the mother takes the boy, bathes him, puts on him an under and an upper garment which have not yet been washed, and putting him on her lap, she sits down to the west of the fire.
6. The father taking hold (of his wife) sacrifices Âgya oblations, and after he has partaken of the (sacrificial) food, he pours warm water into cold water with (the words), 'With warm water come hither, Vâyu! Aditi, cut the hair.'
7. At the Kesânta ceremony (Sûtra 3), 'hair and beard' (instead of 'hair').
8. He throws a piece of fresh butter, or of ghee, or some curds into it (i.e. into the water, Sûtra 6).
9. Taking some (water) he moistens the hair near the right ear with (the formula), 'On the impulse of Savitri may the divine waters moisten

1, 6. I see no reason why we should not take Aditi for the name of the goddess. Comp. Atharva-veda VI, 68, 2 : Aditiḥ smaṣru vapatu. Âsvalâyana-Gṛihya I, 17, 7. Stenzler translates: Ungebundener, die Haare schneide.

9. The text has, dakshinam godânam undati. The commentary on Kâtyâyana V, 2, 14 explains dakshina godâna : dakshinakarnasamṣpavartinam siraḥpradesam. Sâyana on Satapatha Brâhmana III, 1, 2, 4 (p. 323, ed. Weber) : godânam nâma karnasyopari pradesaḥ. The Mantra reoccurs in Kâtyâyana, loc. cit.—Savitri thy body in order that long life and splendour may be thine.'

10. Having unravelled (the hair) with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, he puts three young Kusa shoots into it with (the formula), 'Herb' (Vâg. Samh. IV, 1).

11. Taking up a copper razor with (the formula), 'Friendly by name' (Vâg. Samh. III, 63 a), he cuts (the hair) with (the formula), 'I cut off' (ibid. 63 b), (and with the formula,) 'The razor with which Savitrî, the knowing one, has shaven (the beard) of king Soma and Varuna, with that, ye Brâhmanas, shave his (head), in order that he may be blessed with long life and may reach old age.'

12. Cutting off (the Kusa shoots) together with the hair, he throws them on a lump of bull's dung which they keep northwards of the fire.

13. In the same way two other times silently.

14. The moistening and the other rites are repeated with the two other (tufts of hair).

15. Behind with (the verse), 'The threefold age' (Vâg. Samh. III, 62).

16. Then on the left side with (the verse), 'With that prayer by which mayst thou, a mighty one, go to heaven, and long mayst thou see the sun : with that prayer I shave thee for the sake of life, of existence, of glory, of welfare.'

prasûtâh should not be translated as Prof. Stenzler does: von Sav. erzeugt, but: von Sav. angetrieben.

10. This Sûtra is identical with Kâtyâyana-Sraut. V, 2, 15.

11. Compare Kâtyâyana I. l. § 17. The Mantra, Vâg. Samh. III, 63 b, is that given by Kâtyâyana, the following one is that which the other Grîhya texts prescribe.

16. See the various readings of the Mantra given by Professor Stenzler, p. 53 of his critical annotations, and compare Ârvalâyana-Grîhya I, 17, 13.

17. Three times he shaves round the head, from left to right ;

18. Including the face, at the Kesânta ceremony.

19. (He recites the verse,) 'When the shaver shaves his hair with the razor, the wounding, the well-shaped, purify his head, but do not take away his life.'

20. He adds (the word), 'his face' at the Kesânta ceremony.

21. With that water (Sûtras 6, 8) he moistens his head, and gives the razor to the barber with (the words), 'Without wounding him, shave him.'

22. The locks of hair which are left over, are to be arranged as it is considered auspicious (in his family).

23. Having put away that lump of dung with the hair so that it is hidden in a cow-stable, or in a small pond, or in the vicinity of water, he gives an optional gift to the teacher ;

24. A cow at the Kesânta ceremony.

25. After the Kesânta has been performed, (the youth) should observe chastity and should not be shaven through one year, or twelve nights, or six nights, or at least three nights.

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. He should initiate a Brâhmaṇa, when he is eight years old, or in the eighth year after the conception,

2. A Râganya, when he is eleven years old,

19. Ârvalâyana I. I. § 16 ; Atharva-veda VIII, 2, 17.

20. He repeats the Mantra, given in Sûtra 19, in this form : 'When the shaver shaves his hair and his face,' &c.

23. See above, Sûtra 12.

3. A Vaisya, when he is twelve years old.
4. Or according as it is considered auspicious by all (the different families).
5. He should feed the Brâhmanas. And they lead him (i. e. the boy who is to be initiated) on, with his head shaven all round, and decked with ornaments.
6. (The teacher) makes him place himself to the west of the fire and say, 'I have come hither for the sake of studentship (brahmaçarya).' And, 'I will be a student (brahmaçarin).'
7. He then makes him put on a garment with (the verse), 'In the way in which Brîhaspati put the garment of immortality on Indra, thus I put (this garment) on thee, for the sake of long life, of old age, of strength, of splendour.'
8. He ties round him the girdle with (the verse which the youth recites), 'Here has come to me, keeping away evil words, purifying my kind as a purifier, clothing herself, by (the power of) inhalation and exhalation, with strength, this sisterly goddess, this blessed girdle.'
9. Or, 'A youth, well attired, dressed, came hither. He, being born, becomes glorious. Wise sages extol him, devout ones, turning their minds to the gods.'
10. Or silently.
11. He gives him the staff.

6 seqq. Comp. Satapatha Brâhmana XI, 5, 4.

8. The commentators differ as to whether the Âçârya or the youth should recite the verse. The comparison of Sâṅkhâya II, 2, 1 would rather tend to show that it is the teacher, but Gobhila II, 10 says expressly : athainam triṣṇuṣṇu pradakṣiṇam muṇḍamekhalâm pariḥaran vâçayatiṣṇu duruktât paribâdhmânety ritasya goptrîti vâ.

9. Rig-veda III, 8, 4. The verse is originally addressed to Agni.

12. (The student) accepts it with (the verse), 'My staff which fell down to the ground in the open air, that I take up again for the sake of long life, of holiness, of holy lustre.'

13. According to some (teachers he accepts the staff) in the way prescribed for the inauguration, because it is said, 'He enters upon a long Sattrâ (or sacrificial period).'

14. (The teacher) then with his joined hands fills (the student's) joined hands with water with the three (verses), 'Ye waters are' (Vâg. Samh. XI, 50 seqq.).

15. He then makes him look at the sun with (the verse), 'That eye' (Vâg. Samh. XXXVI, 24).

16. He then touches his heart, (reaching) over his right shoulder, with (the words), 'Into my will I take thy heart, &c.'

17. He then seizes (the student's) right hand and says, 'What is thy name?'

18. He replies, 'I am N. N., sir!'

19. He then says to him, 'Whose pupil (brahma-kârin) art thou?'

20. After (the student) has said, 'Yours!'—(the

13. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 3, 3, 2: 'He enters upon a long Sattrâ, who enters upon Brahmaçarya.' The student, when being initiated, ought to behave, consequently, in the same way as those who receive the inauguration (dikshâ) for a long Sattrâ. This is the meaning of this Sûtra. The rules regarding the staff handed over by the Adhvaryu to the Yagamâna at the dikshâ ceremony are given by Kâtyâyana, Srauta-sûtra VII, 4, 1-4.

15. See above, I, 8, 7.

16. See above, I, 8, 8.

17 seqq. Comp. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 4, 1 seqq.

20. The words 'I am thy teacher' are omitted in one of Professor Stenzler's MSS. and in his translation. But they are given in the parallel passage of the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa. The teacher replies,) ' Indra's pupil art thou ; Agni is thy teacher ; I am thy teacher, N. N. ! '

21. He then gives him in charge to living beings with (the formulas), ' To Pragâpati I give thee in charge. To the god Savitrî I give thee in charge. To the waters, the herbs I give thee in charge. To Heaven and Earth I give thee in charge. To the Visve devâs I give thee in charge. To all beings I give thee in charge for the sake of freedom from harm.'

KANDIKÂ 3.

1. Having walked round the fire with his right side turned towards it, he sits down.

2. Taking hold (of the student), he sacrifices the Âgya oblations, and after having partaken (of the remains of the sacrificial food) he instructs him, ' A student art thou. Take water. Do the service. Do not sleep in the day-time. Keep silence. Put fuel on (the fire). Take water.'

3. He then recites the Sâvitri to him, who is seated to the north of the fire, with his face to the west, sitting near the teacher, and looks (at the teacher), while (the teacher) looks at him ;

4. Some say, to (the student) who is standing or seated to the south (of the fire) ;

5. Pâda by Pâda, (then) hemistich by hemistich, and the third time the whole (verse), reciting it together (with the student) ;

parallel passage in Sâṅkhâyaṇa (Gr̥hya II, 3, 1) also runs thus :
Agnir âtâryas tava, asâv, aham kôbhau.

3, 1 seqq. Comp. the corresponding section of the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 4, 6 seqq.

4. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa l. l. § 14.

6. After one year, or after six months, or after twenty-four days, or after twelve days, or after six days, or after three days.

7. To a Brâhmana, however, he should recite a (Sâvitri) verse in the Gâyatri metre immediately. For it is said in the Sruti, 'To Agni indeed belongs the Brâhmana.'

8. A Trishûbh verse to a Râganya,

9. A Gagati to a Vaisya,

10. Or a Gâyatri to (persons of) all (castes).

KANDIKÂ 4.

1. Now the putting on of fuel.

2. He wipes with his hand (the ground) round the fire with (the formula), 'Agni, glorious one, make me glorious. As thou, glorious Agni, art glorious, thus, O glorious one, bring me to glory. As thou, Agni, art the preserver of the treasure of sacrifice for the gods, thus may I become the preserver of the treasure of the Veda for men.'

3. Having sprinkled (water) round the fire from left to right, he stands up and puts a piece of wood on (the fire) with (the texts),

'To Agni I have brought a piece of wood, to the great Gâtavedas. As thou, Agni, art inflamed by wood, thus I am inflamed by life, insight, vigour, offspring, cattle, holy lustre.

'May my teacher be the father of living sons; may I be full of insight, not forgetful (of what I have learned); may I become full of glory, of splendour, of holy lustre, an enjoyer of food. Svâhâ!

7. Satapatha Brâhmana I. I. § 12.

4, 2. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Grihya I, 22, 21.

3. As to anirâkarishnu, comp. anirâkarana below, III, 16.

4. In the same way (he puts on) a second (piece of wood) ; and thus a third.

5. Or (each piece) with (the verse), 'Thine is this' (Vâg. Samh. II, 14).

6. Or (he uses) both (this verse and the formulas given in Sûtra 3).

7. The wiping and sprinkling (of water) round (the fire are repeated) as above.

8. Having warmed his two hands, he wipes his mouth with (the formulas) :

'Agni, thou art the protector of bodies. Protect my body. Agni, thou art the giver of life. Give me life. Agni, thou art the giver of vigour. Give me vigour.

'Agni, what is deficient in my body, that restore to fulness.

'May the god Savitri bestow insight on me, may the goddess Sarasvatî, may the two divine Asvins, wreathed with lotus, (bestow) insight (on me).'

KANDIKÂ 5.

1. Here (follows the student's) going the rounds for alms.

2. A Brâhmana should beg, addressing (the woman from whom he begs alms) with the word 'Lady' put at the beginning (of his request),

3. A Râjanya, with the word 'Lady' inserted in the middle,

4. A Vaisya, with the word 'Lady' put at the end.

5. (He should beg) from three women who will not refuse ;

7. See above, Sûtras 2, 3.

5, 2-4. Comp. Âpastamba I, 3, 28 seqq. (S. B. E., II, p. 12) ; Manu II, 49, &c. The Brâhmana says, 'Lady, give alms ;' the Kshatriya, 'Give, lady, alms ;' the Vaisya, 'Give alms, lady.'

5. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya I, 22, 7.

6. From six, twelve, or an indefinite number.
7. From his own mother first, according to some (teachers).
8. Having announced the alms received to his teacher, he should stand, keeping silence, through the rest of the day, according to some.
9. Having fetched fire-wood out of the forest without damaging (trees), he should put them on that fire as above, and should abandon his silence.
10. He should sleep on the ground and eat no pungent or saline food.
11. Wearing the staff, worshipping the fire, being obedient to his Guru, going the rounds for alms—(these are the standing duties of students).
12. He should avoid honey or flesh, bathing (for pleasure), sitting on high seats, going to women, falsehood, and taking what is not given to him.
13. Let him live forty-eight years as a student for the (four) Vedas,
14. Or twelve years for each Veda,
15. Or until he has learnt it.
16. The garment (of a student) should be made of hemp, flax, or wool (accordingly as he is a Brâhmana, a Kshatriya, or a Vaisya).
17. The upper garment of a Brâhmana should be an antelope-skin,
18. That of a Râganya the skin of a spotted deer,

8. Âsvalâyana I. l. §§ 10, 11.

9. The meaning is, he should not break off branches, but only gather such as have fallen off. The words 'as above' refer to chap. 4.

12. Gautama II, 13; Âpastamba I, 2, 23. 28-30. 21. 26.

13-15. Comp. Âpastamba I, 2, 12 seqq.; Âsvalâyana I, 22, 3.

19. That of a Vaisya a goat's or cow's skin.
20. Or if (the prescribed sort of garment) is not to be had, a cow's hide (should be worn) by all, because to that belongs the first place (among all kinds of garments).
21. The girdle of a Brâhmana should be of Muñga grass,
22. That of a Kshatriya should be a bowstring,
23. That of a Vaisya, made of Mûrvâ (i. e. Sanseveria Roxburghiana).
24. If there is no Muñga (or the other articles prescribed in §§ 22, 23, the girdles should be made) of Kuśa grass, of the plant Asmantaka, or of Balbaga grass (respectively).
25. The staff of a Brâhmana is of Palâśa wood,
26. That of a Râganya of Bilva wood,
27. That of a Vaisya of Udumbara wood.
28. Or all (sorts of staffs may be used) by all.
29. If the teacher calls him, he shall rise and then answer.
30. If (the teacher calls him) while he is lying down, (he should answer) sitting; if sitting, standing; if standing, walking up (to the teacher); if walking up, running up.
31. If he behaves thus, his fame when he has become a Snâtaka (i. e. when he has taken the bath at the end of his studentship) will be (such that people will say of him), 'To-day he stays there; to-day he stays there.'
32. There are three (kinds of) Snâtakas: a Vidyâ-snâtaka (i. e. a Snâtaka by knowledge), a Vrata-

24. Manu II, 43.

32-35. Comp. Âpastamba I, 30, 1-3; Manu IV, 31. The term of the vows extends through forty-eight (or thirty-six, &c.)

snâtaka (i. e. a Snâtaka by the completion of his vows), and a Vidyâ-vrata-snâtaka (i. e. a Snâtaka both by knowledge and by the completion of his vows).

33. He who performs the Samâvartana ceremony, after having finished the study of the Veda, but before the time of his vows has expired, is a Vidyâ-snâtaka.

34. He who performs the Samâvartana, after his vows have expired, but before he has finished the study of the Veda, is a Vrata-snâtaka.

35. He who performs the Samâvartana, after having finished both, is a Vidyâ-vrata-snâtaka.

36. Until the sixteenth year the time (for being initiated) has not passed for a Brâhmana,

37. Until the twenty-second for a Râganya,

38. Until the twenty-fourth for a Vaisya.

39. After that (time has passed), they become patitasâvitrika (or persons who have lost the right of learning the Sâvitri).

40. No one should initiate such men, nor teach them, nor perform sacrifices for them, nor have intercourse with them.

41. After the time has passed, (they should do) as has been prescribed.

42. A person whose ancestors through three generations have been patitasâvitrikas, is excluded years; see above, Sûtras 13 and 14, and below, chap. 6, 2. 3. The Samâvartana is the returning home of the student at the end of his studentship.

36-40. Âsvalâyana-Grihya I, 19, 5 seqq. &c.

41. The general rule here alluded to is, according to the commentators, that given by Kâtâyâna, Srauta-sûtra XXV, 1, 12. 13. There it is stated which expiatory oblations have to precede, when a rite that has not been performed, or that has been incorrectly performed, is to be performed for good.

42. Those who have not been initiated in due time, may act as from the sacrament (of initiation) and from being taught the Veda.

43. Of such persons those who desire to receive the sacrament, may perform the sacrifice of Vrâtyastoma and then study the Veda, if they like. For (of persons who have done that) it is said, 'Inter-course with them is permitted.'

KANDIKÂ 6.

1. When he has finished the Veda, he should take the bath (by which he becomes a Snâtaka);

2. Or when (he has gone through) a studentship of forty-eight years;

3. Or also after (a studentship) of twelve years, according to some (teachers).

4. (Let him take the bath only) if his Guru has given his permission.

5. Rules (regarding the performance of sacrifices), (texts) to be used (at the sacrifices according to those rules), and reasoning (on the meaning of the rites and texts): that is the Veda.

6. Some say (that the Veda should be studied) with its six Ângas; stated in Sûtra 41. But if the omission has been perpetuated through three generations, the descendant of such persons is subject to the rules stated in Sûtras 42 and 43.

43. Kâtyâyana, after having given the rules on the Vrâtyastoma sacrifice (see Weber, Indische Literaturgeschichte, 2nd edition, pp. 73 seq.), says: 'Intercourse with them (who have performed that sacrifice) is permitted' (Sraut. XXII, 4, 28).

6, 2. See above, chap. 5, 13.

3. See chap. 5, 14.

5. The expressions of the text for the three categories are, vidhi, vidheya, tarka.

6. I.e. with the supplementary treatises on ritual, grammar, astronomy, etymology, pronunciation of the Mantras, and metrics.

7. Not so that he only knows the ceremonial.

8. But optionally by one who knows the sacrifices (the bath may be taken).

9. (The student) after having embraced (the feet of) his teacher, and put the pieces of wood on the fire, places himself northwards of an enclosure, on eastward-pointed Kusa grass, to the east of eight vessels with water.

10. 'The fires that dwell in the waters; the fire which must be hidden, the fire which must be covered, the ray of light, the fire which kills the mind, the unwavering one, the pain-causing one, the destroyer of the body, the fire which kills the organs—those I leave behind. The shining one, that I seize here'—with (this formula) he draws water out of one (of the eight vessels);

11. With that he besprinkles himself with (the words), 'Therewith I besprinkle myself for the sake of prosperity, of glory, of holiness, of holy lustre.'

12. (A second time he draws water out of a second of the eight vessels with the formula given in Sûtra 10, putting instead of the words, 'The shining one, &c.,' the verse): 'By which you have created prosperity, by which you have touched surâ, with which you have anointed the eyes, which is your glory, O Asvins.'

10. As to the names of the eight hostile powers of Agni, comp. Saṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya V, 2; Atharva-veda XIV, 1, 38; XVI, 1; Mantrabrâhmaṇa I, 7, 1.

12. The reading of the Mantra seems to be corrupt. Compare the form in which it is given by Bhavadeva, quoted in Professor Stenzler's note on this Sûtra. Instead of sriyam we have probably to read, as Bhavadeva has, striyam; instead of akshyau, akshân. Professor Stenzler very pertinently compares Atharva-veda XIV, 1, 35-36. Comp. also Mantrabrâhmaṇa I, 7, 5.

13. (And he draws water out of three other vessels) with (the three verses), 'Ye waters are' (Vâg. Samh. XI, 50-52), verse by verse.

14. With (water drawn out of) the three other (vessels he besprinkles himself) silently.

15. Having loosened his girdle with (the verse), 'The highest band' (Vâg. Samh. XII, 12), having put it down, having put on another garment, he worships the sun—

16. With (the formulas), 'Rising, bearing a shining spear, Indra stands with the Maruts; he stands with the gods who walk in the morning. Thou art a tenfold winner; make me a tenfold winner. Make me attain to renown.

'Rising, bearing a shining spear, Indra stands with the Maruts; he stands with the gods who walk in day-time. Thou art a hundredfold winner; make me a hundredfold winner. Make me attain to renown.

'Rising, bearing a shining spear, Indra stands with the Maruts; he stands with the gods who walk in the evening. Thou art a thousandfold winner; make me a thousandfold winner. Make me attain to renown.'

17. Having eaten curds or sesamum seeds, and having had his matted hair, the hair of his body, and his nails cut, he should cleanse his teeth with an Udumbara branch with (the verse), 'Array yourselves for the enjoyment of food. Here has come king Soma: he will purify my mouth with glory and fortune.'

16. In the Mantra the Pâraskara MSS. give bhrâgabhrîṣṇuḥ and bhrâgabhrîṣṇīḥ, and the Gobhila MSS. (Grîhya III, 4) bhrâgabhrîṣṇīḥ. Possibly the instrumental case is right. Böhlingk and Roth propose to read bhrâgadhrîṣṇīḥ.

18. Having anointed himself and bathed again, he takes up the salve for nose and mouth with (the words), 'Satisfy my up-breathing and down-breathing; satisfy my eye; satisfy my ear!'

19. Having poured out to the south the water with which he has washed his hands, with (the words), 'Ye fathers, become pure,' he should salve himself and murmur, 'May I become well-looking with my eyes, well-shining with my face, well-hearing with my ears.'

20. He then should put on a garment which has not yet been washed, or not been soaked in lie, with (the formula), 'For the sake of putting on, of bringing fame, of long life I shall reach old age. I live a hundred long autumns. For the sake of the increase of wealth I will clothe myself.'

21. Then the upper garment with (the verse), 'With glory (come) to me, Heaven and Earth. With glory, Indra and Bṛhaspati! May glory and fortune come to me! may glory be my lot!'

22. If (he has only) one (garment), he should cover himself (with a part of that garment as if it were an upper garment) with the second part of the former (Mantra; Sûtra 20).

23. He takes flowers with (the formula), '(The

20. Comp. Kâtyâyana, Srauta-sûtra VII, 2, 18, to which Sûtra Professor Stenzler refers.

22. I give this translation merely as tentative. Professor Stenzler translates: Wenn er nur Ein Gewand hat, so bedecke er sich (noch einmal) mit dem oberen Theile des zuerst angelegten. Gayarâma (MS. Chambers 373) says: ekam ket tatrâpi paridhâna-mantram paśhitvâ vastrârdham paridhâya dvir âkamyâ uttarârdhe grhîtvâ uttarîyam [sic] mantram paśhitvottariyam krîtvâ punar dvir âkamed ity arthaḥ.

23. Hiraṇy.-Gṛîhya I, 3, 11, 4.

flowers) which Gamadagni has brought for the sake of faith (has brought to Sraddhâ?), of love, of the senses, them I take with glory and with fortune.'

24. He then ties them (to his head) with (the verse), 'The high, wide glory, which Indra has created for the Apsarases, the flowers bound up with that, I tie on to me, to bring me glory!'

25. He binds a turban to his head with (the verse), 'A youth, well attired.'

26. (He puts on) the two ear-rings with (the words), 'An ornament art thou; may more ornaments be mine.'

27. He salves his two eyes with (the formula), 'Vritra's' (Vâg. Samh. IV, 3 b).

28. With (the words), 'Brilliant art thou,' he looks at his image in a mirror.

29. He takes a parasol with (the words), 'Thou art Brîhaspati's covering. Shelter me from evil. Do not shelter me from splendour and glory.'

30. With (the words), 'You are supports; protect me from all sides,' he puts on the two shoes.

31. With (the words), 'From all powers of destruction protect me on all sides,' he takes a bamboo staff.

32. (For) the tooth-cleaner, &c. (the Mantras stated above are to be used) in every case; (for) the garment, the parasol, and the shoes, the Mantra (should only be recited) if they have not been used before.

KANDIKÂ 7.

1. We shall state the rules of conduct for a Snâtaka.

2. Another (may observe those rules) optionally.

25. See above, chap. 2, 9.

3. Dancing, singing, and playing musical instruments, let him neither perform himself nor go (to see or hear it).

4. Sing, however, he may at his pleasure, for there is another saying, 'He sings either or he rejoices in (other people's) singing.'

5. If everything goes well, he shall not go by night to another village, and shall not run.

6. He shall avoid looking into a well, climbing up a tree, gathering fruits, crawling through narrow openings, bathing naked, jumping over uneven ground, using harsh language, looking at the sun while it is rising or setting, and begging. For there is a Sruti: 'After he has bathed, he should not beg. For he who bathes, drives away from himself begging.'

7. If it rains, he shall go without an upper garment, and shall say, 'May this, my thunderbolt, drive away evil.'

8. He shall not look at himself in water.

9. Agâtalomnīm vipumsīm shandham ka nopahaset.

10. Let him call a pregnant woman 'viganyā' (one who will give birth to a child);

11. An ichneumon (nakula), sakula;

12. A skull (kapāla), bhagāla;

7, 3. Comp. the similar rule given in the Buddhist Vinaya, Mahāvagga I, 56.

4. Satapatha Brāhmaṇa VI, 1, 1, 15.

5. If no accident happens that makes his going to another village necessary.

6. The passage of the Sruti quoted is found in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XI, 3, 3, 7. Comp. Vasishṭha XII, 2, 10, 25; Gautama IX, 32, 61, &c.

12. Gautama IX, 21.

13. A rainbow (Indra-dhanu, Indra's bow), manidhanu (the jewelled bow).

14. A cow that suckles (her calf) he should not point out to another (person).

15. Let him not void urine or excrements on a ploughed field, on uncovered ground, or while rising up or standing.

16. He shall wipe himself with wood that has fallen off by itself.

17. He should not wear a dyed garment.

18. He should be fixed in his intentions, protect everybody's life, and be everybody's friend, as it were.

KANDIKÂ 8.

1. Through a period of three nights (after the Samâvartana) he should keep (the following) observances.

2. He shall eat no flesh and not drink out of an earthen vessel.

3. He shall avoid seeing women, Sûdras, dead bodies, black birds, and dogs, and shall not talk to (such beings).

4. He shall not eat funeral food, or food of a

13. Gautama IX, 22; Vasishtha XII, 32. 33; Âpastamba I, 31, 18.

14. Gautama IX, 23; Âpastamba I, 31, 10.

15. Gautama IX, 38; Vasishtha XII, 13; Âpastamba I, 30, 15.

18. Before easing himself, he shall first cover the ground with grass or the like.

17. Gautama IX, 4; Âpastamba I, 30, 10.

8, 1. The words of this Sûtra are repeated from Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XIV, 1, 1, 28 (only for karati it is said here karati).

2. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa l. l. § 30.

3. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa l. l. § 31. Black birds, according to the commentators, mean crows.

4. Funeral food is such food as described below, III, 10, 26.

Sûdra, or of a woman lying-in (during the period of her impurity).

5. He shall not void urine or excrements, or spit out in the sun-shine, and shall not cover himself against the sun.

6. He shall take warm water for (the rites) in which water is wanted.

7. At night he shall eat by the light (of a lamp or a fire-brand).

8. Or only speaking the truth (suffices instead of the other observances).

9. Also a person who has received the dīkshâ (or inauguration for a Soma sacrifice), should observe these rules beginning from (that which regards) the sun-shine (Sûtra 5), if he performs the Pravargya ceremony.

KANDIKÂ 9.

1. Now (follow) the five great sacrifices.

2. Of the Vaisvadeva food he should, after having sprinkled (water) round (the sacred fire), make oblations, with the word Svâhâ (each time repeated), to Brahman, to Pragâpati, to the (deities) of the house, to Kasyapa, and to Anumati.

3. To the domestic deities (he offers) three

9. The Pravargya ceremony, one of the preparatory ceremonies of the Soma sacrifice (Indische Studien, X, 363), was not performed at every Soma sacrifice, but there were certain restrictions regarding its performance; see Indische Studien, IX, 219 seq.

9, 1. The five Mahâyagñas are, the sacrifice to the gods, the sacrifice to living Beings, the sacrifice to the Fathers, the sacrifice to the Brahman, the sacrifice to men. As to the meaning of the five categories, see Âsvalâyana-Gṛhya III, 1.

2. Compare above, I, 12, 3.

3. Compare above, I, 12, 2.

(Balis) in the water-pot : to Parganya, to the waters, to the Earth ;

4. To Dhâtri and Vidhâtri at the two door-posts ;

5. To the different quarters (of the horizon), to Vâyu and (to the presiding deities) of the quarters ;

6. In the middle three (Balis) to Brahman, to the Air, to the Sun.

7. To the north of those (he offers Balis) to the Visve devâs and to all the beings ;

8. Further on to Ushas and to the Lord of beings ;

9. To the south (to the Fathers) with (the words), 'To the Fathers, Svadhâ ! Adoration !'

10. Having rinsed out the vessel, he should pour it out towards the north-west with (the words), 'Consumption ! this to thee !'

11. Taking the Brâhmana's portion (of the food which he is going to distribute), he should give it to a Brâhmana, after he has made him wash himself, with (the words), 'Well ! (this) to thee !'

12. To (religious) mendicants and to guests they should apportion (food) as due to them.

13. The persons belonging to the house, the young and the old, should eat what is due to them ;

14. Afterwards the householder and his wife.

15. Or the householder (should eat) first, because

11. What I have translated 'the Brâhmana's portion' is agra. See on this word the remark of Nîlakantha quoted by Böhlingk-Roth s.v. agrahâra : agram brâhmanabhoganam, tadartham hriyante râgadhanât prâhakkriyante te-grahârâh kshetrâdayah. According to different commentators and lexicographers one Agra is equal to four or to sixteen mouthfuls of food.

15. I cannot indicate any more than Professor Stenzler could, where the passage here quoted occurs in a Brâhmana.

the Śruti says, 'Therefore the householder should eat the sweetest food before his guests.'

16. Every day he should sacrifice with the word svâhâ. If he has no food (to offer, he should make his offering) with something else, be it even a piece of wood (only), to the gods, or be it (only) a water-pot, to the Fathers and to men.

KANDIKĀ 10.

1. Now (follows) the Adhyâyopâkarman (or opening ceremony at the beginning of the annual course of study).

2. When the herbs appear, (when the moon stands in conjunction) with Śravana, on the full-moon day of the Śravana month, or on the fifth (Tithi) of the Śravana month under (the Nakshatra) Hasta ;

3. Having sacrificed the two Āgya portions, he offers two Āgya oblations, (namely,)

4. To the Earth and to Agni, if (he studies) the Rig-veda,

5. To the Air and to Vâyu, if the Yagur-veda,

6. To the Heaven and to the Sun, if the Sâma-veda,

7. To the quarters (of the horizon) and to the Moon, if the Atharva-veda;

8. (Besides) to the Brahman, to the metres in every case,

9. And to Pragâpati, to the gods, to the Rishis, to Faith, to Insight, to Sadasaspati, to Anumati.

10. The same (oblations are made) when the

16. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gṛhya II, 17, 2 ; Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 6, 2.

10, 2. Comp. Āśvalâyana-Gṛhya III, 5, 2. 3 and my note.

10. On the different vratas (observances) connected with the observances are imposed (on a student) or given up (by him, after having been kept through the prescribed period of time).

11. With (the verse), 'Sadasaspati' (Vâg. Samh. XXXII, 13) (the teacher) three times (sacrifices) fried grains.

12. All should repeat (that verse after him).

13. After each oblation they should each time put on the fire three pieces of Udumbara wood, fresh branches with leaves, anointed with ghee, reciting the Sâvitri.

14. And the students (should put wood on the fire) in the manner stated above.

15. With (the verse), 'Luck may bring us' (Vâg. Samh. IX, 16) they should eat the fried grains without chewing them.

16. With the verse, 'Of Dadhikrâvan' (Vâg. Samh. XXIII, 32) they should eat curds.

17. As many pupils as he wishes to obtain, so many sesamum grains should he sacrifice with a dice-board, with the Sâvitri or with the Anuvâka, 'Bright-resplending' (Vâg. Samh. XVII, 80 seqq.).

18. After they have eaten (the remainder of the sacrificial food, the teacher) should pronounce the word Om and then repeat the Sâvitri three times, and the beginnings of the Adhyâyas to (the students) who are seated facing the west :

study of the Veda, such as the Sukriya-vrata, the Sâkvara-vrata, &c., comp. especially Sâṅkhâya-Grhya II, 11. 12 and the notes there.

14. See above, chap. 4.

17. Âkarshaphalakena. Râmakrishna states that this is a board of Udumbara wood, of the length of an arm, and of the shape of a serpent. (See Professor Stenzler's note.)

18. The following Sûtras clearly show that this rule is intended for students of the Yagur-veda only.

19. The beginnings of the sections belonging to the (different) Rîshis, if they are Bahvrikas (i. e. if they study the Rîg-veda),

20. The Parvans, if they are Khandogas (i. e. if they study the Sâma-veda),

21. The Sûktas, if they are Atharvans.

22. All murmur: 'May it be ours in common; may it bless us in common; may this Brahman be powerful with us together. Indra knows that through which, and in which way, no hatred may spring up amongst us.'

23. Through a period of three nights they should not study (the Veda).

24. And they should not cut the hair of their bodies and their nails.

25. Some say (that this should not be done) till the Utsarga (i. e. the concluding ceremony of the annual course of study).

KANDIKÂ 11.

1. If (a strong) wind is blowing, and on the new-moon day there is an entire interruption of study.

2. If one has partaken of a Srâddha dinner, if a meteor falls, or distant thundering is heard, or if the earth quakes, or if fiery apparitions are seen, and when a new season begins, (the study shall be interrupted) until the same time next day.

3. If the Utsarga ceremony has been performed,

20. On the division of the Sâma-veda into Parvans, comp. Weber, Indische Literaturgeschichte, 2nd edition, p. 72.

11, 1. 'Entire interruption' means, according to the commentators, that not only the study of the Veda itself, but also that of the Vedângas, or even all sorts of worldly instruction are forbidden.

3. I have left the words sarvarûpe ka untranslated. Evidently if clouds appear, , (it shall be interrupted) through a period of three nights or till twilight has thrice passed.

4. After he has eaten, until he has (washed and) dried his hands; while being in water; at night-time; at the time of the morning and evening twilight; while a dead body or a Kandâla is in the village.

5. While running, while seeing a person of bad fame or who has lost his caste, if a miraculous or happy event happens, as long as (that which occasions the interruption of study) endures.

6. If hoar-frost (lies on the ground), if a musical instrument is heard, or the cry of a person in pain, at the border of the village, in a burial ground, or if a dog, an ass, an owl, a jackal, or a Sâman song is heard, or if a learned person approaches, as long as (that occasion) endures.

7. If his Guru has died, let him go down into water (for offering water-oblations) and interrupt (the study) for ten nights.

8. If one who has performed with him the Tânûnaptra ceremony, or a fellow-pupil (has died), for three nights.

9. If one who is not his fellow-pupil, (has died,) for one night.

sarvarûpa is identical with the doubtful word savarûpa which twice occurs in the Sânkhâyana-Grîhya. See the discussion on that word in the note on Sânkhâyana II, 12, 10.

4. On antardivâkîrtye, comp. Manu V, 85. Gautama XVI, 19.

8. The Tânûnaptra is an invocation directed to Tanûnaptrî (i.e. the wind) by which the officiating priests and the Yagamâna at a Soma sacrifice pledge their faith to do no harm to each other. See Indische Studien, X, 362.

10. After having studied five months and a half, they should celebrate the Utsarga,

11. Or six months and a half.

12. They then mutter this Rik: 'Ye two young sages! The relation which has expired among us, the friendship we dissolve, (turning away) from the condition of friendship.'

13. After having remained together through a period of three nights, they separate.

KANDIKÂ 12.

1. In (the month) Pausha, under (the Nakshatra) Rohinî, or at the middle Ashṭakâ let them celebrate the conclusion of the study (of the Veda).

2. Let them go to the brink of water and make water oblations to the gods, the metres, the Vedas, the Rîshis, the ancient teachers, the Gandharvas, the other teachers, the year with its divisions, and to their own ancestors and teachers.

3. After having four times quickly recited the Sâvitri, they should say, 'We have finished.'

4. Interruption (of the study) and (continuation of the) teaching as stated above.

12. The reading of the Mantra is doubtful. I think it should stand as Professor Stenzler has printed it, except that I should propose to correct yuvâ into yuvânâ (comp. Âsvalâyana-Srauta VI, 12, 12). It is probable that the gods addressed are the two Asvins, who are called kavî and yuvânâ in several passages of the Vedas.

12, 1. See Âsvalâyana-Grîhya III, 5, 20; Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya IV, 6. On the three Ashṭakâs, see below, III, 3, 1.

4. Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya IV, 5, 17, where the same expression kshapana for interruptions of the study is used. The words 'as above' refer to chap. 10, 23. 24.

KANDIKÂ 13.

1. On an auspicious day the harnessing to the plough. Or under (the Nakshatra) Gyeshthâ, (because that rite is) sacred to Indra.

2. To Indra, Parganya, the two Asvins, the Maruts, Udalâkâsyapa, Svâtikârî, Sitâ, and Anumati, he offers curds, rice grains, perfumes, and fried grains, and then makes the bullocks eat honey and ghee.

3. He should put them to the plough with (the verse), 'They harness to the ploughs' (Vâg. Samh. XII, 67).

4. With (the verse), 'For luck may us the plough-shares' (Vâg. Samh. XII, 69) let him plough or touch the plough-share.

5. Or (he may) not (do so), because (that verse) has been prescribed for (the erection of) the Agni (-altar), and the act of sowing stands in connection (with it).

6. After the front-bullock has been sprinkled (with water), they then should plough unploughed ground.

13, 1. Indra is the presiding deity over the constellation Gyeshthâ; see Sânkhâyana-Grîhya I, 26, 16, &c.

2. The names of the genius Udalâkâsyapa and of the female genius Svâtikârî occur, as far as I know, only here. Bôhtlingk-Roth propose to read Sphâtîmkârî ('the goddess who gives abundance').

5. At the Agni-kayana ceremony furrows are drawn with the plough on the Agni-kshetra with the verses Vâg. Samh. XII, 69-72. Afterwards grains of different kinds are sown. See Kâtyâyana XVII, 2, 12; 3, 8; Indische Studien, XIII, 244 seq. Thus in the Srauta ritual the verse Vâg. Samh. XII, 69 stands in a connection which does not conform to the occasion for which it would be used here.

7. He should make oblations of cooked sacrificial food to the same deities as above, when sowing both rice and barley, and at the sacrifice to Sîtâ.

8. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKĀ 14.

1. Now (follows) the Sravanâ ceremony,

2. On the full-moon day of the Srâvana month.

3. He cooks a mess of sacrificial food, fried grains, and a cake in one dish, pounds the greater part of the grains, sacrifices the two Āgya portions, and two (other) Āgya oblations (with the following verses):

4. 'Beat away, O white one, with thy foot, with the fore-foot and with the hind-foot, these seven [children] of Varuṇa and all (daughters) of the king's tribe. Svâhâ !

5. 'Within the dominion of the white one, the Serpent has seen nobody. To the white one, the son of Vidarva, adoration ! Svâhâ !'

6. He makes oblations of the mess of cooked sacrificial food to Vishṇu, to Sravanâ, to the full moon of Srâvana, and to the rainy season,

7. (And oblations) of the grains with (the verse), 'Accompanied with grains' (Vâg. Samh. XX, 29).

7. 'As above' refers to Sûtra 2. On the Sîtâ-yagña, see below, chap. 17.

14, 1 seqq. Comp. Sânkhâya IV, 5; Āsvalâyana II, 1; Gobhila III, 7.

4. Āsvalâyana II, 3, 3; Sânkhâya IV, 18, 1. For Vârunaiḥ and râgabândhavaiḥ I read Vârunîḥ, râgabândhaviḥ. Pragâḥ is an interpolation.

5. Āsvalâyana, loc. cit. One is rather tempted to correct ahir dadamsa kañkana, but Râmakandra's Paddhati on Sânkhâya gives the reading dadarsa, as the Pâraskara MSS. do.

8. He sacrifices flour, over which ghee has been poured, to the serpents (with the following Mantras):

9. 'To the lord of the serpents belonging to Agni, of the yellowish, terrestrial ones, svâhâ !

'To the lord of the white serpents belonging to Vâyu, of the aerial ones, svâhâ !

'To the lord of the overpowering serpents belonging to Sûrya, of the celestial ones, svâhâ !

10. The (cake) in one dish he offers entirely (without leaving a remainder for the sacrificer) with (the formula), 'To the firm one, the son of the Earth, svâhâ !'

11. After he has eaten (of the sacrificial food), he throws a portion of the flour into a basket, goes out, besmears an elevated spot outside the hall (with cowdung), says, while a fire-brand is held (before him), 'Do not step between (myself and the fire),' and without speaking (anything except the Mantras), he causes the serpents to wash themselves, (pouring out water for them, with the formulas:)

12. 'Lord of the serpents belonging to Agni, of the yellowish, terrestrial ones, wash thyself !

'Lord of the white serpents belonging to Vâyu, of the aerial ones, wash thyself !

'Lord of the overpowering serpents belonging to Sûrya, of the celestial ones, wash thyself !'

13. Each time after the washing has been done, he offers to the serpents a Bali of flour, picking out

11. The ceremony with the fire-brand seems to stand in connection with the rule given by Âsvalâyana, II, 1, 13, that before the sacrificer has 'given himself in charge' to the serpents, nobody is allowed to step between him and the Bali destined for the serpents. Comp. also below, Sûtra 23.

13. I have translated upaghâtam by 'picking out.' On the full (portions of it) with (the spoon called) Darvī (with the formulas) :

14. 'Lord of the serpents belonging to Agni, of the yellowish, terrestrial ones, this is thy Bali !

'Lord of the white serpents belonging to Vāyu, of the aerial ones, this is thy Bali !

'Lord of the overpowering serpents belonging to Sūrya, of the celestial ones, this is thy Bali !'

15. After he has made them wash themselves as above, he combs them with combs (with the formulas) :

16. 'Lord of the serpents belonging to Agni, of the yellowish, terrestrial ones, comb thyself !

'Lord of the white serpents belonging to Vāyu, of the aerial ones, comb thyself !

'Lord of the overpowering serpents belonging to Sūrya, of the celestial ones, comb thyself !'

17. (He offers) collyrium, ointment, and garlands with (the same formulas), putting at their end, respectively, the words, 'Salve thy eyes !' 'Anoint thyself !' 'Put on garlands !'

18. The remainder of the flour he pours out on the elevated spot (mentioned in Sūtra 11), pours water on it out of a water-pot, and worships the technical meaning of the term, which implies the omission of the upastarāṇa and abhighāraṇa, see Bloomfield's note on Grihya-samgraha I, 111 (Zeitschrift der deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXV, 568).

15. The words 'as above' refer to Sūtra 11. Pralikhati, which I have translated 'he combs them,' is the same act for which Sāṅkhāyana (IV, 15, 7) says, phareṇa keshayati. I think Professor Stenzler is wrong in translating : Er scharrt (das Mehl) mit Kämmen zusammen. Gayarāma says : pralekhanam ka kramena pratimantram balikandūyanam kaṅkataiḥ. tāni ka vaikaṅkatīyāni prādeśa-mātrāny ekatodantāni kâshthāni bhavanti.

serpents with the three (verses), 'Adoration be to the serpents' (Vâg. Samh. XIII, 6 seqq.).

19. At that distance in which he wishes the serpents not to approach (the house), he should three times walk round the house, sprinkling an uninterrupted stream of water round it, with the two (verses), 'Beat away, O white one, with thy foot' (Sûtras 4 and 5).

20. He gives away the (spoon called) Darvî (Sûtra 13) and the basket (Sûtra 11), having washed and warmed them.

21. Near the door (of the house) they clean themselves with the three (verses), 'O waters, ye are' (Vâg. Samh. XI, 50 seqq.).

22. Having put away that remainder of flour in a hidden place, he should from that time daily till the Âgrahâyani, after sunset, when he has performed the service to the fire, offer to the serpents a Bali of flour, picking out (portions of it) with the Darvî (spoon).

23. When he is offering (the Bali), let no one step between (the sacrificer and the Bali).

24. With the Darvî (spoon) he rinses his mouth. Having washed it, he puts it away.

20. According to the commentators he gives these things to the man who holds the fire-brand (Sûtra 11).

22. The Âgrahâyani is the full-moon day of Mârgasîrsha, on which the Pratyavarohana ceremony is celebrated. See below, III, 2 ; Weber, die vedischen Nachrichten von den Naxatra, II, 332. The expression darvyopaghâtam is the same that has occurred above in Sûtra 13.

23. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya II, 1, 13, and see above, Sûtra 11.

24. Prakshâlâya seems to me to refer to the Darvî ; see Sûtra 20.

25. They eat the (rice) grains which must not form one coherent mass.

26. Then (follows) the feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 15.

1. On the full-moon day of Praushthapada the sacrifice to Indra.

2. Having cooked milk-rice for Indra and cakes, and having put cakes round (the fire), he sacrifices the two Âgya portions and Âgya oblations to Indra, to Indrâni, to Aga Ekapad, to Ahi Budhnya, and to the Proshthapadâs.

3. After he has eaten (his portion of the sacrificial food), he offers a Bali to the Maruts. For the Sruti says, 'The Maruts eat what is not-sacrificed.'

4. (This Bali he offers) in Asvattha leaves, because it is said, 'The Maruts stood in the Asvattha tree.'

25. Asamsyûtâh. Comp. Böhlingk-Roth s.v. sam-siv.

15, 2. After these Âgya oblations follows the chief oblation of the whole sacrifice, the oblation of milk-rice to Indra. In one of Professor Stenzler's MSS. there is a special Sûtra inserted after Sûtra 2, 'Of the cooked food he makes an oblation with (the formula), "To Indra svâhâ."' I do not, however, think it right to receive this Sûtra into the text, as the other MSS. do not support it, and the commentators did not find it in the text which they read.

3. Professor Stenzler's translation, 'Die Maruts essen kein Opfer,' seems to me not quite exact. I should prefer to say, 'Die Maruts essen Nicht-Opfer.' This passage, taken from Satapatha Brâhmana IV, 5, 2, 16, is quoted as supporting the rule that a Bali offering should be made to the Maruts; for in the technical language the term ahuta is applied to Bali offerings (Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grihya I, 10, 7, huto-gnihotrahomena, ahuto balikarmasâ).

4. When Indra called them to his help against Vritra. Satapatha Brâhmana IV, 3, 3, 6.

5. (He offers it) with (the texts), 'Brilliantly resplendent' (Vâg. Samh. XVII, 80-85), Mantra by Mantra,
6. And with the (Mantra called) Vimukha.
7. (This Mantra he repeats only) in his mind.
8. For the Sruti says, 'These are their names.'
9. He murmurs, 'To Indra the divine' (Vâg. Samh. XVII, 86).
10. Then (follows) the feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 16.

1. On the full-moon day of Âsvayuga the (offerings of) Prishâtakas (are made).
2. Having cooked milk-rice for Indra he sacrifices it, mixed with curds, honey, and ghee, to Indra, Indrâni, the two Asvins, the full moon of Âsvayuga, and to the autumn.
3. After he has eaten (his portion of the sacrificial food), he sacrifices with his joined hands a Prishâtaka prepared with curds, with the words, 'May what is deficient be made full to me; may what is full not decay to me. Svâhâ!'
4. The inmates of the house look at the mixture of curds, honey, and ghee, with the Anuvâka,

-
5. This Sûtra is identical with the last words of Kâty. XVIII, 4, 23.
 6. This is the first part of Vâg. Samh. XVII, 86.
 8. Satapatha Brâhmana IX, 3, 1, 26. There it is said that sukragyotis ('brilliantly resplendent') &c. (the words used in Vâg. Samh. XVII, 80) are names of the Maruts.
 9. This Sûtra is identical with Kâty. XVIII, 4, 25.
 - 16, 1. Prishâtaka means a mixture of curds and butter. Comp. Sâṅkhâya IV, 16, 3; Âsvalâyana II, 2, 3; Grîhya-saṃgraha-pariśiṣṭa II, 59.
 3. Âsvalâyana II, 2, 3.

‘May Indra come hither’ (Vâg. Samh. XX, 47 seqq.).

5. They let the calves join their mothers that night and the Âgrahâyant night.

6. Then (follows) the feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 17.

1. Now (follows) the sacrifice to Sîtâ.

2. Wherever he sacrifices, be it (on a field) of rice or of barley, of that grain he should prepare a mess of cooked food.

3. One who has sacrificed may, if he likes, prepare elsewhere also a mess of cooked food, either of rice or of barley.

4. (There should be) no doubt (as to whether rice or barley is to be taken), as a rule thereon has been stated above.

5. If it is impossible (to take one of the two species of corn), (that) is excluded.

6. To the east or to the north of the field, on a

5. Sâṅkhâya IV, 16, 4.

17, 1. The goddess Sîtâ is, as her name indicates, the rustic deity of the furrow.

3. Perhaps the meaning is that a person who has already once performed the Sîtâ-yagña on the field, is allowed, when repeating the sacrifice another time, to celebrate it elsewhere, and to choose at his will between rice and barley.

4. A rule has been given in the Srauta-sûtra (Kâty. I, 9, 1: ‘Rice or barley, if a Havis [is prescribed]’) which shows that it is indifferent whether rice or barley is taken. Thus the sacrificer is free to elect the one or the other. At least this is the traditional meaning of this Sûtra. But possibly we had better understand it otherwise. The sacrificer should offer, according to Sûtra 3, rice or barley. Whether he has to take the one or the other, there can be no doubt, as the rule given above (Sûtra 2) shows that rice should be cooked, if the ceremony is performed for a rice-field, and barley, if for a barley-field.

clean spot that has been ploughed, so that the crop be not damaged,

7. Or in the village, because (there) both (rice and barley) are united, and because no obstacle is there.

8. Where he intends to cook (the sacrificial food), he establishes the fire on a place that has been smeared (with cowdung), which is elevated, and which has been sprinkled (with water), strews (round the fire) Darbha grass mixed with (stalks of) that (sort of corn to which the sacrifice refers), sacrifices the two Âgya portions and Âgya oblations (with the following Mantras) :

9. 'For whom earth and heaven, the intermediate points and the chief points (of the horizon) are veiled with light, that Indra I invoke here. May his weapons be friendly towards us. Svâhâ !

'Whatsoever it be that I wish for at this sacrifice, O killer of Vṛitra, may all that be fulfilled to me, and may I live a hundred autumns. Svâhâ !

'May success, prosperity, earth, rain, eminence, excellence, luck here protect the creatures. Svâhâ !

'In whose substance dwells the prosperity of all Vedic and worldly works, Indra's wife Sitâ I invoke. May she not abandon me in whatever work I do. Svâhâ !

'Her, who rich in horses, rich in cows, rich in delight indefatigably supports living beings, Urvarâ (i. e. the field) who is wreathed with threshing-floors, I invoke at this sacrifice, the firm One. May she not abandon me. Svâhâ !'

10. He makes oblations of the cooked sacrificial food to Sitâ, Yagâ (the goddess of sacrifice), Samâ (the goddess of zealous devotion), Bhûti (the goddess of welfare).

11. Some say that the giving (of the sacrificial food to the deities) accompanies the Mantras.

12. But this is excluded, as the Sruti says, 'The giving (of the oblation to the deity) accompanies the word Svâhâ.'

13. On the Kusa grass which is left over from the strewing (of grass round the fire), he offers a Bali to the protecting demons of the furrow with (the Mantra), 'They who are sitting towards the east with strong bows and quivers, may they protect thee from the east, and be vigilant and not abandon thee. To them I bring adoration, and I offer this Bali to them.'

14. Then to the south with (the Mantra), 'They who are sitting towards the south, not winking the eyes, wearing armour, may they protect thee from the south, and be vigilant and not abandon thee. To them I bring adoration, and I offer this Bali to them.'

15. Then to the west with (the Mantra), 'The powerful ones, the excellent ones, prosperity, earth, Pârshni, Sunamkuri, may they protect thee from the west, and be vigilant and not abandon thee. To them I bring adoration, and I offer this Bali to them.'

16. Then to the north with (the Mantra), 'The fearful ones, like to Vâyu in speed, may they protect

12. The quotation has not been as yet identified in the Sruti itself, but the words quoted are found in Kâty.-Sraut. I, 2, 7.

14. Some words in the beginning of the Mantra are lost. We should probably write: atha dakshinâtaḥ. ye dakshinâto = nimishâḥ . . . varmina âsate, &c. Of course it is impossible to say which is the word that is wanting before (or perhaps after) varminâḥ.

15. Pârshni, which means 'heel,' stands here, of course, as the name of a protecting demon.

thee from the north, on the field, on the threshing-floor, in the house, on the way, and be vigilant and not abandon thee. To them I bring adoration, and I offer this Bali to them.'

17. Of another (sort of food) as the chief (food used at this sacrifice), and with the remainder of Âgya, he distributes Balis as above.

18. And the women should make accompanying oblations, because such is the custom.

19. When the ceremony is finished, he should feed the Brâhmanas. He should feed the Brâhmanas.

End of the Second Kânda.

17. See above, chap. 13, 2.

KÂNDA III, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. (Now shall be explained) the partaking of the first-fruits (of the harvest), of a person who has not set up the (sacred Srauta) fires.

2. He cooks a mess of fresh sacrificial food, sacrifices the two Âgya portions, and two Âgya oblations, (with the formulas),

‘To the hundredfold armed, hundredfold valiant, hundredfold blissful one, the vanquisher of enemies—he who may create a hundred autumns for us, Indra,—may he lead us across (the gulf of) misfortune. Svâhâ !

‘The four paths that go between heaven and earth, trodden by the gods—of these (paths) lead us to that which may bring us freedom from decay and decline, O all ye gods. Svâhâ !’

3. Having made oblations of the mess of cooked food to the Âgrayana deities, he makes another oblation to (Agni) Svishtakṛit with (the verse), ‘Agni, make this (sacrifice) full, that it may be well offered. And may the god destroy all hostile powers. Come hither, showing us a good path. Bestow on us long life, full of splendour and free from decay. Svâhâ !’

4. He then eats (of the fresh fruits with the

1, 1. The corresponding ceremony of the Srauta ritual is treated of in Kâty. IV, 6.

2. A fresh Sthâlîpâka means probably a Sthâlîpâka prepared from the fresh grain of the new harvest.

3. The deities of the Âgrayana ceremony, which occupies in the Srauta ritual the place corresponding to the rite described here, are Indra and Agni, the Visve devâs, Heaven and Earth.

verses), 'May Agni eat first, for he knows how the Havis (is fit for sacrifice); may he, the friend of all human tribes, make the herbs blessed to us.

'From the good you have led us to the better, ye gods! Through thee, the nourishment, may we obtain thee. Thus enter into us, O potion, bringing refreshment, for the good of our children and of ourselves, and pleasant.'

5. Or with the (verse) sacred to Annapati (the Lord of food).

6. For barley, however, (he uses the Mantra), 'This barley, mixed with honey, they have ploughed through Sarasvatî under Manu. Indra was lord of the plough, the hundredfold wise one; ploughers were the Maruts, the exuberant givers.'

7. Then (follows) the feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 2.

1. On the full-moon day of Mârgasîrsha the Âgrahâyani ceremony (is performed).

2. He cooks a mess of sacrificial food, sacrifices two Âgya oblations as at the Sravanâ sacrifice, and other oblations with (the following verses):

'The night whom men welcome like a cow that comes to them, (the night) which is the consort of the year, may that (night) be auspicious to us. Svâhâ!

5. The Annapatiya verse is Vâg. Samh. XI, 83.

6. Comp. manâv adhi, Rig-veda VIII, 72, 2.

2, 2. The two oblations belonging to the Sravanâ ceremony are those stated above, II, 14, 4. 5.

2. The first verses in which the Âgrahâyani night is called the consort of the year, or the image of the year, occur elsewhere with reference to the Ekâshakâ night. See Atharva-veda III, 10; Taitt.

‘The night which is the image of the year, that we worship. May I reach old age, imparting strength to my offspring. Svâhâ!

‘To the Samvatsara, to the Parivatsara, to the Idâvatsara, to the Idvatsara, to the Vatsara bring ye great adoration. May we, undecayed, unbeaten, long enjoy the favour of these (years) which are worthy of sacrifices. Svâhâ!

‘May summer, winter and spring, the rains be friendly, and may autumn be free of danger to us. In the safe protection of these seasons may we dwell, (and) may (they) last (to us) through a hundred years. Svâhâ!’

3. He makes oblations of the cooked food to Soma, to (the Nakshatra) Mrigasiras, to the full moon of Mâgasrsha, and to the winter.

4. After he has eaten (of the sacrificial food), he throws the remainder of the flour into a basket, (and then follow the same rites that have been stated above) from (the sacrificer’s) going out down to their cleaning themselves.

5. After the cleaning he says, ‘The Bali offering is finished.’

6. After they have spread out to the west of the fire a layer (of straw) and a garment that has Samhitâ V, 7, 2, 1. See also below, Pâraskara III, 3, 5. Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idâvatsara, &c. are terms designating the different years of the quinquennial period of the Yuga. See Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 369, 370.

4. See above, II, 14, 11-21 (not 19-21 as indicated by Professor Stenzler).

6. ‘Redescending’ means that they do not sleep any longer on high bedsteads, which they did from the Śrâvanî day till the Āgrahâyānî, on account of the danger from the snakes, but on the ground. See the notes on Sāṅkh.-Gr̥hya IV, 15, 22; 17, 1.

not yet been washed, they 'redescend,' having bathed, wearing garments which have not yet been washed : the master (of the house) southward, his wife to the north (of her husband, and then the other persons belonging to the house) so that each younger one lies more to the north.

7. Having caused the Brahman to sit down southward, and having placed to the north a water-pot, a Samî branch, an earth-clod taken out of a furrow, and a stone, he murmurs, looking at the fire : 'This Agni is most valiant, he is most blessed, the best giver of a thousand boons, highly powerful. May he establish us both in the highest place.'

8. To the west of the fire he joins his hands (and holds them) towards the east.

9. With the three (verses), 'The divine ship' (Vâg. Samh. XXI, 6-8) they ascend the layer (of straw).

10. He addresses the Brahman : 'Brahman, we will redescend.'

11. The Brahman having given his permission, they redescend with (the words), 'Life, fame, glory, strength, enjoyment of food, offspring!'

12. Those who have received the initiation murmur, 'May a good winter, a good spring, a good summer be bestowed on us. Blessed may be to us the rains ; may the autumns be blessed to us.'

13. With (the verse), 'Be soft to us, O earth' (Vâg. Samh. XXXV, 21), they lie down on their right sides, their heads turned towards the east.

10, 11. See the note on § 6.

12. On upeta, which means a person for whom the Upanayana has been performed, see my note, Sânkhâyana-Grîhya II, 1, 1.

14. They arise with (the verse), 'Up! with life, with blessed life. Up! with Parganya's eye, with the seven spaces of the earth.'

15. This (they repeat) two other times, with the Brahman's permission.

16. Let them sleep on the ground four months (after the Pratyavarohana), or as long as they like.

KANDIKÂ 3.

1. After the Âgrahâyanî (full moon follow) the three Ashṭakâs.

2. (The Ashṭakâ is) sacred to Indra, to the Visve devâs, to Pragâpati, and to the Fathers.

3. (The oblations are made) with cakes, flesh, and vegetables, according to the order (of the three Ashṭakâs).

4. The first Ashṭakâ (is celebrated) on the eighth day of the fortnight.

5. Having cooked a mess of sacrificial food and having sacrificed the two Âgya portions, he sacrifices Âgya oblations with (the texts):

(a) 'Thirty sisters go to the appointed place,

14. The verse occurs, with a few differences, in the Kâṇva Sâkhâ of the Vâg. Samhitâ, II, 7, 5.

3, 1. On the Ashṭakâs, celebrated on the eighth days of the three dark fortnights following after the Âgrahâyanî full moon, see Sâṅkhâyana III, 12 seqq.; Âsvalâyana II, 4; Gobhila III, 10.

2. As there are four deities named, I think it probable that they are referred to all Ashṭakâs indiscriminately; comp. Âsvalâyana II, 4, 12. Thus in the Mantras prescribed for the first Ashṭakâ (Sûtras 5 and 6), Indra, the Visve devâs, and Pragâpati are named; to the Fathers belongs the Anvashṭakya ceremony.

3. With regard to the order of these substances the Grîhya texts differ.

5. Comp. Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 3, 11; Atharva-veda III, 10.

(a) The thirty sisters seem to be the days of the month. As to putting on the same badge. They spread out the seasons, the knowing sages; having the metres in their midst they walk around, the brilliant ones. Svâhâ!

(b) 'The shining one clothes herself with clouds, with the ways of the sun, the divine night: manifold animals which are born, look about in this mother's lap. Svâhâ!

(c) 'The Ekâsh/akâ, devoting herself to austerities, has given birth to a child, to the majesty of Indra. Through him the gods have conquered the hostile tribes; he became the killer of the Asuras through his (divine) powers. Svâhâ!

(d) 'You have made me who am not the younger (sister), the younger; speaking the truth I desire this: may I be in his (i.e. the sacrificer's?) favour, as you are; may none of you supplant the other in her work.

(e) 'In my favour dwelt the omniscient one; he has found a firm standing; he has got a footing. May I be in his (i.e. the sacrificer's?) favour, as you are; may none of you supplant the other in her work.

(f) 'On the five dawns follows the fivefold milking; on the cow with the five names, the five seasons. The five regions (of the sky) are estab-madhyekhandas, comp. Taitt. Samh. loc. cit. § 1: khandasvatî ushasâ pepisânê; § 2: katushomo abhavad yâ turîyâ yagñasya pakshâv rîshayo bhavanti, gâyatrîm trishubham gagatîm anushubham brîhad arkam yuṅgânâh suvar âbharann idam.

(d) Probably one Ash/akâ addresses the others, her sisters, as Gayarâma explains this verse.

(f) The explanation by which the 'fivefold milking' is referred to what is called in Taitt. Brâhmana II, 2, 9, 'the milkings of Pragâpati,' seems to me more than doubtful, for 'the milkings lished through the fifteenfold (Stoma); with one common face (they look over) the one world. Svâhâ!

(g) 'She who shone forth as the first, is the child of truth. One (of them) bears the majesty of the waters; one wanders in the courses of the sun; one (in those) of the heat; Savitri shall govern one. Svâhâ!

(h) 'She who shone forth as the first has become a cow in Yama's realm. Give us milk, thou who art rich in milk, year by year. Svâhâ!

(i) 'She, the owner of bright bulls, has come to us with clouds and with light, she who has all shapes, the motley one, whose banner is fire. Carrying on the common work, leading us to old age, come to us thou who art exempt from old age, Ushas! Svâhâ!

(k) 'The consort of the seasons, the first one has come to us, the leader of days, the producer of offspring. Being one, thou shinest manifold, Ushas. Being free from old age, thou leadest to old age everything else. Svâhâ!'

6. He makes offerings of the mess of cooked food with (the verses):

'May the earth be peaceful, the air friendly to us;

of Pragâpati' are only four: viz. the dark night, the moonlight, the twilight, and the day.

(i) Sukra-rishabhâ cannot be translated, as Professor Stenzler does, 'die schönste unter den Lichtern' (Mâdhava: sukreshu nakshatrâdishu shreshthâ), for this meaning of rishabhâ occurs only in later texts. The word is a Bahuvrîhi compound, as the Petersburg Dictionary explains it.

6. In the first verse I have omitted vyasnavai, which impedes the construction and violates the metre. The word has found its way into the text, no doubt, in consequence of the phrase dîrgham âyur vyasnavai occurring in chap. 2, 2. In the second verse may the heavens give us bliss and safety. May the points (of the horizon), the intermediate points, the upper points give us bliss, and may day and night create long life for us. Svâhâ!

‘May the waters, the rays protect us from all sides; may the creator, may the ocean turn away evil. The present and the future, may all be safe for me. Protected by Brahman, may I be well guarded. Svâhâ!

‘May all Âdityas and the divine Vasus, may the Rudras and Maruts be our protectors. May Pragâpati, the highest lord, bestow on us vigour, offspring, immortality, long life. Svâhâ!’

7. And with (the formula), ‘To the Ashṭakâ Svâhâ!’

8. The middle Ashṭakâ (is celebrated) with (the sacrifice of) a cow.

9. He sacrifices the omentum of that (cow) with (the verse), ‘Carry the omentum, O Gâtavedas, to the fathers’ (Vâg. Samh. XXXV, 20).

10. On the day following each (Ashṭakâ), the Anvashṭakâ day, (he brings a sacrifice) with the left ribs and the left thigh, in an enclosure, according to (the ritual of) the Pindapitriyagña.

11. Also to the female (ancestors he makes Pinda offerings) and pours (for them) strong liquor and water oblations into pits, and (offers) collyrium, salves, and garlands.

12. (He may also make oblations), if he likes, to the teacher and to the pupils who have no children.

akṛitad is corrupt. I have translated abhayam; comp. Âsvalâyana II, 4, 14. In the third verse I have left out mayi, as Professor Stenzler has done in his translation.

13. And in the middle of the rainy season (there is) a fourth Ashṭakâ on which vegetables are offered.

KANDIKĀ 4.

1. Now the building of the house.
2. Let him have his house built on an auspicious day.

3. Into the pits (in which the posts shall be erected) he pours an oblation with (the words), 'To the steady one, the earth-demon, svâhâ!'

4. He erects the post.

'This navel of the world I set up, a stream of wealth, promoting wealth. Here I erect a firm house; may it stand in peace, dropping ghee.

'Rich in horses and cows, rich in delight be set up, for the sake of great happiness. To thee may the young calf cry, to thee the lowing cows, the milk-cows.

'To thee (may) the young child (go), to thee the calf with its companions, to thee the cup of Parisrut, to thee (may they go) with pots of curds.

13. I have stated in the note on Sâṅkhâya III, 13, 1 my reasons for believing that the true reading of this Sûtra is not madhyâ-varshe (in the middle of the rainy season), but mâghyavarsha (the festival celebrated during the rainy season under the Nakshatra Maghâs). There are no express rules given with regard to the third Ashṭakâ, but I think we should understand this Sûtra as involving a statement on that Ashṭakâ: (The third Ashṭakâ) and the fourth, on the Mâghyavarsha day, are Sâkâshṭakâs (Ashṭakâs on which vegetables are offered). Sâṅkhâya (Grîhya III, 13, 1) declares that the ritual of the fourth Ashṭakâ is identical with that of the second.

4, 3. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya II, 8, 15.

4. On gagadaiḥ saha (in the third verse) see my note on Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya III, 2, 9.

‘The consort of Peace, the great one, beautifully attired—bestow on us, O blessed one, wealth and manly power, which may be rich in horses and cows, full of sap like a tree’s leaf. May our wealth increase here, clothing itself with prospering’—with (these four Mantras) he approaches the four (posts).

5. Having established the fire inside (the house), having made the Brahman sit down towards the south, having placed a water-pot to the north, and cooked a mess of sacrificial food, he goes out (of the house), and standing near the door, he addresses the Brahman, ‘Brahman, I enter (the house)!’

6. When the Brahman has given his consent, he enters with (the formula), ‘To right I advance, to luck I advance!’

7. Having prepared Âgya and sacrificed two Âgya oblations with (the two parts of the Mantra), ‘Here is joy’ (Vâg. Samh. VIII, 51 a), he sacrifices other oblations with (the verses):

(a) ‘Vâstoshpati! Receive us (into thy protection); give us good entering and drive away from us evil. For what we ask thee, with that favour us: be a saviour to us, to men and animals. Svâhâ!

(b) ‘Vâstoshpati! Be our furtherer; make our wealth increase in cows and horses, O Indu (i.e. Soma). Free from decay may we dwell in thy friendship; give us thy favour, as a father to his sons. Svâhâ!

(c) ‘Vâstoshpati! Let us be in a fellowship with thee, which may be valiant, joyful, and well proceeding. Protect our wishes when we rest and when we do our work. Protect us always, ye (gods), and give us welfare. Svâhâ!

(d) 'Driving away calamity, Vâstoshpati, assuming all shapes, be a kind friend to us. Svâhâ!'

8. He makes offerings of the mess of cooked food (with the following Mantras):

(a) 'Agni, Indra, Bṛihaspati, the Visve devâs I invoke, Sarasvatî and Vâgî. Give me a dwelling-place, ye vigorous ones. Svâhâ!

(b) 'To all the divine hosts of serpents, to the Himavat, the Sudarsana (mountain), and the Vasus, Rudras, Âdityas, Îsâna with his companions, to all these I apply. Give me a dwelling-place, ye vigorous ones. Svâhâ!

(c) 'To forenoon and afternoon both together with noon, to evening and midnight, to the goddess of dawn with her wide path, to all these I apply. Give me a dwelling-place, ye vigorous ones. Svâhâ!

(d) 'To the Creator and the Changer, to Visvakarman, to the herbs and trees, to all these I apply. Give me a dwelling-place, ye vigorous ones. Svâhâ!

(e) 'To Dhâtṛi and Vidhâtṛi, and to the Lord of treasures together with them, to all these I apply. Give me a dwelling-place, ye vigorous ones. Svâhâ!

(f) 'As a lucky, a happy (place), give me this dwelling-place, Brahman and Pragâpati, and all deities. Svâhâ!'

9. After he has partaken (of the sacrificial food), let him put into a brass vessel the different things which he has brought together, Udumbara leaves with strong liquor, green turf, cowdung, curds,

8 a. Vâgî is, as the name shows, the goddess of quick vigour. Gayarâma explains Vâgî, a name of Sîtâ, as a personification of food.

b. Comp. Âsvalâyana II, 1, 14. On gagada, comp. above, § 4.

honey, ghee, Kusa grass, and barley, and let him besprinkle the seats and shrines (for the images of the gods).

10. He touches (the wall and the posts) at their eastern juncture with (the words), 'May luck and glory protect thee at thy eastern juncture.'

11. He touches (them) at their southern juncture with (the words), 'May sacrifice and sacrificial fee protect thee at thy southern juncture.'

12. He touches (them) at their western juncture with (the words), 'May food and the Brâhmana protect thee at thy western juncture.'

13. He touches (them) at their northern juncture with (the words), 'May vigour and delight protect thee at thy northern juncture.'

14. He then goes out (of the house) and worships the quarters (of the horizon, the east) with (the formulas), 'May Ketâ (i.e. will?) and Suketâ (i.e. good-will?) protect me from the east.

'Agni is Ketâ; the Sun is Suketâ: to them I apply; to them be adoration; may they protect me from the east.'

15. Then to the south: 'May that which protects and that which guards, protect me from the south.

'The Day is that which protects; the Night is that which guards; to them I apply; to them be adoration; may they protect me from the south.'

16. Then to the west: 'May the shining one and the waking one protect me from the west.

'Food is the shining one; Breath is the waking one; to them I apply; to them be adoration; may they protect me from the west.'

17. Then to the north: 'May the sleepless one and the not-slumbering one protect me from the north.

‘The Moon is the sleepless one; the Wind is the not-slumbering one; to them I apply; to them be adoration; may they protect me from the north.’

18. When (the house) is finished, he enters it with (the formulas), ‘Law, the chief post! Fortune, the pinnacle! Day and night, the two door-boards!

‘Indra’s house is wealthy, protecting; that I enter with my children, with my cattle, with everything that is mine.

‘Hither is called the whole number (of relatives), the friends whose coming is good. Thus (I enter) thee, O house. May our dwellings be full of inviolable heroes from all sides!’

19. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKĀ 5.

1. Now (follows) the putting up of the water-barrel.

2. To the north-east he digs a pit like (the pit for) a sacrificial post, strews into it Kusa grass, fried grains, fruits of the soap-tree, and other auspicious things, and therein he establishes the water-barrel with (the words), ‘The sea art thou.’

3. He pours water into it with (the verse), ‘Ye

18. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya III, 3, 7 seq.; chap. 4, 10. The comparison of Sâṅkhâyaṇa shows that we have to divide saha pragayâ parubhiḥ, saha yan me kiññid asty, upahûtaḥ, &c. Sâdhusamvritāḥ (if the reading is correct) seems to me to be the nom. plur. of sâdhusamvrit. I understand this to be a Bahuvrīhi compound, in which samvrit means ‘the approaching.’ In Atharva-veda VII, 60, 4 we have sakhâyāḥ svâdusammudaḥ. After sâle a verb meaning ‘I enter,’ or something like that, has been lost.

5, 3. Rig-veda X, 30, 12.

waters, rich in wealth, ye possess goods. Ye bring us good insight and immortality. Ye are the rulers over wealth and blessed offspring. May Sarasvatî give strength to him who praises her!—

4. And with the three (verses), ‘O waters, ye are’ (Vâg. Samhitâ XI, 50 seqq.).

5. Then (follows) feeding of the Brâhmanas.

KANDIKÂ 6.

1. Now the cure for headache.

2. Having moistened his hands, he passes them over his eye-brows with (the verse), ‘From the eyes, from the ears, from the whiskers, from the chin, from the forehead, I drive away this disease of the head.’

3. If (only) one side (of the head aches, he recites the verse), ‘Cleaver! Thou with the disfigured eyes! White-wing! Renowned one! And thou with the various-coloured wing! Let his head not ache.’

4. Then it will get better.

KANDIKÂ 7.

1. (Now will be declared) the making water round about a servant who is disposed to run away.

2. While (the servant) is sleeping, he should discharge his urine into the horn of a living animal, and should three times walk round him, turning his left side towards him, and sprinkle (the urine) round him,

7, 1. Utûla-parimehah. It is probable that utûla, as meaning a slave who habitually runs away, is connected with the use of that word as the name of a tribe in the north-west of India.

with (the verse), 'From the mountain (on which thou art born), from thy mother, from thy sister, from thy parents and thy brothers, from thy friends I sever thee.

'Run-away servant, I have made water round thee. Having been watered round, where wilt thou go?'

3. Should he run away (nevertheless, his master) should establish a fire that has been taken from a wood that is on fire, and should sacrifice (in that fire) Kusa plates (used for protecting the hands when holding a hot sacrificial pan) that have been anointed with ghee, with (the formula), 'May the stumbler stumble round thee, . . . may he tie thee with Indra's fetter, loosen thee for me, and may he lead another one up (to me).'

4. Then he will quietly remain (in his master's house).

KANDIKĀ 8.

1. The spit-ox (sacrificed to Rudra).
2. It procures (to the sacrificer) heavenly rewards, cattle, sons, wealth, renown, long life.
3. Having taken the sacred domestic fire to the

3. Ukhâ yâbhyâm gr̥hyate tâv indvau. Comm. on Kâtyâyana, Sraut. XVI, 4, 2.

In the Mantra I propose to read, pari tvâ hvalano, &c. Nivrit-tendravîrudhaḥ seems to be corrupt; it seems to be a compound of nivṛtta, a second member which is doubtful, and vîrudh (the plant). The meaning may have been 'giving it up to consume the plants.'

4. This Sûtra is word for word identical with chap. 6, 4.

8, 1. Âsvalâyana-Gr̥hya IV, 8.

2. Âsvalâyana, loc. cit. § 35.

3. The 'outspreading' is the establishing of the three sacred Srauta fires, so that the Gr̥hya fire is considered as the Gârhapatya, and the Âhavaniya and Dakshivâgni are taken from it.

forest, and having performed the 'outspreading,' he should sacrifice the animal to Rudra.

4. One that is not gelded.

5. Or (it may be) a cow, on account of the designation.

6. Having cooked the omentum, a mess of sacrificial food, and the portions cut off (of the victim), he sacrifices the omentum to Rudra, the fat to the Air, and the cut-off portions together with the mess of cooked food to Agni, Rudra, Sarva, Pasupati, Ugra, Asani, Bhava, Mahâdeva, Îsâna.

7. (Then follows a sacrifice to) Vanaspati.

8. (To Agni) Svishṭakṛit at the end.

9. Then (follows) the sprinkling round to the different quarters (of the horizon).

10. After the sprinkling has been performed, they sacrifice the Patnî-samyâga offerings to Indrâni, Rudrâni, Sarvânt, Bhavânt, and Agni Grîhapati.

11. The blood he offers in leaves, on (grass-) bunches, as a Bali to Rudra and to his hosts, with (the Mantras),

'The hosts, Rudra, which thou hast to the east, to them this Bali (is given). To them and to thee be adoration!

'The hosts, Rudra, which thou hast to the south . . . to the west . . . to the north . . . upwards . . .

5. On account of the designation of the sacrifice as sūla-gava.

6. Âsvalâyana, loc. cit. § 19.

9. Gayarâma : disâm vyâghâranam kartavyam iti sūtraseshaḥ. taḥ ka vasayâ bhavati yathâgnishomiye.

10. On the Patnî-samyâga offerings, so called because they are chiefly directed to the wives of the gods, see Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 151 seqq.

11. Âsvalâyana, loc. cit. § 22.

downwards, to them this Bali (is given). To them and to thee be adoration !'

12. The contents of the stomach and of the entrails, besmeared with blood, he throws into the fire or buries them in the earth.

13. Having placed the animal so that the wind blows from himself to it, he approaches it with the Rudra hymns, or with the first and last Anuvāka.

14. They do not take anything of that animal to the village.

15. Thereby (also) the cow-sacrifice has been declared.

16. (It is combined) with (the offering of) milk-rice ; (the rites) not corresponding (to that special occasion) are omitted.

17. The sacrificial fee at that (sacrifice) is a cow of the same age (as the victim).

KANDIKĀ 9.

1. Now the letting loose of the bull.

2. (The ceremony) has been declared in the cow-sacrifice.

3. (It is performed) on the full-moon day of Kārttika, or on the (day on which the moon stands in conjunction with) Revatī in the Āsvayuga month.

4. Having set a fire in a blaze in the midst of the 12. As to ūvadhya, comp. Āsvalāyana, § 28.

13. The Rudra hymns form the sixteenth Adhyāya of the Vāgasaneyi Saṃhitā. Either that whole Adhyāya or the first and last Anuvāka of it is recited.

15. Gobhila III, 6.

9, 1 seqq. Comp. Sāṅkhāyana III, 11.

2. See above, chap. 8, 15.

3. Sāṅkhāyana, loc. cit. § 2.

4. Sāṅkhāyana, § 3. Of course, in Professor Stenzler's translation, 'in der Mitte der Küche' is a misprint for 'in der Mitte der Kühe.'

cows, and having prepared Âgya, he sacrifices six (oblations) with (the Mantras), 'Here is delight' (Vâg. Samh. VIII, 51).

5. With (the verses), 'May Pûshan go after our cows; may Pûshan watch over our horses; may Pûshan give us strength'—he sacrifices of (the sacrificial food) destined for Pûshan.

6. After murmuring the Rudra hymns they adorn a one-coloured or a two-coloured (bull) who protects the herd or whom the herd protects. Or it should be red, deficient in no limb, the calf of a cow that has living calves and is a milk-giver; and it should be the finest (bull) in the herd. And besides they should adorn the best four young cows of the herd and let them loose with this (verse), 'This young (bull) I give you as your husband; run about sporting with him, your lover. Do not bring down a curse upon us, by nature blessed ones. May we rejoice in increase of wealth and in comfort.'

7. When (the bull) stands in the midst of the cows, he recites over it (the texts beginning with) 'Bringing refreshment,' down to the end of the Anuvâka (Vâg. Samh. XVIII, 45-50).

8. With the milk of all (the cows) he should cook milk-rice and give it to the Brâhmanas to eat.

5. Rig-veda VI, 54, 5; Sâṅkhâyaṇa, § 5.

6. Sâṅkhâyaṇa, §§ 6-14. On the Rudra hymns, see above, chap. 8, § 13. Perhaps the words mâ naḥ sâpta are corrupt; the correct reading may possibly be, mâ-vasthâta.

7. Sâṅkhâyaṇa, § 15. There is no Mantra in the Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ beginning with the word mayobhûh, but this word occurs in the middle of XVIII, 45 a; the texts which he recites begin at that word and extend down to the end of the Anuvâka. It is clear that mayobhûh was intended in the original text, from which both Sâṅkhâyaṇa and Pâraskara have taken this Sûtra, as the Rîk-Pratîka, Rig-veda X, 169, 1.

9. Some also sacrifice an animal.
10. The ritual thereof has been declared by the (ritual for the) spit-ox.

KANDIKĀ 10.

1. Now the water libations (which are performed for deceased persons).
2. When (a child) that has not reached the age of two years dies, his father and mother become impure.
3. The other (relations) remain pure.
4. (The impurity lasts) through one night or three nights.
5. They bury the body without burning it.
6. If (a child dies) during the impurity of his mother (caused by the child's birth), the impurity lasts till the (mother's) getting up (from child-bed), in the same way as the impurity caused by a child's birth.
7. In this case (of the child being younger than two years) no water libations (are performed).
8. If a child of more than two years dies, all his relations should follow (the corpse) to the cemetery—
9. Singing the Yama song and murmuring the Yama hymn, according to some (teachers).
10. If (the dead person) has received the initiation,

9. According to the commentators, a goat is sacrificed.

10. See chap. 8.

10, 2. Manu V, 68; Yâgñavalkya III, 1.

7. Manu V, 68; Yâgñavalkya III, 1.

9. The Yama song is stated to be the second verse of Taittiriya Âranyaka VI, 5, 3 ('He who day by day leads away cows, horses, men, and everything that moves, Vivasvat's son Yama is insatiable of the five human tribes'); the Yama hymn is Rig-veda X, 14. Comp. Yâgñavalkya III, 2.

10. The bhûmīgoshana (election of the site for the Smaśāna) is

(the rites) from the election of the site (for the Smaśāna) down to their descending into water (in order to bathe themselves) are the same as those prescribed for persons who have set up the (sacred Srauta) fires.

11. They burn him with his (sacred) domestic fire, if he has kept that;

12. Silently, with a common fire, other persons.

13. They should ask one who is related (to the deceased person) by blood or by marriage, for (his permission to perform) the water-libation, in the words, 'We shall perform the libation.'

14. (He replies), 'Do so now and never again,' if the deceased person was not a hundred years old.

15. (He says) only, 'Do so,' if he was.

16. All relations (of the deceased), to the seventh or to the tenth degree, descend into water.

17. If dwelling in the same village, (all) as far as they can trace their relationship.

18. They wear (only) one garment, and have the sacred cord suspended over the right shoulder.

19. With the fourth finger of the left hand they spirt away (the water) with (the words), 'May he drive evil away from us with his splendour' (Vâg. Samh. XXXV, 6).

20. Facing the south, they plunge (into the water).

21. They pour out with joined hands one libation of water to the deceased person with (the words), 'N. N. ! This water to thee !'

22. When they have come out (of the water) and treated of in Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XIII, 8, 1, 6 seqq.; Kâtyâyana Srauta-sûtra XXI, 3, 15 seqq. On the bath taken after the ceremony, see Satapatha Brâhmaṇa XIII, 8, 4, 5; Kâtyâyana XXI, 4, 24.

16. Yâgñavalkya III, 3.

22. Yâgñavalkya III, 7: apavadeyus tân itihâsaiḥ purâtanaiḥ.

have sat down on a pure spot that is covered with grass, (those who are versed in ancient tales) should entertain them (by telling such tales).

23. They return to the village without looking back, in one row, the youngest walking in front.

24. In the doors of their houses they chew leaves of the Pikumanda (or Nimba) tree, sip water, touch water, fire, cowdung, white mustard seeds, and oil, tread upon a stone, and then they enter.

25. Through a period of three nights they should remain chaste, sleep on the ground, do no work and charge nobody (to do it for them).

26. Let them eat food which they have bought or received (from others); (they should eat it) only in the day-time, (and should eat) no meat.

27. Having offered to the deceased person the Pinda, naming his name at the washing, at the offering (of the Pinda), and at the second washing—

28. They should that night put milk and water in an earthen vessel into the open air with (the words), 'Deceased one, bathe here!'

29. The impurity caused by death lasts through three nights;

30. Through ten nights, according to some (teachers).

31. (During that period they) should not perform Svâdhya (or study the Vedic texts for themselves).

23. Yâgñavalkya III, 12.

24. Yâgñavalkya III, 12. 13.

25, 26. Yâgñavalkya III, 16; Manu V, 73; Vasishtha IV, 15.

27. See on the washing and on the offering of the Pinda, Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra IV, 1, 10. 11. Comp. Weber, Indische Studien, X, 82.

28. Yâgñavalkya III, 17.

29, 30. Yâgñavalkya III, 18; Manu V, 59.

32. They should intermit the standing rites, except those performed with the three (Srauta) fires,

33. And (with the exception of those performed) with the (sacred) domestic fire, according to some (teachers).

34. Others should perform (those rites for them).

35. Those who have touched the dead body should not enter the village until the stars appear.

36. If (they have touched it) in the night-time, (they should not enter) till sunrise.

37. The entering and what follows after it is the same (for these persons) as for the others.

38. (Their) impurity lasts through one or two fortnights.

39. The same (rites should be performed) when the teacher (has died),

40. Or the maternal grandfather or grandmother,

41. Or unmarried females.

42. For those who were married, the others should do it,

43. And they for the (others).

44. If one dies while being absent on a journey, (his relations) shall sit (on the ground, as prescribed for impure persons) from the time when they have heard (of his death), performing the water libation

37. The position of this Sûtra after 35, 36 seems to me to indicate that it refers to those who have touched the dead body; comp. Yâgñavalkya III, 14 : pravesanâdikam karma pretasamsparsinâm api. I believe that the same persons are concerned also in Sûtra 38.

42. I.e. the husband and his relatives. Comp. Vasishtha IV, 19.

43. A married female should perform the rites for her husband and his relatives. See Professor Bühler's note on Vasishtha IV, 19; S. B. E., XIV, 28.

44. Yâgñavalkya III, 21; Manu V, 75, 76. Comp. Gautama XIV, 37; Vasishtha IV, 14.

(at that time), until the period (of their impurity) has expired ;

45. If (that period has already) elapsed, through one night or three nights.

46. Optional is the water libation for an officiating priest, a father-in-law, a friend, for (distant) relations, for a maternal uncle, and for a sister's son ;

47. And for married females.

48. On the eleventh day he should give to an uneven number of Brâhmanas a meal at which meat is served.

49. Some also kill a cow in honour of the deceased person.

50. When the Pindas are prepared, the deceased person, if he has sons, shall be considered as the first of the (three) Fathers (to whom Pindas are offered).

51. The fourth one should be left out.

52. Some (make Pinda offerings to a deceased person) separately through one year (before admitting him to a share in the common Pitriyagña).

53. But there is a rule, ' There can be no fourth Pinda '—for this is stated in the Sruti.

54. Every day he shall give food to him (i.e. to the deceased person), and if he was a Brâhmana, a vessel with water.

55. Some offer also a Pinda.

47. See above, § 42.

51. See Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya IV, 2, 8.

52. Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya VIII, 2. Comp. the description of the Sapindâkarana, ibid., chap. 3.

53. There would be four Pindas, if one were to be offered to the recently deceased person, and three others to those Fathers who had received Pinda offerings before his death. Therefore one of these three Fathers is omitted ; see § 51.

54. Comp. Âpastamba I, 13, 1 ; Baudhâyana II, 11, 3.

KANDIKÂ 11.

1. If an animal (is to be sacrificed), let him wash it, if it is not a cow; let him walk round the fires and drive in front (of them) a Palâsa branch into the ground.

2. The winding (of a Kusa rope) round (that branch), the touching (of the animal with the grass-blade), the binding (of it to the branch), and the sprinkling (of the animal with water) should be performed in the way prescribed (in the Srauta-sûtra), and whatever else (is to be done).

3. After he has sacrificed the two oblations before and after the killing of the animal, (he) silently (sacrifices) five other (oblations, directed to Pragâpati).

4. And the omentum is taken out (of the killed animal). He should besprinkle it (with water) and name the deity (to whom the sacrifice is directed).

5. (He should name that deity also) at the touching (of the animal with the grass-blade), at (its) being bound (to the branch), at its being sprinkled (with water), and at (the preparation and oblation) of the mess of cooked food.

6. After he has sacrificed the omentum, he cuts off the Avadâna portions,

11, 1. The branch replaces the sacrificial post (yûpa) of the Srauta ritual. As to agrena, comp. Kâty.-Sraut. VI, 2, 11 and the commentary.

2. See Kâty.-Sraut. VI, 3, 15 on the parivyayana, ibid. §§ 19, 26 on the upâkarana, § 27 on the niyogana, § 33 on the prokshana.

3. Kâtyâyana VI, 5, 22 : He sacrifices (Âgya) with the words, 'Svâhâ to the gods.' § 24 : He sacrifices (Âgya) with the words, 'To the gods svâhâ.' In the commentary on § 25 these two oblations are called pariparavyâhuti.

4. See Kâtyâyana VI, 6, 13 ; Âsvalâyana-Grîhya I, 11, 10.

5. See above, Sûtra 2.

7. All of them, or three, or five.
8. He sacrifices the Avadâna portions together with the mess of cooked food.
9. A limb of the animal is the sacrificial fee.
10. At (a sacrifice) directed to a special deity he should sacrifice (an animal) belonging to that deity, should make a portion for that (god), and should say to him (i.e. to the messenger who is to convey that offering to a place sacred to that deity): 'Take care that this may reach that (god).'
11. If there is a river between (the sacrificer and that sacred place), he may have a boat made, or he may dispense with this.

KANDIKĀ 12.

1. Now (follows) the penance for a student who has broken the vow of chastity.
2. On a new-moon day he shall sacrifice an ass on a cross-road (to the goddess Nirṛiti).
3. (And) he shall offer a mess of cooked food to Nirṛiti.
4. The Avadâna portions are sacrificed into water (and not into fire).

7. The complete number of the Avadânas (i.e. the portions of the killed animal which have to be cut off, such as the heart, the tongue, &c.) is eleven; see Kâty.-Sraut. VI, 7, 6; Âsvalâyana-Gr̥hya I, 11, 12.

8. Âsvalâyana-Gr̥hya, loc. cit. § 13.

10, 11. The way for interpreting these Sûtras is shown by Âsvalâyana-Gr̥hya I, 12. I do not think that they have anything to do, as Gayarâma states, with reference to Sûtra 11, with the offering due to a relative who has died while being absent on a journey (chap. 10, 44).

12, 1. See the parallel passages quoted by Professor Bühler in his note on Âpastamba I, 26, 8 (S. B. E., II, 85), and besides, Kâtyâyana I, 1, 13 seqq.; Gautama XXIII, 17 seqq., &c.

4. This Sûtra is identical with Kâtyâyana I, 1, 16.

5. The Puroḍāsa (or sacrificial cake), which belongs to the animal sacrifice, is cooked on the ground (and not in the Kapālas).

6. (The guilty person) should put on the skin (of the ass),

7. With the tail turned upwards, according to some (teachers).

8. He should through one year go about for alms, proclaiming his deed.

9. After that time he sacrifices two Āgya oblations with (the formulas), 'O Lust, I have broken my vow of chastity. I have broken my vow of chastity, O Lust. To Lust svâhâ!'—'O Lust, I have done evil. I have done evil, O Lust. To Lust svâhâ!'

10. He then approaches (the fire) with (the verse), 'May the Maruts besprinkle me, may Indra, may Bṛihaspati, may this Agni besprinkle me with offspring and with wealth.'

11. This is the penance.

KANDIKÂ 13.

1. Now the entering of a court of justice.

2. He approaches the court with (the words), 'Court! Thou that belongest to the Aṅgiras! Trouble art thou by name; vehemence art thou by name. Thus be adoration to thee!'

3. He then enters (the court) with (the words), '(May) the court and the assembly, the two unani-

5. This Sûtra is identical with Kâtyâyana I, 1, 15.

9. Baudhâyana II, 1, 34.

10. Baudhâyana II, 1, 35.

13, 2. The regular Sandhi would be sabha (for sabhe) âṅgirasi, instead of which the text has sabhâṅgirasi.

3. In Sanskrit the words sabhâ (court) and samiti (assembly) are of feminine gender. I have translated upa mâ sa tish/het in the sense indicated by Pânini I, 4, 87.

mous daughters of Pragâpati (protect me). May one who does not know me, be below me. May (all) people be considerate in what they say.'

4. When he has arrived at the assembly, he should murmur, 'Superior (to my adversaries) I have come hither, brilliant, not to be contradicted. The lord of this assembly is a man insuperable in his power.'

5. Should he think, 'This person is angry with me,' he addresses him with (the verses), 'The destroying power of wrath and anger that dwells here on thy forehead, that the chaste, wise gods may take away.'

'Heaven am I and I am Earth; we both take away thy anger; the she-mule cannot bring forth offspring; N. N. !'

6. But if he should think, 'This person will do evil to me,' he addresses him with (the words), 'I take away the speech in thy mouth, I take away (the speech) in thy heart. Wheresoever thy speech dwells, thence I take it away. What I say, is true. Fall down, inferior to me.'

7. The same is the way to make (a person) subject (to one's self).

KANDIKĀ 14.

1. Now the mounting of a chariot (is declared).

2. After he has given the order, 'Put the horses to it,' and it has been announced, 'They are,' he goes to (the chariot, saying), 'This is the Virâg,' and touches the two wheels,

5. Perhaps we should read garbhenâsvataryâh saha: we take away thy anger together with the offspring of the she-mule (that cannot foal). Comp. Kullavagga VII, 2, 5; S. B. E., XX, 238.

6. It is impossible to give a sure restoration of this corrupt Mantra. Perhaps we should read something like this: â te vâlam âśya â te hrîdaya âdade. Comp. Hirany.-Grîhya I, 4, 15, 6.

3. The right (wheel) with (the words), 'The Rathantara art thou'—

4. The left with (the words), 'The Brîhat art thou'—

5. The pole with (the words), 'The Vâmadevya art thou.'

6. He touches the interior of the chariot with his hand (saying), 'The two Aṅkas, the two Nyaṅkas which are on both sides of the chariot, which move forward with the rushing wind, the far-darting one with keen senses, the winged one, may these fires, the promoters, promote us.'

7. With (the words), 'Adoration to Mânikara,' he drives on the beast on the right side.

8. (If going in his chariot) toward (images of) gods, let him descend (from the chariot) before he has reached them; if toward Brâhmaṇas, just before (reaching them); if toward cows, when amid them; if toward fathers, when he has reached them.

9. A woman or a Vedic student shall not be charioteers.

14. 6. The meaning of aṅkau and nyaṅkau cannot be determined, as far as I can see. The commentators explain the words as the two wheels and the two sides of the chariot, or as the two right wheels and the two left wheels of a four-wheeled chariot. Professor Zimmer (Altindisches Leben, pp. 251 seq.) compares aṅka with ἄντρον, and says, 'Mit aṅkau (resp. aṅkû) wäre daher die obere Einfassung des Wagenkastens (kosa, vandhura) bezeichnet, mit nyaṅkau (resp. nyaṅkû) ein zu grösserer Befestigung etwas weiter unten (ni) herumlaufender Stab.' To me it seems that aṅkau and nyaṅkau are to be understood both as designations of certain parts of the chariot and as names of different forms of Agni dwelling in the chariot.—Comp. Taittirîya Samhitâ I, 7, 7, 2; Pañtaviṃśa Brâhmaṇa I, 7, 5.

7. The name of the demon Mânikara occurs, as far as I know, only here.

10. Having driven a moment beyond (the point to which he intends to go) he should murmur, 'Here is rest, rest here' (Vâg. Samh. VIII, 51).

11. Some add (the words), 'Here shall be no rest.'

12. If the chariot is weak, he should murmur, after he has mounted it, 'May this your chariot, O Asvins, suffer no damage on bad ways or by being overthrown.'

13. If the horses run away with the chariot, he should touch the post (?) or the earth and should murmur, 'May this your chariot, O Asvins, suffer no damage on bad ways or by being overthrown.'

14. Thus he will suffer no harm and no damage.

15. When he has finished his way, and has unyoked the horses, let him have grass and water given to them. 'For thus satisfaction is given to the beast that draws (the cart)'—says the Sruti.

KANDIKÂ 15.

1. Now how he should mount an elephant.

2. He goes to the elephant and touches it (saying), 'The elephants' glory art thou. The elephants' honour art thou.'

3. He then mounts it with (the words), 'With Indra's thunder-bolt I bestride thee. Make me arrive safely.'

4. Thereby it has also been declared how he should mount a horse.

11. If the reading of the text is correct, the meaning would seem to be: We will rest here for a while, but then we will go further.

13. I cannot say what 'the post' (stambha) here means; it may be a part of the chariot. Gayarâma has dhvaga stambha, i.e. the staff of a flag, which we are to suppose was carried on the chariot. This may be the right explanation.

15. Satapatha Brâhmaṇa I, 8, 2, 9.

5. When he is going to mount a camel, he addresses it: 'Thou art the son of Tvashtri; Tvashtri is thy deity. Make me arrive safely.'

6. When he is going to mount a he-ass, he addresses it: 'A Sûdra art thou, a Sûdra by birth. To Agni thou belongest, with twofold sperm. Make me arrive safely.'

7. A path he addresses: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells on the paths. Make me arrive safely.'

8. A cross-road he addresses: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells at the cross-roads. Make me arrive safely.'

9. When he intends to swim across a river, he addresses it: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells in the waters. Make me arrive safely.'

10. When going on board a ship, he addresses her: 'The good ship' (Vâg. Samh. XXI, 7).

11. When going to cross (the river), he addresses (the ship): 'The well-protecting' (Vâg. Samh. XXI, 6).

12. A forest (through which he is wandering) he addresses: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells in the forests. Make me arrive safely.'

13. A mountain (which he is going to cross) he addresses: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells on the mountains. Make me arrive safely.'

14. A burial-ground he addresses: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells among the Fathers. Make me arrive safely.'

15. A cow-stable he addresses: 'Adoration to Rudra who dwells among the dung-heaps. Make me arrive safely.'

6. The he-ass has twofold sperm, because he begets both asses and mules. Taittirîya Samhitâ VII, 1, 1, 2.

16. And wheresoever else it be, let him always say, 'Adoration to Rudra.' For the Śruti says, 'Rudra is this universe.'

17. If the skirt (of his garment) is blown upon him (by the wind), he addresses (that skirt): 'A skirt art thou. Thou art not a thunder-bolt. Adoration be to thee. Do no harm to me!'

18. The thunder he addresses: 'May the rains be friendly to us; may (Indra's) darts be friendly to us—may they be friendly to us which thou throwest, O killer of Vṛitra.'

19. A howling jackal he addresses: 'Friendly by name' (Vâg. Samh. III, 63).

20. A shrieking bird he addresses: 'Golden-winged bird who goest where the gods send thee! Messenger of Yama, adoration be to thee! What has the Kârkârîṇa told thee?'

21. A tree that serves as a mark (of a boundary, &c.), he addresses: 'May neither the flash of lightning (destroy thee), nor axe nor wind nor punishment which the king sends. May thy shoots grow up; may rain fall on thee, in safety from the wind. May fire not destroy thy root. Blessing on thee, O lord of the forest! Blessing on me, O lord of the forest!'

22. If he receives something (given to him), he accepts it with (the formula), 'May Heaven give thee; may the Earth accept thee.' Thus (the thing given) does not decrease to him who gives it, and what he receives increases.

19. The play on words is untranslatable; 'jackal' is sīvâ, 'friendly,' sivâḥ.

20. I do not know the meaning of kârkârîṇaḥ. Gayarâma takes it for a genitive standing instead of an accusative, and explains it by asmadbâdhakam.

23. If boiled rice is given to him, he accepts it with (the formula), 'May Heaven, &c.,' and he partakes thereof twice with (the formulas), 'May Brahman eat thee!'—'May Brahman partake of thee!'

24. If gruel is given to him, (as above) . . . three times with (the formulas), 'May Brahman eat thee!'—'May Brahman partake of thee!'—'May Brahman drink thee!'

KANDIKÂ 16.

1. Now each time after a lesson (of the Veda) is finished, in order to prevent his forgetting (the texts he has studied, the following prayer should be recited):

'May my mouth be skilful; my tongue be honey-sweet speech. With my ears I have heard much; do not take away that which I have heard, which dwells in me.

'The Brahman's word art thou; the Brahman's stand art thou; the Brahman's store-house art thou. Fulfilment art thou; peace art thou; unforgetfulness art thou; enter into my store-house of the Brahman. With the voice I cover thee! With the voice I cover thee! May I be able to form the vowels, to produce, to hold fast and to utter the guttural, pectoral, dental, and labial sounds. May my limbs grow strong, my voice, breath, eye, ear, honour, and power. What I have heard and studied, may that be fixed in my mind; may that be fixed in my mind.'

End of the Third Kânda.

End of Pâraskara's Grîhya-sûtra.

16, 1. As to anirâkaravā, comp. anirâkarishnu above, II, 4, 3. Possibly we should read, gihvâ me madhumad vatah.

KHÂDIRA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

KHÂDIRA-GRÎHYA-SÛTRA.

AMONG the Grantha MSS. collected by the late Dr. Burnell and now belonging to the India Office Library, there are some MSS. (numbers CLXXII and following of the Catalogue) of a Grîhya-sûtra hitherto unpublished, which is ascribed to Khâdirâkârya. It belongs to the Drâhyâyana school of the Sâma-veda, which prevails in the south of the Indian peninsula¹, and it is based on the Gobhîlîya-sûtra, from which it has taken the greater number of its aphorisms, just as the Drâhyâyana-Srauta-sûtra, as far as we can judge at present, is nothing but a slightly altered redaction of Lâtyâyana². Like the Gobhîla-Grîhya it very seldom gives the Mantras in their full extent, but quotes them only with their Pratikas, and it is easy to identify these quotations in the Mantrabrâhmaṇa (published at Calcutta, 1873), which contains the texts prescribed by Gobhîla for the Grîhya ceremonies.

The Khâdira-Grîhya has evidently been composed with the intention of abridging Gobhîla's very detailed and somewhat lengthy treatise on the domestic rites. Digressions, such as, for instance, that introduced by the words tatraihad âhuḥ, Gobhîla I, 2, 10-27, or such as Gobhîla's explication of the terms paurṇamâsî and amâvâsyâ, I, 5, 7 seqq., or most of the regulations concerning the Sakvaryas, III, 3, or the Slokas, IV, 7, are invariably left out, and in the descriptions of the single ceremonies throughout the principal points only are given, with the omission of all words and of all matter that it seemed possible to dispense with. On the other hand, the arrangement of the Sûtras has undergone frequent changes, in which the compiler clearly shows his intention of grouping together, more carefully than was done in the original text, the Sûtras which naturally belong to each other. Of the Sûtras of the Khâdira-Grîhya which cannot be identified in Gobhila, several are to be traced back to Lâtyâyana, or we should perhaps rather say, to Drâhyâyana. Thus Khâd. I, 1, 14 mantrântam avyaktam parasyâdigraha-nena vidyât evidently corresponds to Lâtyâyana I, 1, 3, uttarâdih pûrvântalakshanam, and Khâd. I, 1, 24 avyâvrittîm yagñângair avyavâyam kekhet is identical with Lâty. I, 2, 15, avyavâyo-vyâvrittis ka yagñângaih.

¹ See Dr. Burnell's Catalogue, p. 56.

² Weber, Vorlesungen über indische Literaturgeschichte (2nd edition), p. 87 : 'Almost the entire difference between this Sûtra and that of Lâtyâyana lies in the arrangement of the matter treated of, which is in itself very nearly the same in both texts, and is expressed in the same words.' Comp. Ânandatandra Vedântavâgîśa's Introduction to his edition of Lâtyâyana (in the Bibliotheca Indica), pp. 2, 3, and his statements on Drâhyâyana in the notes of that edition.

Upon the whole, though certainly the Khâdira-Grîhya does not contain much matter which is not known to us from other sources, it notwithstanding possesses a certain interest, since it shows by a very clear example how a Sûtrakâra of the later time would remodel the work of a more ancient author, trying to surpass him by a more correct arrangement, and especially by what became more and more appreciated as the chief accomplishment of Sûtra composition, the greatest possible succinctness and economising of words. To an interpreter of Gobhila the comparison of the Khâdira-Grîhya no doubt will suggest in many instances a more correct understanding of his text than he would have been likely to arrive at without that aid, and perhaps even readings of Gobhila which seemed hitherto subject to no doubt, will have to give way to readings supplied by the Grantha MSS. of the Khâdira-Grîhya. Thus, Gobhila III, 8, 16, I do not hesitate to correct asamsvâdam, on the authority of Khâd. III, 3, 13, into asamkhâdam or *asamkhâdan*¹.

¹ Comp. Pârasara II, 10, 15, and the quotations given by Böhlingk-Roth s. v. sam-khâd. Forms derived from the two roots, khâd and svad, are frequently interchanged in the MSS.; see the two articles in the Dictionary.

As the text of the Khâdira-Grihya is very short and has not yet been published, it has been printed at the foot of the page, together with references to the parallel passages of Gobhila. For further explanations of the single Sûtras, I refer to my translation of Gobhila which will form part of the second volume of the Grihya-sûtras, where I shall also hope to give some extracts from Rudraskanda's commentary on the Khâdira-Grihya.

KHÂDIRA-GRÎHYA-SÛTRA.

PATALA I, KHANDA 1.

1. Now henceforth the domestic sacrifices (will be explained).

2. During the northern course of the sun, at the time of the increasing moon, on auspicious days, before noon: this is the time at which the constellations are lucky, unless a special statement is given.

3. At the end (of the ceremonies) he should give to the Brâhmanas to eat according to his ability.

4. The sacrificial cord is made of a string or [of Kusa grass.

5. If he suspends it round his neck and raises the right arm (so as to wear the cord on his left shoulder), he becomes yagñopavitin.

6. (If he raises) the left (arm and wears the cord on his right shoulder, he becomes) prâkînâvîtin.

7. After having sipped water three times, let him wipe off the water twice.

I, 1, 1. athâto grîhyâkarmâny. 2. udagayanapûrvapakshapunyaâheshu prâg âvartanâd anubhañ kâlo-nâdese. 3. pavarge ya-thotsâham brâhmanân âsayed. 4. yagñopavitam sautram kauram vâ. 5. grîvâyâm pratimukhya dakshinam bâhum uddhṛitya yagñopavitî bhavati. 6. savyam prâkînâvîti. 7. trir âtamyâpo dviñ parimṛigîti.

I, 1, 1=Gobhila I, 1, 1. 2=I, 1, 3. 3=I, 1, 6. 4-6=I, 2, 1 seqq. 7-10=I, 2, 5 seqq.

8. Having besprinkled his feet (with water), let him besprinkle his head.

9. Let him touch the organs of his senses (i.e. his eyes, his nose, and his ears) with water (i.e. with a wet hand).

10. When he has finally touched (water) again, he becomes pure.

11. (If) sitting, standing, or lying down (is prescribed), he should understand (that it is to be done) on northward-pointed Darbha grass, with the face turned to the east, to the west of the fire with which the sacrifice is performed.

12. If the word Snâna (or bathing) is used, (this refers to the whole body) with the head.

13. (The different ceremonies are) performed with the right hand, if no special rule is given.

14. If it is not clear where a Mantra ends, one should discern it by (adverting to) the beginning of the next Mantra.

15. The Mantras have the word svâhâ at their end, when offerings are made.

16. The term Pākayagñā is used of every sacrifice that is performed with one fire.

17. There the Brahman is (present as) officiating priest, with the exception of the morning and evening oblations.

8. pādāv abhyukshya siro-bhyukshed. 9. indriyāny adbhīḥ samsprīḥ. 10. antataḥ pratyupasprīḥ sūtir bhavaty. 11. āsanasthānasamvesanāny udagagreshu darbheshu prāṇmukhasya pratyāt paskād agner yatra homa syāt. 12. sahasirasam snānasabde. 13. dakshinena pāṇinā krīyam anādeḥ. 14. mantrāntam avyaktaṃ parasyādigrāhaneṇa vidyāt. 15. svāhāntā mantrā homeshu. 16. pākayagñā ityākhyā yāḥ kaḥ kaikāgnau. 17. tatra r̥tvig brahmā sāyamprātarhomavargam.

11-14 desunt. 15=I, 9, 25. 16 deest. 17, 18=I, 9, 8, 9.

18. The Hotri's place is filled by (the sacrificer) himself.

19. To the south of the fire the Brahman sits facing the north, silently, until the oblation has been performed, on eastward-pointed (Darbha grass).

20. But if he likes, he may speak of what refers to the sacrifice.

21. Or if he has spoken (words) which are unworthy of the sacrifice, let him murmur the Mahâ-vyâhritis,

22. Or (the verse), 'Thus has Vishnu' (Sv. I, 222).

23. If he does himself the work both of the Brahman and of the Hotri, let him sit down on the Brahman's seat, and (leave that seat) placing a parasol on it, or an outer garment, or a water-pot, and then let him perform his other duties.

24. Let him take care not to turn his back to, or become separated (by any person or thing interposed) from what belongs to the sacrifice.

KHANDA 2.

1. In the eastern part of his dwelling he should besmear (the place on which the sacrifice will be performed) with cowdung, and should draw in the middle of it the lines.

18. svayamhautram. 19. dakshinato-gner udanmukhas tûshnim âste brahmâ homât prâgagreshu. 20. kâmam tv adhiyagñam vyâhared. 21. ayagñiyâm vâ vyâhritya mahâvyâhritr gaped. 22. idam vishnur ita vâ. 23. hautrabrahmatve svayam kurvan brahmâsanam [sic] upavisya khatram uttarâsaṅgam kamandalum vâ tatra krîtvâthânyat kuryâd. 24. avyâvrittîm yagnânṅair avyavâyam kekhet.

2, 1. pûrve bhâge vesmano gomayenopalipya tasya madhyadesa lakshanam kuryâd.

19=I, 6, 13 seqq. 20-22=I, 6, 17 seqq. 23=I, 6, 21. 24 deest. 2, 1 seqq.=Gobhila I, 1, 9 seqq.

2. To the south he should draw a line from west to east.

3. From the beginning of that line (he should draw a line) from south to north; from the end (of the last-mentioned line) one from west to east; between (the first and the third line) three (lines) from west to east.

4. He besprinkles that (place) with water,

5. Establishes the fire (thereon),

6. Wipes along around (the fire) with the three verses, 'This praise' (MB. II, 4, 2-4).

7. To the west of the fire he touches the earth with his two hands turned downwards, with (the verse), 'We partake of the earth's' (MB. II, 4, 1).

8. In night-time (he pronounces that Mantra so that it ends with the word) 'goods' (vasu).

9. Having strewn Darbha grass to the west (of the fire), let him draw (some grass) from the south-end and from the north-end (of what he has strewn), in an eastern direction.

10. Or let him omit this drawing (of Darbha grass to the east),

11. And let him strew (the grass) beginning in the east, so as to keep his right side turned to the

2. dakshinātāḥ prākīm rekhām ullikhya. 3. tadārambhād udiṭīm tadavasānāt prākīm tistro madhye prākīs. 4. tad abhyukshyā. 5. agnim upasamādhāya. 6. imam stomam iti parisamūhya trikēna. 7. paskād agner bhūmau nyāṅkau pāṇi kṛtvedam bhūmer iti. 8. vasvantam rātrau. 9. paskād darbhān āstīrya dakshinātāḥ prākīm prakarshed uttaratāḥ kā. 10. prakṛishya vā. 11. pūrvopakramam pradakshinam agnim strinuyān mūlāny agrais khādayan trivritam pañkavritam vo.

6-8=IV, 5, 3 seqq. 9-11=I, 7, 9 seqq.

fire, covering the roots (of the Darbha blades) with the points, in three layers or in five layers.

12. Sitting down he cuts off two span-long Darbha points, not with his nail, with (the words), 'Purifiers are ye, sacred to Vishnu.'

13. He wipes them with water, with (the words), 'By Vishnu's mind are ye purified.'

14. Holding them with his two thumbs and fourth fingers so that their points are turned to the north, he three times purifies the Âgya (with them), with (the words), 'May the god Savitri purify thee with this uninjured purifier, with the rays of the good sun.'

15. Having sprinkled them (with water) he should throw them into the fire.

16. Having put the Âgya on the fire he should take it (from the fire) towards the north.

17. Bending his right knee he should pour out to the south of the fire his joined hands full of water with (the words), 'Aditi! Give thy consent!'

18. To the west with (the words), 'Anumati! Give thy consent!'

19. To the north with (the words), 'Sarasvatî! Give thy consent!'

12. *pavisya darbhâgre prâdesamâtre prakṣinatti na nakhena pavitre stho vaishnavyâv ity. 13. adbhir unmrîgya Vishnor manasâ pûte stha ity. 14. udagagre *ngushthâbhyâm anâmikâbhyâm ka samgrîhya trir âgyam utpunâti devas tvâ Savitotpunâtv akhidrena pavitre na vasos sūryasya rasmibhir ity. 15. abhyukshyâgnâv anuprahared. 16. âgyam adhisrityottarataḥ kuryâd. 17. dakshinagânvakto dakshinenâgnim Adite *numanyasvety udakâṅgalim prasiṅked. 18. Anumate *numanyasveti pasât. 19. Sarasvate [sic, comp. Hiranyakesi-Grîhya I, 1, 2, 9] *numanyasvety uttarataḥ.

12-16=I, 7, 21-27. 17-21=I, 3, 1 seqq.

20. With (the words), 'God Savitri! Give thy impulse!' (MB. I, 1, 1) he should sprinkle (water) round the fire so as to keep his right side turned towards it, encompassing what he is going to offer (with the water).

21. (This he does) once or thrice.

22. He puts a piece of wood on (the fire).

23. He should murmur the Prapada formula (MB. II, 4, 5), hold his breath, fix his thoughts on something good, and should emit his breath when beginning the Virûpâksha formula (MB. II, 4, 6).

24. At ceremonies for the attainment of special wishes (he should do so) for each of the objects (which he wishes to attain).

25. He should do so always at sacrifices.

KHANDA 3.

1. A student after he has studied the Veda and has offered a present to his teacher, should, with permission (of his parents), take a wife.

2. And (he should take) the bath (which signifies the end of studentship).

3. Of these two (acts the taking of) the bath comes first.

20. deva Savita^h prasuveti pradakshinam agnim paryukshed abhipariharan havyam. 21. sakrit trir vâ. 22. samidham âdhâya. 23. prapadam gapitvopatâmya kalyânam dhyâyan vairûpâksham ârabhyo^{kkh}vaset. 24. pratikâmam kâmyeshu. 25. sarvatraitad dhomeshu kuryât.

3, 1. brahma^{kâr} vedam adhîtyopanyâhritya gurave nug^hâtô dârân kurvâtâ. 2. âplavana^ñ ka. 3. tayor âplavanam pûrvam.

22=I, 8, 26. 23=IV, 5, 6 seqq. 24, 25 desunt.

3, 1=Gobhila III, 4, 1. 2=III, 4, 7. 3, 4 desunt.

4. As, however, in the (collection of) Mantras marriage is treated of (first), it is explained (here) before (the bath).

5. A Brâhmana with a water-pot, wrapped in his robe, keeping silence, should step in front of the fire and should station himself (to the south of it) with his face to the north.

6. After (the bride) has taken a bath, (the bridegroom) should dress her in a garment that has not yet been washed, with (the verse), 'They who spun' (MB. I, 1, 5). While she is led up (to him), the bridegroom should murmur (the verse), 'Soma gave her' (l. 1. 7).

7. To the south of the bridegroom he (who has led her to him) should make her sit down.

8. While she touches him, (the bridegroom) should make oblations of Âgya with the Sruva, picking out (portions of it [comp. Pâraskara II, 14, 13]), with the Mahâvyâhr̥tis.

9. A fourth (oblation) with (the three Mahâvyâhr̥tis) together.

10. The same at the ceremonies of the tonsure (of the child's head), of the initiation (of the Brahmakârin), and of the cutting of the beard.

4. mantrâbhivâdât tu pâñigrahanasya (correct, pâñigrahanam?) pûrvam vyâkhyâtam. 5. brâhmanas sahodakumbhaḥ prâvr̥ito vâgyato greṇâgnim gatvodaṇmukhas tishṭhet. 6. snâtâm ahatenâ-khâdya yâ akr̥intann ity âñiyamânâyâm pâñigrâho gapet Somo dadad iti. 7. pâñigrâhasya dakshinata upavesayed. 8. anvârabdhâyâm sruvenopaghâtam mahâvyâhr̥tibhir âgyam guhuyât. 9. samastâbhis katurthim. 10. evam kaulopanayanagodâneshev.

5=II, 1, 13. 6=II, 1, 17-19. 7 seqq.=II, 1, 23 seqq.; I, 9, 26 seqq.

11. And at the marriage (he makes oblations) with the six verses, 'May Agni go as the first' (MB. I, 1, 9 seqq.).

12. At Āgya oblations, unless a special rule is given, the two Āgya portions and the Svishṭakṛit oblation (are) not (offered).

13. After (the chief oblations he should) always (make oblations) with the Mahāvyaḥṛitis,

14. And with the (verse) sacred to Pragâpati.

15. He should make an expiatory oblation.

16. After the sacrifice they both arise.

17. (The bridegroom) should pass behind (the bride's) back, station himself to the south, and seize the bride's hand.

18. Her mother who has, towards the east, put fried grain mixed with Samī leaves into a basket,

19. Should make the bride tread with the tip of her right foot on an upper mill-stone, to the west of the fire, with (the verse which the bridegroom repeats), 'On this stone' (MB. I, 2, 1).

20. Her brother, filling once his joined hands

11. Agnir etu prathama iti shadbhis ka pāmigrahane. 12. nāgya-bhāgau na svishṭakṛid āgyāhutishv anādere. 13. sarvatroparishān mahāvyaḥṛitibhiḥ¹. 14. prāgâpatyayâ ka. 15. prāyaskittam guhuyād. 16. dhutvopottish/hato. 17. nuprishṭham gatvâ dakshinato vasthāya vadhvaṅgalim grīhṇīyāt. 18. pūrvā mâtâ samīpalāsamisrān (var. lect. °misrāl) lāgāñ kḥūrpe krīvā. 19. paskād agner drishatputram ākramayed vadhūm dakshinena prapadenemam asmānam iti. 20. sakṛidgrīhītam aṅgalim lāgānām vadhvaṅgalāv āvaped bhrātā.

14, 15 desunt. 16-31=II, 2, 1 seqq.

¹ Possibly the Sūtras 12 and 13 should be divided thus: 12. nāgyabhāgau na svishṭakṛid āgyāhutishv. 13. anādere sarvatro &c. Comp. Gobhila I, 9, 26, 27; Sāṅkhāyana I, 12, 13; 9, 10.

with fried grain, should pour it into the bride's joined hands.

21. Or some friend (instead of the brother).

22. That she should sacrifice over the fire without opening her joined hands with (the verse which the bridegroom repeats), 'This woman' (MB. I, 2, 2).

23. (The verses), 'Aryaman' and 'Pûshan' (l. 1. 3, 4) (are repeated) at the two following (oblations of fried grain).

24. After that sacrifice he should go back in the same way (see Sûtra 17), and should lead her round the fire, so that their right sides are turned towards it with (the formula), 'The maid from the fathers' (l. 1. 5).

25. (These rites), beginning from his stationing himself (to the south, Sûtra 17), (are performed) thrice.

26. After (she) has poured the remnants (of the fried grain) into the fire, he should make her step forward in a north-eastern direction with (the formula), 'For sap with one step' (l. 1. 6, 7).

27. The looking at the lookers-on, the mounting of the chariot, the reciting (of Mantras) at places difficult to pass (on the way of the bridegroom and the bride, is performed) with (verses) suited (to those different occasions).

21. suhrid vâ kaskit. 22. taṁ sâgnau guhuyâd aviḥhidyâṅgalim iyam nârity. 23. Aryamaṇam Pûṣaṇam ity uttarayor. 24. hute tenaiva gatvâ pradakṣiṇam agnim parinayet kanyalâ pitribhya ity. 25. avasthânaprabhrity evaṁ tris. 26. sûrpeṇa sishân agnâv opya prâgudîkîm utkramayed ekam isha itî. 27. kshakâvekṣaṇa-rathârohaṇadurgânumantranâny abhirûpâbhir.*

(21 and a part of 27 desunt.)

28. Walking forward behind the fire, the water-carrier (see Sūtra 5) should besprinkle the bridegroom on his forehead.

29. So also the bride.

30. When he has thus been besprinkled, (he should repeat the verse), 'May (the Visve devās) anoint (or, unite)' (MB. I, 2, 9).

31. He should seize her right hand, together with the thumb, with the six (verses), 'I seize thy hand' (MB. I, 2, 10 seqq.).

KHANDA 4.

1. He should carry her away in a north-eastern direction.

2. In a Brāhmaṇa's house he should establish the (nuptial) fire, should spread out to the west of the fire a red bull's hide with the hair outside and with the neck to the east, and should make her, who has to keep silence, sit down (thereon).

3. When (somebody) has said that a star has appeared, he should, while she touches him, make oblations (of Āgrya) with the Sruva, picking out (portions of it), with the six (verses) commencing with (the verse), 'In the lines' (MB. I, 3, 1 seqq.). The remnants he should pour out over the bride's head.

28. aparenāgnim auduko gatvā pānigrāham mūrdhany avasiṅked.
29. vadhūm ka. 30. samaṅgantv ity avasikto. 31. dakṣiṇam pānim sāṅgushṭham grīhṇīyād grībhṇāmi ta iti śaḍbhiḥ.

4, 1. prāgudīkīm udvahed. 2. brāhmaṇakuleḥ gñim upasam-ādhāya paśkād agner lohitam karmānaḍuham uttaraloma prāgrīvam āstīrya vāgyatām upavesayet. 3. prokte nakṣatreḥ nvārabdhāyām sruvenopaghātam guhuyāt śaḍbhir lekḥāprabhrūtibhiḥ sampātān avanayan mūrdhani vadhvāḥ.

4, 1-11 = Gobhila II, 3, 1 seqq.

4. Having circumambulated the fire so that their right sides are turned towards it, he shows her the polar star (literally, the firm one), with the verse, 'Firm is the sky' (l. 1. 7).

5. She should break her silence by respectfully calling her Gurus by their Gotra names.

6. A cow constitutes the sacrificial fee.

7. Here the Arghya ceremony should be performed.

8. (Or rather it should be performed) when they have come (to their house), according to some (teachers): [comp. Sâṅkh. I, 12, 10.]

9. Through a period of three nights they should avoid eating saline food and drinking milk, and should sleep together without having conjugal intercourse.

10. Having murmured over food which is fit for sacrifice, the (verses), 'With the tie of food' (MB. I, 3, 8-10), he should pronounce the wife's name, 'N. N.!'

11. After he has sacrificed (or, eaten?) he should give the rest to the wife.

12. After the lapse of that period of three nights, he should make oblations of Âgya with the four verses, 'Agni, thou art expiation' (MB. I, 4, 1 seqq.). A fifth (oblation) combining (the names of the four gods invoked in those verses). The remnants (of Āgrya) he should pour into a water-pot.

4. pradakshinam agnim parikramya dhruvam darsayati dhruvâ dyaur ity. 5. abhivâdya gurûn (gurum, Gobhila) gotrena visriged vâtam. 6. gaur dakshinâ. 7. trârghyam. 8. âgateshv ity eke. 9. trirâtram kshâralavane dugdham iti vargayantau (vargayânu the MSS.) saha sayîyâtâm (sayyâtâm, saryyatâm the MSS.) brahma-kârînu. 10. havishyam annam parigapyânnapâsenety asâv iti vadhvâ nâma brûyât. 11. hutvokkshisham (bhuktv°?) vadhvai dadyât. 12. ūrdhvam trirâtrâk katasribhir âgyam guhuyât Agne prâyaskittir iti samasya pañkamîm sampâtân avanayann udapâtre.

13. With that (Āgrya) he should wash her, including her hair and nails.

14. Thenceforward he should behave as required by circumstances.

15. At the time of her courses he should touch with his right hand her secret parts with (the verse), 'May Vishnu make thy womb ready' (MB. I, 4, 6).

16. When (that verse) is finished, he should cohabit with her, with (the verse), 'Give conception' (l. 1. 7).

KHANDA 5.

1. The fire used at his wedding (is kept as) his (sacred) domestic fire.

2. Or that on which he (as a student) puts the last piece of wood.

3. Or (a fire) kindled by attrition: that is pure, but it does not bring prosperity.

4. Or he may get it from a frying-pan.

5. Or from the house of one who offers many sacrifices, with the exception of a Sûdra.

13. tenainâm sakesanakhâm âplāvayet. 14. tato yathârtham syâd. 15. ritukâle dakshinena pâninopastham âlabhed Vishnur yonim kalpayatv iti. 16. samâptâyâm sambhaved garbhan dhehiti.

5, 1. yasminn agnau pânim grîhîyât sa grîhyo. 2. yasmin vântiyâm samidham âdadhyân. 3. nirmanthyô vâ puryas so-nardhuko. 4. mbarîshâd vânyed. 5. bahuyâgino vâgârâk kshûdravargam.

14=II, 4, 11. 15, 16=II, 5, 9, 10.

5, 1-9=Gobhila I, 1, 20-28.

6. The service (at that sacred domestic fire) begins with an evening oblation.

7. After (the fire) has been set in a blaze before sunset or sunrise—

8. The sacrifice (is performed) after sunset;

9. (And) after sunrise or before sunrise.

10. He should with his hand make oblations of food which is fit for sacrifice, having washed it, if it is raw.

11. If it consists in curds or milk, with a brazen bowl,

12. Or with the pot in which the oblations of cooked rice are prepared.

13. (In the evening the first oblation with the formula), 'To Agni Svâhâ!' in the middle (of the sacred fire);

14. The second (oblation) silently in the north-eastern part (of the fire).

15. In the morning the first (oblation with the formula), 'To Sûrya (Svâhâ)!'

16. The wiping round the fire and the similar acts, with the exception of the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), are omitted here.

17. Some (teachers say) that his wife may offer these oblations, for the wife is (as it were) the house, and that fire is the domestic fire.

6. sâyamâhutyupakramam parikaranam. 7. prâg astamayodayâ-bhyâm prâdushkrîyâ. 8. *stam ite homa. 9. udite kânudite vâ. 10. havishyasyânnasyâkrîtam ket prakshâlyâ guhuyât pâninâ. 11. dadhi ket payo vâ kamsena. 12. karusthâlyâ vâ. 13. *gnaye svâheti madhye. 14. tûshnim prâgudîkîm uttarâm. 15. Sûryâyeti prâtaḥ pûrvâm. 16. nâtra parisamûhanâdîni paryukshanavargam. 17. patnî guhuyâd ity eke grîhâḥ patnî grîhyo-gnir esha iti.

18. When (the meal) is ready, in the evening and in the morning, (the wife) should say, 'It is ready!' and (the husband) with loud voice, 'Om!'

19. Then in a low voice: 'May it not fail! Adoration to thee!'

20. Of food which is fit for sacrifice he should make oblations to Pragâpati and to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit.

21. Then he should make the Bali offerings.

22. He should put down (a Bali) at four places, inside or outside (the Agnyagâra);

23. (Another Bali) near the water-barrel;

24. (Another) at the middle door;

25. (Another) in the bed,

26. Or in the privy;

27. Another on the heap of sweepings.

28. He should sprinkle each (Bali with water) before and afterwards.

29. The remnants he should pour out together with water towards the south.

30. Of chaff, of water, and of the scum of boiled rice (he should offer a Bali) when a donation has been made.

18. siddhe sâyamprâtar bhûtam ity ukta om ity ukkair brûyât. 19. mâ kshâ namas ta ity upâmsu. 20. havishyasyânnasya guhuyât prâgâpatyam sauvishtakṛitam ka. 21. balim nayed. 22. bahir antar vâ katur nidhâya. 23. manikadese. 24. madhye dvâri. 25. sayyâm anu. 26. varṣam [sic] vâ. 27. s̥tha sastûpam. 28. ekaikam ubhayataḥ parishiñṣek. 29. kṣesham adbhis sârdham dakshinâ ninayet. 30. phalîkaranânâm apâm âkâmasveti (read, âkâmasyeti) visrânite.

31. The gods to whom the Bali offerings belong, are, the Earth, Vâyu, Pragâpati, the Visve devâs, the Waters, the Herbs and Trees, the Ether, Kâma or Manyu, the hosts of Rakshas, the Fathers, Rudra.

32. He should do so silently.

33. He should do so (i.e. offer Balis) of all food.

34. If for one meal the food gets ready at different times, he should do so only once.

35. If (food is prepared) at different places, (he should take) that which belongs to the householder.

36. Of all food he should offer (something) in the fire, and give the due portion to a Brâhmaṇa; he should do so himself.

37. From the rice(-harvest) till the barley(-harvest), or from the barley(-harvest) till the rice(-harvest) he should offer (the Balis) himself. He should offer (the Balis) himself.

End of the First Pātala.

31. Prithivî Vâyuh Pragâpatir Visve devâ Âpa Oshaddivanaspataya Âkâśaḥ Kâmo Manyur vâ Rakshoganaḥ Pitara Rudra iti balidaivatâni. 32. tûshnîm tu kuryât. 33. sarvasya tv annasyaitat kuryâd. 34. asakrîḥ kēd ekasmin kâlē siddhe sakrîd eva kuryâd. 35. bahudhâ kēd yad grîhapateḥ. 36. sarvasya tv annasyâgnau krîtvâgram brâhmanâya dadyât; svayam kuryâd. 37. vrîhiprabhrîty â yavebhyo yavebhyo vâ vrîhibhya svayam haret svayam haret. prathamapātalaḥ.

PATALA II, KHANDA 1.

1. Of the sacrifices of the new and full moon, the full-moon sacrifice should be performed first.

2. If (the term for the sacrifice) of the new moon comes first, he should first celebrate the full-moon sacrifice and then perform that.

3. Some say that he should not perform it, and wait till the day of the full moon.

4. In the afternoon, husband and wife, after having bathed, should eat fast-day food.

5. Mānadantavya has said: 'He who eats fast-day food, obtains offspring better than himself; he gains favour; hunger will not attack him.'

6. Therefore one should eat (fast-day food) which he likes.

7. He should do nothing unholy (such as cohabiting with his wife).

8. After he has sacrificed the morning oblation,

9. He should pour out the sacrificial food with (the formula), 'Agreeable to such and such (a deity) I pour thee out:' (this formula) referring to the

II, 1, 1. paurṇamāsopakramau darsapaurṇamāsau. 2. dārsam ket pūrvam upapadyeta paurṇamāsenesh/vātha tat kuryād. 3. akurvan paurṇamāśm ākāṅkshed ity eke. 4. aparāhne snātvaupavasathikam dampatī bhuṅgīyātām. 5. Mānadantavya uvāka: sreyasīm pragām vindate kāmyo bhavaty akshodhuko ya aupavasathikam bhuṅkte. 6. tasmād yat kāmayeta tad bhuṅgīta. 7. nāvratyam ākaret. 8. prātārāhutim hutvā 9. haviṃ nirvaped amuṣmai tvā gushṭam nirvapāmiti devatāśrayam sakrīd yagur vā dviṣ tūṣṇīm.

II, 1, 1-3 desunt. 4=Gobhila I, 5, 26. 5-8=I, 6, 1-13. 9-16 (15 deest)=I, 7, 2-19.

deity, or a Yagus, (is repeated) once; twice (it is done) silently.

10. He should wash (the food) thrice, (if it is destined) for gods;

11. Twice, if for men;

12. Once, if for the Fathers.

13. Stirring it up with the pot-ladle from the left to the right he should cook it.

14. When he has cooked it, he should sprinkle (Âgya) on it, should take it from the fire towards the north, and should again sprinkle (Âgya) on it.

15. Thus all kinds of Havis (are prepared).

16. Having put (the Havis) on the sacrificial grass,

17. He should sacrifice the two Âgya portions (in the following way): Having taken four portions of Âgya—five portions are taken by the Bhrigus (or at least?) by the Gâmadagnyas [see Indische Studien, 10, 95]—(he should make two oblations), to the north with (the formula), 'To Agni Svâhâ!' to the south with (the formula), 'To Soma Svâhâ!'

18. Others (do it) conversely.

19. Having 'spread under' Âgya, he should cut off with the pot-ladle (portions) of the Havis from the middle and from the eastern side;

10. trir devebhyaḥ prakshâlayed. 11. dvir manushyebhyaḥ.
 12. sakṛit pitṛibhyo. 13. mekshanaena pradakṣiṇam udâyuvañ srapayeḥ. 14. kṛitam abhighâryodag udvâsya pratyabhighârayet.
 15. sarvâny evam havîṃshi. 16. barhishy âsâdyâ. 17. gyabhâgau guhuyâḥ katurgrîhitam âgyam grîhitvâ pañcâvattam Bhrigûnâm Gâmadagnyânâm Agnaye svâhety uttarataḥ Somâyeti dakṣiṇato.
 18. viparîtam itara. 19. âgyam upastîrya havisho vadyen me-kshanaena madhyât purastâd iti.

17-27 (18, 23 desunt)=I, 8, 3-29.

20. One who takes five cut-off portions (see Sūtra 17), also from the western side.

21. After he has sprinkled (Āgrya) on (the cut-off portions), he anoints the places from which he has cut them off, (with Āgrya).

22. (This anointing) is omitted at the Svishṭakṛit oblation.

23. He should sacrifice with (the formula), 'To N. N. Svāhā!'—according to the god to whom the oblation belongs.

24. At the Svishṭakṛit oblation he 'spreads under' once—twice if he is a Bhṛigu—, (cuts off) once (a portion) of the Havis, sprinkles (Āgrya) on it twice, and sacrifices it in a north-eastern direction with (the formula), 'To Agni Svishṭakṛit Svāhā!'

25. Having put a piece of wood (on the fire),

26. He should dip Darbha-blades (of the sacrificial grass strewn round the fire) three times, the points, the middle, and the roots, into the Āgrya or into the Havis with (the words), 'May the birds come, licking what has been anointed.' Then, after having sprinkled (those Darbha-blades with water), he should throw them into the fire, with (the verse), 'Thou who art the lord of cattle, Rudra, who walkest with the lines (of cattle), the manly one: do no harm to our cattle; let this be offered to thee. Svāhā!'

20. paśāk ka pañkāvatty. 21. abhigārya pratyanakty avadānasthānāni. 22. na svishṭakṛito. 23. smushmai svāheti guhuyād yaddevatyam syāt. 24. svishṭakṛit sakṛid upastīrya dvir Bhṛigūnām sakṛid dhavisho [sic] dvir abhigāryāgnaye svishṭakṛite svāheti prāgudīkṛyām guhuyāt. 25. samidham ādhāya. 26. darbha āgye havishi vā trir avadhāyāgramadhyamūlāny aktam rihānā viyantu vaya ity abhyukshyāgnāv anuprahared yaḥ paśūnām adhipatī Rudras tantiṭaro vṛishā paśūn asmātam mā himsīr etad astu hutam tava svāheti.

27. This (ceremony is called) Yagñavâstu.
28. He should perform it at all (sacrifices).
29. The remnants of the Havis he should take away in a northern direction, and should give them to the Brahman.
30. A full vessel constitutes the fee for the sacrifice ;
31. Or as much as he can afford.

KHANDA 2.

1. By one who has not set up the sacred fires, a mess of cooked food, sacred to Agni, is offered at the festivals of the full and new moon ;
2. By one who has set them up, one sacred to Agni and Soma at the full moon ;
3. One sacred to Indra, or to Mahendra, or to Indra and Agni, at the new moon ;
4. Or as (the sacrifice is performed) by one who has not set up the sacred fires.
5. The time at which the morning oblation may be offered, is the whole day ;
6. For the evening oblation the night ;
7. For the sacrifice of the full moon the whole second fortnight (of the month) ;

27. tad yagñavâstu. 28. sarvatra kuryâd. 29. dhavir ukkṛish-tam udag udvâsya brahmane dadyât. 30. pûrnapâtram dakshinâ. 31. yathotsâham vâ.

2, 1. Âgneya sthâlpâko-nâhitâgner darsapûrnamâsayor. 2. agni-shomiya/ paurnamâsyâm âhitâgner. 3. aindro mâhendro vaindrâgno vâmâvâsyâyâm. 4. yathâ vâ-nâhitâgnes. 5. sarvam aha/ prâtarâ-hute sthânâm. 6. râtris sâyamâhutes. 7. sarvo-parapaksha/ paurnamâsasya.

28 deest. 29-31=I, 9, 1. 6. 11.

2, 1-4=Gobhila I, 8, 22-25. 5-14=I, 9, 14 seqq.

8. For the sacrifice of the new moon the first fortnight.

9. Some say that he should keep his vow (until the sacrifice is performed) by abstaining from food.

10. If (the proper) sacrificial food is wanting, let him offer fruits of sacrificially pure (plants or trees);

11. Or leaves (of such plants or trees);

12. Or water.

13. For (even if he offers water) the sacrifice has been performed.

14. A penance (is prescribed) for one who does not perform the sacrifice.

15. If no Havis is indicated, one should offer Āgrya.

16. The deity (only should be named), if no Mantra is indicated.

17. In the third month of the first pregnancy (of the sacrificer's wife he should perform) the Pumsavana (i.e. the ceremony to secure the birth of a son).

18. After she has bathed, her husband should put on her a (new) garment that has not yet been washed, and after having sacrificed he should stand behind her.

19. Grasping down over her right shoulder he

8. pūrvapaksho dārsasyā. 9. bhoganena santanuyād ity eke. 10. vidyamāne havye yagñīyānām phalāni guhuyāt. 11. palāsāni vā. 12. po vā. 13. hutam hi. 14. prāyaskittam ahutasyā. 15. gyañ guhuyād dhavisho nādese. 16. devatā [corr. devatām?] mantrānādese. 17. prathamagarbhe tritiye māsi pumsavanam. 18. snātām ahatenākādyā hutvā patiḥ prishḥatas tishḥed. 19. dakṣiṇam amsam anvabhimirisyānantarhitam (hitām, hitān, the MSS.) nābhidesam abhimriret pumāmsāv ity.

15, 16 desunt. 17-23=II, 6.

should touch the uncovered place of her navel with (the verse), 'The two men' (MB. I, 4, 8).

20. Then another (ceremony). Having bought for three times seven barley corns or beans, a Nyagrodha-shoot which has fruits on both sides, which is not dry, and not touched by worms, he should set that up with (the formula), 'Ye herbs everywhere, being well-minded, bestow strength on this (shoot); for it will do its work.'

21. He then should take it and place it in the open air.

22. A girl, or a (wife) addicted (to her husband), or a student, or a Brâhmanî should pound (that Nyagrodha-shoot) without moving backward (the stone with which she pounds it).

23. (The husband) should make (the wife) who has bathed, lie down, and should insert (that pounded substance) into her right nostril with (the verse), 'A man is Agni' (MB. I, 4, 9).

24. Then in the fourth or sixth month (of her pregnancy) the Simantonnayana (or parting of the hair is performed) for her.

25. After she has bathed, her husband should put on her a garment that has not yet been washed, and after having sacrificed, he should stand behind her and should part her hair once with a well-proportioned (?) branch of a tree, on which there are fruits, (and) with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, with (the verse), 'Rich in sap is this tree' (MB. I, 5, 1).

20. athâparam nyagrodhasuṅgâm ubhayataḥphalâm asrāmâm akrîmiparisrîptâm trissaptair yavaiḥ parikrîyothâpayen mâshair vâ sarvatraushadhasya sumanaso bhûtvâ (hutvâ, hutvâm the MSS.) asyâm vîryam samâdhatteyam karma karishyaty. 21. âhrîtya vaihâyasîm kuryât. 22. kumârî vratavatî brahmakâri brâhmanî vâ peshayed apratyâharantî. 23. snâtâm samvesya dakshine nâsikâ-srotasy âsiṅket pumân Agnir ity. 24. athâsyâs katurthe mâsi shashthe vâ simantonnayanam. 25. snâtâm ahatenâkhâdya hutvâ patih prishthatas tishthann anupûrvayâ phalavrikshasâkha yâ sakrî simantam unnayet trisvetayâ salalyâyam ūrgâvato vriksha iti.

26. While she looks at a mess of boiled rice with sesamum seeds, covered with ghee, he should ask her, 'What dost thou see?'

27. He should make her reply, 'Offspring!'

28. When the child is appearing, the sacrifice for the woman in labour (is to be performed)—

29. With the two verses, 'She who athwart' (MB. I, 5, 6 seq.).

30. He should give a name to the child, 'N.N.!'

31. That (is his) secret (name).

32. Before the navel-string is cut off and the breast is given (to the child, the father) should have rice and barley grains pounded in the way prescribed for the Nyagrodha-shoot (see Sūtra 22).

33. He should take thereof with his (right) thumb and fourth finger and give it to the child to eat, with (the formula), 'This order' (MB. I, 5, 8).

34. And butter with (the verse), 'May intelligence to thee' (MB. I, 5, 9).

26. krīsarasthālīpākam uttaraghrītam aveksha[n]tīm prikkhet kim paryasīti. 27. pragām iti vākayet. 28. pratishṭhite vastau soshyantīhomaḥ. 29. yā tīrasṣīti dvābhyām. 30. aśāv iti nāma dadhyāt. 31. tad guhyam. 32. prāṇ nābhikrīntanāt stanadānākā vrīhiyavau peshayek kṣuṅgāvritā. 33. śṅgush/ḥenānāmikayā kādāya kumāram prāśayed iyam āgñeti. 34. sarpis kā medhānta iti.

28-34=II, 7, 13 seqq.

KHANDA 3.

1. On the third (Tithi) of the third bright fortnight after his birth, the father should have the child bathed in the morning, and after sunset he should, holding up his joined hands, towards the auspicious directions (of the horizon), worship the moon.

2. The mother, having dressed (the son) in a clean (garment), should hand him, with his face turned to the north, to the father.

3. She then should pass behind (her husband's) back, and should station herself towards the north.

4. After he has performed worship (to the moon) with the three (verses), 'Thy heart, O thou with the well-parted hair' (MB. I, 5, 10 seqq.), and has handed over the son, turning him towards the north, to his mother, he should pour water out of his joined hands with (the verse), 'What in the moon' (l. l. 13).

5. (He should do the same) twice silently.

6. After a period of ten nights, or of a hundred nights, or of one year after (the child's birth) he should give him a name.

7. He who is going to perform (that ceremony—the father or a representative of the father), after he

3, 1. gananâg gyautsne trîtiye trîtiyâyâm prâta snâpya kumâram astam ite sântâsu dikshu pitâ kândramasam upatish/het prâñgalih.
 2. sukinâkhhâdya mâta prayakhed udaksirasam. 3. anuprish/ham gatvottaratas tish/hed. 4. yat te susîma iti tisr/bhir upasthâyodañkam mâtire pradâya yad ada ity apâm añgalim avasîñked.
 5. dvis tûshnim. 6. gananâd ûrdhvam dasarâtrâk khatarâtrât samvatsarâd vâ nâma kuryât. 7. snâpya kumâram karishyata upavish/asya sukinâkhhâdya mâta prayakhed udaksirasam.

3, 1-5 = Gobhila II, 8, 1-7. 6-12 = II, 8, 8-17.

has had the boy bathed, should sit down, and the mother, having dressed him in a clean (garment), should hand him, with his face turned to the north, to the performer (of the ceremony).

8. She then should walk around behind (his) back and should sit down towards the north.

9. He should sacrifice and should touch the sense-organs at (the boy's) head with the (Mantra), 'Who art thou?' (MB. I, 5, 14, 15.)

10. 'N. N.!'—(at the place thus indicated in the Mantra) he should give him a name.

11. The same (he should pronounce) at the end of the Mantra.

12. He should tell it to the mother first.

13. (The father) when returning from a journey, should grasp (with his two hands) his son round the head, with (the verses), 'From limb by limb' (MB. I, 5, 16-18).

14. With (the formula), 'With the cattle's' (l. 1. 19), he should kiss him.

15. Silently (he should do the same) with a daughter.

16. In the third year the tonsure (of the child's head is performed).

17. There the barber, warm water, a mirror, or a

8. anupriśham gatvottarata upavised. 9. dhutvā ko-sīti tasya mukhyān prānān abhimriśed. 10. asāv iti nāma kuryāt. 11. tad eva mantrānte. 12. māt্রে prathamam ākhyāya. 13. viprosyāṅgād aṅgād iti putrasya mūrdhānam parigrihīyāt. 14. parūnām tvety abhigrihet. 15. tūshnīm striyas. 16. tṛtīye varshe kaulan. 17. tatra nāpita ushnodakam ādarsaḥ kshuro vaudumbaraḥ piṅgūlya iti dakṣhinata.

razor of Udumbara-wood, and (Darbha)-blades (are placed) towards the south.

18. A bull's dung and a mess of boiled rice with sesamum seeds which may be more or less cooked, to the north ;

19. And the mother with the son in her lap.

20. (The performer of the ceremony), after having sacrificed, should look, with (the Mantra), 'Hither has come' (MB. I, 6, 1), at the barber, fixing his thoughts on (the god) Savitrî.

21. With (the Mantra), 'With warm water' (l. l. 2), he should look at the warm water, fixing his thoughts on Vâyu.

22. With (the Mantra), 'May the waters' (l. l. 3), he moistens (the boy's hair).

23. With (the Mantra), 'Vishnu's' (l. l. 4), he should look at the mirror or at the razor of Udumbara-wood.

24. With (the Mantra), 'Herb!' (l. l. 5) he puts seven Darbha-blades, with their points upwards (i. e. towards the boy's head ?), into (his hair).

25. With (the formula), 'Axe!' (l. l. 6) (he presses them down) with the mirror or with the razor of Udumbara-wood.

26. With (the Mantra), 'With which Pûshan' (l. l. 7), he should move forward (the razor) three

18. ânadûho gomaya^h k^ris^rasthâlîpâko v^rithâpakva ity uttarato.
 19. mâ^tâ ka kumâram âdâya. 20. hutvâyam agâd iti nâpitam prekshet Savitâram dhyâyann. 21. ushⁿenety ushⁿodakam prekshed Vâyum dhyâyann. 22. âpa ity untte (ante, umde, unⁿte, unⁿte the MSS.). 23. Vishⁿor ity âdarsam prekshetaudumbaramⁿ vau.
 24. shadha iti darbhapîngûlîs saptordhvâgrâ abhinidhâya. 25. svadhita ity âdarsena kshureⁿaudumbareⁿa vâ. 26. yena Pûsheti dakshinatas tri^h prâñkamⁿ prohet.

times towards the east on the right side (of the boy's hair).

27. Cutting (the hair) once with a razor of metal he should throw the hair on the bull's dung.

28. The same rites, beginning from the moistening (of the hair, are repeated) on the left side and on the back side (of the child's head).

29. Grasping (with his two hands) the boy round his head he should murmur (the verse), 'The three-fold age' (l. 1. 8).

30. Walking away (from the fire) in a northern direction he should have the arrangement of (the boy's) hair made according to the custom of his Gotra and of his family.

31. Let them bury the hair in the forest.

32. Some throw them on a bunch (of grass or the like).

33. A cow constitutes the sacrificial fee.

KHANDA 4.

1. Let him initiate a Brāhmaṇa in his eighth year.

2. For him the time (for being initiated) has not passed until his sixteenth (year).

3. In the eleventh a Kshatriya.

27. sakṛid āyasena prakṛhidyānāduhe gomaye keśān kuryād. 28. undanaprabhrīty evaṃ paśād uttaratas ka. 29. tryāyusham iti putrasya mūrdhānam parigrīhya gaped. 30. udānā utsrīpya kusalikārayed yathāgotrakulakalpam. 31. aranye keśān nikhaneyuh. 32. stambe nidadhaty eke. 33. gaur dakṣhinā.

4, 1. ashāme varshe brāhmaṇam upanayet. 2. tasyā shodasād anatītaḥ kālā. 3. ekādase kshatriyam.

4. For him (the time has not passed) until the twenty-second.

5. In the twelfth a Vaisya.

6. For him (the time has not passed) until the twenty-fourth.

7. After (the student's) hair has been arranged, and he has been adorned, and dressed in a garment which has not yet been washed, (the teacher) should sacrifice with (the Mantras which the student recites), 'Agni! Lord of the vow!' (MB. I, 6, 9-13.)

8. He should cause (the student) to stand northwards of the fire, facing the west, and to join his hands.

9. And he should himself join his hands above (the student's hands).

10. A Brâhmana versed in the Mantras who stands towards the south, should fill the teacher's joined hands with water.

11. While (the student?) looks at him, (the teacher) should murmur (the Mantra), 'With him who comes to us' (MB. I, 6, 14).

12. (The student) to whom (the teacher) has said, 'What is thy name?' should pronounce a name which he is to use at respectful salutations, derived from (the name of) a deity or a Nakshatra, 'I am N. N. !' (l. l. 17.)

4. tasyâ dvâvimsâd. 5. dvâdase vaisyam. 6. tasyâ katurvimsât.
 7. kusalîkrîtam alamkrîtam ahatenâkâdya hutvâgne vratapata ity.
 8. uttarato-gneḥ pratyānmukham avasthâpyâñgalim kârayet. 9.
 svayam kopari kuryâd. 10. dakshinatas tishṭhan mantravân brâh-mana âkâryâyodakâñgalim pûrayed. 11. âgantreti gapet preksha-mâne [sic]. 12. ko nâmâsîty ukto devatâsrayam nakshatrâsrayam vâbhivâdanîyam nâma brûyâd asāv asmîty.

13. Having let the water run (out of his joined hands over the student's hands) the teacher should seize with his two hands, holding the right uppermost, (the student's) joined hands, with (the formula), 'By the impulse of the god Savitri' (l. l. 18).

14. With (the formula), 'Move in the sun's course' (l. l. 19) he should make him turn round from left to right.

15. Grasping down over his right shoulder he should touch his uncovered navel with (the formula), '(Thou art the knot) of all breath' (l. l. 20).

16. He then should give him in charge (to the gods) with the Antaka and the other formulas (l. l. 20 seqq.).

17. (He touches) his right shoulder with (the formula), 'To Pragâpati (I give) thee (in charge)' (l. l. 23), 18. His left shoulder with his left (hand) with (the formula), 'To the god Savitri (I give) thee (in charge)' (l. l. 24).

19. Having directed him (to observe the duties of Brahmaçarya, by the formula), 'A student art thou' (l. l. 25, 26), (the teacher) sitting down should from left to right tie round the student, who bends his right knee and clasps his hands, the girdle made of Muñga grass, and should cause him to repeat (the verse), 'Protecting us from evil word' (l. l. 27).

13. utsrigyâpo devasya ta iti dakshinottarâbhyâm hastâbhyâm aṅgalim grihṇīyād âkâryas. 14. Sūryasyeti pradakshinam âvartayed. 15. dakshinam amsam anvavamrīṣyānantarhitām nābhim âlabhet prāṇānām ity. 16. athainam paridadyād antakaprabhṛtibhir. 17. dakshinam amsam Pragâpataye tveti. 18. savyena savyam devâya tveti. 19. brahmakâry asīti sampreshyopavisya (sampprekshy°, samprokshy° the MSS.) dakshinagânvaktam aṅgalīkṛitam pradakshinam muṅgamekhalām âbadhnan vâṭayed iyam duruktād ity.

20. With (the words), 'Recite, sir!' (the student) should respectfully sit down near (the teacher).

21. He then recites the Sâvitṛī (l. l. 29) to him, Pâda by Pâda, hemistich by hemistich, (and finally) the whole—thus he should teach him the Sâvitṛī,

22. And the Mahâvyâhr̥tis, one by one,

23. And the word Om.

24. He hands over to him the staff, which should be made of (the wood of) a tree—

25. With (the formula which the student has to recite), 'O glorious one, make me glorious' (l. l. 31).

26. Let him put a piece of wood (on the fire) with (the verse), 'To Agni a piece of wood' (l. l. 32).

27. Let him go to beg food ;

28. First of his mother,

29. Then of other women friends.

30. He should announce the alms (received) to his teacher.

31. He should stand silently till sunset.

32. Through a period of three nights he should avoid eating saline food and drinking milk.

KHANDA 5.

1. At the Godâna (or cutting of the beard) the

20. adhîhi bho ity upasîdet. 21. tasmâ anvâha sâvitṛīm pakṣho rdhar̥kasas sarvâm iti sâvitṛīm vâkayed. 22. mahâvyâhr̥tis kai-kaikasa. 23. omkâraṁ ka. 24. prayakṣaty asmai vârksham dandam. 25. susravas susravasam meti. 26. samidham âdadhyâd
Agnaye samidham iti. 27. bhaiksham karen. 28. mâtaram agre.
29. thânyâs suhr̥ida. 30. âkâryâya bhaikshan nivedayet. 31.
tish/hed âstamayât tûshnīm. 32. trirâtram kshâralavane dugdham iti vargayet.

5, 1. atha godâne kaulavat kalpaḥ.

5, 1-21 = Gobhila III, 1.

rite is identical with the Kaula (cutting of the hair ; see above, chap. 3, 16 seqq.).

2. He should have (his beard) and the hair of his body shaven.

3. The sacrificial fee consists of an ox and a cow, or of a pair of horses, or of sheep, for the (three) castes respectively,

4. Or of a cow for all (castes).

5. A goat (is given) to the person who catches up the hair.

6. The initiation (connected with the Godānakarman, &c.) has been declared.

7. (One should) not initiate one who does not intend to keep the vow through one year.

8. (The use of) a garment, however, which has not yet been washed (see chap. 4, 7), is not prescribed (here),

9. Nor the adornment (chap. 4, 7).

10. (The observances prescribed for the Godānavrata are the following :)

He should sleep on the ground.

11. He should avoid eating honey and flesh.

12. He should avoid sexual intercourse, shaving, (luxurious) bathing, combing his head, and cleansing his teeth and his feet (in a luxurious way).

13. nāśya kâme reta skandet.

14. Let him not mount a chariot yoked with cows,

2. salomam vâpayed. 3. go-svâvimithunâni dakshinâh prâthag varnânâm. 4. sarveshâm vâ gaur. 5. agah kerapratigrahâyo. 6. ktam upanayanam. 7. nâkarishyantam samvatsaram. 8. aniyuktan tv ahatam. 9. athâlamkâro. 10. dhassamvesy. 11. amadhumâmsâsî syân. 12. maithunakshurakrityasnânâvalekhanadantadhâvanapâdadhâvanâni vargayen. 13. nâśya kâme reta skanden. 14. na goyuktam ârohen.

15. Nor (wear) shoes in the village.
16. Wearing the girdle, going the rounds for alms, (carrying) a staff, putting fuel (on the fire), touching water, reverentially saluting (the teacher) in the morning : (these are the) standing (duties).
17. The Godâna-vrata, the Vratika-vrata, the Âditya-vrata, the Upanishad-vrata, and the Gyeshthasâma-vrata (last) one year (each).
18. The Âditya-vrata some (do) not (undergo).
19. They who undergo it, wear one garment.
20. They allow nothing to be between (themselves and) the sun.
21. And they do not descend into water.
22. For the Sakvarî verses, twelve, nine, six, or three (years through which the Vrata is to be kept) make up the various possibilities.
23. He (who keeps the Sâkvara-vrata) wears dark clothes.
24. He eats dark food.
25. He is entirely addicted to his teacher.
26. He should stand in day-time.
27. He should sit at night.
28. According to some (teachers, the Vrata may last only) one year, if the ancestors (of the student) have learnt (the Sakvarî verses).

15. na grâma upânahau. 16. mekhalâdhâranabhaikshâkarana-dandasamidâdhânopasparsanaprâtarabhivâdâ nityam. 17. godâna-vratikâdityavratopanishaggyeshthasâmikâs samvatsarâ. 18. nâditya-vratam ekeshâm. 19. ye karanty ekavâsaso bhavanty. 20. âditya^ñ ka nântardadhate. 21. na kâpo-bhyupayanti. 22. sakvarî^{nâm} dvâdasa nava sha/ traya iti vikalpâh. 23. krîshnavastra^h. 24. krîshnabhaksha. 25. âtâryâdhînas. 26. tish/hed divâ. 27. sîta naktam. 28. samvatsaram ekeshâm pûrvais srutâs ked.

29. (The teacher) should sing (those verses) to (the student) who has fasted and veiled his eyes (thinking), 'May (the teacher) not burn me (with the Sakvari verses).'

30. In the morning they make (the student) look at such things as they expect will not burn him, viz. water, fire, a calf, the sun.

31. At water (he should look) with (the words), 'Water have I beheld!' At fire with (the words), 'Light have I beheld!' At the calf with (the words), 'Cattle have I beheld!' At the sun with (the words), 'The sky have I beheld!'—thus he should break his silence.

32. A cow is the fee (for the teacher),

33. A brazen vessel, a garment, and a golden ornament.

34. At the Anupravakāṇīya ceremonies (see Āsva-lāyana-Grihya I, 22, 12) he should sacrifice Āgnya with (the two verses), 'To the Rik, to the Sāman we sacrifice' (Sāma-veda I, 369), and, 'The lord of the seat' (Sv. I, 171).

35. If he has touched a fire-altar or a sacrificial post, if he has humming in his ears, or if his eye

29. uposhitāya parinaddhākshâyānugâpayed yathâ mâ na pradhakshyatîti. 30. tam prâtar abhivîkshayanti yâny apradhakshyanti manyante+po+gnim vatsam âdityam. 31. apo+bhiviyakhyam ity apo gyotir abhiviyakhyam ity agnim parûn abhiviyakhyam iti vatsam sur [sic] abhiviyakhyam ity âdityam visriged vâkam. 32. gaur dakshinâ. 33. kamso vâso rukmas kâ. 34. +nupravakāṇīyeshv rikam sâma Sadasaspatim iti kâgyam guhuyât. 35. kitya-yûpopasparsanakarnakrosâkshivepaneshu sûryâbhyuditas sûryâbhinimrukta indriyais ka pâpasparsaiḥ punar mām ity etâbhyâm âhutîr (correct, âhutî?) guhuyâd.

palpitates, or if the sun rises or sets while he is sleeping, or if his organs of sense have been defiled by something bad, he should sacrifice two oblations of Âgya with the two (verses), 'May (my strength) return to me;'

36. Or two pieces of wood anointed with Âgya.

37. Or he may murmur (those verses) at light (offences). Or he may murmur (those verses) at light (offences).

End of the Second Paṭala.

36. âgyalipṭe vâ samidhau.
laghushu. dvitīyapaṭalaḥ.

37. gaped vâ laghushu, gaped vâ

PATALA III, KHANDA 1.

1. When (the student) is going to take the bath (at the end of his studentship), he seats himself in an enclosure to the east of his teacher's house.
2. The teacher (sits) facing the north,
3. On eastward-pointed (Darbha-grass).
4. Thus one (should act) who is desirous of holy lustre.
5. (The student should sit) in a cow-stable, if he is desirous of cattle,
6. In an assembly-hall, if desirous of renown.
7. Let him boil water with all kinds of herbs,
8. And with scents.
9. With that water, which must be lukewarm, the teacher should besprinkle (the student).
10. Or (the student should do so) himself, because that is signified by the Mantra.
11. Some say that both (should do so).
12. The teacher should say (in the Mantra), 'Therewith (I besprinkle) him,' (instead of, 'Therewith I besprinkle myself').
13. With (the verses), 'Which in the waters' (MB. I, 7, 1) (the student) should pour out his joined hands full of water ;

III, 1, 1. âplavane purastâd âkâryakulasya parivṛita âsta. 2. udanmukha âkâryaḥ. 3. prâgagreshv. 4. evaṁ brahmavarṇasakâmo. 5. goshthe parukâmas. 6. sabhâyâṁ yasaskâmaḥ. 7. sarvaushadhenâpaḥ phâṇayet. 8. surabhibhis ka. 9. tâbhis sitoshnâbhir âkâryo-bhishiket. 10. svayaṁ vâ mantrâbhivâdât. 11. ubhâv ity eke. 12. tenemam ity âkâryo brūyât. 13. ye apsv ity apâm aṅgalim avasiṅked.

III, 1, 1-32 = Gobhila III, 4, 7 seqq. (4-6, 11, 12, 15, 20 desunt).

14. And with (the formula), 'What (is dreadful) in the waters' (l. l. 2);

15. And silently.

16. With (the formula), 'The shining one' (l. l. 3), he should draw (some water) and should besprinkle himself (therewith);

17. And with (the verse), 'By which the wife' (l. l. 5);

18. And silently.

19. With (the formulas), 'Rising' (l. l. 6-8), he should worship the sun.

20. He may repeat (the sections of that Mantra) continuously.

21. If he repeats them separately, he should add at the end (of each section), 'The eye art thou' (l. l. 9).

22. With (the verse), 'Loosen the highest' (l. l. 10), he should take off the girdle.

23. After he has eaten something, he should have his hair, his beard, the hair of his body, and his nails cut, so as to leave the lock of hair (as required by the custom of his family).

24. Having adorned himself and put on clothes which have not yet been washed, he should put a garland (on his head) with (the formula), 'Luck' (l. l. 11).

25. The two shoes (he puts on) with (the formula), 'Leaders are you' (l. l. 12).

14. yad apâm iti ka. 15. tûshnîñ ka. 16. yo rokana iti grihyâtmânam abhishîñked. 17. yena striyam iti ka. 18. tûshnîñ ko. 19. dyann ity âdityam upatishhet. 20. samasyed vâ. 21. viharann anusamharek kakshur asity. 22. ud uttamam iti mekhalâm avamuñket. 23. prâsya vâpayek kîikâvargam kesasma-srulomanakhâny. 24. alamkrîto hatavâsasâ srîr iti sragam prati-muñken. 25. netryau stha ity upânahau.

26. With (the formula), 'The Gandharva art thou' (l. l. 13), he takes a bamboo staff.

27. He should approach the teacher and look at the assembly (of pupils, &c.) with (the formula), 'Like an eye-ball' (l. l. 14).

28. Sitting down, he should touch the sense-organs at his head with (the Mantra), 'Covered by the lips' (l. l. 15).

29. Let him touch a chariot yoked with oxen, with (the verse), 'O tree' (l. l. 16).

30. With (the words), 'He who stands on thee' (l. l. 16), he should mount it.

31. Having driven (some distance) in an eastern or northern direction, he should turn round from left to right.

32. Some say that when he has come back, (his teacher should offer to him) the Argha reception.

33. From that time he shall assume a dignified demeanour.

34. nâgâtalomnyopahâsam ikkhet.

35. Nor (should he wish for sport) with a girl who is the only child of her mother,

36. Nor with a woman during her courses,

37. Nor with (a woman) who descends from the same Rishis.

38. Let him not eat food which has been brought

26. vainavam dandam âdadyâd Gandharvo'sity. 27. upetyâ-kâryam parishadam prekshed yaksham ivety. 28. upavisyaush/hâpidhâneti mukhyân prânân abhimrised. 29. goyuktam ratham âlabhed vanaspata ity. 30. âsthâtâ ta ity ârohet. 31. prâkîm prayâyodîkîm vâ gatvâ pradakshinam âvartayet. 32. pratyâgatâyârghyam ity eke. 33. vridhdhasîlî syâd ata ûrdhvam. 34. nâgâ-talomnyopahâsam ikkhen. 35. nâyugyâ (read, nâyugvâ). 36. na ragasvalayâ. 37. na samânarshyâ. 38. parayâ dvârâ prapanna/* (read, prapanna-) dvihpakvaparyushitâni nâsnîyâd.

by another door (than the usual), or which has been cooked twice, or which has stood over-night—

39. Except such as is prepared of vegetables, flesh, barley, or flour—

40. Or of milk.

41. He shall avoid gathering fruits, looking into wells, running while it is raining, and taking his shoes in his hands.

42. He should not wear a scentless wreath,

43. If it is not a wreath of gold.

44. He should not use the word 'blessed' without a reason.

45. If he is desirous of thriving (in his cattle), he should with (the Mantra), 'May these' (MB. I, 8, 1) have his cows driven out.

46. When they have come back, (he should recite the Mantra), 'These which are rich in sweet' (l. l. 2).

47. If he is desirous of thriving (in his cattle), he should lick the forehead of the first-born calf, before it is licked by its mother, and should gulp with (the formula), ('Thou art the phlegm) of the cows' (l. l. 3).

48. When the cows have calved, he should at night sacrifice in the cow-stable churned curds with drops of ghee, with (the verse), 'Seizer' (l. l. 4).

39. anyatra sâkamâmsayavapish/avikârebhyaḥ. 40. pâyasâḥ ka.
41. phalapraśayanodapânâvekshanavarshatidhâvanôpânatsvayamha-razâni na kuryân. 42. nâgandhâm sragam dhârayen. 43. na ked dhiranyasrag. 44. bhadram iti na vrîthâ vyâharet. 45. pushhikâmo gâḥ prakâlayed imâ ma iti. 46. pratyâgatâ imâ madhu-matîr iti. 47. pushhikâma eva prathamagâtasya vatsasya prân mâtuh pralehanâl lalâ/am ullihya nigired gavâm iti. 48. sampra-gâtâsu gosh/the nirâyâṃ vilayanaḥ guhuyât samgrahanety.

49. Now another (ceremony). He should make marks on the ears of a male and of a female calf with (the formula), 'The world art thou' (l. l. 5, 6).

50. First on the male.

51. He should recite over them (the Mantra), 'With metal' (l. l. 7).

52. When the rope (to which the calves are bound) is spread out, (let him recite over it the Mantra), 'This rope' (l. l. 8).

KHANDA 2.

1. On the full-moon day of (the month) Śrāvana, let him carry forward fire from his house, and let him besmear (the place around it) to the extent of more than one prakrama (i. e. step) towards the different directions (of the horizon).

2. Having once taken a quantity of flour, and having put it into (the spoon called) Darvi, he should pour out water on the besmeared place to the east (of the fire), and should offer a Bali with (the formula), ('O king of serpents) dwelling towards the east' (MB. II, 1, 1).

3. He should pour out the rest of the water.

4. Having touched water, he should do the same

49. athâparam vatsamithunayoḥ karne lakṣaṇam kuryād bhuvanam iti. 50. pumsaḥ gre. 51. lohitēnety anumāntrayeta. 52. tantīm prasāritām iyan tantīti.

2, 1. śrāvanyām paurṇamāsyām grīhād agnim atipranīya pratidīśam upalimpēd adhike prakrame. 2. sakṛdgrīhāt saktūn darvyām kṛtvā pūrvopalipṭe ninīyāpo yaḥ prākṛyām iti balim nirvāpen. 3. ninayed apām sesham. 4. apa upasprīṣyaivam pratidīśam yathāliṅgam.

towards the other directions (of the horizon) according as they are mentioned in the Mantras.

5. Between (the besmeared surface) towards the south and that towards the east and the fire (there should be) a passage.

6. After he has thrown the remnants (of flour) out of the basket into the fire, he should go from (the fire) which has been carried forward, to that (fire) which has not (been carried forward), and should turn his hands downwards (so as to touch the earth with them) and should murmur (the Mantra), 'Adoration to the earth's' (l. l. 3).

7. Thence rising he should place (to the north of the fire) a bunch of Darbha-grass with (the Mantra), 'The king Soma' (l. l. 4), and should fix his thoughts on the serpents that are in that bunch.

8. Taking a portion of fried grain, he should go out of the village in a northern or eastern direction, and should sacrifice it with his joined hands with the four (verses), 'Hearken, Râkâ!' (MB. II, 6, 2 seqq.).

9. Walking eastwards he should murmur, 'Be a giver of wealth' (l. l. 6).

10. Thus three times to the different quarters and intermediate quarters (of the horizon).

5. dakshinapasktime antarenâgniñ ka samkarañ. 6. sūrpēna sishân agnāv opyâtipranîtâd anatipranîtasyârdham gatvâ nyañkau pânî krîtvâ namañ Prithivyâ iti gapet. 7. tata utthâya Somo râgeti darbhastambam upasthâya (correct, upasthâpya) stambasthân sarpân manasâ dhyâyann. 8. akshatân âdâya prân vodân vâ grâmân nish-kramya guhuyâd aṅgalinâ haye Râka iti katasrîbhiñ. 9. prân utkramya gaped vasuvana edhîti. 10. tris triñ pratidisam avân-taradeseshu ko.

8-13=IV, 8, 1 seqq. (10 deest).

11. Looking upwards (he should offer a Bali) to the hosts of divine beings,

12. (Looking) towards the side, to the hosts of other beings ;

13. Looking downwards, he should go back (to the fire) without looking back, and should eat the fried grain.

14. On the following day he should prepare flour of fried grain, should put it into a new vessel, and after sunset he should offer Balis.

15. (The same is repeated every day) till the Âgrahâyana day.

16. On the full-moon day of Praushthapada (or) under (the Nakshatra) Hasta they should begin the Veda-study ;

17. On the full-moon day of Srâvana, according to some (teachers).

18. Having sacrificed as at the Upanayana—

19. He should cause (the students) to recite the Sâvitri,

20. (The verse), 'Soma, the king' (Sâma-veda I, 91), and the first verses of the Parvans.

21. Let them eat grain and curds with two appropriate (verses).

22. On the following day in the morning let them repeat (the Veda) to their pupils.

11. rdhvam prekshan devayaganebhyas (correct, devaganebhyas). 12. tiryann itaraganebhyo. 13. vân prekshan pratyetânavekshann akshatân prâsniyâk. 14. khvobhûte kshatasaktûn krîtvâ nave pâtre nidhâyâstam ite balîn hared. 15. âgrahâyanyâk. 16. praushthapadîm hastenâdhyâyân upâkuryuḥ. 17. srâvanîm ity eke. 18. hutvopanayanavat. 19. sâvitriṁ anuvâkayet. 20. Somam râgânam parvâdîms kā. 21. dhânâ dadhi kā prâsniyur abhirûpâbhyâm. 22. svobhûte prâtar adhiyîraṇ khishyebhyo.

16-33=III, 3 (22, 25, 29, 33 desunt).

23. (After each section of the text) they should repeat (as a sort of index ?) the beginnings of the Rikas and the Prastâvas (of the Sâmans).

24. Then the Rahasya texts are chanted,

25. Except when lightning is seen or thunder heard.

26. When they have studied four months and a half, they finish on the full-moon day of Pausha.

27. From that time studying is forbidden when clouds appear,

28. And when lightning is seen, or thunder heard, or when it is drizzling.

29. When these three things happen together, (studying is forbidden) till the twilight has thrice passed.

30. On an Ashṭakâ, on a new-moon day, on the (three) festivals which come once in four months, and at (the beginning of) the northern course of the sun, (studying is forbidden) for one night with one day before and one day after it.

31. And if a fellow-pupil has died.

32. On the falling of a meteor, or after an earthquake, or an eclipse of the sun or of the moon, on these occasions one should know (that studying is forbidden) until the same time next day.

33. The Kaṭhas and Kauthumas, however, state

23. *nuvâkyâḥ kuryur rigâdibhiḥ prastâvais kâ. 24. *nugânam rahasyânâm. 25. vidyutstanayitnuvargam. 26. ardhapañkamân mâsân adhitya paushîm utsargas. 27. tata ūrdhvam mantrânâdhyâyo (correct, abhrânâdhyâyo). 28. vidyutstanayitnuvrîṣhîteshu (correct, °prushîteshu or °prîṣhîteshu; see Ludwig's note on Rig-veda VIII, 1, 12) kâ. 29. trisannipâte trisandhyam. 30. ashṭakâm amâvâsyâm kâturmâsîr udagayane kâ pakshinîm râtrîm. 31. sabrahmaṭârini kâ preta. 32. ulkâpâte bhûmikâle gyoṭishos kopa-sarga eteshv âkâlikam vidyât. 33. kârshvan tu Kaṭhakauthumâḥ.

that (when rain has fallen, studying is forbidden) as long as the water stands in the ditches.

KHANDA 3.

1. On the full-moon day of Āsvayuga milk-rice sacred to Rudra (is prepared).

2. He should offer it with (the Mantra), 'Not to our children.'

3. Let him pour Āgya into milk; this is called a Prishâtaka.

4. Therewith he should besprinkle the cows when they have come home, with (the Mantra), 'May Mitra and Varuna' (Sâma-veda I, 220).

5. That night he should let the calves join their mothers.

6. At the sacrifice of the first-fruits, milk-rice sacred to Indra and Agni (is prepared).

7. Let him sacrifice Āgya with the four (verses), 'To the bearer of the hundred weapons' (MB. II, 1, 9 seqq.),

8. And afterwards with (the verse), 'May Agni eat' (I. I. 15).

9. All of them who have received the initiation, should eat the remainder of that (sacrificial food).

10. Having 'spread under' water, he should cut off two portions of the new fruits.

3, 1. âsvayugîm Rudrâya pâyaso. 2. mâ nas toka iti guhuyât.
 3. payasy avanayed âgyam tat prishâtakam. 4. tenâbhyâgatâ gâ ukshed â no Mitrâvaruneti. 5. vatsâms ka mâtrîbhis saha vâsayet tâm râtrîm. 6. navayagñe pâyasa aindrâgnah. 7. satâyudhâyeti katasrîbhir âgyam guhuyâd. 8. uparishâd Agniñ prâsnâtv iti ka. 9. tasya sesham prâsnîyur yâvanta upetâ. 10. upastîryâpo dvir navasyâvadayet.

3, 1-15 = Gobhila III, 8 (3 deest).

11. Three (portions are cut off) by descendants of Bhrîgu.

12. Over (these portions) water (is poured).

13. He should swallow (some part of that food) three times without chewing it, with (the Mantra), 'From the good' (l. l. 13);

14. Or at (the partaking of) barley with (the Mantra), 'This barley' (l. l. 16).

15. With (the Mantra), 'This art thou' (l. l. 14), let him touch the different sense-organs at his head.

16. The Âgrahâyana ceremony has been explained by the Srâvana (ceremony).

17. Let him (not?) murmur (the Mantra), 'Adoration to the Earth' (see chap. 2, 6).

18. In the evening let him make an oblation of milk-rice with (the verse), 'As the first' (MB. II, 2, 1).

19. Turning downwards his two hands (so as to touch the sacrificial grass) he should murmur (the Mantra), 'In worldly strength' (l. l. 2, 3).

20. Having spread out to the west of the fire a layer of northward-pointed grass, so that it is inclined towards the north, the householder sits down on that layer,

21. (And) the other persons in due order.

22. Then, without an interval, their wives,

11. trîr Bhrîgûnâm. 12. apâñ koparishâd. 13. bhadran na ity asamkhâdya pragiret tris trîr. 14. etam u tyam iti vâ yavânâm. 15. amo-sîti mukhyân prânân abhimrîsed. 16. âgrahâyana kârma srâvarenaiva vyâkhyâtam. 17. namañ Prithivyâ iti gapet (read, iti na gapet?). 18. pradoshe pâyasasya guhuyât prathameti. 19. nyañkau pâñi krîtvâ prati kshatra iti gapet. 20. parâd agne svastaram udagagrais trinair udakpravanam âstîrya tasminn âstarañe grîhapatir âste. 21. nupûrvam itare. 22. nantarâ bhâryâñ.

16-31 = III, 9 and 10, 1-17 (29 deest).

23. And their children.
 24. The householder, turning his hands downwards (so as to touch the layer of grass), should murmur (the Mantra), 'Be soft' (l. l. 4).
 25. When he has finished that (verse), they should lie down on their right sides. They should turn round three times, turning themselves towards themselves (i. e. turning round forwards, not backwards, and thus returning to their former position ?).
 26. Let them repeat the auspicious hymns.
 27. Then let them do what they like.
 28. The eighth days of the three dark fortnights after the Āgrahāyaṇī are called the Ashṭakās.
 29. On (each of) these a mess of cooked food (is sacrificed),
 30. And eight cakes on the first.
 31. These he should bake in a dish without turning them round.
 32. On the last (Ashṭakā) vegetables (are offered). (So also) at the Anvāhārya (Śrāddha).
 33. Let him sacrifice with (the formula), 'To the Ashṭakā Svāhā!'

KHANDA 4.

1. On the middle (Ashṭakā) a cow (is sacrificed).

23. putrās ka. 24. nyañkau pānī krītvā syoneti grīhapatir gapet. 25. samāptāyām dakṣiṇaiḥ pārsvaiḥ samviseyus tris trir abhyātmam āvrītya. 26. svastyayanāni kuryus. 27. tato yathārtham syād. 28. ūrdhvam āgrahāyaṇyās tisras tāmīsrāshṭamyo -shṭakā ity āśakshate. 29. tāsu sthālīpākā. 30. ashṭau kṣpūpāḥ prathamāyām. 31. tān aparivartayan kapāle śrapayed. 32. uttamāyām sākam anvāhārye. 33. -shṭakāyai svāheti guhuyāt.
 4, 1. madhyamāyām gaus.

32, 33=IV, 4, 17. 21.

4, 1-13=Gobhila III, 10, 18 seqq.

2. He should place that (cow) to the east of the fire, facing the west, and should sacrifice (Âgya) with (the verse), 'What, O beasts' (MB. II, 2, 5).

3. After having made that oblation he should recite over (the cow the verse), 'May to thee' (l. l. 6).

4. Let him sprinkle it with water in which barley is, with (the formula), 'Agreeable to the Ashṭakâ I sprinkle thee!'

5. Having sprinkled it and carried a fire-brand round it, he should give the Prokshant water (to the cow) to drink.

6. Going in a northern direction (from the fire) he should kill (the cow), the head of which is turned to the west, the feet to the north.

7. After it has been killed, he should sacrifice (Âgya) with (the verse), 'If the beast' (l. l. 8).

8. His wife should wash the apertures of its body.

9. After (the cow's body) has been opened, so that two purifiers (i. e. grass-blades) have been put under (the knife), he should have the omentum drawn out.

10. Seizing it with one branch and with another forked branch of a sacrificially pure tree he should roast it.

11. When it has ceased to drop, he should hew (the cow) to pieces.

2. tām purastād agneḥ pratyānmukhīm avasthāpya guhuyād yat paśava iti. 3. hutvā kânumantrayetānu tveti. 4. yavamātibhir adbhiḥ prokshed ashṭakāyai tvā gushṭam (correct, gushṭām) prokshāmiti. 5. prokshyolmukena parihṛitya prokshantī pāyayed. 6. udanī utsrīpya pratyaksirasam (°sim, °sīm the MSS.) udakpadīm samgñāpayet. 7. samgñāptāyām guhuyād yat paśur iti. 8. tasyāḥ patnī srotāmsi prakshālayet. 9. pavitre antardhāyotkrītya vapām uddhārayed. 10. yagñiyasya vrīkshasya visākhāsākhābhayām parigrīhyāgnau śrapayet. 11. prasrītāyām visased.

12. The 'spreading under' and sprinkling (of Āgya) on (the omentum) has been described. (It is done) as at the Svishṭakṛit oblation (see II, 1, 24).

13. He should sacrifice with (the formula), 'To the Ashṭakā Svāhā!'

14. The Avadānas (or portions which have to be cut off) he should have taken from all its limbs.

15. Not from the left thigh and the lungs.

16. The left thigh he keeps (for the Anvashṭakya).

17. He should cook the Avadānas and a mess of sacrificial food, (stirring up the ones and the other) with two different pot-ladles.

18. The juice he lets drop into a brazen vessel.

19. The Avadānas he puts on branches of the Plaksha tree.

20. From each (Avadāna) he should cut off (the prescribed portions, and should put them) into a brazen vessel;

21. And from the mess of cooked food.

22. Let him take four portions or eight portions of Āgya (?) and let him sacrifice it with (the verses), 'Into Agni' (MB. II, 2, 9 seqq.).

23. Let him make oblations out of the brazen vessel, each oblation with two of the following (verses).

12. uktam upastaranābhīghāraṇam yathā svishṭakṛito. 13. śhā-kāyai svāheti guhuyāt. 14. sarvāṅgebhyo vadānāny uddhārayen. 15. na savyāt sakthno na klomnaḥ. 16. savyam sakthi nidhāya. 17. prṛthan mekshanābhyām avadānāni sthālīpākāḥ ka śrapayitvā. 18. kamse rasam prasrāvya. 19. plakshasākḥāsv avadānāni kṛitvai. 20. kaikasmāt kamse vadyet. 21. sthālīpākāḥ ka. 22. katurgrīhītam ashṭagrīhītam vātra (vāgyam? vātram, vātra the MSS.) guhuyād Agnāv iti. 23. kamsāt parābhir dvābhyām dvābhyām ekaikām āhutim.

24. The oblation to (Agni) Svishtakṛit with the eighth (verse).

25. At a sacrifice to the Fathers the omentum is sacrificed with (the verse), 'Carry the omentum' (MB. II, 3, 16).

26. At one to the gods with (the verse), 'Gāta-vedas!' (l. 1. 17.)

27. If (the deity is) unknown, (in the formula for) assigning (the oblation, instead of the name of a deity the name of) that (ceremony is put)—

28. As (for instance), 'To the Ashṭakâ.'

29. An animal is the sacrificial fee at (the sacrifice of) an animal;

30. A full vessel at (that of) a mess of cooked food.

KHANDA 5.

1. On the ninth or tenth (of the dark fortnight) the Anvashṭakya (ceremony is performed).

2. To the south-east (of the house) they partition off (a place with mats or the like), and to the northern part of that (place) he should carry a fire which has been kindled by attrition.

3. Let him take one portion of rice, let him remove the husks once, and let him cook it, stirring it up from right to left.

24. sauvishṭakṛitam ash/amyâ. 25. vaha vapâm iti pitrye vapâ-homo. 26. Gâtaveda iti daivatye. 27. tadâdesam anâgñâte. 28. yathâshṭakâyâ iti. 29. pasur eva pasor dakshinâ. 30. sthâlipâ-kasya pûrnâpâtram.

5, 1. *navamîm dasamîm vânvashṭakya*m. 2. dakshinâpûrva-bhâge parivârya tatrottarârdhe mathitvâgnim prapayet. 3. sakṛid-grhîtân vrîhîn sakṛtphalîkṛitân prasavyam udâyuvāṣṭrapayed.

25-28=IV, 4, 22-24 (29 deest). 30=I, 9, 6. 10.

5, 1-12=Gobhila IV, 2.

4. And some flesh of that thigh (see above, chap. 4, 16).

5. He should take it from the fire in a southern direction, and should omit the second sprinkling (of Āgrya) on it.

6. To the west of the fire he should dig, in the southern part (of the place mentioned in Sûtra 2) three pits, four inches in depth and breadth.

7. He should carry the fire to the east of them.

8. He should strew (Darbha-grass round the fire),

9. And (into) the pits.

10. Having spread out to the west of the fire a layer of southward-pointed grass so that it is inclined towards the south, he should put (a mat) on it.

11. On that (grass) he should place the sacrificial implements, one by one.

12. Cutting off (the prescribed portions of the sacrificial food, and putting those portions) into the brazen vessel he should sacrifice, picking out (portions of the Havis) with the pot-ladle, with (the formulas), 'Svâhâ to Soma Pitṛimat! Svâhâ to Agni Kavyavâhana!' (MB. II, 3, 1, 2.)

13. With his left hand he should lay down a fire-brand on the southern side of the pits (Sûtra 6), with

4. amushmât ka sakthno mâmsam iti. 5. dakshinodvâsya na pratyabhigârayet. 6. paśkâd agner dakshinâs tisraḥ karshûḥ khanyât katurāṅgulaṁ adhas tiryak ka. 7. tâsâm purastâd agnim pranayet. 8. strimuyât. 9. karshûs ka. 10. paśkâd agne svastaram dakshinâgrais trinair dakshinâpravanam âstîrya brîśim upari nidadyât. 11. tasminn ekaikam âharet. 12. kaṁse samavadâya mekshanenopaghâtam guhuyât svâhâ Somâya pitṛimate svâhâgnaye kavyavâhanâyeti. 13. savyenolmukam dakshinataḥ karshûr nidadyât apahatâ iti.

(the formula), ' (The Asuras have been) driven away' (MB. II, 3, 3).

14. (He should perform the different rites) in the eastern pit for his father,

15. In the middle for his grandfather,

16. In the last for his great-grandfather.

17. Let him pour out vessels of water, from right to left, into the pits, pronouncing the name of each one (of his ancestors), with (the formula), ' N. N. ! Wash thyself, and they who follow thee here, and they whom thou followest. To thee Svadhâ !'

18. In the same way he should put down the Pindas for them and should murmur, ' Here, O Fathers, enjoy yourselves ; show your manly vigour each for his part ' (MB. II, 3, 6).

19. After he has spoken thus, he should turn to the north, doubling his left arm, turning round from right to left.

20. Holding his breath and fixing his thoughts on something good he should, while turning back (in the same way), murmur : ' The Fathers have enjoyed themselves ; they have shown their manly vigour each for his part ' (MB. II, 3, 7).

21. He should sprinkle collyrium on three Darbha-

14. pûrvasyâm karshvâm pitur. 15. madhyamâyâm pitâmahasyo. 16. uttamâyâm prapitâmahasyo. 17. apâtrâny apasalavi karshûshu ninayed ekaikasya nâmoktvâsâv avanenikshva ye kâtra tvânu yâms ka tvam anu tasmai te svâheti (correct, svadheti). 18. tathaiva pindân nidhâya gaped atra pitaro mâdayadhvam yathâbhâgam âvrishâyadhvam ity. 19. uktvodaññ âvarteta savyam bâhum upasamhrîtya prasavyam âvrîtyo. 20. patâmya kalyânam dhyâyann abhiparyâvartamâno gaped amîmadanta pitaro yathâbhâgam âvrishâyishateti. 21. tisro darbhapiñgûlir aṅganena nighrîshya karshûshu nidadhyâd yathâpindam.

blades, and should put them down into the pits in the same way as the Pindās, 22. And sesamum oil and perfumes.

23. For the Pindās and the following offerings he should alter the formula (Sûtra 17) accordingly.

24. Now (follows) the deprecation.

25. On the eastern pit he lays his hands, turning the inside of the right hand upwards, with (the formula), 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of life! Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of vital breath!' (MB. II, 3, 8.)

26. On the middle, turning the inside of the left hand upwards, with (the formula), 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of terror! Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of sap!' (MB. I. 1.)

27. On the western, turning the inside of the right hand upwards, with (the formula), 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of comfort (svadhâ)! Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of wrath!' (MB. II, 3, 9.)

28. Joining his hands—

29. (He should murmur the formula), 'Adoration to you' (MB. II, 3, 9).

30. He should lay down threads into the pits in the same way as the Pindās, with (the formula), 'This (garment) to you.'

22. tailam surabhi ka. 23. pindaprabhriti yathârtham ūhed.
 24. atha nihnavanam. 25. pûrvasyâm karshvâm dakshinottânau pâni krîtvâ namo vah pitaro gîvâya namo vah pitaras sûshâyeti.
 26. savyottânau madhyamâyâm namo vah pitaro ghorâya namo vah pitaro rasâyeti. 27. dakshinottânau paskimâyâm namo vah pitara svadhâyai namo vah pitaro manyava ity. 28. aṅgalim krîtvâ 29. namo va iti. 30. sūtratantūn karshūshu nidadhyād yathâpindam etad va ity.

31. He should recite over the pits (the verse), 'Bringing strength' (MB. II, 3, 13).

32. The middle Pinda he should give to his wife to eat, if she is desirous of a son, with (the verse), 'Give fruit.'

33. With (the verse), '(Gâtavedas) has been our messenger' (MB. II, 3, 15), he should throw the fire-brand into the fire.

34. They should take the sacrificial vessels back two by two.

35. The same is the rite of the Pindapitriyagña.

36. Let him cook the Havis in the (sacred) domestic fire.

37. From that fire (let him take the fire which) he carries forward (see above, Sûtra 2).

38. (Here is only) one pit.

39. No layer of grass (Sûtra 10).

40. Of the mess of cooked food sacred to Indrâni he should sacrifice with (the verse), 'The Ekâshṭakâ' (MB. II, 3, 19). He should sacrifice with (the verse), 'The Ekâshṭakâ.'

End of the Third Paṭala.

31. ûrgam vahantîr iti karshûr anumantrayeta. 32. madhyamam pindam putrakâmâm prâsayed âdhattety. 33. abhûn no dûta ity ulmukam agnau prakshiped. 34. dvandvam pâtrâny atihareyur. 35. esha eva pindapitriyagñakalpo. 36. grîhyeagnau havis srapayet. 37. tata evâtipranayed. 38. ekâ karshûr. 39. na svastara. 40. Indrânyâ sthâlîpâkasyaikâshṭaketi guhuyâd ekâshṭaketi guhuyât. trîtiyapaṭalâh.

35-39=IV, 4, 1 seqq. 40=IV, 4, 32. 33.

PATALA IV, KHANDA 1.

1. When undertaking ceremonies for the obtainment of special wishes, let him omit six meals or three.

2. At such ceremonies as are repeated daily, (let him do so only) in the beginning ;

3. After (the ceremony), if it is performed on account of a prodigy.

4. Thus also at the performances of the sacrificial day (i. e. of the first day of the fortnight).

5. One who keeps the vow (of fasting) through one fortnight, (may avail himself of the following indulgence) :

6. If he is not able (to subsist entirely without food, let him drink) rice-water once a day.

7. Let him murmur the Prapada formula (MB. II, 4, 5), sitting in the forest on eastward-pointed grass-blades.

8. Thus one who is desirous of holy lustre.

9. One who is desirous of cattle, as stated above (III, 1, 5?).

10. One who desires that his stock of cattle

IV, 1, 1. kâmyeshu shad bhaktâni trîni vâ nâsnîyân. 2. nitya-prayuktânâm âdita. 3. uparishât sânnipâtika. 4. evam yaganî-yaprayogeshv. 5. ardhamâsavraty. 6. araktau peyam (read, peyâm) ekam kâlam. 7. aranye prapadam gaped âsinaḥ prâg-agreshv. 8. evam brahmavarṇasakâmo. 9. yathoktam pasu-kâmaḥ. 10. sahasrabâhur iti pasusvastyayanakâmo vrihiyavau guhuyâd.

IV, 1, 1-18=Gobhila IV, 5, 1, 9, 10, 11, 13, 12, 27, 24, 25, 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 27, 28, 22, 23, 30-34 (9 deest).

may increase, should sacrifice rice and barley, with (the verse), 'He who has a thousand arms' (MB. II, 4, 7).

11. To one with whom he wishes to become associated, he should give fruits of a big tree, over which he has murmured the Kautomata verse (MB. II, 4, 8).

12. Having kept the vow (of fasting) through one fortnight, he should in the full-moon night plunge up to his navel into a pool which does not dry up, and should sacrifice with his mouth fried grain into the water, with the five (verses), 'Like a tree' (MB. II, 4, 9-13).

13. This ceremony procures (property on) the earth.

14. One who is desirous of the enjoyment (of riches), should worship the sun with the first (of those five verses), while one who is rich in wealth should look at him.

15. One who desires that his stock of horses and elephants may increase, (should sacrifice) fried grain with the second (of those verses), while the sun has a halo.

16. One who desires that his flocks may increase, (should sacrifice) sesamum seeds with the third (verse), while the moon has a halo.

11. yenekhet sahakâram kautomatenâsya mahâvrikshaphalâni parigapya dadyâd. 12. ardhamâsavratî paurṇamâsyâm râtrau nâbhimâtram pragâhyâvidâsini hrade kshatatandulân âsyena guhuyâd udake vriksha iveti pañkabhih. 13. pârthivam karma. 14. prathamayâdityam upatish/hed bhogakâmo rthapatau prekshamâne. 15. dvitîyayâkshatatandulân âditye parivishyamâne bṛihatpattrasvastyayanakâmas. 16. trîtiyayâ kandramasi tilatandulân kshudrapasusvastyayanakâmas.

17. Having worshipped the sun with the fourth (verse), let him try to gain great wealth.

18. Having worshipped the sun with the fifth, let him return home.

19. In order to avert involuntary death let him murmur every day (the formula), 'Bhûh!' (MB. II, 4, 14.)

20. On the sacrificial day (i. e. the first day of the fortnight) let him make oblations with the six verses, 'From the head' (MB. II, 5, 1 seqq.), with the Vâmadevya verses, with the Mahâvyâhṛitis, and with the verse sacred to Pragâpati (l. l. 8).

21. Thus he will drive away misfortune.

22. On an unsafe road let him murmur the verse, 'Go away' (Rig-veda X, 164, 1).

23. One who is desirous of glory should worship the sun in the forenoon, at noon, and in the afternoon, with (the formula), 'I am glory' (MB. II, 5, 9).

24. Let him change (the word), 'Of the forenoon,' according (to the different times of the day).

25. Worshipping (the sun) at twilight with the formula, 'O sun! the ship' (MB. II, 5, 14), procures happiness.

26. At the morning twilight (he says), 'When thou risest' (l. l. 15).

17. katurthyâdityam upasthâya gurum artham abhyuttish/het.
 18. pañkamyâdityam upasthâya grîhân eyâd. 19. anakâmamâram nityam gaped bhûr iti. 20. yaganîye guhuyân mûrdhno-dhi ma iti shadhbhir vâmadevyargbhir mahâvyâhṛîubhih prâgâpatyayâ kâ.
 21. lakshmnîrnod. 22. ksheme pathy apehiti gaped. 23. yaśo ham ity âdityam upatish/hed yaśaskâmaḥ pûrvâhnamadhyandinâ-parâhñeshu. 24. prâtarahñasyeti yathârtham ūhed. 25. âditya nâvam iti sandhyopasthânam svastyayanam. 26. udyantam tveti pûrvâm.

19-27=IV, 6, 1, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 3, 10-12 (22 deest).

27. At the evening twilight, 'When thou goest to rest' (l. 1. 16).

KHANDA 2.

1. Having kept the vow (of fasting) through one fortnight, he should, on the first day of the dark fortnight, feed the Brâhmanas with boiled milk-rice prepared of one Kamsa of rice.

2. The small grains of that (rice) he should sacrifice (day by day) at the evening twilight to the west of the village, on a place which he has besmeared (with cowdung), with the formula, 'To Phala' (MB. II, 5, 17).

3. And with (the formula), 'To Phalla!' The same on the first day of the next dark fortnight.

4. He shall observe chastity till the end (of the rite).

5. A hundred cart-loads (of gold) will be his.

6. A Brâhmana should elect the site for building his house on white ground, a Kshatriya on red, a Vaisya on black, which should be even, covered with grass, not salinous, not dry—

7. Where the water flows off to the north-west.

8. (Plants) with milky juice or with thorns or acrid plants should not be there.

27. pratishthantam tveti paschimâm.

2, 1. ardhmâsavratî tâmisrâdau brâhmanân âsayed vrîhikamsaudanam. 2. tasya kanân aparâsu sandhyâsu pratyag grâmât sthandîlam upalipya Phalâyeti guhuyât. 3. Phallâyeti taivam evâparasmims tâmisrâdau. 4. brahmaṣṭryam â samâpter. 5. âkîtasatam bhavati. 6. gaure bhûmibhâge brâhmano lohite kshatriyâḥ kṛishne vaisyo vasânâṃ goshayet samam lomâsam anîrinam asushkam. 7. yatrodakam pratyagudîkîm pravartate. 8. kshîrinâḥ kantakînâḥ [sic] ka/ukâs kâtraushadhayo na syur.

2, 1-5=Gobhila IV, 6, 13-16. 6-23=IV, 7.

9. (Soil) on which Darbha-grass grows, brings holy lustre ;

10. Big sorts of grass, strength ;

11. Tender grass, cattle.

12. Or (the site of the house) should have the form of bricks (?) or of (?)

13. Or there should be natural holes (in the ground) in all directions.

14, 15. (A house) with its door to the east brings wealth and fame ; with its door to the north, children and cattle. By one with its door to the south all wishes (are obtained). The back-door should not face (?) the house-door.

16. Milk-rice should be offered,

17. And a black cow,

18. Or a white goat. Or only milk-rice.

19. In the middle of the house he should sacrifice the fat (of the animal) and the milk-rice, mixed with Āgya, taking eight portions (of that mixture), with (the verse), 'Vāstoshpati!' (MB. II, 6, 1.)

20. And with the seven last (texts) used at the driving away of misfortune (see above, chap. 1, 20, 21).

21. After he has sacrificed, he should distribute Balis in the different directions (of the horizon).

9. darbhasammitam brahmavarkasyam. 10. brihatttrinair balyam. 11. mridutrinaiḥ paravyam. 12. sâtâbhir (corr. sâdâbhir?) mandaladvîpibhir vâ. 13. yatra vâ svayamkrîtâḥ svabhrâḥ sarvato-bhimukhâ syuḥ. 14. prâgdvâram dhanyam yasasyam kodagdvâram putryam paravyam ka dakshinadvâre sarve kâmâ. anudvâram gehadvâram 15. asamlôkî (asamlôki?) syât. 16. pâyaso haviḥ. 17. krîṣṇâ ka gaur. 18. ago vâ svetaḥ pâyasa eva vâ. 19. madhye vesmano vasâm pâyasam kâgyena misram aṣṭagrîhîtam guhuyâd Vâstoshpata iti. 20. yâs ka parâs saptâlakshmîrnode tâbhis ka. 21. hutvâ diśâm balim nayed.

22. And towards the intermediate points, and upwards and downwards.

23. This (he should repeat) every year, or at the two sacrifices of the first-fruits (of rice and barley).

24. With the two (formulas), 'Obeying the will' (MB. II, 6, 7, 8), he should sacrifice two oblations.

25. He should pronounce the name of the person whom he wishes to subdue to his will, 'N. N. ;' then that person will obey him.

KHANDA 3.

1. Keeping the observance (of fasting) through one fortnight, let him sacrifice in a full-moon night one hundred pegs with the Ekâksharyâ verse (MB. II, 6, 9), if he is desirous of having (a large) family.

2. (Those pegs should be) of Khâdira wood, if he is desirous of long life.

3. Now another (ceremony performed with the same verse). He should go out of the village in an eastern or northern direction, should brush up an elevated surface, or (should raise it) on a mountain with the dung of beasts of the forest, should set it on

22. avântaradisâm kordhvâvâkîbhyâm kai. 23. śvam samvatsare samvatsare navayagñayor vâ. 24. vasamgamâv ity etâbhyâm âhutî guhuyâd. 25. yam ikhêd vasam âyântam tasya nâma grîhîtvâsâv iti vasî hâsya bhavati.

3, 1. ardhamâsavratî paurnamâsyâm râtrau saṅkusatam guhuyâd ekâksharyâyâ sânvayakâmaḥ. 2. khâdirân âyushkâmo. 3. sthâparam. prân vodaṇ vâ grâmân nishkrâmya sthândîlam samûhya parvate vâran̄yair gomayai sthâpayitvâ (read, gomayais tâpayitvâ?) śngârân apohyâsyena guhuyâd.

24=IV, 8, 7 (25 deest).

3, 1-5=Gobhila IV, 8, 10-16. 6=IV, 9, 15.

fire, should sweep the coals away (from that surface), and should make an oblation (of butter) with his mouth.

4. If (the butter) catches fire, twelve villages (will be his).

5. If smoke rises, at least three.

6. Let him sacrifice in the evening and in the morning the fallings-off of rice-grains. Thus his means of livelihood will not be exhausted.

7. Of articles of trade let him make an oblation with (the formula), 'Here (this Visvakarman),' (MB. II, 6, 10.)

8. On the sacrificial day (i. e. on the first day of the fortnight) let him sacrifice a full oblation (with the verse MB. II, 6, 11, 'A full oblation I sacrifice,' &c.).

9. One who is desirous of companions (should sacrifice) with (the formula), 'Indrāmavadât' (?), (MB. II, 6, 12.)

10. He should fast through a period of eight nights, and then should kindle a fire to the east or to the north of the village, at a place where four roads meet. The fuel should be Udumbara wood, and the Sruva and the cup (for water should be of the same wood). Let him sacrifice (Āgrya) with (the formulas), 'Food indeed,' and 'Bliss indeed' (MB. II, 6, 13, 14).

11. A third (oblation) in the village with (the formula), 'The food's' (l. l. 15).

4. dvādasa grāmā gvalite. 5. tryavarā dhūme. 6. kambūkān sâyamprātar guhuyān nāsyā vr̥ttih kshīyata. 7. idam aham imam iti panyahomam guhuyāt. 8. pūrnahomam yaganīye guhuyād. 9. Indrāmavadād iti sahāyakāmo. 10. śhārātroposhito param prān vodañ vā grāmāḥ katuspathē samidhyāgnim audumbara idhma syāt sruvakamasau ka guhuyād annam vā iti sr̥ir vā iti. 11. grāme tr̥itīyām annasyety.

7-9=IV, 8, 19 seqq. 10-16=IV, 9, 1 seqq.

12. Then he will become a ruler.
 13. When (his cows) are sick, let him sacrifice milk-rice in the cow-stable.
 14. On a dangerous road let him make knots in the skirts of the garments (of those who travel together). This will bring a prosperous journey to (himself) and his companions.
 15. With the two (formulas), 'To Hunger Svâhâ !' (MB. II, 6, 16, 17), let him sacrifice a thousand oblations, if he desires to obtain a thousand cart-loads (of gold).
 16. One who is desirous of cattle (should sacrifice one thousand oblations) of the excrements of a male and a female calf. Of a male and a female sheep, if he is desirous of flocks.
 17. Let him make oblations of fresh cowdung in the evening and in the morning; then his means of livelihood will not be exhausted.

KHANDA 4.

1. One who has been bitten by a venomous animal, he should besprinkle with water, murmuring (the verse), 'Do not fear' (MB. II, 6, 18).

12. âdhipatyam prâpnoty. 13. upatâpinîshu goshthe pâyasam guhuyâd. 14. aksheme pathi vastradasânâm granthîn kuryât sahâ-yinâm (sahâyânâm?) ka svastyayanâni. 15. kshudhe svâhety etâ-bhyâm âhutisahasram guhuyâd âkîtasahasrakâmo. 16. vatsa-mithunayoḥ purîshena pasukâmo vimithunayoḥ kshudrapasukâmo. 17. haritagomayena sâyamprâtar guhuyân nâsya vrîttiḥ kshîyate.
 4, 1. vishavatâ dasham adbhir abhyukshan gapen mâ bhaishîr iti.

17=IV, 8, 18.

4, 1-4=Gobhila IV, 9, 16 seqq.

2. A Snâtaka should, when lying down to sleep, put his bamboo staff near (his bed) with (the formula), 'Strong one, protect' (l. l. 19). This will bring him luck.

3. A place where he has a worm he should besprinkle with water, murmuring (the verses), 'Thy worm is killed' (MB. II, 7, 1-4).

4. (If doing this) for his cattle, let him fetch in the afternoon an earth-clod taken out of a furrow, and let him in the morning strew the dust of it (on the place attacked by worms), murmuring (the same texts).

5. (A guest) who is going to accept the Madhuparka should come forward murmuring, 'Here I tread on this' (MB. II, 8, 2).

6. They announce three times (to the guest) each (of the following things which are brought to him): a bed (of grass), water for washing the feet, the Argha water, water for sipping, and the Madhuparka;

7. And the cow.

8. Having spread out the bed (of grass, so that the points of the grass are) turned to the north, he should sit down thereon with (the verse), 'The herbs which' (MB. II, 8, 3).

9. With the feet (he treads on another bundle of grass), if there are two, with the second (verse) (l. l. 4).

2. snâtakas samvisan vainavam dandam upanidadyât tura gopâyeti svastyayanam. 3. hata ta (hastata, haṣṭa, hasta, vitasta, the MSS.) iti kṛimimantam devam adbhir abhyukshaṇ gapet. 4. paśūnām ked aparāhne sītālosham āhrīya tasya prātaḥ pāmsubhiḥ pratishkiraṇ gapen. 5. madhuparkam pratigrahīshyann idam aham imām iti pratitishṭhaṇ gaped. 6. vishṭarapādyârghyâkamanīyamadhuparkânām ekaikam trir vedayante. 7. gām ko. 8. dañṭam vishṭaram âstūrya yâ oshadhîr ity adhyâsīta. 9. pādāyor dvitīyayâ dvau ked.

10. Let him look at the water with (the formula), 'From which side I see the goddesses' (l. l. 5).

11. Let him wash his left foot with (the formula), 'The left' (l. l. 6), the right with, 'The right' (l. l. 7); both with the rest (8).

12. Let him accept the Arghya water with (the formula), 'Thou art the queen of food' (l. l. 9).

13. The water which he is to sip, (he accepts) with (the formula), 'Glory art thou' (l. l. 10).

14. The Madhuparka with (the formula), 'The glory's glory art thou' (l. l. 11).

15. Let him drink three times with (the formulas), 'The glory's,' 'The might's,' 'The fortune's' (l. l. 12).

16. Having drunk more of it a fourth time silently he should give the remainder to a Brâhmaṇa.

17. Over the cow, when it has been announced to him, he should recite (the formula), 'Let loose the cow.'

18. Instead of 'and of N. N.' (in that formula) he should put the name of the person who offers the Arghya reception.

19. Thus if it is no sacrifice (by which the Arghya ceremony has been occasioned).

20. 'Make it (ready),' if it is a sacrifice.

10. apaḥ paryed yato devîr iti. 11. savyam pâdam avasiñked savyam iti dakshinam dakshinam ity ubhau seshenâ. 12. nnasya râshtrir asîty arghyam pratigrhînyâd. 13. yaso-sîty âkamanîyam. 14. yasaso yaso-sîti madhuparkam. 15. triḥ pibed yasaso mahâsa sriyâ iti. 16. tûshnîm katurtham bhûyo-bhipâya brâhmaṇâ-yokkshishîtam dadyâd. 17. gâm veditâm anumantrayeta muñka gâm ity. 18. amushya kety arhayitur nâma brûyâd. 19. evam ayagñe. 20. kuruteti yagñâ.

21. The six persons to whom the Arghya reception is due are, a teacher, an officiating priest, a Snâtaka, a king, the father-in-law, a friend.

22. He should honour them (with the Arghya reception) once a year ;

23. But repeatedly in the case of a sacrifice and of a wedding. But repeatedly in the case of a sacrifice and of a wedding.

End of the Fourth Patala.

End of the Gr̥hyakhanda.

21. âkârya r̥itvik snâtako râgâ vivâhyah priya iti shad arghyâh.
 22. pratisamvatsarân arhayet. 23. punar yagñavivâhayos ka punar yagñavivâhayos ka. katurthapatalah.
gr̥hyakhandam samâptam.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	. . .	. . .	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	. . .	. . .	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	. . .	. . .	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	. . .
4 " aspirata	gh	. . .	. . .	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	. . .
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	. . .	. . .	ङ	{ 𐬙 (ng) 𐬚 (N) 𐬛 (ngħ)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
7 Spiritus asper	h	. . .	. . .	ह	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	h, hs
8 " lenis	,	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
9 " asper faucalis	ʰ	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
10 " lenis faucalis	ʰ	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
11 " asper fricatus	ʰ	ʰ	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
12 " lenis fricatus	ʰ	ʰ	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	. . .	. . .	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
14 " aspirata	kh	. . .	. . .	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
15 Media	g	. . .	. . .	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	. . .
16 " aspirata	gh	. . .	. . .	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	. . .
17 " Nasalis	ṅ	. . .	. . .	ङ	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	. . .

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	. . .	. . .	य	𐬨 𐬩 𐬪	𐬨	ي	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	. . .	(y)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
20 " lenis	. . .	(y)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
21 " asper assibilatus	. . .	s	. . .	श	𐬨𐬭	𐬨𐬭	ش	ش	ש	. . .
22 " lenis assibilatus	. . .	z	. . .	. . .	𐬨𐬭	𐬨𐬭	ز	ز	ז	z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	. . .	. . .	त	𐬢	𐬢	ت	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	. . .	. . .	थ	𐬢𐬨	𐬢𐬨	ث	ث	ת	th
25 " assibilata	. . .	. . .	TH	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
26 Media	d	. . .	. . .	द	𐬢𐬨	𐬢𐬨	د	د	. . .	. . .
27 " aspirata	dh	. . .	. . .	ध	𐬢𐬨𐬭	𐬢𐬨𐬭	ذ	ذ	. . .	. . .
28 " assibilata	. . .	. . .	DH	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
29 Nasalis	n	. . .	. . .	न	𐬢𐬨	𐬢𐬨	ن	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l	. . .	. . .	ल	𐬢𐬨𐬭	𐬢𐬨𐬭	ل	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	. . .	l	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
32 " mollis 2	. . .	. . .	L	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	. . .	. . .	स	𐬢𐬨𐬭	𐬢𐬨𐬭	س	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2	. . .	. . .	s (f)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
35 " lenis	z	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
36 " asperimus 1	. . .	. . .	z (3)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .
37 " asperimus 2	. . .	. . .	z (3)	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .	. . .

Dentales modificatae (linguales, &c.)		Labiales.
38 Tenuis	t	38 Tenuis	p
39 " aspirata	th	39 " aspirata	ph
40 Media	d	40 Media	b
41 " aspirata	dh	41 " aspirata	bh
42 Nasalis	n	42 Tenuissima
43 Semivocalis	r	43 Nasalis	m
44 " fricata	r	44 Semivocalis	w
45 " diacritica	r	45 " aspirata	hw
46 Spiritus asper	sh	46 Spiritus asper	f
47 " lenis	zh	47 " lenis	v
		48 Tenuis
		49 " aspirata
		50 Media
		51 " aspirata
		52 Tenuissima
		53 Nasalis
		54 Semivocalis
		55 " aspirata
		56 Spiritus asper
		57 " lenis
		58 Anusvāra
		59 Visarga

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		III Class.
	I Class.	II Class.
1 Neutralis	0	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ə
2 Laryngo-palatalis	è	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
3 " labialis	ø	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	a
5 " longa	ā	.	(a)	.	.	.	.	.	.	ā
6 Palatalis brevis	i	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	i
7 " longa	ī	.	(i)	.	.	.	.	.	.	ī
8 Dentalis brevis	ɛ	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
9 " longa	ē	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
10 Lingualis brevis	ɪ	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
11 " longa	ī	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
12 Labialis brevis	u	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	u
13 " longa	ū	.	(u)	.	.	.	.	.	.	ū
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	e
15 " longa	é (ai)	.	(e)	.	.	.	.	.	.	é
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi	.	(ai)	.	.	.	.	.	.	āi, ēi
17 " "	ei (ēi)	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ei, ēi
18 " "	oi (ōu)	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	o
20 " longa	ô (au)	.	(o)	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu	.	(au)	.	.	.	.	.	.	āu
22 " "	eu (ēu)	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
23 " "	ou (ōu)	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
25 Palatalis fracta	ī	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
26 Labialis fracta	ü	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ö	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	...

December. 1887.

Clarendon Press, Oxford

A SELECTION OF BOOKS

PUBLISHED FOR THE UNIVERSITY BY

HENRY FROWDE,

AT THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE,

AMEN CORNER, LONDON.

ALSO TO BE HAD AT THE

CLARENDON PRESS DEPOSITORY, OXFORD.

[Every book is bound in cloth, unless otherwise described.]

LEXICONS, GRAMMARS, ORIENTAL WORKS, &c.

ANGLO-SAXON.—An Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, based on the MS. Collections of the late Joseph Bosworth, D.D., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Oxford. Edited and enlarged by Prof. T. N. Toller, M.A. (To be completed in four parts.) Parts I-III. A—SAR. 4to. 15s. each.

ARABIC.—A Practical Arabic Grammar. Part I. Compiled by A. O. Green, Brigade Major, Royal Engineers, Author of 'Modern Arabic Stories' Second Edition, Enlarged and Revised. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

CHINESE.—A Handbook of the Chinese Language. By James Summers. 1863. 8vo. half bound, 1l. 8s.

— A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms, by the Chinese Monk FÂ-HIEN. Translated and annotated by James Legge, M.A., LL.D. Crown 4to. cloth back, 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH.—A New English Dictionary, on Historical Principles: founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society. Edited by James A. H. Murray, LL.D., with the assistance of many Scholars and men of Science. Part I. A—ANT. Part II. ANT—BATTEN. Part III. BATTER—BOZ. Imperial 4to. 12s. 6d. each.

ENGLISH.—An Etymological Dictionary of the English Language. By W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Second Edition. 1884. 4to. 2l. 4s.

—Supplement to the First Edition of the above. 4to. 2s. 6d.

—A Concise Etymological Dictionary of the English Language. By W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Second Edition. 1885. Crown 8vo. 5s. 6d.

GREEK.—A Greek-English Lexicon, by Henry George Liddell, D.D., and Robert Scott, D.D. Seventh Edition, Revised and Augmented throughout. 1883. 4to. 1l. 16s.

—A Greek-English Lexicon, abridged from Liddell and Scott's 4to. edition, chiefly for the use of Schools. Twenty-first Edition. 1884. Square 12mo. 7s. 6d.

—A copious Greek-English Vocabulary, compiled from the best authorities. 1850. 24mo. 3s.

—A Practical Introduction to Greek Accentuation, by H. W. Chandler, M.A. Second Edition. 1881. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

HEBREW.—The Book of Hebrew Roots, by Abu 'l-Walid Marwān ibn Janāh, otherwise called Rabbī Yōnāh. Now first edited, with an Appendix, by Ad. Neubauer. 1875. 4to. 2l. 7s. 6d.

—A Treatise on the use of the Tenses in Hebrew. By S. R. Driver, D.D. Second Edition. 1881. Extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

—Hebrew Accentuation of Psalms, Proverbs, and Job. By William Wickes, D.D. 1881. Demy 8vo. 5s.

—A Treatise on the Accentuation of the twenty-one so-called Prose Books of the Old Testament. By William Wickes, D.D. 1887. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

ICELANDIC.—An Icelandic-English Dictionary, based on the MS. collections of the late Richard Cleasby. Enlarged and completed by G. Vigfússon, M.A. With an Introduction, and Life of Richard Cleasby. by G. Webbe Dasent, D.C.L. 1874. 4to. 3l. 7s.

—A List of English Words the Etymology of which is illustrated by comparison with Icelandic. Prepared in the form of an APPENDIX to the above. By W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. 1876. stitched, 2s.

—An Icelandic Primer, with Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By Henry Sweet, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

—An Icelandic Prose Reader, with Notes, Grammar and Glossary. by Dr. Gudbrand Vigfússon and F. York Powell, M.A. 1879. Extra fcap. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

LATIN.—A Latin Dictionary, founded on Andrews' edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary, revised, enlarged, and in great part rewritten by Charlton T. Lewis, Ph.D., and Charles Short, LL.D. 1879. 4to. 1l. 5s.

- MELANESIAN.—The Melanesian Languages. By R. H. Codrington, D.D., of the Melanesian Mission. 8vo. 18s.
- SANSKRIT.—A Practical Grammar of the Sanskrit Language, arranged with reference to the Classical Languages of Europe. for the use of English Students, by Sir M. Monier-Williams, M.A. Fourth Edition. 8vo. 15s.
- A Sanskrit-English Dictionary, Etymologically and Philologically arranged, with special reference to Greek, Latin, German, Anglo-Saxon, English, and other cognate Indo-European Languages. By Sir M. Monier-Williams, M.A. 1872. 4to. 4l. 14s. 6d.
- Nalopakhyaṇam. Story of Nala, an Episode of the Mahā-Bhārata: the Sanskrit text, with a copious Vocabulary, and an improved version of Dean Milman's Translation. by Sir M. Monier-Williams, M.A. Second Edition, Revised and Improved. 1879. 8vo. 15s.
- Sakuntalā. A Sanskrit Drama, in Seven Acts. Edited by Sir M. Monier-Williams, M.A. Second Edition, 1876. 8vo. 21s.
- SYRIAC.—Thesaurus Syriacus: collegerunt Quatremère, Bernstein, Lorsch, Arnoldi, Agrell, Field, Roediger: edidit R. Payne Smith. S.T.P. Fasc. I-VI. 1868-83. sm. fol. each, 1l. 1s. Fasc. VII. 1l. 11s. 6d. Vol. I, containing Fasc. I-V, sm. fol. 5l. 5s.
- The Book of Kalīlah and Dimnah. Translated from Arabic into Syriac. Edited by W. Wright. M.A. 1884. 8vo. 21s.

GREEK CLASSICS, &c.

- Aristophanes:* A Complete Concordance to the Comedies and Fragments. By Henry Dunbar, M.D. 4to. 1l. 1s.
- Aristotle: The Politics,* with Introductions, Notes, etc., by W. L. Newman, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. Vols. I. and II. Medium 8vo. 28s.
- Aristotle: The Politics,* translated into English, with Introduction, Marginal Analysis, Notes, and Indices, by B. Jowett, M.A. Medium 8vo. 2 vols. 21s.
- Catalogus Codicum Graecorum Sinaiticorum.* Scripsit V. Gardthausen Lipsiensis. With six pages of Facsimiles. 8vo. linen, 25s.
- Heracliti Ephesii Reliquiae.* Recensuit I. Bywater, M.A. Appendicis loco additae sunt Diogenis Laertii Vita Heracliti, Particulae Hippocratei De Diaeta Libri Primi, Epistolae Heraclitae. 1877. 8vo. 6s.
- Herculanensium Voluminum* Partes II. 1824. 8vo. 10s.

Fragmenta Herculensia. A Descriptive Catalogue of the Oxford copies of the Herculanean Rolls, together with the texts of several papyri, accompanied by facsimiles. Edited by Walter Scott, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. Royal 8vo. cloth, 21s.

Homer: A Complete Concordance to the Odyssey and Hymns of Homer; to which is added a Concordance to the Parallel Passages in the Iliad, Odyssey, and Hymns. By Henry Dunbar, M.D. 1880. 4to. 1l. 1s.

— Scholia Graeca in Iliadem. Edited by Professor W. Dindorf, after a new collation of the Venetian MSS. by D. B. Monro, M.A., Provost of Oriel College. 4 vols. 8vo. 2l. 10s. Vols. V and VI. In the Press.

— Scholia Graeca in Odysseam. Edited by Guil. Dindorfius. Tomi II. 1855. 8vo. 15s. 6d.

Plato: Apology, with a revised Text and English Notes, and a Digest of Platonic Idioms, by James Riddell, M.A. 1878. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

— Philebus, with a revised Text and English Notes, by Edward Poste, M.A. 1860. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— Sophistes and Politicus, with a revised Text and English Notes, by L. Campbell, M.A. 1867. 8vo. 18s.

— Theaetetus, with a revised Text and English Notes. by L. Campbell. M.A. Second Edition. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— The Dialogues, translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions, by B. Jowett, M.A. A new Edition in 5 volumes, medium 8vo. 1875. 3l. 10s.

— The Republic, translated into English, with an Analysis and Introduction, by B. Jowett, M.A. Medium 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Thucydides: Translated into English, with Introduction, Marginal Analysis, Notes, and Indices. By B. Jowett, M.A. 2 vols. 1881. Medium 8vo. 1l. 12s.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, &c.

STUDIA BIBLICA.—Essays in Biblical Archæology and Criticism, and kindred subjects. By Members of the University of Oxford. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH.—The Holy Bible in the earliest English Versions, made from the Latin Vulgate by John Wycliffe and his followers: edited by the Rev. J. Forshall and Sir F. Madden. 4 vols. 1850. Royal 4to. 3l. 3s.

[Also reprinted from the above, with Introduction and Glossary by W. W. Skeat, Litt. D.

— The Books of Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon: according to the Wycliffite Version made by Nicholas de Hereford, about A.D. 1381, and Revised by John Purvey, about A.D. 1388. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

— The New Testament in English, according to the Version by John Wycliffe, about A.D. 1380, and Revised by John Purvey, about A.D. 1388. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.]

ENGLISH.—The Holy Bible: an exact reprint, page for page, of the Authorised Version published in the year 1611. Demy 4to. half bound, 1l. 1s.

— The Psalter, or Psalms of David, and certain Canticles, with a Translation and Exposition in English, by Richard Rolle of Hampole. Edited by H. R. Bramley, M.A., Fellow of S. M. Magdalen College, Oxford. With an Introduction and Glossary. Demy 8vo. 1l. 1s.

— Lectures on the Book of Job. Delivered in Westminster Abbey by the Very Rev. George Granville Bradley, D.D., Dean of Westminster. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— Lectures on Ecclesiastes. By the same Author. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

GOTHIC.—The Gospel of St. Mark in Gothic, according to the translation made by Wulfila in the Fourth Century. Edited with a Grammatical Introduction and Glossarial Index by W. W. Skeat, Litt. D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s.

GREEK.—Vetus Testamentum ex Versione Septuaginta Interpretum secundum exemplar Vaticanum Romae editum. Accedit potior varietas Codicis Alexandrini. Tomi III. Editio Altera. 18mo. 18s.

— Origenis Hexaplorum quae supersunt; sive, Veterum Interpretum Graecorum in totum Vetus Testamentum Fragmenta. Edidit Fridericus Field, A.M. 2 vols. 1875. 4to. 5l. 5s.

— The Book of Wisdom: the Greek Text, the Latin Vulgate, and the Authorised English Version; with an Introduction, Critical Apparatus, and a Commentary. By William J. Deane, M.A. Small 4to. 12s. 6d.

— Novum Testamentum Graece. Antiquissimorum Codicum Textus in ordine parallelo dispositi. Accedit collatio Codicis Sinaitici. Edidit E. H. Hansell, S.T.B. Tomi III. 1864. 8vo. 24s.

— Novum Testamentum Graece. Accedunt parallela S. Scripturae loca, etc. Edidit Carolus Lloyd, S.T.P.R. 18mo. 3s.

On writing paper, with wide margin, 10s.

GREEK.—Novum Testamentum Graece juxta Exemplar Millianum. 18mo. 2s. 6d. On writing paper, with wide margin, 9s.

— Evangelia Sacra Graece. Fcap. 8vo. limp, 1s. 6d.

— The Greek Testament, with the Readings adopted by the Revisers of the Authorised Version:—

(1) Pica type, with Marginal References. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

(2) Long Primer type. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

(3) The same, on writing paper, with wide margin, 15s.

— The Parallel New Testament, Greek and English; being the Authorised Version, 1611; the Revised Version, 1881; and the Greek Text followed in the Revised Version. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

The Revised Version is the joint property of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

— Canon Muratorianus: the earliest Catalogue of the Books of the New Testament. Edited with Notes and a Facsimile of the MS. in the Ambrosian Library at Milan, by S. P. Tregelles, LL.D. 1867. 4to. 10s. 6d.

— Outlines of Textual Criticism applied to the New Testament. By C. E. Hammond, M.A. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

HEBREW, etc.—Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Book of Genesis. With Two Appendices. By G. J. Spurrell, M.A. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— The Psalms in Hebrew without points. 1879. Crown 8vo. Price reduced to 2s., in stiff cover.

— A Commentary on the Book of Proverbs. Attributed to Abraham Ibn Ezra. Edited from a MS. in the Bodleian Library by S. R. Driver, M.A. Crown 8vo. paper covers, 3s. 6d.

— The Book of Tobit. A Chaldee Text, from a unique MS. in the Bodleian Library; with other Rabbinical Texts, English Translations, and the Itala. Edited by Ad. Neubauer, M.A. 1878. Crown 8vo. 6s.

— Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae, a J. Lightfoot. A new Edition, by R. Gandell, M.A. 4 vols. 1859. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

LATIN.—Libri Psalmorum Versio antiqua Latina, cum Paraphrasi Anglo-Saxonica. Edidit B. Thorpe, F.A.S. 1835. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— Old-Latin Biblical Texts: No. I. The Gospel according to St. Matthew from the St. Germain MS. (g.). Edited with Introduction and Appendices by John Wordsworth, D.D. Small 4to., stiff covers, 6s.

— Old-Latin Biblical Texts: No. II. Portions of the Gospels according to St. Mark and St. Matthew, from the Bobbio MS. (k), &c. Edited by John Wordsworth, D.D., W. Sanday, M.A., D.D., and H. J. White, M.A. Small 4to., stiff covers, 21s.

LATIN.—Old-Latin Biblical Texts: No. III. The Four Gospels from the Munich MS. (q) of the Sixth Century. Edited by H. J. White, M.A., under the direction of the Bishop of Salisbury. Nearly ready.

OLD-FRENCH.—Libri Psalmorum Versio antiqua Gallica e Cod. MS. in Bibl. Bodleiana adservato, una cum Versione Metrica aliisque Monumentis pervetustis. Nunc primum descripsit et edidit Franciscus Michel, Phil. Doc. 1860 8vo. 10s. 6d.

FATHERS OF THE CHURCH, &c.

St. Athanasius: Historical Writings, according to the Benedictine Text. With an Introduction by William Bright, D.D. 1881. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— Orations against the Arians. With an Account of his Life by William Bright, D.D. 1873 Crown 8vo. 9s.

St. Augustine: Select Anti-Pelagian Treatises, and the Acts of the Second Council of Orange. With an Introduction by William Bright, D.D. Crown 8vo. 9s.

Canons of the First Four General Councils of Nicaea, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Chalcedon. 1877. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

— Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils. By William Bright, D.D. 1882. Crown 8vo. 5s. 6d.

Cyrilli Archiepiscopi Alexandrini in XII Prophetas. Edidit P. E. Pusey, A.M. Tomi II. 1868. 8vo. cloth. 2l. 2s.

— in D. Joannis Evangelium. Accedunt Fragmenta varia necnon Tractatus ad Tiberium Diaconum duo. Edidit post Aubertum P. E. Pusey, A.M. Tomi III. 1872. 8vo. 2l. 5s.

— Commentarii in Lucae Evangelium quae supersunt Syriace. E MSS. apud Mus. Britan. edidit R. Payne Smith, A.M. 1858. 4to. 1l. 2s.

— Translated by R. Payne Smith, M.A. 2 vols. 1859. 8vo. 14s.

Ephraemi Syri, Rabulae Episcopi Edesseni, Balaei, aliorumque Opera Selecta. E Codd. Syriacis MSS. in Museo Britannico et Bibliotheca Bodleiana asservatis primus edidit J. J. Overbeck. 1865. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, according to the text of Burton, with an Introduction by William Bright, D.D. 1881. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Irenaeus: The Third Book of St. Irenaeus, Bishop of Lyons, against Heresies. With short Notes and a Glossary by H. Deane, B.D. 1874. Crown 8vo. 5s. 6d.

Patrum Apostolicorum, S. Clementis Romani, S. Ignatii, S. Polycarpi, quae supersunt. Edidit Guil. Jacobson. S.T.P.R. Tomi II. Fourth Edition, 1863. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Socrates' Ecclesiastical History, according to the Text of Hussey, with an Introduction by William Bright, D.D. 1878. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, &c.

Ancient Liturgy of the Church of England, according to the uses of Sarum, York, Hereford, and Bangor, and the Roman Liturgy arranged in parallel columns, with preface and notes. By William Maskell, M.A. Third Edition. 1882. 8vo. 15s.

Baedae Historia Ecclesiastica. Edited, with English Notes, by G. H. Moberly, M.A. 1881. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Bright (W.). Chapters of Early English Church History. 1878. 8vo. 12s.

Burnet's History of the Reformation of the Church of England. A new Edition. Carefully revised, and the Records collated with the originals, by N. Pocock, M.A. 7 vols. 1865. 8vo. Price reduced to 1l. 10s.

Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents relating to Great Britain and Ireland. Edited, after Spelman and Wilkins, by A. W. Haddan, B.D., and W. Stubbs, M.A. Vols. I. and III. 1869-71. Medium 8vo. each 1l. 1s.

Vol. II. Part I. 1873. Medium 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Vol. II. Part II. 1878. Church of Ireland; Memorials of St Patrick. Stiff covers, 3s. 6d.

Hamilton (John, Archbishop of St. Andrews), The Catechism of. Edited, with Introduction and Glossary, by Thomas Graves Law. With a Preface by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Hammond (C. E.). Liturgies, Eastern and Western. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Liturgical Glossary. 1878. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

An Appendix to the above. 1879. Crown 8vo. paper covers, 1s. 6d.

John, Bishop of Ephesus. The Third Part of his Ecclesiastical History. [In Syriac.] Now first edited by William Cureton, M.A. 1853. 4to. 1l. 12s.

— Translated by R. Payne Smith, M.A. 1860. 8vo. 10s.

Leofric Missal, The, as used in the Cathedral of Exeter during the Episcopate of its first Bishop, A.D. 1050-1072; together with some Account of the Red Book of Derby, the Missal of Robert of Jumièges, and a few other early MS. Service Books of the English Church. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by F. E. Warren, B.D. 4to. half morocco, 35s.

Monumenta Ritualia Ecclesiae Anglicanae. The occasional Offices of the Church of England according to the old use of Salisbury, the Prymer in English, and other prayers and forms, with dissertations and notes. By William Maskell, M.A. Second Edition. 1882. 3 vols. 8vo. 2l. 10s.

Records of the Reformation. The Divorce, 1527-1533. Mostly now for the first time printed from MSS. in the British Museum and other libraries. Collected and arranged by N. Pocock, M.A. 1870. 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 16s.

Shirley (W. W.). Some Account of the Church in the Apostolic Age. Second Edition, 1874. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Stubbs (W.). Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum. An attempt to exhibit the course of Episcopal Succession in England. 1858. Small 4to. 8s. 6d.

Warren (F. E.). Liturgy and Ritual of the Celtic Church. 1881. 8vo. 14s.

ENGLISH THEOLOGY.

Bampton Lectures, 1886. The Christian Platonists of Alexandria. By Charles Bigg, D.D. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Butler's Works, with an Index to the Analogy. 2 vols. 1874. 8vo. 11s.

Also separately,

Sermons, 5s. 6d. Analogy of Religion, 5s. 6d.

Greswell's Harmonia Evangelica. Fifth Edition. 8vo. 1855. 9s. 6d.

Heurley's Harmonia Symbolica: Creeds of the Western Church. 1858. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Homilies appointed to be read in Churches. Edited by J. Griffiths, M.A. 1859. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Hooker's Works, with his life by Walton, arranged by John Keble, M.A. Sixth Edition, 1874. 3 vols. 8vo. 1l. 11s. 6d.

- Hooker's Works*, the text as arranged by John Keble, M.A.
2 vols. 1875. 8vo. 11s.
- Jewel's Works*. Edited by R. W. Jelf, D.D. 8 vols. 1848.
8vo. 1l. 10s.
- Pearson's Exposition of the Creed*. Revised and corrected by E. Burton, D.D. Sixth Edition, 1877. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Waterland's Review of the Doctrine of the Eucharist*, with a Preface by the late Bishop of London. Crown 8vo. 6s. 6d.
- Works, with Life, by Bp. Van Mildert. A new Edition, with copious Indexes. 6 vols. 1856. 8vo. 2l. 11s.
- Wheatly's Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer*. A new Edition, 1846. 8vo. 5s.
- Wyclif. A Catalogue of the Original Works of John Wyclif*, by W. W. Shirley, D.D. 1865. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Select English Works. By T. Arnold, M.A. 3 vols.
1869–1871. 8vo. 1l. 1s.
- Dialogus. With the Supplement now first edited.
By Gotthard Lechler. 1869. 8vo. 7s.

HISTORICAL AND DOCUMENTARY WORKS.

- British Barrows*, a Record of the Examination of Sepulchral Mounds in various parts of England. By William Greenwell, M.A., F.S.A.
Together with Description of Figures of Skulls, General Remarks on Prehistoric Crania, and an Appendix by George Rolleston, M.D., F.R.S. 1877.
Medium 8vo. 25s.
- Clarendon's History of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in* England. 7 vols. 1839. 18mo. 1l. 1s.
- Clarendon's History of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in* England. Also his Life, written by himself, in which is included a Continuation of his History of the Grand Rebellion. With copious Indexes.
In one volume, royal 8vo. 1842. 1l. 2s.
- Clinton's Epitome of the Fasti Hellenici*. 1851. 8vo. 6s. 6d.
- Epitome of the Fasti Romani. 1854. 8vo. 7s.

Corpus Poeticum Boreale. The Poetry of the Old Northern Tongue, from the Earliest Times to the Thirteenth Century. Edited, classified, and translated, with Introduction, Excursus, and Notes, by Gudbrand Vigfússon, M.A., and F. York Powell, M.A. 2 vols. 1883. 8vo. 42s.

Freeman (E. A.). History of the Norman Conquest of England; its Causes and Results. In Six Volumes. 8vo. 5l. 9s. 6d.

— The Reign of William Rufus and the Accession of Henry the First. 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 16s.

Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary ("Liber Veritatum"): Selected Passages, illustrating the condition of Church and State, 1403-1458. With an Introduction by James E. Thorold Rogers, M.A. Small 4to. 10s. 6d.

Johnson (Samuel, LL.D.), Boswell's Life of; including Boswell's Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, and Johnson's Diary of a Journey into North Wales. Edited by G. Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. In six volumes, medium 8vo. With Portraits and Facsimiles of Handwriting. Half bound, 3l. 3s.

Magna Carta, a careful Reprint. Edited by W. Stubbs, D.D. 1879. 4to. stitched. 1s.

Passio et Miracula Beati Olavi. Edited from a Twelfth-Century MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, with an Introduction and Notes, by Frederick Metcalfe, M.A. Small 4to. stiff covers, 6s.

Protests of the Lords, including those which have been expunged, from 1624 to 1874; with Historical Introductions. Edited by James E. Thorold Rogers, M.A. 1875. 3 vols. 8vo. 2l. 2s.

Rogers (J. E. T.). History of Agriculture and Prices in England, A.D. 1259-1793.

Vols. I and II (1259-1400). 1866. 8vo. 2l. 2s.

Vols. III and IV (1401-1582). 1882. 8vo. 2l. 10s.

Vols. V and VI (1583-1702). 8vo. 2l. 10s. Just Published.

— The First Nine Years of the Bank of England. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Saxon Chronicles (Two of the) parallel, with Supplementary Extracts from the Others. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and a Glossarial Index, by J. Earle, M.A. 1865. 8vo. 16s.

Stubbs (W., D.D.). Seventeen Lectures on the Study of Medieval and Modern History, &c., delivered at Oxford 1867-1884. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Sturlunga Saga, including the Islendinga Saga of Lawman Sturla Thordsson and other works. Edited by Dr. Gudbrand Vigfússon. In 2 vols. 1878. 8vo. 2l. 2s.

York Plays. The Plays performed by the Crafts or Mysteries of York on the day of Corpus Christi in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries. Now first printed from the unique MS. in the Library of Lord Ashburnham. Edited with Introduction and Glossary by Lucy Toulmin Smith. 8vo. 21s.

Manuscript Materials relating to the History of Oxford.
Arranged by F. Madan, M.A. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Statutes made for the University of Oxford, and for the Colleges and Halls therein, by the University of Oxford Commissioners. 1882. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Statuta Universitatis Oxoniensis. 1887. 8vo. 5s.

The Examination Statutes for the Degrees of B.A., B. Mus., B.C.L., and B.M. Revised to Trinity Term, 1887. 8vo. sewed, 1s.

The Student's Handbook to the University and Colleges of Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

The Oxford University Calendar for the year 1887. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

The present Edition includes all Class Lists and other University distinctions for the seven years ending with 1886.

Also, supplementary to the above, price 5s. (pp. 606),

The Honours Register of the University of Oxford. A complete Record of University Honours, Officers, Distinctions, and Class Lists; of the Heads of Colleges, &c., &c., from the Thirteenth Century to 1883.

MATHEMATICS, PHYSICAL SCIENCE, &c.

Acland (H. W., M.D., F.R.S.). Synopsis of the Pathological Series in the Oxford Museum. 1867. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Burdon-Sanderson (J., M.D., F.R.S.S. L. and E.). Translations of Foreign Biological Memoirs. I. Memoirs on the Physiology of Nerve, of Muscle, and of the Electrical Organ. Medium 8vo. 21s.

De Bary (Dr. A.). Comparative Anatomy of the Vegetative Organs of the Phanerogams and Ferns. Translated and Annotated by F. O. Bower, M.A., F.L.S., and D. H. Scott, M.A., Ph.D., F.L.S. With 241 woodcuts and an Index. Royal 8vo., half morocco, 1l. 2s. 6d.

Goebel (Dr. K.). Outlines of Classification and Special Morphology of Plants. A New Edition of Sachs' Text-Book of Botany, Book II. English Translation by H. E. F. Garnsey, M.A. Revised by I. Bayley Balfour, M.A., M.D., F.R.S. With 407 Woodcuts. Royal 8vo. half morocco, 21s.

Sachs (Julius von). Lectures on the Physiology of Plants.
Translated by H. Marshall Ward, M.A. With 445 Woodcuts. Royal 8vo. half morocco, 1l. 11s. 6d.

De Bary (Dr. A). Comparative Morphology and Biology of the Fungi, Mycetozoa and Bacteria. Authorised English Translation by Henry E. F. Garnsey, M.A. Revised by Isaac Bayley Balfour, M.A., M.D., F.R.S. With 198 Woodcuts. Royal 8vo., half morocco, 1l. 2s. 6d.

— Lectures on Bacteria. Translated by H. E. F. Garnsey,
M.A. With 20 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Annals of Botany. Edited by Isaac Bayley Balfour, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., Sydney H. Vines, D.Sc., F.R.S., and William Gilson Farlow,
M.D., Professor of Cryptogamic Botany in Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A., and other Botanists. Royal 8vo.
Vol. I. No. 1. Price 8s. 6d. Vol. I. No. 2. Price 7s. 6d.

Müller (F.). On certain Variations in the Vocal Organs of the Passeres that have hitherto escaped notice. Translated by F. J. Bell, B.A., and edited, with an Appendix, by A. H. Garrod, M.A., F.R.S. With Plates.
1878. 4to. paper covers. 7s. 6d.

Price (Bartholomew, M.A., F.R.S.). Treatise on Infinitesimal Calculus.

Vol. I. Differential Calculus. Second Edition. 8vo. 14s. 6d.

Vol. II. Integral Calculus, Calculus of Variations, and Differential Equations.
Second Edition, 1865. 8vo. 18s.

Vol. III. Statics, including Attractions; Dynamics of a Material Particle.
Second Edition, 1868. 8vo. 16s.

Vol. IV. Dynamics of Material Systems; together with a chapter on Theoretical Dynamics, by W. F. Donkin, M.A., F.R.S. 1862. 8vo. 16s.

Pritchard (C., D.D., F.R.S.). Uranometria Nova Oxoniensis.
A Photometric determination of the magnitudes of all Stars visible to the naked eye, from the Pole to ten degrees south of the Equator. 1885. Royal 8vo.
8s. 6d.

— *Astronomical Observations made at the University
Observatory, Oxford, under the direction of C. Pritchard, D.D.* No. 1.
1878. Royal 8vo. paper covers. 3s. 6d.

Rigaud's Correspondence of Scientific Men of the 17th Century, with Table of Contents by A. de Morgan, and Index by the Rev. J. Rigaud,
M.A. 2 vols. 1841-1862. 8vo. 18s. 6d.

Rolleston (George, M.D., F.R.S.). Scientific Papers and Addresses. Arranged and Edited by William Turner, M.B., F.R.S. With a Biographical Sketch by Edward Tylor, F.R.S. With Portrait, Plates, and Woodcuts. 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 4s.

Westwood (J. O., M.A., F.R.S.). Thesaurus Entomologicus Hopeianus, or a Description of the rarest Insects in the Collection given to the University by the Rev. William Hope. With 40 Plates. 1874. Small folio, half morocco, 7l. 10s.

The Sacred Books of the East.

TRANSLATED BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS, AND EDITED BY
F. MAX MÜLLER.

[Demy 8vo. cloth.]

Vol. I. The Upanishads. Translated by F. Max Müller.
Part I. The Khândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âraṇyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad. 10s. 6d.

Vol. II. The Sacred Laws of the Âryas, as taught in the Schools of Âpastamba, Gautama, Vâsishtha, and Baudhâya. Translated by Prof. Georg Bühler. Part I. Âpastamba and Gautama. 10s. 6d.

Vol. III. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part I. The Shû King, The Religious portions of the Shih King, and The Hsiâo King. 12s. 6d.

Vol. IV. The Zend-Avesta. Translated by James Darme-steter. Part I. The Vendîdâd. 10s. 6d.

Vol. V. The Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West.
Part I. The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, and Shâyast lâ-shâyast. 12s. 6d.

Vols. VI and IX. The Qur'ân. Parts I and II. Translated by E. H. Palmer. 21s.

Vol. VII. The Institutes of Vishnu. Translated by Julius Jolly. 10s. 6d.

Vol. VIII. The Bhagavadgîtâ, with The Sanatsugâtîya. and
The Anugîtâ. Translated by Kâshinâth Trimbak Telang. 10s. 6d.

Vol. X. The Dhammapada, translated from Pâli by F. Max
Müller; and The Sutta-Nipâta, translated from Pâli by V. Fausböll; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. 10s. 6d.

- Vol. XI. Buddhist Suttas. Translated from Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids. 1. The Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta; 2. The Dhamma-kakkappavattana Sutta; 3. The Teviggā Suttanta; 4. The Akaṅkheyya Sutta; 5. The Ketokhila Sutta; 6. The Mahā-sudassana Suttanta; 7. The Sabbāsava Sutta. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XII. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School. Translated by Julius Eggeling. Part I. Books I and II. 12s. 6d.
- Vol. XIII. Vinaya Texts. Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part I. The Pātimokkha. The Mahāvagga, I-IV. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XIV. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas, as taught in the Schools of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vāsishṭha and Baudhāyana. Translated by Georg Bühler. Part II. Vāsishṭha and Baudhāyana. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XV. The Upanishads. Translated by F. Max Müller. Part II. The Katha-upanishad, The Mūṇḍaka-upanishad, The Taittirīyaka-upanishad, The Brhadāraṇyaka-upanishad, The Svetasvatara-upanishad, The Prasṇa-upanishad, and The Maitrāyaṇa-Brāhmaṇa-upanishad. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XVI. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part II. The Yi King. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XVII. Vinaya Texts. Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part II. The Mahāvagga, V-X. The Kullavagga, I-III. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XVIII. Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West. Part II. The Dādistān-i Dīnīk and The Epistles of Mānūskīhar. 12s. 6d.
- Vol. XIX. The Fo-sho-hing-tsan-king. A Life of Buddha by Asvaghosha Bodhisattva, translated from Sanskrit into Chinese by Dharmaraksha, A.D. 420, and from Chinese into English by Samuel Beal. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XX. Vinaya Texts. Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part III. The Kullavagga, IV-XII. 10s. 6d.
- Vol. XXI. The Saddharma-puṇḍarīka; or, the Lotus of the True Law. Translated by H. Kern. 12s. 6d.
- Vol. XXII. Gāyā-Sūtras. Translated from Prākṛit by Hermann Jacobi. Part I. The Ākārāṅga-Sūtra. The Kalpa-Sūtra. 10s. 6d.

Vol. XXIII. The Zend-Avesta. Translated by James Darmesteter. Part II. The Sîrôzahs, Yasts, and Nyâyis. 10s. 6d.

Vol. XXIV. Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West. Part III. Dînâ-î Ma'nôg-î Khirad, Sikand-gûmânîk, and Sad-Dar. 10s. 6d.

Second Series.

Vol. XXV. Manu. Translated by Georg Bühler. 21s.

Vol. XXVI. The Satapatha-Brâhmana. Translated by Julius Eggeling. Part II. 12s. 6d.

Vols. XXVII and XXVIII. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Parts III and IV. The Lî Âî, or Collection of Treatises on the Rules of Propriety, or Ceremonial Usages. 25s.

Vols. XXIX and XXX. The Grîhya-Sûtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies. Translated by Hermann Oldenberg.

Part I (Vol. XXIX), 12s. 6d. Just Published.

Part II (Vol. XXX). In the Press.

Vol. XXXI. The Zend-Avesta. Part III. The Yasna, Visparad, Âfrînagân, and Gâhs. Translated by L. H. Mills. 12s. 6d.

The following Volumes are in the Press:—

Vol. XXXII. Vedic Hymns. Translated by F. Max Müller. Part I.

Vol. XXXIII. Nârada, and some Minor Law-books. Translated by Julius Jolly. [Preparing.]

Vol. XXXIV. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with Saṅkara's Commentary. Translated by G. Thibaut. [Preparing.]

* * * The Second Series will consist of Twenty-Four Volumes.

Clarendon Press Series

I. ENGLISH, &c.

A First Reading Book. By Marie Eichens of Berlin; and edited by Anne J. Clough. Extra fcap. 8vo. stiff covers, 4d.

Oxford Reading Book, Part I. For Little Children. Extra fcap. 8vo. stiff covers, 6d.

Oxford Reading Book, Part II. For Junior Classes. Extra fcap. 8vo. stiff covers, 6d.

An Elementary English Grammar and Exercise Book. By O. W. Tancock, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

An English Grammar and Reading Book, for Lower Forms in Classical Schools. By O. W. Tancock, M.A. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Typical Selections from the best English Writers, with Introductory Notices. Second Edition. In 2 vols. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.
Vol. I. Latimer to Berkeley. Vol. II. Pope to Macaulay.

Shairp (F. C., LL.D.). Aspects of Poetry; being Lectures delivered at Oxford. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

A Book for the Beginner in Anglo-Saxon. By John Earle, M.A. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

An Anglo-Saxon Reader. In Prose and Verse. With Grammatical Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By Henry Sweet, M.A. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Extra fcap. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

A Second Anglo-Saxon Reader. By the same Author. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d. Just Published.

An Anglo-Saxon Primer, with Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By the same Author. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Old English Reading Primers; edited by Henry Sweet, M.A.

I. Selected Homilies of Ælfric. Extra fcap. 8vo., stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

II. Extracts from Alfred's Orosius. Extra fcap. 8vo., stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

First Middle English Primer, with Grammar and Glossary.

By the same Author. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Second Middle English Primer. Extracts from Chaucer, with Grammar and Glossary. By the same Author. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.Principles of English Etymology. First Series. The Native Element. By W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Crown 8vo. 9s.The Philology of the English Tongue. By J. Earle, M.A. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.An Icelandic Primer, with Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By Henry Sweet, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.An Icelandic Prose Reader, with Notes, Grammar, and Glossary. By G. Vigfússon, M.A., and F. York Powell, M.A. Ext. fcap. 8vo. 10s. 6d.A Handbook of Phonetics, including a Popular Exposition of the Principles of Spelling Reform. By H. Sweet, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.Elementarbuch des Gesprochenen Englisch. Grammatik, Texte und Glossar. Von Henry Sweet. Extra fcap. 8vo., stiff covers. 2s. 6d.The Ormulum; with the Notes and Glossary of Dr. R. M. White. Edited by R. Holt, M.A. 1878. 2 vols. Extra fcap. 8vo. 21s.Specimens of Early English. A New and Revised Edition. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossarial Index. By R. Morris, LL.D., and W. W. Skeat, Litt.D.

Part I. From Old English Homilies to King Horn (A.D. 1150 to A.D. 1300). Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 9s.

Part II. From Robert of Gloucester to Gower (A.D. 1298 to A.D. 1393). Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Specimens of English Literature, from the 'Ploughmans Crede' to the 'Shepheardes Calender' (A.D. 1394 to A.D. 1579). With Introduction, Notes, and Glossarial Index. By W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman, in three Parallel Texts; together with Richard the Redeless. By William Langland (about 1362-1399 A.D.). Edited from numerous Manuscripts, with Preface, Notes, and a Glossary, by W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. 2 vols. 8vo. 31s. 6d.The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman, by William Langland. Edited, with Notes, by W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Chaucer. I. The Prologue to the Canterbury Tales; the Knights Tale; The Nonne Prestes Tale. Edited by R. Morris, Editor of Specimens of Early English, &c., &c. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

— II. The Prioresses Tale; Sir Thopas; The Monkes Tale; The Clerkes Tale; The Squieres Tale, &c. Edited by W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

— III. The Tale of the Man of Lawe; The Pardoner's Tale; The Second Nonnes Tale; The Chanouns Yemannes Tale. By the same Editor. New Edition, Revised. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Gamelyn, The Tale of. Edited with Notes, Glossary, &c., by W. W. Skeat, Litt.D. Extra fcap. 8vo. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

Minot (Laurence). Poems. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Joseph Hall, M.A., Head Master of the Hulme Grammar School, Manchester. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Spenser's Faery Queene. Books I and II. Designed chiefly for the use of Schools. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By G. W. Kitchin, D.D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d. each.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, Book I. Edited by R. W. Church, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

OLD ENGLISH DRAMA.

The Pilgrimage to Parnassus with The Two Parts of the Return from Parnassus. Three Comedies performed in St. John's College, Cambridge, A.D. MDXCVII-MDCI. Edited from MSS. by the Rev. W. D. Macray, M.A., F.S.A. Medium 8vo. Bevelled Boards, Gilt top, 8s. 6d.

Marlowe and Greene. Marlowe's Tragical History of Dr. Faustus, and Greene's Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay. Edited by A. W. Ward, M.A. New and Enlarged Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Marlowe. Edward II. With Introduction, Notes, &c. By O. W. Tancock, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. Paper covers, 2s. Cloth 3s.

SHAKESPEARE.

Shakespeare. Select Plays. Edited by W. G. Clark, M.A., and W. Aldis Wright, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. stiff covers.

The Merchant of Venice. 1s. Macbeth. 1s. 6d.

Richard the Second. 1s. 6d. Hamlet. 2s.

Shakespeare. Select Plays. Edited by W. Aldis Wright, M.A.

The Tempest. 1s. 6d.	Midsummer Night's Dream. 1s. 6d.
As You Like It. 1s. 6d.	Coriolanus. 2s. 6d.
Julius Cæsar. 2s.	Henry the Fifth. 2s.
Richard the Third. 2s. 6d.	Twelfth Night. 1s. 6d.
King Lear. 1s. 6d.	King John. 1s. 6d.

Shakespeare as a Dramatic Artist; a popular Illustration of the Principles of Scientific Criticism. By R. G. Moulton, M.A. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Bacon. I. Advancement of Learning. Edited by W. Aldis Wright, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

— II. The Essays. With Introduction and Notes. By S. H. Reynolds, M.A., late Fellow of Brasenose College. In Preparation.

Milton. I. Areopagitica. With Introduction and Notes. By John W. Hales, M.A. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

— II. Poems. Edited by R. C. Browne, M.A. 2 vols. Fifth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s. 6d. Sold separately, Vol. I. 4s.; Vol. II. 3s.

In paper covers:—

Lycidas, 3d. L'Allegro, 3d. Il Penseroso, 4d. Comus, 6d.
Samson Agonistes, 6d.

— III. Paradise Lost. Book I. Edited by H. C. Beeching. Extra fcap. 8vo. Nearly ready.

— IV. Samson Agonistes. Edited with Introduction and Notes by John Churton Collins. Extra fcap. 8vo. stiff covers, 1s.

Bunyan. I. The Pilgrim's Progress, Grace Abounding, Relation of the Imprisonment of Mr. John Bunyan. Edited, with Biographical Introduction and Notes, by E. Venables, M.A. 1879. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s. In ornamental Parchment, 6s.

— II. Holy War, &c. Edited by E. Venables, M.A. In the Press.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion. Book VI. Edited by T. Arnold, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Dryden. Select Poems. Stanzas on the Death of Oliver Cromwell; Astræa Redux; Annus Mirabilis; Absalom and Achitophel; Religio Laici; The Hind and the Panther. Edited by W. D. Christie, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Locke's Conduct of the Understanding. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by T. Fowler, D.D. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Addison. Selections from Papers in the Spectator. With Notes.
By T. Arnold, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d. In ornamental Parchment, 6s.

Steele. Selections from the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian.
Edited by Austin Dobson. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d. In white Parchment, 7s. 6d.

Pope. With Introduction and Notes. By Mark Pattison, B.D.

— I. Essay on Man. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

— II. Satires and Epistles. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Parnell. The Hermit. Paper covers, 2d.

Gray. Selected Poems. Edited by Edmund Gosse. Extra fcap. 8vo. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d. In white Parchment, 3s.

— Elegy and Ode on Eton College. Paper covers, 2d.

Goldsmith. Selected Poems. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Austin Dobson. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d. In white Parchment, 4s. 6d.

— The Deserted Village. Paper covers, 2d.

Johnson. I. Rasselas; Lives of Dryden and Pope. Edited by Alfred Milnes, M.A. (London). Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d., or Lives of Dryden and Pope only, stiff covers, 2s. 6d.

— II. Rasselas. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by G. Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. Extra fcap. 8vo. Bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. In white Parchment, 4s. 6d.

— III. Vanity of Human Wishes. With Notes, by E. J. Payne, M.A. Paper covers, 4d.

Boswell's Life of Johnson. With the Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides. Edited, with copious Notes, Appendices, and Index, by G. Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L., Pembroke College. With Portraits and Facsimiles. 6 vols. Medium 8vo. Half bound, 3l. 3s.

Cowper. Edited, with Life, Introductions, and Notes, by H. T. Griffith, B.A.

— I. The Didactic Poems of 1782, with Selections from the Minor Pieces, A.D. 1779–1783. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

— II. The Task, with Tirocinium, and Selections from the Minor Poems A.D. 1784–1799. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Burke. Select Works. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by E. J. Payne, M.A.

— I. Thoughts on the Present Discontents; the two Speeches on America. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

- Burke. II. Reflections on the French Revolution.* Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- III. Four Letters on the Proposals for Peace with the Regicide Directory of France. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Keats. Hyperion*, Book I. With Notes by W. T. Arnold, B.A. Paper covers, 4d.
- Byron. Childe Harold.* Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by H. F. Tozer, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d. In white Parchment, 5s.
- Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel.* Edited with Preface and Notes by W. Minto, M.A. With Map. Extra fcap. 8vo. Stiff covers, 2s. Ornamental Parchment, 3s. 6d.
- Lay of the Last Minstrel. Introduction and Canto I, with Preface and Notes, by the same Editor. 6d.

II. LATIN.

- Rudimenta Latina.* Comprising Accidence, and Exercises of a very Elementary Character, for the use of Beginners. By John Barrow Allen, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- An Elementary Latin Grammar.* By the same Author. Fifty-Seven Thousand. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- A First Latin Exercise Book.* By the same Author. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- A Second Latin Exercise Book.* By the same Author. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Reddenda Minora*, or Easy Passages, Latin and Greek, for Unseen Translation. For the use of Lower Forms. Composed and selected by C. S. Jerram, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Anglice Reddenda*, or Extracts, Latin and Greek, for Unseen Translation. By C. S. Jerram, M.A. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Anglice Reddenda.* Second Series. By the same Author. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Passages for Translation into Latin.* For the use of Passmen and others. Selected by J. Y. Sargent, M.A. Seventh Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Exercises in Latin Prose Composition;* with Introduction, Notes, and Passages of Graduated Difficulty for Translation into Latin. By G. G. Ramsay, M.A., LL.D. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Hints and Helps for Latin Elegiacs.* By H. Lee-Warner, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

First Latin Reader. By T. J. Nunns, M.A. Third Edition.
Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Caesar. The Commentaries (for Schools). With Notes and Maps. By Charles E. Moberly, M.A.

Part I. The Gallic War. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Part II. The Civil War. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The Civil War. Book I. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Cicero. Speeches against Catilina. By E. A. Upcott, M.A., Assistant Master in Wellington College. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Cicero. Selection of interesting and descriptive passages. With Notes. By Henry Walford, M.A. In three Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
Each Part separately, limp, 1s. 6d.

Part I. Anecdotes from Grecian and Roman History. Third Edition.

Part II. Omens and Dreams: Beauties of Nature. Third Edition.

Part III. Rome's Rule of her Provinces. Third Edition.

Cicero. De Senectute. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by L. Huxley, M.A. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Cicero. Selected Letters (for Schools). With Notes. By the late C. E. Prichard, M.A., and E. R. Bernard, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Cicero. Select Orations (for Schools). In Verrem I. De Imperio Gn. Pompeii. Pro Archia. Philippica IX. With Introduction and Notes by J. R. King, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Cicero. In Q. Caecilium Divinatio, and In C. Verrem Actio Prima. With Introduction and Notes, by J. R. King, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp, 1s. 6d.

Cicero. Speeches against Catilina. With Introduction and Notes, by E. A. Upcott, M.A. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Cornelius Nepos. With Notes. By Oscar Browning, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Horace. Selected Odes. With Notes for the use of a Fifth Form. By E. C. Wickham, M.A. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s.

Livy. Selections (for Schools). With Notes and Maps. By H. Lee-Warner, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. In Parts, limp, each 1s. 6d.

Part I. The Caudine Disaster. Part II. Hannibal's Campaign in Italy. Part III. The Macedonian War.

Livy. Books V—VII. With Introduction and Notes. By A. R. Cluer, B.A. Second Edition. Revised by P. E. Matheson, M.A. (In one or two vols.) Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.

- Livy.* Books XXI, XXII, and XXIII. With Introduction and Notes. By M. T. Tatham, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Ovid.* Selections for the use of Schools. With Introductions and Notes, and an Appendix on the Roman Calendar. By W. Ramsay, M.A. Edited by G. G. Ramsay, M.A. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s. 6d.
- Ovid. Tristia.* Book I. The Text revised, with an Introduction and Notes. By S. G. Owen, B.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Plautus. Captivi.* Edited by W. M. Lindsay, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. (In one or two Parts.) 2s. 6d.
- Plautus. The Trinummus.* With Notes and Introductions. (Intended for the Higher Forms of Public Schools.) By C. E. Freeman, M.A., and A. Sloman, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Pliny. Selected Letters* (for Schools). With Notes. By the late C. E. Prichard, M.A., and E. R. Bernard, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Sallust.* With Introduction and Notes. By W. W. Capes, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.
- Tacitus. The Annals.* Books I-IV. Edited, with Introduction and Notes (for the use of Schools and Junior Students), by H. Furneaux, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Tacitus. The Annals.* Book I. With Introduction and Notes, by the same Editor. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp, 2s.
- Terence. Andria.* With Notes and Introductions. By C. E. Freeman, M.A., and A. Sloman, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Adelphi. With Notes and Introductions. (Intended for the Higher Forms of Public Schools.) By A. Sloman, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Phormio. With Notes and Introductions. By A. Sloman, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Tibullus and Propertius. Selections.* Edited by G. G. Ramsay, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. (In one or two vols.) 6s.
- Virgil.* With Introduction and Notes. By T. L. Papillon, M.A. Two vols. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d. The Text separately, 4s. 6d.
- Virgil. Bucolics.* Edited by C. S. Jerram, M.A. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Virgil. Aeneid I.* With Introduction and Notes, by C. S. Jerram, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp, 1s. 6d.
- Virgil. Aeneid IX.* Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. E. Haigh, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp, 1s. 6d. In two Parts, 2s.

- Avianus, The Fables of.* Edited, with Prolegomena, Critical Apparatus, Commentary, etc. By Robinson Ellis, M.A., I.L.D. Demy 8vo 8s. 6d.
- Catulli Veronensis Liber.* Iterum recognovit, apparatus criticum prolegomena appendices addidit, Robinson Ellis, A.M. 1878. Demy 8vo. 16s.
- A Commentary on Catullus. By Robinson Ellis, M.A. 1876. Demy 8vo. 16s.
- Catulli Veronensis Carmina Selecta,* secundum recognitionem Robinson Ellis, A.M. Extra fcap. 8vo 3s 6d.
- Cicero de Oratore.* With Introduction and Notes. By A. S. Wilkins, M.A.
Book I. 1879. 8vo. 6s. Book II. 1881. 8vo. 5s.
- Philippic Orations. With Notes By J. R. King, M.A. Second Edition. 1879. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Cicero. Select Letters.* With English Introductions, Notes, and Appendices. By Albert Watson, M.A. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 18s.
- Select Letters. Text. By the same Editor. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s.
- pro Cluentio. With Introduction and Notes. By W. Ramsay, M.A. Edited by G. G. Ramsay, M.A. 2nd Ed. Ext. fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Horace.* With a Commentary. Volume I. The Odes, Carmen Seculare, and Epodes. By Edward C. Wickham, M.A. Second Edition. 1877. Demy 8vo. 12s.
- A reprint of the above, in a size suitable for the use of Schools. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.
- Livy, Book I.* With Introduction, Historical Examination, and Notes. By J. R. Seeley, M.A. Second Edition. 1881. 8vo. 6s.
- Ovid. P. Ovidii Nasonis Ibis.* Ex Novis Codicibus edidit, Scholia Vetera Commentarium cum Prolegomenis Appendice Indice addidit, R. Ellis, A.M. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Persius. The Satires.* With a Translation and Commentary. By John Conington, M.A. Edited by Henry Nettleship, M.A. Second Edition. 1874. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Juvenal. XIII Satires.* Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. H. Pearson, M.A., and Herbert A. Strong, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Latin in Liverpool University College, Victoria University. In two Parts. Crown 8vo. Complete, 6s.
- Also separately, Part I. Introduction, Text, etc., 3s. Part II. Notes, 3s. 6d.
- Tacitus. The Annals.* Books I–VI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by H. Furneaux, M.A. 8vo. 18s.

Nettleship (H., M.A.). Lectures and Essays on Subjects connected with Latin Scholarship and Literature. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— The Roman Satura: its original form in connection with its literary development. 8vo. sewed, 1s.

— Ancient Lives of Vergil. With an Essay on the Poems of Vergil, in connection with his Life and Times. 8vo. sewed, 2s.

Papillon (T. L., M.A.). A Manual of Comparative Philology. Third Edition, Revised and Corrected. 1882. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Pinder (North, M.A.). Selections from the less known Latin Poets. 1869. 8vo. 15s.

Sellar (W. Y., M.A.). Roman Poets of the Augustan Age. VIRGIL. New Edition. 1883. Crown 8vo. 9s.

— Roman Poets of the Republic. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 1881. 8vo. 14s.

Wordsworth (J., M.A.). Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin. With Introductions and Notes. 1874. 8vo. 18s.

III. GREEK.

A Greek Primer, for the use of beginners in that Language. By the Right Rev. Charles Wordsworth, D.C.L. Seventh Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Easy Greek Reader. By Evelyn Abbott, M.A. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Græcæ Grammaticæ Rudimenta in usum Scholarum. Auctore Carolo Wordsworth, D.C.L. Nineteenth Edition, 1882. 12mo. 4s.

A Greek-English Lexicon, abridged from Liddell and Scott's 4to. edition, chiefly for the use of Schools. Twenty-first Edition. 1886. Square 12mo. 7s. 6d.

Greek Verbs, Irregular and Defective; their forms, meaning, and quantity; embracing all the Tenses used by Greek writers, with references to the passages in which they are found. By W. Veitch. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

The Elements of Greek Accentuation (for Schools): abridged from his larger work by H. W. Chandler, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

A SERIES OF GRADUATED GREEK READERS:—

First Greek Reader. By W. G. Rushbrooke, M.L. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Second Greek Reader. By A. M. Bell, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Fourth Greek Reader ; being. Specimens of Greek Dialects.
With Introductions, etc. By W. W. Merry, D.D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Fifth Greek Reader. Selections from Greek Epic and Dramatic Poetry, with Introductions and Notes. By Evelyn Abbott, M.A.
Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

The Golden Treasury of Ancient Greek Poetry: being a Collection of the finest passages in the Greek Classic Poets, with Introductory Notices and Notes. By R. S. Wright, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

A Golden Treasury of Greek Prose, being a Collection of the finest passages in the principal Greek Prose Writers, with Introductory Notices and Notes. By R. S. Wright, M.A., and J. E. L. Shadwell, M.A. Extra fcap.
8vo. 4s. 6d.

Aeschylus. Prometheus Bound (for Schools). With Introduction and Notes, by A. O. Prickard, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

— Agamemnon. With Introduction and Notes, by Arthur Sidgwick, M.A. Third Edition. In one or two parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

— Choephoroi. With Introduction and Notes by the same Editor. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

— Eumenides. With Introduction and Notes, by the same
Editor. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Aristophanes. In Single Plays. Edited, with English Notes,
Introductions, &c., by W. W. Merry, D.D. Extra fcap. 8vo.

I. The Clouds, Second Edition, 2s.

II. The Acharnians, Third Edition.. In one or two parts, 3s.

III. The Frogs, Second Edition. In one or two parts, 3s.

IV. The Knights. In one or two parts, 3s.

Cebes. Tabula. With Introduction and Notes. By C. S.
Jerram, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Demosthenes. Orations against Philip. With Introduction and Notes, by Evelyn Abbott, M.A., and P. E. Matheson, M.A. Vol. I.
Philippic I. Olynthiacs I-III. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Euripides. Alceste (for Schools). By C. S. Jerram, M.A.
Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

— Helena. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, etc., for Upper and Middle Forms. By C. S. Jerram, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

— Iphigenia in Tauris. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, etc., for Upper and Middle Forms. By C. S. Jerram, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 3s.

— Medea. By C. B. Heberden, M.A. In one or two Parts.
Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

- Herodotus*, Book IX. Edited, with Notes, by Evelyn Abbott, M.A. In one or two Parts. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.
- Herodotus*, Selections from. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and a Map, by W. W. Merry, D.D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Homer. Odyssey*, Books I–XII (for Schools). By W. W. Merry, D.D. Fortieth Thousand. (In one or two Parts.) Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Books I, and II, separately. each 1s. 6d.
- Odyssey, Books XIII–XXIV (for Schools). By the same Editor. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Iliad, Book I (for Schools). By D. B. Monro, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- Iliad, Books I–XII (for Schools). With an Introduction, a brief Homeric Grammar, and Notes. By D. B. Monro, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.
- Iliad, Books VI and XXI. With Introduction and Notes. By Herbert Hailstone, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. each.
- Lucian. Vera Historia* (for Schools). By C. S. Jerram, M.A. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Lysias. Epitaphios*. Edited, with Introduction and Notes. by F. J. Snell, B.A. (In one or two Parts.) Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- Plato. Meno*. With Introduction and Notes. By St. George Stock, M.A., Pembroke College. (In one or two Parts.) Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Plato. The Apology*. With Introduction and Notes. By St. George Stock, M.A. (In one or two Parts.) Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Sophocles*. For the use of Schools. Edited with Introductions and English Notes. By Lewis Campbell, M.A., and Evelyn Abbott, M.A. New and Revised Edition. 2 Vols. Extra fcap. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Sold separately, Vol. I, Text, 4s. 6d.; Vol. II, Explanatory Notes, 6s.
- Sophocles*. In Single Plays, with English Notes, &c. By Lewis Campbell, M.A., and Evelyn Abbott, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp
- Oedipus Tyrannus, Philoctetes. New and Revised Edition, 2s. each.
- Oedipus Coloneus, Antigone, 1s. 9d. each.
- Ajax, Electra, Trachiniae, 2s. each.
- Oedipus Rex: Dindorf's Text, with Notes by the present Bishop of St. David's. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp, 1s. 6d.
- Theocritus* (for Schools). With Notes. By H. Kynaston, D.D. (late Snow). Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Xenophon. Easy Selections (for Junior Classes). With a Vocabulary, Notes, and Map. By J. S. Phillpotts, B.C.L., and C. S. Jerram, M.A. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Xenophon. Selections (for Schools). With Notes and Maps. By J. S. Phillpotts, B.C.L. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

— Anabasis, Book I. Edited for the use of Junior Classes and Private Students. With Introduction, Notes, etc. By J. Marshall, M.A., Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

— Anabasis, Book II. With Notes and Map. By C. S. Jerram, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

— Cyropaedia, Books IV and V. With Introduction and Notes by C. Bigg, D.D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Aristotle's Politics. By W. L. Newman, M.A. [In the Press.]

Aristotelian Studies. I. On the Structure of the Seventh Book of the Nicomachean Ethics. By J. C. Wilson, M.A. 8vo. stiff, 5s.

Aristotelis Ethica Nicomachea, ex recensione Immanuelis Bekkeri. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Demosthenes and Aeschines. The Orations of Demosthenes and Aeschines on the Crown. With Introductory Essays and Notes. By G. A. Simcox, M.A., and W. H. Simcox, M.A. 1872. 8vo. 12s.

Head (Barclay V.). Historia Numorum: A Manual of Greek Numismatics. Royal 8vo. half-bound. 2l. 2s.

Hicks (E. L., M.A.). A Manual of Greek Historical Inscriptions. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Homer. Odyssey, Books I–XII. Edited with English Notes, Appendices, etc. By W. W. Merry, D.D., and the late James Riddell, M.A. 1886. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 16s.

Homer. A Grammar of the Homeric Dialect. By D. B. Monro, M.A. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Sophocles. The Plays and Fragments. With English Notes and Introductions, by Lewis Campbell, M.A. 2 vols.

Vol. I. Oedipus Tyrannus. Oedipus Coloneus. Antigone. 8vo. 16s.

Vol. II. Ajax. Electra. Trachiniae. Philoctetes. Fragments. 8vo. 16s.

IV. FRENCH AND ITALIAN.

Brachet's Etymological Dictionary of the French Language, with a Preface on the Principles of French Etymology. Translated into English by G. W. Kitchin, D.D. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— Historical Grammar of the French Language. Translated into English by G. W. Kitchin, D.D. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Works by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A.

Primer of French Literature. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Short History of French Literature. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Specimens of French Literature, from Villon to Hugo. Crown 8vo. 9s.

MASTERPIECES OF THE FRENCH DRAMA.

Cornicille's Horace. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by George Saintsbury, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Molière's Les Précieuses Ridicules. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Andrew Lang, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Racine's Esther. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by George Saintsbury, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Beaumarchais' Le Barbier de Séville. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Austin Dobson. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Voltaire's Mérope. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by George Saintsbury. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s.

Musset's On ne badine pas avec l'Amour, and Fantasio. Edited, with Prolegomena, Notes, etc., by Walter Herries Pollock. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

The above six Plays may be had in ornamental case, and bound in Imitation Parchment, price 12s. 6d.

Sainte-Beuve. Selections from the Causeries du Lundi. Edited by George Saintsbury, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Quinet's Lettres à sa Mère. Selected and edited by George Saintsbury, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Gautier, Théophile. Scenes of Travel. Selected and Edited by George Saintsbury, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

L'Éloquence de la Chaire et de la Tribune Françaises. Edited by Paul Blouët, B.A. (Univ. Gallic.). Vol. I. French Sacred Oratory. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Edited by GUSTAVE MASSON, B.A.

Corneille's Cinna. With Notes, Glossary, etc. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

Louis XIV and his Contemporaries; as described in Extracts from the best Memoirs of the Seventeenth Century. With English Notes, Genealogical Tables, &c. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Maistre, Xavier de. Voyage autour de ma Chambre. Ourika, by Madame de Duras; Le Vieux Tailleur, by MM. Erckmann-Chatrian; La Veillée de Vincennes, by Alfred de Vigny; Les Jumeaux de l'Hôtel Corneille, by Edmond About; Mésaventures d'un Écolier, by Rodolphe Töpffer. Third Edition, Revised and Corrected. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

— Voyage autour de ma Chambre. Separately, limp, 1s. 6d.

Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin, and Racine's Athalie. With Voltaire's Life of Molière. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin. With Voltaire's Life of Molière. Extra fcap. 8vo. stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

Molière's Les Femmes Savantes. With Notes, Glossary, etc. Extra fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

Racine's Andromaque, and Corneille's Le Menteur. With Louis Racine's Life of his Father. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Regnard's Le Foueur, and Brueys and Palaprat's Le Grondeur. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Sévigné, Madame de, and her chief Contemporaries, Selections from the Correspondence of. Intended more especially for Girls' Schools. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Dante. Selections from the Inferno. With Introduction and Notes. By H. B. Cotterill, B.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Tasso. La Gerusalemme Liberata. Cantos i, ii. With Introduction and Notes. By the same Editor. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

V. GERMAN.

Scherer (W.). A History of German Literature. Translated from the Third German Edition by Mrs. F. Conybeare. Edited by F. Max Müller. 2 vols. 8vo. 21s.

Max Müller. The German Classics, from the Fourth to the Nineteenth Century. With Biographical Notices, Translations into Modern German, and Notes. By F. Max Müller, M.A. A New Edition, Revised, Enlarged, and Adapted to Wilhelm Scherer's 'History of German Literature,' by F. Lichtenstein. 2 vols. crown 8vo. 21s.

GERMAN COURSE. By HERMANN LANGE

The Germans at Home; a Practical Introduction to German Conversation, with an Appendix containing the Essentials of German Grammar. Third Edition. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

The German Manual; a German Grammar, Reading Book, and a Handbook of German Conversation. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Grammar of the German Language. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

German Composition; A Theoretical and Practical Guide to the Art of Translating English Prose into German. Second Edition. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

German Spelling; A Synopsis of the Changes which it has undergone through the Government Regulations of 1880. Paper covers, 6d.

Lessing's Laokoon. With Introduction, English Notes, etc. By A. Hamann. Phil. Doc., M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Schiller's Wilhelm Tell. Translated into English Verse by E. Massie, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.

Also, Edited by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Phil. Doc.

Becker's Friedrich der Grosse. Extra fcap. 8vo. In the Press.

Goethe's Egmont. With a Life of Goethe, &c. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

— Iphigenie auf Tauris. A Drama. With a Critical Introduction and Notes. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s.

Heine's Prosa, being Selections from his Prose Works. With English Notes, etc. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Heine's Harzreise. With Life of Heine, Descriptive Sketch of the Harz, and Index. Extra fcap. 8vo. paper covers, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

Lessing's Minna von Barnhelm. A Comedy. With a Life of Lessing, Critical Analysis, etc. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

— Nathan der Weise. With Introduction, Notes, etc. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Schiller's Historische Skizzen; Egmont's Leben und Tod, and Belagerung von Antwerpen. With a Map. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

— Wilhelm Tell. With a Life of Schiller; an historical and critical Introduction, Arguments, and a complete Commentary and Map. Sixth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

— Wilhelm Tell. School Edition. With Map. 2s.

— Die Jungfrau von Orleans. In preparation.

Modern German Reader. A Graduated Collection of Extracts in Prose and Poetry from Modern German writers :—

Part I. With English Notes, a Grammatical Appendix, and a complete Vocabulary. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Part II. With English Notes and an Index. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Niebuhr's Griechische Heroen-Geschichten. Tales of Greek Heroes. Edited with English Notes and a Vocabulary, by Emma S. Buchheim. School Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo., cloth, 2s. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

VI. MATHEMATICS, PHYSICAL SCIENCE, &c.

By LEWIS HENSLEY, M.A.

Figures made Easy : a first Arithmetic Book. Crown 8vo. 6d.

Answers to the Examples in Figures made Easy, together with two thousand additional Examples, with Answers. Crown 8vo. 1s.

The Scholar's Arithmetic. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Answers to the Examples in the Scholar's Arithmetic. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

The Scholar's Algebra. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Aldis (W. S., M.A.). A Text-Book of Algebra: with Answers to the Examples. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Baynes (R. E., M.A.). Lessons on Thermodynamics. 1878. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Chambers (G. F., F.R.A.S.). A Handbook of Descriptive Astronomy. Third Edition. 1877. Demy 8vo. 28s.

Clarke (Col. A. R., C.B., R.E.). Geodesy. 1880. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Cremona (Luigi). Elements of Projective Geometry. Translated by C. Leudesdorf, M.A. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Donkin. Acoustics. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Euclid Revised. Containing the Essentials of the Elements of Plane Geometry as given by Euclid in his first Six Books. Edited by R. C. J. Nixon, M.A. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Sold separately as follows,

Book I. 1s.

Books I, II. 1s. 6d.

Books I-IV. 3s. 6d.

Books V, VI. 3s.

Galton (Douglas, C.B., F.R.S.). The Construction of Healthy Dwellings. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Hamilton (Sir R. G. C.), and J. Ball. Book-keeping. New and enlarged Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. limp cloth, 2s.

Ruled Exercise books adapted to the above may be had, price 2s.

Harcourt (A. G. Vernon, M.A.), and H. G. Madan, M.A. Exercises in Practical Chemistry. Vol. I. Elementary Exercises. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Maclaren (Archibald). A System of Physical Education: Theoretical and Practical. Extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Madan (H. G., M.A.). Tables of Qualitative Analysis. Large 4to. paper, 4s. 6d.

Maxwell (J. Clerk, M.A., F.R.S.). A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism. Second Edition. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 1l. 11s. 6d.

— An Elementary Treatise on Electricity. Edited by William Garnett, M.A. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Minchin (G. M., M.A.). A Treatise on Statics with Applications to Physics. Third Edition, Corrected and Enlarged. Vol. I. Equilibrium of Coplanar Forces. 8vo. 9s. Vol. II. Statics. 8vo. 16s.

— Uniplanar Kinematics of Solids and Fluids. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Phillips (John, M.A., F.R.S.). Geology of Oxford and the Valley of the Thames. 1871. 8vo. 21s.

— Vesuvius. 1869. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Prestwich (Joseph, M.A., F.R.S.). Geology, Chemical, Physical, and Stratigraphical. Vol. I. Chemical and Physical. Royal 8vo. 25s.

Rolleston's Forms of Animal Life. Illustrated by Descriptions and Drawings of Dissections. New Edition. (Nearly ready.)

Smyth. A Cycle of Celestial Objects. Observed, Reduced, and Discussed by Admiral W. H. Smyth. R.N. Revised, condensed, and greatly enlarged by G. F. Chambers, F.R.A.S. 1881. 8vo. Price reduced to 12s.

Stewart (Balfour, LL.D., F.R.S.). A Treatise on Heat, with numerous Woodcuts and Diagrams. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Vernon-Harcourt (L. F., M.A.). A Treatise on Rivers and Canals, relating to the Control and Improvement of Rivers, and the Design, Construction, and Development of Canals. 2 vols. (Vol. I, Text. Vol. II, Plates.) 8vo. 21s.

— Harbours and Docks; their Physical Features, History, Construction, Equipment, and Maintenance; with Statistics as to their Commercial Development. 2 vols. 8vo. 25s.

Walker (James, M.A.) The Theory of a Physical Balance. 8vo. stiff cover, 3s. 6d.

Watson (H. W., M.A.). A Treatise on the Kinetic Theory of Gases. 1876. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Watson (H. W., D. Sc., F.R.S.), and S. H. Burbury, M.A.

I. A Treatise on the Application of Generalised Coordinates to the Kinetics of a Material System. 1879. 8vo. 6s.

II. The Mathematical Theory of Electricity and Magnetism. Vol. I. Electrostatics. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Williamson (A. W., Phil. Doc., F.R.S.). Chemistry for Students. A new Edition, with Solutions. 1873. Extra fcap. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

VII. HISTORY.

Bluntschli (J. K.). The Theory of the State. By J. K. Bluntschli, late Professor of Political Sciences in the University of Heidelberg. Authorised English Translation from the Sixth German Edition. Demy 8vo. half bound, 12s. 6d.

Finlay (George, LL.D.). A History of Greece from its Conquest by the Romans to the present time, B.C. 146 to A.D. 1864. A new Edition, revised throughout, and in part re-written, with considerable additions, by the Author, and edited by H. F. Tozer, M.A. 7 vols. 8vo. 3l. 10s.

Fortescue (Sir John, Kt.). The Governance of England: otherwise called The Difference between an Absolute and a Limited Monarchy. A Revised Text. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by Charles Plummer, M.A. 8vo. half bound, 12s. 6d.

Freeman (E. A., D.C.L.). A Short History of the Norman Conquest of England. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

George (H. B., M.A.). Genealogical Tables illustrative of Modern History. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Small 4to. 12s.

Hodgkin (T.). Italy and her Invaders. Illustrated with Plates and Maps. Vols. I—IV., A.D. 376–553. 8vo. 3l. 8s.

Hughes (Alfred). Geography for Schools. Part I. Practical Geography. Just ready.

Part II. General Geography. In preparation.

Kitchin (G. W., D.D.). A History of France. With numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables. In Three Volumes. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. each 10s. 6d.

Vol. I. Down to the Year 1453.

Vol. II. From 1453-1624.

Vol. III. From 1624-1793.

Lucas (C. P.). Introduction to a Historical Geography of the British Colonies. With Eight Maps. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Payne (E. F., M.A.). A History of the United States of America. In the Press.

Ranke (L. von). A History of England, principally in the Seventeenth Century. Translated by Resident Members of the University of Oxford, under the superintendence of G. W. Kitchin, D.D., and C. W. Boase. M.A. 1875. 6 vols. 8vo. 3l. 3s.

Rawlinson (George, M.A.). A Manual of Ancient History. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 14s.

Ricardo. Letters of David Ricardo to Thomas Robert Malthus (1810-1823). Edited by James Bonar, M.A. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Rogers (F. E. Thorold, M.A.). The First Nine Years of the Bank of England. 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Select Charters and other Illustrations of English Constitutional History, from the Earliest Times to the Reign of Edward I. Arranged and edited by W. Stubbs, D.D. Fifth Edition. 1883. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Stubbs (W., D.D.). The Constitutional History of England, in its Origin and Development. Library Edition. 3 vols. demy 8vo. 2l. 8s.

Also in 3 vols. crown 8vo. price 12s. each.

— Seventeen Lectures on the Study of Medieval and Modern History, &c., delivered at Oxford 1867-1884. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Wellesley. A Selection from the Despatches, Treaties, and other Papers of the Marquess Wellesley, K.G., during his Government of India. Edited by S. J. Owen, M.A. 1877. 8vo. 1l. 4s.

Wellington. A Selection from the Despatches, Treaties, and other Papers relating to India of Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington, K.G. Edited by S. J. Owen, M.A. 1880. 8vo. 24s.

A History of British India. By S. J. Owen, M.A., Reader in Indian History in the University of Oxford. In preparation.

VIII. LAW.

Alberici Gentilis, I.C.D., I.C., De Iure Belli Libri Tres.
Edidit T. E. Holland, I.C.D. 1877. Small 4to. half morocco, 21s.

Anson (Sir William R., Bart., D.C.L.). Principles of the English Law of Contract, and of Agency in its Relation to Contract. Fourth Edition. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— Law and Custom of the Constitution. Part I. Parliament. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Bentham (Jeremy). An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation. Crown 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Digby (Kenelm E., M.A.). An Introduction to the History of the Law of Real Property. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Gaii Institutionum Juris Civilis Commentarii Quattuor; or, Elements of Roman Law by Gaius. With a Translation and Commentary by Edward Poste, M.A. Second Edition. 1875. 8vo. 18s.

Hall (W. E., M.A.). International Law. Second Ed. 8vo. 21s.

Holland (T. E., D.C.L.). The Elements of Jurisprudence. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— The European Concert in the Eastern Question, a Collection of Treaties and other Public Acts. Edited, with Introductions and Notes, by Thomas Erskine Holland, D.C.L. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Imperatoris Iustiniani Institutionum Libri Quattuor; with Introductions, Commentary, Excursus and Translation. By J. B. Moyle, B.C.L., M.A. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 21s.

Iustinian, The Institutes of, edited as a recension of the Institutes of Gaius, by Thomas Erskine Holland, D.C.L. Second Edition, 1881. Extra fcap. 8vo. 5s.

Iustinian, Select Titles from the Digest of. By T. E. Holland, D.C.L., and C. L. Shadwell, B.C.L. 8vo. 14s.

Also sold in Parts, in paper covers, as follows:—

Part I. Introductory Titles. 2s. 6d. Part II. Family Law. 1s.
Part III. Property Law. 2s. 6d. Part IV. Law of Obligations (No. 1). 3s. 6d.
Part IV. Law of Obligations (No. 2). 4s. 6d.

Lex Aquilia. The Roman Law of Damage to Property: being a Commentary on the Title of the Digest 'Ad Legem Aquiliam' (ix. 2). With an Introduction to the Study of the Corpus Iuris Civilis. By Erwin Grueber, Dr. Jur., M.A. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Markby (W., D.C.L.). Elements of Law considered with reference to Principles of General Jurisprudence. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Stokes (Whitley, D.C.L.). The Anglo-Indian Codes.

Vol. I. Substantive Law. 8vo. 30s. Just Published.

Vol. II. Adjective Law. In the Press.

- Twiss (Sir Travers, D.C.L.). The Law of Nations considered as Independent Political Communities.

Part I. On the Rights and Duties of Nations in time of Peace. A new Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 1884. Demy 8vo. 15s.

Part II. On the Rights and Duties of Nations in Time of War. Second Edition, Revised. 1875. Demy 8vo. 21s.

IX. MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHY, &c.

Bacon's Novum Organum. Edited, with English Notes, by G. W. Kitchin, D.D. 1855. 8vo. 9s. 6d.

—— Translated by G. W. Kitchin, D.D. 1855. 8vo. 9s. 6d.

Berkeley. The Works of George Berkeley, D.D., formerly Bishop of Cloyne; including many of his writings hitherto unpublished. With Prefaces, Annotations, and an Account of his Life and Philosophy, by Alexander Campbell Fraser, M.A. 4 vols. 1871. 8vo. 2l. 18s.

The Life, Letters, &c. 1 vol. 16s.

Berkeley. Selections from. With an Introduction and Notes. For the use of Students in the Universities. By Alexander Campbell Fraser, LL.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Fowler (T., D.D.). The Elements of Deductive Logic, designed mainly for the use of Junior Students in the Universities. Eighth Edition, with a Collection of Examples. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

—— The Elements of Inductive Logic, designed mainly for the use of Students in the Universities. Fourth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 6s.

—— and Wilson (F. M., B.D.). The Principles of Morals (Introductory Chapters). 8vo. boards, 3s. 6d.

—— The Principles of Morals. Part II. (Being the Body of the Work.) 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Edited by T. FOWLER, D.D.

Bacon. Novum Organum. With Introduction, Notes, &c. 1878. 8vo. 14s.

Locke's Conduct of the Understanding. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s.

Danson (J. T.). The Wealth of Households. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Green (T. H., M.A.). Prolegomena to Ethics. Edited by A. C. Bradley, M.A. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Hegel. The Logic of Hegel; translated from the Encyclopaedia of the Philosophical Sciences. With Prolegomena by William Wallace, M.A. 1874. 8vo. 14s.

Lotze's Logic, in Three Books; of Thought, of Investigation, and of Knowledge. English Translation; Edited by B. Bosanquet, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford. Second Edition. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. cloth, 12s.

— Metaphysic, in Three Books; Ontology, Cosmology, and Psychology. English Translation; Edited by B. Bosanquet, M.A. Second Edition. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 12s.

Martineau (James, D.D.). Types of Ethical Theory. Second Edition. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 15s.

— A Study of Religion: its Sources and Contents. 2 vols. 8vo. Nearly ready.

Rogers (J. E. Thorold, M.A.). A Manual of Political Economy, for the use of Schools. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Smith's Wealth of Nations. A new Edition, with Notes, by J. E. Thorold Rogers, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo. 1880. 21s.

X. FINE ART.

Butler (A. J., M.A., F.S.A.) The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt. 2 vols. 8vo. 30s.

Head (Barclay V.). Historia Numorum. A Manual of Greek Numismatics. Royal 8vo. half morocco, 42s.

Hullah (John). The Cultivation of the Speaking Voice. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Jackson (T. G., M.A.). Dalmatia, the Quarnero and Istria; with Cattigne in Montenegro and the Island of Grado. By T. G. Jackson, M.A., Author of 'Modern Gothic Architecture.' In 3 vols. 8vo. With many Plates and Illustrations. Half bound, 42s.

Ouseley (Sir F. A. Gore, Bart.). A Treatise on Harmony.
Third Edition. 4to. 10s.

— A Treatise on Counterpoint, Canon, and Fugue, based upon that of Cherubini. Second Edition. 4to. 16s.

— A Treatise on Musical Form and General Composition.
Second Edition. 4to. 10s.

Robinson (J. C., F.S.A.). A Critical Account of the Drawings by Michel Angelo and Raffaello in the University Galleries, Oxford. 1870.
Crown 8vo. 4s.

Troutbeck (J., M.A.) and R. F. Dale, M.A. A Music Primer
(for Schools). Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Tyrwhitt (R. St. J., M.A.). A Handbook of Pictorial Art.
With coloured Illustrations, Photographs, and a chapter on Perspective by
A. Macdonald. Second Edition. 1875. 8vo. half morocco, 18s.

Upcott (L. E., M.A.). An Introduction to Greek Sculpture.
Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Vaux (W. S. W., M.A.). Catalogue of the Castellani Collection of Antiquities in the University Galleries, Oxford. Crown 8vo. 1s.

The Oxford Bible for Teachers, containing Supplementary HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE, including Summaries of the several Books, with copious Explanatory Notes and Tables illustrative of Scripture History and the characteristics of Bible Lands; with a complete Index of Subjects, a Concordance, a Dictionary of Proper Names, and a series of Maps.
Prices in various sizes and bindings from 3s. to 2l. 5s.

Helps to the Study of the Bible, taken from the OXFORD BIBLE FOR TEACHERS, comprising Summaries of the several Books, with copious Explanatory Notes and Tables illustrative of Scripture History and the Characteristics of Bible Lands; with a complete Index of Subjects, a Concordance, a Dictionary of Proper Names, and a series of Maps. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.; 16mo. cloth, 1s.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER,

OXFORD: CLARENDON PRESS DEPOSITORY.
116 HIGH STREET.

The DELEGATES OF THE PRESS invite suggestions and advice from all persons interested in education; and will be thankful for hints, &c. addressed to the SECRETARY TO THE DELEGATES. Clarendon Press, Oxford.

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY LIBRARY PAIR

32101 030854770

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 021 330

REESE LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.

Class No.

685

M9461

v. 30

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

New York

112 FOURTH AVENUE

THE
SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XXX

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1892

[All rights reserved]

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

THE GRIHYA-SŪTRAS

RULES OF VEDIC DOMESTIC CEREMONIES

TRANSLATED BY

HERMANN OLDENBERG

PART II

GOBHILA, HIRANYAKESIN, ÂPASTAMBA

ÂPASTAMBA, YAGŪA-PARIBHÂSHÂ-SŪTRAS

TRANSLATED BY F. MAX MÜLLER

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1892

[All rights reserved]

RIIIE

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION TO THE GR/HYA-SÔTRAS	ix

GOBHILA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION	3
TRANSLATION	13

HIRANYAKESI-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION	135
TRANSLATION	137

ÂPASTAMBA-GR/HYA-SÛTRA.

INTRODUCTION	249
TRANSLATION	251
SYNOPTICAL SURVEY OF THE CONTENTS OF THE GR/HYA-SÔTRAS .	299

ÂPASTAMBA'S YAGÑA-PARIBHÂSHÂ-SÛTRAS.

INTRODUCTION	311
TRANSLATION	315
INDEX	365

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	373

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

GRĪHYA-SŪTRAS.

WE begin our introductory remarks on the literature of the Grīhya-sūtras with the attempt to collect the more important data which throw light on the development of the Grīhya ritual during the oldest period of Hindu antiquity.

There are, as it seems, no direct traces of the Grīhya ceremonies in the most ancient portion of Vedic literature. It is certain indeed that a number of the most important of those ceremonies are contemporaneous with or even earlier than the most ancient hymns of the Rig-veda, as far as their fundamental elements and character are concerned, whatever their precise arrangement may have been. However, in the literature of the oldest period they play no part. It was another portion of the ritual that attracted the attention of the poets to whom we owe the hymns to Agni, Indra, and the other deities of the Vedic Olympus, viz. the offerings of the Srauta-Ritual with their far superior pomp, or, to state the matter more precisely, among the offerings of the Srauta-Ritual the Soma offering. In the Soma offering centred the thought, the poetry, and we may almost say the life of the Vasishṭhas, of the Viśvāmitras, &c., in whose families the poetry of the Rig-veda had its home. We may assume that the acts of the Grīhya worship, being more limited in extent and simpler in their ritual construction than the great Soma offerings, were not yet at that time, so far as they existed at all, decked out with the reciting of the poetic texts, which we find later on connected with them, and which in the case of the Soma offering came early to be used. Probably they were celebrated in simple unadorned fashion; what the person making the offering had to say was doubtless limited to short, possibly prose formulas, so that these ceremonies remained free from the poetry of the above-mentioned families of priests¹. We think that the character of the verses given in the Grīhya-sūtras, which had to be repeated at the performance of the different ceremonies, justifies us in making these conjectures. Some of these verses indeed are old Vedic verses, but we have no proof that they were composed for the purposes of the Grīhya ceremonies, and the connection in which we find them in the Rig-veda proves rather the contrary. Another portion of these verses and songs proves to have been composed indeed for the very Grīhya ceremonies for which they are prescribed in the texts of the ritual: but these verses are more recent than the old parts of the Rig-veda. Part of them are found in the Rig-veda in a position which speaks for their more recent origin, others are not contained in the Rig-veda at all. Many of these verses are found in the more recent Vedic Samhitās, especially in the Atharva-veda, a Samhitā which may be regarded in the main as a treasure of Grīhya verses; others finally have not as yet been traced to any Vedic Samhitā, and we know them from the Grīhya-sūtras only. We may infer that, during the latter part of the Rig-veda period, ceremonies such as marriage and burial began to be decked out with poetry as had long been the case with the Soma offering. The principal collection of marriage sentences² and the sentences for the

¹ It is doubtful whether at the time of the Rig-veda the custom was established for the sacrificer to keep burning constantly a sacred Grīhya fire besides the three Srauta fires. There is, as far as I know, no express mention of the Grīhya fire in the Rig-veda; but that is no proof that it had then not yet come into use. Of the Srauta fires the gārhapatya is the only one that is mentioned, though all three were known beyond a doubt. (Ludwig, Rig-veda, vol. iii, p. 355; in some of the passages cited the word gārhapatya does not refer to the gārhapatya fire.)

² Rig-veda X, 85. It is clear that what we have here is not a hymn intended to be recited all at once, but that, as in a number of other cases in the Rig-veda, the single verses or groups of verses were to be used at different points in the performance of a rite (or, in other cases, in the telling of a story). Compare my paper, 'Ākhyāna-Hymnen im Rig-veda,' Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. xxxix, p. 83.—Many verses of Rig-veda X, 85 occur again in the fourteenth book of the Atharva-veda.

burial of the dead ¹ are found in the tenth Māṇḍala of the Rig-veda, which, for the most part, is known to be of later origin than the preceding portions of the collections ². If we look into the character of the verses, which these long Gr̥ihya songs are composed of, we shall find additional grounds for assuming their early origin. A few remarks about their metrical character will make this clear ³. There is no other metre in which the contrast between the early and later periods of Vedic literature manifests itself so clearly as in the Anuṣṭubh-metre ⁴. The Anuṣṭubh hemistich consists of sixteen syllables, which are divided by the caesura into two halves of eight syllables each. The second of these halves has as a rule the iambic ending (◡ – ◡ ◡), though this rule was not so strictly carried out in the early as in the later period ⁵. The iambic ending is also the rule in the older parts of the Veda for the close of the first half, i.e. for the four syllables before the caesura ⁶. We know that the later prosody, as we see it in certain late parts of Vedic literature, in the Pāli Piṭakas of the Buddhists, and later in the great epic poems, not only departs from the usage of the older period, but adopts a directly contrary course, i.e. the iambic ending of the first pāda, which was formerly the rule, is not allowed at all later, and instead of it the prevailing ending is the anti-spast (◡ – – ◡). It goes without saying that such a change in metrical usage, as the one just described, cannot have ¹ Rig-veda X, 14–16, and several other hymns of the tenth book. Compare the note at Ārvalāyana-Gr̥ihya IV, 4. 6.

² Compare my Hymnen des Rig-veda, vol. i (Prolegomena), pp. 265 seq.

³ Compare the account of the historical development of some of the Vedic metres which I have given in my paper, 'Das altindische Ākhyāna,' Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. xxxvii, and my Hymnen des Rig-veda, vol. i, pp. 26 seqq.

⁴ The Trishubh and Gagatī offer a much less promising material for investigation, because, so far as can now be made out, the departures from the old type begin at a later period than in the case of the Anuṣṭubh.

⁵ Compare Max Müller's introduction to his English translation of the Rig-veda, vol. i, pp. cxiv seq.

⁶ To demonstrate this, I have given in my last-quoted paper, p. 62, statistics with regard to the two hymns, Rig-veda I, 10 and VIII, 8; in the former the iambic ending of the first pāda obtains in twenty out of twenty-four cases, in the latter in forty-two out of forty-six cases.

taken place at one jump. And accordingly a consideration of the Vedic texts reveals a transition period or rather a series of several transition periods between the old and the new standpoints. The first change is that every other ending of the first pāda is allowed by the side of the iambic ending. The two forms of the ending, the one prevailing in the earliest, and the one prevailing in the later period of the prosody, the iambic (◡ – ◡ ◡) and the antispastic (◡ – – ◡), are those that occur most frequently in the intermediate period, but besides them all other possible forms are allowed¹.

This is precisely the stage of metrical development which the great Grhyā songs of the tenth Māṇḍala of the Rig-veda have reached. Let us consider, for instance, the marriage songs and the marriage sayings, X, 85, and see what kind of ending there is at the end of the first pāda. Of the first seventeen verses of this Sūkta sixteen are in Anuṣṭubh metre (verse 14 is Trishṭubh); we have therefore thirty-two cases in which the metrical form of these syllables must be investigated. The quantity of the syllable immediately preceding the caesura being a matter of indifference, we have not sixteen but only eight a priori possible combinations for the form of the last four syllables of the pāda; I give each of these forms below, adding each time in how many of the thirty-two cases it is used :

– – ◡ ◡	8
◡ – ◡ ◡	5
– – – ◡	5
◡ – – ◡	4
◡ ◡ ◡ ◡	3
– ◡ ◡ ◡	3
◡ ◡ – ◡	3
– ◡ – ◡	1
	32

¹ Compare the statistics as to the frequency of the different metrical forms at the ending of the first pāda, p. 63 of my above-quoted paper, and Hymnen des Rig-veda, vol. i, p. 28. I have endeavoured in the same paper, p. 65 seq., to make it seem probable that this was the stage of prosody prevailing during the government of the two Kuru kings Parikshit and Ganamegaya.

We see that all the possible combinations are actually represented in these thirty-two cases, and accordingly the metrical build of this Sûkta shows that it belongs to a period to which only the latest songs of the Rig-veda collection can be referred, but the peculiarities of which may be often noticed in the Atharva-veda and in the verses scattered throughout the Brâhmaṇa literature¹.

A hasty glance suffices to show that those verses of the Gṛihya ritual which do not appear in the Samhitâs, but which are quoted at full length in the Gṛihya-sûtras, are also in the same stage. For instance, the seven Anushrubh verses which are quoted Sâṅkhâya-Gṛihya I, 19, 5. 6, give us the following relations, if we investigate them as we did those in Rig-veda X, 85:

— — — —	4
— — — —	3
— — — —	2
— — — —	2
— — — —	1
— — — —	1
— — — —	1
— — — —	14

Thus even the small number of fourteen hemistichs is enough to give us seven of the eight existing combinations, and no single one occurs at all often enough to allow us to call it predominant.

Or we may take the saying that accompanies the performance of the medhâganana on the new-born child. In the version of *Āsvalâyana*² we have:

— — — —||— — — —
medhâṃ te devaḥ Savitâ
 — — — —||— — — —
medhâṃ te Asvinau devau.

In the version adopted in the school of Gobhila³ the ¹ For instance, in the verses which occur in the well-known story of Sunaśrepa (Aitareya-Brâhmaṇa VII, 13 seq.).

² Āsvalâyana-Gṛihya I, 15, 2.

³ Mantra-Brâhmaṇa I, 5, 9; cf. Gobhila-Gṛihya II, 7, 21.

context of the first line is different, but the metre is the same:

— — — —||— ∪ ∪ —
medhām te Mitrāvarunau.

Or the saying with which the pupil (brahmaṭārin) has to lay a log of wood on the fire of the teacher¹:

— ∪ — ∪ ∪ || ∪ — — ∪
Agnaye samidham āhārsham
∪ — ∪ — || — — — ∪
tayā tvam Agne vardhasva.

There would be no object in multiplying the number of examples; those here given are sufficient to prove our proposition, that the development of the Grīhya rites in the form in which they are described to us in the Sūtras, that especially their being accompanied with verses, which were to be recited by their performance, is later than the time of the oldest Vedic poetry, and coincides rather with the transition period in the development of the Anushṭubh metre, a period which lies between the old Vedic and the later Buddhistic and epic form.

Besides the formulae intended to be recited during the performance of the various sacred acts, the Grīhya-sūtras contain a second kind of verses, which differ essentially from the first kind in regard to metre; viz. verses of ritualistic character, which are inserted here and there between the prose Sūtras, and of which the subject-matter is similar to that of the surrounding prose. We shall have to consider these yagñagāthās, as they are occasionally called, later; at present let us go on looking for traces of the Grīhya ritual and for the origin of Grīhya literature in the literature which precedes the Sūtras.

The Brāhmaṇa texts, which, as a whole, have for their subject-matter the Vaitānika ceremonies celebrated with the three holy fires, furnish evidence that the Grīhya fire, together with the holy acts accomplished in connection with it, were also already known. The Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa² gives this ¹ Āśvalāyana-Grīhya I, 21, 1. In Pāraskara and in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa only the first hemistich has the Anushṭubh form.

² Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa VIII, 10, 9: etya grīhān paśād grīhyasyāgner upa-fire the most usual name, the same name which is used for it in the Sûtras, grîhya agni, and describes a ceremony to be performed over this fire with expressions which agree exactly with the style of the *Grîhya-sûtras*¹. We often find in the Brâhmana texts also mention of the terminus technicus, which the Grîhya-sûtras use many times as a comprehensive term for the offerings connected with Grîhya ritual, the word *pākayagñas*². For instance, the *Satapatha Brâhmana*³, in order to designate the whole body of offerings, uses the expression: all offerings, those that are Pākayagñas and the others. It is especially common to find the Pākayagñas mentioned in the Brâhmana texts in connection with the myth of Manu. The *Taittirîya Samhitâ*⁴ opposes the whole body of sacrifices to the Pākayagñas. The former belonged to the gods, who through it attained to the heavenly world; the latter concerned Manu: thus the goddess Idâ turned to him. Similar remarks, bringing Manu or the goddess Idâ into relation with the Pākayagñas, are to be found Taittirîya Samhitâ VI, 2, 5, 4; Aitareya-Brâhmana III, 40, 2. However, in this case as in many others, the Satapatha Brâhmana contains the most detailed data, from which we see how the idea of Manu as the performer of Pākayagñas is connected with the history of the great deluge, out of which Manu alone was left. We read in the *Satapatha Brâhmana*⁵:

vishâyânvarabdhâya ritvig antataḥ kamsena keturgrîhîtâs tisra âgyâhuttr aindriḥ prapadam gubhoti, &c.

¹ Some of the places in which the St. Petersburg dictionary sees names of the Grîhya fire in Brâhmana texts are erroneous or doubtful. Taittirîya Samhitâ V, 5, 9, 2, not grîhya but gahya is to be read. Aupâsana, Satapatha Brâhmana XII, 3, 5, 5, seems not to refer to a sacrificial fire. Following the identity of aupâsana and sabhya maintained in the dictionary under the heading aupâsana, one might be tempted in a place like Satapatha Brâhmana II, 3, 2, 3 to refer the words ya esha sabhâyâm agniḥ to the domestic fire. A different fire is however really meant (Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra IV, 9, 20).

² Sâṅkhâyana I, 1, 1: pākayagñân vyākhyâsyāmaḥ; I, 5, 1 = Pâraskara I, 4, 1: ketvâraḥ pākayagñâ huto hutaḥ prahutaḥ prârita iti.

³ I, 4, 2, 10: sarvân yagñân . . . ye ka pākayagñâ ye ketare.

⁴ I, 7, 1, 3: sarveṣa vai yagñena devâḥ suvargam lokam âyan, pākayagñena Manur asrâmyat, &c.

⁵ I, 8, 1, 6 seq. The translation is that of Prof. Max Müller (India, what can it teach us? p. 135 seq.).

‘Now the flood had carried away all these creatures, and thus Manu was left there alone. Then Manu went about singing praises and toiling, wishing for offspring. And he sacrificed there also with a Pāka-sacrifice. He poured clarified butter, thickened milk, whey, and curds in the water as a libation.’ It is then told how the goddess Idā arose out of this offering. I presume that the story of the Pākayagña as the first offering made by Manu after the great flood, stands in a certain correlation to the idea of the introduction of the three sacrificial fires through Purūravas¹. Purūravas is the son of Idā; the original man Manu, who brings forth Idā through his offering, cannot have made use of a form of offering which presupposes the existence of Idā, and which moreover is based on the triad of the sacred fires introduced by Purūravas; hence Manu’s offering must have been a Pākayagña; we read in one of the *Grhya-sūtras*²: ‘All Pākayagñas are performed without Idā.’

There are still other passages in the Brāhmaṇa texts showing that the Grhya offerings were already known; I will mention a saying of Yāgyavalkya’s reported in the *Satapatha Brāhmaṇa*³: he would not allow that the daily morning and evening offering was a common offering, but said that, in a certain measure, it was a Pākayagña. Finally I would call attention to the offering prescribed in the last book of the *Satapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁴ for the man ‘who wishes that a learned son should be born to him;’ it is there stated that the preparation of the Āgya (clarified butter) should be performed ‘according to the rule of the Sthālīpāka (pot-boiling),’ and the way in which the offering is to ¹ It is true that, as far as I know, passages expressly stating this with regard to Purūravas have not yet been pointed out in the Brāhmaṇa texts; but the words in Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XI, 5, 1, 14-17, and even in Rig-veda X, 95, 18 stand in close connection to this prominent characteristic of Purūravas in the later texts.

² Sāṅkhāyana I, 10, 5.

³ II, 3, 1, 21.

⁴ XIV, 9, 4, 18 = Bṛhadāraṇyaka VI, 4, 19 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. xv, p. 220). Cf. Grhya-saṃgraha I, 114 for the expression sthālīpākāvṛitā which is here used, and which has a technical force in the Grhya literature.

be performed is described by means of an expression, *upaghâtam*¹, which often occurs in the Grîhya literature in a technical sense.

We thus see that the Brâhmana books are acquainted with the Grîhya fire, and know about the Grîhya offerings and their permanent technical peculiarities; and it is not merely the later portions of the Brâhmana works such as the fourteenth book of the Satapatha Brâhmana, in which we meet with evidence of this kind; we find it also in portions against the antiquity of which no objections can be raised.

While therefore on the one hand the Brâhmana texts prove the existence of the Grîhya ceremonial, we see on the other hand, and first of all by means of the Brâhmana texts themselves, that a literary treatment of this ritualistic subject-matter, as we find it in the Brâhmanas themselves with regard to the Srauta offerings, cannot then have existed. If there had existed texts, similar to the Brâhmana texts preserved to us, which treated of the Grîhya ritual, then, even supposing the texts themselves had disappeared, we should still necessarily find traces of them in the Brâhmanas and Sûtras. He who will take the trouble to collect in the Brâhmana texts the scattered references to the then existing literature, will be astonished at the great mass of notices of this kind that are preserved: but nowhere do we find traces of Grîhya Brâhmanas. And besides, if such works had ever existed, we should be at a loss to understand the difference which the Hindus make between the Srauta-sûtras based on Sruti (revelation), and the Grîhya-sûtras resting on Smṛiti (tradition) alone². The sacred Grîhya acts are regarded as 'smârta,' and when the question is raised with what right they can be considered as a duty resting on the sacrificer alongside of the Srauta acts, the answer is given that they too are based on a Sâkhâ of the Veda, but that this Sâkhâ is hidden, so that its existence can only be demonstrated by reasoning¹.

¹ See Grîhya-saṃgraha I, III. 112.

² The Grîhya-sûtra of Baudhâya is called Smârta-sûtra in the best known MS. of this work (Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xxx).

But the Brāhmaṇa texts furnish us still in another way the most decisive arguments to prove that there have been no expositions of the Gr̥hya ritual in Brāhmaṇa form : they contain exceptionally and scattered through their mass sections, in which they treat of subjects which according to later custom would have been treated in the Gr̥hya-sūtras. Precisely this sporadic appearance of Gr̥hya chapters in the midst of expositions of a totally different contents leads us to draw the conclusion that literary compositions did not then exist, in which these chapters would have occupied their proper place as integral parts of a whole. Discussions of questions of Gr̥hya ritual are found in the Brāhmaṇa literature, naturally enough in those appendices of various kinds which generally follow the exposition of the principal subject of the Srauta ritual. Accordingly we find in the eleventh book of the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa², among the manifold additions to subjects previously treated, which make up the principal contents of this book³, an exposition of the Upanayana, i. e. the solemn reception of the pupil by the teacher, who is to teach him the Veda. The way in which the chapter on the Upanayana is joined to the preceding one, is eminently characteristic ; it shows that it is the merest accident which has brought about in that place the discussion of a subject connected with the Gr̥hya ritual, and that a ceremony such as the Upanayana is properly not in its proper place in the midst of the literature of Brāhmaṇa texts. A dialogue (brahmodya) between Uddālaka and Saukeya precedes ; the two talk of the Agnihotra and of various expiations (prāyaskitta) connected with that sacrifice. At the end Saukeya, filled with astonishment at the wisdom of Uddālaka, declares that he wishes to come to him as a pupil (upāyāni bhagavantam), and Uddālaka accepts him as his pupil. It is the telling of this story and the decisive words upāyāni and upanīnye which furnish the occasion for introducing the following section on the Upanayana ¹. The subject is there treated in the peculiar style of the Brāhmaṇa texts, a style which we need not characterize here. I shall only mention one point, viz. that into the description and explanation of the Upanayana ceremony has been inserted one of those Slokas, such as we often find in the Gr̥hya-sūtras also, as a sort of ornamental amplification of the prose exposition ². 'Here a Sloka is also sung,' says the Brāhmaṇa ³:

¹ Max Müller, History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 94-96.

² Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XI, 5, 4.

³ Max Müller, History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 359.

— — — — — || — — — — —
 ākāryo garbhī bhavati hastam ādhāya dakṣiṇam
 — — — — — || — — — — —
 tritīyasyām sa gāyate sāvitryā saha brāhmaṇaḥ ⁴.

From this passage we see, on the one hand, that the composition of such isolated ⁵ Slokas explaining certain points of the Gr̥hya ritual goes back to quite an early period; on the other hand, we are compelled to assume that the Slokas of this kind which are quoted in the Gr̥hya-sūtras differ nevertheless from the analogous Slokas of the early period, or at any rate that the old Slokas must have undergone a change which modernized their structure, so as to be received into the Gr̥hya-sūtras; for the metre of the Sloka just quoted, which has the antispast before the caesura in neither of its two halves, and which has even a double iambus before the caesura in one half, is decidedly of an older type than the one peculiar to the Slokas quoted in the Gr̥hya-sūtras ⁶.

¹ This is also the way in which Sāyana understands the matter; he makes the following remark: tan hopaninya ity upanayanasya prastutavāt taddharmā asmin brāhmaṇe nirūpyante.

² Cf. above, p. xiv; below, p. xxxv.

³ Sect. 12 of the chapter quoted.

⁴ 'The teacher becomes pregnant by laying his right hand (on the pupil for the Upanayana); on the third day he (i.e. the pupil) is born as a Brāhmaṇa along with the Sāvitṛī (which is repeated to him on that day).'

⁵ It is not likely that verses of this kind are taken from more comprehensive and connected metrical texts.

⁶ Cf. on this point below, p. xxxv.

Another Gr̥hya section in the Satapatha Br̥hmaṇa seems to have found its place there through a similar accidental kind of joining on to a preceding chapter as the above-mentioned passage. In XI, 5, 5 a story of the battle of the gods and Asuras is told: the gods beat the Asuras back by means of constantly larger Sattras celebrations and conquer for themselves the world of heaven. It seems to me that the description of the great Sattras celebrated by the gods is the occasion of the joining on of a section beginning with the words¹: 'There are five great sacrifices (mahāyagñās); they are great Sattras: the offering to Beings, the offering to men, the offering to the Fathers (i. e. the Manes), the offering to the Gods, the offering to the Brahman.' After this introduction follows an account of one of the five great offerings, namely of the Brahmayagñā, i. e. of the daily Veda recitation (svādhyāya). The third Adhyāya of Āsvalāyana's Gr̥hya-sūtra begins in exactly the same way with the sentence: 'Now (follow) the five sacrifices: the sacrifice to the Gods, the sacrifice to the Beings, the sacrifice to the Fathers, the sacrifice to the Brahman, the sacrifice to men,' and then follows here also a discussion of the Brahmayagñā, which is entirely analogous to that given in the Satapatha Br̥hmaṇa. Āsvalāyana here does not content himself with describing the actual course of ceremonies as is the rule in the Sūtra texts; he undertakes, quite in the way of the Br̥hmaṇa texts, to explain their meaning: 'In that he recites the Rikas, he thereby satiates the gods with oblations of milk, in that (he recites) the Yagus, with oblations of ghee,' &c. It is plain that the mode of exposition adopted by Āsvalāyana in this passage, which is different from the usual Sūtra style, finds its explanation in the supposition that exceptionally in this case the author of the Gr̥hya-sūtra had before him a Br̥hmaṇa text, which he could take as his model, whether that text was the Satapatha itself or another similar text.

Among the extremely various prescriptions which we find in the last sections of the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, there is a rather long section, which also really belongs to the Gṛihya domain. To quote from this section¹: 'If a man wishes that a learned son should be born to him, famous, a public man, a popular speaker, that he should know all the Vedas, and that he should live to his full age, then, after having prepared boiled rice with meat and butter, they should both eat, being fit to have offspring,' &c. Then follows a description of an Āgya offering, after which the marital cohabitation is to be performed with certain formulas. This, however, is not the last of the acts through which the father assures himself of the possession of such a distinguished son; certain rites follow, which are to be performed at birth and after birth, the Āyushya ceremony and the Medhāganana. These rites are here prescribed for the special case where the father has the above-mentioned wishes for the prosperity of his child; but the description agrees essentially with the description of the corresponding acts in the *Gṛihya-sūtras*², which are inculcated for all cases, without reference to a determined wish of the father. It is a justifiable conjecture that, although this certainly does not apply to the whole of ceremonies described in the Gṛihya-sūtras, many portions of these ceremonies and verses that were used in connection with them, &c., were first developed, not as a universal rite or duty, but as the special possession of individuals, who hoped to attain special goods and advantages by performing the ceremony in this way.

¹ Satapatha Br̥hmaṇa XI, 5, 6, 1.

It was only later, as I think, that such prescriptions

¹ Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XIV, 9, 4, 17 = Bṛhad Āraṇyaka VI, 4, 18 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. xv, p. 219 seq.).

² Cf. Prof. Max Müller's notes to the passage quoted from the Bṛhad Āraṇyaka. I must mention in this connection a point touched upon by Prof. Müller, loc. cit. p. 222, note 1, viz. that Āśvalāyana, Gṛihya I, 13, 1, expressly calls 'the Upanishad' the text in which the Puṣsavana and similar ceremonies are treated. It is probable that the Upanishad which Āśvalāyana had in mind treated these rites not as a duty to which all were bound, but as a secret that assured the realisation of certain wishes. This follows from the character of the Upanishads, which did not form a part of the Vedic course which all had to study, but rather contained a secret doctrine intended for the few.

assumed the character of universality, with which we find them propounded in the Grīhya-sūtras.

It is scarcely necessary to go through the sections of the texts of other Vedic schools referring to the Grīhya ritual in the same way in which we have done it in the case of the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa. The data which we have produced from the great Brāhmaṇa of the white Yagur-veda, will be sufficient for our purpose, which is to give an idea of the stage in which the literary treatment of the Grīhya ritual stood during the Brāhmaṇa period. As we see, there were then properly no Grīhya texts; but many of the elements which we find later in the Grīhya texts were either already formed or were in the process of formation. Most of the verses which are used for the Grīhya acts—in so far as they are not verses composed in the oldest period for the Soma offering and transferred to the Grīhya ceremonies—bear the formal imprint of the Brāhmaṇa period; the domestic sacrificial fire and the ritual peculiarities of the Pākayagñas which were to be performed at it, were known; descriptions of some such Pākayagñas were given in prose; there were also already Slokas which gave in metrical form explanations about certain points of the Grīhya ritual, just as we find in the Brāhmaṇa texts analogous Slokas referring to subjects connected with the Srauta ritual.

Thus was the next step which the literary development took in the Sūtra period prepared and rendered easy. The more systematic character which the exposition of the ritualistic discipline assumed in this period, necessarily led to the taking of this step: the domain of the Grīhya sacrifices was recognised and expounded as a second great principal part of the ritual of sacrifices alongside of the Srauta domain which was alone attended to in the earlier period. The Grīhya-sūtras arose which treat, according to the expression of Ārvalāyana in his first sentence, of the *grīhyāni*¹ as distinguished from the vaitānikāni, or, as Sāṅkhāyana says, of the pākayagñās, or, as Pāraskara says, of the grīhyasthālīpākānām karma. The

¹ Similarly Gobhila: grīhyākarmāni.

Grihya-sûtras treat their subject of course in exactly the same style in which the sacrifices of the Srauta ritual had been treated by the Srauta-sûtras, which they constantly assume to be known and which are the works of teachers of the same Vedic schools, and oftentimes even perhaps the works of the same authors. Only certain differences in the character of the two groups of texts are naturally conditioned on the one hand by the greater complexity of the Srauta sacrifices and the comparative simplicity of the Grihya sacrifices, on the other hand by the fact that the Srauta-sûtras are entirely based on Brâhmaṇa texts, in which the same subjects were treated, while the Grihya-sûtras, as we have seen, possessed such a foundation only for a very small portion of their contents.

It goes without saying that the above-mentioned statement that the subjects treated of in the Grihya-sûtras are *Pākayagñas*¹ or Grihyasthâlipâkas should not be pressed with the utmost strictness, as though nothing were treated in the Grihya-sûtras which does not come under these heads. First of all the term Sthâlipâka is too narrow, since it does not include the offerings of sacrificial butter which constituted a great number of ceremonies. But besides many ceremonies and observances are taught in the Grihya-sûtras, which cannot in any way be characterised as sacrifices at all, only possessing some inner resemblance to the group of sacrifices there treated of, or standing in more or less close connection with them².

The Sûtra texts divide the Pākayagñas in various ways; either four or seven principal forms are taken up. The ¹ I believe with Stenzler (see his translation of Āsvalâyana, pp. 2 seq.) that pākayagña means 'boiled offering.' It seems to me that the expression pâka in this connection cannot be otherwise taken than in the word sthâlipâka ('pot-boiling'). Prof. Max Müller (History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 203), following Hindu authorities, explains Pākayagña as 'a small sacrifice,' or, more probably, 'a good sacrifice.' The definition of Lâṭyâyana may be also here quoted (IV, 9, 2): pākayagñâ ity âtakshata ekâgnau yagñân.

² Compare, for instance, the account of the ceremonies which are to be performed for the journey of the newly-married pair to their new home, Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya I, 15, or the observances to which the Snâtaka is bound, Gobhila III, 5, &c. According to the rule Sâṅkhâyana I, 12, 13 we are, however, to suppose a sacrifice in many ceremonies where there does not seem to be any.

commonest division is that into the four classes of the hutas, ahutas, prahutas, prâsitas¹. The division into seven classes is doubtless occasioned by the division of the Haviryagñas and of the Somayagñas, which also each include seven classes²; for the nature of the sacrifices in question would hardly of itself have led to such a division. The seven classes taken up are either those given by Gautama VIII, 15³: 'The seven kinds of Pākayagñas, viz. the Ashṭakā, the Pārvana (Sthālīpāka, offered on the new and full moon days), the funeral oblations, the Srāvaṇī, the Āgrahāyaṇī, the Kaitrī, and the Āsvayugī.' Or else the seven classes are established as follows, the fourfold division being utilised to some extent⁴: 'Huta, Prahuta, Āhuta (sic, not Ahuta), the spit-ox sacrifice, the Bali offering, the re-descent (on the Āgrahāyana day), the Ashṭakā sacrifice.' According to the account of Prof. Bühler⁵, the exposition of Baudhāyana, who gives this division, keeps closely to the course which it prescribes. For the rest, however, the Gr̥hya texts with which I am acquainted do not follow any of these divisions, and this is easily accounted for, if we consider the artificial character of these classifications, which are undertaken merely for the sake of having a complete scheme of the sacrifices. On the contrary, as a whole the texts give an arrangement which is based on the nature of the ceremonies they describe. In many instances we find considerable variations between the texts of the different schools; often enough, in a given text, the place

¹ Sāṅkhāyana I, 5, 1; 10, 7; Pāraskara I, 4, 1. Doubtless Prof. Bühler is right in finding the same division mentioned also Vasiṣṭha XXVI, 10 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. 128). Āśvalāyana (I, 1, 2) mentions only three of the four classes.

² In Lār̥yāyana (V, 4, 22-24) all the sacrifices are divided into seven Haviryagñā-samsthās and into seven Soma-samsthās, so that the Pākayagñas do not form a class of their own; they are strangely brought in as the last of the Haviryagñas. Cf. Indische Studien, X, 325.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. 214.

⁴ Baudhāyana Gr̥hya-sūtra, quoted by Bühler, Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xxxi; cf. Śāyana's Commentary on Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa III, 40, 2 (p. 296 of Aufrecht's edition).

⁵ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xxxii.

which is assigned to a given chapter is not to be explained without assuming a certain arbitrariness on the part of the author. But, as a whole, we cannot fail to recognise in the arrangement of the different texts a certain agreement, which we will here merely try to explain in its main traits; the points of detail, which would complete what we here say, will occur of themselves to any one who looks at the texts themselves.

The domestic life of the Hindus represents, so to speak, a circle, in which it is in a certain measure indifferent what point is selected as the starting-point. Two especially important epochs in this life are: on the one hand, the period of studentship of the young Brahmakârin devoted to the study of the Veda; at the beginning of this period comes the ceremony of the Upanayana, at the end that of the Samâvartana; on the other hand, marriage (vivâha), which besides has a special importance for the Grihya ritual, from the circumstance, that as a rule the cultus of the domestic sacrificial fire begins with marriage. One can just as well imagine an exposition of the Grihya ritual, which proceeds from the description of the studentship to that of the marriage, as one which proceeds from the description of the marriage to that of the studentship. The Samâvartana, which designates the end of the period of studentship, gives the Hindu the right and the duty to found a household¹. On the other hand, if the exposition begins with the marriage, there follows naturally the series of ceremonies which are to be performed up to the birth of a child, and then the ceremonies for the young child, which finally lead up to the Upanayana and a description of the period of studentship. The Hiranyakesi-sûtra alone, of the Sûtras treated of in these translations, follows the first of the two orders mentioned²; the other texts follow the other order, which has been already described by Prof. Max Müller almost thirty years ago, and we cannot do better than to give his description¹: 'Then (i. e. after the marriage) follow the Samśkâras, the rites to be performed at the conception of a child, at various periods before his birth, at the time of his birth, the ceremony of naming the child, of carrying him out to see the sun, of feeding him, of cutting his hair, and lastly of investing him as a student, and handing him to a Guru, under whose care he is to study the sacred writings, that is to say, to learn them by heart, and to perform all the offices of a Brahmakârin, or religious student.'

¹ Hiranyakesin says: samâvṛtta âtâryakulân mâtâpitarau bibhriyât, tâbhyâm anugṛhâto bhâryâm upayakket.

² The same may be said with regard to two other Grihya texts which also belong to the black Yagur-veda, the Mânava and the Kâṭhaka. See Jolly, Das Dharma-sûtra des Vishnu und das Kâṭhaka-grihyasûtra, p. 75; Von Bradke, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, vol. xxxvi, p. 445.

In this way we find, as a rule, in the foreground in the first part of the Grīhya-sūtras this great group of acts which accompany the domestic life from marriage to the studentship and the Samāvartana of the child sprung from wedlock. We find, however, inserted into the description of these ceremonies, in various ways in the different Sūtras, the exposition of a few ritualistic matters which we have not yet mentioned. In the first place a description of the setting up of the sacred domestic fire, i. e. of the ceremony which in the domain of the Grīhya ritual corresponds to the agnyâdheya of the Srauta ritual. The setting up of the fire forms the necessary preliminary to all sacred acts; the regular time for it is the wedding², so that the fire used for the wedding acts accompanies the young couple to their home, and there forms the centre of their household worship. Accordingly in the Grīhya-sūtras the description of the setting up of the fire stands, as a rule, at the beginning of the whole, not far from the description of the wedding.

Next the introductory sections of the Grīhya-sūtras have to describe the type of the Grīhya sacrifice, which is universally available and recurs at all household ceremonies. This can be done in such a way that this type is described for itself, without direct reference to a particular sacrifice. This is the case in Pāraskara, who in the first chapter of his

¹ History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 204.

² See, for instance, Pāraskara I, 2, 1: âvasathyâdhânam dârakâle.

Sûtra describes the rites recurring at each sacrifice, and then remarks: 'This ritual holds good, whenever a sacrifice is offered¹.' Similarly Âsvalâyana, in one of the first chapters of his work, enumerates the rites which are to be performed 'whenever he intends to sacrifice².' Other texts give a general description of the Grîhya sacrifice by exemplifying it by one special sacrifice. *Sâṅkhâyana*³ chooses for this the sacrifice which the bridegroom has to offer, when a favourable answer has been granted to his wooing; Gobhila⁴ gives at least the greater part of the rules in question à propos of the full moon and of the new moon sacrifice; *Hiranyakesin*⁵, who opens his account at the period of the studentship of the young Brâhmana, describes the sacrificial type à propos of the Upanayana rite.

The sacrifices which are to be offered daily at morning and at evening, those which are celebrated monthly on the days of the new moon and of the full moon—the Grîhya copies of the Agnihotra and of the Darsapûrnamâsa sacrifices—and, thirdly, the daily distribution of the Bali offerings: these ceremonies are commonly described along with what we have called the first great group of the Grîhya acts, immediately preceding or following the Vivâha.

We find, as a second group of sacred acts, a series of celebrations, which, if the man has founded his household, are to be performed regularly at certain times of the year at the household fire. So the Sravâna sacrifice, which is offered to the snakes at the time when, on account of the danger from snakes, a raised couch is necessary at night. At the end of this period the festival of the re-descent is celebrated: the exchanging of the high couch for the low couch on the ground. Between these two festivals comes the Prishâtaka offering on the full-moon day of the month Âsvayuga; it receives in the Grîhya texts the place corresponding to that which actually belongs to

¹ I, 1, 5: esha eva vidhir yatra kvañid dhomañ.

² I, 3, 1: atha khalu yatra kva ña hoshyant syât, &c.

³ I, 7-10.

⁴ I, 6 seqq.

⁵ I, 1.

it in the series of the festivals. As a rule¹ the acts we have just mentioned are followed, in accordance with the natural series, by the Ashṭakā festivals, which are celebrated during the last months of the year.

Alongside of these acts which are connected with fixed points of the year we find in the various Gr̥hya texts an account of a series of other ceremonies, which, in accordance with their nature, have no such fixed position in the system of the ritual. Thus, for instance, the rites which refer to the choice of a piece of ground to build a house or to the building itself; further, the rites connected with agriculture and cattle raising. In many texts we find together with this group of acts also an account of the ceremonies, related to fixed points in the year, which stand in connection with the annual course of Vedic study: the description of the opening festival and of the closing festival of the school term, as well as a point which generally follows these descriptions, the rules as to the anadhyāya, i.e. as to the occasions which necessitate an intermission in the study of the Veda for a longer or for a shorter period. As a rule, the Gr̥hya-sūtras bring the account of these things into the group of acts which refer to the household life of the Gr̥hastha; for the Adhyāpana, i.e. the teaching of the Veda, held the first place among the rights and duties of the Brāhmaṇa who had completed his time at school. On the other hand these ceremonies can naturally also be considered as connected with the school life of the young Hindu, and accordingly they are placed in that division by Gobhila², between the description of the Upanayana and that of the Samāvartana.

The sacred acts connected with the burial and the worship of the dead (the various kinds of Srāddha rites) may be designated as a third group of the ceremonies which are described to us in the Gr̥hya-sūtras. Finally, a fourth group comprises the acts which are connected with the attainment of particular desires (kāmyāni). Among the texts here translated we find a somewhat detailed account of these ceremonies in the Gobhila-sûtra and in the Khâdira-Grihya only¹.

¹ Not in Sāṅkhāyana, who describes the Ashṭakās before these sacrifices.

² III, 3.

These remarks cannot claim to give a complete outline of the contents and arrangement of the Grihya texts; they only aim at giving an idea of the fundamental traits, which in each particular text are modified by manifold variations, but which nevertheless are to these variations as the rule is to the exceptions.

We must now speak of the relations of the Grihya-sûtras to the two other kinds of Sûtra texts, with which they have so many points of contact in the Srauta-sûtras and the Dharma-sûtras.

Prof. Bühler, in several places of the excellent introductions which he has prefixed to his translations of the Dharma-sûtras, has called attention to the fact that the relation in which the Sûtra texts of the same school stand to each other is very different in different schools. Many schools possess a great corpus of Sûtras, the parts of which are the Srauta-sûtra, the Grihya-sûtra, &c. This is, for instance, the case with the Āpastambīya school²; its Sûtra is divided into thirty Prasnas, the contents of which are divided as follows :

I-XXIV : Srauta-sûtra.

XXV : Paribhâshâs, &c.

XXVI : Mantras for the Grihya-sûtra.

XXVII : Grihya-sûtra.

XXVIII-XXIX : Dharma-sûtra.

XXX : Sulva-sûtra.

In other cases the single Sûtra texts stand more independently side by side; they are not considered as parts of one and the same great work, but as different works. Of course it is the Dharma-sûtras above all which could be freed from the connection with the other Sûtra texts to such an extent, that even their belonging to a distinct Vedic school may be doubtful. The contents of this class of Sūtras indeed have hardly any connection with the subdivisions and differences of the Vedic texts handed down in the various schools; there was no reason why Brahmins, who studied various Śākhās of the Veda, should not learn the ordinances concerning law and morals given in these Sūtras as they were formulated in the same texts. The Grihya-sūtras are not so independent of the differences of the Vedic schools. The close analogy between the sacrificial ritual of the Grihya acts and that of the Srauta acts, and the consequent necessity of taking into account the Srauta ritual in the exposition of the Grihya ritual, necessarily brought the Grihya-sūtras into closer connection with and into greater dependence on the Srauta-sūtras than in the case of the Dharma-sūtras¹. But above all, the Grihya ceremonies demanded the knowledge of numerous Mantras, and accordingly as these Mantras were borrowed from the one or the other Mantra Śākhā², there followed in the case of the Grihya text in question an intimate connection with the corresponding Mantra school³. We find accordingly as a general rule, that each Grihya-sūtra presupposes a Vedic Samhitā, whose Mantras it quotes only in their *Pratikas*⁴, and that besides each Grihya-sūtra presupposes a previous

¹ Gobhila IV, 5 seq.; Khâd. IV, 1 seq.

² Bühler, Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, pp. xi seq.

¹ Professor Jolly in his article on the Dharma-sūtra of Vishnu, p. 71, note 1, points out that in the eyes of Hindu commentators also the Dharma-sūtras differ from the Grihya-sūtras in that the former contain rather the universal rules, while the latter contain the rules peculiar to individual schools. Cf. Weber, Indische Literaturgeschichte, 2. Aufl., S. 296.

² It seems as though the choice of the Mantras which were to be prescribed for the Grihya ceremonies had often been intentionally made so as to comprise as many Mantras as possible occurring in the Mantra-Śākhā, which served as foundation to the Grihya texts in question.

³ When Govindasvāmin (quoted by Bühler, Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xiii) designates the Grihyasāstrāni as sarvādhikārāni, this should not be understood literally. In general it is true the Grihya acts are the same for the disciples of all the Vedic schools, but the Mantras to be used in connection with them differ.

⁴ In the introduction to Gobhila I have treated of the special case where a Grihya-sūtra, besides being connected with one of the great Samhitās, is connected also with a Grihya-samhitā of its own, so to speak, with a collection of the Mantras to be used at the Grihya acts.

knowledge of the ritual which is acquired through the study of the proper *Srauta-sûtra*¹. It is not necessary to quote the numerous places where the Grihya-sûtras either expressly refer to the Srauta-sûtras, or point to them by repeating the same phrases or often even whole Sûtras. It will be sufficient to quote one out of many places, the opening words of the Āsvalāyana-Grihya, which in a way characterise this work as a second part of the Srauta-sûtra : 'The rites based on the spreading (of the three sacred fires) have been declared; we shall declare the Grihya rites².'

Thus it is not difficult to perceive the dependence of the Grihya-sûtras on the Srauta-sûtras; but there remains the much more difficult question whether in each particular case both texts are to be regarded as by the same author, or whether the Grihya-sûtra is an appendix to the Srauta-sûtra composed by another author. Tradition accepts the one alternative for some Sûtras; for other Sûtras it accepts the other; thus in the domain of the Rig-veda literature Āsvalāyana and Sāṅkhāyana are credited with the authorship of a Srauta-sûtra as well as of a Grihya-sûtra; the same is true of Āpastamba, Hiranyakesin, and other authors. On the other hand, the authorship of the Grihya-sûtras which follow the Srauta-sûtras of Kātyāyana, Lātyāyana, Drāhyāyana, is not ascribed to Kātyāyana, Lātyāyana, Drāhyāyana, but to Pāraskara, Gobhila, and Khādīrākārya.

It seems to me that we should consider the testimony of tradition as entirely trustworthy in the second class of cases. Tradition is very much inclined to ascribe to celebrated masters and heads of schools the origin of works which are acknowledged authorities in their schools, even though they are not the authors. But it is not likely that tradition should have made a mistake in the opposite direction, that e.g. it should designate Pāraskara as author when Kātyāyana himself was the author.

¹ In the domain of the Atharva-veda literature alone we find this relation reversed; here the Srauta-sûtra (the Vaitāna-sûtra) presupposes the Grihya-sûtra (the Kausika-sûtra). Cf. Prof. Garbe's preface to his edition of the Vaitāna-sûtra, p. vii. This relation is not extraordinary, considering the secondary character of the Vaitāna-sûtra.

² Uktāni vaitānikāni, grihyāni vakshyāmaḥ.

We shall not be able to trust so implicitly to tradition where it puts down the same author for the Gr̥hya-sūtra as for the corresponding Srauta-sūtra; the possibility that such data are false is so large that we have to treat them as doubtful so long as we have not discovered certain proofs of their correctness. At present, so far as I can see, we are just as little justified in considering that such a proof has been made as we are able to prove the opposite state of things. It is easy to find the many agreements in contents and expression which exist, for instance, between the Srauta-sūtra and Gr̥hya-sūtra of Sāṅkhāyana, or between the Srauta-sūtra and the Gr̥hya-sūtra of Āśvalāyana¹. But these agreements cannot be considered as sufficient proof that in each case the Gr̥hya-sūtra and the Srauta-sūtra are by the same author. Even if the author of the Gr̥hya-sūtra was not Āśvalāyana or Sāṅkhāyana in person, still he must have been at all events perfectly familiar with the works of those teachers, and must have intended to fit his work to theirs as closely as possible, so that agreements of this kind can in no way astonish us². On the other hand, if the Srauta-sūtras and Gr̥hya-sūtras are read together, it is easy to discover small irregularities in the exposition, repetitions and such like, which might seem to indicate different authors. But the irregularities of this kind which have been detected up to the present are scarcely of such a character as not to be easily ascribable to mistakes and carelessness such as even a careful author may be guilty of in the course of a large work¹. It seems to me then that until the discovery of further circumstances throwing light on the question of the identity of the authors of the Srautas and of the Gr̥ihyas, it would be premature if we were to venture on a decision of this question in one direction or the other.

¹ The parallel passages from the Srauta-sūtra and the Gr̥hya-sūtra of the Mānavas are brought together in Dr. Von Bradke's interesting paper, 'Ueber das Mānava-Gr̥hya-sūtra,' Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, vol. xxxvi, p. 451.

² For this reason I cannot accept the reasoning through which Prof. Bühler (Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xiv) attempts to prove the identity of the author of the Srauta-sūtra and of the Dharma-sūtra of the Āpastambīya school. Bühler seems to assume that the repetition of the same Sūtra, and of the same irregular grammatical form in the Srauta-sūtra and in the Dharma-sūtra, must either be purely accidental, or, if this is impossible, that it proves the identity of the authors. But there remains a third possible explanation, that the two texts are by different authors, one of whom knows and imitates the style of the other.

Prof. Bühler's investigations have made perfectly clear the relation in which the Gr̥ihya-sūtras and the Dharma-sūtras stand to each other in those cases, where we have texts of both kinds by the same school. In the case of the Gr̥ihya-sūtra and the Dharma-sūtra of the Āpastambiyas he has proved² that both texts were the work of the same author according to a common plan, so that the Gr̥ihya-sūtra is as short and terse as possible, because Āpastamba had reserved for the Dharma-sūtra a portion of the subject-matter generally treated of in the Gr̥ihya-sūtras. Besides there are references in each of the two texts to the other which strengthen the proof of their being written by the same author. In the Sūtra collection of Hiranyakesin the state of things is different. Here, as Prof. Bühler has also shown³, we find numerous discrepancies between the Gr̥ihya and the Dharma-sūtra, which are owing to the fact, that while this teacher took as Dharma-sūtra that of Āpastamba with some unessential changes, he composed a Gr̥ihya-sūtra of his own. Of the two Sūtras of Baudhāyana, the same distinguished scholar, to whom we owe the remarks we have just mentioned, has treated in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xxxi.

I believe that every reader who compares the two kinds of texts will notice that the frame within which the exposition of the Dharma-sūtras is inclosed, is an essentially broader one than in the case of the Grīhya-sūtras. We have here, I think, the same phenomenon that may also be observed, for instance, in the domain of the Buddhist Vinaya literature, where the exposition of the life of the community was at first given only in connection with the explanation of the list of sins (Pātimokkha) which was promulgated every half month at the meetings of the spiritual brethren. It was not till later that a more comprehensive exposition, touching all the sides of the life of the community was attempted¹, an exposition which, on the one hand, no longer limited itself to the points discussed in the Pātimokkha, and which, on the other hand, necessarily had much in common with what was laid down in the Pātimokkha. The relation of the Grīhya-sūtras and Dharma-sūtras seems to me to be of a similar nature. The Grīhya-sūtras begin to treat of the events of the daily life of the household, but they do not yet undertake to exhaust the great mass of this subject-matter; on the contrary they confine themselves principally to the ritual or sacrificial side of household life, as is natural owing to their connection with the older ritualistic literature. Then the Dharma-sūtras take an important step further; their purpose is to describe the whole of the rights and customs which prevail in private, civic, and public life. They naturally among other things touch upon the ceremonies treated in the Grīhya-sūtras, but they generally merely mention them and discuss the questions of law and custom which are connected with them, without undertaking to go into the technical ordinances as to the way in which these ceremonies are to be performed².

¹ Cf. my remarks in the introduction to the Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥ihya, vol. xxix, pp. 5, 6.

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xiii seq.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxiii seq.

Only in a few cases do portions treated of in the domain of the Dharma-sūtras happen to coincide with portions treated of in the Grīhya-sūtras. Thus especially, apart from a few objects of less importance, the detailed rules for the behaviour of the Snātaka and the rules for the interruptions of the Veda study (anadhya) are generally treated in an exactly similar way in the texts of the one and those of the other category.

¹ In the work which has Khandhakā as its general title and which has been transmitted to us in two parts, Mahāvagga and Kullavagga.

² Compare, for instance, the explanations concerning the Upanayana in the Dharma-sūtras (Āpastamba I, 1; Gautama I) with the corresponding sections of the Grīhya-sūtras.

We have spoken above of the metrical peculiarities of the Mantras quoted in the Gr̥hya-sūtras, the metre of which clearly proves what is indubitable from other reasons, that most, if not all, of these verses were composed at a perceptibly older period than the descriptions of the sacred acts in the midst of which they are inserted¹. A second kind of verses which are quoted in the Gr̥hya-sūtras must be carefully distinguished from these. It is doubtful whether there are any to be found among them which the authors of the Sūtras have themselves composed; but they were composed at a period decidedly more recent than those Mantras², and they therefore exhibit metrical peculiarities which are essentially different. The verses I mean are Slokas of ritual contents, which are quoted to confirm or to complete what is stated in the prose, and which are introduced by such expressions as tad apy āhuḥ 'here they say also,' or tad api ślokāḥ 'here there are also Slokas,' and other similar phrases³.

We called attention above (p. xix) to the fact that a verse of this kind occurs in one of the Gr̥hya chapters of the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, in a metre corresponding to the peculiarities of the older literary style. On the other hand, the verses appearing in the Gr̥hya-sūtras differ only in a few cases from the standard of the later Sloka prosody, as we have it, e. g. in the Mahābhārata and in the laws of Manu. In the Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, vol. xxxvii, p. 67, I have given tables for the verses in question out of the Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya, and these tables show that the characteristic ending of the first ¹ We do not mean to deny that among these verses too a few of especially modern appearance are to be found; e. g. this is true of the verses which Dr. Von Bradke has quoted from the Mānava-Gr̥hya II, 14, 34 (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländ. Gesellschaft, vol. xxxvi, p. 429).

² Let me here refer to the fact that one of these verses (Āśvalāyana-Gr̥hya IV, 7, 16) concludes with the words, 'thus said Saunaka.'

³ Āśvalāyana-Gr̥hya I, 3, 10 designates such a verse as yagñagāthā.

Sloka Pāda for the later period ॐ – – ॐ, which, for instance, in the Nalopākhyāna of the Mahābhārata covers precisely five-sixths of all the cases, occurs in Sāṅkhāyana in thirty cases out of thirty-nine, that is in about three quarters of the cases¹; Sāṅkhāyana has still twice the ending ॐ – ॐ ॐ which is the rule in the Rig-veda, but which is forbidden by the later prosody: prahutaḥ pitṛīkarmanā, uktvā mantram sprised apaḥ². It may be observed that a similar treatment of the Sloka metre appears also in the Rig-veda Prātisākhya of Saunaka. Here too the modern form of the ending of the first pāda dominates, although sometimes the old iambic form is preserved, e. g. II, 5 antaḥpadamvivṛīṭṭayaḥ, III, 6 anudāttodaye punaḥ.

It seems evident that we have in this Sloka form of the Sūtra period, the last preparatory stage which the development of this metre had to traverse, before it arrived at the shape which it assumes in epic poetry; and it is to be hoped that more exhaustive observations on this point (account being especially taken of the numerous verses quoted in the Dharma-sūtras) will throw an important light on the chronology of the literature of this period lying between the Vedas and the post-Vedic age.

We add to these remarks on the Slokas quoted in the Gr̥hya-sūtras, that we come upon a number of passages in the midst of the prose of the Sūtras, which without being in any way externally designated as verses, have an unmistakable metrical character, being evidently verses which the authors of the Sūtras found ready made, and which they used for their own aphorisms, either without changing them at all, or with such slight changes that the original form remained clearly recognisable. Thus we read in Āsvalāyana (Gr̥hya I, 6, 8), as a definition of the Rākshasa marriage: hatvā bhittvā ka śirshāni rudatīm rudadbhyo

¹ The few verses which are found in Gobhila preserve the same metrical standard as those quoted in Sāṅkhāyana; it follows that in Gobhila IV, 7, 23, arvatthād agnibhayaṁ brūyāt, we cannot change brūyāt in ka, as Prof. Knauer proposes. The supernumerary syllable of the first foot is unobjectionable, but the form ॐ – – – of the second foot should not be touched.

² Both passages are to be found in Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya I, 10.

haret: the approximation of these words to the Sloka metre cannot escape attention, and it is only necessary to make rudadbhyaḥ and rudatīm change places in order to obtain a regular Sloka hemistich. In Gobhila the Sûtras I, 2, 21–27 represent three hemistichs, which with one exception (na ka sopânatkāḥ kvakīṭ) exactly conform to the laws of the Sloka metre. II, 4, 2 gives also a hemistich by slightly changing the order:

*Mahāvṛikshān śmaśānam ka nadīs ka vishamāni ka*¹.

Somewhat more remote from the original verses is the wording of the Sûtras I, 6, 8. 9 na pravasann upavased ity āhuḥ, patnyā vratam bhavātī; we have the metrical order in one of the Slokas quoted by Sāṅkhāyana (Gr̥hya II, 17): nopavāsah pravāse syāt patnī dhārayate vratam.

The verses which are thus either expressly quoted, or at any rate made use of by the authors of the Gr̥hya-sûtras, do not seem to be taken from connected metrical works any more than the yagñagāthās quoted in the Brāhmaṇas; on the contrary in a later period of literature, when texts similar to Manu's Code were composed, they evidently furnished these texts with some of their materials².

Leaving out of consideration the Khādīra-Gr̥hya, which is evidently a recast of the Gobhīlīya-Gr̥hya, and the Sûtra of Hiranyakesin, which is, at least in part, based on that of *Āpastamba*³, we are not in regard to the other Gr̥hya texts in a condition to prove that one of them borrowed from the other. It often happens that single Sûtras or whole rows of Sûtras agree so exactly in different texts that this agreement cannot be ascribed to chance; but this does not—so far at least—enable us to tell which text is to be looked upon as the source of the other, or whether they have a common source which has been lost.

¹ The text has: nadīs ka vishamāni ka mahāvṛikshān śmaśānam ka.

² Cf. Indische Studien, XV, 11. We do not mean to imply anything as to the metrical portions of other Sûtra texts than the Gr̥hya-sûtras. As regards some verses quoted in the Baudhāyana-Dharma-sûtra, Prof. Bühler (Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xli) has shown that they are actually borrowed from a metrical treatise on the Sacred Law.

³ Cf. Prof. Bühler's remarks, Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxiii.

I will content myself with mentioning two such cases of agreement, in the one of which we can at least prove that a certain Sūtra cannot originally spring from one of the texts in which we find it, while in the other case we are able by means of a possibly not too uncertain conjecture to reconstruct the opening Sūtras of a lost Grīhya-sūtra.

The description of the vrīshotsarga (i. e. of the setting a bull at liberty) agrees almost word for word in the Sūtras of Sāṅkhāyana (III, 11), Pāraskara (III, 9), and in the Kāṭhaka-Grīhya. In Sāṅkhāyana we read :

§ 15 : nabhyasthe-numantrayate mayobhûr ity anuvâka-seshena.

(‘When the bull is in the midst of the cows, he recites over them the texts “mayobhûr, &c.,” down to the end of the Anuvâka.’)

On the other hand in Pāraskara we have :

§ 7 : nabhyastham abhimantrayate mayobhûr ity anuvâka-seshena.

(‘When the bull is in the midst of the cows, he recites over it the texts “mayobhûr, &c.,” down to the end of the Anuvâka.’)

The quotation mayobhûr is clear, if we refer it to the Rig-veda. Hymn X, 169, which stands about in the middle of an Anuvâka, begins with this word¹. On the other hand in the Vāgasaneyi Samhitâ there is no Mantra beginning with Mayobhûr; we find this word in the middle of the Mantra XVIII, 45, and there follow verses whose use at the vrīshotsarga would seem in part extremely strange. There can thus be no doubt that Pāraskara here borrowed from a Sūtra text belonging to the Rig-veda, a Pratika, which, when referred to the Vāgasaneyi Samhitâ, results in nonsense.

The other passage which I wish to discuss here is Pāra- skara I, 4, 1-5. Pâraskara, being just on the point of describing the marriage ritual, prefixes a few sentences, the position of which here it is not very easy to understand. A general division of all Pākayagñas—general remarks on the nature of the place for sacrificing : this looks very strange between a discussion of the Arghya and marriage ceremonies. Now these same sentences are found almost word for word and with the same passing on to the marriage ritual in Sāṅkhāyana also (Gṛihya I, 5, 1-5). Here, as in other cases, we have the borrowing word for word of such portions of text from an older text, and, closely related to this phenomenon, the fact that the sentences in question are awkwardly woven into the context of the Gṛihya where we read them, and are poorly connected with the surrounding parts. Unless we are much deceived, we have here a fragment from an older source inserted without connection and without change. It would seem that this fragment was the beginning of the original work ; for the style and contents of these Sūtras are peculiarly appropriate for the beginning. Thus, if this conjecture is right, that old lost Gṛihya began with the main division of all the Pākayagñas into four classes, and then proceeded at once to the marriage ritual. Later, when the texts which we have, came into existence, the feeling evidently arose, that in this way an important part of the matter had been overlooked. The supplementary matter was then inserted before the old beginning, which then naturally, as is to be seen in our texts, joins on rather strangely and abruptly to these newly-added portions.

¹ In the Taittirīya Samhitâ (VII, 4, 17) mayobhûr is the beginning of an Anuvâka; the expression anuvâka-seshena would have no meaning if referred to this text.

GR/HYA-SÛTRA OF GOBHILA.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

GR̥HYA-SŪTRA OF GOBHILA.

THE Gr̥hya-sūtra of Gobhila differs from those of Sāṅkhāyana, Āsvalāyana, Pāraskara, Hiranyakesin in one essential point: while these texts presuppose only the same Vedic Samhitās on which also the corresponding Srauta-sūtras are based, viz. the Rig-veda-Samhitā, the Vāgasaneyi-Samhitā, and the Taittiriya-Samhitā; the Sūtra of Gobhila, on the other hand, presupposes, beside the Samhitā of the *Sāma-veda*¹, another collection of Mantras which evidently was composed expressly with the purpose of being used at Gr̥hya ceremonies: this collection is preserved to us under the title of the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, and it has been edited at Calcutta (1873), with a commentary and Bengali translation by Satyavrata Sāmasramin².

Prof. Knauer of Kiew, to whom all students of the Gr̥hya literature are highly indebted for his very accurate edition and translation of Gobhila, has been the first to examine into the relation in which the two texts, the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa and the Gobhiliya-sūtra, stand to each other. He has very kindly enabled me to make use, before they were published, of the results of his investigations, which he has laid down in the introduction to his translation of Gobhila. While I wish, therefore, to acknowledge the obligation under which Prof. Knauer has thus laid me, I must try, on the other side, to state my own opinion as to the problem in question, which in some points differs from, or is even opposed to, the theory by which Prof. Knauer has tried to solve it.

¹ The term 'Samhitā of the Sāma-veda' ought to be understood here in its narrower sense as denoting the so-called first book of the Samhitā, the Khanda-ārṇika or collection of Yoni verses (see on the relation between this collection and the second book my remarks in the Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. xxxviii, pp. 464 seq.). Prof. Knauer in his list of the verses quoted by Gobhila (p. 29 of his translation of the Gobhilliya-Gr̥hya) states that Sāma-veda II, 1138 (= I, 276) and 1139 is quoted in Gobhila III, 9, 6, but an accurate analysis of the words of Gobhila shows that the verse II, 1139 is not referred to, so that only the verse II, 1138 remains, which occurs also in the first book of the Samhitā. The 'dvika' of which Gobhila speaks in that Sūtra is not a dvika, but, as the commentators rightly understand it (see Knauer's edition of the text, p. xii), it is a dyad of Sāmans or melodies, the two Kāvasha Sāmans which are based on the text I, 276, and are given in the great Sāma-veda edition of Satyavrata Sāmasramin, vol. i, pp. 566, 567.

² In the same way the Gr̥hya-sūtra of Āpastamba stands in connection with a similar collection of Gr̥hya verses and formulas, the Āpastambīya-Mantrapāṭha.

To begin with that side of the question regarding which there can scarcely be any doubt: it is certain, I believe, that Góbhila supposes the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa to be known to the students of his Sūtra. The reasons which show this are obvious enough¹. By far the greater part of the Mantras of which Gobhila quotes the first words, are not found in the Sāma-veda nor, for the most part, in any other Vedic Samhitā, except in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, in which they stand in exactly the same order in which they are referred to by Gobhila. The descriptions of the Grīhya sacrifices by Gobhila would have been meaningless and useless, and the sacrificer who had to perform his domestic ceremonies according to the ritual of Gobhila, would have been unable to do so, unless he had known those Mantras as contained in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa. And not only the Mantras, but also the order in which the Mantras stood, for Sūtras such as, for instance, Gobh. II, 1, 10 ('With the two following verses he should wash,' &c.), would have no meaning except for one who had studied the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa which alone could show which 'the two following verses' were.

There are, consequently, two possibilities: either the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa existed before the Gobhiliya-sūtra, or the two works have been composed together and on one common plan. It is the first of these alternatives which Prof. Knauer maintains; I wish, on the other hand, to call the attention of Vedic scholars to some facts which seem to me to render the second more probable.

¹ Cf. Knauer's Introduction, pp. 24, 31 seq.

A great part of the Mantras which have to be recited, according to Gobhila, at the performance of the Gṛihya ceremonies, are not given in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, but they are either found in the Sāma-veda-Saṃhitā and then their Pratīkas are quoted by Gobhila, or they are cited by Gobhila in extenso. Thus for the ceremonies described in the first Prapāṭhaka of Gobhila, such as the morning and evening offerings and the sacrifices of the full and new moon, the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa gives, with one single exception, no Mantras at all¹; but those Mantras, most of which consist only of a few words, are given by Gobhila only. It is scarcely to be believed that in a Saṃhitā which had to contain the Mantras required for the performance of the Gṛihya sacrifices, the Mantras belonging to the two daily and the two fortnightly sacrifices, which occupy one of the first places among all Gṛihya ceremonies and are treated of accordingly in all Gṛihya-sūtras, should have been omitted, unless that Saṃhitā was intended to stand in relation to another text by which that deficiency was supplied: and the Gobhiliya-sūtra exactly supplies it. Prof. Knauer thinks that those Mantras were omitted because they had already found their place in the Srauta ritual; but we must not forget that in the Srauta ritual of the Sāma-vedins neither the Agnihotra nor the Darsapūrṇamāsa sacrifices, which are performed without the assistance of priests of the Udgātri class, are treated of. Moreover the one Mantra to which we have already alluded², the single one which corresponds in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa to the first book of Gobhila, seems to me quite sufficient to show that it was not the intention of the compiler of that text to disregard that group of sacrifices; he gave that Mantra only, because the other Mantras, consisting of but a few words, were given in extenso in the Gobhila text. The Mantra of which we speak, belongs to the description of the paryukshana of the sacrificial fire. The sacrificer pours out water to the south, the west, and the north of the fire, with the Mantras, 'Adite-numanyasva,' 'Anumate-numanyasva,' 'Sarasvaty anumanyasva'; then he sprinkles water round the fire once or three times with a longer Mantra, 'Deva Savitaḥ prasuva yagñam prasuva yagñapatim bhagāya. Divyo gandharvaḥ ketapûḥ ketam naḥ punātu. Vākaspatir vākam naḥ svadatu.' This last one is the Mantra given in its entirety in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, while Gobhila¹ has only the first words of it. To assume here that the author of the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa knew only of that one Mantra, and that at the time of Gobhila the custom of the Sāma-vedins had undergone a change, so that they used four Mantras instead of the one, would be, in my opinion, an artificial and not very probable way of explaining the facts; a much more natural supposition would be, I believe, that the Sūtra and the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa describe one and the same form of the ceremony, so that the Brāhmaṇa, by omitting the short Mantras, which were given in the Sūtra in their entirety, implicitly refers to the Sūtra, and the Sūtra, on the other hand, by quoting only the first words of the longer Mantra, refers to the Brāhmaṇa in which the full text of that Mantra was given.

¹ Cf. Knauer's translation, Introduction, p. 25.

² Mantra-Brāhmaṇa I, 1, 1.

Among the numerous ceremonies described by Gobhila, which could furnish the occasion for similar remarks, we select only two: the rites performed in the evening of the wedding-day², and the sacrifice on the full-moon day of Âsvayuga³. The bridegroom, having carried away his bride from her home, takes her to the house of a Brāhmaṇa, and when the stars have appeared, he makes six oblations with the six verses lekhāsandhishu pakshmasu (Mantra-Br. I, 3, 1-6): these are given in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, and Gobhila has only the Pratīka. Then follow two short Mantras: the bride, to whom the polar-star has been shown, addresses that star with the words: dhruvam asi dhruvāham patikule bhūyāsam amushyāśāv iti; and when she sees the star Arundhatî, she says, ruddhâham asmi. As the full wording of these Mantras is given by Gobhila, they are omitted in the Brâhmaṇa. Finally the bridegroom recites over the bride the Rik dhruvâ dyaur dhruvâ prithivî, &c.; this we find in the M.-B. (I, 3, 7), the Pratika only being quoted by Gobhila. If one were to suppose here that in the two texts two different stages in the development of this ceremony are represented, so that only the Mantras lekhâsandhishu and dhruvâ dyauḥ would belong to the more ancient form of it, while the Mantras dhruvam asi and ruddhâham asmi would have been introduced at a later time, it may perhaps not be possible to disprove, in the strictest sense of the word, such an opinion. But I think the data we have given point to another solution of the problem which, if not the only admissible, is yet the most probable and natural one. Gobhila gave the full wording of the shorter Mantras with which the description of the ceremony could be interwoven without becoming obscure or disproportionate; the longer Mantras would have interrupted, rather tediously and inconveniently, the coherency of his ritual statements; so he separated them from the rest of his work and made a separate Samhitâ of them. It is true that there are some exceptions to the rule that all long Mantras are given in the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa and all short Mantras only in the Sûtra: on the one hand, there are some Mantras of considerable extent that are given by Gobhila and omitted in the Brâhmaṇa, thus, for instance, the Mantra yady asi saumî used at a preparatory ceremony that belongs to the *Pûmsavana*¹. On the other hand, a number of short Mantras which Gobhila gives in extenso, are found nevertheless also in the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa: such is the case, for instance, with many of the Mantras belonging to the worship of the Fathers, Gobhila IV, 2. 3, Mantra-Br. II, 3.

¹ Gobh. I, 3, 4.² Gobh. II, 3, 17 seq.³ Gobh. III, 8.

¹ Gobh. II, 6, 7. It is possible, though we have no positive evidence for this conjecture, that such statements regarding preparatory or auxiliary ceremonies may here and there have been added to the Sûtra collection in a later time. The Khâdira-Grîhya (II, 2, 20) has instead of that long Mantra only a few words which in the Gobhiliya-sûtra stand at the end of it.

It appears then, that allowance must be made for a certain inconsistency or carelessness in the distribution of the material between the two texts: and such an assumption will easily be allowed by any one who does not entertain very exaggerated ideas as to the care and reflection which presided over the composition of the Sūtra texts.

I will add only a few words concerning a second Grīhya ceremony, which calls for the same sort of comment as the rites which have just been discussed. For the offering on the day of the full moon, Gobhila prescribes (III, 8, 2) first the verse â no mitrâvaruṇâ, second the verse mâ nas toke. The Mantra-Brāhmaṇa (II, 1, 8) has the second of these verses only, not the first: conversely, the first verse alone, and not the second, is to be found in the Samhitā of the Sāma-veda (I, 220). We could hardly assume, as I think, that the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa presupposed another form of the rite differing from Gobhila's; we should be much more inclined to consider the leaving out of that matter, which was contained in other texts of the Sāma-veda, as a proof that the compiler of the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa assumed that those texts were known¹.

And this brings me to one of Prof. Knauer's conjectures concerning the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa which I have not yet touched. According to tradition we consider the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa as belonging to the Sāma-veda; in the Calcutta edition it is designated as the 'Sāma-vedasya Mantra-Brāhmaṇam.' Prof. Knauer thinks that it is doubtful whether the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa belonged to the Sāma-veda originally. He conjectures² 'that it existed already in the period during which the separate schools were as yet in the process of sifting, when there were as yet no Sâma-vedists in the later and stricter sense of the term¹. For out of 249 Mantras of the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa there are only four which are found in the Sâma-veda², as Prof. Knauer has shown, while a much greater number of these Mantras occur in the other Vedic Saṃhitâs. I should be inclined to conclude the other way : just because the author of the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa presupposed a knowledge of the Saṃhitâ of the Sâma-veda, but not of the other Vedas—or in other words because he destined his work for Sâma-vedins, he did not need to repeat what was in the Sâma-veda, but was compelled to incorporate in his compilation the Mantras out of the Rig-veda or of the Yagur-veda³. Moreover, I would draw the same conclusions from the Mantras cited by Gobhila which are absent in the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa, as I did from the Mantras which occur in the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa, but are not to be found in the Sâma-veda. Those Mantras are all to be found in the Sâma-veda with the exception of those which Gobhila has in extenso, and which therefore could be omitted in the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa. If we examine the thirteen Mantras collected by Prof. Knauer (p. 29), we find that in the case of nine of them the passage of the Sâma-veda (always of the first Ârṅika of the Sâma-veda) where they are to be found is quoted by Prof. Knauer.

¹ Any one who holds the view that the ritualistic formulas, which are not contained in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, represent later extensions of the ceremonies in question, will do well to notice how in any one of the offerings of the Śrauta ritual which we possess, both in the old description of the Samhitā and Brāhmaṇa texts, and in the more recent description of the Sūtra texts, Mantras have been added in more recent times to the former ones. I think that it would be difficult to draw from such observations any argument of analogy calculated to support Dr. Knauer's opinion as to the relation of the Mantras in Gobhila and in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa.

² Introduction to his translation, p. 23.

¹ Besides the reasons given below in opposition to this conjecture, I may be permitted to point out that this hypothesis is contrary to the whole chronology of the Grîhya literature which we endeavoured to arrive at in the general introduction. It is a priori extremely improbable that there was a Grîhya Saṃhitâ at a time when there was as yet no Sâma-veda.

² Viz. (according to Prof. Knauer's alphabetical list of the Mantras of the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa) imam stomam arhate, M.-B. II, 4, 2 = Sv. I, 66; II, 414; tat savitur vareṇyam, M.-B. I, 6, 29 = Sv. II, 812; bharâmedham, M.-B. II, 4, 3 = Sv. II, 415; sakema tvâ, M.-B. II, 4, 4 = Sv. II, 416.

³ Notice that of the four exceptional cases which we put together in the previous note, three cases are Mantras which are found only in the second Ârṅika of the Sâma-veda, not in the first (cf. above, p. 3, note 1). The fourth verse (M.-B. II, 4, 2) is to be found in the first Ârṅika, it is true, but it stands closely related to two verses which are not to be found in that Ârṅika (M.-B. II, 4, 3, 4). This explains why it was put into the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa, as well as those two verses.

The four other cases are :

rikam sâma yagâmahe, Gobh. III, 2, 48.

taḥ kakshur devahitam, III, 8, 5.

sam anyâ yanti, III, 9, 7.

pragâpataye, IV, 7, 36.

Of these Mantras the first is contained in the Sâma-veda (I, 369) just as the nine first-mentioned ones; the second is quoted by Gobhila in extenso; the third is to be found in the Âranyaka division of the Sâma-veda I (vol. ii, p. 292, ed. Bibl. Ind.); in the fourth finally the text is corrupt; it is intended for the verse out of the Mantra-Brâhmana Pragâpate na tvad etâny anyâḥ. Thus the four apparent exceptions all vanish, and we have in the Mantras which are absent in the Mantra-Brâhmana a new proof that this text belongs to the literature of the Sâma-veda¹.

Thus, according to my view, we may describe the origin of the Mantra-Brâhmana as follows. The Sâma-veda contained in its Samhitâ a much smaller number of Mantras applicable to the Grîhya rites than either the Rig-veda or the Yagur-veda; the peculiar character of the Sâman texts, intended for musical recitations at the most important sacrificial offerings, was quite remote from the character of formulas suitable for the celebration of a wedding, for the birth of a child, for the consecration of fields and flocks. Hence it is that, to a much greater extent than Âśvalâyana or Pâraskara, Gobhila mentions Mantras for which a reference to the Samhitâ was not sufficient; and this led to the compiling of a separate Samhitâ of such Grîhya-mantras, which presupposes the Grîhya-sûtra, just as the latter presupposes this Samhitâ. The almost perfect agreement of the Mantra-Brâhmana with Gobhila furnishes a valuable warrant for the good preservation of the two texts; of small discrepancies I have noted only two: Mantra-Brâhmana I, 6, 15, the formula âgantrâ samaganmahi is given for the ceremony of the Upanayana, while Gobhila does not prescribe this Mantra for this ceremony, although other Grîhya texts do; and secondly, the Mantra-Brâhmana II, 5, 1-7 does not consist of six verses as Gobh. IV, 6, 5-6 allows us to assume, but of seven verses.

¹ One will not object that the Mantras in question which are absent in the Mantra-Brâhmana are all to be found in the Rig-veda as well as in the Sâma-veda. Since almost all the verses of the Sâma-veda are taken from the Rig-veda there is nothing astonishing about this. Before one could conclude from this that the Mantra-Brâhmana belongs to the Rig-veda he would have to answer the question, How is it that the verses in question are always verses of the Rig-veda which are repeated in the Sâma-veda? Why are there not among them verses which are not to be found in the Sâma-veda?

In concluding this introduction notice is to be drawn to the fact that the text of Gobhila has preserved for us the traces of a division differing from the one into four Prapâṭhakas which is handed down by tradition: in a number of places certain Sûtras or the last words of certain Sûtras are set down twice, a well-known way of indicating the close of a chapter. This repetition, besides occurring at the end of the first, third, and fourth Prapâṭhaka (not at the end of the second), is to be found in the following places which become more frequent towards the close of the work: I, 4, 31; III, 6, 15; IV, 1, 22; 4, 34; 5, 34; 6, 16.

GR/HYA-SÛTRA OF GOBHILA.

PRAPÂTHAKA I, KÂNDIKÂ 1.

1. Now henceforth we shall explain the domestic sacrifices.

2. He should perform (the ceremonies) wearing the sacrificial cord on his left shoulder and having sipped water.

3. During the northern course of the sun, at the time of the increasing moon, on an auspicious day, before noon : this he should know as the (proper) time (for performing the ceremonies).

4. And as the prescription (is stated with regard to the time of the single ceremonies).

5. All (ceremonies) are accompanied by the Anvâhârya (Srâddha).

1, 1-4. Comp. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 1, 1. 2. 5. 7.

5. I cannot give this translation of the words 'sarvâny evân-vâhâryavanti' without expressing my doubts as to whether the commentator, whom I have followed, is right. He says: 'anu paskâd âhriyate yasmât prakṛitam karma iti, anu paskâd âhriyate yat prastutât (prakṛitât?) karmana iti kân-vâhâryam nândîmukhasrâddham dakshinâ kôkyate.' It is evident that the first explanation of anvâhârya as a ceremony after which the chief sacrifice follows, is inadmissible. Below, IV, 4, 3. 4, Gobhila himself defines the Anvâhârya Srâddha as a monthly ceremony (comp. Manu III, 123; Max Müller, India, p. 240); it is, consequently, different from a Srâddha accompanying each Grîhya sacrifice. The Sloka which the commentary quotes from a 'grîhyântara' seems to me not to remove the doubt; I think rather that it contains a speculation based on this very passage of Gobhila, taken in the sense in

6. At the end (of each ceremony) he should feed worthy (Brāhmaṇas) according to his ability.

7. A student, after he has studied the Veda, when going to put the last piece of wood (on the fire),—

8. Or to seize a wife's hand (i. e. to marry her),—

9. Should fetch water from a hidden place, should sweep a place which is inclined towards north-east, or which is level, and should besmear it (with cow-dung). Beginning from the centre of it he should draw a line from west to east, (another line) from south to north which touches that line at its western end, and three lines from west to east (touching the northwards-turned line at three different points) in its midst (i. e. at neither of its ends). He then should besprinkle (those lines with water).

10. In this way the Lakṣhaṇa (i. e. the preparation of the place for the sacred fire) is performed everywhere.

11. With the words 'Bhûr, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ,' they carry the fire forward (to that place) so that they have it in front of them.

12. Or after the householder has died, the chief which the commentator takes it, and on the Sūtras IV, 4, 3. 4. Thus I rather believe that we ought to understand anvāhārya as a mess of food like that offered after the darsapūrnāmāsau sacrifices to the officiating priests (Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 133), and I propose to translate : All (sacrifices) are followed by (the offering of) the Anvāhārya food (to the priest).

6. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 1, 3.

7. The text goes on to treat of the setting up of the domestic fire. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 3, 1.

9. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 3, 1 seqq. ; Gr̥hya-saṃgraha I, 47 seqq. ; Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XXXV, 557.

12. I have followed in the translation of parameshī/ikaraṇam the

(of the family) should do it (i. e. he should set up the sacred fire).

13. In this way, on the coincidence of an (auspicious) Tithi and an (auspicious) Nakshatra, (or of such a Nakshatra) and a Parvan—

14. On the full-moon day or on the new-moon day: then he should celebrate the setting up of his (sacred domestic) fire.

15. He should get fire from a Vaisya's house or from a frying-pan, and should set it up (as his sacred fire);

16. Or (he should fetch it) from the house of one who offers many sacrifices, be it a Brâhmana, or a Râganya, or a Vaisya.

17. Or he may kindle another fire by attrition and may set it up.

18. That is pure, but it does not bring prosperity.

19. He may do what he likes (of the things stated as admissible in the last Sûtras).

20. When he puts (at the end of his studentship) the last piece of wood (on the fire), or when he sacrifices when going to seize the hand of a wife, that fire he should keep.

21. That becomes his (sacred) domestic fire.

22. Thereby his morning oblation has been offered.

way indicated by the Grihya-saṃgraha I, 77, and by Sânkhâyana (I, 1, 5): prete vâ grihapatau svayam gyâyân. I think the paramesh/hî is the same person as the gyâyân. The commentary gives a different explanation: paramesh/hî agnir ity âtakshate, tasya paramesh/hino-gneḥ karanam yathoktena vidhinâ svikaranam.

15-18. Khândira-Grihya I, 5, 3 seqq.

20, 21. Khândira-Grihya I, 5, 1. 2. Comp. also above, Sûtras 7 and 8.

22. I. e. in the first of the two cases mentioned in Sûtra 20, the

23. Beginning from that time the sacrificing (of regular morning and evening oblations) in the domestic fire is prescribed, so that he begins with an evening oblation.

24. Before the time has come for setting the fire in a blaze, he should fetch in the evening and in the morning from a hidden place the water with which the different acts (such as sipping water) are performed.

25. Or (he should fetch water only) in the evening.

26. Or he should draw it out of a water-pot or of a barrel.

27. Before sunset he should set the fire in a blaze, and sacrifice the evening oblation after sunset.

28. In the morning he should set the fire in a blaze before sunrise, and should sacrifice the morning oblation before sunrise or after it.

KĀNDIKĀ 2.

1. He takes as his yagnīopavīta (i. e. sacrificial cord) a string, or a garment, or simply a rope of Kusa grass.

putting of fuel on the fire, and in the second case, the oblations of fried grain, &c., prescribed for the wedding, are considered as the sacrificer's morning oblation in his newly-established Gr̥hya fire, so that the regular oblations have to begin with the sāyamāhuti.

23. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 5, 6. Comp. Prof. Bloomfield's note 2, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XXXV, 561.

27, 28. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 5, 7-9. As to the two cases regarding the time of the morning oblation, comp. Indische Studien, X, 329.

2, 1-4. Rules regarding the Upavīta. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 1, 4-6. Compare the detailed description of the nine threads of which the Upavīta-string should consist, in the Gr̥hya-saṃgraha II, 48 seqq. A string was evidently considered as the regular and preferable form of the Upavīta; with regard to the second kind of Upavīta mentioned in Sūtra 1, the commentary says, 'A garment (is used),

2. Raising his right arm, putting the head into (the upavīta), he suspends (the cord) over his left shoulder, so that it hangs down on his right side : thus he becomes yagñopavītin.

3. Raising his left arm, putting the head into (the upavīta), he suspends it over his right shoulder, so that it hangs down on his left side : thus he becomes prākīnāvītin.

4. Prākīnāvītin, however, he is only at sacrifices offered to the Manes.

5. Having gone in a northern direction from the fire, having washed his hands and feet, and having seated himself, he should sip water three times and wipe off (the water) twice.

6. Having besprinkled his feet (with water) let him besprinkle his head.

7. Let him touch the organs of his senses with water :

8. The two eyes, the nose, the two ears.

9. Whatever (limb of his body) requires his consideration (whether it is pure or not), that he should touch with water (i. e. with a wet hand).

10. Here they say :

11. Let him not touch (himself with water, or sip water) while walking,

12. Nor standing,

13. Nor laughing,

14. Nor looking about,

15. Nor without bending down, if the Upavīta has been lost, for instance, in a forest, and if it is impossible to get a string.' A similar remark is given with reference to the third kind of Upavīta, the rope of Kusa grass.

5-32. Rules regarding the ākamaṇa and upasparsana. Khādīra-Gṛhya I, 1, 7-10 ; Manu II, 60 seqq.

16. Nor (throwing up the water) with his fingers,
17. Nor except with the (proper) Tīrtha,
18. Nor uttering a sound,
19. Nor without looking (at the water),
20. Nor with his shoulders put back,
21. Nor wearing a part of his under garment as if it were an upper garment,
22. Nor with warm water,
23. Nor with foamy water,
24. And in no case wearing sandals,
25. (Not) with a turban on his head (?),
26. (Not with his garment) tied round his neck,
27. And not stretching out his feet.
28. When he has finally touched (water) again, he becomes pure.
29. Let him, however, sip only water that reaches his heart.
30. For if he does otherwise, he remains impure.
31. Now the cases in which he has to touch (water) a second time.

17. As to the Tīrthas (or parts of the hand) sacred to the different deities or beings, comp. Vasishṭha III, 64 seqq., &c. See also Manu II, 58.

20. According to the commentary he has to hold his hands between his knees. Comp. Sāṅkh.-Gr̥hya I, 10, 8. Thus the shoulders are brought forward.

21-27. These Sūtras form three regular Śloka hemistichs. Only at the end of the second hemistich there is a metrical irregularity (sopānatkaḥ kvaṅtī standing at the end of the verse).

25. Kāśaktikaḥ, which the commentary explains as a compound of ka, 'the head,' and āśaktikā = āveshāikā.

28. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 1, 10.

29. In other texts (for instance, Manu II, 62; Vasishṭha III, 31 seqq.) it is stated that a Brāhmaṇa should sip water that reaches his heart, a Kshatriya water reaching his throat, a Vaisya water that wets his palate; a Sūdra should only touch water with his lips.

32. Having slept, or eaten, or sneezed, or taken a bath, or drunk something, or changed (his garments), or walked on the high road, or gone to a cemetery, he should sip water and then sip water again.

KĀNDIKĀ 3.

1. Having put wood on the (sacred) fire, having swept (the ground) round it, he should, bending his right knee, pour out to the south of the fire his joined hands full of water with (the words), 'Aditi! Give thy consent!'

2. To the west with (the words), 'Anumati! Give thy consent!'

3. To the north with (the words), 'Sarasvatī! Give thy consent!'

4. With (the words), 'God Savitṛī! Give thy impulse!' (Mantra-Brāhmaṇa I, 1, 1) he should sprinkle (water) round the fire once or thrice so as to keep his right side turned towards it—

5. Interchanging the points at which he begins and ends the (sprinkling of water), and sprinkling so as to encompass what he is going to offer (with the streams of water).

6. Let him then make oblations of the sacrificial food, be it prepared or raw, over the fire.

32. This Sūtra again forms a Śloka, though a slightly irregular Śloka.

3. Rules regarding the daily morning and evening sacrifice.

1-5. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 2, 17-21.

6. The sacrificial food is either kr̥ta (prepared) or akr̥ta (unprepared). A mess of boiled rice, for instance, is kr̥ta, rice grains are akr̥ta.

7. If it is raw, he should sacrifice after having washed it and having let the water drop off.

8. If it consists in curds or milk or rice gruel, (he should sacrifice it) with a brazen bowl, or with the pot in which the oblations of boiled rice are prepared, or also with the (sacrificial spoon called) Sruva ;

9. In the evening the first (oblation) with (the formula), 'To Agni Svâhâ!' the second silently, in the middle and in the north-eastern part (of the fire) ;

10. In the morning the first (oblation) with (the formula), 'To Sûrya Svâhâ!' the second again silently, again in the middle and in the north-eastern part (of the fire).

11. Having put a piece of wood (on the fire), and having again sprinkled (water) round it, he should pour out again his joined hands full of water in the same way (as prescribed in the Sûtras 1-3) ; in the Mantras he says, 'Thou hast given thy consent' (instead of 'Give thy consent').

12. Having circumambulated the fire so as to turn his right side towards it, having poured out the remains of water, and filled the vessel again, and put it (in its proper place), (he may do) whatever his business is.

7-12. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 5, 10-12. Prodaka in Sûtra 7 is explained by pragatodaka.

9-10. Khâdira-Grîhya, l.l. 13-15.

9. The first oblation is made in the middle, the second, sacred to Pragâpati (Sânkhâyana I, 3, 15, &c.), in the north-eastern part of the sacred fire. The tenth Sûtra of course is to be understood in the same way.

12. The water is that mentioned chap. 1, 24. With regard to

13. In that way, from that time (in which he has begun to offer the two daily sacrifices) he should sacrifice, or should have sacrificed, over the (sacred) domestic fire, till the end of his life.

14. Here now they say :

15. 'If they like, his wife may offer the morning and evening oblations over the domestic fire. For his wife is (as it were) his house, and that fire is the domestic fire.'

16. When the morning meal or the evening meal is ready, he should make (his wife) say, 'It is ready!'—

17. In an unbroken voice (?), having made himself pure,

18. He replies in a loud voice, 'Om!' Then in yathârtham the commentary says, 'yathârtham karmâpavargavihitam Vâmadevyagânâdikam prâtarâhutipastâdvihitam brahmayagñam vâ kuryâd iti vâkyaseshaḥ.' Similarly in the note on II, 4, 11 it is said, 'yathârtham iti karmāṇaḥ parisamâptir ūtyate;' II, 8, 17: 'yathârtham tantrasamâpanam kuryât,' &c. In my translation I have adopted the opinion of Professor Weber (Indische Studien, V, 375), according to whom yathârtham simply means, '(he should behave) as required by circumstances;' '(he should do) what happens to be his business.'

13. The last words are â gîvitâvabhṛithât, which literally means 'till the Avabhṛitha bath of his life.' The Avabhṛitha bath is the bath taken at the end of certain sacrifices, so that the Avabhṛitha of life signifies death.

15. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 5, 17.

16-18. Khâdira-Grîhya, l. l. 18, 19. In my translation of Sûtra 17 I have adopted, though not quite without doubt, the conjecture of Professor Roth given in Professor Knauer's note, p. 137. Professor Roth writes ritebhaṅgayâ vâtâ or ritebhagayâ vâtâ: he says simply 'om,' and not 'ô-o-ô-o-ô-om.' According to the commentary Sûtra 17 would refer to the wife, not to the husband.

18. The MSS. give mâkhyâ and mâkshâ. We ought to read, tan mâ kshâyîty upâmsu. Comp. Âpastamba II, 2, 3, 11 a low voice: 'To that (food) I bring adoration. May it not fail!'

KÂNDIKÂ 4.

1. He then should silently offer the Balis.
2. Let him speak only what refers to the due preparation of the food. With guests he may converse, if he likes.
3. He then should take some portion of food which is fit for sacrifice, should pour over it some liquid fit for sacrifice (such as ghee, milk, or curds), and should sacrifice it silently in the fire with his hand.
4. The first oblation is sacred to Pragâpati, the second to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit.
5. He then should offer the Balis, inside or outside (the Agnyagâra), having well cleansed the ground.
6. Let him pour out water once, and put down Balis in four places, and finally sprinkle once (water on the four Balis).
7. Or let him for each Bali which he puts down, sprinkle (water) before and afterwards.
8. What he puts down first, that is the Bali belonging to the Earth. What in the second place, to Vâyu. What in the third place, to the Visve devâs. What in the fourth place, to Pragâpati.
9. Then he should offer other Balis (near) the water-pot, the middle (post, and) the door: the first Bali is sacred to the Waters, the second to the Herbs and Trees, the third to the Ether.

4, 1 seqq. The daily Bali offering. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 5, 20 seqq.

9. According to the commentary the first of these three Balis has

10. Then he should offer another Bali in the bed or in the privy. That Bali belongs either to Kâma or to Manyu.

11. Then (another Bali) on the heap of sweepings; that (belongs) to the hosts of Rakshas.

12. The remnants of the Balis he should besprinkle with water, and should pour them out towards the south from right to left; they belong to the Fathers.

13. Let him sacrifice in the fire sitting.

14. Let him make the oblation to the Fathers sitting; the other (Balis he may offer) as it happens.

15. He should, however, offer those Balis himself as long as he stays at home.

16. Or another person who must be a Brâhmana (should offer them for him).

17. Both the husband and his wife (should offer them):

18. This is the rule for householders.

19. The wife in the evening, the man in the morning: thus (it is stated).

20. He should offer such Balis of all food whatever, be it prepared for the Fathers, or for auspicious to be offered near the water-pot, the second near the middle door of the house, the third (comp. Gautama V, 16) in the air. With the genitives the word samîpe is supplied. It is difficult to understand why the author, if his intention had been to state three places in which the Balis had to be offered, should have mentioned only two. Thus I believe that the right explanation is that of Professor Knauer, who takes madhyama in the sense of the middle post of the house (comp. III, 3, 31).

11. The commentary explains avasalavi here, as is frequently the case, by pitṛitīrthēna. I agree with the opinion pronounced in the Petersburg Dictionary, in rejecting this explanation.

19. Comp. Manu III, 121.

purposes (for instance, for being offered to Brāhmaṇas), or for (ordinary) purposes.

21. Only in the case of a sacrifice (this rule) ceases.

22. If rice and barley are prepared for one and the same meal, he should, having offered (Balis) of the one or the other (kind of food), consider his duty as fulfilled.

23. If the food is cooked at different times for one meal, he should perform this Bali ceremony only once.

24. If food is prepared at different places for one family, he should perform this Bali ceremony only from (the food which is prepared in) the kitchen belonging to the householder.

25. However (of the persons belonging to the family) he whose food becomes ready before (that of the householder), (that person) should offer the prescribed portion in the fire, and give to a Brāhmaṇa his share (of the food), and then should eat himself.

26. He whose (food becomes ready) after (that of the householder), should only eat.

27. Here they say also :

28. 'At the end of that offering of Balis let him pronounce a wish. Then it will be fulfilled to him.'

29. He himself, however, should offer the Āsasya Bali, from the barley(-harvest) till the rice(-harvest), and from the rice(-harvest) till the barley(-harvest). This is called the Āsasya Bali.

22. Kāla I take, as the commentator does, for bhoganakāla.

23. Here again kāla occurs in the same sense. Comp. Khādīra-Grīhya I, 5, 34.

29. Khādīra-Grīhya I, 5, 37. The barley-harvest is in the hot season, the rice-harvest in autumn (see Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, 243). The sacrificer offers barley from the barley-harvest till the rice-harvest; and rice from the rice-harvest till the barley-harvest.

30. Thus he obtains long life.

31. When a donation has been made, he should offer a Bali of chaff, of the scum of boiled rice, and of water. This is sacred to Rudra. This is sacred to Rudra.

KĀNDIKĀ 5.

1. Now at the times of the new moon and of the full moon (the following ceremonies are performed).

2. Let him fast on that full-moon day (when the full moon rises) at the meeting (of day and night).

3. The following day, according to some (teachers).

4. And on that day on which the moon is not seen, (he should fast, considering it) as the new-moon day.

5. The ends of the half-months are the time for fasting, the beginnings for sacrifice.

6. With the sacrificial food of the new-moon

This Bali is called â-sasya, because it is offered until (â) the next crop (sasya) is ripe. As to the regulation that the sacrificer has to offer it himself, compare above, Sûtras 15-19.

31. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 5, 30. The repetition of the last words makes it probable that this Sûtra was at one time considered the end of the first book. Comp. Introduction, p. 11.

5. Description of the sacrifices of the full and new moon. Paradigm of the regular Sthâlîpâka offering. The first twelve Sûtras of this chapter have been translated by Professor Weber, Ueber den Vedakalender namens Jyotisham, pp. 50 seq.

2. See the note below at Sûtra 10.

3. With these two Sûtras, 'sandhyâm paurnamâsîm upavaset; uttarâm ity eke,' a passage should be compared which is identically found in the Aitareya (VII, 11), and in the Kaushîtaka Brâhmaṇa (III, 1): pûrvâm paurnamâsîm upavased iti Paingyam, uttarâm iti Kaushîtakam.

6. The month is reckoned here, as is usually done, as beginning with the fortnight of the increasing moon.

sacrifice he celebrates the first half (of the month), with that of the full-moon sacrifice the second.

7. Full-moon is the greatest distance of sun and moon ; new-moon is their nearest approach.

8. That day on which the moon is not seen, that he should take as the day of new-moon.

9. Sometimes he may also while (the moon) is (still) visible (accept it as the day of new-moon) ; for (already then the moon) has made its way.

10. The time of full-moon is reckoned in three ways : (when the full moon rises at) the meeting (of day and night), or when it rises after sunset, or when it stands high (in the sky at sunset).

11. Now on what day it becomes full—

12. The doctrine on this point has to be studied

7. Here begins a new exposition of the question of full and new moon which stands independently by the side of the former sections, and which Gobhila has not taken much care to weld together with them. Comp. Sūtra 10 with Sūtras 2 and 3, and Sūtra 8 with Sūtra 4.

10. The first of the three times is that mentioned in Sūtra 2. It seems to me not very safe to interpret sandhyâ in that modern sense, in which sandhi is used, for instance, in the verse quoted by Mādhava, Weber, Jyotisha 51, so that it designates the meeting-point of the bright and of the dark fortnight ('āvartane yadâ sandhiḥ parvapratipador bhavet,' &c.). If sandhyâ were that, we should expect that the same word would occupy a similar position in the definition of amāvāsyâ. I prefer, therefore, with the commentary, to understand sandhyâ in its ancient sense, as the time which divides day from night. Thus sandhyâ purnamâsî, the full-moon day, on which the moon rises at the meeting of day and night, stands in opposition to uttarâ purnamâsî (Sūtra 2), or to astamitoditâ (scil. purnamâsî, Sūtra 10), exactly in the same way as in the Brāhmaṇa passages quoted above (note on § 3) pūrvâ purnamâsî is opposed to uttarâ purnamâsî. The second and third cases are those of the full moon rising (shortly) after sunset, and of the moon becoming full when standing high in the sky.

separately. One should study it, or should ascertain (the exact time of) the Parvan from those who know it.

13. Now on the day which is the fast-day, on that day, in the forenoon, having offered his morning oblation, he besmears that surface on which the fire is placed, on all sides with cow-dung.

14. He then gets the pieces of wood ready (which are to be put on the fire)—of Khadira or of Palâsa wood.

15. If Khadira or Palâsa wood cannot be obtained, it may be wood—as far as it serves the purpose—of any tree, with the exception of Vibhîdaka, Tilvaka, Bâdhaka, Nîva, Nimba, Râgavriksha, Salmali, Aralu, Dadhittha, Kovidâra, Sleshmâtaka wood.

16. The Barhis consists of Kusa grass cut off at the points at which the blades diverge from the main stalk.

17. (The blades should be) cut off near the roots at (the ceremonies directed to) the Fathers.

18. If that (i. e. Kusa grass) cannot be obtained, (he may take) any kind of grass, with the exception of Sûka grass, of Saccharum reed, of such grass as is apt to break, of Balbaga grass, of Mutava, of Amphidonax reed, of Suntha.

19. (He should get ready the following things, viz.) Âgya, rice or barley to be cooked for the sacrifice, the pot in which the oblation of cooked rice (or barley) is prepared, the pot-ladle, the Sruva, the water fetched from a hidden place—

20. And the other things which we shall mention in the course of (our exposition of) the ritual.

19. As to anuguptâ âpah, see above, chap. 1, 9.

21. On that day he should not go away (from his house on a journey, &c.);

22. Even from a distant place he should return to his house.

23. (On that day) he may buy goods from others, but not sell (such goods).

24. Let him not speak much.

25. Let him strive to speak the truth.

26. In the afternoon husband and wife, after having bathed, should eat fast-day food which is pleasant to them. It should contain butter (and should be prepared) in the due way.

KĀNDIKĀ 6.

1. Thus has spoken Mānatantavya : 'Unoffered indeed becomes the offering of a man who does not eat fast-day food.

2. 'He becomes powerless. Hunger will attack him. He does not gain favour among people. His offspring will be perverse.

3. 'But he who eats fast-day food, becomes powerful. Hunger will not attack him. He gains

26. Khādīra-Gr̥hya II, 1, 4. 6. The commentary explains kusalena : it should be easy to digest. Comp. below, II, 1, 2 : (dārṇ kurvīta) lakṣaṇaprasastān kusalena.

6, 1. The teacher's name is spelt elsewhere Mānutantavya, which seems to be the more correct spelling. The Khādīra-Gr̥hya (II, 1, 5) has Mānadantavya. Dr. Knauer has called attention to several other blunders of the MSS., which are unusually frequent just in this passage. For I have no doubt that in spite of the unanimous agreement of the MSS. we are to change mānushyāhutir into mānushasyāhutir, and I think it very probable, to say the least, that in Sūtra 4 kāmāyetaupavasathikam should be corrected into kāmāyeyâtâm aupavasathikam, though here the singular could possibly be defended by very faithful believers in the authority of the MSS.

favour among people. His offspring will be still more blessed.

4. 'Therefore (husband and wife) should eat fast-day food which is pleasant to them.'

5. Let them sleep that night on the ground.

6. They should spend that night so as to alternate their sleep with waking, entertaining themselves with tales or with other discourse.

7. But they should avoid doing anything unholy (such as cohabiting together).

8. It is said, that when on a journey, he should not fast.

9. For (say they, in that case) the observance has to be kept by his wife.

10. Let him do (herein) what he likes.

11. In the same way also one who has set up the (Srauta) fires should fast—

12. And (he should observe) what is enjoined by the sacred tradition.

13. Now in the forenoon, after (the sacrificer) has offered his morning oblation, and has walked round the fire on its front side, and strewn to the south of the fire eastward-pointed Darbha grass—

14. (The Brahman) stations himself to the east of that (grass), facing the west, and with the thumb and the fourth finger of his left hand he takes one grass blade from the Brahman's seat and throws it away to the south-west, in the intermediate direction (between south and west), with (the words), 'Away has been thrown the dispeller of wealth.'

4. Or, which is pleasant to him? See the note on § 1.

7. Khâdira-Grihya II, 1, 7.

14. The ceremonies stated in this Sûtra have to be performed by the Brahman. This is stated in the commentary, and the com-

15. Having touched water, he then sits down on the Brahman's seat, with (the words), 'I sit down on the seat of wealth.'

16. Facing the fire he sits silently, raising his joined hands, till the end of the ceremony.

17. Let him speak (only) what refers to the due performance of the sacrifice.

18. Let him not speak what is unworthy of the sacrifice.

19. If he has spoken what is unworthy of the sacrifice, let him murmur a verse, or a Yagus, sacred to Vishnu.

20. Or let him only say, 'Adoration to Vishnu!'

21. If one wishes, however, to do himself the work both of the Hotri and of the Brahman, he should in the same way place on the Brahman's seat a parasol, or an outer garment, or a water-pot, or a parison of parallel texts leaves no doubt as to the correctness of this view. Thus Hiranyakesin says (I, 1): etasmin kâle brahmâ yagñopavitam kṛtvâpa âkamyâparenâgnim dakshinâtikramya brahmasadanât trinam nirasya, &c. Comp. also the corresponding passages of the Srauta ritual given by Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 17. I do not think it probable, however, that we should read brahmâsanât, so that it would be distinctly expressed by the text that the Brahman is the subject (comp. Dr. Knauer's Introduction, p. viii). For we read in this same Sûtra brahmâsanât trinam abhisamgrîhya; in Sûtra 15, brahmâsana upavisati; in Sûtra 21, brahmâsane nidhâya: of these passages it is in the second made probable by the sense, and it is certain in the third, that brahmâsana is to be understood as a compound equal to brahmasadana. Thus it would, in my opinion, be unnatural not to explain it in the same way also in the first passage. Parâvasu is opposed to Vasu (Sûtra 15) in the same way as some texts, for instance Âpastamba, oppose Parâgvasu to Arvâgvasu.

16 seqq. Khâdîra-Grîhya I, 1, 19 seqq.

21. 'In the same way' refers to the ceremonies stated in Sûtras bolster of Darbha grass, and should return in the same way (in which he has gone to the Brahman's seat), and then should perform the other (duties).

KÂNDIKÂ 7.

1. He then washes the mortar, the pestle, and the winnowing basket, strews to the west of the fire eastward-pointed Darbha grass, and puts (the mortar, &c.) on (that grass).

2. He then pours out, with a brazen vessel or with the pot in which the oblations of cooked rice are prepared, the grain destined for sacrifice, rice or barley—

3. Once pronouncing the name of the deity (to whom the offering will be made): 'Agreeable to such and such (a deity) I pour thee out;' twice (it is done) silently.

4. Then to the west, with his face turned eastward, he begins to husk the grain, with his right hand lying over the left.

5. After the grain has three times been winnowed, he should wash it thrice (if it is destined) for the gods, they say, twice, if for men, once, if for the Fathers.

6. Having put a (Darbha) purifier (into the pot

13 and 14. On the darbhaka/u or, as some MSS. read; darbhava/u, see Bloomfield's note on the Grihya-samgraha, I, 88, 89. Knauer gives darbhava/um without adding any various readings. Comp. Khâdîra-Grihya I, 1, 23.

7, 2, 3. Khâdîra-Grihya II, 1, 9.

4, 5. Comp. Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 29 seqq. Khâdîra-Grihya II, 1, 10-13.

6. Hillebrandt, p. 39.

in which the oblation is to be prepared), he should pour the grain (into it).

7. He should cook the mess of sacrificial food so that it is well cooked, stirring it up (with the pot-ladle) from left to right.

8. When it has been cooked, he should sprinkle (Āgrya) on it, should take it from the fire towards the north, and should again sprinkle (Āgrya) on it.

9. Having put wood on the fire, he should strew Kusa grass round it on all sides, to the east, to the south, to the north, to the west—

10. On all sides in three layers or in five layers—

11. Thick, so that always an uneven number (of blades) are put together.

12. (He should strew) eastward-pointed grass, covering the roots with the points.

13. Or he should strew it to the west (of the fire), and should draw (some of the grass which he has strewn) from the south end and (some) from the north end, in an easterly direction.

14. He should (arrange the grass so as to) lay the points of the southern blades uppermost.

15. This rule for strewing (grass) round (the fire is valid) for all (ceremonies) at which oblations are made.

16. Some lay also branches of Samī wood or of Parna wood round (the fire).

10. Khādīra-Grīhya I, 2, 10.

11. This seems to me the most probable translation of ayugmasamhatam, on which expression Dr. Knauer's note on pp. viii seq. of his Introduction should be compared. Comp. Hillebrandt, pp. 64 seq.

13-14. This is the same way of strewing the grass which is described in the Mānava-Grīhya I, 10, 4. 5; Khādīra-Grīhya I, 2, 9.

16. Comp. Grīhya-samgraha I, 85. 97.

17. To the north (of the fire) a Sruva full of water (is placed) : this is the Pranīta water ;

18. If there is (such water). Or it may be dispensed with, say some (teachers).

19. Having put the mess of cooked food on the Barhis, and put wood (on the fire), he prepares the Āgya.

20. (He may take) ghee, or oil made from Tila seeds, or curds, or milk, or rice gruel.

21. From that same Barhis (he takes two Darbha blades and) makes purifiers (of them), of the length of one span.

22. Putting an herb between (them and the instrument with which he cuts them), he cuts them off, not with his nail, with (the words), ' Purifiers are ye, sacred to Vishnu.'

23. He then wipes them with water, with (the words), ' By Vishnu's mind ye are purified.'

24. Having purified (the Āgya by pouring it into the Āgya pot, over which he has laid a Darbha purifier), he purifies it (in the pot) with the two northward - pointed purifiers (in the following way) :

25. Holding them with his two thumbs and fourth fingers, he purifies (the Āgya) three times, from west to east, once with the Yagus : ' May the god Savitri purify thee with this uninjured purifier, with the rays of the good sun ;' twice silently.

20. All the substances which are stated in this Sūtra can be considered as Āgya. Grihya-saṃgraha I, 106. 107.

21 seqq. Khādīra-Grihya I, 2, 12 seqq.

24. As to sampūyotpunāti, comp. Hiranyakesin I, 1, 1, 23 : pavitrāntarhite pātre pa ānīyopabilam pūrayitvodagagrābhyām pavitrābhyām trir utpūya . . .

26. He then should sprinkle them with water and should throw them into the fire.

27. Then, having put that Āgya on the fire, he should take it from (the fire) towards the north.

28. This is the way to prepare the Āgya.

KĀNDIKĀ 8.

1. To the east (is placed) the Āgya, to the west the mess of cooked food.

2. Having sprinkled (water) round (the fire) and poured Āgya on the mess of cooked food, he begins to sacrifice simply with the pot-ladle, picking out portions of the sacrificial food (without 'underspreading' and pouring Āgya over the Havis).

3. If he intends, however, to sacrifice so as to 'underspread' (the Havis with Āgya) and to pour (Āgya) over it, let him sacrifice first the two Āgya portions (in the following way) :

4. He should take four portions of Āgya—five portions (are taken) by the Bhr̥igus—and should sacrifice from west to east, on the northern side with (the formula), 'To Agni Svāhā!' on the southern side with (the words), 'To Soma Svāhā!'

5. He then cuts off (two or three Avadānas) from the Havis, having 'spread under' (Āgya).

6. (Two Avadānas) from the middle and from the east side, if he (belongs to the families who) make

8, 2. On the sprinkling of water round the fire, comp. above, chap. 3, 1 seq. On the technical meaning of upaghātam, see Bloomfield's note on Gr̥hya-samgraha Parisishā I, 111 (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XXXV, 568).

3 seq. Comp. Khādīra-Gr̥hya II, 1, 17.

6. Khādīra-Gr̥hya II, 1, 19 seq. The Upastarāṇa (Sūtra 5) and four Avadānas. (Three Avadānas) from the middle, from the east and from the west side, if (he belongs to those who) make five Avadānas.

7. He sprinkles (Āgya) on the cut-off portions.

8. He anoints the places from which he has cut them off (with Āgya) in order that the strength (of the Havis) may not be lost.

9. He should sacrifice over the middle of the fire with (the words), 'To Agni Svāhā!'—

10. Once or thrice, in that same way.

11. Now for the Svishtakṛit (oblation), after having 'spread under' (Āgya), he cuts off once a very big (Avadāna) from the eastern part of the northern part (of the Havis). Twice he should sprinkle (Āgya) on it.

12. But if he (belongs to the families who) make five Avadānas, he should 'spread under' twice, and cut off (the Avadāna), and sprinkle (Āgya) on it twice.

13. He does not anoint the place from which he has cut off, in order that the strength (of the Havis) may be lost.

14. With the words, 'To Agni Svishtakṛit the Abhigāra (Sūtra 7) are reckoned as two Avadānas, so that they form together with the two or three portions cut off from the Havis, four or five Avadānas respectively. On the difference of the families regarding the number of Avadānas, comp. Weber, Indische Studien, X, 95.

7 seqq. Comp. Khādīra-Gṛīhya II, 1, 21-24.

11. Comp. the corresponding regulations of the Srauta ritual at Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 117-119.

13. The same rule re-occurs in the Srauta ritual; Hillebrandt, l.l. 117, note 8.

14. The expression used here uttarārdhapūrvārdhe is also found in most of the corresponding passages of the Srauta ritual, Svâhâ ! ' he should sacrifice it over the eastern part of the northern part (of the fire).

15. He should sacrifice oblations of Âgya on (the chief oblations of cooked sacrificial food), with the Mahâvyâhr̥itis.

16. The insertion (stands) before the Svishṭakṛit (oblation).

17. If different sacrifices are performed together, there is only one sweeping (of the ground) round (the fire) (chap. 3, 1), one (putting of) fuel (on the fire) (chap. 7, 19), one Barhis, one sprinkling (of water) round (the fire) (chap. 8, 2), one Âgya, and one offering of the two Âgyabhâgas (chap. 8, 3).

18. Having cut off (the Avadânas) for all (the single sacrifices), he sacrifices the Svishṭakṛit oblation only once.

19. After he has sacrificed, he should throw that pot-ladle (which he has used in the preceding ceremonies) into the fire.

20. Or having washed it, he should take with it (the rest of the sacrificial food), and should eat that.

given by Hillebrandt, l.l. 119, note 3. The Khâdira-Gr̥hya has prâgudîk̥yâm.

15. If the chief oblations consist in Âgya, they are both preceded and followed by the Mahâvyâhr̥iti oblations. See below, chap. 9, Sûtra 27.

16. On the âvâpa (i. e. the special characteristic offerings of each sacrifice) see Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 9, 12, and the note there (vol. xxix, p. 28).

19. According to the commentary, etad would belong to sauvishṭakṛitam (Sûtra 18): 'After he has sacrificed that, he should throw the pot-ladle into the fire.' The comparison of Baudhâyaṇa I, 17, 23, atraitan mekshazam âhavanîye-nupraharati (Hillebrandt, p. 119, note 3), shows that the commentary is wrong, and that etad belongs to mekshazam.

21. The Sruva he should not throw into the fire, say some (teachers).

22. By one who has not set up the sacred fires, the mess of cooked food should be offered to Agni at the festivals both of the full and of the new moon.

23. To Agni, or to Agni and Soma, by one who has set them up, at the full-moon (sacrifice) ;

24. To Indra, or to Indra and Agni, or to Mahendra, at the new-moon (sacrifice).

25. Or also one who has set up the sacred fires, should offer it to Agni at the festivals both of the full and of the new moon.

26. Having put a piece of wood (on the fire), and having afterwards sprinkled (water) round (the fire), he performs the Yagñavâstu ceremony (in the following way) :

27. From that same Barhis he should take a handful of Kusa grass, and should dip it thrice into the Âgya or into the Havis, the points, the middle, and the roots, with (the words), 'May the birds come, licking what has been anointed.'

28. He then should besprinkle that (handful of grass) with water, and should throw it into the fire with (the verse), 'Thou who art the lord of cattle, Rudra, who walkest with the lines (of cattle), the manly one: do no harm to our cattle; let this be offered to thee! Svâhâ!'

29. This (ceremony) they call Yagñavâstu.

22-25. Comp. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 2, 1-4.

26-29. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 1, 26 seq.; Grîhya-samgraha II, 1 seq.

27. The expression tata eva barhishaḥ has occurred already at chap. 7, 21. The Mantra re-occurs in Vâg. Samhitâ II, 16e, &c.

KÂNDIKÂ 9.

1. He then should take away the remnants of the Havis in a northern direction, should take them out (of the vessel in which they are), and should give them to the Brahman.

2. He should try to satiate him.

3. They say indeed with regard to sacrifice : 'Through the Brâhmana's being satiated (with sacrificial food) I become satiated myself.'

4. Then (he should give to the Brahman) what other food has just become ready.

5. Then he should try to gain the favour of Brâhmanas by (gifts of) food.

6. A full vessel constitutes the fee for the sacrifice ; that he should give to the Brahman.

7. A brazen vessel or a wooden cup which has been filled with food, with prepared food or with raw food, or even only with fruits : this they call a full vessel.

8. The Brahman is the only officiating priest at the Pâkayagñas.

9. (The sacrificer) himself is Hotri.

10. A full vessel (see Sûtra 7) is the lowest sacrificial fee at a Pâkayagñâ.

11. The highest is unlimited.

12. Thus Sudâs Paigavana, after having offered the sacrifice of a mess of cooked food to Indra and 9, 1. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 1, 29.

6 seqq. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 1, 30. 31.

8, 9. The native authorities divide these two Sûtras after ritvik ; I propose to divide after pâkayagñeshu.

12. The commentary here refers to the rule of the Drâhyâyana-sûtra (= Lâtyâyana VIII, 1, 2) : samkhyâmâtre ka dakshinâ gâvah.

Agni, gave one hundred thousand (cows as the sacrificial fee).

13. Now if he should not be able to get for the morning or for the evening oblation, or for the sacrifices of the full or of the new moon at his (sacred) domestic fire, any substance fit for sacrifice or a person who could sacrifice (instead of himself, if he is prevented) : what ought he to do ?

14. Until the evening oblation the (time for the) morning oblation is not elapsed, nor the (time for the) evening oblation until the morning oblation. Until the new moon the (time for the) sacrifice of the full moon is not elapsed, nor the (time for the) sacrifice of the new moon until the full moon.

15. During that interval he should try to obtain sacrificial food or to find a sacrificer.

16. Or (if he does not succeed in this) he should cook fruits or leaves of trees or herbs which are sacrificially pure, and should sacrifice them.

17. Or he should at least sacrifice water ; thus has said Pākayagña, the son of Idā. For (even if he offers only water) the sacrifice has been performed.

18. And there is an expiation for one who has not sacrificed.

14 seq. Khādīra-Gr̥ihya II, 2, 5 seq. ; Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥ihya I, 3, 6.

16 seqq. Khādīra-Gr̥ihya II, 2, 10 seqq. In this teacher Pākayagña, son of Idā, whose opinion on the performance of certain Pākayagñas is here stated, we have of course to see a fictitious sage of the same kind with the well-known R̥ishi Pragātha, to whom the authorship of a number of Sūktas in the Pragātha book (Rig-veda, Maṇḍala VIII) is ascribed.

18, 19. By the repetition of iti these Sūtras seem to be characterised as continuing the statement of Pākayagña's opinion ; comp. Dr. Knauer's Introduction, p. xviii. As to Sūtra 18, comp. Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥ihya I, 3, 9.

19. And, (says Pākayagña,) a Brāhmaṇa should not omit to keep his vow.

20. Here they say also :

21. He should keep (his vow) during that time in which he does not sacrifice, by abstaining from food.

22. When he then has obtained (the necessary substances for sacrificing), he should make up for the (omitted) oblations.

23. For thus also his vow has been duly kept.

24. These rules (which have been given with regard to the sacrifices of the full and new moon) are valid for the Havis oblations which will be stated hereafter.

25. After the end of the Mantra follows the word Svāhā.

26. At Āgya oblations he should only prepare that Āgya (chap. 7, 28) and should sacrifice it, picking out portions of it. (He should) not (sacrifice) the two Āgya portions nor the Svishṭakṛit.

27. At Āgya oblations he should, if no special rule is given, sacrifice with the Mahāvyaḥṛtis before and after (the chief ceremonies).

22. 'He should count the omitted (oblations), should pour the corresponding number of oblations into his vessel, and should sacrifice them in the due way all at once with one Mantra. In the same way also the other oblations (belonging to other gods).' Karmapradīpa.

24. Is Havis here used as opposed to Āgya (Sūtra 26), in the same way in which Kātyāyana says (Sraut. I, 9, 1. 20): 'vr̥h̥n̄ yavān vā havishi; ubhayata āgyam havishā?' Comp. below, III, 8, 10; Āsvalāyana-Gr̥hya I, 10, 26.

25. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 1, 15.

26. As to upaghātam, comp. the note on chap. 8, 2.

27. Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya I, 12, 13; Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 3, 12-13, where the traditional division of the Sūtras differs from that which is supported by tradition in the text of Gobhila. Gobhila has used

28. As at the wedding, thus at the tonsure (of the child's head), the initiation (of the Brahma-kârin), and at the cutting of the beard.

29. At the end of the ceremony the Vâmadevya is sung for the sake of averting evil. The Vâmadevya is sung for the sake of averting evil.

End of the First Prapâthaka.

the word âgyâhutishu in the beginning of Sûtra 26, and it would have been superfluous if he had repeated it in connection with the words nâgyabhângau na svish/akrîṭ. In the corresponding Sûtras of the Khândira the case was different, and there the words nâgyabhângau na svish/akrîṭ inevitably required the addition of a word like âgyâhutishu, by which to show which class of sacrifices it was which required no Âgyabhângas and no Svish/akrîṭ. The following word in the Khândira text, however, anâdese, should be referred, against tradition, to Sûtra 13, as is shown by the comparison of Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya I, 12, 13.

28. At the wedding, oblations are made first with the three single Mahâvyâhrîtis, afterwards with the Mahâvyâhrîtis together; see below, II, 1, 25. 26. The tonsure of the child's head is treated of below, II, 9; the initiation (upanayana), II, 10; the cutting of the beard, III, 1. Comp. Khândira-Grihya, I, 3, 10.

29. Apavṛitte karmani should be corrected into apavṛikte karmani, as has been noticed in the Petersburg Dictionary, s. v. apa-vart. The Sâṅkhâyana-Grihya I, 2, 1 says karmâpavarge.

PRAPÂTHAKA II, KÂNDIKÂ 1.

1. Under a propitious Nakshatra let him take a wife—

2. Who should possess the auspicious characteristics in due way.

3. If he can find no such (woman, he should take) earth-clods—

4. From an altar, a furrow, a pool, a cow-stable, a place where four roads meet, a gambling-place, a place where corpses are burnt, and from sterile soil ;

5. A ninth (earth-clod) mixed of all.

6. (These he should make) equal (and should) make marks at them.

7. Taking them in his hand he should offer them to the girl, and (reciting the formula) : ‘ Right alone is the first ; right nobody oversteps ; on right this earth is founded. May N. N. become this universe ! ’ —he should pronounce her name and should say : ‘ Take one of these. ’

8. If she takes one of the first four (clods), he should marry her,

1, 1-4. Description of the wedding. Comp. Indische Studien, V, 288, 305 seq. ; 312 seq. ; 368 seq.

2. In translating kusalena I have been guided by the comparison of I, 5, 26 (comp. Böhlingk-Roth, s.v. kusala). The commentary understands the Sûtra in a different way. He should take a woman who possesses auspicious characteristics commended by one versed (kusala) in the characteristics of women. If he can find no such person who is able to judge, he should, &c. (Sûtra 3).

4. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Grhyâ I, 5, 5 ; Grhyâ-saṃgraha II, 21-23.

7. Âsvalâyana-Grhyâ, l. l. § 4.

9. And according to some (teachers) also, if (she takes) the mixed one.

10. After she has been washed with Klîtaka, barley and beans, a friend should besprinkle her three times at her head, so that her whole body becomes wet, with Surâ of first quality, with (the formula), 'Kâma! I know thy name. Intoxication thou art by name,' &c. (Mantra-Brâhmaṇa I, 1, 2). (In the passage of the formula), 'Bring hither N.N.,' he should pronounce the husband's name. (The Mantras should have) the word Svâhâ at their end. With the two following verses he should wash her private parts.

11. That has to be done by (female) relatives (of the bride).

12. At the wedding wood has been put on the fire to the east of the house, on a surface besmeared (with cow-dung).

13. Then one of the people who assist at the wedding, fills a cup with 'firm' water, and having walked with the water-pot round the fire on its front side, silent, wrapped in his robe, he stations himself to the south (of the fire), facing the north.

14. Another person with a goad (walks in the same way and stations himself in the same place).

9. See Sûtra 5.

10. 'With Klîtaka,' &c., means, with water into which Klîtaka, &c., has been thrown; comp. Grihya-samgraha II, 15. 'Surâ of first quality' is Surâ prepared from molasses; see Grihya-samgraha II, 16. Comp., however, also Grihya-samgraha II, 41.

13. Khâdira-Grihya I, 3, 5; Grihya-samgraha II, 25. 26. 'Firm water' seems to be water which does not dry up. The Grihya-samgraha says: 'Water that has its smell, its colour, and its taste, which is in great rivers, in wells and other receptacles, and in ponds: such water is called "firm;" this is the fixed meaning.' Comp. Bloomfield's note, Z. D. M. G. XXXV, 574.

15. They place roasted grain mixed with Samī leaves, to the amount of four handfuls, in a winnowing basket behind the fire,

16. And an upper mill-stone.

17. Now (the girl) whose hand he is going to seize, has been washed, (her whole body) including her head.

18. The husband should put on her a (new) garment which has not yet been washed, with the verse, 'They who spun' (Mantra-Brāhmaṇa I, 1, 5), and with (the verse), 'Put on her, dress her' (I. 1. 6).

19. Leading forward (from the house to the sacred fire, the bride) who is wrapped in her robe and wears the sacrificial cord over her left shoulder, he should murmur (the verse), 'Soma gave her to the Gandharva' (MB. I, 1, 7).

20. While she, to the west of the fire, pushes forward with her foot a rush-mat or something else of that kind, veiled (with clothes), he should make her say : 'May the way which my husband goes, be open to me.'

21. If she does not murmur (these words out of shame, &c.), he should murmur (them, saying), 'To her' (instead of 'To me').

22. She should make the end of the rush-mat (Sūtra 20) reach the end of the Barhis.

23. On the east end of the rush-mat she sits down to the right of the bridegroom.

17-19. Khādīra-Grīhya I, 3, 6. Yagñopavītinīm in Sūtra 19 means, according to the commentary, that she wears her outer garment arranged like the sacrificial cord, over her left shoulder ; for women are not allowed to wear the sacrificial cord itself.

20. Grīhya-saṃgraha II, 27 seq.

24. While she touches his right shoulder with her right hand, he sacrifices six oblations of Âgya with (the verse), 'May Agni go as the first,' and the following (verses) (MB. I, 1, 9-14)—

25. And (three oblations) with the Mahâvyâhritis, one by one;

26. A fourth with (the four Mahâvyâhritis) together.

KÂNDIKÂ 2.

1. After the sacrifice they both arise.

2. The husband passes behind her back, stations himself to the south, with his face turned to the north, and seizes the woman's joined hands.

3. (Standing) to the east (of the girl) her mother or her brother, having taken the roasted grain, should make the bride tread on the stone with the tip of her right foot.

4. The bridegroom murmurs: 'Tread on this stone' (MB. I, 2, 1).

5. Her brother filling once his joined hands with roasted grain, pours it into the bride's joined hands.

6. After (Âgya) has been spread under and poured over (the fried grain), she sacrifices that in the fire without opening her joined hands, with (the verse which the bridegroom [?] recites), 'This woman says' (MB. I, 2, 2).

7. (The verses), 'The god Aryaman,' and, 'Pû-

24-26. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 3, 11-13.

2, 1 seqq. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 3, 16 seqq.

3. The roasted grain is that mentioned chap. 1, 15, the stone, Sûtra 16.

6. Comp. Grîhya-saṃgraha II, 34.

7. On the repetitions of the lāgâhoma, see below, Sûtras 9. 10.

shan' (l. 1. 3. 4) (are repeated) at the two following (oblations of fried grain).

8. After that sacrifice the husband, passing (behind her back), returns in the same way, and leads her round the fire so that their right sides are turned towards it, or a Brâhmaṇa versed in the Mantras (does the same), with (the verse), 'The maid from the fathers' (MB. I, 2, 5).

9. After she has thus been lead round, she stands as before (Sûtras 1. 2), and treads (on the stone) as before (Sûtra 3), and he murmurs the (Mantra) as before (Sûtra 4), and (her brother) pours (the fried grain into her hands) as before (Sûtra 5), and she sacrifices as before (Sûtra 6).

10. In the same way three times.

11. After (she) has poured the remnants (of the fried grain) into the fire, they make (her) step forward in a north-easterly direction with (the formula), 'For sap with one step' (MB. I, 2, 6. 7).

12. She should put forward her right foot (first) and should follow with the left.

13. (The bridegroom) should say (to her), 'Do not put the left (foot) before the right.'

14. The lookers-on he should address with (the verse), 'Auspicious ornaments wears this woman' (l. 1. 8).

15. To the west of the fire the water-carrier follows (their way) and besprinkles the bridegroom on his forehead, and also the other one (i. e. the bride),

8. As to the words 'in the same way,' see the second Sûtra of this chapter.

14-16. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 3, 27-31.

15. Comp. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya I, 12, 5 note (vol. xxix, p. 33). The water-carrier is the person mentioned chap. 1, 13.

with this verse (which the bridegroom murmurs), 'May (the Visve devās) anoint (or, unite)' (l. 1. 9).

16. After she has been (thus) besprinkled, he puts up her joined hands with his left hand, seizes with his right hand her right hand with the thumb, her hand being turned with the palm upwards, and murmurs these six verses referring to the seizing of (a girl's) hand, 'I seize thy hand' (MB. I, 2, 10-15).

17. When (these verses) are finished, they carry her away—

KĀNDIKĀ 3.

1. To a convenient house of a Brāhmaṇa, which is situated in a north-easterly direction.

2. There wood has been put on the (nuptial) fire.

3. To the west of the fire a red bull's hide has been spread out, with the neck to the east and with the hair outside.

4. On that they make the woman, who has to keep silence, sit down.

5. And (there) she remains sitting until the stars appear.

6. When (somebody) has said that a star has appeared, (the husband) sacrifices six oblations of Āgrya with the (six verses) commencing with (the verse), 'In the junctions of the lines' (l. 1. I, 3, 1-6).

7. The remnants of each oblation he should pour out over the bride's head.

8. After the sacrifice they arise, go out (of the house), and he shows her the 'firm star' (i. e. the polar-star).

3, 1 seqq. Khādira-Grīhya I, 4, 1 seqq.

3. This is the standing description of the bull's hide used at the Srauta or Grīhya ceremonies; comp. Sāṅkhāyana I, 16, 1 note.

9. (Repeating the formula): 'Firm art thou. May I, N. N., become firm in the house of N. N., my husband'—she should pronounce her husband's and her own name.

10. And (he shows her besides the star) Arundhatī.

11. (She says): 'I (N. N.) am held fast,' &c., as above (Sūtra 9).

12. He then addresses her with the verse, 'Firm is the sky' (MB. I, 3, 7).

13. After she has been addressed (thus), she respectfully calls her Guru by his Gotra name.

14. Thus she breaks her silence.

15. From that time through a period of three nights they should both avoid eating saline or pungent food, and should sleep together on the ground without having conjugal intercourse.

16. Here, they say, an Argha reception (should be offered to the young husband).

17. Some say (that this reception should be offered) when (the bridegroom and his companions) have arrived (at the house of the bride's father).

18. The first food which he eats, should be food

10. Āsvalāyana-Gr̥hya I, 7, 22.

11. The play on words (Arundhatī—ruddhā) is untranslatable.

13. 'Her Guru' means, according to the commentary, her husband. The commentary quotes the well-known sentence: patir eko guruḥ strīnām. Perhaps we may also take the Guru for the Brāhmaṇa in whose house they stay. Comp. also chap. 4, 11.

14. Comp. above, Sūtra 4.

16, 17. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 4, 7. 8. Comp. Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya I, 12, 10 note. The Gobhila commentary states that this Argha reception should be offered by the bride's father. On the different opinions of the Sāṅkhāyana commentaries see the note quoted.

18. Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 4, 10.

fit for sacrifice, over which he has murmured (the verses quoted in Sûtra 21).

19. Or he should prepare on the following day a mess of cooked food, of which they eat together.

20. The deities to whom it belongs, are, Agni, Pragâpati, the Visve devâs, and Anumati.

21. Having taken that food out (of the vessel in which it is), and having spread it out, he should touch one part of it with his hand, with (the verses), 'With the tie of food, with the jewel' (MB. I, 3, 8-10).

22. After he has eaten, and has given the rest to the wife, (they may do) what they like.

23. A cow is the sacrificial fee.

KÂNDIKÂ 4.

1. When she mounts the chariot, let him murmur the verse, 'Adorned with Kimsuka flowers, of Salmali wood' (MB. I, 3, 11).

2. On the way he should address crossways, rivers and unevennesses (of the soil), big trees, and burial grounds, with (the verse), 'May no waylayers meet us' (ibid. 12).

3. If the axle breaks, or something that is bound gets loose, or if the chariot is overturned, or if some other accident happens, they should put wood on the fire which they carry with themselves, should

22. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 4, 11. 14.

23. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 4, 6.

4. The way of the bridegroom with the bride to their new home, and their arrival.

2. Perhaps a part of this Sûtra is based on a half Sloka, the two parts of which have been transposed in the prose version, mahâ-vrikshân smasânam ka nadîs ka vishamâni ka.

3. Comp. Pâraskara I, 10.

make oblations (of Āgya) with the Vyâhr̥tis, should procure a new piece (instead of that which has been damaged), and should besmear it with the remnants of the Āgya (that has been offered), with (the verse), 'He who without binding' (Sâma-veda I, 244).

4. Having sung the Vâmadevya, he should mount (again).

5. When they have arrived, the Vâmadevya (is sung).

6. When (the bride) has reached the house, Brâhma women of good character, whose husbands and sons are living, make her descend (from the chariot), and make her sit down on a bull's hide with (the verse which the husband recites), 'Here, ye cows, bring forth calves' (MB. I, 3, 13).

7. They should place a boy in her lap.

8. Into the joined hands of that (boy) they should throw lotus-roots(?),

9. Or fruits.

10. After she has made that boy rise, she sacrifices the eight 'firm' Āgya oblations with (the formula), 'Here is steadiness' (MB. I, 3, 14).

11. When she has finished, she puts a piece of wood (on the fire) and respectfully salutes the Gurus, according to seniority, with their Gotra names. Then they may do what they like.

8. The explanation of sakalo/a as sâlûka is doubtful. Prof. Weber believes that we ought to read sakalosh/ân (lumps of dung); see Indische Studien, V, 371.

10. 'Firm' oblations seem to mean oblations by which the wife obtains a firm abode in her husband's house. Comp. Indische Studien, V, 376.

KÂNDIKÂ 5.

1. Now (follow) the ceremonies of the fourth day.
2. Having put wood on the fire, he four times sacrifices expiatory Âgya oblations with (the formula), 'Agni! Thou art expiation' (MB. I, 4, 1)—
3. (And with the same formula), putting instead of Agni, Vâyu, Kandra, and Sûrya ;
4. A fifth oblation (with the names of the four gods) together, changing (in the Mantra the singular) into the plural.
5. The remnants of each oblation he should pour into a water-pot.
6. With that (Âgya) they besmear her body, including her hair and nails, remove (that water and Âgya by rubbing her), and wash her.
7. After three nights have passed, they should cohabit, according to some (teachers).
8. When she has had her monthly illness and the blood has ceased to flow, that is the time for cohabiting.
9. With his right hand he should touch her secret parts with the verse, 'May Vishnu make thy womb

5, 1. The Katurthîkarman.

2, 3. Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gṛīhya I, 18, 3; Khâdira-Gṛīhya I, 4, 12.

4. I.e. instead of prâyasâkṣitte (expiation) he uses the plural prâyasâkṣittayaḥ; and he says, 'you are the expiations of the gods,' &c.

6. Khâdira-Gṛīhya I, 4, 13. Hrâsayitvâ literally means, 'having shortened her.' She is 'shortened' by the removing of the substance with which they have besmeared her (hrâsayitvâ udvartanâdinâ tad abhyaḅganam apanīya, says the commentary). Comp. on the technical meaning of hrâsana the Gṛīhya-saṃgraha II, 38, 8-10; Khâdira-Gṛīhya I, 4, 15. 16.

ready' (MB. I, 4, 6), and with that, 'Give conception, Sinvāli' (l. 1. 7).

10. When those two verses are finished, they cohabit.

KĀNDIKĀ 6.

1. The beginning of the third month of pregnancy is the time for the Pumsavana (i. e. the ceremony to secure the birth of a son).

2. In the morning, after she has been washed, sitting on northward-pointed Darbha grass, (all over her body) including her head, she sits down to the west of the fire on northward-pointed Darbha grass, facing the east.

3. Her husband, standing behind her, should grasp down with his right hand over her right shoulder, and should touch the uncovered place of her navel with the verse, 'The two men, Mitra and Varuna' (MB. I, 4, 8).

4. Then they may do what they like.

5. Then afterwards (the following ceremony should be performed).

6. In a north-easterly direction, having bought for three times seven barley corns or beans a Nyagrodha shoot which has fruits on both sides, which is not dry and not touched by worms, he should set that up.

7. (He buys it with the Mantras):

6, 1 seq. The Pumsavana. Khādīra-Grīhya II, 2, 17 seq. On âdisadese the commentary says, âdisadese âdisamīpapradese prathame trīṭyabhāge, ity etat. âdimadesa iti pāṭhe vyakta evārthaḥ. To me it seems probable that âdimadesa is the true reading.

7. The first Mantra consists of seven sections; with each of

‘If thou belongest to Soma, I buy thee for the king Soma.

‘If thou belongest to Varuṇa, I buy thee for the king Varuṇa.

‘If thou belongest to the Vasus, I buy thee for the Vasus.

‘If thou belongest to the Rudras, I buy thee for the Rudras.

‘If thou belongest to the Âdityas, I buy thee for the Âdityas.

‘If thou belongest to the Maruts, I buy thee for the Maruts.

‘If thou belongest to the Visve devâs, I buy thee for the Visve devâs.’

8. He should set it up with (the Mantra), ‘Ye herbs, being well-minded, bestow strength on this (shoot); for it will do its work.’ Then he should put grass around it, should take it, and place it in the open air.

9. Having washed a nether mill-stone, a student or a (wife) addicted (to her husband), a person who is a Brâhmaṇa by birth (only and not by learning), or a girl, pounds (that Nyagrodha shoot) without moving backward (the stone with which she pounds it).

10. In the morning, after she has been washed, sitting on northward-pointed Darbha grass, (all over her body), including her head, she lies down to the west of the fire on northward-pointed Darbha grass, with her head to the east.

11. Her husband, standing behind her, should seize (the pounded Nyagrodha shoot) with the these sections he should, according to the commentary, give three barley corns or beans to the owner of the Nyagrodha tree, or put them down at the root of the tree.

thumb and the fourth finger of his right hand, and should insert it into her right nostril with the verse, 'A man is Agni, a man is Indra' (MB. I, 4, 9).

12. Then they should do what they like.

KÂNDIKÂ 7.

1. Now (follows) the Sîmantakarana (or parting of the hair), in her first pregnancy,—

2. In the fourth, or sixth, or eighth month (of her pregnancy).

3. In the morning, after she has been washed, sitting on northward-pointed Darbha grass, (all over her body), including her head, she sits down to the west of the fire on northward-pointed Darbha grass, facing the east.

4. Her husband, standing behind her, ties (to her neck) an Udumbara branch with an even number of unripe fruits on it, with (the verse), 'Rich in sap is this tree' (MB. I, 5, 1).

5. He then parts her hair upwards (i. e. beginning from the front), the first time with Darbha blades, with (the word), 'Bhûh!' the second time with (the word), 'Bhuvaḥ!' the third time with (the word), 'Svaḥ!'—

6. Then with (a splint of) Vîratara (wood) with this verse, 'With which Aditi's' (ibid. 2);

7, 1 seq. The Sîmantakarana or Sîmantonnayana. Khândira-Gr̥hya II, 2, 24 seq.

3. This Sûtra is identical with chap. 6, 2.

4. salâṭugrathnam should be emended, in my opinion, so as to read salâṭugrapsam. Comp. Pâraskara I, 15, 4: yugmena salâṭugrapsenaudumbareṇa. Âsvalâyana I, 14, 4: yugmena salâṭuglapsena. Hiranyakesin II, 1: salâṭugrapsam upasamgr̥hya.

7. Then with a full spindle, with this verse, 'I invoke Rākā' (ibid. 3. 4);

8. And with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, with (the verse), 'Which are thy blessings, O Rākā' (ibid. 5).

9. (There should be prepared) a mess of boiled rice with sesamum seeds, covered with ghee; at that he should make her look.

10. Let him say to her, 'What dost thou see?' and make her answer, 'Offspring!'

11. That (food) she should eat herself.

12. Brāhmaṇa women should sit by her side, pronouncing auspicious words (such as), 'A mother of valiant sons! A mother of living sons! A living husband's wife!'

13. Now (follows) the sacrifice for the woman in labour.

14. When the child is appearing, he strews (Darbha grass) round the fire and sacrifices two Āgyā oblations with this verse, 'She who athwart' (MB. I, 5, 6), and with (the verse), 'Viparṣit has taken away' (ibid. 7).

15. 'A male he will be born, N. N. by name'—(in this passage of the last verse) he pronounces a name.

16. What that (name is), is kept secret.

17. When they announce to him that a son has been born, he should say, 'Delay still cutting off the navel-string and giving him the breast.'

18. Let him have rice and barley-grains pounded in the same way as the (Nyagrodha) shoot.

13 seq. The *soshyantī*homa. Khādīra-Grīhya II, 2, 28 seq.

17 seq. Ceremonies for the new-born child (Gātakarman). Khādīra-Grīhya II, 2, 32 seq.

18. See above, chap. 6, 9.

19. Seizing (that pounded substance) with the thumb and the fourth finger of his right hand, he smears it on the tongue of the boy, with the formula, 'This order' (MB. I, 5, 8).

20. In the same way the production of intelligence (is performed). He should give to eat (to the child) clarified butter.

21. Or he takes it with gold (i. e. with a golden spoon) and sacrifices it on the face of the boy with this verse, 'May Mitra and Varuṇa bestow intelligence on thee' (MB. I, 5, 9), and with (the verse), 'The lord of the seat, the wonderful' (Sâma-veda I, 171).

22. Let him say, 'Cut off the navel-string,' and, 'Give the breast (to the child).'

23. From that time let him not touch (his wife) until ten nights have passed.

KÂNDIKÂ 8.

1. On the third (Tithi) of the third bright fortnight after his birth, in the morning the father has the child washed, including his head, and after sunset, when the evening-red has disappeared, he worships (the moon), holding up his joined hands.

2. Then the mother, having dressed the son in a clean garment, hands him, from south to north, with his face turned to the north, to the father.

19. Comp. above, chap. 6, 11.

23. The impurity (asauṭa) of the mother lasts through ten days after her confinement; comp. the note on Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya I, 25, 1 (vol. xxix, p. 51).

8, 1 seq. Khâdira-Gr̥hya II, 3, 1 seq.

3. She then passes behind his back and stations herself to the north (of her husband).

4. He then murmurs (the three verses), 'Thy heart, O thou whose hair is well parted' (MB. I, 5, 10-12), and after he has, with the words (standing at the end of verse 12), 'That this son may not come to harm (and thus be torn) from his mother'—

5. Handed him, from south to north, to his mother, they may do what they like.

6. Then in the following bright fortnights (at the time) stated above (Sûtra 1), the father, filling his joined hands with water and turning his face towards the moon, worships it—

7. Letting (the water) flow (out of his joined hands) once with the Yagus, 'What in the moon' (MB. I, 5, 13), and twice silently. Then they may do what they like.

8. When ten nights have elapsed after (the child's) birth, or a hundred nights, or one year, the Nâma-dheyakarana (or giving a name to the child, is performed).

9. He who is going to perform (that ceremony—the father or a representative of the father), sits down to the west of the fire on northward-pointed Darbha grass, facing the east.

10. Then the mother, having dressed the son in a clean garment, hands him, from south to north,

6. I am not sure about the meaning of prathamoddish/a eva. I have translated according to the commentary, which has the following note: prathamoddish/a eva prathamam yañ kâla uddish/añ kathitañ tasminn eva kâle trîtyâyâm ity etat.—The commentary then mentions a reading prathamodita eva, in which udita may either be derived from vad or from ud-i.

8 seq. The Nâmakarana. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 3, 6 seq.

10, 11. Comp. above, Sûtras 2. 3.

with his face turned to the north, to the performer (of the ceremony).

11. She then passes behind his back and sits down to the north (of him), on northward-pointed Darbha grass.

12. He then sacrifices to Pragâpati, to the Tithi (of the child's birth), to the Nakshatra (of the child's birth), and to the (presiding) deity (of that Tithi and of that Nakshatra).

13. He then murmurs the Mantra, 'Who art thou? What person art thou?' (MB. I, 5, 14. 15), touching the sense-organs at (the boy's) head.

14. In (the passage of the Mantra), 'Enter upon the month, that belongs to Ahaspati (i. e. the lord of days), N. N.!' and at the end of the Mantra he should give him a name beginning with a sonant, with a semivowel in it, with a long vowel or the Visarga at the end, (and formed with) a Kṛit (suffix).

15. It should not contain a Taddhita (suffix).

16. (He should give a name with) an odd (number of syllables), ending in -dâ, to girls.

17. And after he has told the name to the mother first, they may do what they like.

18. A cow constitutes the sacrificial fee.

19. Every month (after the birth) of the boy, (or)

12. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya I, 25, 5. In the same Grîhya the enumeration of the Nakshatras with their presiding deities is given, I, 26.

14. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya I, 24, 4; Âsvalâyana I, 15, 4; Pâraskara I, 17, 2. In the text read dîrghâbhinish/ânântam instead of dîrghâbhinish/hânântam.

19. Monthly sacrifice in commemoration of the child's birth. Possibly we should translate: Every month (after the birth) of the boy, through one year (comp. Sâṅkhâya I, 25, 10. 11), or on the Parvan days, &c.

after one year, or on the Parvan days of the year (i. e. on the last Tithi of each of the three seasons) he should sacrifice to Agni and Indra, to Heaven and Earth, and to the Visve devâs.

20. Having sacrificed to the deity (of the Tithi and of the Nakshatra respectively), he should sacrifice to the Tithi and to the Nakshatra.

21. When (the father) returns from a journey, or when (the son) begins to know, 'This is my father,' or when (the son) has been initiated, (the father) should grasp with his two hands his son round the head, and should murmur, 'From limb by limb thou art produced' (MB. I, 5, 16-18).

22. With (the formula), 'With the cattle's him-kâra I kiss thee' (l. l. 19) he should kiss him. Then he may do what he likes.

23. In the same way (he should do) to his younger sons—

24. According to their age or in the order in which he meets them.

25. Girls he should silently kiss on their head; he should silently kiss them on their head.

20. Sâṅkhâyana-Gṛihya I, 25, 6.

21 seq. The father's returning from a journey. Khâdira-Gṛihya II, 3, 13 seq. As to upeta, comp. Sâṅkhâyana-Gṛihya II, 1, 1 note. The position of the words in Sûtra 21 is irregular, so as to raise the suspicion that the words yadâ vâ . . . upetasya vâ ('or when the son begins to know . . . has been initiated') are an insertion into the text of Gobhila, made by a later compiler, or into a more ancient text, made by Gobhila himself. Comp. Pâraskara I, 18.

25. As to the repetition of the last words of this Sûtra, see the notes on I, 4, 31; II, 10, 50; III, 6, 15.

KĀNDIKĀ 9.

1. Now follows the tonsure of the child's head, in the third year.

2. To the east of the house on a surface be-smearred (with cow-dung) wood has been put on the fire.

3. There the following things have been placed :

4. To the south (of the fire) twenty-one Darbha blades, a brass vessel with hot water, a razor of Udumbara wood or a mirror, and a barber with a razor in his hand ;

5. To the north, bull's dung and a mess of boiled rice with sesamum seeds which may be more or less cooked.

6. Let them fill vessels separately with rice and barley, with sesamum seeds and beans, and let them place (those vessels) to the east (of the fire).

7. The boiled rice with sesamum seeds (Sūtra 5) and all seeds (mentioned in Sūtra 6) are given to the barber.

8. Then the mother, having dressed the son in a clean garment, sits down to the west of the fire on northward-pointed Darbha grass, facing the east.

9, 1. The Kūḍākarana. Khādīra-Gr̥hya II, 3, 16 seq. On the literal meaning of Kūḍākarana, see Sāṅkhāyana I, 28, 1 note.

2. Comp. above, II, 1, 13.

5. Comp. above, chap. 7, 9 ; Gr̥hya-saṃgraha II, 39.

6. I believe that four vessels were filled, one with rice, one with barley, one with sesamum seeds, and one with beans. The Dvandva compounds vr̥hiyavais and tilamāshais cannot justify the conclusion that one vessel was filled with rice and barley mixed, and another with sesamum seeds and beans, for the plural pātrāṇi shows that there were more than two vessels. Āsvalāyana I, 17, 2, says, vr̥hiyavamāshatilānām pr̥thak pūrnasārāvāni.

9. To the west (of her), facing the east, the person stations himself who is going to perform that (ceremony).

10. He then murmurs, fixing his thoughts on Savitri, looking at the barber, (the Mantra), 'Hither has come Savitri with his razor' (MB. I, 6, 1).

11. And fixing his thoughts on Vâyu, looking at the brass vessel with warm water, (he murmurs the Mantra), 'With warm water, O Vâyu, come hither' (ibid. 2).

12. Drawing water (out of that vessel) with his right hand he moistens the patch of hair on the right side (of the boy's head) with (the Mantra), 'May the waters moisten thee for life' (ibid. 3).

13. With (the Mantra), 'Vishnu's tusk art thou' (ibid. 4) he looks at the razor of Udumbara wood or at the mirror.

14. With (the Mantra), 'Herb! Protect him!' (ibid. 5) he puts seven Darbha blades, with their points turned towards (the boy's) head, into the patch of hair on the right side of his head.

15. Pressing them down with his left hand, and seizing with his right hand the razor of Udumbara wood or the mirror, he touches with it (the Darbha blades), with the (Mantra), 'Axe! Do no harm to him!' (ibid. 6).

16. With (the Mantra), 'With which Pûshan has shaven Brihaspati's head' (ibid. 7), he moves forward (that razor or the mirror) three times towards the east without cutting (the hair); once with the Yagus, twice silently.

11. I have translated the Mantra according to the reading of Ârvalâyana (Grihya I, 17, 6) and Pâraskara (II, 1, 6): ushnena Vâya udakenehi. Gobhila has udakenaidhi.

17. Then (the barber) with the razor of metal cuts the hair and throws (the cut off hair ends) on the bull's dung.

18. In the same way (after the same rites have been performed), he cuts the patch of hair on the back-side ;

19. And that on the left side.

20. He should repeat (when going to cut the hair on the back-side, and then again on the left side, the rites stated above), beginning from the moistening of the hair (Sūtra 12).

21. Grasping with his two hands (the boy) round his head he should murmur (the verse), ' The three-fold age of Gamadagni ' (MB. I, 6, 8).

22. In the same way (the rites are performed) for a girl,

23. (But) silently.

24. The sacrifice, however, (is performed) with the Mantra.

25. Walking away from the fire in a northerly direction they have the arrangement of (the boy's) hair made according to the custom of his Gotra and of his family.

26. They throw the hair on the bull's dung (mentioned above), take it to the forest, and bury it.

27. Some throw them on a bunch (of grass or the like).

20. Thus on the back-side seven Darbha blades are put into the hair, and on the left side seven. This makes, together with the seven blades put into the hair on the right side (Sūtra 14), twenty-one, the number stated in Sūtra 4.

24. In the description of the Kūḍākaraṇa given in this chapter no sacrifice is mentioned. See, however, I, 9, 28.

25. Grhya-samgraha II, 40.

28. Then they may do what they like.
29. A cow constitutes the sacrificial fee.

KÂNDIKÂ 10.

1. In the eighth year after the conception let him initiate a Brâhmaṇa,

2. In the eleventh year after the conception a Kshatriya,

3. In the twelfth year after the conception a Vaisya.

4. Until the sixteenth year the time has not passed for a Brâhmaṇa, until the twenty-second for a Kshatriya, until the twenty-fourth for a Vaisya.

5. After that (time has passed), they become patitasâvitṛika (i. e. they have lost their right of being taught the Sâvitṛi).

6. Let them not initiate such men, nor teach them, nor perform sacrifices for them, nor form matrimonial alliances with them.

7. On the day on which the youth is going to receive the initiation, on that day, early in the morning, they give him to eat, and have his hair arranged, and wash him, and deck him with ornaments, and put on him a (new) garment which has not yet been washed.

10, 1 seq. The initiation of the student. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 4, 1 seq.

1-4. On the number of years given for the Upanayana of persons of the three castes, see the note on Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya II, 1, 1.

5, 6. See the note on Sâṅkhâyana-Grîhya II, 1, 9.

8. Their garments are made of linen, of hempen cloth, of cotton, or of wool (according to the caste to which the student belongs).

9. The skins (which they wear), are an antelope-skin, or the skin of a spotted deer, or a goat's skin.

10. Their girdles are made of Muñga grass, of Kāsa grass, of Tāmbala.

11. Their staffs are of Parṇa wood, of Bilva wood, of Asvattha wood.

12. The garment of a Brāhmaṇa is made of linen, or of hempen cloth, that of a Kshatriya, of cotton, that of a Vaisya, of wool.

13. Thereby also the other articles have been explained.

14. Or if (the proper articles prescribed) cannot be got, all (of them may be used) by (persons of) all castes.

15. To the east of the house on a surface besmeared (with cow-dung) wood has been put on the fire.

16. Having sacrificed with (the Mantras which the student recites) 'Agni! Lord of the vow' (MB. I, 6, 9-13), the teacher stations himself to the west

8. There are four kinds of garments indicated, though only persons of three castes are concerned. The explanation of this apparent incongruence follows from Sūtra 12.

10. Tāmbala is stated to be a synonym for śana (hemp).

13. As the garments indicated in Sūtra 8 belong, in the order in which they are stated, to persons of the three castes respectively, thus also of the skins (Sūtra 9), of the girdles (Sūtra 10), and of the staffs (Sūtra 11); the first is that belonging to a Brāhmaṇa, the second, to a Kshatriya, and the third, to a Vaisya.

15. Comp. above, chap. 9, 2.

of the fire, on northward-pointed Darbha grass, facing the east.

17. Between the fire and the teacher the student (stands), raising his joined hands, turning his face towards the teacher, on northward-pointed Darbha grass.

18. Standing on his south side a Brāhmaṇa versed in the Mantras fills (the student's) joined hands with water,

19. And afterwards (those) of the teacher.

20. Looking (at the student the teacher) murmurs (the verse), 'With him who comes to us, we have come together' (MB. I, 6, 14).

21. He causes (the student) to say, 'I have come hither to studentship' (ibid. 16).

22. In (the words), 'What is thy name' (ibid. 17), he asks after his name.

23. The teacher chooses for him a name which he is to use at respectful salutations,

24. (A name) derived from (the name of) a deity or a Nakshatra,

25. Or also of his Gotra, according to some (teachers).

26. Having let the water run out of his joined 22, 23. It is evident that the words tasyâkâryaḥ belong to Sūtra 23, and not to Sūtra 22, to which the traditional division of the Sūtras assigns them. The corresponding section of the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa runs thus: 'What is thy name?'—'My name is N. N.!' It is not clear whether the student, being questioned by the teacher, had to indicate his ordinary name, and then to receive from the teacher his 'abhivādanīya nāmadheya,' or whether he had to pronounce, on the teacher's question, directly the abhivādanīya name chosen for him by the teacher. The commentary and the corresponding passage of the Khândira-Grihya (II, 4, 12) are in favour of the second alternative.

hands (over the student's hands), the teacher with his right hand seizes (the student's) right hand together with the thumb, with (the formula), 'By the impulse of the god Savitri, with the arms of the two Asvins, with Pûshan's hands I seize thy hand, N. N.!' (ibid. 18).

27. He then makes him turn round from left to right with (the formula), 'Move in the sun's course after him, N. N.!' (ibid. 19).

28. Grasping down with his right hand over his right shoulder he should touch his uncovered navel with (the formula), 'Thou art the knot of all breath' (ibid. 20).

29. Raising himself (from the position implied in Sûtra 28, he should touch) the place near the navel with (the formula), 'Ahura' (ibid. 21).

30. Raising himself (still more, he should touch) the place of the heart with (the formula), 'Krisana' (ibid. 22).

31. Having touched from behind with his right hand (the student's) right shoulder with (the formula), 'I give thee in charge to Pragâpati, N. N.!' (ibid. 23)—

32. And with his left (hand) the left (shoulder) with (the formula), 'I give thee in charge to the god Savitri, N. N.!' (ibid. 24)—

33. He then directs him (to observe the duties of Brahmaçarya, by the formula), 'A student art thou, N. N.!' (ibid. 25).

34. 'Put on fuel. Eat water. Do the service. Do not sleep in the day-time' (ibid. 26).

35. Having gone in a northerly direction from the fire, the teacher sits down to the east, on northward-pointed Darbha grass,

36. The student to the west, bending his right knee, turning his face towards the teacher, also on northward-pointed Darbha grass.

37. (The teacher) then ties round (the student) thrice from left to right the girdle made of Muñga grass and causes him to repeat (the verse), 'Protecting us from evil word' (ibid. 27), and (the verse), 'The protectress of right' (ibid. 28).

38. Then (the student) respectfully sits down near (the teacher) with (the words), 'Recite, sir! May the reverend one recite the Sâvitrit to me.'

39. He then recites (the Sâvitrit, ibid. 29) to him, Pâda by Pâda, hemistich by hemistich, and the whole verse,

40. And the Mahâvyâhritis one by one, with the word Om at the end (ibid. 30).

41. And handing over to him the staff, which should be made of (the wood of) a tree, he causes him to repeat (the formula), 'O glorious one, make me glorious' (ibid. 31).

42. Then (the student) goes to beg food,

43. First of his mother, and of two other women friends, or of as many as there are in the neighbourhood.

44. He announces the alms (received) to his teacher.

45. The rest of the day he stands silently.

46. After sunset he puts a piece of wood on the fire with (the Mantra), 'To Agni I have brought a piece of wood' (ibid. 32).

47. Through a period of three nights he avoids eating pungent or saline food.

48. At the end of that (period) a mess of boiled rice-grains (is offered) to Savitri.

49. Then he may do what he likes.

50. A cow constitutes the sacrificial fee.

End of the Second Prapâṭhaka.

49, 50. Dr. Knauer very pertinently calls attention to the fact that these Sūtras are not repeated, as is the rule with regard to the concluding words of an Adhyāya or Prapâṭhaka. Comp. chap. 8, 25 note.

PRAPĀTHAKA III, KĀNDIKĀ 1.

1. Now (follows) the Godâna ceremony (or cutting of the beard), in the sixteenth year.

2. The cutting of the hair (and the beard) has been explained by the (description of the) Kûdâ-karana (II, 9).

1, 1. After the description of the regular Upanayana here follow, in chaps. 1 and 2, statements regarding the special Vratas which the Vedic student has to undergo, or rather which he may undergo, in the time of his studentship. Comp. the corresponding statements on the Vratas of the Rigvedins, Sāṅkhâyana-Gr̥hya II, 11 and 12. By the followers of the Sāma-veda the ceremony of the Godâna, or cutting of the beard (comp. Sāṅkhâyana I, 28, 19; Pāraskara II, 1, 7 seq.; Ārvalâyana I, 18), was put into connection with their system of Vratas; the undergoing of the Godâna-vrata enabled the student to study the Pûrvâr̥tika of the Sāma-veda. In the commentary on Gobhila III, 1, 28 we find the following statements with regard to this Vrata as well as to the other Vratas mentioned in Sûtra 28: 'The Upanayana-vrata has been declared to refer to the study of the Sâvitri (comp. Bloomfield's notes on Gr̥hya-samgraha II, 42. 43); the Godâna-vrata, to the study of the collections of verses sacred to the gods Agni, Indra, and Soma Pavamâna (this is the Pûrvâr̥tika of the Sāma-veda); the Vrâtika-vrata, to the study of the Āraṇyaka, with the exclusion of the Sukriya sections; the Āditya-vrata, to the study of the Sukriya sections; the Aupanishada-vrata, to the study of the Upanishad-Brâhmana; the Gyaish/hasâmika-vrata, to the study of the Āgya-dohas.' The Vratas were connected with a repetition of the Upanayana ceremony (Sûtras 10 seq.) in the way stated in my note on Sāṅkhâyana II, 12, 1.—Khâdîra-Gr̥hya II, 5, 1 seq.

2. Comp. Sāṅkhâyana I, 28, 19, 'The Godânakarman is identical with the Kûdâkarman.' Pāraskara II, 1, 7, 'At the Kesânta ceremony he says, "Hair and beard" (instead of "hair," as at the Kûdâkarana).'

3. The student has his hair (and beard) cut himself.

4. He has all the hair of his body shaven.

5. The sacrificial fee given by a Brāhmaṇa consists of an ox and a cow,

6. That given by a Kshatriya, of a pair of horses,

7. That given by a Vaisya, of a pair of sheep.

8. Or a cow (is given by persons) of all (castes).

9. A goat (is given) to the person who catches up the hair.

10. The Upanayana (connected with the Godānavrata and the other Vratas) has been declared by the Upanayana (treated of above, II, 10).

11. (The use of) a garment, however, which has not yet been washed, is not required (here),

12. Nor the adornment.

13. (One should) not initiate one who does not intend to keep the vow through one year.

14. Handing over to him (i. e. to the student) a staff, which should be made of (the wood of) a tree, he directs him (to observe the duties connected with his vow, in the following words):

15. 'Obey thy teacher, except in sinful conduct.

16. 'Avoid anger and falsehood,

17. 'Sexual intercourse,

18. 'Sleeping on high (bedsteads),

19. 'Performances of singing, dancing, &c., the use of perfumes and of collyrium,

3. At the Kūṭākarana the child sits in the mother's lap and others perform the rites for him.

10. See the note on Sūtra 1.

11. Comp. above, II, 10, 7.

-
20. 'Bathing,
 21. 'Combing the head, cleansing the teeth,
 washing the feet,
 22. 'Shaving,
 23. 'Eating honey and flesh,
 24. 'Mounting a chariot yoked with cattle,
 25. 'Wearing shoes in the village,
 26. 'Svayam-indriya-moḥanam.'
 27. Wearing the girdle, going the rounds for alms, carrying a staff, putting fuel (on the fire), touching water, reverentially saluting (the teacher) in the morning: these are his standing duties.
 28. The Godâna-vrata, the Vrâtika-vrata, the Âditya-vrata, the Aupanishada-vrata, the Gyaish-thasâmika-vrata (last) one year (each).
 29. Touching water in the evening and in the morning (is prescribed) for these (Vratas).
 30. The Âditya-vrata, however, some do not undergo.
 31. They who undergo it, wear one garment.
 32. They allow nothing to be between (themselves and) the sun, except trees and (the roofs of) houses.
 33. They do not descend into water deeper than knee-deep, except on the injunction of their teacher.
-

28. The meaning of these expressions has been explained in the note on Sûtra 1.

30. According to the commentary some study the Sukriyas as a part of the Âraṇyaka; these do not undergo the Âditya-vrata.
 Others, for instance the Kauthumas, separate the Sukriyas from the Âraṇyaka and keep a special vow, the Âditya-vrata, by which they are enabled to study those texts.

1. For the Mahânâmnî verses (the Vrata is to be kept) twelve years,
2. (Or) nine, six, three (years).
3. These are the various possibilities.
4. Or also one year, according to some (teachers).
5. (In this case), however, the observances are enhanced.

7. There is also a Brâhmana of the Rauruki (Sâkhâ, in which it is said) :

9. ‘“ Become men, my little sons, who endeavour to accomplish the Sakvati-vrata ! ”’

II. Let him not eat in the morning before he has touched water.

12. In the evening, after he has touched water, he should not eat, before he has put the piece of wood on the fire.

2, 1. Regarding the Mahânâmî or Sakvarî verses and the observances connected with their study, comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 12 (see especially the note on II, 12, 13) and the sixth Adhyâya of that text. Khâdira-Grîhya II, 5, 22 seq.

10. The rules as to 'touching water' have been given above, I, 2, 5 seq. The three Savanas or Soma-pressings of which the Soma sacrifice consists, are the prātaḥ-savana, the mādhyaṇdina-savana, and the trīṭhīya-savana, i. e. the morning Savana, the mid-day Savana, and the third or evening Savana.

12. Comp. above, II, 10, 46; III, 1, 27.

13. He should wear dark clothes.
14. He should eat dark food.
15. Let him be devoted to his teacher.
16. Let him make way for nobody.
17. He should be addicted to austerities.
18. He should stand in day-time.
19. He should sit at night.
20. And when it is raining, he should not retire to a covered place.
21. He should say to (the god) when he sends rain, 'The Sakvaris are water.'
22. When (the god) sends lightning, he should say to him, 'Such forsooth is the nature of the Sakvaris.'
23. When (the god) thunders, he should say to him, 'The great voice of the great (cow) !'
24. Let him not cross a river without touching water.
25. Let him not ascend a ship.
26. If his life is in danger, however, he may ascend (a ship), after having touched water.
27. In the same way (he should touch water) having disembarked.
28. For in water the virtue of the Mahânâmntis is contained.
29. If he practises these duties, (the god) Parjanya will send rain according to his wish.
30. The rules about dark (clothes), standing, sitting, (making) way, and (dark) food may be considered as optional.
31. After he has kept his vow through one third (of the prescribed time, the teacher) should sing to him the (first) Stotriya verse (of the Mahânâmñs).

32. In the same way the two other Stotriya verses (after two-thirds of the time and at the end of the whole time).

33. Or all (the three verses) at the end of the whole (time).

34. He should sing them to (the student) who has fasted and shuts his eyes.

35. Having filled a brass vessel with water, having thrown into it all sorts of herbs, and dipped (the student's) hands into it, the teacher should veil (the student's eyes) from left to right with a (new) garment that has not yet been washed.

36. Or he should sing (the Mahânâmñs to him) immediately after he has veiled (his eyes).

37. With veiled eyes, keeping silence, he should abstain from food through a period of three nights, or through one day and one night.

38. Or he should stand in the forest till sunset (and spend the night in the village).

39. On the next morning he should put wood on the fire in the forest, should sacrifice with the Mahāvyaâhrītis, and should cause the student to look at (the following objects, viz.)

40. Fire, Âgya, the sun, a Brahman, a bull, food, water, curds,

41. With (the words), 'The sky have I beheld! Light have I beheld!'

35. Comp. Sâṅkhâya-Gr̥hya VI, 3, 7.

36. I. e. the fasting prescribed in Sûtras 34 and 37 may, if they like, follow after the teaching of the sacred song, instead of preceding it.

37. Sâṅkhâya-Gr̥hya II, 12, 6 seq.

42. In that way all (the objects stated in Sūtra 40) three times.

43. After the ceremony for averting evil has been performed, the student respectfully salutes the teacher.

44. Thus he has to break the silence (enjoined upon him).

45. A bull, a brass vessel, a garment, an optional gift (of a cow) : this is the sacrificial fee.

46. The first time he may choose (either a bull or a brass vessel).

47. Let him provide his teacher with clothes, according to some (teachers).

48. A mess of cooked food, sacred to Indra, (is prepared). Let him sacrifice of that (food) with this verse, 'To the Rik, to the Sāman we sacrifice' (Sāma-veda I, 369), or (with the verse), 'The lord of the seat, the wonderful' (ibid. I, 171), or with both (verses).

49. This (he should do) at (all) the Anupravakāntya ceremonies.

43. Comp. above, I, 9, 29 ; Sāṅkhāyana VI, 3, 11 seq.

45, 46. The student is to give a fee to his teacher three times, after he has been taught each of the three Stotriya verses (Sūtras 31. 32). To these three occasions the four objects stated in Sūtra 45 correspond, so that the first time either the first or the second of those objects, the bull or the brass vessel, may be chosen ; the second time he gives a garment, the third time a vara (or optional gift). Comp. the similar correspondence of four objects and three cases to which these objects refer, II, 10, 8. 12.

48. This is the Anupravakāntya ceremony (or ceremony to be performed after the study of a Vedic text has been finished) belonging to the Mahānāmniḥ ; comp. Khādira-Gr̥hya II, 5, 34 ; Āśvalāyana-Gr̥hya I, 22, 12 ; Sāṅkhāyana II, 8, 1 note.

49. Perhaps sarvatra ('everywhere') belongs to Sūtra 49, so that we should have to translate : This (should be done) everywhere at

50. The Mantra has to be altered everywhere (so that he has to say), 'I have kept (the vow),' 'I have been able,' 'Thereby I have prospered,' 'I have undergone.'

51. The fee to be given after the study of the Parvans is, a goat for the Agni-Parvan, a ram for the Indra-Parvan, a cow for the Pavamāna-Parvan.

52. After (the student) has returned (from the forest), he should entertain his teacher and his retinue with food,

53. And his fellow-students who have come together.

54. The way to sing the Gyeshtasāmans has been explained by (the statements given with regard to) the Mahānāmni-(vrata).

55. Here the following standing duties are to be observed :

56. He should not have intercourse with a Sūdrā woman.

57. He should not eat bird's flesh.

58. He should avoid (constantly living on) the same grain, and in the same place, and wearing one garment.

59. He should perform the rite of 'touching water' with water drawn out (of a pond, &c.).

the Anupravatānīya ceremonies, i. e. also at those Anupravatānīya ceremonies which are connected with the study of the other texts.

50. Instead of 'I will keep the vow,' he says, 'I have kept the vow,' &c.; II, 10, 16.

51. The Parvans are the three great sections, sacred to Agni, Indra, and Soma Pavāmana, into which the first Sāmavedārṭika is divided.

55. According to the commentary he has to keep these observances through his whole life.

58. Or, wearing always the same garment?

60. From (the time of) his being directed (to observe the duties of his Vrata) he should not eat from an earthen vessel,

61. Nor drink (from such a vessel),

62. (Or rather) from (the time of) his being taught (the Gyesh/hasâmans, after the whole preparatory time, or after one third of that time), according to some (teachers).

KĀNDIKĀ 3.

1. On the full-moon day of Praush/âpada (or) under (the Nakshatra) Hasta the Upâkarana (or opening ceremony of the annual term of Veda-study, is performed).

2. After (the teacher) has sacrificed with the Vyâhr̥itis, he recites the Sâvitṛī to the students as at the Upanayana ;

3. And (he chants) the Sâvitṛī with its Sâman melody,

60. Regarding the directions given to the student by the teacher, see chap. I, 14.

62. See above, Sûtras 31. 33.

3, 1 seq. The Upâkarana ceremony ; Khâdîra-Gr̥ihya III, 2, 16 seq. Regarding the different terms for this ceremony, comp. Sâṅkhâya IV, 5, 2 ; Âsvalâyana III, 5, 3 ; Pâraskara II, 10, 2. Hiranyakesin says : sravanâpaksha oshadhîshu gâtâsu hastena paurnamâsyâm vâdhyâyopâkarma.—It seems impossible to me to adopt an explanation of this Sûtra, which gives to praush/âpadâ another meaning than that based on the constant use of these feminines derived from the names of Nakshatras, i.e. the day of the full moon which falls under such or such a Nakshatra. Hastena, therefore, necessarily refers to another day besides the Praush/âpadâ, on which the Upâkarana may be celebrated. Perhaps we may conjecture, praush/âpadâṁ hastena vopâkaranam.

2. Comp. above, II, 10, 39.

4. And (the Bārhaspatya Sāman, with the text), 'Soma, the king, Varuna' (Sāma-veda I, 91).

5. After they have recited (the first verses) of the Khandas book, from its beginning, they may do what they like.

6. They eat fried barley-grains with (the verse), 'That which is accompanied by grains and by a karambha (i. e. curds with flour)' (Sāma-veda I, 210).

7. They partake of curds with (the verse), 'I have praised Dadhikrāvan' (Sāma-veda I, 358).

8. After they have sipped water, (the teacher) should cause them to repeat the first (?) verses, and to sing the first (?) Sāmans, of the different sections (?).

9. On the day sacred to Savitri they wait.

10. And at (the beginning of) the northerly

5. The Khandas book is the first Sāmavedārṅika in which the verses are arranged according to their metre.

6. It is not quite clear from the text, in what connection the rites described in Sūtras 6-8 stand with those treated of in the preceding Sūtras. The expression yathārtham used in Sūtra 5 ('yathārtham iti karmanāḥ parisamāptir ukyate,' Comm.; comp. above, I, 3, 12 note) clearly indicates the close of the ceremony; on the other hand the comparison of Pāraskara II, 10, 15 seq., Sāṅkhāyana IV, 5, 10 seq., Āsvalāyana III, 5, 10, seems to show that the acts stated in Sūtras 6-8 form part of the ceremony described before.

8. I do not try to translate this very obscure Sūtra according to the commentary, in which khāṇḍika is explained as 'the number (of pupils).' Perhaps the word is a misspelling for kaṇḍikā or the like, and means sections of the texts. Comp. Khādira-Grhyā III, 2, 23. The construction (āṅāntodakāḥ . . . kārayet) is quite irregular.

9. I.e. they do not continue their study. The day sacred to Savitri is the day under the constellation of Hasta, mentioned in Sūtra 1, for Savitri is the presiding deity over that Nakshatra (comp. Sāṅkhāyana I, 26, 11).

10. Comp. the note on Sūtra 16.

course of the sun (they wait) one night with one day before and one day after it,

11. (Or they interrupt their study for) a period of three nights before and afterwards, according to some (teachers).

12. And both times water libations are offered to the Âkâryas.

13. Some perform the Upâkarana on the full-moon day of Srâvana and wait (with studying) the time (from that day) till the day sacred to Savitri (Sûtra 9).

14. On the full-moon day of Taisha they leave off (studying the Veda).

15. They should go out of the village in an easterly or northerly direction, should go to water which reaches higher than to their secret parts, should touch water (in the way prescribed above, I, 2), and should satiate the metres, the Rîshis, and teachers (by libations of water).

16. After this second Upâkarana, until the (chief) Upâkarana (has been performed) again for the Vedic texts, an interruption of the study (of the Veda takes place), if clouds rise.

12. Regarding the Tarpana ceremony comp. Sâṅkhâya IV, 9, 1 note. From the word 'and' the commentator concludes that the libations are offered not only to the Âkâryas, but also to the Rîshis, &c. (Sûtra 15).

13. Comp. Gautama XVI, 1; Vasishṭha XIII, 1; Âpastamba I, 9, 1, &c.

14. Âpastamba I, 9, 2, &c.

15. This is a description of the Utsarga ceremony; comp. Sâṅkhâya IV, 6, 6; Âsvalâya III, 5, 21-23; Pâraskara II, 12.

16. The most natural way of interpreting the text would be, in my opinion, to assume that the 'second Upâkarana' (pratyupâkarana) is identical with the Utsarga. The second Upâkarana thus would in the same time conclude the first term for studying the

17. If lightning (is observed), or if it thunders, or if it is drizzling, (he shall not study) until the same time next day.

18. On the falling of a meteor, or after an earthquake, or an eclipse of the sun or of the moon (the study is interrupted until the same time next day),

19. And if a whirlwind occurs.

20. Let them not study on the Ashṭakâ days, and on the days of the new moon,

21. And on the days of the full moon—

22. In the three months Kârttika, Phâlguna, and Āshâḍha.

23. And (the study is interrupted) for one day and one night,

24. If a fellow-pupil has died,

25. Or the sovereign of his country;

26. Three days, if his teacher (has died);

27. One day and one night, if somebody (has died) who has reverentially approached.

28. If singing, or the sound of a musical instrument, or weeping is heard, or if it is storming, (the study of the Veda is discontinued) as long as that (reason of the interruption) lasts.

Veda, and open a second term. The distinction of two such periods, which may be called two terms, is frequently met with in other texts, for instance, in Vasishṭha XIII, 5-7 (S. B. E. XIV, 63); Manu IV, 98. According to the commentary, on the other hand, the second Upâkaraṇa is performed at the beginning of the northerly course of the sun (comp. Sûtras 10-12); it is stated that after that ceremony the Uttara (i. e. the Uttarârṇika?) and the Rahasya texts are studied. It deserves to be noticed that Manu (IV, 96) prescribes the performing of the Utsarga either under the Nakshatra Pushya (i. e. Tishya), or on the first day of the bright fortnight of Mâgha, which is considered as coinciding, at least approximately, with the beginning of the northerly course of the sun.

18. Comp. Manu IV, 105.

22. These are the days of the ancient Vedic Āturmâsya sacrifices.

29. As regards other (cases in which the reading of the Veda should be discontinued), the practice of the Sishṭas (should be followed).

30. In the case of a prodigy an expiation (has to be performed) by the householder (or) by his wife.

31. If a spar of the roof or the middle (post of the house) breaks, or if the water-barrel bursts, let him sacrifice (Āgya oblations) with the Vyâhr̥itis.

32. If he has seen bad dreams, let him murmur this verse, 'To-day, O god Savitṛi' (Sâma-veda I, 141).

33. Now (follows) another (expiation).

34. If he has touched a piled-up (fire-altar) or a sacrificial post, or if he has humming in his ears, or if his eye palpitates, or if the sun rises or sets while he is sleeping, or if his organs of sense have been defiled by something bad, let him sacrifice two Āgya oblations with the two verses, 'May my strength return to me' (Mantra-Brâhmaṇa I, 6, 33. 34).

35. Or (let him sacrifice) two pieces of wood anointed with Āgya.

36. Or let him murmur (those two verses) at light offences.

29. The definition of a Sishṭa, or instructed person, is given in Baudhâyaṇa I, 1, 6 (S. B. E. XIV, 143).

30-36. Different expiations; comp. Khândira-Gṛ̥hya II, 5, 35-37.

34. Kitya means Kitya agni, the piled-up fire-altar, the construction of which is treated of, for instance, in the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa VI-X. Prof. Weber has devoted to the rites connected with the kitya agni a very detailed paper, Indische Studien, XIII, 217 seq. That kitya does not mean here anything different from kitya agni is shown by the Mânava-Gṛ̥hya I, 3: yadi . . . akshi vâ spandet karno vâ krosed agnim vâ kityam ârohet smarânam vâ gakkhed yûpam vopaspriset, &c.

KĀNDIKĀ 4.

1. A student, after he has studied the Veda,
2. And has offered a present to his Guru (i. e. to his) teacher,
3. Should, with the permission (of his parents), take a wife,
4. One who does not belong to the same Gotra,
5. And who is not a Sapinda relation of his mother.
6. The best, however, is a 'naked' girl.
7. Now the bath (which is taken at the end of studentship, will be described).
8. To the north or the east of the teacher's house there is an enclosure.
9. There the teacher sits down, facing the north, on eastward-pointed Darbha grass ;

4, 1 seq. The description given in this chapter of the Samāvartana, or of the ceremony performed at the end of studentship, is opened with a few sentences referring to another section of the Grīhya ritual, namely, to marriage. It seems to me that these first Sūtras of this chapter once formed, in a text from which Gobhila has taken them, the introduction to an exposition of the wedding ceremonies, and that Gobhila was induced to transfer them to the description of the Samāvartana, by their opening words, 'A student, after he has studied the Veda, &c.' With Sūtras 1-3, comp. Khādīra-Grīhya I, 3, 1.

3. I prefer to supply, (with the permission) of his parents, and not, of his teacher. Hiranyakesin says, samāvṛtta âtâryakulât mâtâpitarau bibhriyât, tâbhyaâm anuṣṭâto bhâryâm upayakket.

5. Regarding the term Sapinda, see, for instance, Gautama XIV, 13 (S. B. E. II, 247): 'Sapinda-relationship ceases with the fifth or the seventh (ancestor).' Comp. Manu V, 60.

6. According to the Grīhya-samgraha (II, 17. 18), a 'naked' girl is one who has not yet the monthly period, or whose breast is not yet developed. Comp. Vasishṭha XVII, 70 ; Gautama XVIII, 23.

7 seqq. Comp. Khādīra-Grīhya III, 1, 1 seqq.

10. Facing the east the student on northward-pointed Darbha grass.

11. The teacher should besprinkle (him) with lukewarm, scented water, which has been boiled with all kinds of herbs.

12. But as if he (i. e. the student, should do so) himself—

13. (In such a way) he is alluded to in the Mantras; (therefore the besprinkling should be done rather by the student, and not by the teacher[?]).

14. With (the verse), 'The fires which dwell in the waters' (MB. I, 7, 1)—(the student[?]) pours his joined hands full of water (on the ground),

15. And again with (the formula), 'What is dreadful in the waters, what is cruel in the waters, what is turbulent in the waters' (ibid. 2).

16. With (the formula), 'The shining one I take here' (ibid. 3)—he besprinkles himself.

17. And again with (the formula), 'For the sake of glory, of splendour' (ibid. 4).

18. And again with (the verse), 'By which you made the wife (pregnant?)' (ibid. 5).

19. A fourth time silently.

20. He then should rise and should worship the sun with the Mantra, 'Rising with (the Maruts) who bear shining spears' (ibid. 6-9), &c.

21. Optionally he may use the single sections of

13. In the Mantras prescribed for the besprinkling of the student (Mantra-Brāhmaṇa I, 7, 1 seq.) there occur passages such as, for instance, 'Therewith I, N. N., besprinkle myself.'

21. He may use the first section of the Mantra, which contains the word prātar, in the morning, &c.

the Mantra separately (in the morning, at noon, and in the evening) as indicated in the text.

22. He should add (the formula), 'The eye art thou' (ibid. 9) after (each of the three sections of the Mantra, 6-8).

23. With the verse, 'Loosen the highest fetter, O Varuṇa' (ibid. 10), he takes off the girdle.

24. After he has entertained the Brâhmaṇas with food and has eaten himself, he should have his hair, his beard, the hair of his body, and his nails cut, so as to leave the lock of hair (as required by the custom of his family).

25. Having bathed and adorned himself, and having put on two garments (an under-garment and an upper-garment) which have not yet been washed, he should put a garland (on his head) with (the formula), 'Luck art thou; take delight in me' (ibid. 11).

26. The two shoes (he puts on) with (the formula), 'Leaders are you; lead me' (ibid. 12).

27. With (the formula), 'The Gandharva art thou' (ibid. 13), he takes a bamboo staff.

28. He approaches the teacher together with the assembly (of his pupils) and looks at the assembly of his teacher's (pupils) with (the words), 'Like an eye-ball may I be dear to you' (ibid. 14).

29. Sitting down near (the teacher) he touches the sense-organs at his head with (the verse), 'The she-ichneumon, covered by the lips' (ibid. 15).

30. Here the teacher should honour him with the Argha ceremony.

31. (The student then) should approach a chariot yoked with oxen, and should touch its two side-pieces or the two arms of the chariot-pole with

(the verse), 'O tree, may thy limbs be strong' (ibid. 16).

32. With (the last words of that verse), 'May he who stands on thee, win what can be won'—he mounts it.

33. Having driven (some distance) in an easterly or northerly direction, he turns round from left to right and comes back (to his teacher).

34. When he has come back, the Argha ceremony should be performed (for him by his teacher), say the Kauhallyas.

KÂNDIKÂ 5.

1. From that time he shall assume a dignified demeanour: this is in short the rule (for his behaviour).

2. Here the teachers enumerate the following (regulations).

3. Nâgâtalomnyopahâsam ikkhet.

4. Nor (should he wish for sport) with a girl who is the only child of her mother,

5. Nor with a woman during her courses,

6. Nor with one who descends from the same Rishis.

7. Let him not eat food which has been brought by another door (than the usual),

8. Or which has been cooked twice,

9. Or which has stood over night—

10. Except such as is prepared of vegetables, flesh, barley, or flour.

34. Instead of its being performed at the time stated in Sûtra 30.

5, 1 seq. Rules of conduct for the Snâtaka; comp. Khâdira-Grihya III, 1, 33 seq.

11. Let him not run while it is raining.
12. Let him not take himself his shoes in his hands (when putting them on or pulling them off).
13. Let him not look into a well.
14. Let him not gather fruits himself.
15. He should not wear a scentless wreath,
16. If it is not a wreath of gold.
17. (He should not wear a wreath) of which the expression mâlâ (garland) has been used.
18. He should cause the people to call it srag (wreath). (Then he may wear it.)
19. He should avoid using the word bhadra ('blessed') without a reason.
20. He should say (instead of it), mandra ('lovely').
21. There are three (kinds of) Snâtakas :
22. A Vidyâsnâtaka (or a Snâtaka by knowledge), a Vratasnâtaka (or a Snâtaka by the completion of his vow), and a Vidyâvratsnâtaka (i. e. Snâtaka by both).
23. Of these the last ranks foremost; the two others are equal (to each other).
24. (A Snâtaka) should not put on a wet garment.
25. He should not wear one garment.
26. He should not praise any person (excessively).
27. He should not speak of what he has not seen, as if he had seen it,

20. As to the reading, comp. Dr. Knauer's remarks in his edition of the text, p. xi of the Introduction.

21, 22. These Sûtras are identical with Pâraskara II, 5, 32. Comp. the definitions of these three kinds of Snâtakas, Pâraskara, l. l. 33-35.

25. Comp. above, chap. 2, 58.

28. Nor of what he has not heard, as if he had heard it.

29. He should give up everything that forms an impediment for his Veda-recitation.

30. He should endeavour to keep himself (pure from every defilement) like a pot of oil.

31. He should not climb a tree.

32. He should not go toward evening to another village,

33. Nor alone,

34. Nor together with Vṛishalas (or Sūdras).

35. He should not enter the village by a by-path.

36. And he should not walk without a companion.

37. These are the observances for those who have performed the Samāvartana,

38. And what (besides) is prescribed by Sishṭas.

KĀNDIKĀ 6.

1. When his cows are driven out, he should repeat (the verse), 'May (Bhava), the all-valiant one, (and Indra protect) these (cows) for me' (MB. I, 8, 1).

2. When they have come back, (he should repeat the verse), 'These which are rich in sweet' (ibid. 2).

33. That the Snātaka is not allowed to go alone to another village, follows from Sūtra 36; thus Sūtra 33 is superfluous. The commentator of course tries to defend Gobhila, but I think he has not succeeded. Probably Gobhila has taken the two Sūtras from different texts on which his own composition seems to be based.

38. Baudhāyana I, 1, 6 (S. B. E. XIV, 144): 'Those are called Sishṭas who, in accordance with the sacred law, have studied the Veda together with its appendages, know how to draw inferences from that, and are able to adduce proofs perceptible by the senses from the revealed texts.'

6, 1 seq. Different ceremonies connected with cattle-keeping. Comp. Khādīra-Gṛīhya III, 1, 45 seq.

3. If he is desirous of thriving (in his cattle), he should lick with his tongue the forehead of the first-born calf, before it is licked by its mother, and should gulp with (the formula), 'Thou art the phlegm of the cows' (ibid. 3).

4. If he is desirous of thriving (in his cattle), he should, when the cows have calved, at night put wood on the fire in the cow-stable and should sacrifice churned curds with drops of ghee, with (the verse), 'Seizer, seize' (ibid. 4).

5. If he is desirous of thriving (in his cattle), he makes, when the cows have calved, with a sword of Udumbara wood, marks on a male and on a female calf, first on the male, then on the female, with (the Mantra), 'The world art thou, thousandfold' (ibid. 5. 6),

6. And after he has done so, he should recite (over the two calves the Mantra), 'With metal, with the butcher's knife' (ibid. 7).

7. When the rope (to which the calves are bound) is spread out, and (again) when the calves have been bound to it, he should recite over it (the verse), 'This rope, the mother of the cows' (ibid. 8).

8. Here now the following (rites) have to be performed day by day, (viz.)

9. (The rites at) the driving out (of the cows), at the coming back (of the cows), and at the setting into motion of the rope (with the calves).

10. At the cow-sacrifice (i.e. the sacrifice by which a thriving condition for the cows is obtained), boiled rice-grains with milk (are offered).

11. Let him sacrifice to Agni, Pûshan, Indra, and Îsvara.

12. To the bull honour is done (by adorning it, by lavish food, &c.).

13. By the cow-sacrifice also the horse-sacrifice (i.e. the sacrifice by which thriving horses are obtained) has been explained.

14. Of deities Yama and Varuna are added here (to the deities stated above) (Sûtra 11).

15. (After the cow-sacrifice) the cows are besprinkled with scented water; the cows are besprinkled with scented water.

KÂNDIKÂ 7.

1. Now (follows) the Sravanâ ceremony.

2. It has to be performed on the full-moon day (of the month Srâvana).

3. Having besmeared (a surface) to the east of the house (with cow-dung), they carry forward (to that place) fire taken from the (sacred) domestic fire.

4. He besmears four spots to the four sides (of the fire),

5. Towards the (four) directions,

6. (To the extent) of more than one prakrama (i.e. step).

7. He puts a dish on the fire and fries (in that

15. As to the repetition of the last words of this chapter, see the notes on I, 4, 31; II, 8, 25; 10, 50.

7, 1 seq. The Sravanâ ceremony or the Bali-offering to the Serpents. Comp. Khâdira-Grihya III, 2, 1 seq., and the elaborate paper of Dr. Winternitz, Der Sarpabali, ein altindischer Schlangencult (Wien, 1888).

dish) one handful of barley-grains, without burning them.

8. To the west of the fire he places a mortar so that it stands firmly, and husks (the grains), separating (the husked and the unhusked grains ?).

9. After he has carefully ground them to flour, and has thrown (that) into a wooden cup (kamasa), and covered it with a winnowing-basket, he puts it up (in the house).

10. Between (the besmeared surface) towards the south, and that towards the east (there should be) a passage.

11. After sunset he takes the wooden cup, (the spoon called) Darvi, and the winnowing-basket, and goes to (the fire) which has been carried forward (Sūtra 3).

12. He throws the flour into the winnowing-basket and fills the wooden cup with water.

13. He takes once a quantity of flour with the Darvi spoon, pours out water on the besmeared place to the east (of the fire), and offers (there) a Bali with (the words), 'O king of Serpents, dwelling towards the east, this is thy Bali!' (MB. II, 1, 1).

14. He pours the rest of the water over (that Bali, taking care) that it does not carry away the Bali.

8. As to avahanti, comp. above, I, 7, 4; Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 30.

11. According to the commentary atipranīta means the fire which has been carried forward (Sūtra 3). Another explanation is then added, which is based on a quotation from a 'tantrântara:' 'After he has established a fire, he should carry forward one fire-brand taken from that fire, in a south-eastern direction, with the Mantra ye rūpāni pratimuṣṣamânâḥ &c.; that fire is the atipranīta fire.'

15. Turning round from right to left, he besprinkles the wooden cup and the Darvi spoon, warms them, and (repeats the offering of a Bali) in the same way towards the south, towards the west, and towards the north, as the Mantra (MB. II, 1, 1. 2) runs, without turning away (between the single Bali-offerings).

16. After he has thrown the remnants (of flour) out of the basket into the fire, he goes to that fire which has not been carried forward.

17. To the west of that fire he touches the earth with his two hands turned downwards, and murmurs the Mantra, 'Adoration to the Earth's'—(MB. II, 1, 3).

18. In the evening boiled rice-grains with milk (are prepared).

19. Of that (milk-rice) he should make oblations with (the formulas), 'To Sravana, to Vishnu, to Agni, to Pragâpati, to the Visve devâs Svâhâ!'

20. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka rite.

21. To the north of the fire he places a bunch of Darbha grass with roots, and murmurs the Mantra, 'Soma the king' (ibid. 4), and, 'The agreement which you have made' (ibid. 5).

15. Literally, 'turning round, following his left arm.' Comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 3, 2. The Mantra runs thus, 'O king of Serpents, dwelling towards the south (the west, the north), this is thy Bali!'

16. Comp. Sûtra 11 and the note.

17. Comp. below, IV, 5, 3.

20. Grihya-samgraha I, 114: 'Where the technical expression is used, "The rest according to the rite of the Sthâlpâkas," he should, after he has sacrificed the two Âgyabhâgas, pour (Âgya) into the Sruk and cut off (the Avadânas with the Sruk).' Comp. Gobhila I, 8, 3 seq.

22. On the following day he has flour of fried barley-grains prepared, and in a new pot, covering (it with another pot), he puts it up (in his house).

23. (Of that flour) he should silently offer Balis day by day in the evening, before the sacrifice, until the Âgrahâyanî day.

KÂNDIKÂ 8.

1. On the full-moon day of (the month) Âsvayuga, at the Prishâtaka ceremony, a mess of boiled rice-grains with milk, sacred to Rudra, (is prepared).

2. Of that (milk-rice) let him sacrifice, the first oblation with (the verse), 'To us, O Mitra and Varuna' (Sâma-veda I, 220), the second with (the verse), 'Not in our offspring' (Rig-veda I, 114, 8),

3. And (eight Âgya oblations) with the 'cow's names' (i.e. with the formulas), 'The lovely one art thou,' &c., with each (name) separately.

4. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâltpâka rite.

5. Having carried the Prishâtaka around the fire, turning his right side towards (the fire), and having caused the Brâhmanas to look at it (i.e. at the Prishâtaka), he should look at it himself with (the verse

23. The sacrifice is that prescribed in Sûtras 18. 19, which should, as well as the offering of Balis, be daily repeated.

8, 1 seq. The Prishâtaka ceremony; comp. Khâdira-Grîhya III, 3, 1 seq. A Prishâtaka is a mixture of milk or of curds with Âgya; comp. Khâd. I. I. 3; Grîhya-samgraha II, 59; Sânkhâyana IV, 16, 3 note.

3. The 'cow's names' are given in the Grîhya-samgraha II, 60; of the nine names given there the last is omitted at the Prishâtaka ceremony.

4. See above, chap. 7, 20 and the note.

repeated by the Brâhmanas and by the sacrificer), 'That bright eye, created by the gods, which rises on the east—may we see it a hundred autumns; may we live a hundred autumns!'

6. After he has entertained the Brâhmanas with food and has eaten himself, (the sacrificer and his family) should tie (to their arms, necks, &c.) amulets made of lac together with all sorts of herbs, for the sake of prosperity.

7. In the evening he should feed the cows with the Prishâtaka, and should let the calves join them.

8. Thus (the cows) will thrive.

9. At the sacrifice of the first fruits a mess of boiled rice-grains with milk, sacred to Indra and Agni, (is prepared).

10. Having sacrificed first a Havis offering of that (milk-rice), he sacrifices over that (oblation) four Âgya oblations with (the verses), 'To him who bears a hundred weapons,' &c. (MB. II, 1, 9-12).

11. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka rite.

12. The rest of the remnants of the sacrificial food he should give to eat to all (persons present) who have received the initiation (Upanayana).

13. Having 'spread under' water once, he should cut off two portions of the boiled rice-grains.

14. Three (portions are cut off) by descendants of Bhrîgu.

15. And over (these portions) water (is poured).

16. (After the food has been prepared in this

9 seq. The sacrifice of the first fruits; comp. Khâdira-Grîhya III, 3, 6 seq.

11. See chap. 7, 20 and the note.

16, 20. Instead of asamsvâdam, samsvâdayeran, I read way), he should swallow it without chewing it, with (the Mantra), 'From the good to the better' (ibid. 13).

17. In the same way three times.

18. Silently a fourth time.

19. After he has cut off a greater portion,

20. They may, if they like, chew that.

21. Having sipped water, they should touch their mouths, their heads, and their limbs from above downwards, with (the verse), 'This art thou' (ibid. 14).

22. In the same way (sacrifices of the first fruits are performed) of Syâmâka (panicum frumentaceum) and of barley.

23. (At the sacrifice) of Syâmâka (the Mantra with which the food is partaken of [comp. Sûtra 16], is), 'May Agni eat as the first' (ibid. 15).

24. (At the sacrifice) of barley, 'This barley, mixed with honey' (ibid. 16).

KÂNDIKÂ 9.

1. On the Âgrahâyana day (or the full-moon day of the month Mârgasrsha) Bali-offerings (are made).

2. They have been explained by the Srâvana sacrifice.

3. He does not murmur (here) the Mantra, 'Adoration to the Earth's.'

asamkhâdam, samkhâdayeran. Comp. Khâdira-Grîhya III, 3, 13: asamkhâdya pragiret, and the quotations in Böhlingk-Roth's Dictionary s. v. sam-khâd and â-svad.

9, 1 seq. The Âgrahâyana ceremony by which the rites devoted to the Serpents are concluded. Khâdira-Grîhya III, 3, 16 seq.

2. See above, chap. 7.

3. Comp. chap. 7, 17: To the west of that fire he touches the

4. In the morning, after he has sacrificed the (regular) morning oblation, he should have the following (plants and branches of trees) fetched, viz. Darbha grass, a Samt (branch), Vriṇa grass, a (Badari branch) with fruits, Apâmârga, and Sirtsha. He then should silently throw (a portion) of flour of fried barley into the fire, should cause the Brâhmanas to pronounce auspicious wishes, and should circumambulate the house, turning his right side towards it, starting from the room for the (sacred) fire, striking the smoke (of the sacred fire) with those objects (i. e. with the plants and branches mentioned above).

5. He should throw away those objects, after he has made use of them.

6. On solid stones he places a water-barrel with the two (Sâmans belonging to the verse), 'Vâstoshpati' (Sâma-veda I, 275) and with (that) Rik (itself).

7. Let him pour two pots of water into that barrel with this verse, 'Some assemble' (Sâma-veda-Âranyakâ, vol. ii, p. 292, ed. Bibl. Indica).

8. In the evening boiled rice-grains with milk (are prepared).

9. Of that (milk-rice) he should make an oblation with (the Mantra), 'She shone forth as the first' (MB. II, 2, 1).

10. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka rite.

earth with his two hands turned downwards, and murmurs the Mantra, 'Adoration to the Earth's.'

6. He sings the two Kâvasha Sâmans of which the verse Sâma-veda I, 275 is considered as the Yoni, and then repeats that verse itself.

8. This Sûtra is identical with chap. 7, 18.

10. Comp. chap. 7, 20 note.

11. To the west of the fire he touches the Barhis with his two hands turned downwards, and murmurs the Vyâhr̥itis (i. e. the solemn utterances), 'In the Kshatra I establish myself' (ibid. 2. 3).

12. To the west of the fire he should have a layer spread out,

13. Of northward-pointed grass,

14. Inclined towards the north.

15. After they have spread out on that (grass) new rugs, the householder sits down (thereon) on the southern side.

16. Then without an interval the others according to their age,

17. And without an interval their wives, each with her children.

18. When they are seated, the householder touches the layer (of grass) with his two hands turned downwards, and murmurs the verse, 'Be soft to us, O Earth' (ibid. 4).

19. When he has finished that (verse), they lie down on their right sides.

20. In the same way (they lie down on their right sides) three times, turning themselves towards themselves (i. e. turning round forwards, not backwards, and thus returning to their former position ?).

21. They repeat the auspicious hymns as far as they know them ;

22. The complex of Sâmans called Arish̥ta, according to some (teachers).

20. The explanation which the commentary gives of this difficult Sûtra can hardly be accepted: trir âvṛitya tri/kr̥ito-bhyasya . . . abhyâtmanam âtmano gr̥ihapater âbhimukhyena, âtmana ârabhyety arthaḥ. katham nâma? yenaiva kramenopavishṭhâ tenaiva kramena samvesanam trir âvartâyeyuḥ.

22. The commentary gives a second name for this Sâman

23. Having touched water, they may do whatever they like.

KÂNDIKÂ 10.

1. The Ashṭakâ (is a festival) sacred to the night.

2. It procures prosperity.

3. It is sacred to Agni, or to the Manes, or to Prajāpati, or to the Seasons, or to the Visve devās—thus the deity (to which the Ashṭakâ is sacred), is investigated (by different teachers).

4. There are four Ashṭakâs in (the four months of) the winter ;

5. These all he should endeavour to celebrate with (offerings of) meat ;

6. Thus says Kautsa.

7. (There are only) three Ashṭakâs (in the winter), says Audgâhamâni,

8. And so say (also) Gautama and Vârkakhandi.

9. The eighth day of the dark fortnight after the Âgrahâyanî is called Apûpâshṭakâ (i. e. Ashṭakâ of the cakes).

10. Having prepared grains in the way prescribed litany, arishabhaṅga. Nârâyana says: abodhy agnir (Sv. I, 73) mahi trîṇâm (I, 192) iti dve tvāvata (I, 193) ityâdikam sarvaloka-prasiddham prayugya.

10, 1 seq. The Ashṭakâ festivals; Khâdira-Grîhya III, 3, 28. Comp. Sâṅkhâya-Grîhya III, 12, 1 note (S. B. E. XXIX, 102).

4, 7. As to the difference of opinion regarding the number of Ashṭakâs, comp. Weber, Naxatra, second article, p. 337. Gobhila himself follows the opinion of Audgâhamâni, for he mentions only three Ashṭakâs in the winter season, the first following after the Âgrahâyanî full moon (chap. 10, 9), the second after the Taishî (10, 18), and the third after the Mâghî (IV, 4, 17).

10. See above, I, 7, 2 seq.

for Sthâlpâkas, he cooks (those grains and prepares thus) a karu.

11. And (besides he prepares) eight cakes, without turning them over in the dish (in which he bakes them);

12. (Each) in one dish;

13. Without Mantras, according to Audgâhamâni;

14. Of the size of the (cakes) sacred to Tryambaka.

15. After he has baked them, he should pour (Âgya) on them, should take them from the fire towards the north, and should pour (Âgya) on them again.

16. In the way prescribed for Sthâlpâkas he cuts off (the prescribed portions) from the mess of boiled grains and from the cakes, and sacrifices with (the words), 'To the Ashṭakâ Svâhâ!'

17. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka rite.

18. (At the second Ashṭakâ, on) the eighth day after the full-moon day of Taisha, a cow (is sacrificed).

19. Shortly before the time of junction (of day and night, i. e. before the morning twilight) he should place that (cow) to the east of the fire, and when (that time) has come, he should sacrifice (Âgya) with

11. Grhya-samgraha II, 71 : prithakkapâlân kurvîta apûpân ashṭakâvidhau.

14. Regarding the Traiyambaka cakes, comp. Kâtyâyana Srauta-sûtra V, 10, 1 seq.; Vaitâna-sûtra IX, 18, &c.

16. See above, I, 8, 5 seq.

17. Comp. chap. 7, 20 note.

18. With the following paragraphs the Srauta rites of the animal sacrifice should be compared; see J. Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer (Erlangen, 1886).

(the verse), 'What, O beasts, you think' (MB. II, 2, 5).

20. And after having sacrificed, he should recite over (the cow the verse), 'May thy mother give leave to thee' (ibid. 6).

21. Let him sprinkle (the cow) with water in which barley is, with (the words), 'Agreeable to the Ashṭakâ I sprinkle thee.'

22. Let him carry a fire-brand round it with (the verse), 'The lord of goods, the sage (goes) round' (Sâma-veda I, 30).

23. Let him give it water to drink.

24. The remainder of what it has drunk he should pour out under (the feet of) the beast with (the formula), 'Away from the gods the Havis has been taken' (MB. II, 2, 7).

25. They then walk in a northerly direction (from the fire) and kill (the cow),

26. The head of which is turned to the east, the feet to the north, if the rite is sacred to the gods,

27. The head to the south, the feet to the west, if the rite is sacred to the Manes.

28. After it has been killed, he should sacrifice (Āgrya) with (the verse), 'If the beast has lowed' (ibid. 8).

29. And (the sacrificer's) wife should get water and should wash all the apertures of the cow's body.

30. They lay two purifiers (i. e. grass-blades) on (the cow's body) near its navel, cut it up in the direction of its hairs, and draw the omentum out.

31. He should spit it on two pieces of wood, on one (simple) branch and on another forked branch, should besprinkle it (with water), and should roast it.

32. When it has ceased to drop, he should say,
'Hew the (cow) to pieces—

33. 'So that the blood does not stain the ground to the east of the fire.'

34. After he has roasted (the omentum), he should pour (Āgya) on it, should take it from the fire towards the north, and should pour (Āgya) on it again.

35. After he has cut off (the prescribed portions from) the omentum in the way prescribed for Sthālpākas, or in the way prescribed for the Svishṭakṛit (oblation), he sacrifices with (the words), 'To the Ashṭakā Svāhā!'

36. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthālīpāka rite. The rest according to the Sthālīpāka rite.

End of the Third Prapāṭhaka.

32. In the text we ought to read visasata, as Dr. Knauer has observed.

35. The regulations concerning the Avadānas are given for Sthālīpākas, I, 8, 5 seq., and for the Svishṭakṛit oblation, I, 8, 11 seq.

36. Comp. III, 7, 20 note.

PRAPÂTHAKA IV, KÂNDIKÂ 1.

1. He throws the two spits into the fire ;
2. That which consists of one (simple) branch, towards the east, the other one towards the west.
3. They cut off the Avadâna portions from all its limbs,
4. With the exception of the left thigh and the lungs.
5. The left thigh he should keep for the Anvashtakyâ ceremony.
6. On the same fire he cooks one mess of rice-grains and one of meat, stirring up the one and the other separately, from left to right, with two pot-ladles.
7. After he has cooked them, he should pour (Âgya) on them, should take them from the fire towards the north, and should pour (Âgya) on them again.
8. Having poured the juice (of the Avadânas) into a brazen vessel,
9. And having placed the Avadânas on a layer (of grass) on which branches of the Plaksha (tree) have been spread,
10. He cuts off (the prescribed portions) from the

1, 1. Comp. III, 10, 31.

3. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Grihya I, 11, 12 ; Khâdira-Grihya III, 4, 14 seq.

6. 'He cooks a mess of meat'—i.e. he cooks the Avadânas.
Comp. Khâdira-Grihya, l. l. 17 ; Âsv.-Grihya I, 11, 12.

10. See I, 8, 5 seq.

Avadânas in the way prescribed for Sthâlpâkas, (and puts those portions) into (another) brazen vessel ;

11. And (the portion) for the Svishṭakṛit oblation separately.

12. Taking of the mess of boiled rice-grains (Sûtra 6) a portion of the size of a Bilva fruit, he should mix that, together with the Avadânas (Sûtra 10), with the juice (Sûtra 8).

13. Taking a fourfold portion of Âgya he should sacrifice it with the first of the eight Rikas, ' Entering into fire, the fire ' (MB. II, 2, 9-16).

14. Of the mixture (Sûtra 12) he cuts off the third part and sacrifices it with the second and third (verse).

15. He places the word Svâhâ after the second (of those verses, i.e. after the third verse of the whole Mantra).

16. In the same way he sacrifices the other two-thirds (of that mixture, the one) with the fourth and fifth (verse), and (the other) with the sixth and seventh (verse).

17. Having cut off the rest, he should sacrifice the oblation to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit with the eighth (verse).

18. Even if he be very deficient in wealth, he should celebrate (the Ashṭakâ) with (the sacrifice of) an animal.

19. Or he should sacrifice a Sthâlpâka.

20. Or he should offer food to a cow.

20 seq. Regarding these Sûtras, which occur nearly identically in Sâṅkhâya III, 14, 4 seq., Âsvalâyana II, 4, 8-11, comp. the note, vol. xxix, p. 105.

21. Or he should burn down brushwood in the forest and should say, 'This is my Ashṭakā.'

22. But let him not neglect to do (one of these things). But let him not neglect to do (one of these things).

KĀNDIKĀ 2.

1. On the following day the Anvashṭakya (ceremony is performed),

2. Or on the day which follows after that.

3. To the south-east (of the house), in the intermediate direction (between south and east), they partition off (a place with mats or the like).

4. The long-side (of that place should lie) in the same (direction).

5. They should perform (the ceremonies) turning their faces towards the same (direction).

6. (It should measure) at least four prakramas (i.e. steps).

7. (It should have) its entrance from the west.

8. In the northern part of that enclosure they make the Lakshana and carry the fire (to that place).

9. To the west of the fire he places a mortar so that it stands firmly, and husks, holding his left hand uppermost, one handful of rice-grains which he has seized with one grasp.

21. I believe that we ought to correct upadhāya into upadahya. Sāṅkhāyana III, 14, 5: api vāranye kaksham apādahet. Āśvalāyana II, 4, 9: agninā vā kaksham upośhet.

2, 1 seq. The Anvashṭakya ceremony; comp. Khādīra-Grīhya III, 5, 1 seq.

8. 'They make the Lakshana' means, they prepare the ground on which the fire shall be established, by drawing the five lines. See above, I, 1, 9. 10; Grīhya-samgraha I, 47 seq.

10. When (the rice) has been husked,
11. He should once carefully remove the husks.
12. And then he should cut off a lump of flesh from that thigh and should cut it in small pieces on a new slaughtering-bench,
13. (With the intention) that the Pindas (or lumps of food offered to the Manes) should be thoroughly mixed up with flesh.
14. On the same fire he cooks one mess of rice-grains and one of meat, stirring up the one and the other separately, from right to left, with the two pot-ladles.
15. After he has cooked them, he should pour (Āgya) on them, should take them from the fire towards the south, and should not pour (Āgya) on them again.
16. In the southern part of the enclosure (Sūtras 3 seq.) he should have three pits dug, so that the eastern (pit is dug) first,
17. One span in length, four inches in breadth and in depth.
18. Having made the Lakṣhaṇa to the east of the eastern pit, they carry the fire (to that place).
19. Having carried the fire round the pits on their west side, he should put it down on the Lakṣhaṇa.
20. He strews (round the fire) one handful of Darbha grass which he has cut off in one portion.

12. As to the words 'from that thigh,' comp. above, chap. 1, 5.

14. Comp. chap. 1, 6. The sacrificial food is stirred up here from right to left, not from left to right, because it is sacred to the Manes. The mess of meat consists of the meat treated of in Sūtra 11.

15. Comp. above, chap. 1, 7.

18, 19. As to lakṣhaṇa, comp. Sūtra 8 note.

21. And (he strews it into) the pits,
22. Beginning with the eastern (pit).
23. To the west of the pits he should have a layer spread out,
24. Of southward-pointed Kusa grass,
25. Inclined towards the south.
26. And he should put a mat on it.
27. To that (layer of grass) they fetch for him (the following sacrificial implements), one by one, from right to left :
28. The two pots in which sacrificial food has been cooked (Sûtra 14), the two pot-ladles (Sûtra 14), one brazen vessel, one Darvî (spoon), and water.
29. (The sacrificer's) wife places a stone on the Barhis and pounds (on that stone the fragrant substance called) Sthagara.
30. And on the same (stone) she grinds some collyrium, and anoints therewith three Darbha blades, including the interstices (between the single blades?).
31. He should also get some oil made from sesamum seeds,
32. And a piece of linen tape.
33. After he has invited an odd number of blameless Brâhmanas, whose faces should be turned towards the north, to sit down on a pure spot,

27. The last words of the Sûtra, translated literally, would be : 'following the left arm.' Comp. Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grihya II, 3, 2. They place the different objects aprâdakshinyena.

29. See chap. 3, 16.

30. See chap. 3, 13.

31. See chap. 3, 15.

32. See chap. 3, 24.

33. As to the two classes of paitrika and daivika Brâhmanas, comp. the note on Sâṅkhâyaṇa IV, 1, 2.

34. And has given them Darbha grass (in order that they may sit down thereon),

35. He gives them (pure) water and afterwards sesamum-water, pronouncing his father's name, 'N. N.! To thee this sesamum-water, and to those who follow thee here, and to those whom thou followest. To thee Svadhâ!'

36. After he has touched water, (he does) the same for the other two.

37. In the same way (he gives them) perfumes.

38. The words in which he addresses (the Brâhmanas) when going to sacrifice, are, 'I shall offer it into the fire.'

39. After they have replied, 'Offer it,' he should cut off (the prescribed portions) from the two messes of cooked food (Sûtra 14), (and should put those portions) into the brazen vessel. He then should sacrifice, picking out (portions of the Havis) with the pot-ladle, the first (oblation) with (the words), 'Svâhâ to Soma Pitrimat,' the second with (the words), 'Svâhâ to Agni Kavyavâhana' (MB. II, 3, 1. 2).

34. Comp. the note, p. 932 of the edition of Gobhila in the Bibliotheca Indica.

35. Regarding the sesamum-water (i. e. water into which sesamum seeds have been thrown), comp. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya IV, 7, 11.

36. He repeats the same ceremony, pronouncing his grandfather's, instead of his father's, name; then he repeats it for his great-grandfather.

37. He gives perfumes to the Brâhmanas, addressing first his father, then his grandfather and his great-grandfather.

38, 39. Comp. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya IV, 7, 18 seq. Regarding the term upaghâtamguhuyât, comp. Grîhya-samgraha I, 111 seq. and Professor Bloomfield's note. Regarding the oblation made to Agni Kavyavâhana, comp. Âpastamba VIII, 15, 20 : Agnim Kavyavâhanam Svishakṛīdarthe yagati.

KÂNDIKÂ 3.

1. From now onwards he has to perform (the rites) wearing his sacrificial cord over his right shoulder and keeping silence.

2. With his left hand he should seize a Darbha blade and should (therewith) draw (in the middle of the three pits) a line from north to south, with (the formula), 'The Asuras have been driven away' (MB. II, 3, 3).

3. Seizing, again with his left hand, a fire-brand, he should place it on the south side of the pits with (the verse), 'They who assuming (manifold) shapes' (ibid. 4).

4. He then calls the Fathers (to his sacrifice) with (the verse), 'Come hither, ye Fathers, who have drunk Soma' (ibid. 5).

5. He then should place pâtra vessels of water near the pits.

6. Seizing, again with his left hand, (the first) vessel, he should pour it out from right to left on the Darbha grass in the eastern pit, pronouncing his father's name, 'N. N.! Wash thyself, and (may) those who follow thee here, and those whom thou followest, (wash themselves). To thee Svadhâ!'

7. After he has touched water, (he does) the same for the other two.

8. Seizing, again with his left hand, the Darvî spoon, he should cut off one-third of the mixture (of 3, 1. Comp. I, 2, 3 seq.

2. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra IV, 1, 8.

3. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra IV, 1, 9.

6. Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra IV, 1, 10.

7. See chap. 2, 36.

the different kinds of sacrificial food) and should put down (that Pinda), from right to left, on the Darbha grass in the eastern pit, pronouncing his father's name, 'N. N.! This Pinda is thine, and of those who follow thee here, and of those whom thou followest. To thee Svadhâ!'

9. After he has touched water, (he does) the same for the other two.

10. If he does not know their names, he should put down the first Pinda with (the formula), 'Svadhâ to the Fathers dwelling on the earth,' the second with (the formula), 'Svadhâ to the Fathers dwelling in the air,' the third with (the formula), 'Svadhâ to the Fathers dwelling in heaven.'

11. After he has put down (the three Pindas), he murmurs, 'Here, O Fathers, enjoy yourselves; show your manly vigour each for his part' (MB. II, 3, 6).

12. He should turn away, (should hold his breath,) and turning back before he emits his breath, he should murmur, 'The Fathers have enjoyed themselves; they have shown their manly vigour each for his part' (ibid. 7).

13. Seizing, again with his left hand, a Darbha blade (anointed with collyrium; chap. 2, 30), he should put it down, from right to left, on the Pinda in the eastern pit, pronouncing his father's name, 'N. N.! This collyrium is thine, and is that of those who follow thee here, and of those whom thou followest. To thee Svadhâ!'

14. After he has touched water, (he does) the same for the other two.

15. In the same way (he offers) the oil (to the fathers);

9, 14. See chap. 2, 36.

15. See chap. 2, 31.

16. In the same way the perfume.

17. Then he performs the deprecation (in the following way) :

18. On the eastern pit he lays his hands, turning the inside of the right hand upwards, with (the formula), 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of life! Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of vital breath!' (MB. II, 3, 8);

19. On the middle (pit), turning the inside of the left hand upwards, with (the formula), 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of terror! Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of sap!' (MB., loc. cit.);

20. On the last (pit), turning the inside of the right hand upwards, with (the formula), 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of comfort! Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of wrath!' (MB. II, 3, 9).

21. Then joining his hands he murmurs, 'Adoration to you, O Fathers! O Fathers! Adoration to you!' (MB., loc. cit.).

22. He looks at his house with (the words), 'Give us a house, O Fathers!' (MB. II, 3, 10).

23. He looks at the Pindas with (the words), 'May we give you an abode, O Fathers!' (MB. II, 3, 11).

24. Seizing, again with his left hand, the linen thread, he should put it down, from right to left, on the Pinda in the eastern pit, pronouncing his father's

16. See chap. 2, 29.

18 seq. Comp. Vâg. Samhitâ II, 32.

23. The Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ (loc. cit.) has the reading, sato vaḥ pitaro deshma, 'May we give you, O Fathers, of what we possess!'

24. Comp. chap. 2, 32.

name, 'N. N.! This garment is thine, and is that of those who follow thee here, and of those whom thou followest. To thee Svadhâ!' (MB. II, 3, 12).

25. After he has touched water, (he does) the same for the other two.

26. Seizing, again with his left hand, the vessel of water (Sûtra 5), he should sprinkle (water) round the Pindas from right to left, with (the verse), 'Bringing sap' (MB. II, 3, 13).

27. The middle Pinda (offered to the grandfather) the wife (of the sacrificer) should eat, if she is desirous of a son, with (the verse), 'Give fruit to the womb, O Fathers' (MB. II, 3, 14).

28. Or of those Brâhmanas (that person) who receives the remnants (of the sacrificial food, should eat that Pinda).

29. Having besprinkled (and thus extinguished) the fire-brand (Sûtra 3) with water, with (the verse), 'Gâtavedas has been our messenger for what we have offered' (MB. II, 3, 15)—

30. (The sacrificer) should besprinkle the sacrificial vessels, and should have them taken back, two by two.

31. The Pindas he should throw into water,

32. Or into the fire which has been carried forward (to the east side of the pits, chap. 2, 18),

33. Or he should give them to a Brâhmaṇa to eat,

34. Or he should give them to a cow.

35. On the occasion of a lucky event (such as the birth of a son, &c.) or of a meritorious work (such as the dedication of a pond or of a garden) he should give food to an even number (of Brâhmanas).

25. See chap. 2, 36.

35. Comp. Sāṅkhâyaṇa-Gr̥hya IV, 4.

36. The rite (is performed) from left to right.
 37. Barley is used instead of sesamum.

KĀNDIKĀ 4.

1. By (the description of) the Sthālīpāka offered at the Anvashṭakya ceremony the Pindapitriyagñā has been declared ;
2. This is a Srāddha offered on the day of the new moon.
3. Another (Srāddha) is the Anvāhārya.
4. (It is performed) monthly.
5. The Havis is prepared (by one who has set up the sacred Srauta fires) in the Dakshināgni (i.e. in that of the three fires which is situated towards the south).
6. And from the same (fire the fire is taken which)

36, 37. Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya IV, 4, 6. 9. Regarding the use of sesamum seeds, see above, chap. 2, 35.

4, 1. Khādīra-Gr̥hya III, 5, 35. Comp. M. M., 'India, what can it teach us?' p. 240. The word Sthālīpāka is used here, as is observed in the commentary, in order to exclude the mess of meat (chap. 2, 14) from the rites of the Pindapitriyagñā.

3. Anvāhārya literally means, what is offered (or given) after something else, supplementary. In the commentary on Gobhila, p. 666, a verse is quoted :

amāvāsyām dvitīyam yad anvāhāryam tad ukṛyate,

'The second (Srāddha) which is performed on the day of the new moon, that is called anvāhārya.' First comes the Pindapitriyagñā, and then follows the Anvāhārya Srāddha ; the last is identical with the Pārvana Srāddha, which is described as the chief form of Srāddha ceremonies, for instance in Sāṅkhāyana-Gr̥hya IV, 1. Comp. Manu III, 122. 123, and Kullūka's note ; M. M., 'India, what can it teach us?' p. 240.

5. According to the commentary this and the following Sūtras refer only to the Pindapitriyagñā, not to the Anvāhārya Srāddha. Comp. Khādīra-Gr̥hya III, 5, 36-39.

is carried forward (in order to be used at the ceremonies).

7. In the domestic fire (the Havis is prepared) by one who has not set up the (Srauta) fires.

8. One pit (only is made);

9. To the south of it the fire has its place.

10. Here the laying down of the fire-brand is omitted,

11. And (the spreading out of) the layer (of grass),

12. And the anointing (of the bunches of Darbha grass), and the anointing (of the Fathers),

13. And the (offering of) perfume,

14. And the ceremony of deprecation.

15. (The ceremony performed with) the vessel of water forms the conclusion (of the Pindapitriyagña).

16. He should, however, put down one garment (for the Fathers in common).

17. On the eighth day after the full moon of Māgha a Sthâlpâka (is prepared).

18. He should sacrifice of that (Sthâlpâka).

19. 'To the Ashvakâ Svâhâ!'—with (these words) he sacrifices.

20. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka rite.

21. Vegetables (are taken instead of meat) as ingredient to the Anvâhârya (-rice).

22. At animal sacrifices offered to the Fathers let

9. See chap. 2, 18.

11. Chap. 2, 23.

13. Chap. 3, 16.

15. Chap. 3, 26.

17-21. Description of the third Ashvakâ festival.

20. Comp. above, III, 7, 20 note.

21. Comp. IV, 1, 12.

10. See chap. 3, 3.

12. Chap. 2, 30; 3, 13.

14. Chap. 3, 17 seq.

16. Comp. chap. 3, 24, 25.

him sacrifice the omentum with (the verse), 'Carry the omentum, O Gâtavedas, to the Fathers' (MB. II, 3, 16);

23. At (such sacrifices) offered to the gods, with (the verse), 'Gâtavedas, go to the gods with the omentum' (ibid. 17).

24. If no (god to whom the sacrifice should be offered, and no Mantra with which the oblation should be made) is known, he sacrifices, assigning (his offering to the personified rite which he is performing), thus as (for instance), 'To the Ashvakâ Svâhâ!'

25. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka rite.

26. If a debt turns up (which he cannot pay), he should sacrifice with the middle leaf of Golakas, with (the verse), 'The debt which' (MB. II, 3, 18).

27. Now (follows) the putting into motion of the plough.

28. Under an auspicious Nakshatra he should cook a mess of sacrificial food and should sacrifice to the following deities, namely, to Indra, to the Maruts, to Parganya, to Asani, to Bhaga.

29. And he should offer (Âgya) to Sîtâ, Âsâ, Aradâ, Anaghâ.

30. The same deities (receive offerings) at the

25. See III, 7, 20 note.

26. I am not sure about the translation of the words golakânâṁ madhyamaparṇena. The ordinary meaning of golaka is 'ball,' see, for instance, Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Gṛhya IV, 19, 4. The commentary says, golakânâṁ palâsânâṁ madhyamaparṇena madhyamakkhadena.

29. The name of the third of those rural deities is spelt differently; Dr. Knauer gives the readings, Aradâm, Ara/hâm, Aragam, Ararâm, Aram.

furrow-sacrifice, at the thrashing-floor-sacrifice, at the sowing, at the reaping of the crop, and at the putting of the crop into the barn.

31. And at mole hills he should sacrifice to the king of moles.

32. To Indrāṇī a Sthâlpâka (is prepared).

33. Of that he should make an offering with (the verse), 'The Ekâshakâ, performing austerities' (MB. II, 3, 19).

34. The rest (should be performed) according to the Sthâlpâka ritual. The rest according to the Sthâlpâka ritual.

KÂNDIKÂ 5.

1. At (the sacrifices) for the obtainment of special wishes, which will be henceforth described,

2. And, according to some (teachers), also at (the sacrifices) described above (the following rites should be performed).

3. He should touch the earth, to the west of the fire, with his two hands turned downwards, with (the verse), 'We partake of the earth's' (MB. II, 4, 1).

32-34. Khâdira-Grhya III, 5, 40. I understand that this sacrifice stands in connection with the rural festivals which are treated of in the preceding Sûtras. In the commentary, from the Mantra the conclusion is drawn that the ceremony in question belongs to the day of the Ekâshakâ. But the Ekâshakâ is the Ashakâ of the dark fortnight of Mâgha (see S. B. E. XXIX, 102), and the description of the rites belonging to that day has already been given above, Sûtras 17-21. It very frequently occurs in the Grhya ritual that Mantras are used at sacrifices standing in no connection with those for which they have originally been composed.

5, 1 seq. Comp. Khâdira-Grhya I, 2, 6 seq.

4. In the night-time (he pronounces that Mantra so that it ends with the word) 'goods' (vasu), in the day-time (so that it ends) with 'wealth' (dhanam).

5. With the three verses, 'This praise' (MB. II, 4, 2-4) he should wipe along (with his hands) around (the fire).

6. Before sacrifices the Virûpâksha formula (MB. II, 4, 6) (should be recited).

7. And at (ceremonies) which are connected with special wishes, the Prapada formula (MB. II, 4, 5)—(in the following way) :

8. He should murmur (the Prapada formula), 'Austerities and splendour,' should perform one suppression of breath, and should, fixing his thoughts on the object (of his wish), emit his breath, when beginning the Virûpâksha formula.

9. When undertaking ceremonies for the obtainment of special wishes, let him fast during three (days and) nights,

10. Or (let him omit) three meals.

6-8. Khâdira-Grîhya I, 2, 23 ; Grîhya-samgraha I, 96. It is stated that the recitation of the Virûpâksha and Prapada formulas and also the parisamûhana (Sûtra 5) should be omitted at the so-called Kshiprahomâs, i.e. at sacrifices performed without the assistance of a yagñavid. See Bloomfield's notes on Grîhya-samgraha I, 92. 96. Regarding the way in which a prânâyâma ('suppression of breath') is performed, comp. Vasishṭha XXV, 13 (S. B. E. XIV, p. 126).

9 seq. Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 1, 1 seq.

10. There are two meals a day. The words of this Sûtra, 'Or three meals,' are explained in the commentary in the following way. He should, if he does not entirely abstain from food through three days, take only three meals during that time, i.e. he should take one meal a day. The commentator adds that some read abhaktâni instead of bhaktâni ('or he should omit three meals'), in which case the result would be the same. I prefer the reading

11. At such ceremonies, however, as are repeated regularly, (let him do so only) before their first performance.

12. He should (simply) fast, however, before such ceremonies as are performed on sacrificial days (i. e. on the first day of the fortnight).

13. (At a ceremony) which ought to be performed immediately (after the occurrence by which it has been caused), the consecration follows after (the ceremony itself).

14. Let him recite the Prapada formula (Sŭtras 7. 8), sitting in the forest on Darbha grass,

15. Of which the panicles are turned towards the east, if he is desirous of holy lustre,

16. To the north, if desirous of sons and of cattle,

17. To both directions, if desirous of both.

18. One who desires that his stock of cattle may increase, should offer a sacrifice of rice and barley bhaktâni, and propose to supply, not, 'he should eat,' but 'he should omit' ('abhoganam,' Sŭtra 9). Possibly the meaning is that three successive meals should be omitted; thus also the compiler of the Khâdira-Gr̥hya seems to have understood this Sŭtra.

11. Comp., for instance, below, chap. 6, 1.

12. Comp. below, chaps. 6, 4; 8, 23.

13. My translation of this Sŭtra differs from the commentary. There it is said: 'An occurrence which is perceived only when it has happened (sannipatitam eva), and of which the cause by which it is produced is unknown, for instance the appearance of a halo, is called sannipâtika. Such sannipâtika ceremonies are uparishâddaiksha. The dīkshâ is the preparatory consecration (of the sacrificer), for instance by three days of fasting. A ceremony which has its dīkshâ after itself is called uparishâddaiksha.' Similarly the commentary on Khâdira-Gr̥hya IV, 1, 3 says, 'uparishât sannipâtike naimittike karma kṛtvâbhoganam.'

with (the verse), 'He who has a thousand arms, the protector of cow-keepers' (MB. II, 4, 7).

19. Having murmured the Kautomata verse (ibid. 8) over fruits of a big tree, he should give them—

20. To a person whose favour he wishes to gain.

21. One (fruit) more (than he gives to that person), an even number (of fruits), he should keep himself.

22. There are the five verses, 'Like a tree' (MB. II, 4, 9-13).

23. With these firstly a ceremony (is performed) for (obtaining property on) the earth.

24. He should fast one fortnight,

25. Or, if he is not able (to do so, he may drink) once a day rice-water,

26. In which he can see his image.

27. This observance (forms part) of (all) fortnightly observances.

28. He then should in the full-moon night plunge up to his navel into a pool which does not dry up, and should sacrifice at the end of (each of those five) verses fried grains with his mouth into the water, with the word Svâhâ.

29. Now (follows) another (ceremony with the same five verses).

30. With the first (verse) one who is desirous of the enjoyment (of riches), should worship the sun, within sight of (that) person rich in wealth (from

23. The commentary explains pârthivam, 'pr̥thiviyartham kriyate, iti pârthivam, grâmakshetrâdyartham;' similarly the commentary on Khâdira-Grihya IV, 1, 13 says, 'pr̥thivîpatitvaprâptyartham idam uktam karma.'

27. Comp. below, chap. 6, 12.

28. Grihya-samgraha II, 11.

whom he hopes to obtain wealth); then he will obtain wealth.

31. With the second (verse) one who desires that his stock of horses and elephants may increase, should sacrifice fried grains, while the sun has a halo.

32. With the third (verse) one who desires that his flocks may increase, (should sacrifice) sesamum seeds, while the moon (has a halo).

33. Having worshipped the sun with the fourth (verse), let him acquire wealth; then he will come back safe and wealthy.

34. Having worshipped the sun with the fifth (verse) let him return to his house. He will safely return home; he will safely return home.

KÂNDIKÂ 6.

1. Let him daily repeat (the formula), 'Bhûh!' (MB. II, 4, 14) in order to avert involuntary death.

2. (He who does so) has nothing to fear from serious diseases or from sorcery.

3. (The ceremony for) driving away misfortune (is as follows).

4. It is performed on the sacrificial day (i. e. on the first day of the fortnight).

5. (Oblations are made with the six verses), 'From the head' (MB. II, 5, 1 seq.), verse by verse.

6. The seventh (verse is), 'She who athwart' (MB. I, 5, 6).

7. (Then follow) the verses of the Vâmadevyā,

6, 1 seq. Comp. Khâdîra-Grîhya IV, 1, 19 seq.

4. Comp. above, chap. 5, 12.

6. Comp. above, II, 7, 14.

7. The text belonging to the Vâmadevyā Sâman, is the Trika, Sâma-veda II, 32-34.

8. (And) the Mahâvyâhr̥itis.

9. The last (verse) is, 'Pragâpati' (MB. II, 5, 8).

10. With the formula, 'I am glory' (MB. II, 5, 9) one who is desirous of glory should worship the sun in the forenoon, at noon, and in the afternoon,

11. Changing (the words), 'of the forenoon' (into 'of the noon,' and 'of the afternoon,' accordingly).

12. Worshipping (the sun) at the time of the morning twilight and of the evening twilight procures happiness, (both times) with (the formula), 'O sun! the ship' (MB. II, 5, 14), and (after that) in the morning with (the formula), 'When thou risest, O sun, I shall rise with thee' (ibid. 15); in the evening with (the formula), 'When thou goest to rest, O sun, I shall go to rest with thee' (ibid. 16).

13. One who desires to gain a hundred cart-loads (of gold), should keep the vow (of fasting) through one fortnight and should on the first day of a dark fortnight feed the Brâhmaṇas with boiled milk-rice prepared of one Kâṁsa of rice.

14. At the evening twilight (of every day of that fortnight), having left the village in a westerly direction, and having put wood on the fire at a place where

10. According to the commentary the formula ya so -ham bha-vâmi comprises five sections; thus it would include the sections II, 5, 9-13 of the Mantra-Brâhmaṇa. The Mantra quoted next by Gobhila (Sûtra 12) is really MB. II, 5, 14.

13. Comp. chap. 5, 24-27. One Kâṁsa is stated to be a measure equal to one Drona. The more usual spelling is kaṁsa, and this reading is found in the corresponding passage of the Khâdira-Grihya (IV, 2, 1).

14. As to the meaning of kana ('small grain of rice'), comp. Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 32, note 1.

four roads meet, he should sacrifice the small grains (of that rice), turning his face towards the sun, with (the words), 'To Bhala Svâhâ ! To Bhala Svâhâ !' (ibid. 17. 18).

15. (He should repeat those rites) in the same way the two next dark fortnights.

16. During the time between those dark fortnights he should observe chastity till the end (of the rite), till the end (of the rite).

KÂNDIKÂ 7.

1. Let him select the site for building his house—
2. On even ground, which is covered with grass, which cannot be destroyed (by inundations, &c.),
3. On which the waters flow off to the east or to the north,
4. On which plants grow which have no milky juice or thorns, and which are not acrid.
5. The earth should be white, if he is a Brâhmaṇa,
6. Red, if he is a Kshatriya,
7. Black, if he is a Vaisya.
8. (The soil should be) compact, one-coloured, not dry, not salinous, not surrounded by sandy desert, not swampy.
9. (Soil) on which Darbha grass grows, (should be chosen) by one who is desirous of holy lustre,
10. (Soil covered) with big sorts of grass, by one who is desirous of strength,
11. (Soil covered) with tender grass, by one who is desirous of cattle.

12. (The site of the house) should have the form of a brick,
13. Or it should have the form of a round island.
14. Or there should be natural holes (in the ground) in all directions.
15. On such (ground) one who is desirous of fame or strength, should build his house with its door to the east ;
16. One who is desirous of children or of cattle, (should build it) with its door to the north ;
17. One who is desirous of all (those things), (should build it) with its door to the south.
18. Let him not build it with its door to the west.
19. And a back-door.
20. The house-door.
21. So that (he ?) may not be exposed to looks (?).

19-21. I have translated the words of these Sûtras without trying to express any meaning. According to the commentary the meaning is the following: 19. He should not build a house which has its door on the back-side, or which has one front-door and one back-door. 20. The house-door should not face the door of another house. 21. The house-door should be so constructed that the householder cannot be seen by Kândâlas, &c., when he is performing religious acts or when dining in his house. Or, if instead of samlokî the reading samloki is accepted, the Sûtra means: the house-door should be so constructed, that valuable objects, &c., which are in the house, cannot be seen by passers-by.—The commentary on Khâdira-Grihya IV, 2, 15 contains the remark: dvâradvayam (var. lectio, dvâram dvâram) paraspâram rigu na syâd iti kekit. This seems to me to lead to the right understanding of these Sûtras. I think we ought to read and to divide in this way: (19) anudvâram ka. (20. 21) grihadvâram yathâ na samloki syât. ‘And (let him construct) a back-door, so that it does not face the (chief) house-door.’ The Khâdira MSS. have the readings, asallokî, asandraloke, samloka.

22. 'Let him avoid an Asvattha tree on the east-side (of his house), and a Plaksha on the south-side, a Nyagrodha on the west-side, and on the north-side an Udumbara.

23. 'One should say that an Asvattha brings (to the house) danger from fire; one should say that a Plaksha tree brings early death (to the inhabitants of the house), that a Nyagrodha brings oppression through (hostile) arms, that an Udumbara brings diseases of the eye.

24. 'The Asvattha is sacred to the sun, the Plaksha to Yama, the Nyagrodha is the tree that belongs to Varuna, the Udumbara, to Pragâpati.'

25. He should place those (trees) in another place than their proper one,

26. And should sacrifice to those same deities.

27. Let him put wood on the fire in the middle of the house, and sacrifice a black cow,

28. Or a white goat,

22-24. These are Slokas to which the commentary very appropriately, though not exactly in the sense in which it was originally set down, applies the dictum so frequently found in the Brâhmana texts: na hy ekasmâd aksharâd virâdhayanti. Dr. Knauer's attempts to restore correct Slokas are perhaps a little hazardous; he inserts in the third verse ka after plakshas, and in the second he changes the first brûyât into ka, whereby the second foot of the hemistich loses its regular shape $\cup - - -$, and receives instead of it the form $\cup \cup - \cup$.

25. He should remove an Asvattha tree from the east-side, &c.

26. He should sacrifice to the deities to whom the transplanted trees are sacred.

27 seq. Here begins the description of the vâstusamana, which extends to Sûtra 43. As to the animal sacrifice prescribed in this Sûtra, comp. Dr. Winternitz's essay, Einige Bemerkungen über das Bauopfer bei den Indern (Sitzungsbericht der Anthropol. Gesellschaft in Wien, 19 April, 1887), p. 8.

29. (The one or the other) together with milk-rice.

30. Or (only) milk-rice.

31. Having mingled together the fat (of the animal), Āgrya, its flesh, and the milk-rice,

32. He should take eight portions (of that mixture) and should sacrifice (the following eight oblations):

33. The first (verse, accompanying the first oblation), is, 'Vāstoshpati!' (MB. II, 6, 1).

34. (Then follow) the (three) verses of the Vāma-devya,

35. (And the three) Mahāvyaḥrītis.

36. The last (oblation is offered with the formula), 'To Pragāpati (svāhā).'

37. After he has sacrificed, he should offer ten Balis,

38. In the different directions (of the horizon), from left to right,

39. And in the intermediate points,

40. In due order, without a transposition.

41. (He should offer a Bali) in the east with (the formula), '(Adoration) to Indra!' in the intermediate direction—'To Vāyu!' in the south—'To Yama!' in the intermediate direction—'(Svadhā) to the Fathers!' in the west—'(Adoration) to Varuṇa!' in the intermediate direction—'To Mahārāga!' in the north—'To Soma!' in the intermediate direction—'To Mahendra!' down-

34. Comp. above, chap. 6, 7 note.

36. The commentary says: 'The last oblation should be offered with the formula, "To Pragāpati svāhā!"' Probably we ought to correct the text, Pragāpata ity uttamā, 'the last (verse) is, "Pragāpati!" (MB. II, 5, 8);' see above, IV, 6, 9; Khādira-Gr̥hya IV, 2, 20.

wards—‘To Vāsuki!’ upwards, in the sky (i. e. throwing the Bali into the air), with (the formula), ‘Adoration to Brahman!’

42. To the east, upwards, and downwards this should be done constantly, day by day.

43. (The whole ceremony is repeated) every year or at the two sacrifices of the first fruits.

KĀNDIKĀ 8.

1. At the Sravanâ and Āgrahâyant sacrifices he should leave a remainder of fried grains.

2. Having gone out of the village in an easterly or in a northerly direction, and having put wood on the fire at a place where four roads meet, he should sacrifice (those fried grains) with his joined hands, with the single (verses of the text), ‘Hearken, Râkâ!’ (MB. II, 6, 2–5).

3. Walking eastward (he should), looking upwards, (offer a Bali) to the hosts of divine beings, with (the formula), ‘Be a giver of wealth’ (ibid. 6);

4. (Walking?) towards the side, (he should offer a Bali) to the hosts of other beings, looking downwards.

5. Returning (to the fire) without looking back, he should, together with the persons belonging to his

43. See above, III, 8, 9 seq.

8, 1. See above, III, 7; 9. Comp. Khâdira-Grîhya III, 2, 8 seq.

4. The commentary says: Tiryañ tirasṭīnaṃ yathâ bhavati tathâ, iti kriyâviseshanam etat. athavâ . . . tiryañ tirasṭīnaḥ san. Arvân ought to be corrected to avân (comp. Khâdira-Grîhya III, 2, 13).

5. The commentary explains upetaiḥ simply by samṣpam âgataiḥ.

family, as far as they have been initiated (by the Upanayana), eat the fried grains.

6. (This ceremony) procures happiness.

7. (With the two formulas), 'Obeying the will' and 'Saṅkha' (MB. II, 6, 7. 8), he should sacrifice two oblations of rice and of barley separately,

8. With reference to a person whose favour he wishes to gain.

9. This is done daily.

10. With the Ekāksharyâ verse (MB. II, 6, 9) two rites (are performed) which are connected with the observance (of fasting) for a fortnight.

11. One who is desirous of long life, should sacrifice (with that verse), in the night of the full moon, one hundred pegs of Khadira wood ;

12. Of iron, if he desires that (his enemies) may be killed.

13. Now another ceremony (performed with the same verse).

14. Having gone out of the village in an easterly or in a northerly direction, he should at a place where four roads meet, or on a mountain, set an elevated surface, consisting of the dung of beasts of the forest, on fire, should sweep the coals away, and should make an oblation of butter (on that surface) with his mouth, repeating that Mantra in his mind.

7 seq. Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 2, 24 seq.

7. I.e. he should sacrifice one oblation of rice, and one of barley.

8. Literally, to a person, &c. The meaning is, he should pronounce the name of that person. The Sûtra is repeated from IV, 5, 20; thus its expressions do not exactly fit the connection in which it stands here.

10 seq. Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 3, 1 seq.

15. If (that oblation of butter) catches fire, twelve villages (will be his).

16. If smoke rises, at least three.

17. They call this ceremony one which is not in vain.

18. One who desires that his means of livelihood may not be exhausted, should sacrifice green cow-dung in the evening and in the morning.

19. Of articles which he has bought, he should, after having fasted three (days and) nights, make an oblation with the formula, 'Here this Visvakarman' (MB. II, 6, 10).

20. Of a garment he should offer some threads (with that formula),

21. Of a cow some hairs (of its tail) ;

22. In the same way (he should offer some part) of other articles which he has bought.

23. The sacrifice of a full oblation (with the verse, 'A full oblation I sacrifice,' MB. II, 6, 11) should be performed on the sacrificial day (i.e. on the first day of the fortnight),

24. And (on such a day let him sacrifice) with (the formula), 'Indrāmavadât (?)' (MB. II, 6, 12).

25. One who is desirous of glory, (should offer) the first (oblation); one who is desirous of companions, the second.

18. Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 3, 18. On haritagomayân the commentary has the following note: yaiḥ khalu gomayaiḥ samkule pradese haritâni trinâni prasastâny utpadyante tân kila gomayân haritagomayân âtakshate. te khalv âdrâ ihâbhipreyante. katham gñâyate. teshv eva tatprasiddheḥ.

19. Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 3, 7.

23 seq. Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 3, 8 seq. The Prâtika quoted in Sûtra 24 is corrupt.

KÂNDIKÂ 9.

1. One who desires to become a ruler among men should fast through a period of eight nights.

2. Then he should provide a Sruva spoon, a cup (for water), and fuel, of Udumbara wood,

3. Should go out of the village in an easterly or in a northerly direction, should put wood on the fire at a place where four roads meet,

4. And should sacrifice Âgya, turning his face towards the sun, with (the formulas), ' Food indeed is the only thing that is pervaded by the metres,' and, ' Bliss indeed ' (MB. II, 6, 13. 14) ;

5. A third (oblation) in the village with (the formula), ' The food's essence is ghee ' (ibid. 15).

6. One who is desirous of cattle, (should offer this oblation) in a cow-stable.

7. If (the cow-stable) is damaged by fire (?), (he should offer) a monk's robe.

8. On a dangerous road let him make knots in the skirts of the garments (of himself and of his companions),

9. Approaching those (of the travellers) who wear garments (with skirts).

9, 1 seq. Khâdîra-Grihya IV, 3, 10 seq.

7. Perhaps we ought to follow the commentary and to translate, ' When (the cow-stable) becomes heated (by the fire on which he is going to sacrifice),' &c. (' gosh/~~he~~gnim upasamâdhâyaiva homo na kartavya~~h~~, kin tv agnim upasamâdhâyâpi tâvat pratiksha~~ni~~yam yâvad gosh/~~ham~~ upatapyamânam bhavati'). I have translated kîvaram according to the ordinary meaning of the word ; in the commentary it is taken as equivalent to lauha~~k~~ûr~~am~~ (copper filings).

10. (Let him do so with the three formulas, MB. II, 6, 13-15) with the word Svâhâ at the end of each.

11. This will bring a prosperous journey (to himself) and to his companions. [Or: (He should do the same with the garments) of his companions. This will bring a prosperous journey.]

12. One who desires to gain a thousand cart-loads (of gold), should sacrifice one thousand oblations of flour of fried grains.

13. One who is desirous of cattle, should sacrifice one thousand oblations of the excrements of a male and a female calf;

14. Of a male and a female sheep, if he is desirous of flocks.

15. One who desires that his means of livelihood may not be exhausted, should sacrifice in the evening and in the morning the fallings-off of rice-grains, with (the formulas), 'To Hunger Svâhâ!' 'To Hunger and Thirst Svâhâ!' (MB. II, 6, 16. 17).

16. If somebody has been bitten by a venomous animal, he should murmur (the verse), 'Do not fear, thou wilt not die' (MB. II, 6, 18), and should besprinkle him with water.

17. With (the formula), 'Strong one! Protect' (MB. II, 6, 19), a Snâtaka, when lying down (to sleep), should lay down his bamboo staff near (his bed).

18. This will bring him luck.

19. (The verses), 'Thy worm is killed by Atri' (MB. II, 7, 1-4), he should murmur, besprinkling a place where he has a worm with water.

15. Khâdira-Grhya IV, 3, 6.

16 seq. Khâdira-Grhya IV, 4, 1 seq.

20. If he intends to do this for cattle, he should fetch in the afternoon an earth-clod taken out of a furrow, and should put it down in the open air.

21. In the morning he should strew the dust of it round (the place attacked by worms), and should murmur (the same texts).

KÂNDIKÂ 10.

1. To the north of the place (in which the Arghya reception will be offered to a guest), they should bind a cow (to a post or the like), and should (reverentially) approach it with (the verse), 'Arhanâ putra vâsa' (MB. II, 8, 1).

2. (The guest to whom the Arghya reception is going to be offered) should come forward murmuring, 'Here I tread on this Padyâ Virâg for the sake of the enjoyment of food' (ibid. 2).

3. (He should do so) where they are going to perform the Arghya ceremony for him,

4. Or when they perform it.

5. Let them announce three times (to the guest) separately (each of the following things which are 10, 1 seq. The Arghya reception; Khâdira-Grîhya IV, 4, 5 seq.; Grîhya-saṃgraha II, 62-65. The first words of the Mantra quoted in Sûtra 1 are corrupt. The Mantra is evidently an adaptation of the well-known verse addressed to the Âgrahâyani (Gobhila III, 9, 9; Mantra-Brâhmana II, 2, 1), or to the Ashvakâ (Pâraskara III, 3, 5, 8): prathamâ ha vyuvâsa, &c. The first word arhanâ ('duly'), containing an allusion to the occasion of the Arghya ceremony, to which this Mantra is adapted, seems to be quite right; the third word may be, as Dr. Knauer conjectures, uvâsa ('she has dwelt,' or perhaps rather 'she has shone'). For the second word I am not able to suggest a correction.

2. Regarding Padyâ Virâg, comp. Sâṅkhâya III, 7, 5 note; Pâraskara I, 3, 12.

brought to him): a bed (of grass to sit down on), water for washing the feet, the Argha water, water for sipping, and the Madhuparka (i.e. a mixture of ghee, curds, and honey).

6. Let him spread out the bed (of grass, so that the points of the grass are) turned to the north, with (the verse), 'The herbs which' (MB. II, 8, 3), and let him sit down thereon;

7. If there are two (beds of grass), with the two (verses) separately (MB. II, 8, 3. 4);

8. On the second (he treads) with the feet.

9. Let him look at the water (with which he is to wash his feet), with (the formula), 'From which side I see the goddesses.' (ibid. 5).

10. Let him wash his left foot with (the formula), 'The left foot I wash;' let him wash his right foot with (the formula), 'The right foot I wash' (MB. II, 8, 6. 7);

11. Both with the rest (of the Mantra, i.e. with the formula), 'First the one, then the other' (II, 8, 8).

12. Let him accept the Arghya water with (the formula), 'Thou art the queen of food' (ibid. 9).

13. The water (offered to him) for sipping he should sip with (the formula), 'Glory art thou' (ibid. 10).

14. The Madhuparka he should accept with (the formula), 'The glory's glory art thou' (ibid. 11).

15. Let him drink (of it) three times with (the

8. See Pāraskara I, 3, 9.

11. The commentary says, sesheṇāvarish/enodakena. Comp., however, Khādīra-Gr̥hya IV, 4, 11.

15. I have adopted the reading sr̥t̥bhaksho, which is given in the Mantra-Brāhmaṇa, and have followed the opinion of the com-formula which he repeats thrice), 'The glory's food art thou ; the might's food art thou ; the bliss's food art thou ; bestow bliss on me' (MB. II, 8, 12) ;

16. Silently a fourth time.

17. Having drunk more of it, he should give the remainder to a Brāhmaṇa.

18. After he has sipped water, the barber should thrice say to him, 'A cow !'

19. He should reply, 'Let loose the cow from the fetter of Varuṇa ; bind (with it) him who hates me. Kill him and (the enemy) of N. N., (the enemies) of both (myself and N. N.). Deliver the cow ; let it eat grass, let it drink water' (MB. II, 8, 13).

20. (And after the cow has been set at liberty), let him address it with (the verse), 'The mother of the Rudras' (MB. II, 8, 14).

21. Thus if it is no sacrifice (at which the Arghya reception is offered).

22. (He should say), 'Make it (ready),' if it is a sacrifice.

23. There are six persons to whom the Arghya reception is due, (namely), mentator that the whole Mantra, and not its single parts, should be repeated each time that he drinks of the Madhuparka. In the Khādīra-Gr̥hya the text of the Mantra differs, and the rite is described differently (IV, 4, 15).

16, 17. Perhaps these two Sūtras should be rather understood as forming one Sūtra, and should be translated as I have done in Khādīra-Gr̥hya IV, 4, 16.

19. Iti after abhidhehi ought to be omitted. Comp. the lengthy discussions on this word, pp. 766 seq. of the edition of Gobhila in the Bibliotheca Indica. 'N. N.' is the host who offers the Arghya ; comp. Khādīra-Gr̥hya IV, 4, 18.

21, 22. In the case of a sacrifice the cow is killed ; comp. Sāṅkhāyana II, 15, 2. 3 note ; Pāraskara I, 3, 30.

24. A teacher, an officiating priest, a Snātaka, a king, the father-in-law, a friend coming as a guest.

25. They should offer the Arghya reception (to such persons not more than) once a year.

26. But repeatedly in the case of a sacrifice and of a wedding. But repeatedly in the case of a sacrifice and of a wedding.

End of the Fourth Prapāṭhaka.

End of the Gobhila-Grhya-sūtra.

24. Vivāhya is explained in the commentary by vivāhayitavyo gāmātā. Comp., however, Sāṅkhāyana II, 15, 1 note.

25, 26. Comp. Sāṅkhāyana II, 15, 10 and the note.

GRĪHYA-SŪTRA OF HIRANYAKESIN.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

TO THE

GRIHYA-SŪTRA OF HIRANYAKESIN.

AFTER the excellent remarks of Professor Bühler on the position of Hiraṇyakesin among the Sūtra authors of the Black Yagur-veda (Sacred Books, vol. ii, p. xxiii seq.), I can here content myself with shortly indicating the materials on which my translation of this Grihya-sūtra, which was unpublished when I began to translate it, is based. For the first half of the work I could avail myself, in the first place, of the text, together with the commentary of Mātridatta, which the late Dr. Schoenberg of Vienna had prepared for publication, and which was based on a number of MSS. collated by him. It is my melancholy duty gratefully to acknowledge here the kindness with which that prematurely deceased young scholar has placed at my disposal the materials he had collected, and the results of his labour which he continued till the last days of his life. For the second half of the Sūtra his death deprived me of this important assistance; here then Professors Kielhorn of Göttingen and Bühler of Vienna have been kind enough to enable me to finish the task of this translation, by lending me two MSS. of the text and two MSS. of Mātridatta's commentary which they possess.

Finally, Dr. J. Kirste of Vienna very kindly sent me the proof-sheets of his valuable edition before it was published. With the aid of these my translation has been revised.

GRĪHYA-SŪTRA OF HIRANYAKESIN.

PRASNA I, PATALA 1, SECTION 1.

1. We shall explain the Upanayana (i.e. the initiation of the student).
2. Let him initiate a Brāhmaṇa at the age of seven years,
3. A Rāganya, of eleven, a Vaisya, of twelve.
4. A Brāhmaṇa in the spring, a Rāganya in the summer, a Vaisya in the autumn.
5. In the time of the increasing moon, under an auspicious constellation, preferably (under a constellation) the name of which is masculine,
6. He should serve food to an even number of Brāhmaṇas and should cause them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!'
7. (Then he) should have the boy satiated, should

1, 2. The statement commonly given in the Grīhya-sūtras and Dharma-sūtras is, that the initiation of a Brāhmaṇa shall take place in his eighth year, though there are differences of opinion whether in the eighth year after conception, or after birth (Āsvalāyana-Grīhya I, 19, 1. 2). Mātridatta states that the rule given here in the Grīhya-sūtra refers to the seventh year after birth. In the Dharma-sūtra (comp. Āpastamba I, 1, 18) it is stated that the initiation of a Brāhmaṇa shall take place in the eighth year after his conception. Comp. the remarks of Professor Bühler, S. B. E., vol. ii, p. xxiii.

4. Āpastamba I, 1, 18.

6. Comp. Āpastamba I, 13, 8 with Bühler's note.

have his hair shaven, and after (the boy) has bathed and has been decked with ornaments—

8. He should dress him in a (new) garment which has not yet been washed.

9. In a place inclined towards the east, (or) inclined towards the north, (or) inclined towards north-east, or in an even (place), he raises (the surface on which he intends to sacrifice), sprinkles it with water,

10. Kindles fire by attrition, or fetches common (worldly) fire, puts the fire down, and puts wood on the fire.

11. He strews eastward-pointed Darbha grass round the fire ;

12. Or (the grass which is strewn) to the west and to the east (of the fire), may be northward-pointed.

13. He (arranges the Darbha blades so as to) lay the southern (blades) uppermost, the northern ones below, if their points are turned (partly) towards the east and (partly) towards the north.

14. Having strewn Darbha grass, to the south of the fire, in the place destined for the Brahman,

15. Having with the two (verses), 'I take (the fire) to myself,' and, 'The fire which (has entered)'—taken possession of the fire,

16. And having, to the north of the fire, spread out Darbha grass, he prepares the (following) objects,

9. Pâraskara I, 1, 2 ; 4, 3 ; Âsvalâyana I, 3, 1, &c.

11. Âsvalâyana l. l. ; Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 8, 1, &c.

13. Gobhila I, 7, 14.

14. Gobhila I, 6, 13 ; Pâraskara I, 1, 2, &c.

15. Taittirîya Saṃhitâ V, 9, 1. - Comp. also the parallel passages, Satapatha Brâhmana VII, 3, 2, 17 ; Kâtyâyana-Srauta XVII, 3, 27.

16. Gobhila I, 7, 1.

according as they are required (for the ceremony which he is going to perform) :

17. A stone, a (new) garment which has not yet been washed, a skin (of an antelope, or a spotted deer, &c.), a threefold-twisted girdle of Muṅga grass if he is a Brāhmaṇa (who shall be initiated), a bow-string for a Rāganya, a woollen thread for a Vaisya, a staff of Bilva or of Palāsa wood for a Brāhmaṇa, of Nyagrodha wood for a Rāganya, of Udumbara wood for a Vaisya.

18. He binds together the fuel, twenty-one pieces of wood, or as many as there are oblations to be made.

19. Together with that fuel he ties up the (three) branches of wood which are to be laid round the fire, (which should have the shape of) pegs.

20. (He gets ready, besides, the spoon called Darvī, a bunch of grass, the Āgya pot, the pot for the Prāṇīta water, and whatever (else) is required ;

21. All (those objects) together, or (one after the other) as it happens.

22. At that time the Brahman suspends the sacrificial cord over his left shoulder, sips water, passes by the fire, on its west side, to the south side, throws away a grass blade from the Brahman's seat, touches water, and sits down with his face turned towards the fire.

17. Sāṅkhāyana II, 1, 15 seqq., &c. As to the stone, comp. below, I, 1, 4, 13.

18. Comp. Ārvalāyana I, 10, 3, and the passages quoted in the note (vol. xxix, p. 173).

20. Regarding the bunch of grass, see below, I, 2, 6, 9.

22. Gobhila I, 6, 14 seq. Comp. the passages quoted in the note.

23. He takes as 'purifiers' two straight Darbha blades with unbroken points of one span's length, cuts them off with something else than his nail, wipes them with water, pours water into a vessel over which he has laid the purifiers, fills (that vessel) up to near the brim, purifies (the water) three times with the two Darbha strainers, holding their points to the north, places (the water) on Darbha grass on the north side of the fire, and covers it with Darbha grass.

24. Having consecrated the Prokshant water by means of the purifiers as before, having placed the vessels upright, and having untied the fuel, he sprinkles (the sacrificial vessels) three times with the whole (Prokshant water).

25. Having warmed the Darvī spoon (over the fire), having wiped it, and warmed it again, he puts it down.

26. Having besprinkled (with water) the Darbha grass with which the fuel was tied together, he throws it into the fire.

27. He melts the Āgya, pours the Āgya into the Āgya pot over which he has laid the purifiers, takes some coals (from the fire) towards the north, puts (the Āgya) on these (coals), throws light (on the

23. Gobhila I, 7, 21 seq.; Sāṅkhāyana I, 8, 14 seq. The water mentioned in this Sūtra is the Praṇīta water.

24. Regarding the Prokshant water, see Sāṅkhāyana I, 8, 25 note. The word which I have translated by 'vessels' is bilavanti, which literally means 'the things which have brims.' Probably this expression here has some technical connotation unknown to me. Mātridatta simply says, bilavanti pātrāṇi.—'As before' means, 'as stated with regard to the Praṇīta water.'

25. Pāraskara I, 1, 3.

27. Sāṅkhāyana I, 8, 18 seq.

Āgrya by means of burning Darbha blades), throws two young Darbha shoots into it, moves a fire-brand round it three times, takes it (from the coals) towards the north, pushes the coals back (into the fire), purifies the Āgrya three times with the two purifiers, holding their points towards the north, (drawing them through the Āgrya from west to east and) taking them back (to the west each time), throws the two purifiers into the fire,

PĀṬALA 1, SECTION 2.

1. And lays the (three) pegs round (the fire).
2. On the west side (of the fire) he places the middle (peg), with its broad end to the north,
3. On the south side (of the fire the second peg), so that it touches the middle one, with its broad end to the east,
4. On the north side (of the fire the third peg), so that it touches the middle one, with its broad end to the east.
5. To the west of the fire (the teacher who is going to initiate the student), sits down with his face turned towards the east.
6. To the south (of the teacher) the boy, wearing the sacrificial cord over his left shoulder, having sipped water, sits down and touches (the teacher).
7. Then (the teacher) sprinkles water round the fire (in the following way) :
8. On the south side (of the fire he sprinkles

2, 1. The 'pegs' are the pieces of wood mentioned above, 1, 19.

7-10. Gobhila I, 3, 1 seq. The vocative Sarasvate instead of Sarasvati is given by the MSS. also in the Khādīra-Gr̥hya I, 2, 19.

water) from west to east with (the words), 'Aditi! Give thy consent!'—

9. On the west side, from south to north, with (the words), 'Anumati! Give thy consent!' On the north side, from west to east, with (the words), 'Sarasvatī! Give thy consent!'—

10. On all sides, so as to keep his right side turned towards (the fire), with (the Mantra), 'God Savitṛī! Give thy impulse!' (Taitt. Samh. I, 7, 7, 1).

11. Having (thus) sprinkled (water) round (the fire), and having anointed the fuel (with Âgya), he puts it on (the fire) with (the Mantra), 'This fuel is thy self, Gâtavedas! Thereby thou shalt be inflamed and shalt grow. In flame us and make us grow; through offspring, cattle, holy lustre, and through the enjoyment of food make us increase. Svâhâ!'

12. He then sacrifices with the (spoon called) Darvi (the following oblations):

13. Approaching the Darvi (to the fire) by the northerly junction of the pegs (laid round the fire), and fixing his mind on (the formula), 'To Pragâpati, to Manu svâhâ!' (without pronouncing that Mantra), he sacrifices a straight, long, uninterrupted (stream of Âgya), directed towards the south-east.

14. Approaching the Darvi (to the fire) by the southern junction of the pegs (laid round the fire),

11. As to the Mantra, compare Sâṅkhâyaṇa II, 10, 4, &c.

13, 14. The two oblations described in these Sûtras are the so-called Âghâras; see Sûtra 15, and Pâraskara I, 5, 3; Âśvalâyana I, 10, 13. Regarding the northern and the southern junction of the Paridhi woods, see above, Sûtras 3 and 4. According to Mâtridatta, the words 'long, uninterrupted' (Sûtra 13) are to be supplied also in Sûtra 14.

(he sacrifices) a straight (stream of Āgya), directed towards the north-east, with (the Mantra which he pronounces), 'To Indra svāhā!'

15. Having (thus) poured out the two Āghāra oblations, he sacrifices the two Āgyabhāgas,

16. With (the words), 'To Agni svāhā!' over the easterly part of the northerly part (of the fire); with (the words), 'To Soma svāhā!' over the easterly part of the southerly part (of the fire).

17. Between them he sacrifices the other (oblations).

18. (He makes four oblations with the following Mantras): 'Thou whom we have set to work, Gāta-vedas! carry forward (our offerings). Agni! Perceive this work (i. e. the sacrifice), as it is performed (by us). Thou art a healer, a creator of medicine. Through thee may we obtain cows, horses, and men. Svāhā!

'Thou who liest down athwart, thinking, "It is I who keep (all things) asunder:" to thee who art propitious (to me), I sacrifice this stream of ghee in the fire. Svāhā!

'To the propitious goddess svāhā!

'To the accomplishing goddess svāhā!'

16. Āsvalāyana I, 10, 13; Sāṅkhāyana I, 9, 7, &c. As to the expressions uttarārdhapūrvārdhe and dakṣiṇārdhapūrvārdhe, comp. Gobhila I, 8, 14 and the note.

17. I.e. between the places at which the two 'Āgya portions' are offered. Comp. Sāṅkhāyana I, 9, 8.

18. Satapatha Brāhmaṇa XIV, 9, 3, 3 (= Bṛihad Āraṇyaka VI, 3, 1; S. B. E., vol. xv, p. 210); Mantra-Brāhmaṇa I, 5, 6.

PĀṬALA 1, SECTION 3.

1. This is the rite for all Darvi-sacrifices.
2. At the end of the Mantras constantly the word Svâhâ (is pronounced).
3. (Oblations) for which no Mantras are prescribed (are made merely with the words), 'To such and such (a deity) svâhâ!'—according to the deity (to whom the oblation is made).
4. He sacrifices with the Vyâhr̥itis, 'Bhûh! Bhuvaḥ! Suvaḥ!'—with the single (three Vyâhr̥itis) and with (the three) together.
5. (The Mantras for the two chief oblations are), the (verse), 'Life-giving, Agni!' (Taitt. Brâhmaṇa I, 2, 1, 11), (and),
'Life-giving, O god, choosing long life, thou whose face is full of ghee, whose back is full of ghee, Agni, drinking ghee, the noble ambrosia that comes from the cow, lead this (boy) to old age, as a father (leads) his son. Svâhâ!'
6. (Then follow oblations with the verses),
'This, O Varuṇa' (Taitt. Samh. II, 1, 11, 6),
'For this I entreat thee' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.),

3, 2. Gobhila I, 9, 25.

3. Sâṅkhâyana I, 9, 18.

4. Sâṅkhâyana I, 12, 12. 13; Gobhila I, 9, 27. As to suvaḥ, the spelling of the Taittirîyas for svaḥ, see Indische Studien, XIII, 105.

5, 6. In the second Mantra we should read vrinâno instead of grinâno; comp. Atharva-veda II, 13, 1. As to the Mantras that follow, comp. Pâraskara I, 2, 8; Taittirîya Âranyaka IV, 20, 3.—Regarding the Mantra tvam Agne ayâsi (sic), comp. Taitt. Brâh. II, 4, 1, 9; Âsvalâyana-Srauta-sûtra I, 11, 13; Kâtyâyana-Srauta-sûtra XXV, 1, 11; Indische Studien, XV, 125.

‘Thou, Agni’ (Taitt. Samh. II, 5, 12, 3),

‘Thus thou, Agni’ (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.),

‘Thou, Agni, art quick. Being quick, appointed (by us) in our mind (as our messenger), thou who art quick, carriest the offering (to the gods). O quick one, bestow medicine on us! Svâhâ!’—(and finally) the (verse), ‘Pragâpati!’ (Taitt. Samh. I, 8, 14, 2).

7. (With the verse), ‘What I have done too much in this sacrifice, or what I have done here deficiently, all that may Agni Svishṭakṛit, he who knows it, make well sacrificed and well offered for me. To Agni Svishṭakṛit, the offerer of well-offered (sacrifices), the offerer of everything, to him who makes us succeed in our offerings and in our wishes, svâhâ!’—he offers (the Svishṭakṛit oblation) over the easterly part of the northerly part (of the fire), separated from the other oblations.

8. Here some add as subordinate oblations, before the Svishṭakṛit, the Gaya, Abhyâtâna, and Râshṭra-bhṛit (oblations).

9. The Gaya (oblations) he sacrifices with (the thirteen Mantras), ‘Thought, svâhâ! Thinking, svâhâ!’—or, ‘To thought svâhâ! To thinking svâhâ!’ (&c.);

10. The Abhyâtâna (oblations) with (the eighteen Mantras), ‘Agni is the lord of beings; may he protect me’ (&c.).

11. (The words), ‘In this power of holiness, in

7. Âsvalâyana-Gṛīhya I, 10, 23; Satapatha Brâhmaṇya XIV, 9, 4, 24.

8. Comp. the next Sûtras and Pâraskara I, 5, 7-10.

9. Taittirīya Samhitâ III, 4, 4.

10. Taittirīya Samhitâ III, 4, 5.

11. See the end of the section quoted in the last note.

this worldly power (&c.)' are added to (each section of) the Abhyâtâna formulas.

12. With (the last of the Abhyâtâna formulas), 'Fathers! Grandfathers!' he sacrifices or performs worship, wearing the sacrificial cord over his right shoulder.

13. The Râshtrabhrîṭ (oblations he sacrifices) with (the twelve Mantras), 'The champion of truth, he whose law is truth.' After having quickly repeated (each) section, he sacrifices the first oblation with (the words), 'To him svâhâ!' the second (oblation) with (the words), 'To them svâhâ!'

14. Having placed a stone near the northerly junction of the pegs (which are laid round the fire), (the teacher)—

PATALA 1, SECTION 4.

1. Makes the boy tread on (that stone) with his right foot, with (the verse), 'Tread on this stone; like a stone be firm. Destroy those who seek to do thee harm; overcome thy enemies.'

12. 'He performs worship with that Mantra, wearing the sacrificial cord over his right shoulder, to the Manes. According to others, he worships Agni. But this would stand in contradiction to the words (of the Mantra).' Mâtridatta.

13. Taittirîya Samhitâ III, 4, 7. 'To him' (tasmai) is masculine, 'to them' (tâbhyaḥ) feminine. The purport of these words will be explained best by a translation of the first section of the Râshtrabhrîṭ formulas: 'The champion of truth, he whose law is truth, Agni is the Gandharva. His Apsaras are the herbs; "sap" is their name. May he protect this power of holiness and this worldly power. May they protect this power of holiness and this worldly power. To him svâhâ! To them svâhâ!'

14. See above, section 2, § 13.

4, 1. Comp. Sāṅkhâya I, 13, 12; Pâraskara I, 7, 1.

2. After (the boy) has taken off his old (garment), (the teacher) makes him put on a (new) garment that has not yet been washed, with (the verses),

‘The goddesses who spun, who wove, who spread out, and who drew out the skirts on both sides, may those goddesses clothe thee with long life. Blessed with life put on this garment.

‘Dress him; through (this) garment make him reach a hundred (years) of age; extend his life. Bṛihaspati has given this garment to king Soma that he may put it on.

‘Mayst thou live to old age; put on the garment! Be a protector of the human tribes against imprecation. Live a hundred years, full of vigour; clothe thyself in the increase of wealth.’

3. Having (thus) made (the boy) put on (the new garment, the teacher) recites over him (the verse),

‘Thou hast put on this garment for the sake of welfare; thou hast become a protector of thy friends against imprecation. Live a hundred long years; a noble man, blessed with life, mayst thou distribute wealth.’

4. He then winds the girdle three times from left to right round (the boy, so that it covers) his navel. (He does so only) twice, according to some (teachers). (It is done) with (the verse),

2. Pāraskara I, 4, 13. 12; Atharva-veda II, 13, 2. 3 (XIX, 24). Instead of paridâtavâ u, we ought to read, as the Atharva-veda has, paridhâtavâ u.

3. Atharva-veda II, 13, 3; XIX, 24, 6.

4. Sāṅkhâya II, 2, 1; Pāraskara II, 2, 8. The text of the Mantra as given by Hiraṇyakesin is very corrupt, but the corruptions may be as old as the Hiraṇyakesi-sûtra itself, or even older.

‘Here she has come to us who drives away sin, purifying our guard and our protection, bringing us strength by (the power of) inhalation and exhalation, the sister of the gods, this blessed girdle.’

5. On the north side of the navel he makes a threefold knot (in the girdle) and draws that to the south side of the navel.

6. He then arranges for him the skin (of an antelope, &c., see Sūtra 7) as an outer garment, with (the Mantras),

‘The firm, strong eye of Mitra, glorious splendour, powerful and flaming, a chaste, mobile vesture, this skin put on, a valiant (man), N. N.!

‘May Aditi tuck up thy garment, that thou mayst study the Veda, for the sake of insight and belief and of not forgetting what thou hast learnt, for the sake of holiness and of holy lustre!’

7. The skin of a black antelope (is worn) by a Brāhmaṇa, the skin of a spotted deer by a Rāganya, the skin of a he-goat by a Vaisya.

8. He then gives him in charge (to the gods), a Brāhmaṇa with (the verse), ‘We give this (boy) in charge, O Indra, to Brahman, for the sake of great learning. May he (Brahman?) lead him to old age, and may he (the boy) long watch over learning.’

6. I propose to correct garishṇu into karishṇu. See Sāṅkhāyana II, 1, 30.

7. Sāṅkhāyana II, 1, 2. 4. 5, &c.

8. In the first hemistich I propose to correct pari dadhmasi into pari dadmasi. The verse seems to be an adaptation of a Mantra which contained a form of the verb pari-dhâ (comp. Atharva-veda XIX, 24, 2); thus the reading pari... dadhmasi found in the MSS. may be easily accounted for. The second hemistich is very corrupt, but the Atharva-veda (loc. cit. : yathainam garase nayât) shows at least the general sense.

A Râganya (he gives in charge to the gods) with (the verse), 'We give this boy in charge, O Indra, to Brahman, for the sake of great royalty. May he lead him to old age, and may he long watch over royalty.'

A Vaisya (he gives in charge) with (the verse), 'We give this boy in charge, O Indra, to Brahman, for the sake of great wealth. May he lead him to old age, and may he long watch over wealth.'

9. (The teacher) makes him sit down to the west of the fire, facing the north, and makes him eat the remnants of the sacrificial food, with these (Mantras), 'On thee may wisdom, on thee may offspring' (Taitt. Âranyaka, Ândhra redaction, X, 44),—altering (the text of the Mantras).

10. Some make (the student) eat 'sprinkled butter.'

11. (The teacher) looks at (the student) while he is eating, with the two verses, 'At every pursuit we invoke strong (Indra)' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 2, 1), (and), 'Him, Agni, lead to long life and splendour' (Taitt. Samh. II, 3, 10, 3).

12. Some make (the boy) eat (that food with these two verses).

13. After (the boy) has sipped water, (the teacher) causes him to touch (water) and recites over him (the verse), 'A hundred autumns are before us, O gods, before ye have made our bodies decay, before (our)

9. The text of those Mantras runs thus, 'On me may wisdom, &c.'; he alters them so as to say, 'On thee,' &c.

10. Regarding the term 'sprinkled butter,' comp. Âsvalâyana-Grihya IV, 1, 18. 19.

13. Rig-veda I, 89. 9.

sons have become fathers ; do not destroy us before we have reached (our due) age.'

End of the First Pātala.

PRAŚNA I, PĀTALA 2, SECTION 5.

1. 'To him who comes (to us), we have come. Drive ye away death ! May we walk with him safely ; may he walk here in bliss ; (may he) walk in bliss until (he returns) to his house'—this (verse the teacher repeats) while (the boy) walks round the fire so as to keep his right side turned towards it.

2. (The teacher) then causes him to say, 'I have come hither to be a student. Initiate me ! I will be a student, impelled by the god Savitri.'

3. (The teacher then) asks him :

4. 'What is thy name ?'

5. He says, 'N. N !'—what his name is.

6. (The teacher says), 'Happily, god Savitri, may I attain the goal with this N. N.'—here he pronounces (the student's) two names.

7. With (the verse), 'For bliss may the goddesses afford us their protection ; may the waters afford drink to us. With bliss and happiness may they overflow us'—both wipe themselves off.

5, 1. I read, pra su mrityum yuyotana ; comp. Mantra-Brāhmaṇa I, 6, 14 (Rig-veda I, 136, 1, &c.). As to the last Pāda, comp. Rig-veda III, 53, 20.

2 seq. Comp. Gobhila II, 10, 21 seq. ; Pāraskara II, 2, 6 ; Sāṅkhāyana II, 2, 4, &c.

5. Mātridatta, 'As it is said below, "he pronounces his two names" (Sūtra 6), the student should here also pronounce his two names, for instance, "I am Devadatta, Kārttika."'

6. 'His common (vyāvahārika) name and his Nakshatra name.' Mātridatta.

7. Rig-veda X, 9, 4.

8. Then (the teacher) touches with his right hand (the boy's) right shoulder, and with his left (hand) his left (shoulder), and draws (the boy's) right arm towards himself with the Vyâhr̥itis, the Sāvitrī verse, and with (the formula), 'By the impulse of the god Savitrī, with the arms of the two Asvins, with Pûshan's hands I initiate thee, N. N. I'

9. He then seizes with his right hand (the boy's) right hand together with the thumb, with (the words), 'Agni has seized thy hand; Soma has seized thy hand; Savitrī has seized thy hand; Sarasvatī has seized thy hand; Pûshan has seized thy hand; Brihaspati has seized thy hand; Mitra has seized thy hand; Varuna has seized thy hand; Tvashtṛi has seized thy hand; Dhâtrī has seized thy hand; Vishṇu has seized thy hand; Pragâpati has seized thy hand.'

10. 'May Savitrī protect thee. Mitra art thou by rights; Agni is thy teacher.

'By the impulse of the god Savitrī become Brihaspati's pupil. Eat water. Put on fuel. Do the service. Do not sleep in the day-time'—thus (the teacher) instructs him.

11. Then (the teacher) gradually moves his right

8. The word which I have translated 'draws . . . towards himself' is the same which is also used in the sense of 'he initiates him' (upanayate). Possibly we should correct the text: dakṣhiṇam bâhum anv abhyâtmam upanayate, 'he turns him towards himself from left to right (literally, following his right arm).' Comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 3, 2.—Regarding the Mantra, comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 2, 12, &c.

9. Sâṅkhâya II, 2, 11; 3, 1, &c.

10. Sâṅkhâya II, 3, 1; 4, 5. We ought to read apo-sâna, instead of apo-sânaḥ as the MSS. have.

11. Sâṅkhâya II, 4, 1, &c.

hand down over (the boy's) right shoulder and touches the place of his heart with (the formulas), 'Thy heart shall dwell in my heart; my mind thou shalt follow with thy mind; in my word thou shalt rejoice with all thy heart; may Br̥haspati join thee to me!

'To me alone thou shalt adhere. In me thy thoughts shall dwell. Upon me thy veneration shall be bent. When I speak, thou shalt be silent.'

12. With (the words), 'Thou art the knot of all breath; do not loosen thyself'—(he touches) the place of his navel.

13. After (the teacher) has recited over him (the formula),

'Bhûh̥! Bhuvaḥ! Suvaḥ! By offspring may I become rich in offspring! By valiant sons, rich in valiant sons! By splendour, rich in splendour! By wealth, rich in wealth! By wisdom, rich in wisdom! By pupils, rich in holy lustre!'

And (again the formulas),

'Bhûh̥! I place thee in the Rik̥as, in Agni, on the earth, in voice, in the Brahman, N. N.!

'Bhuvaḥ! I place thee in the Yagus, in Vāyu, in the air, in breath, in the Brahman, N. N.!

'Suvaḥ! I place thee in the Sām̐ans, in Sūrya, in heaven, in the eye, in the Brahman, N. N.!

'May I be beloved (?) and dear to thee, N. N.!

13. The reading of the last Mantra is doubtful. Ish/atas should possibly be ish/as, but the genitive analasya, or, as some of the MSS. have, ana/asya (read, analasasya?), points rather to a genitive like ikk̥h̥atas. If we write ikk̥h̥atas and analasasya, the translation would be: 'May I be dear to thee, who loves me, N. N.! May I be dear to thee, who art zealous, N. N.!' Comp. Sāṅkhāyana II, 3, 3.

May I be dear to thee, the fire (?), N. N. ! Let us dwell here ! Let us dwell in breath and life ! Dwell in breath and life, N. N. ! —

14. He then seizes with his right hand (the boy's) right hand together with the thumb, with the five sections, 'Agni is long-lived.'

15. 'May (Agni) bestow on thee long life everywhere' (Taitt. Samh. I, 3, 14, 4) —

PATALA 2, SECTION 6.

1. (This verse the teacher) murmurs in (the boy's) right ear ;

2. (The verse), 'Life-giving, Agni' (Taitt. Samh. I, 3, 14, 4) in his left ear.

3. Both times he adds (to the verses quoted in the last Sûtras the formula), 'Stand fast in Agni and on the earth, in Vâyu and in the air, in Sûrya and in heaven. The bliss in which Agni, Vâyu, the sun, the moon, and the waters go their way, in that bliss go thy way, N. N. ! Thou hast become the pupil of breath, N. N. !'

4. Approaching his mouth to (the boy's) mouth he murmurs, 'Intelligence may Indra give thee, intelligence the goddess Sarasvatî. Intelligence may the two Asvins, wreathed with lotus, bestow on thee.'

5. He then gives (the boy) in charge (to the gods and demons, with the formulas), 'To Kashaka (?) I

14. Comp. above, Sûtra 9.

6, 3. Âsvalâyana I, 20, 8.

4. Âsvalâyana I, 15, 2 ; 22, 26 ; Pâraskara II, 4, 8.

5. Comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 3, 1 ; Pâraskara II, 2, 21. The name give thee in charge. To Antaka I give thee in charge. To Aghora ("the not frightful one") I give thee in charge. To Disease . . . to Yama . . . to Makha . . . to Vasint ("the ruling goddess") . . . to the earth together with Vaisvânara . . . to the waters . . . to the herbs . . . to the trees . . . to Heaven and Earth . . . to welfare . . . to holy lustre . . . to the Visve devâs . . . to all beings . . . to all deities I give thee in charge.'

6. He now teaches him the Sâvitṛī, if he has (already) been initiated before.

7. If he has not been initiated (before, he teaches him the Sâvitṛī) after three days have elapsed.

8. (He does so) immediately, says Pushkarasâdi.

9. Having placed to the west of the fire a bunch of grass with its points directed towards the north, (the teacher) sits down thereon, facing the east, with (the formula), 'A giver of royal power art thou, a teacher's seat. May I not withdraw from thee.'

10. The boy raises his joined hands towards the sun, embraces (the feet of) his teacher, sits down to the south (of the teacher), addresses (him), 'Recite, sir!' and then says, 'Recite the Sâvitṛī, sir!'

11. Having recited over (the boy the verse), 'We call thee, the lord of the hosts' (Taitt. Samh. II, 3, 14, 3), he then recites (the Sâvitṛī) to him, firstly Pâda by Pâda, then hemistich by hemistich, and then the whole verse (in the following way), in the first section of the Mantra is spelt Kashakâya and Kasakâya. Comp. Mantra-Brâhmana I, 6, 22: Kṛisana, idam te paridadâmy amum; Atharva-veda IV, 10, 7: Karsanas tvâbhirakshatu.

6. 'A repetition of the initiation takes place as a penance.' Mâtridatta.

9-11. Comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 5, &c.

- ‘Bhûs! Tat Savitur varenyam (That adorable splendour)— ‘Bhuvo! Bhargo devasya dhîmahî (of the divine Savitri may we obtain)— ‘Suvar! Dhiyo yo naḥ prakodayât (who should rouse our prayers).—
 ‘Bhûr bhuvas! Tat Savitur varenyam bhargo devasya dhîmahî—‘Suvar! Dhiyo yo naḥ prakodayât.—
 ‘Bhûr bhuvaḥ suvas! Tat Savitur . . . prakodayât.’

PĀTALA 2, SECTION 7.

1. He then causes (the student) to put on the fire seven pieces of fresh Palâsa wood, with unbroken tops, of one span's length, which have been anointed with ghee.

2. One (of these pieces of wood he puts on the fire) with (the Mantra), ‘To Agni I have brought a piece of wood, to the great Gâtavedas. As thou art inflamed, Agni, through that piece of wood, thus inflame me through wisdom, insight, offspring, cattle, holy lustre, and through the enjoyment of food. Svâhâ!’—

3. (Then he puts on the fire) two (pieces of wood with the same Mantra, using the dual instead of the 7, 1 seq. Comp. Âsvalâyana I, 21, 1; Sâṅkhâyaṇa II, 10, &c.

 ‘The putting of fuel on the fire, and what follows after it, form a part of the chief ceremony, not of the recitation of the Sâvitri. Therefore in the case of one who has not yet been initiated (see I, 2, 6, 7), it ought to be performed immediately after (the student) has been given in charge (to the gods and demons; I, 2, 6, 5).’
 Mâtridatta.

2. Pâraskara II, 4, 3.

singular), 'To Agni (I have brought) two pieces of wood;'

4. (Then) four (pieces of wood, using the plural), 'To Agni (I have brought) pieces of wood.'

5. He then sprinkles (water) round (the fire) as above.

6. 'Thou hast given thy consent; ' 'Thou hast given thy impulse '—thus he changes the end of each Mantra.

7. He then worships the (following) deities (with the following Mantras),

8. Agni with (the words), 'Agni, lord of the vow, I shall keep the vow;'

9. Vāyu with (the words), 'Vāyu, lord of the vow, (&c.);'

10. Āditya (the sun) with (the words), 'Āditya, lord of the vow, (&c.);'

11. The lord of the vows with (the words), 'Lord of the vows, ruling over the vows (&c.).'

12. He then gives an optional gift to his Guru (i. e. to the teacher).

13. (The teacher) makes him rise with (the verse which the student recites), 'Up! with life' (Taitt. Samh. I, 2, 8, 1); he gives him in charge (to the sun) with (the words), 'Sun! This is thy son; I give him in charge to thee; ' and he worships the sun with (the Mantra), 'That bright eye created by the gods which rises in the east : may we see it a hundred autumns; may we live a hundred autumns; may we

5. Comp. above, I, 1, 2, 7 seq.

6. He says, 'Anumati! Thou hast given thy consent!' &c.

8 seq. Comp. Gobhila II, 10, 16.

12. Comp. Sāṅkhāyana I, 14, 13 seq.

13. Pāraskara I, 8, 7; I, 6, 3.

rejoice a hundred autumns; may we be glad a hundred autumns; may we prosper a hundred autumns; may we hear a hundred autumns; may we speak a hundred autumns; may we live undecaying a hundred autumns; and may we long see the sun.'

14. 'May Agni further give thee life. May Agni further grant thee bliss. May Indra with the Maruts here give (that) to thee; may the sun with the Vasus give (it) to thee'—with (this verse the teacher) gives him a staff, and then hands over to him a bowl (for collecting alms).

15. Then he says to him, 'Go out for alms.'

16. Let him beg of his mother first;

17. Then (let him beg) in other houses where they are kindly disposed towards him.

18. He brings (the food which he has received) to his Guru (i. e. to the teacher), and announces it to him by saying, '(These are) the alms.'

19. (The teacher accepts it) with the words, 'Good alms they are.'

20. 'May all gods bless thee whose first garment we accept. May after thee, the prosperous one, the well-born, many brothers and friends be born'—with (this verse the teacher) takes (for himself) the former garment (of the student).

21. When the food (with which the Brâhmanas shall be entertained) is ready, (the student) takes some portion of boiled rice, cakes, and flour, mixes

14. Sâṅkhâya II, 6, 2, &c.

16 seq. Sâṅkhâya II, 6, 4 seq.; Âpastamba I, 3, 28 seq.

17. The commentary explains râtikuleshu by gṇâtiprabhrîtishu;—comp. yo'sya râtir bhavati, I, 3, 9, 18.

20. See above, I, 1, 4, 2, and comp. Atharva-veda II, 13, 5.

(these substances) with clarified butter, and sacrifices with (the formulas), 'To Agni svâhâ! To Soma svâhâ! To Agni, the eater of food, svâhâ! To Agni, the lord of food, svâhâ! To Pragâpati svâhâ! To the Visve devâs svâhâ! To all deities svâhâ! To Agni Svishṭakṛit svâhâ!'

22. Thus (let him sacrifice) wherever (oblations of food are prescribed) for which the deities (to whom they shall be offered) are not indicated.

23. If the deity is indicated, (let him sacrifice) with (the words), 'To such and such (a deity) svâhâ!'—according to which deity it is.

24. Taking (again) some portion of the same kinds of food, he offers it as a Bali on eastward-pointed Darbha grass, with (the words), 'To Vâstupati (i. e. Vâstoshpati) svâhâ!'

25. After he has served those three kinds of food to the Brâhmaṇas, and has caused them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!'—

PATALA 2, SECTION 8.

1. He keeps through three days the (following) vow :

2. He eats no pungent or saline food and no vegetables ; he sleeps on the ground ; he does not drink out of an earthen vessel ; he does not give the remnants of his food to a Sûdra ; he does not eat honey or meat ; he does not sleep in the day-

23. Comp. above, I, 1, 3, 3.

24. 'The same,' of course, refers to Sûtra 21.

25. See above, I, 1, 1, 6.

8, 1. This is the Sâvitra-vrata. Comp. I, 2, 6, 7 ; Sâṅkhâyaṇa, Introduction, p. 8.

2. Regarding the term 'pungent food,' comp. Professor Bühler's notes on Âpastamba I, 1, 2, 23 ; II, 6, 15, 15.

time; in the morning and in the evening he brings (to his teacher) the food which he has received as alms and a pot of water; every day (he fetches) a bundle of firewood; in the morning and in the evening, or daily in the evening he puts fuel on (the fire, in the following way):

3. Before sprinkling (water) round (the fire), he wipes (with his wet hand) from left to right round (the fire) with the verse, 'As you have loosed, O Vasus, the buffalo-cow' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 7, 15, 7), and sprinkles (water) round (the fire) as above.

4. (Then) he puts (four) pieces of wood (on the fire) with the single (Vyâhr̥itis) and with (the three Vyâhr̥itis) together, and (four other pieces) with (the following four verses),

'This fuel is thine, Agni; thereby thou shalt grow and gain vigour. And may we grow and gain vigour. Svâhâ!

'May Indra give me insight; may Sarasvatî, the goddess, (give) insight; may both Asvins, wreathed with lotus, bestow insight on me. Svâhâ!

'The insight that dwells with the Apsaras, the mind that dwells with the Gandharvas, the divine insight and that which is born from men: may that insight, the fragrant one, rejoice in me! Svâhâ!

'May insight, the fragrant one, that assumes all shapes, the gold-coloured, mobile one, come to me. Rich in sap, swelling with milk, may she, insight, the lovely-faced one, rejoice in me! Svâhâ!'

5. Having wiped round (the fire) in the same way, he sprinkles (water) round (the fire) as above.

3. See I, 1, 2, 7 seq.; Âpastamba Dharma-sûtra I, 1, 4, 18.

4. Âpastamba I, 1, 4, 16; Sâṅkhâya II, 10, 4, &c.

5. See Sûtra 3 and the note.

6. He worships the fire with the Mantras, 'What thy splendour is, Agni, may I thereby' (Taitt. Samh. III, 5, 3, 2), and 'On me may insight, on me offspring' (Taitt. Âranyaka X, 44).

7. After the lapse of those three days (Sûtra 1) he serves in the same way the three kinds of food (stated above) to the Brâhmanas, causes them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!' and discharges himself of his vow by (repeating) these (Mantras) with (the necessary) alterations, 'Agni, lord of the vow, I have kept the vow' (see above, I, 2, 7, 8).

8. He keeps the same observances afterwards (also),

9. Dwelling in his teacher's house. He may eat, (however,) pungent and saline food and vegetables.

10. He wears a staff, has his hair tied in one knot, and wears a girdle,

11. Or he may tie the lock on the crown of the head in a knot.

12. He wears (an upper garment) dyed with red Loth, or the skin (of an antelope, &c.).

13. He does not have intercourse with women.

14. (The studentship lasts) forty-eight years, or

6. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya I, 21, 4.

7. See I, 2, 7, 21. 25.

8. He keeps the observances stated in Sûtra 2.

9. See above, Sûtra 2. Comp. Âpastamba Dharma-sûtra I, 1, 2, 11, and Sûtra 23 of the same section, which stands in contradiction to this Sûtra of Hiranyakesin.

10, 11. Comp. Âpastamba I, 1, 2, 31. 32. Mâtridatta has received into his explanation of the eleventh Sûtra the words, 'he should shave the rest of the hair,' which in the Âpastambîya-sûtra are found in the text.

14. Âsvalâyana-Grîhya I, 22, 3; Âpastamba Dharma-sûtra I, 1, 2, 12 seq.

twenty-four (years), or twelve (years), or until he has learnt (the Veda).

15. He should not, however, omit keeping the observances.

16. At the beginning and on the completion of the study of a Kānda (of the Black Yagur-veda he sacrifices) with (the verse), 'The lord of the seat, the wonderful one, the friend of Indra, the dear one, I have entreated for the gift of insight. Svāhā!'

In the second place the Rishi of the Kānda (receives an oblation).

(Then follow oblations with the verses), 'This, O Varuṇa;' 'For this I entreat thee;' 'Thou, Agni;' 'Thus thou, Agni;' 'Thou, Agni, art quick;' 'Pragâpati!' and, 'What I have done too much in this sacrifice.' Here some add as subordinate oblations the Gaya, Abhyâtâna, and Râshṭrabhrîṭ (oblations) as above.

End of the Second Pāṭala.

PRAŚNA I, PĀṬALA 3, SECTION 9.

1. After he has studied the Veda, the bath (which signifies the end of his studentship, is taken by him).

2. We shall explain that (bath).

3. During the northern course of the sun, in the time of the increasing moon, under (the Nakshatra) Rohiṇī, (or) Mṛigasiras, (or) Tishya, (or) Uttarâ

16. Rig-veda I, 18, 6. As the Rishis of the single Kāndas are considered, Pragâpati, Soma, Agni, the Visve devâs, Svayambhû. Regarding the Mantras quoted in the last section of this Sûtra, see above, I, 1, 3, 5-7.

Phalgunī, (or) Hasta, (or) Kītrā, or the two Viśākhās: under these (Nakshatras) he may take the bath.

4. He goes to a place near which water is, puts wood on the fire, performs the rites down to the oblations made with the Vyāhṛitis, and puts a piece of Palāsa wood on (the fire) with (the verse), 'Let us prepare this song like a chariot, for Gâtavedas who deserves it, with our prayer. For his foresight in this assembly is a bliss to us. Agni! Dwelling in thy friendship may we not suffer harm. Svâhâ!'

5. Then he sacrifices with the Vyāhṛitis as above,

6. (And another oblation with the verse), 'The threefold age of Gamadagni, Kasyapa's threefold age, the threefold age that belongs to the gods: may that threefold age be mine. Svâhâ!'

7. (Then follow oblations with the verses), 'This, O Varuṇa,' &c. (see above, I, 2, 8, 16, down to the end of the Sūtra).

8. After he has served food to the Brāhmaṇas, and has caused them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!' he discharges himself of his vow by (repeating) these (Mantras), 'Agni, lord of the vow, I have kept the vow.'

9. Having (thus) discharged himself of his vow, he worships the sun with the two (verses), 'Upwards

9, 4. Comp. I, 1, 3, 4; Rig-veda I, 94, 1. 'Where the words are used, "He puts wood on the fire" (agnim upasamâdhâya), he should prepare the ground by raising it, &c., should carry the fire to that place, should put wood on it, and then he should sacrifice in the fire. Where those words are not used, he should (only) strew grass round the fire which is (already) established in its proper place, and should thus perform the sacrifice.' Mâtṛidatta.

6. Sāṅkhâya I, 28, 9.

8. Comp. I, 2, 7, 25; 8, 7.

that (Gâtavedas)' (Taitt. Samh. I, 4, 43, 1), and, 'The bright' (ibid.).

10. With (the words), '(Loosen) from us thy highest band, Varuna,' he takes off the upper garment which he has worn during his studentship, and puts on another (garment). With (the words), '(Loosen) the lowest (fetter),' (he takes off) the under garment; with (the words), '(Take) away the middle (fetter),' the girdle. With (the words), 'And may we, O Âditya, under thy law (&c.),' (he deposes) his staff. The girdle, the staff, and the black antelope's skin he throws into water, sits down to the west of the fire, facing the east, and touches the razor (with which he is going to be shaven), with (the formula), 'Razor is thy name; the axe is thy father. Adoration to thee! Do no harm to me!'

11. Having handed over (that razor) to the barber, he touches the water with which his hair is to be moistened, with (the formula), 'Be blissful, (O waters), when we touch you.' [(The barber) then pours together warm and cold water. Having poured warm (water) into cold (water)—]

12. (The barber) moistens the hair near the right ear with (the words), 'May the waters moisten thee for life, for old age and splendour' (Taitt. Samhitâ I, 2, 1, 1).

10. The words quoted in this Sûtra are the parts of a Rik which is found in Taittirîya Samhitâ I, 5, 11, 3.

11. The words which I have included in brackets are wanting in some of the MSS., and are not explained in the commentaries. They are doubtless a spurious addition. Comp. Âsvalâyana I, 17, 6, &c.

12. Pâraskara II, 1, 9. The same expression dakshinam godânam, of which I have treated there in the note, is used in this Sûtra. Comp., besides, Sâṅkhâyaana-Gṛîhya I, 28, 9; Âpa-

13. With (the words), 'Herb ! protect him' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.), he puts an herb with the point upwards into (the hair).

14. With (the words), 'Axe ! do no harm to him !' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.), he touches (that herb) with the razor.

15. With (the words), 'Heard by the gods, I shave that (hair)' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.), he shaves him.

16. With (the formula), 'If thou shavest, O shaver, my hair and my beard with the razor, the wounding, the well-shaped, make our face resplendent, but do not take away our life'—(the student who is going to take the bath), looks at the barber.

17. He has the beard shaven first, then the hair in his arm-pits, then the hair (on his head), then the hair of his body, then (he has) his nails (cut).

18. A person who is kindly disposed (towards the student), gathers the hair, the beard, the hair of the body, and the nails (that have been cut off), in a lump of bull's dung, and buries (that lump of dung) in a cow-stable, or near an Udumbara tree, or in a clump of Darbha grass, with (the words), 'Thus I stamba-Srauta-sūtra X, 5, 8; Satapatha-Br. III, 1, 2, 6. According to Mâtṛidatta, there is some difference of opinion between the different teachers as to whether the Mantras for the moistening of the hair and the following rites are to be repeated by the teacher or by the barber.

13. Âsvalâyana I, 17, 8; Pâraskara II, 1, 10; Âpastamba-Sraut., loc. cit.; Kâtyâyana-Sraut. VII, 2, 10. The parallel texts prescribe that one Kusa blade, or three Kusa blades, should be put into the hair.

14. Yâgyñikadeva in his commentary on Kâtyâyana (loc. cit.) says, kshurenâbbhinidhâya kshuradhârâm antarthitatrîṇasyopari nidhâya.

16. Âsvalâyana I, 17, 16. Comp. also Rig-veda I, 24, 11.

hide the sin of N. N., who belongs to the Gotra N. N.'

19. Having rubbed himself with powder such as is used in bathing, he cleanses his teeth with a stick of Udumbara wood—

PĀTALA 3, SECTION 10.

1. With (the formula), 'Stand in your places for the sake of the enjoyment of food. Stand in your places for the sake of long life. Stand in your places for the sake of holy lustre. May I be blessed with long life, an enjoyer of food, adorned with holy lustre.'

2. Then (the teacher) makes him wash himself with lukewarm water, with the three verses, 'O waters, ye are wholesome' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 5, 1), with the four verses, 'The gold-coloured, clean, purifying (waters)' (Taitt. Samh. V, 6, 1), and with the Anuvāka, 'The purifier, the heavenly one' (Taitt. Brāhmaṇa I, 4, 8).

3. Or (instead of performing these rites in the neighbourhood of water) they make an enclosure in a cow-stable and cover it (from all sides); that (the student) enters before sunrise, and in that (enclosure) the whole (ceremony) is performed. 'On that day the sun does not shine upon him,' some say. 'For he who shines (i. e. the sun), shines by the splendour of those who have taken the bath. Therefore the face of a Snātaka is, as it were, resplendent (?).'

4. (His friends or relations) bring him all sorts of 10, 3. Rephāyatīva dīpyatīva. Mātrīdatta. Comp. Āpastamba Dharma-sūtra II, 6, 14, 13, and Bühler's note, S. B. E., vol. ii, p. 135.

4. Comp. above, I, 2, 8, 4.

perfumes, or ground sandal wood; he besprinkles that (with water), and worships the gods by raising his joined hands towards the east, with (the formulas), 'Adoration to Graha (the taker) and to Abhigraha (the seizer)! Adoration to Sāka and Gaṇḍabha! Adoration to those deities who are seizers!' (Then) he anoints himself with (that salve of sandal wood) with (the verse), 'The scent that dwells with the Apsaras, and the splendour that dwells with the Gandharvas, divine and human scent: may that here enter upon me!'

5. They bring him a pair of (new) garments that have not yet been washed. He besprinkles them (with water) and puts on the under garment with (the formula), 'Thou art Soma's body; protect my body! Thou who art my own body, enter upon me; thou who art a blissful body, enter upon me.' Then he touches water, (puts on) the upper garment with the same (Mantra), and sits down to the west of the fire, facing the east.

6. They bring him two ear-rings and a perforated pellet of sandal wood or of Badari wood, overlaid with gold (at its aperture); these two things he ties to a Darbha blade, holds them over the fire, and pours over them (into the fire) oblations (of ghee) with (the Mantras),

'May this gold which brings long life and splendour and increase of wealth, and which gets through (all adversities), enter upon me for the sake of long life, of splendour, and of victory. Svāhā!'

6. Regarding the first Mantra, comp. Vāgas. Samhitā XXXIV, 50. In the fifth Mantra we ought to read oshadhis trāyamānā. Comp. below, I, 3, 11, 3; Pāraskara I, 13; Atharva-veda VIII, 2, 6.

‘(This gold) brings high gain, superiority in battles, superiority in assemblies; it conquers treasures. All perfections unitedly dwell together in this gold. Svâhâ!

‘I have obtained an auspicious name like (the name) of a father of gold. Thus may (the gold) make me shine with golden lustre; (may it make me) beloved among many people; may it make me full of holy lustre. Svâhâ!

‘Make me beloved among the gods; make me beloved with Brahman (i. e. among the Brâhmaṇas), beloved among Vaiśyas and Sûdras; make me beloved among the kings (i. e. among the Kshatriyas). Svâhâ!

‘This herb is protecting, overcoming, and powerful. May it make me shine with golden lustre; (may it make me) beloved among many people; may it make me full of holy lustre. Svâhâ!’

7. Having thrice washed (the two ear-rings) in a vessel of water with the same five (Mantras), without the word Svâhâ, (moving them round in the water) from left to right—

PATALA 3, SECTION 11.

1. He puts on the two ear-rings, the right one to his right ear, the left one to his left ear, with (the verse which he repeats for each of the two ear-rings), ‘Virâḡ and Svarâḡ, and the aiding powers that dwell in our house, the prosperity that dwells in the face of royalty: therewith unite me.’

2. With (the Mantra), ‘With the seasons and the combinations of seasons, for the sake of long life, of 11, 2. The end of the Mantra is corrupt. We ought to read, as splendour, with the sap that dwells in the year: therewith we make them touch the jaws'—he clasps the two ear-rings.

3. With (the Mantra), 'This herb is protecting, overcoming, and powerful. May it make me shine with golden lustre; (may it make me) beloved among many people; may it make me full of holy lustre. Thou art not a bond'—he ties the pellet (of wood, mentioned above, Section 10, Sūtra 6) to his neck.

4. He puts on a wreath with the two (verses),
'Beautiful one, elevate thyself to beauty, beautifying my face. Beautify my face and make my fortune increase'—(and),

'(The wreath) which Gamadagnī has brought to Śraddhā to please her, that I put on (my head) together with fortune and splendour.'

5. 'The salve coming from the Trikakud (mountain), born on the Himavat, therewith I anoint you (i. e. the eyes), and with fortune and splendour. (I put ?) into myself the demon of the mountain (?)'—with (this verse) he anoints himself with Traikakuda salve, (or) if he cannot get that, with some other (salve).

6. With (the verse), 'My mind that has fled away' (Taitt. Saṃhitā VI, 6, 7, 2) he looks into a mirror.

Dr. Kirste has shown, tena samhanu kṛīmāsi (Av. V, 28, 13). Mātridatta says, samgrīhīte-pidhānenāpidadhāti pratigrahasam-grahanayoh samyuktatvād ekāpavargatvāt.

3. The Mantra, with the exception of the last words, is identical with the last verse of Section 10, Sūtra 6. Here the MSS. again have oshadhe for oshadhis.

4. Comp. Atharva-veda VI, 137: yām Gamadagnir akhanad duhitre, &c.; Pāraskara II, 6, 23.

5. Regarding the Traikakuda salve, comp. Zimmer, Altindisches Leben, p. 69, and see Atharva-veda IV, 9, 9.

7. With (the formula), 'On the impulse of the god,' &c., he takes a staff of reed (which somebody hands him), and with (the formula), 'Thou art the thunderbolt of Indra. O Asvins, protect me!'—he thrice wipes it off, upwards from below.

8. With (the formula), 'Speed! Make speed away from us those who hate us, robbers, creeping things, beasts of prey, Rakshas, Pisākas. Protect us, O staff, from danger that comes from men; protect us from every danger; from all sides destroy the robbers'—(and with the verse), 'Not naked (i. e. covered with bark) thou art born on all trees, a destroyer of foes. Destroy all hosts of enemies from every side like Maghavan (Indra)'—he swings (the staff) three times from left to right over his head.

9. With (the formula), 'The divine standing-places are you. Do not pinch me'—he steps into the shoes.

10. With (the formula), 'Pragâpati's shelter art thou, the Brahman's covering'—he takes the parasol.

11. With the verse, 'My staff which fell down in the open air to the ground, that I take up again for the sake of long life, of holiness, of holy lustre'—he takes up his staff, if it has fallen from his hand.

End of the Third Pāṭala.

7. He takes the staff with the well-known Sâvitṛa formula, 'On the impulse of the god Savitṛi . . . I take thee.'

9. Âsvalâyana III, 8, 19; Pâraskara II, 6, 30.

10. Âsvalâyana III, 8, 19; Pâraskara II, 6, 29.

11. Instead of yamâyushe I propose to read âyushe. Comp. Pâraskara II, 2, 12.

PRASNA I, PĀTALA 4, SECTION 12.

1. They bring him a chariot, (or) a horse, or an elephant.

2. 'Thou art the (Sâman called) Rathantara; thou art the Vâmadevya; thou art the Brîhat;' the (verse), 'The two Aṅkas, the two Nyaṅkas' (Taitt. Samhitâ I, 7, 7, 2); (the verse), 'May this your chariot, O Asvins, not suffer damage, neither in pain nor in joy. May it make its way without damage, dispersing those who infest us;' (and the formula), 'Here is holding, here is keeping asunder; here is enjoyment, here may it enjoy itself:' with (these texts) he ascends the chariot, if he enters (the village) on a chariot.

3. 'A horse art thou, a steed art thou'—with these eleven 'horses' names' (Taitt. Samh. VII, 1, 12) (he mounts) the horse, if (he intends to enter the village) on horseback.

4. With (the formula), 'With Indra's thunderbolt I bestride thee; carry (me); carry the time; carry me forward to bliss. An elephant art thou. The elephant's glory art thou. The elephant's splendour art thou. May I become endowed with the elephant's glory, with the elephant's splendour'—(he mounts) the elephant, if (he intends to proceed to the village) on it.

12, 2. Comp. Pâraskara III, 14, 3-6.

3. In this Sûtra three 'horses' names' are given as the Prâtîka of the Yagus quoted, 'Thou art asva, thou art haya, thou art maya.' Mâtrîdatta observes that the third of them is not found in the Taittirîya Samhitâ, which gives only ten, and not eleven, horses' names.

4. Pâraskara III, 15, 1 seq.

5. He goes to a place where they will do honour to him.

6. With (the verse), 'May the quarters (of the horizon) stream together with me; may all delight assemble (here). May all wishes that are dear to us, come near unto us; may (our) dear (wishes) stream towards us'—he worships the quarters of the horizon.

7. While approaching the person who is going to do honour to him, he looks at him with (the words), 'Glory art thou; may I become glory with thee.'

8. Then (the host who is going to offer the Argha reception to the Snātaka), having prepared the dwelling-place (for his reception), says to him, 'The Argha (will be offered)!'

9. (The guest) replies, 'Do so!'

10. They prepare for him (the Madhuparka or 'honey mixture') consisting of three or of five substances.

11. The three substances are, curds, honey, and ghee.

12. The five substances are, curds, honey, ghee, water, and ground grains.

13. Having poured curds into a brass vessel, he pours honey into it, (and then the other substances stated above).

14. Having poured (those substances) into a smaller vessel, and having covered it with a larger (cover than the vessel is), (the host) makes (the guest) accept (the following things) separately, one after the other, viz. a bunch of grass (to sit down on),

5. Âsvalâyana III, 9, 3; Sâṅkhâya III, 1, 14.

10 seq. Pâraskara I, 3, 5; Âsvalâyana I 24, 5 seq.

14. Pâraskara, loc. cit.; Âsvalâyana, loc. cit., § 7.

water for washing the feet, the Argha water, water for sipping, and the honey-mixture (Madhuparka).

15. Going after (the single objects which are brought to the guest, the host) in a faultless, not faltering (?) voice, announces (each of those objects to the guest).

16. The bunch of grass (he announces by three times saying), 'The bunch of grass!'

17. (The guest) sits down thereon facing the east, with (the formula), 'A giver of royal power art thou, a teacher's seat; may I not withdraw from thee.'

18. (The host) then utters to him the announcement, 'The water for washing the feet!'

19. With that (water) a Sûdra or a Sûdra woman washes his feet; the left foot first for a Brâhmana, the right for a person of the two other castes.

PATALA 4, SECTION 13.

1. With (the formula), 'The milk of Virâg art thou. May the milk of Padyâ Virâg (dwell) in me' —(the guest) touches the hands of the person that

15. The text is corrupt and the translation very doubtful. The MSS. have, anusamvraginâ so-nupakiñkayâ vâkâ. Mâtridatta's note, which is also very corrupt, runs thus: anusamvraginâ saha kûrtâdinâ dravyena tad agratah kritvânugantâ. anusamvragineti (sic; anugakhamnusunav°, Dr. Kielhorn's MS.) pramâdapâ/hah. sampradâtânupakiñkayâ na vidyata upaghâtikâ vâg yasya [yasyâ, Dr. K.'s MS.] seyam anupakiñkâ vâk . . . keid anusamvragineti (anusamvragineti, Dr. Kirste) pâ/hântaram kritvâ vâgvishesham ikkhanti yathâ mrishâ vâk samskritâ vâk tathâ keti. apare yathâpâ/ham evârtham ikkhanti.—Perhaps we may correct, anusamvraginayânupakiñkayâ vâkâ. Comp. below, I, 4, 13, 16.

17. See above, I, 2, 6, 9.

19. Pâraskara I, 3, 10. 11; Âsvalâyana I, 24, 11.

13, 1. Comp. Sâñkhâyana III, 7, 5, &c.

washes his feet, and then he touches himself with (the formula), 'May in me dwell brilliancy, energy, strength, life, renown, splendour, glory, power!'

2. (The host) then makes to him the announcement, 'The Argha water!'

3. (The guest) accepts it with (the formula), 'Thou camest to me with glory. Unite me with brilliancy, splendour, and milk. Make me beloved by all creatures, the lord of cattle.'

4. 'To the ocean I send you, the imperishable (waters); go back to your source. May I not suffer loss in my offspring. May my sap not be shed'—this (verse the guest) recites over the remainder (of the Argha water), when it is poured out (by the person who had offered it to him).

5. Then he utters to him the announcement, 'The water for sipping!'

6. With (the formula), 'Thou art the first layer for Ambrosia,' he sips water.

7. Then he utters to him the announcement, 'The honey-mixture!'

8. He accepts that with both hands with the Sāvitra (formula), and places it on the ground with (the formula), 'I place thee on the navel of the earth in the abode of Īdā.' He mixes (the different substances) three times from left to right with his thumb and his fourth finger, with (the formula), 'What is the honied, highest form of honey which consists in the enjoyment of food, by that honied,

3. Pāraskara I, 3, 15.

4. Pāraskara I, 3, 14.

6. Âsvalâyana I, 21, 13.

8. Pāraskara I, 3, 18 seq.; Âsvalâyana I, 21, 15 seq.—The Sāvitra formula is, 'On the impulse of the god Savitri . . . I take thee.' Comp. above, I, 3, 11, 7.

highest form of honey may I become highest, honied, and an enjoyer of food.' He partakes of it three times with (the formula), 'I eat thee for the sake of brilliancy, of luck, of glory, of power, and of the enjoyment of food,' and gives the remainder to a person who is kindly disposed towards him.

9. Or he may eat the whole (Madhuparka). Then he sips water with (the formula), 'Thou art the covering of Ambrosia.'

10. Then he utters to him the announcement, 'The cow!'

11. That (cow) is either killed or let loose.

12. If he chooses to let it loose, (he murmurs), 'This cow will become a milch cow.'

'The mother of the Rudras, the daughter of the Vasus, the sister of the Âdityas, the navel of immortality. To the people who understand me, I say, "Do not kill the guiltless cow, which is Aditi."

'Let it drink water! Let it eat grass'—

(And) gives order (to the people), 'Om! Let it loose.'

13. If it shall be killed, (he says), 'A cow art thou; sin is driven away from thee. Drive away my sin and the sin of N. N.! Kill ye him who ever hates me. He is killed whosoever hates me. Make (the cow) ready!'

14. If (the cow) is let loose, a meal is prepared with other meat, and he announces it (to the guest) in the words, 'It is ready!'

9. Âsvalâyana I, 21, 27. 28.

10 seq. Âsvalâyana I, 21, 30 seq.; Pâraskara I, 3, 26 seq.; Sâṅkhâyaṇa II, 15, 2. 3 note; Gobhila IV, 10, 18 seq.

13. N. N., of course, means the host's name.

14 seq. Comp. Gobhila I, 3, 16 seq.; Âpastamba II, 2, 3, 11.

15. He replies, 'It is well prepared; it is the Virâg; it is food. May it not fail! May I obtain it! May it give me strength! It is well prepared!'—and adds, 'Give food to the Brâhmanas!'

16. After those (Brâhmanas) have eaten, (the host) orders blameless (?) food to be brought to him (i. e. to the guest).

17. He accepts that with (the formula), 'May the heaven give it to thee; may the earth accept it. May the earth give it to thee; may breath accept it. May breath eat thee; may breath drink thee.'

18. With (the verse), 'May Indra and Agni bestow vigour on me' (Taitt. Samh. III, 3, 3, 3) he eats as much as he likes, and gives the remainder to a person who is kindly disposed towards him.

19. If he desires that somebody may not be estranged from him, he should sip water with (the Mantra), 'Whereon the past and the future and all worlds rest, therewith I take hold of thee; I (take hold) of thee; through the Brahman I take hold of thee for myself, N. N.!'—

PATALA 4, SECTION 14.

1. And should, after that person has eaten, seize his right hand.

2. If he wishes that one of his companions, or a pupil, or a servant should faithfully remain with him and not go away, he should bathe in the morning, should put on clean garments, should show

16. The meaning of anusamvṛginam (comp. above, I, 4, 12, 15) is uncertain. See the commentary, p. 120 of Dr. Kirste's edition.

14, 2. Mâtridatta: 'The description of the Samâvartana is finished.'

patience (with that servant, &c.) during the day, should speak (only) with Brâhmanas, and by night he should go to the dwelling-place of that person, should make water into a horn of a living animal, and should three times walk round his dwelling-place, sprinkling (his urine) round it, with (the Mantra), 'From the mountain (I sever ?) thee, from thy brother, from thy sister, from all thy relations. parishṭdaḥ kleshyati (i. e. kvaishyasi ?) sasvat parikupilena samkrâmenâvikkhidâ, ūlena parimīdho-si parimīdho-sy ūlena.

3. He puts down the horn of the living animal in a place which is generally accessible.

4. One whose companions, pupils, or servants use to run away, should rebuke them with (the Mantra), 'May he who calls hither (?), call you hither! He who brings back, has brought you back (?). May the rebuke of Indra always rebuke you. If you, who worship your own deceit, despise me (?), . . . may Indra bind you with his bond, and may he drive you back again to me.'

Now some ceremonies connected with special wishes of the person who has performed the Samâvartana and has settled in a house, will be described.' In my opinion, it would be more correct to consider Sūtra 18 of the preceding section as the last of the aphorisms that regard the Samâvartana. With Sūtra 2 compare Pâraskara III, 7; Âpastamba VIII, 23, 6. It seems impossible to attempt to translate the hopelessly corrupt last lines of the Mantra.

4. A part of this Mantra also is most corrupt. In the first line I propose to write, nivarto vo nyavīritat. With the last line comp. Pâraskara III, 7, 3. I think that the text of Pâraskara should be corrected in the following way: pari tvâ hvalano hvalan nivartas tvâ nyavīritat, indraḥ pâsena sitvâ tvâ mahyam . . . (three syllables) ânayet. The Âpastambīya Mantrapâṭha, according to Dr. Winternitz's copy, gives the following text: anupohvad anuhvayo vivartto

5. Then he enters his house, puts a piece of Sidhraka wood on (the fire), and sacrifices with the 'on-drawing verse,' 'Back-bringer, bring them back' (Taitt. Samh. III, 3, 10, 1).

6. Now (we shall explain) how one should guard his wife.

7. One whose wife has a paramour, should grind big centipedes (?) to powder, and should insert (that powder), while his wife is sleeping, into her secret parts, with the Mantra, 'Indra . . . from other men than me.'

8. Now (follows the sacrifice for procuring) prosperity in trade.

9. He cuts off (some portion) from (every) article of trade and sacrifices it—

PATALA 4, SECTION 15.

1. With (the verse), 'If we trade, O gods, trying by our wealth to acquire (new) wealth, O gods, may vo nyavivṛidhat. aindraḥ parikroso tu vaḥ parikrosatu sarvataḥ. yadi mām atimanyādvā ā devā devavattara indraḥ pāsena sitkvā vo mahyam id vasam ānayāt svāhā. Comp. Prof. Pischel's remarks, Philologische Abhandlungen, Martin Hertz zum siebzigsten Geburtstag von ehemaligen Schülern dargebracht (Berlin, 1888), p. 69 seq.

7. On sthūrā dridhā[h] Mātridatta says, sthūrā dridhā sthūrāḥ satapadyaḥ. A part of the Mantra is untranslatable on account of the very corrupt condition of the text. The reading given by most of the MSS. is, Indrāya yāsya sepham alikam anyebhyaḥ purushebhyo nyatra mat. The Āpastambīya Mantrapāṭha reads, indrāyāsya phaligam anyebhyaḥ purushebhyonyatra mat. The meaning very probably is that Indra is invoked to keep away from the woman the sepha of all other men except her husband's.

15, 1. Comp. Atharva-veda III, 15, 5; Gobhila IV, 8, 19.

Soma thereon bestow splendour, Agni, Indra, Bṛihaspati, and Īśāna. Svâhâ !'

2. Now (follows) the way for appeasing anger.

3. He addresses the angry person with (the verses), 'The power of wrath that dwells here on thy forehead, destroying thy enemy (?), may the chaste, wise gods take that away.

'If thou shootest, as it were, the thought dwelling in thy face, upwards to thy forehead, I loosen the anger of thy heart like the bow-string of an archer.

'Day, heaven, and earth : we appease thy anger, as the womb of a she-mule (cannot conceive).'

4. Now (follows) the way for obtaining the victory in disputes.

5. He puts wood on the fire at night-time in an inner apartment, performs the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations, and sacrifices small grains mixed with Āgya, with (the verse), 'Tongueless one, thou who art without a tongue ! I drive thee away through my sacrifice, so that I may gain the victory in the dispute, and that N. N. may be defeated by me. Svâhâ !'

6. Then in the presence (of his adversary), turned towards him, he murmurs (the verses), 'I take away the speech from thy mouth, (the speech) that dwells in thy mind, (the speech) from thy heart. Out of every limb I take thy speech. Wheresoever thy speech dwells, thence I take it away.

3. Pâraskara III, 13, 5. Possibly we ought to correct mṛid-dhasya into mṛidhrasya. Avadyâm ought to be ava gyâm ; see Atharva-veda VI, 42, 1.

5. The commentary explains kaṇâs (small grains) as oleander (karavîra) seeds.

6. Comp. Pâraskara III, 13, 6. The text of the Mantras is corrupt.

‘Rudra with the dark hair-lock! Hero! At every contest strike down this my adversary, as a tree (is struck down) by a thunderbolt.

‘Be defeated, be conquered, when thou speakest. Sink down under the earth, when thou speakest, struck down by me irresistibly (?) with the hammer of . . . (?). That is true what I speak. Fall down, inferior to me, N. N.!’

7. He touches the assembly-hall (in which the contest is going on), and murmurs, ‘The golden-armed, blessed (goddess), whose eyes are not faint, who is decked with ornaments, seated in the midst of the gods, has spoken for my good. Svâhâ!’

8. ‘For me have the high ones and the low ones, for me has this wide earth, for me have Agni and Indra accomplished my divine aim’—with (this verse) he looks at the assembly, and murmurs (it) turned towards (the assembly).

End of the Fourth Patala.

PRASNA I, PATALA 5, SECTION 16.

1. When he has first seen the new moon, he sips water, and holding (a pot of) water (in his hands) he worships (the moon) with the four (verses), ‘Increase’ (Taitt. Samh. I, 4, 32), ‘May thy milk’ (ibid. IV, 2, 7, 4), ‘New and new again (the moon) becomes, being born’ (ibid. II, 4, 14, 1), ‘That Soma which the Âdityas make swell’ (ibid. II, 4, 14, 1).

7. Probably we should write agîtâkshî.

8. Mâtridatta says, prativâdinam abhigapaty eva.

16. This chapter contains different Prâyasaittas.

2. When he has yawned, he murmurs, '(May) will and insight (dwell) in me.'

3. If the skirt (of his garment) is blown upon him (by the wind), he murmurs, 'A skirt art thou. Thou art not a thunderbolt. Adoration be to thee. Do no harm to me.'

4. He should tear off a thread (from that skirt) and should blow it away with his mouth.

5. If a bird has befouled him with its excrements, he murmurs, 'The birds that timidly fly together with the destroyers, shall pour out on me happy, blissful splendour and vigour.'

Then let him wipe off that (dirt) with something else than his hand, and let him wash himself with water.

6. 'From the sky, from the wide air a drop of water has fallen down on me, bringing luck. With my senses, with my mind I have united myself, protected by the prayer that is brought forth by the righteous ones'—this (verse) he should murmur, if a drop of water unexpectedly falls down on him.

7. 'If a fruit has fallen down from the top of a tree, or from the air, it is Vāyu (who has made it fall). Where it has touched our bodies or the garment, (there) may the waters drive away destruction'—this (verse) he should murmur, if a fruit unexpectedly falls down on him.

8. 'Adoration to him who dwells at the cross-roads,

2. Āsvalāyana-Grīhya III, 6, 7. 3. Pāraskara III, 15, 17.

5. I propose to read, nirṛīthaiḥ saha.

6. Atharva-veda VI, 124, 1. Read sukṛitām kṛitena.

7. Atharva-veda VI, 124, 2. The Atharva-veda shows the way to correct the corrupt third Pāda.

8 seq. Comp. Pāraskara III, 15, 7 seq.

whose arrow is the wind, to Rudra! Adoration to Rudra who dwells at the cross-roads!—this (formula) he murmurs when he comes to a cross-road;

9. 'Adoration to him who dwells among cattle, whose arrow is the wind, to Rudra! Adoration to Rudra who dwells among cattle!—thus at a dung-heap;

10. 'Adoration to him who dwells among the serpents, whose arrow is the wind, to Rudra! Adoration to Rudra who dwells among the serpents!—thus at a place that is frequented by serpents.

11. 'Adoration to him who dwells in the air, whose arrow is the wind, to Rudra! Adoration to Rudra who dwells in the air!—this (formula) let him murmur, if overtaken by a tornado.

12. 'Adoration to him who dwells in the waters, whose arrow is the wind, to Rudra! Adoration to Rudra who dwells in the waters!—this (formula) he murmurs when plunging into a river which is full of water.

13. 'Adoration to him who dwells there, whose arrow is the wind, to Rudra! Adoration to Rudra who dwells there!—this (formula) he murmurs when approaching a beautiful place, a sacrificial site, or a big tree.

14. If the sun rises whilst he is sleeping, he shall fast that day and shall stand silent during that day;

15. The same during the night, if the sun sets whilst he sleeps.

16. Let him not touch a sacrificial post. By 14, 15. Âpastamba II, 5, 12, 13. 14; Gobhila III, 3, 34, &c.

16. Gobhila III, 3, 34. Should it be esha te vâyur iti?

touching it, he would bring upon himself (the guilt of) whatever faults have been committed at that sacrifice. If he touches one (sacrificial post), he should say, 'This is thy wind;' if two (posts), 'These are thy two winds;' if many (posts), 'These are thy winds.'

17. 'The voices that are heard after us (?) and around us, the praise that is heard, and the voices of the birds, the deer's running (?) athwart: that we fear (?) from our enemies'—this (verse) he murmurs when setting out on a road.

18. 'Like an Udgâtri, O bird, thou singest the Sâman; like a Brahman's son thou recitest thy hymn, when the Soma is pressed.

'A blessing on us, O bird; bring us luck and be kind towards us!'—(This Mantra) he murmurs against an inauspicious bird;

19. 'If thou raisest thy divine voice, entering upon living beings, drive away our enemies by thy voice. O death, lead them to death!'—(thus) against a solitary jackal.

20. Then he throws before the (jackal, as it were), a fire-brand that burns at both ends, towards that region (in which the jackal's voice is heard), with (the words), 'Fire! Speak to the fire! Death! Speak to the death!' Then he touches water,

17. The Mantra is very corrupt. Perhaps anihûtam should be corrected into anuhûtam, which is the reading of the Âpastambîya Mantrapâtha. In the last Pâda bhayâmasi is corrupt; the meaning seems to be, 'that we (avert from ourselves and) turn it to our enemies.' Probably Dr. Kirste is right in reading bhagâmasi.

18. Comp. Rig-veda II, 43, 2.

19. As to ekasrika, 'solitary jackal,' comp. Bühler's note on Âpastamba I, 3, 10, 17 (S. B. E., II, 38). Mâtridatta says, srigâlo mrigasabdām kurvāna ekasrika ity ukyate.

21. And worships (the jackal) with the Anuvāka, 'Thou art mighty, thou carriest away' (Taitt. Samhitā I, 3, 3).

PATALA 5, SECTION 17.

1. A she-wolf (he addresses) with (the verse), 'Whether incited by others or whether on its own accord the Bhayedāka (? Bhayodāka, var. lect.) utters this cry, may Indra and Agni, united with Brahman, render it blissful to us in our house.'

2. A bird (he addresses) with (the verse), 'Thou fliest, stretching out thy legs; the left eye . . .; may nothing here suffer harm (through thee);'

3. An owl (piṅgalā) with (the verse), 'The bird with the golden wings flies to the abode of the gods. Flying round the village from left to right portend us luck by thy cry, O owl!'

4. 'May my faculties return into me; may life return, prosperity return; may the divine power return into me; may my goods return to me.

'And may these fires that are stationed on the (altars called) Dhishṛyās, be in good order here, each in its right place. Svāhā!

'My self has returned, life has returned to me; breath has returned, design has returned to me. (Agni) Vaisvānara, grown strong with his rays, may he dwell in my mind, the standard of immortality. Svāhā!

'The food which is eaten in the evening, that does 17, 2. The commentary explains sakuni (bird) by dhvāṅksha (crow). In the translation of the Mantra (Taitt. Ār. IV, 35) I have left out the unintelligible words nipepi ka. The way to correct the last Pāda is shown by Atharva-veda VI, 57, 3; X, 5, 23.

4. Comp. Āsvalāyana-Gṛihya III, 6, 8.

not satiate in the morning him whom hunger assails. May all that (which we have seen in our dreams), do no harm to us, for it has not been seen by day. To Day svâhâ!—with these (verses) he sacrifices sesamum seeds mixed with Âgya, if he has seen a bad dream.

5. Now the following expiations for portents are prescribed. A dove sits down on the hearth, or the bees make honey in his house, or a cow (that is not a calf) sucks another cow, or a post puts forth shoots, or an anthill has arisen (in his house): cases like these (require the following expiation):

6. He should bathe in the morning, should put on clean garments, should show patience (with everybody) during the day, and should speak (only) with Brâhmanas. Having put wood on the fire in an inner apartment, and having performed the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations, he sacrifices with (the verses), 'This, O Varuna,' &c. (see above I, 2, 8, 16, down to the end of the Sûtra). Then he serves food to the Brâhmanas and causes them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!'

PATALA 5, SECTION 18.

1. 'May Indra and Agni make you go. May the two Asvins protect you. Brîhaspati is your herdsman. May Pûshan drive you back again'—

5. Sâṅkhâyana V, 5. 8. 11; Âśvalâyana III, 7, &c. Kuptvâ is corrupt; we should expect a locative. We ought to correct kuptvâm, as Dr. Kirste has observed, comp. Âpastamba-Grihya VIII, 23, 9.

6. Comp. above, I, 4, 14, 2; 15, 5; I, 2, 8, 16; I, 3, 9, 7. 8.

18, 1 seq. Comp. Sâṅkhâyana III, 9; Gobhila III, 6; Âśvalâyana II, 10.

this (verse) he recites over the cows when they go away (to their pasture-grounds), and (the verse), 'May Pûshan go after our cows' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 11, 2).

2. With (the verse), 'These cows that have come hither, free from disease and prolific, may they swim (full of wealth) like rivers; may they pour out (wealth), as (rivers discharge their floods) into the ocean'—he looks at the cows, when they are coming back.

3. With (the formula), 'You are a stand at rest; may I (?) become your stand at rest. You are immovable. Do not move from me. May I not move from you, the blessed ones'—(he looks at them) when they are standing still.

4. With (the formula), 'I see you full of sap. Full of sap you shall see me'—(he looks at them) when they are gone into the stable, and with (the formula), 'May I be prosperous through your thousandfold prospering.'

5. Then having put wood on the fire amid the cows, and having performed the rites down to the Vyâhrîti (oblations), he makes oblations of milk with (the verses),

'Blaze brightly, O Gâtavedas, driving destruction away from me. Bring me cattle and maintenance from all quarters of the heaven. Svâhâ !

'May Gâtavedas do no harm to us, to cows and horses, to men and to all that moves. Come hither,

3. The Mantra is very corrupt. I think it ought to be corrected somehow in the following way: saṁsthâ stha saṁsthâ vo bhûyâsam akyutâ stha mâ mak kyodhvam mâham bhavatibhyas kyoshi. Comp. also Dr. Kirste's note.

5. In the second verse I propose to change abibhrad into Agni, fearlessly; make me attain to welfare! Svāhā!—

And with (the two verses), 'This is the influx of the waters,' and 'Adoration to thee, the rapid one, the shining one' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 6, 1, 3).

6. (Then follow oblations with the verses), 'This, O Varuṇa' (&c.; see I, 2, 8, 16, down to the end of the Sūtra).

End of the Fifth Pātala.

PRASNA I, PĀTALA 6, SECTION 19.

1. After he has returned from the teacher's house, he should support his father and mother.

2. With their permission he should take a wife belonging to the same caste and country, a 'naked' girl, a virgin who should belong to a different Gotra (from her husband's).

3. Whatever he intends to do (for instance, taking a wife), he should do on an auspicious day only, during one of the following five spaces of time, viz. in the morning, the forenoon, at midday, in the afternoon, or in the evening.

abibhyad; comp. Atharva-veda XIX, 65, 1: ava tām gahi harasā Gâtavedo bibhyad ugro rāṣhā divam ā roha sūrya. The last words of this verse should be sriyam mā pratipādaya, or something similar.

19, 2. sagâtām savarnām samânâbhiganâm ka. Mâtridatta. As to the meaning of 'a naked girl,' (i. e. a girl who has not yet the monthly illness), comp. Gobhila III, 4, 6 and note.

3. According to Mâtridatta, 'morning' means one Nâḍikâ before and one Nâḍikâ after sunrise; 'forenoon' means one Nâḍikâ before and one Nâḍikâ after the moment at which the first quarter of the day has elapsed; and thus each of the other three day-times

4. Having put wood on the fire, and having performed (the preparatory rites) down to the laying of (three) branches round (the fire, the bridegroom) looks at the bride who is led to him, with (the verse), 'Auspicious ornaments does this woman wear. Come up to her and behold her. Having brought luck to her, go away back to your houses.'

5. To the south of the bridegroom the bride sits down.

6. After she has sipped water, she touches him, and he sprinkles (water) round (the fire) as above.

7. After he has performed the rites down to the oblations made with the Vyâhr̥itis, he sacrifices with (the following Mantras),

'May Agni come hither, the first of gods. May he release the offspring of this wife from the fetter of death. That may this king Varuṇa grant, that this wife may not weep over distress (falling to her lot) through her sons. Svâhâ!

'May Agni Gârhapatya protect this woman. May he lead her offspring to old age. With fertile womb may she be the mother of living children. May she experience delight in her sons. Svâhâ!

'May no noise that comes from thee, arise in the house by night. May the (she-goblins called) the weeping ones take their abode in another (woman) is understood to comprise two Nâdikâs. As the whole day consists of sixty Nâdikâs, it is the sixth part of the day (= 10 Nâdikâs) which is considered as auspicious for such purposes as taking a wife.

4. See I, 1, 2, 1 seq. Rig-veda X, 85, 33; Pâraskara I, 8, 9, &c.

6. See I, 1, 2, 7 seq.

7. Pâraskara I, 6, 11. With the third verse comp. Atharva-veda XI, 9, 14.

than thee. Mayst thou not be beaten at thy breast by (the she-goblin) Vikeś ("the rough-haired one"). May thy husband live, and mayst thou shine in thy husband's world, beholding thy genial offspring! Svâhâ!

'May Heaven protect thy back, Vâyu thy thighs, and the two Āsvins thy breast. May Savitrī protect thy suckling sons. Until the garment is put on (thy sons?), may Bṛihaspati guard (them?), and the Visve devās afterwards. Svâhâ!

'Childlessness, the death of sons, evil, and distress, I take (from thee), as a wreath (is taken) from the head, and (like a wreath) I put all evil on (the head of) our foes. Svâhâ!

'With this well-disposed prayer which the gods have created, I kill the Pisākas that dwell in thy womb. The flesh-devouring death-bringers I cast down. May thy sons live to old age. Svâhâ!'

8. After he has sacrificed with (the verses), 'This, O Varuṇa,' 'For this I entreat thee,' 'Thou Agni,' 'Thus thou, Agni,' 'Thou, Agni, art quick,' 'Pragâpati'—he makes her tread on a stone, with (the verse), 'Tread on this stone; like a stone be firm. Destroy those who seek to do thee harm; overcome thy enemies.'

9. To the west of the fire he strews two layers of northward-pointed Darbha grass, the one more to the west, the other more to the east. On these both (the bridegroom and the bride) station themselves, the one more to the west, the other more to the east.

8. See above, I, 1, 3, 5; I, 1, 4, 1.

PRAŚNA I, PĀṬALA 6, SECTION 20.

1. Facing the east, while she faces the west, or facing the west, while she faces the east, he should seize her hand. If he desires to generate male children, let him seize her thumb; if he desires (to generate) female children, her other fingers; if he desires (to generate) both (male and female children), let him seize the thumb together with the other fingers, (so as to seize the hand) up to the hairs (on the hair-side of the hand).

(He should do so with the two Mantras), ‘Sarasvatī! Promote this (our undertaking), O gracious one, rich in studs, thou whom we sing first of all that is.

‘I seize thy hand that we may be blessed with offspring, that thou mayst live to old age with me, thy husband. Bhaga, Aryaman, Savitrī, Purandhi, the gods have given thee to me that we may rule our house.’

2. He makes her turn round, from left to right, so that she faces the west, and recites over her (the following texts),

‘With no evil eye, not bringing death to thy husband, bring luck to the cattle, be full of joy and 20, 1. Sāṅkhāyana I, 13, 2; Âśvalāyana I, 7, 3 seq., &c. The text of the first Mantra ought to be corrected according to Pâraskara I, 7, 2; in the second Mantra we ought to read yathâsa instead of yathâsat; comp. Rig-veda X, 85, 36; Pâraskara I, 6, 3. The bridegroom and the bride, of course, are to face each other; thus, if the bridegroom stands on the eastern layer of grass (Sûtra 9 of the preceding section), he is to face the west; if on the western, he is to face the east.

2. The words, agreṇa dakṣiṇam aṃsam . . . abhyâvartya, evidently have the same meaning which is expressed elsewhere (Sāṅkhāyana vigour. Give birth to living children, give birth to heroes, be friendly. Bring us luck, to men and animals.

‘Thus, Pūshan, lead her to us, the highly blessed one, into whom men pour forth their sperm, yâ na ūrū usatī visrayâtai (read, visrayâtai), yasyâm usantaḥ praharema sepam.

‘Soma has acquired thee first (as his wife); after him the Gandharva has acquired thee. Thy third husband is Agni; the fourth am I, thy human husband.

‘Soma has given her to the Gandharva; the Gandharva has given her to Agni. Agni gives me cattle and children, and thee besides.

‘This am I, that art thou; the heaven I, the earth thou; the Sāman I, the Rik thou. Come! Let us join together. Let us unite our sperm that we may generate a male child, a son, for the sake of the increase of wealth, of blessed offspring, of strength.

‘Bountiful Indra, bless this woman with sons and with a happy lot. Give her ten sons; let her husband be the eleventh.’

3. After he has made her sit down in her proper place (see Sūtra 5 of the preceding section), and has sprinkled Âgya into her joined hands, he twice pours fried grain into them, with (the verse), ‘This grain I pour (into thy hands): may it bring prosperity to me, and may it unite thee (with me). May this Agni grant us that.’

II, 3, 2), dakṣiṇam bâhum anvâvṛṇīya. With the first Mantra comp. Rig-veda X, 85, 44; Pâraskara I, 4, 16; with the second, Rig-veda, loc. cit., 37; Pâraskara, loc. cit.; with the following ones, Rig-veda X, 85, 40. 41. 45; Pâraskara I, 4, 16; 6, 3, &c.

3 seq. Comp. Sāṅkhâyaṇa I, 13, 15 seq.

4. After he has sprinkled (Āgrya) over (the grain in her hands), he sacrifices (the grain) with her joined hands (which he seizes), with (the verse), 'This woman, strewing grain into the fire, prays thus, "May my husband live long; may my relations be prosperous. Svâhâ!"'

5. Having made her rise with (the verse which she recites), 'Up! with life' (Taitt. Samh. I, 2, 8, 1), and having circumambulated the fire (with her) so that their right sides are turned towards it, with (the verse), 'May we find our way with thee through all hostile powers, as through streams of water'—he pours fried grain (into her hands, and sacrifices them), as before.

6. Having circumambulated (the fire) a second time, he pours fried grain (into her hands, and sacrifices them), as before.

7. Having circumambulated (the fire) a third time, he sacrifices to (Agni) Svishṭakṛit.

8. Here some add as subordinate oblations the Gaya, Abhyâtâna, and Râshṭrabhṛit (oblations) as above.

9. To the west of the fire he makes her step forward in an easterly or a northerly direction the (seven) 'steps of Vishṇu.'

10. He says to her, 'Step forward with the right (foot) and follow with the left. Do not put the left (foot) before the right.'

5. Comp. above, I, 2, 7, 13; Rig-veda II, 7, 3.

8. Comp. I, 2, 8, 16.

9 seq. Comp. Gobhila II, 2, 11 seq.; Sâṅkhâya I, 14, 5 seq.

PĀṬALA 6, SECTION 21.

1. (He makes her step forward, and goes with her himself), with (the Mantras), 'One (step) for sap, may Vishṇu go after thee; two (steps) for juice, may Vishṇu go after thee; three (steps) for vows, may Vishṇu go after thee; four (steps) for comfort, may Vishṇu go after thee; five (steps) for cattle, may Vishṇu go after thee; six (steps) for the prospering of wealth, may Vishṇu go after thee; seven (steps) for the sevenfold Hotṛiship, may Vishṇu go after thee.'

2. After the seventh step he makes her abide (in that position) and murmurs, 'With seven steps we have become friends. May I attain to friendship with thee. May I not be separated from thy friendship. Mayst thou not be separated from my friendship.'

3. He then puts his right foot on her right foot, moves his right hand down gradually over her right shoulder, and touches the place of her heart as above,

4. And the place of her navel with (the formula), 'Thou art the knot of all breath; do not loosen thyself.'

5. After he has made her sit down to the west of the fire, so that she faces the east, he stands to the east (of his bride), facing the west, and besprinkles her with water, with the three verses, 'O waters, ye are wholesome' (Taitt. Saṃh. IV, 1, 5, 1), with the four verses, 'The gold-coloured, clean, purifying waters' (V, 6, 1), and with the Anuvāka, 'The purifier, the heavenly one' (Taitt. Brāhmaṇa I, 4, 8).

21, 3. See above, I, 2, 5, 11.

4. See above, I, 2, 5, 12.

5. Comp. I, 3, 10, 2.

6. Now they pour seeds (of rice, &c.) on (the heads of the bridegroom and bride).

End of the Sixth Patala.

PRASNA I, PATALA 7, SECTION 22.

1. Then they let her depart (in a vehicle from her father's house), or they let her be taken away.

2. Having put (the fire into a vessel) they carry that (nuptial) fire behind (the newly-married couple).

3. It should be kept constantly.

4. If it goes out, (a new fire) should be kindled by attrition, or it should be fetched from the house of a Srotriya.

5. Besides, if (the fire) goes out, the wife or the husband should fast.

6. When (the bridegroom with his bride) has come to his house, he says to her, 'Cross (the threshold) with thy right foot first; do not stand on the threshold.'

7. In the hall, in its easterly part, he puts down the fire and puts wood on it.

8. To the west of the fire he spreads out a red bull's skin with the neck to the east, with the hair outside.

6. Mâtridatta explains adhisrayanti by vapanti gâyâpatyo/sirasi kshipanti.

22, 4. 'If the fire on which they had put wood, was a fire produced by attrition, (the new fire) should (also) be kindled by attrition. If it was a common (laukika) fire that they had fetched, (the new fire) should be fetched from a Srotriya's house. Thereby it is shown that the common fire at the Upanayana ceremony, &c., should be fetched only from a Srotriya's house.' Mâtridatta.

9. On that (skin) they both sit down facing the east or the north, so that the wife sits behind her husband, with (the verse), 'Here may the cows sit down, here the horses, here the men. Here may also Pūshan with a thousand (sacrificial) gifts sit down.'

10. They sit silently until the stars appear.

11. When the stars have appeared, he goes forth from the house (with his wife) in an easterly or northerly direction, and worships the quarters (of the horizon) with (the hemistich), 'Ye goddesses, ye six wide ones' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 7, 14, 2).

12. (He worships) the stars with (the Pāda), 'May we not be deprived of our offspring;'

13. The moon with (the Pāda), 'May we not get into the power of him who hates us, O king Soma!'

14. He worships the seven Rīshis (ursa major) with (the verse), 'The seven Rīshis who have led to firmness she, Arundhattī, who stands first among the six Kṛttikās (pleiads):—may she, the eighth one, who leads the conjunction of the (moon with the) six Kṛttikās, the first (among conjunctions) shine upon us!' Then he worships the polar star with (the formula), 'Firm dwelling, firm origin. The firm one art thou, standing on the side of firmness. Thou art the pillar of the stars; thus protect me against my adversary.

'Adoration be to the Brahman, to the firm, immovable one! Adoration be to the Brahman's son, Pragâpati! Adoration to the Brahman's children, 9. Comp. Pāraskara I, 8, 10, and the readings quoted there from the Atharva-veda.

12, 13. These are the two last Pādas of the verse of which the first hemistich is quoted in Sūtra 11.

to the thirty-three gods! Adoration to the Brahman's children and grandchildren, to the Āngiras!

'He who knows thee (the polar star) as the firm, immovable Brahman with its children and with its grandchildren, with such a man children and grandchildren will firmly dwell, servants and pupils, garments and woollen blankets, bronze and gold, wives and kings, food, safety, long life, glory, renown, splendour, strength, holy lustre, and the enjoyment of food. May all these things firmly and immovably dwell with me!'

PATALA 7, SECTION 23,

I. (Then follow the Mantras), 'I know thee as the firm Brahman. May I become firm in this world and in this country.

'I know thee as the immovable Brahman. May I not be moved away from this world and from this country. May he who hates me, my rival, be moved away from this world and from this country.

'I know thee as the unshaken Brahman. May I not be shaken off from this world and from this country. May he who hates me, my rival, be shaken off from this world and from this country.

'I know thee as the unfalling Brahman. May I not fall from this world and from this country. May he who hates me, my rival, fall from this world and from this country.

'I know thee as the nave of the universe. May I become the nave of this country. I know thee as the centre of the universe. May I become the centre of this country. I know thee as the string that holds the universe. May I become the string that holds this country. I know thee as the pillar of the universe. May I become the pillar of this country. I know thee as the navel of the universe. May I become the navel of this country.

‘As the navel is the centre of the Prâṇas, thus I am the navel. May hundred-and-onfold evil befall him who hates us and whom we hate; may more than hundred-and-onfold merit fall to my lot!’

2. Having spoken there with a person that he likes, and having returned to the house, he causes her to sacrifice a mess of cooked food.

3. The wife husks (the rice grains of which that Sthâlpâka is prepared).

4. She cooks (that Sthâlpâka), sprinkles (Āgrya) on it, takes it from the fire, sacrifices to Agni, and then sacrifices to Agni Svishṭakṛit.

5. With (the remains of) that (Sthâlpâka) he entertains a learned Brâhmana whom he reveres.

6. To that (Brâhmana) he makes a present of a bull.

7. From that time he constantly sacrifices (yagate) on the days of the full and of the new moon a mess of cooked food sacred to Agni.

8. In the evening and in the morning he constantly sacrifices (guhōti) with his hand (and not with the Darvī) the two following oblations of rice or of barley: ‘To Agni Svâhâ! To Pragâpati Svâhâ!’

9. Some (teachers) state that in the morning the

5, 6. In the commentary these Sûtras are divided thus : 5. tena brâhmanam vidyâvantam pariveśhâ; 6. yo = syâpakīto bhavati tasmâ riṣhabham dadâti. (5. Therewith he entertains a learned Brâhmana. 6. To one whom he reveres, he presents a bull.) The commentator observes that some authorities make one Sûtra of the two, so that the Brâhmana who receives the food and the one to whom the bull is given, would be the same person.

former (of these oblations) should be directed to Sūrya.

10. Through a period of three nights they should eat no saline food, should sleep on the ground, wear ornaments, and should be chaste.

11. In the fourth night, towards morning, he puts wood on the fire, performs the (regular) ceremonies down to the (regular) expiatory oblations, and sacrifices nine expiatory oblations (with the following Mantras):

PĀṬALA 7, SECTION 24.

1. 'Agni! Expiation! Thou art expiation. I, the Brāhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. What is terrible in her, drive that away from here. Svāhā!

'Vāyu! Expiation! Thou art expiation. I, the Brāhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. What is blameful in her, drive that away from here. Svāhā!

'Sun! Expiation! Thou art expiation. I, the Brāhmaṇa, entreat thee, desirous of protection. What dwells in her that is death-bringing to her husband, drive that away from here. Svāhā!

'Sun! Expiation! &c.

'Vāyu! Expiation! &c.

'Agni! Expiation! &c.

'Agni! Expiation! &c.

'Vāyu! Expiation! &c.

'Sun! Expiation! &c.'

11. According to the commentary he performs the regular ceremonies down to the oblation offered with the Mantra, 'Thus thou, Agni' (see above, I, 3, 5, and compare Pāraskara I, 2, 8). Mātridatta says, prāyaskittiparyantam kṛtvā sa tvam no Agna ity etadantam kṛtvā nava prāyaskittir guhoti . . . vyāhṛtiparyantam kṛtvā imam me Varuṇeti katasro (I, 3, 5) hutvāitā guhoti.

2. Having sacrificed (these oblations), he then pours the remainder as an oblation on her head, with (the formulas), 'Bhûh! I sacrifice fortune over thee. Svâhâ! Bhuvaḥ! I sacrifice glory over thee. Svâhâ! Suvaḥ! I sacrifice beauty over thee. Svâhâ! Bhûr bhuvaḥ suvaḥ! I sacrifice brightness over thee. Svâhâ!'

3. There (near the sacrificial fire) he places a water-pot, walks round the fire (and that water-pot) keeping his right side turned towards it, makes (the wife) lie down to the west of the fire, facing east or north, and touches her secret parts, with (the formula), 'We touch thee with the five-forked, auspicious, unhostile (?), thousandfoldly blessed, glorious hand that thou mayst be rich in offspring!'

4. He then cohabits with her with (the formula), 'United is our soul, united our hearts, united our navel, united our skin. I will bind thee with the bond of love; that shall be insoluble.'

5. He then embraces her with (the formula), 'Be devoted to me; be my companion. What dwells in thee that is death-bringing to thy husband, that I make death-bringing to thy paramours. Bring luck to me; be a sharp-cutting (destroyer) to thy paramours.'

6. He then seeks her mouth with his mouth, with (the two verses), 'Honey! Lo! Honey! This is honey! my tongue's speech is honey; in my mouth dwells the honey of the bee; on my teeth dwells concord.

'The (magic charm of) concord that belongs to the kakravâka birds, that is brought out of the 6. With the first verse comp. Taitt. Samh. VII, 5, 10, 1; Kâtâyana XIII, 3, 21; Lâtâyana IV, 3, 18.

rivers, of which the divine Gandharva is possessed, thereby we are concordant.'

7. A woman that has her monthly courses, keeps through a period of three nights the observances prescribed in the Brāhmaṇa.

8. In the fourth night (the husband) having sipped water, calls (the wife) who has taken a bath, who wears a clean dress and ornaments, and has spoken with a Brāhmaṇa, to himself (with the following verses):

PATALA 7, SECTION 25.

1. (a) 'May Vishṇu make thy womb ready; may Tvashtri frame the shape (of the child); may Pragāpati pour forth (the sperm); may Dhātri give thee conception!

(b) 'Give conception, Sintvālt; give conception, Sarasvatī! May the two Asvins, wreathed with lotus, give conception to thee!

(c) 'The embryo which the two Asvins produce with their golden kindling-sticks: that embryo we call into thy womb, that thou mayst give birth to it after ten months.

(d) 'As the earth is pregnant with Agni, as the heaven is with Indra pregnant, as Vāyu dwells in the womb of the regions (of the earth), thus I place an embryo into thy womb.

7. Taitt. Samhitā II, 5, 1, 5. 6: Therefore one should not speak with a woman that has her monthly courses, nor sit together with her, nor eat food that she has given him, &c.

25, 1 (a-c). Rīg-veda X, 184, 1-3; comp. S. B. E., vol. xv, p. 221.

(d-f). Sāṅkhāyana-Gṛhya I, 19. It should be observed that the text of Hiraṇyakesin has in the beginning of (e) quite the same blunder which is found also in the Sāṅkhāyana MSS., yasya instead of vyasya.

(e) 'Open thy womb; take in the sperm; may a male child, an embryo be begotten in the womb. The mother bears him ten months; may he be born, the most valiant of his kin.

(f) 'May a male embryo enter thy womb, as an arrow the quiver; may a man be born here, thy son, after ten months.

(g) 'I do with thee (the work) that is sacred to Pragâpati; may an embryo enter thy womb. May a child be born without deficiency, with all its limbs, not blind, not lame, not sucked out by Pisâkas.

(h) 'By the superior powers which the bulls shall produce for us, thereby become thou pregnant; may he be born, the most valiant of his kin.

(i) 'Indra has laid down in the tree the embryo of the sterile cow and of the cow that prematurely produces; thereby become thou pregnant; be a well-breeding cow'—

And (besides with the two Mantras), 'United are our names' (above, 24, 4), and, 'The concord of the kakravâka birds' (24, 6).

2. (He should cohabit with her with the formulas), 'Bhû! Through Pragâpati, the highest bull, I pour forth (the sperm); conceive a valiant son, N. N.!—Bhuvah! Through Pragâpati, &c.—Suvah! Through Pragâpati, &c.' Thus he will gain a valiant son.

3. The Mantras ought to be repeated whenever they cohabit, according to Âtreya,

4. Only the first time and after her monthly courses, according to Bâdarâyana.

(g) Comp. Atharva-veda III, 23, 5. The Âpastambîya Mantra-pâtha reads (a) pisâkadhîta.

(h) Sâṅkhâyaṇa-Grīhya I, 19, 6; Atharva-veda III, 23, 4.

(i) Comp. Atharva-veda III, 23, 1.

PĀṬALA 7, SECTION 26¹.

1. The fire which (the sacrificer keeps) from the time of his marriage, is called the Aupāsana (or sacred domestic fire).

2. With this fire the sacred domestic ceremonies are performed.

3. On account of his worship devoted to this (fire the sacrificer) is considered as an Āhitāgni (i. e. as one who has set up the Śrauta fires), and on account of his fortnightly Karu sacrifices (on the days of the new and full moon) as one who offers the sacrifices of the new and full moon (as prescribed in the Śrauta ritual); so (is it taught).

4. If (the service at the domestic fire) has been interrupted for twelve days, the sacrificer ought to set the fire up again.

5. Or he should count all the sacrifices (that have been left out), and should offer them.

6. (The punarādhāna or repeated setting up of the fire is performed in the following way): in an enclosed space, having raised (the surface), sprinkled it (with water), strewn it with sand, and covered it with Udumbara or Plaksha branches, he silently brings together the things belonging to (the sacrifice) according as he is able to get them, produces fire by attrition out of a sacrificially pure piece of wood, or gets a common fire, places it in a big vessel, sets it in a blaze, and puts (fuel) on it with the words, 'Bhūh! Bhuvah! Svah! Om! Fixity!'

¹ This chapter is left out in Māṇḍikya's commentary; it seems to be a later addition. The division of the Sūtras is my own.

26, 3. For tasyaupāsana I think we should read tasyopāsana.

7. He then puts wood on the fire, performs (the rites) down to the Vyâhr̥iti oblations, and offers two 'mindâ oblations' (i. e. oblations for making up for defects) with (the two Mantras), 'If a defect (mindâ) has arisen in me,' (and), 'Agni has given me back my eye' (Taitt. Samh. III, 2, 5, 4).

8. He offers three 'tantu oblations' with (the Mantras), 'Stretching the weft (tantu)' (Taitt. Samh. III, 4, 2, 2), 'Awake, Agni!' (IV, 7, 13, 5), 'The thirty-three threads of the weft' (I, 5, 10, 4).

9. He offers four 'abhyâvartin oblations' with (the Mantras), 'Agni who turns to us (abhyâvartin)!' 'Agni Ângiras!' 'Again with sap,' 'With wealth' (Taitt. Samh. IV. 2, 1, 2. 3).

10. Having made oblations with the single Vyâhr̥itis and with (the three Vyâhr̥itis together), and having made an oblation with the verse, 'Thou art quick, Agni, and free from imprecation. Verily (satyam) thou art quick. Held by us in our quick mind (manas), with thy quick (mind) thou carriest the offering (to the gods). Being quick bestow medicine on us! Svâhâ!'—this (last) oblation contains an allusion to the mind (manas), it refers to Pragâpati, and alludes to the number seven (?),—he quickly repeats in his mind the dasa-hotri formula (Taitt. Ârany. III, 1, 1). Then he makes the sagraha oblation (?); (then follow the

10. As to the Mantra, 'Thou art quick, &c.,' comp. above, I, 1, 3, 5, and the note on Sâṅkhâyaṇa I, 9, 12. I cannot see why the oblation made with this Mantra is called saptavati (alluding to the number seven); possibly we ought to read satyavati (containing the word satyam, 'verily'). Can the words sagraham hutvâ mean, 'having performed the worship of the planets (graha) at his sacrifice'?

oblations), 'This, O Varuna' (&c. ; see I, 2, 8, 16, down to the end of the Sûtra). Then he serves food to the Brâhmanas and causes them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!' he then performs in the known way the sacrifice of a mess of cooked food to Agni.

11. Here he gives an optional gift to his Guru: a pair of clothes, a milch cow, or a bull.

12. If he sets out on a journey, he makes the fire enter himself or the two kindling-sticks in the way that has been described (in the Srauta-sûtra).

13. Or let him make it enter a piece of wood, in the same way as into the kindling-sticks.

14. A piece of Khadira wood, or of Palâsa, or of Udumbara, or of Asvattha wood—

15. With one of these kinds of wood he fetches, where he turns in (on his journey), fire from the house of a Srotriya, and puts the (piece of wood) into which his fire has entered, on (that fire), with the two verses, 'He who has received the oblations' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 6, 5, 3), and 'Awake!' (IV, 7, 13, 5).

16. The way in which he sacrifices has been explained (in the Srauta-sûtra).

17. If one half-monthly sacrifice has been omitted, he should have a sacrifice to (Agni) Pathikṛit performed over this (fire). If two (half-monthly sacrifices), to (Agni) Vaisvânara and Pathikṛit. If more than two, (the fire) has to be set up again.

18. If the fire is destroyed or lost, or if it is mixed with other fires, it has to be set up again.

PRAJNA I, PATALA 8, SECTION 27.

1. If he will have a house built, he should during the northerly course of the sun, in the time of the increasing moon, under the constellation Rohini and under the three constellations designated as Uttara (Uttara-Phalgunī, Uttara-Ashādhā, Uttara-Proshtha-padāḥ) put wood on the fire, perform the rites down to the Vyāhṛiti oblations, and should sacrifice with (the verses), 'This, O Varuṇa' (&c. ; see I, 2, 8, 16, down to the end of the Sūtra). Then he serves food to the Brāhmaṇas and causes them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!' he puts on a garment that has not yet been washed, touches water, takes a shovel with (the formula), 'On the impulse of the god Savitṛi' (Taitt. Samh. I, 3, 1, 1), draws lines thrice from the left to the right round (the places where the pits for the posts shall be dug) with (the formula), 'A line has been drawn' (Taitt. Samh. I, 3, 1, 1), digs the pits (in which the posts shall be erected) as it is fit, and casts the earth (dug out of those pits) towards the inside (of the building-ground).

2. He erects the southern door-post with (the verse), 'Here I erect a firm house; it stands in peace, streaming ghee. Thus may we walk in thee, O house, blessed with heroes, with all heroes, with unharmed heroes;'

3. The northern (door-post) with (the verse), 'Stand here firmly, O house, rich in horses and cows, rich in delight; rich in sap, overflowing with milk be set up, for the sake of great happiness.'

4. With (the verse), 'To thee (may) the young child (go), to thee the calf with its companion, to thee the golden cup; to thee may they go with pots of curds'—he touches the two posts, after they have been erected.

5. In the same way (Sûtras 2. 3) he erects the two chief posts,

6. And touches them as above (Sûtra 4).

7. He fixes the beam of the roof on the posts with (the formula), 'Rightly ascend the post, O beam, erect, shining, drive off the enemies. Give us treasures and valiant sons.'

8. When the house has got its roof, he touches it with (the verse),

'The consort of honour, a blissful refuge, a goddess, thou hast been erected by the gods in the beginning; clothed in grass, cheerful thou art; bring us bliss, to men and animals.'

9. Then, under the constellation Anurâdhâ, the ground (on which the house stands) is expiated (in the following way).

10. By night he puts wood on the fire in an inner room (of the house), performs the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations, and sacrifices (with the following Mantras):

PĀṬALA 8, SECTION 28.

1. The two verses commencing 'Vâstoshpati!' (Taitt. Samh. III, 4, 10, 1).

27, 4. The text has the reading gagatâ saha; comp. the note on Sâṅkhâya III, 2, 9.

8. Comp. Atharva-veda III, 11, 5; this text shows the way to correct the blunders of the Hiranyakesin MSS.

28, 1. Comp. Rig-veda VII, 54, 2; Taitt. Brâhm. III, 7, 14, 4; Rig-veda X, 18, 1; Taitt. Brâhm. III, 7, 14, 5.

‘Vāstoshpati! Be our furtherer; make our wealth increase in cows and horses, O Indu (i. e. Soma). Free from decay may we dwell in thy friendship; give us thy favour, as a father to his sons. Svāhā!

‘May death go away; may immortality come to us. May Vivasvat’s son (Yama) protect us from danger. May wealth, like a leaf (that falls) from a tree, fall down over us. May Saṅīpati (i. e. Indra) be with us. Svāhā!

‘Go another way, O death, that belongs to thee, separated from the way of the gods. Vāstoshpati! To thee who hears us, I speak: do no harm to our offspring nor to our heroes. Svāhā!

‘To this most excellent place of rest we have gone, by which we shall victoriously gain cows, treasures, and horses. May wealth, like a leaf (that falls) from a tree, fall down over us. May Saṅīpati be with us. Svāhā!

‘This, O Varuṇa’ (&c.; see chap. 27, Sūtra 1, down to): ‘Hail! Good luck!’

2. In this way the ground (on which the house stands) should be expiated every year;

3. Every season, according to some (teachers).

PATALA 8, SECTION 29.

1. ‘House, do not fear, do not tremble; bringing strength we come back. Bringing strength, gaining wealth, wise I come back to the house, rejoicing in my mind.

‘Of which the traveller thinks, in which much joy dwells, the house I call. May it know us as we know it.

‘Hither are called the cows; hither are called goats and sheep; and the sweet essence of food is called hither to our house.

‘Hither are called many friends, the sweet companionship of friends. May our dwellings always be unharmed with all our men.

‘Rich in sap, rich in milk, refreshing, full of joy and mirth, free from hunger (?) and thirst, O house, do not fear us’—with (these verses) he approaches his house (when returning from a journey).

2. ‘To thee I turn for the sake of safety, of peace. The blissful one! The helpful one! Welfare! Welfare!’—with (this formula) he enters.

3. On that day, on which he has arrived, he should avoid all quarrelling.

4. ‘The joyful house I enter which does not bring death to men; most manly (I enter) the auspicious one. Bringing refreshment, with genial minds (we enter the house); joyfully I lie down in it’—with (this verse) he lies down.

5. ‘May we find our way with thee through all hostile powers, as through streams of water’—with (this verse) he looks at his wife; he looks at his wife.

End of the First Prasna.

PRASNA II, PĀTALA 1, SECTION 1.

1. Now (follows) the Sīmantonnayana (or parting of the pregnant wife's hair).

2. In the fourth month of her first pregnancy, in the fortnight of the increasing moon, under an auspicious constellation he puts wood on the fire, performs the rites down to the Vyâhr̥iti oblations, and makes four oblations to Dhâtri with (the verse), 'May Dhâtri give us wealth' (and the following three verses, Taitt. Samh. III, 3, 11, 2. 3).

3. 'This, O Varuna' (&c. ; see I, chap. 27, Sûtra 2, down to) : 'Hail ! Good luck !'

He then makes the wife who has taken a bath, who wears a clean dress and ornaments, and has spoken with a Brâhmaṇa, sit down to the west of the fire, facing the east, in a round apartment. Standing to the east (of the wife), facing the west he parts her hair upwards (i. e. beginning from the front) with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, holding (also) a bunch of unripe fruits, with the Vyâhr̥itis (and) with the two (verses), 'I invoke Rākâ,' (and), 'Thy graces, O Rākâ' (Taitt. Samh. III, 3, 11, 5). Then he recites over (his wife the formulas), 'Soma alone is our king, thus say the Brâhmaṇa tribes, sitting near thy banks, O Gaṅgâ,

1, 3. The corrupt word vivṛittakakrâ(h) seems to contain a vocative fem. referring to Gaṅge—avivṛittakakra? The Âpastambīya Mantrapāṭha reads, vivṛittakakra âśinās ūrena yamune tava. Comp. Âsvalāyana I, 14, 7 ; Pāraskara I, 15, 8.

whose wheel does not roll back (?)!' (and), 'May we find our way with thee through all hostile powers, as through streams of water' (above I, 20, 5).

PATALA 1, SECTION 2.

1. Now (follows) the Pumsavana (i. e. the ceremony for securing the birth of a male child).

2. In the third month, in the fortnight of the increasing moon, under an auspicious constellation (&c. ; see the preceding section, Sûtras 2 and 3, down to :) in a round apartment. He gives her a barley-grain in her right hand with (the formula), 'A man art thou ;'

3. With (the formula), 'The two testicles are ye,' two mustard seeds or two beans, on both sides of that barley-grain.

4. With (the formula), 'Svâvritat' (? svâvrittat ?) (he pours) a drop of curds (on those grains). That he gives her to eat.

5. After she has sipped water, he touches her belly with (the formula), 'With my ten (fingers) I touch thee that thou mayst give birth to a child after ten months.'

6. (He pounds) the last shoot of a Nyagrodha trunk (and mixes the powder) with ghee, or a silk-worm (and mixes the powder) with a pap prepared of panick seeds, or a splinter of a sacrificial post taken from the north-easterly part (of that post) exposed to the fire, or (he takes ashes or soot [?] of)

2, 2. Comp. the note on Âsvalâyana I, 13, 2.

6. The translation of this Sûtra should be considered merely as tentative. Some words of the text are uncertain, and the remarks of Mâtridatta are very incorrectly given in the MSS.

a fire that has been kindled by attrition, and inserts that into the right nostril of (the wife) whose head rests on the widely spread root (of an Udumbara tree?).

7. If she miscarries, he should three times stroke (her body), from the navel upwards, with her wet hand, with (the formula), 'Thitherwards, not hitherwards, may Tvashtri bind thee in his bonds. Making (the mother) enter upon the seasons, live ten months (in thy mother's womb); do not bring death to men.'

8. When her confinement has come, he performs the kshipraprasavana (i. e. the ceremony for accelerating the confinement). Having placed a water-pot near her head and a Tûryantî plant near her feet, he touches her belly.

PĀṬALA 1, SECTION 3.

1. 'As the wind blows, as the ocean waves, thus may the embryo move; may it come forth together with the after-birth'—with (this verse) he strokes (her body) from above downwards.

2. When the child is born, he lays an axe on a stone, and a piece of gold on that axe; after he has turned these things upside down (so that the stone lies uppermost), he holds the boy over them with (the two verses),

'Be a stone, be an axe, be insuperable gold. Thou indeed art the Veda called son; so live a hundred autumns.

8. Comp. Âpastamba-Gr̥hya VI, 14, 14; Âśvalâyana II, 8, 14; IV, 4, 8.

‘From limb by limb thou art produced; out of the heart thou art born. Thou indeed art the self (âtman) called son; so live a hundred autumns.’

3. (The contents of this Sûtra are similar to those of Pâraskara I, 16, 2.)

4. They take the Aupâsana (or regular Grihya) fire away, and they bring the Sûtikâgni (or the fire of the confinement).

5. That (fire) is only used for warming (dishes, etc.).

6. No ceremonies are performed with it except the fumigation (see the next Sûtra).

7. He fumigates (the child) with small grains mixed with mustard seeds. These he throws into the coals (of the Sûtikâgni) (eleven times, each time with one of the following Mantras):

(a) ‘May Sanda and Marka, Upavîra, Sândîkera, Ulûkhala, Kyavana vanish from here. Svâhâ!

(b) ‘Âlikhat, Vilikhat, Animisha, Kimvadanta, Upasruti. Svâhâ!

(c) ‘Aryamna, Kumbhin, Satru, Pâtrapâni, Nipuni. Svâhâ!

(d) ‘May Ântrîmukha, Sarshapârûna vanish from here. Svâhâ!

(e) ‘Kesint, Svalomint, Bagâbogâ, Upakâsint—go away, vanish from here. Svâhâ!

(f) ‘The servants of Kuvera, Visvavâsa (?), sent by the king of demons, all of one common origin,

3, 7. According to Pâraskara (I, 16, 23) this is done daily in the morning and in the evening, until the mother gets up from child-bed.—Comp. the names of the demons, Pâraskara I, 16, 23.—For vikhuram (Mantra i) the Âpastambîya Mantrapâṭha has vidhuraṃ (‘distress’ or ‘a distressed one’).

walk through the villages, visiting those who wake (?). Svâhâ !

(g) ‘“ Kill them ! Bind them !” thus (says) this messenger of Brahman. Agni has encompassed them. Indra knows them ; Brîhaspati knows them ; I the Brâhmaṇa know them who seize (men), who have prominent teeth, rugged hair, hanging breasts. Svâhâ !

(h) ‘ The night-walkers, wearing ornaments on their breasts, with lances in their hands, drinking out of skulls ! Svâhâ !

(i) ‘ Their father Ukkaishrâvyakarna walks (?) at their head, their mother walks in the rear, seeking a vikhura (?) in the village. Svâhâ !

(k) ‘ The sister, the night-walker, looks at the family through the rift (?)—she who wakes while people sleep, whose mind is turned on the wife that has become mother. Svâhâ !

(l) ‘ O god with the black path, Agni, burn the lungs, the hearts, the livers of those (female demons) ; burn their eyes. Svâhâ !’

8. Then he washes his hands and touches the ground with (the verses), ‘ O thou whose hair is well parted ! Thy heart that dwells in heaven, in the moon : of that immortality impart to us. May I not weep over distress (falling to my lot) through my sons.

‘ I know thy heart, O earth, that dwells in heaven, in the moon : thus may I, the lord of immortality, not weep over distress (falling to my lot) through my sons.’

9. Now (follows) the medhâganana (or production of intelligence). With (an instrument of) gold over which he has laid a Darbha shoot tied (to that piece of gold) he gives to the child, which is held so that it faces the east, ghee to eat, with the formulas, 'Bhûh! I sacrifice the Rikas over thee! Bhuvaḥ! I sacrifice the Yagus over thee! Suvaḥ! I sacrifice the Sâmans over thee! Bhûr bhuvaḥ suvaḥ! I sacrifice the Atharvan and Āngiras hymns over thee!'

10. He then bathes the child with lukewarm water with (the following Mantras):

'From chronic disease, from destruction, from wile, from Varuṇa's fetter I release thee. I make thee guiltless before the Brahman; may both Heaven and Earth be kind towards thee.

'May Agni together with the waters bring thee bliss, Heaven and Earth together with the herbs; may the air together with the wind bring thee bliss; may the four quarters of the heaven bring thee bliss.

'Rightly have the gods released the sun from darkness and from the seizing demon; they have dismissed him from guilt; thus I deliver this boy from chronic disease, from curse that comes from his kin, from wile, from Varuṇa's fetter.'

11. He then places the child in his mother's lap with (the verse):

PATALA 1, SECTION 4.

1. 'The four divine quarters of the heaven, the consorts of Wind, whom the sun surveys: to their long life I turn thee; may consumption go away to destruction!’

2. Having placed (him there) he addresses (his wife with the Mantra), ‘May no demon do harm to thy son, no cow that rushes upon him (?). Mayst thou become the friend of treasures; mayst thou live in prosperity in thy own way.’

3. He washes her right breast and makes her give it to the child with (the formula), ‘May this boy suckle long life; may he reach old age. Let thy breast be exuberant for him, and life, glory, renown, splendour, strength.’

4. In the same way the left breast.

5. With (the words), ‘He does not suffer, he does not cry, when we speak to him and when we touch him’—he touches both breasts. Then he places a covered water-pot near her head, with (the formula), ‘O waters, watch in the house. As you watch with the gods, thus watch over this wife, the mother of a good son.’

6. On the twelfth day the mother and the son take a bath.

7. They make the house clean.

8. They take the Sûtikâgni away, and they bring the Aupâsana fire.

9. Having put wood on that fire, and having performed the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations, they sacrifice twelve oblations with the verses, ‘May Dhâtṛi give us wealth’ (III, 3, 11, 2-5); according to some (teachers they make) thirteen (oblations).

4, 2. I am not certain about the translation of dhenur atisârinî. The Âpastambîya Mantrapâṭha has atyâtârinî. Atisârin means, suffering from diarrhoea; perhaps we should read abhisârinî.

8. Comp. chap. 3, Sûtra 4.

10. 'This, O Varuṇa' (&c.; see I, chap. 27, Sūtra 2, down to): 'Hail! Good luck!' Then let him give a name to the child, of two syllables or of four syllables, beginning with a sonant, with a semi-vowel in it, with a long vowel (or) the Visarga at its end, or a name that contains the particle su, for such a name has a firm foundation; thus it is understood.

11. Let the father and the mother pronounce (that name) first. For it is understood, 'My name first, O Gâtavedas.'

12. He should give him two names. For it is understood (Taitt. Samh. VI, 3, 1, 3), 'Therefore a Brâhmaṇa who has two names, will have success.'

13. The second name should be a Nakshatra name.

14. The one name should be secret; by the other they should call him.

15. He should give him the name Somayâgin (i. e. performer of Soma sacrifices) as his third name; thus it is understood.

16. When he returns from a journey, or when his son returns, he touches him with (the formula), 'With Soma's lustre I touch thee, with Agni's splendour, with the glory of the sun.'

17. With (the formula), 'With the *hum*kâra (the mystical syllable hum) of the cattle I kiss thee, N. N.! For the sake of long life and of glory! Hum!' he

11. The verse beginning with 'My name,' &c., contains the words, 'which my father and my mother have given me in the beginning' (pitâ mâtâ ka dadhatur yad agre).

13. Comp. Professor Weber's second article, 'Die vedischen Nachrichten von den Naxatra' (Abh. der Berliner Akademie), pp. 316 seq.

17. Comp. above, I, 2, 5, 14.

kisses his head. Then he seizes with his right hand (his son's) right hand together with the thumb, with the five sections, 'Agni is long-lived.'

18. 'May Agni bestow on thee long life everywhere' (Taitt. Samh. I, 3, 14, 4)—this (verse) he murmurs in (his son's) right ear as above.

PATALA 1, SECTION 5.

1. Then (follows) in the sixth month the Anna-prâsana (i. e. the first feeding with solid food).

2. In the fortnight of the increasing moon, under an auspicious constellation, he puts wood on the fire, performs the rites down to the Vyâhrîti oblations, and sacrifices (with the Mantras), 'This, O Varuṇa' (&c.; see I, chap. 27, Sûtra 2, down to): 'Hail! Good luck!' Then he gives (to the child) threefold food to eat, curds, honey, and ghee, with (the formula), 'Bhûḥ I lay into thee! Bhuvāḥ I lay into thee! Suvaḥ I lay into thee!'

3. Then he gives him (other) food to eat with (the formula), 'I give thee to eat the essence of water and of the plants. May water and plants be kind towards thee. May water and plants do no harm to thee.'

PATALA 1, SECTION 6.

1. In the third year (he performs) the Kûḍâkarman (i. e. the tonsure of the child's head).

2. In the fortnight (&c., as in the preceding section, Sûtra 2, down to): 'Hail! Good luck!' The boy sits down to the west of the fire, facing the east;

3. To the north (of the fire) his mother or a student (brahma^kârin) holds a lump of bull's dung ;

4. Therewith he (or she) receives the (cut-off) hair.

5. He then pours cold and warm water together.

6. Having poured warm water into cold water he moistens the hair near the right ear with (the formula), 'May the waters moisten thee for life' (Taitt. Samh. I, 2, 1, 1).

7. With (the formula), 'Herb, protect him!' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.) he puts an herb, with its point upwards, into (the hair).

8. With (the formula), 'Axe, do no harm to him!' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.) he touches (that herb) with the razor.

9. With (the words), 'Heard by the gods, I shave that (hair)' (Taitt. Samh., loc. cit.) he shaves him.

10. In the same way (he moistens, &c.) the other (sides of his head) from left to right.

11. Behind with (the Mantra), 'The razor with which Savitri, the knowing one, has shaven (the beard) of king Soma and Varuna, with that, ye Brâhmanas, shave his (head); make that he be united with vigour, with wealth, with glory.'

On the left side with (the Mantra), '(The razor) with which Pûshan has shaven (the beard) of Brihaspati, of Agni, of Indra, for the sake of long life, with that I shave thy (head), N. N. !'

6, 3, 4. Some consider, according to Mâtridatta, these two Sûtras as one. He says (p. 149 of Dr. Kirste's edition), uttarata ity etadâdi pratigrîhâtîty etadantam vâ sûtram, dhârayams tenâsya kesân pratipa^hitavyam (read, pratigrîhâtîti pa^hitavyam).

6. As to dakshinam godânam unatti, comp. the note on Pâraskara II, 1, 9. Comp. also above, I, 3, 9, 12.

7 seq. See above, I, 3, 9, 13 seq.

Before with (the Mantra), 'That he may long live in joy, and may long see the sun.'

12. After the hair has been shaven, they arrange the locks (which are left over), according to custom or according to what family he belongs.

13. A person who is kindly disposed towards him, gathers the (cut-off) hair and buries it in a cow-stable, or near an Udumbara tree, or in a clump of Darbha grass, with (the Mantra), 'Where Pûshan, Brîhaspati, Savitrî, Soma, Agni (dwell), they have in many ways searched where they should depose it, between heaven and earth, the waters and heaven.'

14. He makes a gift to a Brâhmana according to his liberality.

15. To the barber (he gives) boiled rice with butter.

16. In the same way the Godânakarman (or the ceremony of shaving the beard) is performed in the sixteenth year.

17. He has him shaven including the top-lock.

18. Some declare that he leaves there the top-lock.

19. Or he performs the Godâna sacred to Agni.

20. He gives a cow to his Guru.

End of the First Paṭala.

13. Comp. I, 3, 9, 18.

14. Literally, according to his faith (yathâsraddham).

19. Agnigodâno vâ kumâro bhavati upasamâdhânâdi punyâhâ-vâtanântam agnikâryam iva vâ bhavatîty arthaḥ. Mâtridatta. Comp., however, the note on Âpastamba-Grîhya VI, 16, 13.

PRASNA II, PATALA 2, SECTION 7.

1. Now (follows) the expiation for attacks of the dog-demon (epilepsy) (on the boy).

2. When the attack assails (the boy, the performer of the ceremony) arranges his sacrificial cord over his left shoulder, sips water, and fetches water with a cup that has not yet been used (in order to pour it upon the boy). In the middle of the hall he elevates (the earth at) that place in which they use to gamble; he besprinkles it with water, casts the dice, scatters them (on all sides), makes a heap of them, spreads them out, makes an opening in the thatched roof of the hall, takes the boy in through that (opening), lays him on his back on the dice, and pours a mixture of curds and salt-water upon him, while they beat a gong towards the south. (The curds and water are poured on the sick boy with the following Mantras),

‘Kurkura, Sukurkura, the Kurkura with the dark fetter

‘Sârameya runs about, looking, as it were, upon the sea. He, the Suvîrina (?), wears golden ornaments on his neck and on his breast, the most excellent (ornaments) of dogs (?).

‘Suvîrina, let him loose! Let him loose, Ekavrâtya! Let him loose, doggy! Let him loose, Khat!

‘Teka and Sasaramatamka and Tûla and Vitûla and the white one and the red one. Let him loose! . . . the brown and red one.

‘On those two single ones the sarasyakâs (?) run

7, 1. svagraho + pasmâra unmatta/ Sârameya ity eke. Mâtridatta.—Comp. Pâraskara I, 16, 24; Âpastamba VII, 18, 1.

2. The Mantras are partly unintelligible. As to kurkura comp. the note on Pâraskara I, 16, 24.

down in the third heaven from here. Khat! Go away. Sisarama! Sârameya! Adoration to thee, Sisara!

‘Your mother is called the messenger; your father is the mandâkaka (mandûkaka, the frog?). Khat! Go away, &c.

‘Your mother is called dulâ (the staggering one?); your father is the mandâkaka. Khat! Go away, &c.

‘The stallions (stamp with) their feet. Do not gnash (?) thy teeth. Khat! Go away, &c.

‘The carpenter hammers at (the chariots) that have wheels (?). Do not gnash (?) thy teeth. Khat! Go away,’ &c.

3. Then (the performer of the ceremony) says, ‘Choose a boon.’

4. (The father or brother of the boy replies), ‘I choose the boy.’

5. They should do so, when the attack assails him, three times in the day, in the morning, at noon, and in the afternoon, and when he has recovered.

End of the Second Pañala.

PRAŚNA II, PĀTALA 3, SECTION 8.

1. Now (follows) the sacrifice of the sûlagava (or spit-ox, for propitiating Rudra and averting plague in cattle).

2. In the fortnight of the increasing moon, under an auspicious constellation, he puts wood on the fire, strews (Darbha grass) on the entire surface around the fire, cooks a mess of sacrificial food with milk,

5. There can be little doubt as to the correctness of the reading agadaḥ instead of âgataḥ.

8, 1. Comp. Āsvalâyana IV, 8; Pâraskara III, 8; Âpastamba VII, 20.

sprinkles it (with Āgya), takes it from the fire, builds two huts to the west of the fire, and has the spit-ox led to the southerly (hut) with (the verse), 'May the fallow steeds, the harmonious ones, bring thee hither, together with the white horses, the bright, wind-swift, strong ones, that are as quick as thought. Come quickly to my offering, Sarva! Om!'

3. To the northerly (hut he has) the 'bountiful one' (led);—(i. e. the consort of the spit-ox);

4. To the middle (between the two huts) the 'conqueror' (i. e. a calf of those two parents).

5. He gives them water to drink in the same order in which they have been led (to their places), prepares three messes of boiled rice, 'spreading under' and sprinkling (Āgya) on them, and touches (the three beasts with those portions of rice) in the order in which they have been led (to their places), with (the Mantras), 'May he, the bountiful one, touch it. To the bountiful one svāhā! May she, the bountiful one, touch it. To the bountiful one svāhā! May the conqueror touch it. To the conqueror svāhā!'

6. After he has performed (the rites) down to the Vyāhṛiti oblations, he takes the messes of boiled rice (to the fire) and sacrifices them (the first with the Mantra),

'To the god Bhava svāhā! To the god Rudra svāhā! To the god Sarva svāhā! To the god Īśāna . . . Paśupati . . . Ugra . . . Bhīma svāhā! To the great god svāhā!'

7. Then he sacrifices the consort's rice to the consort (of Rudra, with the Mantra), 'To the consort of the god Bhava svâhâ ! To the consort of the god Rudra . . . Sarva . . . Îsâna . . . Pasupati . . . Ugra . . . Bhîma . . . of the great god svâhâ !'

8. Then he sacrifices of the middle portion of rice with (the Mantra), 'To the conqueror svâhâ ! To the conqueror svâhâ !'

9. Then he cuts off from all the three portions of rice and sacrifices the Svishṭakṛit oblation with (the Mantra), 'To Agni Svishṭakṛit svâhâ !'

10. Around that fire they place their cows so that they can smell the smell of that sacrifice.

11. 'With luck may they walk round our full face'—with (these words) he walks round all (the objects mentioned, viz. the fire, the three beasts, and the other cows), so as to turn his right side towards them, and worships (the sūlagava) with the (eleven) Anuvâkas, 'Adoration to thee, Rudra, to the wrath' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 5), or with the first and last of them.

PĀṬALA 3, SECTION 9.

1. Now follows the distribution of Palâsa leaves (at different places).

2. 'Protector of the house, touch them ! To the protector of the house svâhâ ! Protectress of the 9, 1. The text has baudhyavihâra, on which the commentary observes, baudhyâni palâsaparnâni, teshâm vihâro viharanam nânâ-deseshu sthâpanam baudhyavihârah, karmanâma vâ. The baudhyavihâra is, as its description clearly shows, a ceremony for propitiating Rudra and his hosts and for averting evil from the cattle and the fields. The commentary understands it as forming part of the sūlagava described in chap. 8, and with this opinion it would agree very well that no indication of the time at which the baudhyavihâra ought to be performed (such as âpûryamânapakshe punye nakshatre) is given. Comp. also Âpastamba VII, 20, 5 seq.

house, touch them! To the protectress of the house svâhâ! Protector of the door, touch them! To the protector of the door svâhâ! Protectress of the door, touch them! To the protectress of the door svâhâ!— with (these formulas) he puts down four leaves; (then other leaves) with (the formulas), ‘Noisy ones, touch them! To the noisy ones svâhâ! Quivered ones . . . ye that run in the rear . . . Minglers (?) . . . Choosers . . . Eaters, touch them! To the eaters svâhâ!’—

3. Then again ten (leaves) with (the formula), ‘Divine hosts, touch them! To the divine hosts svâhâ!’

4. Then other ten (leaves) with (the formula), ‘Divine hosts that are named and that are not named, touch them! To them svâhâ!’

5. Then he makes a basket of leaves, puts into it a lump of boiled rice with an ‘under-spreading’ (of Âgya) and sprinkling (Âgya) on it, goes outside his pasture-grounds, and hangs (the basket) up at a tree with (the formula), ‘Quivered ones, touch it! To the quivered ones svâhâ!’

6. He then performs worship (before that basket) with (the formula), ‘Adoration to the quivered one, to him who wears the quiver! To the lord of the thieves adoration!’

7. With sandal salve, surâ and water, unground, fried grains, cow-dung, with a bunch of dûrvâ grass, with Udumbara, Palâsa, Samī, Vikāṅkata, and

5. I have translated avadhâya (instead of avadâya), as Âpa-stamba VII, 20, 7 reads.

6. Taittirîya Saṃhitâ IV, 5, 3, 1. Of course the god to whom these designations refer is Rudra.

7. The commentary explains surodaka as rain-water, or as rain-water which has fallen while the sun was shining.

Asvattha (branches), and with a cow-tail he besprinkles his cows, the bull first, with (the words), 'Bring luck! Bring luck!' Then (the bull) will bring him luck.

8. He then cooks that mess of sacrificial food, sacred to Kshetrapati (the lord of the field), with milk, sprinkles it (with Āgrya), takes it from the fire, and performs a sacrifice to Kshetrapati on the path where his cows use to go, without a fire, on four or on seven leaves.

9. He has him (i. e. the Kshetrapati? an ox representing Kshetrapati?) led (to his place) in the same way as the sūlagava (chap. 8, § 2).

10. He sacrifices quickly, (for) the god has a strong digestion (?).

11. He then performs worship with (the two verses), 'With the lord of the field,' 'Lord of the field' (Taitt. Samh. I, 1, 14, 2. 3).

12. Of (the remains of that sacrificial food) sacred to Kshetrapati his uterine relations should partake, according as the custom of their family is.

End of the Third Pāṭala.

8. Mātridatta says, kshaitrapatyam kshetrapatidevatākam payasi sthālīpākam, &c. The meaning of the expression 'that (enam) mess of sacrificial food' is doubtful; the commentary says, enam iti pūrvāpeksham pūrvavad aupāsana evāsyāpi śrapanārtham.—The last words (on four or on seven leaves) the commentator transfers to the next Sūtra, but he mentions the different opinion of other authorities.

10. nūrtte śighram yagate. kutaḥ. yataḥ sa devaḥ pākaḥ paṭa-nasīlas tīkshmas (read, tīkshnas) tasmāt. Mātridatta.—Possibly Dr. Kirste is right in reading tūrtam; the corresponding Sūtra of Āpastamba has kshipram (VII, 20, 15), and, as the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa (VI, 3, 2, 2) observes, 'yad vai kshipram tat tūrtam.'

PRAŚNA II, PĀTALA 4, SECTION 10.

1. On the new-moon day, in the afternoon, or on days with an odd number in the dark fortnight the monthly (Srāddha is performed).

2. Having prepared food for the Fathers and having arranged southward-pointed Darbha grass as seats (for the Brāhmaṇas whom he is going to invite), he invites an odd number of pure Brāhmaṇas who are versed in the Mantras, with no deficient limbs, who are not connected with himself by consanguinity or by their Gotra or by the Mantras, (such as his teacher or his pupils).

3. In feeding them he should not look at any (worldly) purposes.

4. Having put wood on the fire and strewn southward pointed and eastward-pointed Darbha grass around it, having prepared the Āgrya in an Āgrya pot over which he has laid one purifier, having sprinkled water round (the fire) from right to left, and put a piece of Udumbara wood on (the fire), he sacrifices with the (spoon called) Darvi which is made of Udumbara wood.

5. Having performed the rites down to the Āgrya-bhāga offerings, he suspends his sacrificial cord over his right shoulder and calls the Fathers (to his sacrifice) with (the verse), 'Come hither, O Fathers, friends of Soma, on your hidden, ancient paths, bestowing on us offspring and wealth and long life, a life of a hundred autumns.'

10, 1. Comp. Sāṅkhāyana IV, 1; Āsvalāyana II, 5, 10 seq.; IV, 7; Pāraskara III, 10; Gobhila IV, 3.

4. Comp. above, I, 1, 1, 11 seq. 27; 2, 7 seq.

6. He sprinkles water in the same direction (i. e. towards the south) with (the verse), 'Divine waters, send us Agni. May our Fathers enjoy this sacrifice. May they who receive their nourishment every month bestow on us wealth with valiant heroes.'

7. Having performed the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations with his sacrificial cord over his left shoulder, he suspends it over his right shoulder and sacrifices with (the following Mantras) :

'To Soma with the Fathers, svadhâ ! Adoration !

'To Yama with the Aṅgiras and with the Fathers, svadhâ ! Adoration !

'With the waters that spring in the east and those that come from the north : with the waters, the supporters of the whole world, I interpose another one between (myself and) my father. Svadhâ ! Adoration !

'I interpose (another one) through the mountains; I interpose through the wide earth ; through the sky and the points of the horizon, through infinite bliss I interpose another one between (myself and) my grandfather. Svadhâ ! Adoration !

'I interpose (another one) through the seasons, through days and nights with the beautiful twilight. Through half-months and months I interpose another one between (myself and) my great-grandfather. Svadhâ ! Adoration !'

Then he sacrifices with their names : 'To N. N. svadhâ ! Adoration ! To N.N. svadhâ ! Adoration !'

6. Comp. Atharva-veda XVIII, 4, 40.

7. Comp. Sâṅkhâya III, 13, 5. The translation there given of the words anyam antaḥ pitur dadhe ought to be changed accordingly.—For âbhur anyopapadyatâm read mâtur anyo-vapadyatâm as Sâṅkhâya has.

‘Wherein my mother has done amiss, abandoning her duty (towards her husband), may my father take that sperm as his own; may another one fall off from the mother. Svadhâ! Adoration!’

In the same way a second and a third verse with the alteration of the Mantra, ‘Wherein my grandmother,’ ‘Wherein my great-grandmother.’

PĀṬALA 4, SECTION 11.

1. ‘The Fathers who are here and who are not here, and whom we know and whom we do not know: Agni, to thee they are known, how many they are, Gâtavedas. May they enjoy what thou givest them in our oblation. Svadhâ! Adoration!’

‘Your limb that this flesh-devouring (Agni) has burnt, leading you to the worlds (of the Fathers), Gâtavedas, that I restore to you again. Unviolated with all your limbs arise, O Fathers! Svadhâ! Adoration!’

‘Carry the Âgya, Gâtavedas, to the Fathers, where thou knowest them resting afar. May streams of Âgya flow to them; may their wishes with all their desires be fulfilled! Svadhâ! Adoration!’

In the same way a second and a third verse with the alteration of the Mantra, ‘to the grandfathers,’ ‘to the great-grandfathers.’

2. In the same way he sacrifices of the food, altering the Mantra, ‘Carry the food, &c.’

3. Then he sacrifices the Svishṭakṛit oblation

11, 1. Rig-veda X, 15, 13; Atharva-veda XVIII, 4, 64; Âsva-lâyana-Grihya II, 4, 13, &c. Before the verse, ‘Carry the Âgya,’ the Udîkayas, as Mâtridatta states, insert the words, ‘He then makes oblations of Âgya (with the Mantra, &c.).’ According to this reading the words of the second Sûtra, ‘In the same way, &c.,’ would refer only to these last oblations.

with (the formula), 'To Agni Kavyavâhana Svish-takrit svadhâ! Adoration!'

4. He then touches the food with (the formulas), 'The earth is thy vessel, the heaven is the lid. I sacrifice thee into the Brahman's mouth. I sacrifice thee into the up-breathing and down-breathing of the Brâhmanas. Thou art imperishable; do not perish for the Fathers yonder, in yon world! The earth is steady; Agni is its surveyor in order that what has been given may not be lost.

'The earth is thy vessel, the heaven is the lid; &c. Do not perish for the grandfathers yonder, in yon world. The air is steady; Vâyu is its surveyor, in order that what has been given may not be lost.

'The earth is thy vessel, the heaven is the lid; &c. Do not perish for the great-grandfathers yonder, in yon world. The heaven is steady; Âditya is its surveyor, in order that what has been given may not be lost.'

5. With (the words), 'I establish myself in the breath and sacrifice ambrosia,' he causes the Brâhmanas to touch (the food).

PATALA 4, SECTION 12.

1. While they are eating, he looks at them with (the words), 'My soul (âtman) dwells in the Brahman that it may be immortal.'

2. When they have eaten (and go away), he goes after them and asks for their permission to take the remains of their meal (for the rites which he is going to perform). Then he takes a water-pot and a handful of Darbha grass, goes forth to a place that lies in a south-easterly intermediate direction, spreads the Darbha grass out with its points towards the south, and pours out on that (grass) with downward-turned hands, ending in the south, three handfuls of water, with (the formulas), 'May the fathers, the friends of Soma, wipe themselves! May the grandfathers . . . the great-grandfathers, the friends of Soma, wipe themselves!' or, 'N. N.! Wash thyself! N. N.! Wash thyself!'

3. On that (grass) he puts down, with downward-turned hands, ending in the south, the lumps (of food for the Fathers). To his father he gives his lump with (the words), 'This to thee, father, N. N.!' to the grandfather with (the words), 'This to thee, grandfather, N. N.!' to the great-grandfather with (the words), 'This to thee, great-grandfather, N. N.!' silently a fourth (lump). This (fourth lump) is optional.

4. Should he not know the names (of the ancestors), he gives the lump to the father with (the words), 'Svadhâ to the Fathers who dwell on the earth,' to the grandfather with (the words), 'Svadhâ to the Fathers who dwell in the air,' to the great-grandfather with (the words), 'Svadhâ to the Fathers who dwell in heaven.'

5. Then he gives, corresponding to each lump, collyrium and (other) salve and (something that represents) a garment.

3. According to the commentary after each formula the words are added, 'and to those who follow thee;' comp. Taitt. Samh. I, 8, 5, 1; III, 2, 5, 5; Kâty.-Sraut. IV, 1, 12.

6. The collyrium (he gives), saying three times, 'Anoint thy eyes, N. N.! Anoint thy eyes, N. N.!'

7. The salve, saying three times, 'Anoint thyself, N. N.! Anoint thyself, N. N.!'

8. With (the formula), 'These garments are for you, O Fathers. Do not seize upon anything else that is ours,' he tears off a skirt (of his garment) or a flake of wool and puts that down (for the Fathers), if he is in the first half of his life.

9. He tears out some hairs of his body, if in the second half.

10. Then he washes the vessel (in which the food was of which he had offered the lumps), and sprinkles (the water with which he has washed it), from right to left round (the lumps) with (the Mantra), 'These honey-sweet waters, bringing refreshment to children and grandchildren, giving sweet drink and ambrosia to the Fathers, the divine waters refresh both (the living and the dead), these rivers, abounding in water, covered with reeds, with beautiful bathing-places; may they flow up to you in yon world!' Then he turns the vessel over, crosses his hands so that the left hand becomes right and the right hand becomes left, and worships (the Fathers) with the formulas of adoration, 'Adoration to you, O Fathers, for the sake of sap' (Taitt. Samh. III, 2, 5, 5).

11. Then he goes to the brink of some water and pours down three handfuls of water (with the following Mantras):

6 seq. A fourth time he gives the same thing silently; comp. Sūtra 3.

8, 9. If his age is under fifty years or over fifty years (Mātridatta; comp. the commentary on Kātyāyana-Sraut. IV, 1, 17. 18).

PĀṬALA 4, SECTION 13.

1. 'This is for thee, father, this honey-sweet wave, rich in water. As great as Agni and the earth are, so great is its measure, so great is its might. As such a great one I give it. As Agni is imperishable and inexhaustible, thus may it be imperishable and inexhaustible, sweet drink to my father. By that imperishable (wave), that sweet drink, live thou together with those, N. N.! The Rikas are thy might.

'This is for thee, grandfather, &c. . . . As great as Vāyu and the air are . . . As Vāyu is imperishable . . . to my grandfather. . . . The Yagus are thy might.

'This is for thee, great-grandfather, &c. . . . As great as Āditya and the heaven are . . . The Sāmans are thy might.'

2. Returning (from the place where he has performed the Pinda offerings) he puts the substance cleaving (to the Sthālī) into the water-pot and pours it out, with (the verse), 'Go away, O Fathers, friends of Soma, on your hidden, ancient paths. After a month return again to our house and eat our offerings, rich in offspring, in valiant sons.'

3. Thereby the (Srāddha) celebrated in the middle of the rainy season has been declared.

4. There (oblations of) flesh are prescribed;

5. Of vegetables, if there is no flesh.

End of the Fourth Pāṭala.

3. Mādhyavarsham. Comp. the note on Sāṅkhāyana III, 13, 1.

PRASNA II, PĀṬALA 5, SECTION 14.

1. We shall explain (the festival of) the Ash/akâ.
 2. The eighth day of the dark fortnight that follows after the full moon of Mâgha, is called Ekâsh/akâ.

3. On the day before that Ash/akâ, under (the Nakshatra) Anûrâdhâs, in the afternoon he puts wood on the fire, strews southward-pointed and eastward-pointed Darbha grass around it, and turns rice out of four shallow cups over which he has laid one purifier, with (the Mantra), 'I turn out, impelled by the god Savitrî, this cake prepared from four cups (of rice), which may drive away all suffering from the Fathers in the other world. On the impulse of the god Savitrî, with the arms of the two Asvins, with Pûshan's hands I turn thee out, agreeable to the fathers, the grandfathers, the great-grandfathers.'

4. With the same purifier he silently strains the Prokshant water; he silently sprinkles (with that water the rice and the vessels), silently husks (the rice), silently bakes it in four dishes like a Purodâsa, sprinkles (Āgya) on it, takes it from the fire, sprinkles (water) round (the fire) from right to left, and puts a piece of Udumbara wood on (the fire). With the (spoon called) Darvi which is made of Udumbara wood, he cuts off in one continual line which is directed towards south-east, (the Avadâna portions)

14, 1. Hiranyakesin describes only one Ash/akâ, the Ekâsh/akâ, while the other texts speak of three or four Ash/akâs; comp. the quotations in the note on Sâṅkhâya III, 12, 1.

4. The rules of the Srauta ritual regarding the baking of the Purodâsa are given by Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 43.

one after the other, spreading under and sprinkling over them (Āgrya), and sacrifices them, one after the other, in one continual line which is directed towards south-east, with (the Mantras), 'The mortars, the pressing-stones have made their noise, preparing the annual offering. Ekāshṭakâ! May we be rich in offspring, in valiant sons, the lords of wealth. Svadhâ! Adoration!

'God Agni! The cake which is prepared with ghee and accompanied by (the word) svadhâ, that the Fathers may satiate themselves—(this our) offering carry duly, Agni. I, the son, sacrifice an oblation to my fathers. Svadhâ! Adoration!

'Here is a cake, Agni, prepared from four cups (of rice), with ghee, rich in milk, in wealth, in prosperity. May the Fathers gladly accept it all together; may it be well sacrificed and well offered by me. Svadhâ! Adoration!'

5. Then he makes oblations of (other) food with (the verses), 'The one who shone forth as the first,' 'The Ekāshṭakâ, devoting herself to austerities,' 'She who shone forth as the first' (Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 3, 11, 1. 3. 5).

6. Cutting off (the Avadânas destined for the Svishṭakṛit oblation) together from the cake and from the (other) food and mixing them with clarified butter, he makes an oblation thereof with (the formula), 'To Agni Kavyavâhana Svishṭakṛit svadhâ! Adoration!'

7. That (cake) with ghee and honey and with the food (mentioned in Sûtras 5. 6) he touches in the way prescribed for the Srâddha ceremony and puts down lumps (of it) according to the ritual of the Pinda offerings.

8. (The remains of) that (cake, &c.) he serves to learned Brāhmanas.

9. He gives them food and presents as at the Srāddha ceremony.

10. The known (rites) down to the pouring out of the handfuls of water (are performed here) as at the monthly (Srāddha).

PATALA 5, SECTION 15.

1. On the following day he sacrifices a cow to the Fathers.

2. Having put wood on the fire and strewn southward-pointed and eastward-pointed Darbha grass around it, he sacrifices the oblation for the touching of the animal (see below), with (the verse), 'This cow I touch for the Fathers; may my assembled fathers gladly accept it (which is offered) with fat and ghee, with the word svadhâ; may it satiate my fathers in the other world. Svadhâ! Adoration!' Then he touches (the cow) with one (blade of) sacrificial grass and with an unforked Vapâsrapanî of Udumbara wood, with (the formula), 'I touch thee agreeable to the Fathers.'

3. He sprinkles (the cow with water) with (the words), 'I sprinkle thee agreeable to the Fathers.'

4. When it has been sprinkled and fire has been

10. See above, chap. 12, 13.

15, 2. On the Vapâsrapanî, comp. Kâtyâyana VI, 5, 7; Âsval.-Grihya I, 11, 8. Comp. besides, Taitt. Samh. VI, 3, 6; Âpastamba-Srauta-sûtra VII, 8, 3; 12, 5 seq.

4. The Udiṭyas read, as Mâtridatta states, 'to the south of the fire.'

carried round it, they kill it to the west of the fire, its head being turned to the west, its feet to the south.

5. After it has been killed, he silently 'strengthens' its sense-organs (by touching them) with water, and silently takes out the omentum, the heart, and the kidneys.

6. With the Vapâsrapañt of Udumbara wood he roasts the omentum; with spits of Udumbara wood the other (parts mentioned in Sûtra 5) separately.

7. After he has roasted them, and has sprinkled Âgya over them, and has taken them from the fire, he sprinkles water round (the fire) from right to left, puts a piece of Udumbara wood on (the fire), and sacrifices with a Darvi spoon of Udumbara wood the omentum, spreading under and sprinkling over it (Âgya), with (the verse), 'Carry the omentum, Gâtavedas, to the Fathers, where thou knowest them resting afar. May streams of fat flow to them; may their wishes with all their desires be fulfilled. Svadhâ! Adoration!'

8. He sacrifices the omentum entirely. The other parts (Sûtra 5) he should offer to the Brâhmaṇas and should feed them (with those parts of the cow).

9. When the food (for the Brâhmaṇas) is ready, he cuts off (the Avadânas) together from the mess of boiled rice, and from the pieces of meat, and mixing them with clarified butter he makes oblations

5. On the 'strengthening' of the sense-organs of an immolated victim, comp. Âpastamba-Srauta-sûtra VII, 18, 6 seq. Schwab, Thieropfer, 110.—On matasne, see Indische Studien, IX, 248; Schwab 127.

8. Possibly the reading of the Udîkṛtyas indicated by Mâtrîdatta, vyâkṛitya instead of upâkṛitya, is correct. The translation would be, 'With the rest, distributing it, &c.'

thereof with the verses, 'Behold the Ekāshṭakā, the giver of food with meat and ghee, (which is offered) with (the word) svadhā. By the Brāhmaṇas that food is purified. May it be an imperishable (blessing) to me! Svadhā! Adoration!'

'The Ekāshṭakā, devoting herself to austerities, the consort of the year, exuberant (with milk), has poured forth milk. May you live on that milk, O Fathers, all together. May this (food) be well offered and well sacrificed by me! Svadhā! Adoration!

'The image of the year' (Taitt. Samh. V, 7, 2, 1).

10. After he has sacrificed, he cuts off (the Avadānas) from the food and from the pieces of meat, and mixing them with clarified butter he makes an oblation with (the formula), 'To Agni Kavyavāhana Svishṭakṛt svadhā! Adoration!'

11. The known (rites) down to the pouring out of the handfuls of water (are performed here) as at the monthly (Śrāddha).

12. The gifts of food and presents, however, are not necessary here.

13. On the following day, he prepares food for the Fathers with the rest of the meat, and sacrifices with (the two verses), 'Thou, Agni, art quick,' (and), 'Pragāpati!' (see above, I, 1, 3, 5).

14. (= Sūtra 11).

End of the Fifth Pātala.

11. See above, chap. 14, 10.

12. See chap. 14, 9.

13. This is the so-called Anvashṭakya ceremony.

PRASNA II, PATALA 6, SECTION 16.

1. Now (follows) the Sravanâ ceremony.
2. On the day of that full moon which falls under (the Nakshatra) Sraavana, after the evening Agni-hotra he puts wood on the (third of the three Srauta fires, called the) Dakshinâgni. One who has not set up the (Srauta) fires, (does the same with) the sacred domestic fire.
3. Then he procures unbroken grains, unbroken fried grains, coarsely ground grains, (leaves and blossoms) of the Kimsuka tree, collyrium and (other) salve, and Âgya.
4. Having 'spread under' (Âgya) in the (spoon called) Darvi, he cuts off (the Avadânas) of those kinds of food (mentioned in Sûtra 3), mixes them with clarified butter, and sacrifices (with the formulas), 'Adoration to Agni the terrestrial, the lord of terrestrial beings! Svâhâ! Adoration to Vâyû the all-pervading, the lord of aerial beings! Svâhâ! Adoration to Sûrya, the red one, the lord of celestial beings! Svâhâ! Adoration to Vishnu, the whitish one, the lord of the beings that dwell in the quarters (of the world). Svâhâ!'
5. He anoints the Kimsuka (flowers and leaves) with Âgya, and sacrifices with (the Mantras), 'Devoured is the gadfly; devoured is thirst (?); devoured is the stinging worm.' 'Devoured is the stinging worm; devoured is thirst; devoured is the gadfly.'

5. I am not sure about the translation of vikashî. Perhaps it is only a blunder for vitriśhî, which is the reading of the Âpastambîya Mantrapâṭha. Comp. Winternitz, Der Sarpabali, ein altindischer Schlangencult (Wien, 1888), p. 28.

‘Devoured is thirst; devoured is the gadfly; devoured is the stinging worm.’

6. He takes a water-pot and a handful of Darbha grass, goes forth, his face turned towards the east, spreads the Darbha grass out with its points towards the east, and makes four Bali-offerings on that (grass) with (the formulas), ‘To the terrestrial Serpents I offer this Bali,’ ‘To the aerial, &c.; to the celestial, &c.; to the Serpents dwelling in the quarters (of the world),’ &c.

7. Having given there collyrium and (other) salve (to the Serpents), he worships them with the Mantras, ‘Adoration be to the Serpents’ (Taitt. Samhitā IV, 2, 8, 3).

8. He should take a water-pot and should at that distance in which he wishes the serpents not to approach, three times walk round his house, turning his right side towards it, and should sprinkle water round it with (the formulas), ‘Beat away, O white one, with thy foot, with the fore-foot and with the hind-foot, these seven human females and the three (daughters) of the king’s tribe.

‘Within the dominion of the white one the Serpent has killed nobody. To the white one, the son of Vidarva, adoration!’

‘Adoration to the white one, the son of Vidarva!’

9. Then he worships the Serpents towards the different regions, one by one with (the corresponding section of) these Mantras, ‘The convergent one thou art called, the eastern region’ (Taitt. Samh. V, 5, 10, 1 seq.).

8. Comp. Pāraskara II, 14, 19. In the first Mantra I read rāgabāndhaviḥ; comp. the note on Pār. II, 14, 4.

10. From that time he daily makes the Bali-offerings till the full-moon day of Mārgaśīrsha.

11. Here the Kimsuka offerings (see § 5) are not repeated.

12. The sprinkling (of water) round (the house) does not take place (see § 8).

13. The last Bali he offers with (the words), 'Going to acquit myself, going to acquit myself.'

End of the Sixth Pātala.

PRAŚNA II, PĀTALA 7, SECTION 17.

1. We shall explain the Āgrahāyaṇī ceremony.

2. On the full-moon day of Mārgaśīrsha he puts wood on the fire, strews (Darbha grass) on the entire surface round the fire, cooks a mess of sacrificial food with milk, sprinkles it (with Āgrya), takes it from the fire, performs the rites down to the Vyāhṛiti oblations, and sacrifices (four oblations) with (the following Mantras):

'This offering, the creeping of Idā, rich in ghee, moving and not moving, accept gladly, O Gātavedas.

13. Some authorities understand, as Mātridatta states, that he should offer the Bali only with the words as they stand in the Sūtra, others prescribe the formula (comp. § 6): 'To the terrestrial (aerial, &c.) Serpents I offer this Bali going to acquit myself, going to acquit myself.'

17, 1. Comp. on the Āgrahāyaṇī ceremony Sāṅkhāyana IV, 17; Pāraskara III, 2, &c.; Winternitz, Sarpabali, 32 seq.

2. The first Mantra is very corrupt; comp. Atharva-veda III, 10, 6. Regarding the legend of Idā, who was procreated out of Manu's Pāka-sacrifice, and 'came forth as if dripping, and clarified butter gathered on her step,' comp. Satapatha Brāhmaṇa I, 8, 1, 7 (M. M., India, what can it teach us? p. 136).

What domestic animals there are, of all shapes, all seven kinds of them : may they gladly dwell here and may they prosper. Svâhâ !

‘The night which men welcome like a cow that comes to them, (the night) which is the consort of the year, may that (night) be auspicious to us. Svâhâ !

‘Bringing bliss to the cattle, to the wife, bringing bliss by night and by day, may this (night) which is the consort of the year, be auspicious to us. Svâhâ !

‘The full-moon night, bringing abundance, visiting one after another, dividing the months and fortnights : may this (night), the full one, protect us. Svâhâ !’

3. He sacrifices the oblation to Agni Svishṭakṛit with (the verse), ‘Agni, make this (sacrifice) full that it may be well offered. Be victorious, O god, in all battles. Shine far and wide, showing us a wide path. Bestow on us long life, full of splendour and free from decay. Svâhâ !’

4. Then he washes his hands and touches the earth with (the formulas), ‘In power I establish myself, in royalty. Among the horses I establish myself, among the cows. In the limbs I establish myself, in the self. In the Prâṇas I establish myself, in prosperity. In Heaven and Earth I establish myself, in sacrifice.

‘May the three times eleven gods, the thirty-three, the gracious ones, whose Purohita is Brīhaspati, on the impulse of the god Savitṛi—may the gods with (all) the gods give me bliss !’

5. The master of the house sits down at their southerly end,

6. The other persons to the north,
7. According to their seniority.
8. They who know the Mantras among them, murmur the Mantras (which will be stated).
9. With (the verse), 'Be soft to us, O earth, free from thorns; grant us rest; afford us wide shelter' (Taitt. Âr. X, 1, 10), and with the two (verses), 'Verily of the mountains' (Taitt. Samh. II, 2, 12, 2. 3) they lie down on their right sides.
10. With (the verse), 'Up! with life' (Taitt. Samh. I, 2, 8, 1) they arise.
11. When they have arisen, they murmur, 'We have arisen; we have become immortal.'
12. In that way they (lie down and) arise that night three times.
13. Having served food to the Brāhmaṇas and having caused them to say, 'An auspicious day! Hail! Good luck!' they rest that night.

End of the Seventh Pāṭala.

PRAŚNA II, PĀṬALA 8, SECTION 18.

1. Now we shall explain the opening and the conclusion (of the annual course of study).
2. During the fortnight that precedes the Śravanâ

13. 'Here end the Gṛihya ceremonies,' says Mâtridatta. Dr. Kirste (Preface, p. viii), accordingly, believes that the three last chapters may be later additions. It may be observed in connection with this, that in the Âpastambîya-Gṛihya, which throughout is so closely related to our text, the ceremonies of the Upâkaraṇa and Utsargana, of which these three chapters treat, are not described.

18, 2. Śravanâpaksha means, according to Mâtridatta, śrāva- full moon, when the herbs have appeared, under (the Nakshatra) Hasta or on the full-moon day (itself), the opening ceremony of the (annual course of) study (is performed).

3. Having put wood on the fire and performed the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations, he sacrifices (with his pupils) to the Rishis of the Kândas: 'To Pragâpati, the Rishi of a Kânda, svâhâ! To Soma, the Rishi of a Kânda, svâhâ! To Agni, the Rishi of a Kânda, svâhâ! To the Visve devâs, the Rishis of a Kânda, svâhâ! To Svayambhû, the Rishi of a Kânda, svâhâ!'—these are the Rishis of the Kândas. Or (he sacrifices) to the names of the Kândas, to the Sâvitṛī, to the Rig-veda, the Yagur-veda, the Sâma-veda, the Atharva-veda, and to Sadasaspati.

4. Having (thus) sacrificed, they repeat the first three Anuvâkas,

5. Or the beginnings of all Kândas.

6. He enters upon (sacrificing) the Gaya, &c. (oblations; see above, I, 1, 3, 8).

7. After all rites down to the Svishṭakṛit oblation have been performed, they stop studying three days or one day; then they should go on studying so as to commence where they have broken off: so say the teachers.

8. During the fortnight that precedes the Taishṭi full moon, under (the Nakshatra) Rohinī or on the full-moon day (itself), the Utsarga (or conclusion of the term of study) is celebrated.

napôrvapaksha, and indeed the moon stands in conjunction with the Nakshatra Hasta only on one day of the first, not of the second, fortnight of the month Śrâvana (comp. the note on Âsvalâyana-Grhya III, 5, 2. 3). Comp. taishṭipakshasya rohinîyâm, below, § 8.

8. As to taishṭipaksha, comp. the note on Sûtra 2.

9. (The teacher) with his pupils goes in an easterly or northerly direction, and where they find a pleasant water with a pleasant bathing-place, they dive into it and perform three suppressions of the breath with the Agharmarshana hymn (Rig-veda X, 190 = Taitt. Âr. X, 1, 13. 14). Holding purifiers (i. e. Darbha blades) in their hands they bathe with the three (verses), 'Ye waters, ye are wholesome' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 5, 1), with the four (verses), 'The gold-coloured, pure, purifying waters' (T. S. V, 6, 1, 1 seq.), and with the Anuvâka, '(Soma) which clears itself, the heavenly being' (Taitt. Br. I, 4, 8): giving the Darbha blades to each other and feigning to try to seize (??) each other.

10. Then they arrange on a pure spot that is inclined towards the east, seats of eastward-pointed Darbha grass, so that they end in the north—

PATALA 8, SECTION 19.

1. For Brahman, Pragâpati, Brîhaspati, Agni, Vâyu, the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, king Indra, king Yama, king Varuna, king Soma, king Vaisravaṇa, for the Vasus, the Rudras, the Âdityas, the Visve devâs, the Sâdhyas, the Rîbhus, the Bhrîgus, the Maruts, the Atharvans, the Ângiras: for these divine beings.

9. On the last words of this Sûtra, Mâtridatta says, ditsanta iveti dâtum iḁḁhanta ivânyonyam prati. athavâ âditsanta iveti pâṭhaḁ. âditsanto mushṇanta ivânyonyam.—Professor Kielhorn's text MS. has, âtsamta ivânyonyam; Professor Bühler's text MS., ditsamta ivânyonyam.

19, 1. According to Mâtridatta, they prepare a seat for Brahman with the words, 'For Brahman I prepare (a seat),' and so on. Comp. chap. 20, 3.

2. Visvâmitra, Gamadagni, Bharadvâga and Gautama, Atri, Vasishtha, Kasyapa : these are the seven Rishis.

3. Wearing their sacrificial cords below (round their body) they arrange towards the north, at a place that is inclined towards the north, seats of northward-pointed Darbha grass, so that they end in the east, for Visvâmitra, Gamadagni, Bharadvâga, Gautama, Atri, Vasishtha, Kasyapa.

4. Between Vasishtha and Kasyapa they arrange (a seat) for Arundhati, (the wife of Vasishtha) ;

5. Towards the south, in a place inclined towards the east, for Agastya.

6. Then for the (following) teachers, ending with those who teach (only) one Veda (?), viz. for Krishna Dvaipâyana, Gâtûkarnya, Taruksha, Trinabindu, Varmin, Varûthin, Vâgin, Vâgasravas, Satyasravas, Susravas, Sutasravas, Somasushmâyana, Satvavat, Brihaduktha Vâmadev(y)a, Vâgiratna, Haryagvâyana, Udamaya, Gautama, Rinañgaya, Ritañgaya, Kritañgaya, Dhanañgaya, Babhru, Tryaruna, Trivarsha, Tridhâtu, Sibinta, Parâsara, Vishnu, Rudra, Skanda, Kâtsvara, Gvara, Dharma, Artha, Kâma, Krodha, Vasishtha, Indra, Tvashtri, Kartri, Dhatri, Dhâtri, Mrityu, Savitri, Sâvitri, and for each Veda, for the Rig-veda, the Yagur-veda, the Sâma-veda, the Atharva-veda, the Itihâsa and Purâna.

7. Towards the south, with their sacrificial cords suspended over their right shoulders, in a place inclined towards the south, they arrange seats of southward-pointed Darbha grass, so that they end in the west—

2. This is a frequently quoted versus memorialis.

PĀṬALA 8, SECTION 20.

1. For Vaisampāyana, Paliṅgu, Tittira [sic], Ukha, Ātreya, the author of the Pada-text, Kaundīnya the author of the commentary, for the authors of the Sūtras, for Satyāśhādha (Hiranyakesin), for the handers-down of the text, for the teachers, the Rishis, the hermits dwelling in the woods, the chaste ones, for those who have only one wife.

2. They prepare (seats) each for his own fathers and maternal ancestors.

3. With (the words), 'For N. N. I prepare (a seat); for N. N. I prepare (a seat)' (he prepares) a seat.

4. With (the words), 'I satiate N. N.; I satiate N. N.' (he makes offerings of) water.

5. With (the words), 'Adoration to N. N.! Adoration to N. N.!' (he offers) perfumes, flowers, incense, and lamps.

6. With (the words), 'To N. N. svāhā! To N. N. svāhā!' (he offers) food.

7. With (the words), 'I satiate N. N.; I satiate N. N.' (he offers) water with fruits in it.

8. Having worshipped them with (the words), 'Adoration to N. N.! Adoration to N. N.!'—

9. Having put wood on the fire to the west of the surface (on which he had performed the Tarpana), 20, 1. The Kāṇḍānukrama of the Ātreyaî-sākhâ, which has been printed by Professor Weber in his edition of the Taittirīya Samhitâ, vol. ii, p. 356, shows that the dative Paliṅgave ought to be corrected to Paiṅgaye. The 'vr̥ttikâra' is there called not Kaundīnya, but Kundīna.

9. There is only one difference between the text of this Sūtra and having performed the rites down to the Vyâhṛiti oblations (&c., as above, chap. 18, 3-7).

10. With the two (verses), 'From joint to joint,' 'Thou who with a hundred' (Taitt. Samh. IV, 2, 9, 2) they plant Dûrvâ grass at the shore of the water.

11. They stir up waves in the water and run a race in an easterly or northerly direction until they lose their breath.

12. When they have returned (from that race? or when they have returned from the whole ceremony to the village?) they offer cakes, coarsely ground grain, and boiled rice to the Brâhmanas.

13. The same (rites are repeated) when they have finished the study of the whole Veda, with the exception of the planting of Dûrvâ grass, of (stirring up) the water, and of the race.

14. Thus they satiate daily (after the Brahma-yagñā) the gods, the Rishis, and the Fathers with water; they satiate them with water.

End of the Hiranyakesi-sūtra.

and that of chap. 18, 3-7 : instead of hutvâ trin âdito • nuvâkân adhîyate (18, 4) we read here, hutvâ prathamenânuvâkenâdhîyate, which I believe must be translated, 'Having sacrificed with the first Anuvâka, they recite (that Anuvâka).' Mâtridatta says, hutvâ prathamottamânuvâkam adhîyate.

13. See Sûtras 10 and 11.

GR/HYA-SÛTRA OF ÂPASTAMBA.

.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

TO THE

GR/HYA-SŪTRA OF ÂPASTAMBA.

THE short treatise of Âpastamba on the Gr̥hya ritual forms one Prasna of the great corpus of the Âpastambîya-Kalpa-sûtra (see Sacred Books, vol. ii, p. xii) and stands, among the Gr̥hya texts, in closest connection with the Hiranyakesi-Gr̥hya-sûtra. The chief difference between these two Sûtras, both belonging to the Taittiriya School of the Black Yagur-veda, consists herein, that Âpastamba, just as has been stated above¹ with regard to Gobhila, gives only the rules for the performance of the Gr̥hya rites without the Mantras, which are contained in a special collection, the Mantrapât̥ha, standing by the side of the Sûtras: Hiranyakesin, on the other hand, follows the more usual practice, as adopted by Sâṅkhâyaṇa, Âṣvalâyaṇa, Pâraskara, of interweaving the description of the ceremonies with the text of the corresponding Mantras. As to the relation in which the Âpastambîya-sûtras stand to the Mantrapât̥ha, there is, so far as I can see, no reason why we should not extend the theory which we have tried to establish with regard to Gobhila, to the evidently parallel case of Âpastamba: the Sûtras presuppose the existence of the Mantrapât̥ha, just as the latter text seems to presuppose the Sûtras.—The questions regarding the historical relation of Âpastamba to Hiranyakesin have been treated of by Professor Bühler in his Introduction to Âpastamba's Dharma-sûtra, S. B. E., vol. ii, pp. xxiii seq.

I have here to thank Dr. Winternitz, to whom we are indebted for an excellent edition of the Âpastambîya-Gr̥hya-sûtra, for having placed at my disposal, before publication, the proof-sheets of his edition, and for lending me his copy of the Mantrapāṭha as well as of the commentary of Haradatta. The kindness of the same scholar has enabled me to make use of Professor Eggeling's copy of the first part of Sudarsanārya's commentary and of his own copy of the second part of the same work.

¹ See above, pp. 3 seq.

GRHYA-SŪTRA OF ÂPASTAMBA.

PATALA 1, SECTION 1.

1. Now (follow) the ceremonies (the knowledge of) which is derived from practice (and not from the Sruti).

2. They should be performed during the northern course of the sun, on days of the first fortnight (of the month), on auspicious days,

3. With the sacrificial cord suspended over (the sacrificer's) left shoulder.

4. (The rites should be performed) from left to right.

5. The beginning should be made on the east side or on the north side,

6. And also the end.

7. Ceremonies belonging to the Fathers (are performed) in the second fortnight (of the month),

8. With the sacrificial cord suspended over the right shoulder,

9. From right to left,

10. Ending in the south.

11. Ceremonies occasioned by special occurrences (are performed) according as their occasions demand.

1, 1-11. The Paribhāṣhās for the Pākayagñas.

7-10. Comp. 7 with 2, 8 with 3, 9 with 4, 10 with 6.

12. Having set the fire in a blaze, he strews eastward-pointed Darbha grass around it,

13. Or eastward-pointed and northward-pointed (grass);

14. Southward-pointed at sacrifices to the Fathers,

15. Or southward-pointed and eastward-pointed.

16. To the north of the fire he strews Darbha grass and (on that) he places the vessels (required for sacrifice) upside-down, two by two, if referring to ceremonies directed to the gods,

17. All at once, if to men,

18. One by one, if to the Fathers.

19. The preparation of the (blades used as) 'purifiers,' the measure of their length, the preparation of the Prokshaṇī water, and the sprinkling of the vessels are the same here as at the sacrifices of the new and full moon, (but are performed) in silence.

20. To the west of the fire he pours water into a vessel over which he has laid (two grass blades called) purifiers, purifies (the water) three times with two northward-pointed purifiers, holds it on a level with his nose and mouth, places it to the north of the fire on Darbha grass, and covers it with Darbha grass.

21. On the south side he causes a Brāhmaṇa to sit down on Darbha grass.

22. He melts the Âgya, pours it, to the west of the fire, into the Âgya-pot, over which he has laid two purifiers, draws coals (out of the sacrificial fire) towards the north, puts (the Âgya) on them, throws 12 seq. Description of the regular form of a Pākayagña.

19. Comp. Srauta-sūtra I, 11, 6 seqq.

20. This is the Prāṇī water.

21. The Brahman.

light on it by means of a burning (grass-blade), throws two Darbha points into it, moves a fire-brand round it three times, takes it from the fire towards the north, sweeps the coals back (into the fire), purifies (the Āgrya) three times with two northward-pointed purifiers, moving them backward and forward, and throws the purifiers into the fire.

PATAŁA 1, SECTION 2.

1. He warms at the fire the implement with which he sacrifices, wipes it off with Darbha blades, warms it again, sprinkles it (with water), puts it down, touches the Darbha blades with water, and throws them into the fire.

2. As paridhis (or pieces of wood laid round the fire) yoke-pins are used at the marriage, the Upanayana, the Samāvartana, the parting of the (wife's) hair, the tonsure of the child's hair, the cutting of the beard, and at expiatory ceremonies.

3. He sprinkles water round the fire, on the south side from west to east with (the words), 'Aditi, give thy consent!' on the west side from south to north with 'Anumati, give thy consent!' on the north side from west to east with 'Sarasvati [sic], give thy consent!' all around with 'God Savitri, give thy impulse!'

4. At ceremonies belonging to the Fathers (water is sprinkled) only all round (the fire), silently.

5. Having put a piece of wood on the fire, he

2, 2. On the paridhi woods, comp. chiefly Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 66 seq.

5. The Srauta rules on the two Āghâras are given Srauta-sûtra II, 12, 7; 14, 1.

offers the two Âghâra oblations as at the sacrifices of the new and full moon, silently.

6. Then he offers the two Âgyabhâga oblations, over the easterly part of the northerly part (of the fire) with (the words), 'To Agni Svâhâ!' over the easterly part of the southerly part (another oblation) exactly like the preceding one, with (the words), 'To Soma Svâhâ!'

7. Having offered the chief oblations (belonging to each sacrifice) according to prescription, he adds the following oblations, viz. the Gaya, Abhyâtâna, Râsh/rabhrit oblations, the oblation to Pragâpati, the Vyâhr̥itis one by one, the oblation to (Agni) Svish/takrit with (the following formula), 'What I have done too much in this ceremony, or what I have done here too little, all that may Agni Svish-takrit, he who knows, make well sacrificed and well offered. Svâhâ!'

8. The sprinkling (of water) round (the fire is repeated) as above; the Mantras are altered so as to say, 'Thou hast given thy consent,' 'Thou hast given thy impulse.'

9. The designation 'Pâkayagña' is used of ceremonies connected with worldly life.

10. There the ritual based on the Brâhmana (holds good),

6. Comp. Srauta-sûtra II, 18, 5; Hillebrandt, loc. cit., p. 106, note 3.

7. On the Gaya, Abhyâtâna, Râsh/rabhrit formulas, comp. Pâraskara I, 5, 7 seq.; Hiranyakesin I, 1, 3, 7 seq.; Taitt. Samhitâ III, 4, 4-7.—The last formula occurs also in Âsvalâyana I, 10, 23; Hiranyakesin I, 1, 3, 6, &c.

8. Comp. above, Sûtra 3.

10. According to Haradatta, this Sûtra would imply that where-soever the ritual described in the preceding Sûtras holds good,

11. (To which the words allude), 'He sacrifices twice; he wipes off (his hand) twice; he partakes twice (of the sacrificial food); having gone away he sips (out of the Sruṣ) and licks off (the Sruṣ).'

12. All seasons are fit for marriage with the exception of the two months of the sisira season, and of the last summer month.

13. All Nakshatras which are stated to be pure, (are fit for marriage);

14. And all auspicious performances.

15. And one should learn from women what ceremonies (are required by custom).

16. Under the Invakâs (Nakshatra), (the wooers who go to the girl's father) are sent out: such wooers are welcome.

PATALA 1, SECTION 3.

1. Under the Maghâs (Nakshatra) cows are provided;

another ritual based on the Brâhmana, and more especially on the treatment of the Agnihotra in the Brâhmana, may be used in its stead.

11. Comp. Taitt. Brâhmana II, 1, 4, 5; Satapatha Brâhmana II, 3, 1, 18. 21.—At the Agnihotra the sacrificer, having wiped off the Sruṣ with his hand, wipes off the hand on the Barhis or on the earth (Âpast.-Sraut. VI, 10, 11; 11, 4; Kâtâyana IV, 14, 20). As to the following acts alluded to in this Sûtra, comp. Âpastamba VI, 11, 4. 5; 12, 2.

16. On the Nakshatra Invakâs, comp. Section 3, Sûtra 4. This Sûtra forms a Sloka-hemistich, on which Haradatta observes, 'This verse has not been made by the Sûtrakâra.'

3, 1, 2. Comp. Rig-veda X, 85, 13; Atharva-veda XIV, 1, 13; Kausika-sûtra 75; Râmâyana I, 71, 24; 72, 13; Weber, Die vedischen Nachrichten von den Naxatra, II, 364 seq. These parallel passages most decidedly show that in Sûtra 2 we ought to read vyuhyate, not vyūhyate.

2. Under the Phalgunt (Nakshatra) marriage is celebrated.

3. A daughter whom he wishes to be dear (to her husband), a father should give in marriage under the Nishṭyâ (Nakshatra); thus she becomes dear (to her husband); she does not return (to her father's) house: this is an observance based on a Brâhmana.

4. The word Invakâs means Mṛigasiras; the word Nishṭyâ means Svâti.

5. At the wedding one cow;

6. In the house one cow:

7. With the (first cow) he should prepare an Argha reception for the bridegroom as for a guest,

8. With the other (the bridegroom [?] should do so) for a person whom he reveres.

9. These are the occasions for killing a cow: (the arrival of) a guest, (the Ashṭakâ sacrifice offered to) the Fathers, and marriage.

10. Let (the wooer) avoid in his wooing a girl that sleeps, or cries, or has left home.

11. And let him avoid one who has been given (to another), and who is guarded (by her relations), and one who looks wicked (?), or who is a most

3. Comp. Taittirīya Brâhmana I, 5, 2, 3.

4. Comp. Sûtra 3, and above, Section 2, Sûtra 16.

5-8. Comp. Sāṅkhâyana-Grhya I, 12, 10. It is clear that with the first cow the bride's father has to receive the bridegroom. The 'house' mentioned in Sûtra 6 seems to be the house of the newly-married couple. In the expression 'whom he reveres,' 'he,' according to the commentaries, is the bridegroom.

10. This Sûtra forms a half-sloka.

11. Most expressions in this Sûtra are quite doubtful, and their translation rests on the explanations of the commentators (see pp. 44, 45 of Dr. Winternitz's edition), which are evidently for the most part only guesses.

excellent one (?), or (who is like the fabulous deer) sarabha (?), a hunch-back, a girl of monstrous appearance, a bald-headed girl, a girl whose skin is like a frog's (?), a girl who has gone over to another family (?), a girl given to sensual pleasures (?), or a herdess, or one who has too many friends, or who has a fine younger sister, or one whose age is too near to that of the bridegroom (?).

12. Girls who have the name of a Nakshatra, or of a river, or of a tree, are objectionable.

13. And all girls in whose names the last letter but one is r or l, one should avoid in wooing.

14. If possible, he should place (the following) objects hidden before the girl, and should say to her, 'Touch (one of these things).'

15. (The objects are), different kinds of seeds mixed together, loose earth from (the kind of sacrificial altar called) vedi, an earth-clod from a field, cow-dung, and an earth-clod from a cemetery.

16. If she touches one of the former (objects, this portends) prosperity as characterized (by the nature of what she has touched).

17. The last is regarded as objectionable.

18. Let him marry a girl of good family and character, with auspicious characteristics, and of good health.

19. Good family, a good character, auspicious characteristics, learning, and good health: these are the accomplishments of a bridegroom.

20. A wife who is pleasing to his mind and his 12, 13. These Sûtras would require only slight alterations to make a sloka.

16. The seeds mean offspring, and so on.

eyes, will bring happiness to him ; let him pay no attention to the other things : such is the opinion of some.

PĀṬALA 2, SECTION 4.

1. Let him send out as his wooers friends who have assembled, who are versed in the Mantras.

2. He should recite over them the first two verses (Mantrap. I, 1, 1. 2).

3. When he himself has seen (the bride), let him murmur the third (verse ; M. I, 1, 3).

4. With the fourth (M. I, 1, 4) let him behold her.

5. Let him seize with his thumb and fourth finger a Darbha blade, and let him wipe (therewith) the interstice between her eye-brows with the next Yagus (M. I, 1, 5), and let him throw it away towards the west.

6. If an omen occurs (such as the bride's or her relations' weeping), let him murmur the next (verse ; M. I, 1, 6).

7. With the next (verse ; M. I, 1, 7) let him send an even number of persons who have assembled there, and who are versed in the Mantras, to fetch water.

8. With the next Yagus (M. I, 1, 8) he places a round piece of Darbha net-work on her head ; on that, with the next (verse ; M. I, 1, 9) he places a right yoke-hole ; on this hole he lays with the next (verse ; M. I, 1, 10), a piece of gold, and washes her with the next five verses (M. I, 2, 1-5), (so that the water runs over that gold and through the yoke-hole); with the next (verse; M. I, 2, 6) he causes her to dress in a fresh garment, and with the next (M. I, 2, 7) he girds her with a rope.

4, 8. As to the last sentence of this Sūtra, comp. the statements collected by Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 59.

9. Then he takes hold of her with the next (verse; M. I, 2, 8) by her right hand, leads her to the fire, spreads a mat, west of the fire, so that the points of the blades in it are directed towards the north, and on this mat they both sit down, the bridegroom to the north.

10. After the ceremonies have been performed from the putting of wood on the fire down to the Âgyabhâga oblations, he recites over her the first two (verses of the third Anuvâka).

11. Then he should take with his right hand, palm down, her right hand which she holds palm up.

12. If he wishes that only daughters may be born to him, he should seize only the fingers (without the thumb);

13. If he wishes that only sons may be born to him, the thumb.

14. He takes (her hand) so as just to touch her thumb and the little hairs (on her hand),

15. With the four verses, 'I take thy hand' (Mantrap. I, 3, 3-6).

16. He then makes her step forward with her right foot, to the north of the fire, in an easterly or northerly direction, with (the formula), 'One step for sap' (M. I, 3, 7).

17. At her seventh step he murmurs, 'Be a friend' (M. I, 3, 14).

PATALA 2, SECTION 5.

1. Having before the sacrifice gone round the fire, so that their right sides are turned towards it,

2. They sit down in their former position, and while she takes hold of him, he offers the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras), with (the Mantras), 'To Soma, the acquirer of a wife, Svâhâ!' (M. I, 4, 1-16), one oblation with each Mantra.

3. He then causes her, to the north of the fire, to tread with her right foot on a stone, with (the verse), 'Tread' (M. I, 5, 1).

4. Having 'spread under' Âgya into her joined hands, he pours roasted grain twice (into them), and sprinkles Âgya over it.

5. Some say that an uterine relation of hers pours the grain (into her hands).

6. He (?) sacrifices (that grain) with (the verse), 'This wife' (M. I, 5, 2).

7. Having gone round the fire, with the right side turned towards it, with the next three (verses; M. I, 5, 3-5) he makes her tread on the stone as above (M. I, 5, 6).

8. And the oblation (is performed) with the next (verse; M. I, 5, 7).

9. (Then follow) again the circumambulation (M. I, 5, 8-10), the injunction to tread on the stone

5, 2. See 4, 9.

3. See below, IV, 10, 9.

6. 'The action of sacrificing belongs to the bridegroom; the hands of the wife represent the sacrificial vessel.' Haradatta.—'It is the bridegroom who sacrifices the grain with the verse, "This wife."' Sudarsanârya.

7. See above, Sûtra 3.

(I, 5, 11), and the oblation with the next (verse; I, 5, 12);

10. (Then) the circumambulation again (I, 5, 13-15).

11. He enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations.

12. Having performed (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), and having untied the rope with the next two verses (I, 5, 16, 17), he should then make her depart (from her father's house in a vehicle), or should have her taken away.

13. Having put that fire (with which the marriage rites have been performed, into a vessel), they carry it behind (the newly-married couple).

14. It should be kept constantly.

15. If it goes out, (a new fire) should be kindled by attrition,

16. Or it should be fetched from the house of a Srotriya.

17. Besides, if (the fire) goes out, one of them, either the wife or the husband, should fast.

18. Or he may sacrifice with the next (verse; M. I, 5, 18), and not fast.

19. The next (verse; M. I, 6, 1) is for putting the chariot (on which the young couple is to depart), in position;

20. With the next two (verses; M. I, 6, 2, 3), he puts the two animals to the chariot;

21. First the right one.

22. When she mounts (the chariot), he recites over her the next (verses; M. I, 6, 4-7).

11, 12. See Section 2, Sûtras 7, 8; Section 4, Sûtra 8.

12 seq. Comp. Hiranyakesin I, 7, 22, 1 seq.

23. With the next (verse ; M. I, 6, 8), he spreads out two threads in the wheel-tracks (in which the chariot is to go), a dark-blue one in the right (track), a red one in the left.

24. With the next (verses ; M. I, 6, 9-11), he walks on these (threads).

25. And when they pass by bathing-places, posts, or cross-roads, let him murmur the next (verse ; M. I, 6, 12).

PATALA 2, SECTION 6.

1. The next (verse ; M. I, 6, 13), he recites over a boat (with which they are going to cross a river).

2. And let the wife, when she is crossing, not see the crew.

3. When they have crossed, let him murmur the next (verse ; M. I, 6, 14).

4. If they have to pass over a cemetery, or if any article (which they carry with them), or their chariot is damaged, the ceremonies from the putting of wood on the fire down to the Âgyabhâga oblations are performed, and while she takes hold of him, he offers the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras ; M. I, 7, 1-7), then he enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations, and performs (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire).

5. If they pass by trees with milky sap or by other trees that serve as marks, by rivers or by deserts, he should murmur the next two (verses ; M. I, 7, 8. 9), according to the characteristics in them (which refer to these different cases).

6. With the next (verse) he shows her the house (M. I, 7, 10).

7. With the next two (verses ; M. I, 7, 11. 12) he unyokes the two animals ; the right one first.

8. Having, with the next (verse ; M. I, 8, 1), spread out, in the centre of the house, a red bull's skin with the neck to the east, with the hair up, he causes her to recite the next (verse ; M. I, 8, 2), while he makes her enter the house, (which she does) with her right foot.

9. And she does not stand on the threshold.

10. In the north-east part of the house the ceremonies from the putting of wood on the fire down to the Âgyabhâga oblations are performed, and while she takes hold of him, he offers the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras ; M. I, 8, 3-15) ; then he enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations, and performs (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire). Then they sit down with the next (verse ; M. I, 9, 1) on the skin, the bridegroom to the north.

11. He then places with the next (verse ; M. I, 9, 2), the son of a wife who has only sons and whose children are alive, in her lap, gives fruits to the (child) with the next Yagus (M. I, 9, 3), and murmurs the next two (verses ; M. I, 9, 4-5). Then he (and his wife) observe silence until the stars appear.

12. When the stars have appeared, he goes out (of the house with her) in an easterly or northerly direction, and shows her the polar star and (the star) Arundhatt with the next two verses (M. I, 9, 6-7), according to the characteristics (contained in those verses).

PĀTALA 3, SECTION 7.

1. He then makes her offer the sacrifice of a Sthâlpâka sacred to Agni.

2. The wife husks (the rice grains out of which this Sthâlpâka is prepared).

3. After he has cooked (the Sthâlpâka), and has sprinkled (Âgya) over it, and has taken it from the fire towards the east or the north, and has sprinkled (Âgya) over it while it stands (there near the fire), (the ceremonies) from the putting of wood on the fire down to the Âgyabhâga oblations (are performed), and while she takes hold of him, he sacrifices of that Sthâlpâka.

4. The 'spreading under' and the sprinkling over (of Âgya are done) once; two Avadânas (or cut-off portions are taken).

5. Agni is the deity (of the first oblation); the offering is made with the word Svâhâ.

6. Or he may sacrifice after having picked out, once, a portion (of the sacrificial food with the Darvi spoon).

7. Agni Svishtakṛit is the second (deity).

8. (At the Svishtakṛit oblation) the 'spreading under' and taking an Avadâna are done once, the sprinkling over (of Âgya) twice.

9. The Avadâna for the first deity (is taken) out of the middle (of the Sthâlpâka);

10. It is offered over the centre (of the fire).

7, 1 seq. Hiranyakesin I, 7, 23, 2 seq.

6. As to the technical meaning of upahatya or upaghâtam, comp. the note on Gobhila I, 8, 2; Grhyasamgraha I, 111.

11. (The Avadāna) for the second (deity is taken) from the northern part (of the Sthālpāka) ;

12. It is offered over the easterly part of the northerly part (of the fire).

13. Having silently anointed (a part of) the Barhis (by dipping it) into the remains both (of the Sthālpāka and the Āgya) in the way prescribed (in the Srauta ritual) for the (part of the Barhis called) Prastara, he throws (that part of the Barhis) into the fire.

14. (The rule regarding) the second sprinkling (of water round the fire) is valid (here).

15. He gives (the remains of) that (sacrificial food) with butter to a Brāhmaṇa to eat—

16. Whom he reveres. To that (Brāhmaṇa) he makes the present of a bull.

17. In the same way, with the exception of the sacrificial gift, they should sacrifice a Sthālpāka from then onwards, on the days of the new and full moon, after having fasted.

18. Some say that a vessel full (of grain) is the sacrificial gift.

19. From then onwards he should offer morning and evening with his hand these two oblations (to Agni and to Agni Svishṭakṛi.) of (rice) grains or of barley.

13. Comp. Srauta-sūtra III, 5, 9 seqq.—On the prastara, see Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, 64. 142. 146.

14. See above, I, 2, 8. The upahomas prescribed above, I, 2, 7, are not performed here, but the second parisheṣṭana is.

16. I have altered in my translation the division of the two sentences. Comp. Hiraṇyakeśin I, 7, 23, 5–6, and the note there.

19. The two regular daily oblations corresponding to the Agni-hotra of the Srauta ritual.

20. The deities are the same as at the Sthâlpâka (just described).

21. Some say that the first oblation in the morning is sacred to Sûrya.

22. Before and after (those oblations) the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire is performed) as stated above.

23. By the sacrifice of the new and full moon the other ceremonies have been explained (the knowledge of) which is derived from practice.

24. The deities (of those rites) are as stated (with regard to each particular case), having their place between Agni (Sûtra 5) and Svishṭakṛit (Sûtra 7).

25. The sacrifice (of a cow) on the arrival of a guest (should be performed as stated below) without alterations.

26. (The deities) of the Vaisvadeva ceremony are the Visve devâs,

27. Of ceremonies performed on full-moon days, the full-moon day on which they are performed.

PATALA 3, SECTION 8.

1. At the opening and concluding ceremonies of the Vedic study, the Rishi who is indicated (as the

22. See I, 2, 3, 8.

23. See I, 1, 1.

25. See below, V, 13, 16.

26. See Âpastamba Dharma-sûtra II, 2, 3, 1 (S. B. E., vol. ii, p. 103).

27. For instance, the Śrāvaṇī paurnamâsī is the deity of the ceremony described below, VII, 18, 5 seq.

8, 1. Haradatta observes that at the kândopâkarana and kânda-samâpana the Rishi of that kânda, at the general adhyâyopâkarana and samâpana all kândarshis, should be worshipped.

Rishi of the Kānda which they study, is the deity to whom the ceremony belongs),

2. And in the second place Sadasaspati (cf. Mantrap. I, 9, 8).

3. They reject a sacrifice performed by a wife or by one who has not received the Upanayana initiation, and a sacrifice of salt or pungent food, or of such food as has an admixture of a despised sort of food.

4. Sacrifices connected with special wishes and Bali sacrifices (should be performed) as stated (even against the clauses of the last Sūtra).

5. Whenever the fire flames up of itself, he should put two pieces of wood on it with the next two (verses; M. I, 9, 9-10),

6. Or with (the two formulas), 'May fortune reach me! May fortune come to me!'

7. Let him notice the day on which he brings his wife home.

8. (From that day) through three nights they should both sleep on the ground, they should be chaste, and should avoid salt and pungent food.

9. Between their sleeping-places a staff is interposed, which is anointed with perfumes and wrapped round with a garment or a thread.

10. In the last part of the fourth night he takes up the (staff) with the next two (verses; M. I, 10, 1-2), washes it and puts it away; then (the ceremonies) from the putting of wood on the fire down to the Āgyabhāga oblations (are performed), and while she takes hold of him, he sacrifices the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras; M. I, 10, 3-9); then he enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations, and performs (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire). Then he makes her sit down to the west of the fire, facing the east, and pours some Āgrya of the remains (of those oblations) on her head with the (three) Vyāhritis and the word Om as the fourth (M. I, 10, 10-13). Then they look at each other with the next two verses (M. I, 11, 1-2), according to the characteristics (contained in those verses); with the next verse (M. I, 11, 3) he besmears the region of their hearts with remains of Āgrya; then he should murmur the next three verses (I, 11, 4-6), and should murmur the rest (of the Anuvāka; I, 11, 7-11) when cohabiting with her.

11. Or another person should recite (the rest of the Anuvāka) over her, (before they cohabit).

12. During her (first) monthly illness he instructs her about the things forbidden (to menstruous women), contained in the Brāhmaṇa, in the section, 'A menstruous woman with whom,' &c.

13. After the appearance of her monthly illness, he should, when going to cohabit with her after her illness, recite over her, after she has bathed, the next verses (M. I, 12, 1-13, 4).

PĀṬALA 3, SECTION 9.

1. Each following night with an even number, from the fourth (after the beginning of her monthly illness) till the sixteenth, brings more excellent offspring to them, if chosen for the (first) cohabiting after her illness; thus it is said.

2. If he sneezes or coughs while going about on business, he should touch water and should murmur the two following (verses ; M. I, 13, 5. 6) according to the characteristics (which they contain).

3. In the same way with the next (Mantras—M. I, 13, 7-10—he should address the following objects), according to the characteristics (which those Mantras contain) : a conspicuous tree, a heap of excrements, the skirt (of his garment) which is blown against him by the wind, and a shrieking bird.

4. One (for instance, the wife's father) who wishes that the hearts of both (husband and wife) may be in accord should observe chastity through at least three nights and should prepare a Sthālpāka. Then (the ceremonies) from the putting (of wood) on (the fire) down to the Āgyabhāga oblations (are performed), and while the wife takes hold of him, he sacrifices of the Sthālpāka the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras ; M. I, 14, 1-7) ; then he enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations, and performs (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire). (The remains of) the (sacri-ficial food) with butter, he should give to eat to an even number of Brāhmaṇas, at least to two, and should cause them to pronounce wishes for his success.

5. When the moon, on the following day, will be in conjunction with Tishya, she strews three times seven barley-grains around (the plant) Clypea Her-nandifolia with (the formula), 'If thou belongest to Varuṇa, I redeem thee from Varuṇa. If thou belongest to Soma, I redeem thee from Soma.'

6. On the following day she should set upright (the plant) with the next (verse; M. I, 15, 1), should recite the next three (verses; M. I, 15, 2-4) over it, should tie (its root) with the next (verse; M. I, 15, 5) to her hands so that (her husband) does not see it, and should, when they have gone to bed, embrace her husband with her arms, with the verse alluding to the word upadhâna ('putting on;' M. I, 15, 6).

7. Thus he will be subject to her.

8. By this (rite) also (a wife) overcomes her co-wives.

9. For this same purpose she worships the sun daily with the next Anuvâka (M. I, 16).

10. If a wife is affected with consumption or is otherwise sick, one who has to observe chastity, should rub her limbs with young lotus leaves which are still rolled up, and with lotus roots, with the next (formulas, limb by limb) according to the characteristics (contained in those formulas; M. I, 17, 1-6), and should throw away (the leaves and roots) towards the west.

11. With the next (verses; M. I, 17, 7-10) he should give the wife's garment (which she has worn at the wedding [?]) to (a Brâhmana) who knows this (ceremony).

PATALA 4, SECTION 10.

1. We shall explain the Upanayana (or initiation of the student).

2. Let him initiate a Brâhmana in the eighth year after the conception,

3. A Râganya in the eleventh, a Vaisya in the twelfth year after the conception.

4. Spring, summer, autumn : these are the (fit) seasons (for the Upanayana), corresponding to the order of the castes.

5. (The boy's father) serves food to Brâhmaṇas and causes them to pronounce auspicious wishes, and serves food to the boy. (The teacher?) pours together, with the first Yaḡus (of the next Anuvâka, warm and cold) water, pouring the warm water into the cold, and moistens (the boy's) head with the next (verse ; M. II, 1, 2).

6. Having put three Darbha blades into his hair (towards each of the four directions) (the teacher [?]) shaves his hair with the next four (verses ; M. II, 1, 3-6) with the different Mantras, towards the different (four) directions.

7. With the following (verse, M. II, 1, 7, somebody) addresses him while he is shaving.

8. Towards the south, his mother or a Brahma-târin strews barley-grains on a lump of bull's dung ; with this (dung) she catches up the hair (that is cut off), and puts it down with the next (verse ; M. II, 1, 8) at the root of an Udumbara tree or in a tuft of Darbha grass.

9. After (the boy) has bathed, and (the ceremonies) from the putting (of wood) on (the fire) down to the Âgyabhâga oblations (have been performed), he causes him to put a piece of Palâsa wood on the 10, 6, 7. The difference which Haradatta makes between the teacher who begins to shave him (pravapati) and the barber who goes on with shaving (vapantam) seems too artificial.

7. Haradatta : The teacher addresses the barber, &c.—Sudar-sanârya : The mother of the boy or a Brahma-târin [comp. Sûtra 8] . . . addresses the teacher who shaves him.

9. Comp. above, II, 4, 3.

fire with the next (verse ; M. II, 2, 1), and makes him tread with his right foot on a stone to the north of the fire, with (the verse), 'Tread' (M. II, 2, 2).

10. Having recited the next two (verses ; M. II, 2, 3. 4) over a garment that has been spun and woven on one day, and has caused him, with the next three (verses ; M. II, 2, 5-7), to put it on, he recites over him, after he has put it on, the next (verse ; M. II, 2, 8).

11. He ties thrice around him, from left to right, a threefold-twisted girdle of Muñga grass with the next two (verses ; M. II, 2, 9. 10), and (gives him) a skin as his outer garment with the next (verse ; II, 2, 11).

12. To the north of the fire (the teacher) spreads out Darbha grass ; on that he causes (the boy) to station himself with the next (verse ; M. II, 3, 1), pours his joined hands full of water into (the boy's) joined hands, makes him sprinkle himself three times with the next (verse ; M. II, 3, 2), takes hold of his right hand with the next (formulas ; M. II, 3, 3-12), gives him with the next (formulas ; M. II, 3, 13-23) in charge to the deities (mentioned in those Mantras), initiates him with the next Yagus (M. II, 3, 24), and murmurs into his right ear the (Mantra), 'Blessed with offspring' (II, 3, 25).

PATALA 4, SECTION 11.

1. The boy says, 'I am come to be a student' (II, 3, 26).

11. Comp. Âpast. Dharma-sûtra I, 1, 2, 33 ; 1, 3, 3 seq.

12. As to the words, 'he initiates him' (upanayati), comp. Sâṅkhâya II, 2, 11. 12 ; Âśvalâyana I, 20, 4 &c.

2. The other (i.e. the teacher) has to ask ; the boy has to answer (II, 3, 27-30).

3. The other murmurs the rest (of the Anuvāka),

4. And causes the boy to repeat (the Mantra) which contains wishes for himself (II, 3, 32).

5. (The rites) down to the Āgyabhāgas have been prescribed.

6. Having then caused him to sacrifice the oblations (indicated in the) next (Mantras; M. II, 4, 1-11), he enters upon (the performance) of the Gaya and following oblations.

7. Having performed (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), he puts down, to the west of the fire, a bunch of northward-pointed grass ; on that (the teacher) who performs the initiation, sits down with the next Yagus (M. II, 4, 12).

8. The boy, sitting to the east (of him), facing the west, seizes with his right hand (the teacher's) right foot and says, ' Recite the Sāvitrī, Sir !'

9. He recites (the Sāvitrī) to him, ' That (glorious splendour) of Savitrī' (Taitt. Samh. I, 5, 6, 4 ; M. II, 4, 13) ;

10. Pāda by Pāda, hemistich by hemistich, and the whole (verse).

11. (When repeating the Sāvitrī Pāda by Pāda, he pronounces) the Vyāhṛitis singly at the beginning or at the end of the Pādas ;

12. In the same way (the first and the second Vyāhṛiti at the beginning or at the end) of the hemistichs ; the last (Vyāhṛiti, when he repeats) the whole verse.

13. With the next Mantra (M. II, 4, 14) the boy touches his upper lip ;

11, 5. See above, Section 10, Sūtra 9.

14. With the next (II, 4, 15) both his ears ;
15. With the next (II, 5, 1) he takes up the staff.
16. The staff of a Brāhmaṇa is made of Palāsa wood, that of a Rāganya of a branch of the Nyagrodha tree, so that the downward-turned end (of the branch) forms the tip (of the staff), that of a Vaisya of Bādara or Udumbara wood.
17. Some state (only), without any reference to caste, that the staff should be made of the wood of a tree.
18. After (the teacher) has made him repeat (the formula), ' My memory ' (M. II, 5, 2), and he has bestowed an optional gift on his teacher, and (the teacher) has made him arise with (the formula, M. II, 5, 3), ' Up, with life ! ' (the student) worships the sun with the next (Mantras ; II, 5, 4).
19. If (the teacher) wishes, ' May this (student) not be estranged from me,' let him take (the student) by the right hand with the next (verse ; II, 5, 6).
20. They keep that fire (used at the Upanayana) three days,
21. And (during that time) salted and pungent food should be avoided.
22. Having wiped (with his hand wet) around (the fire) with (the formula), ' Around thee ' (M. II, 6, 1), he should put (twelve) pieces of wood on that (fire) with the next Mantras (II, 6, 2-13).
23. In the same way also on another (fire, when the Upanayana fire is kept no longer),
24. Fetching fuel regularly from the forest.
25. With the next (formula—M. II, 6, 14—the teacher) instructs (the student in his duties).

16, 17. These Sūtras are identical with Dharma-sūtra I, 1, 2, 38 (S. B. E., vol. ii, p. 9).

26. On the fourth day (after the Upanayana the teacher) takes the garment (of the student) for himself with the next (verse ; M. II, 6, 15), having made him put on another (garment).

PĀṬALA 5, SECTION 12.

1. Having studied the Veda, when going to take the bath (which signifies the end of his studentship), he enters a cow-shed before sunrise, hangs over its door a skin with the hair inside, and sits there.

2. On that day the sun should not shine upon him.

3. At noon, after (the ceremonies) from the putting (of wood) on the fire down to the Āgya-bhāga oblations (have been performed), he puts a piece of Palāsa wood on (the fire) with the next (verse ; M. II, 7, 1), sits down to the west of the fire on a mat or on erakā grass, recites the next (verse, II, 7, 2) over a razor, and hands it over to the barber with the next Yagus (II, 7, 3). (The rites) beginning with the pouring together of (warm and cold) water down to the burying of the hair are the same as above (comp. M. II, 7, 4).

4. He sits down behind the cow-shed, takes the girdle off, and hands it over to a Brahmacārin.

5. The (Brahmacārin) hides it with the next Yagus (II, 7, 5) at the root of an Udumbara tree or in a tuft of Darbha grass.

6. With water of the description stated above he

26. The garment which the teacher takes for himself is that mentioned above, IV, 10, 10.

12, 3. See above, IV, 10, 5-8.

6. See IV, 10, 5.

bathes with the six next (verses; II, 7, 6-11), and with the next (II, 7, 12) he cleanses his teeth with a stick of Udumbara wood.

7. Having bathed and shampooed his body with such ingredients as are used in bathing, (aromatic powder, &c.),

8. He puts on with the next Yagus (M. II, 7, 13) a fresh under garment, and anoints himself, after having given the salve in charge of the deities with the next (Mantras, II, 7, 14), with the next (verse, II, 7, 15) with sandal salve which is scented with all kinds of perfumes. With the next (verse, II, 7, 16) he moves about a gold pellet with its setting, which is strung on a string, three times from left to right in a water-pot; with the next (verse, II, 7, 17) he ties the (pellet) to his neck; in the same way, without Mantras, he ties a pellet of Bâdara wood to his left hand, and repeats the rites stated above with a fresh upper garment, with the (verses), 'May the rich' (comp. above, IV, 10, 10; M. II, 7, 18).

9. To the skirt (of that garment) he ties two ear-rings, puts them into the (sacrificial spoon called) Darvi, offers the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras; M. II, 8, 1-8), pouring the Âgya over (the ear-rings), and enters upon (the performance of) the Gaya and following oblations.

10. Having performed (the ceremonies) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), he should tie (one of the ear-rings) with the same (verses) to his right ear, and with the same (verses one) to his left ear.

11. In the same way he should with the following (formulas, M. II, 8, 9-9, 5), according to the characteristics (contained in them), (put) a wreath on his head, anoint (his eyes), look into a mirror, (put on) shoes, (and should take) a parasol and a staff.

12. He keeps silence until the stars appear.

13. When the stars have appeared, he goes away towards the east or north, worships the quarters (of the horizon) with the next hemistich, and the stars and the moon with the next (M. II, 9, 6).

14. Having spoken with a friend he may go where he likes.

PĀṬALA 5, SECTION 13.

1. Now this (is) another (way for performing the Samāvartana). He bathes silently at a bathing-place and puts silently a piece of wood on (the fire).

2. He sits down on a bunch of grass, as stated above (comp. M. II, 9, 7), at a place where they are going to honour him (with the Argha reception).

3. A king and a chieftain (sit down) in the same way (as a Brāhmaṇa), with the next two (formulas, M. II, 9, 8. 9), according to the characteristics (contained in them).

4. (The host) announces (to the guest), 'The water for washing the feet!'

5. (The guest) should recite the next (verse, II, 9, 10) over (that water) and should stretch out the right foot first to a Brāhmaṇa, the left to a Sūdra.

6. Having touched the person who washes him, he should touch himself (i.e. his own heart) with the next (formula, M. II, 9, 11).

7. (The host, taking the Argha water) in an

13, 2. See above, IV, 11, 7.

5. Comp. Āśvalāyana-Gṛihya I, 24, 11. 12.

earthen vessel which he holds with two bunches of grass, announces (to the guest), 'The Argha water!'

8. (The guest) should recite the next (formula, II, 9, 12) over (that water) and should murmur the next Yagus (II, 9, 13), while a part (of the water) is poured over his joined hands.

9. Over the rest (of the water) which is poured out towards the east, he recites the next (verse, M. II, 9, 14).

10. (The host) pours together curds and honey in a brass vessel, covers it with a larger (brass cover), takes hold of it with two bunches of grass, and announces (to the guest), 'The honey-mixture!'

11. Some take three substances, (those stated before) and ghee.

12. Some take five, (the three stated before), and grains, and flour.

13. The guest recites the next two (formulas, M. II, 10, 1. 2) over (the honey-mixture) and sips water with the two Yagus (II, 10, 3. 4) before (eating) and afterwards; with the next (verse, II, 10, 5) he should partake three times (of the food) and should give the remainder to a person towards whom he is kindly disposed.

14. A king or a chieftain should only accept it and (give it) to his Purohita.

15. (The host) announces the cow with (the word), 'The cow!'

16. After the guest has recited the next (formula, M. II, 10, 6) over (the cow, the host) cooks its omentum, and having performed the 'spreading under' and the sprinkling over (of Āgrya), he sacrifices it with the next (verse, M. II, 10, 7) with a Palāsa leaf from the middle or the end (of the stalk).

17. If the guest chooses to let (the cow) loose, he murmurs the next (formulas, II, 10, 8-11) in a low voice (and says) loudly, 'Om! Let it loose!' (II, 10, 12).

18. (In this case) he recites the next (formulas, M. II, 10, 13-17) in a low voice over the food which is announced to him (instead of the cow), (and says) loudly, 'Om! Make it ready!' (II, 10, 18).

19. For his teacher, for a Ritvig, for his father-in-law, for a king he ought to perform this (Arghya ceremony) as often as they visit his house, if at least one year has elapsed (since they came last).

20. For a renowned teacher (of the Veda the ceremony should be performed) once.

PATALA 6, SECTION 14.

1. The Sīmantonnayana (or parting of the pregnant wife's hair, is performed) in her first pregnancy, in the fourth month.

2. (The husband) serves food to Brāhmaṇas and causes them to pronounce auspicious wishes; then, after (the ceremonies) from the putting (of wood) on the fire down to the Āgyabhāga oblations (have been performed), he offers the oblations (indicated in the) next (Mantras, M. II, 11, 1-8), while (the wife) takes hold of him, and enters upon the (performance) of the Gaya and following oblations.

3. Having performed (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), he makes her sit down to the west of the fire, facing the east, and parts her hair upwards (i. e. beginning from the front) with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, with three Darbha blades, and with a bunch of un-ripe Udumbara fruits, with the Vyâhr̥itis or with the two next (verses, II, 11, 9. 10).

4. He says to two lute-players, 'Sing!'

5. Of the next two (verses, II, 11, 11. 12) the first (is to be sung on this occasion) among the (people of the) Sâlvas.

6. The second (is to be used) for Brâhmanas; and the river near which they dwell is to be named.

7. He ties barley-grains with young shoots (to the head of the wife); then she keeps silence until the stars appear.

8. When the stars have appeared, he goes (with his wife) towards the east or north, touches a calf, and murmurs the Vyâhr̥itis; then she breaks her silence.

9. The Pumsavana (i.e. the ceremony to secure the birth of a male child) is performed when the pregnancy has become visible, under the constellation Tishya.

10. From a branch of a Nyagrodha tree, which points eastward or northward, he takes a shoot with two (fruits that look like) testicles. The putting (of wood) on the fire, &c., is performed as at the Sîmantonnayana (Sûtra 2).

11. He causes a girl who has not yet attained maturity to pound (the Nyagrodha shoot) on an upper mill-stone with another upper mill-stone, and to pour water on it; then he makes his wife lie

6. Âsvalâyana I, 14, 7; Pâraskara I, 15, 8. Comp. Zeitschrift der D. M. Gesellschaft, XXXIX, 88.

7, 8. Sudarsanârya mentions that instead of the singular, 'She keeps silence, she breaks her silence,' some read the dual, so that the husband and his wife are referred to.

down on her back to the west of the fire, facing the east, and inserts (the pounded substance) with his thumb into her right nostril, with the next Yagus (II, 11, 13).

12. Then she will give birth to a son.

13. Here follows the ceremony to secure a quick deliverance.

14. With a shallow cup that has not been used before, he draws water in the direction of the river's current; at his wife's feet he lays down a Tûryanti plant; he should then touch his wife, who is soon to be delivered, on the head, with the next Yagus (II, 11, 14), and should sprinkle her with the water, with the next (three) verses (II, 11, 15-17).

15. Yadi garāyu na pated evamvīhitābhīr evādbhir uttarābhyām (II, 11, 18. 19) avokshet.

PATALA 6, SECTION 15.

1. After he has touched the new-born child with the Vātsapra hymn (Taitt. Samh. IV, 2, 2; M. II, 11, 20), and has taken him on his lap with the next Yagus (M. II, 11, 21), with the next (three) (verses—II, 11, 22; 12, 1. 2—one by one) he addresses the child, kisses him on his head, and murmurs (the third verse) into his right ear.

2. And he gives him a Nakshatra name.

3. That is secret.

4. He pours together honey and ghee; into this (mixture) he dips a piece of gold which he has tied with a noose to a Darbha blade. With the next (three) formulas (II, 12, 3-5) he gives the boy (by means of the piece of gold, some of the mixture) to eat. With the next five (verses, II, 12, 6-10) he bathes him. Then he pours curds and ghee together and gives him this (mixture which is called) 'sprinkled butter' (prishadâgya) to eat out of a brass vessel, with the Vyâhr̥itis to which the syllable 'Om' is added as the fourth (II, 12, 11-14). The remainder he should mix with water and pour out in a cow-stable.

15, 1. We ought to read uttarābhir, not uttarābhyām. Comp. below, Sûtra 12.

5. With the next (verse, M. II, 13, 1) he places (the child) in the mother's lap; with the next (II, 13, 2) he causes her to give him her right breast; with the next two (verses, II, 13, 3. 4) he touches the earth, and after (the child) has been laid down, (he touches him) with the next (formula, II, 13, 5).

6. With the next Yagus (II, 13, 6) he places a water-pot at (the child's) head, sacrifices mustard seeds and rice-chaff with his joined hands three times with each of the next (formulas, II, 13, 7-14, 2), repeating each time the word Svâhâ, and says (to the people who are accustomed to enter the room in which his wife lies), 'Whenever you enter, strew silently (mustard seeds with rice-chaff) on the fire.'

7. This is to be done until the ten days (after the child's birth) have elapsed.

8. On the tenth day, after (the mother) has risen and taken a bath, he gives a name to the son. The father and the mother (should pronounce that name first).

9. (It should be a name) of two syllables or of four syllables; the first part should be a noun; the second a verb; it should have a long vowel (or) the Visarga at the end, should begin with a sonant, and contain a semi-vowel.

10. Or it should contain the particle su, for such a name has a firm foundation; thus it is said in a Brāhmaṇa.

11. A girl's name should have an odd number of syllables.

12. When (the father) returns from a journey, he should address the child and kiss him on his head with the next two (verses, M. II, 14, 3. 4), and should murmur the next Mantras (II, 14, 5) into his right ear.

13. With the next Yagus (II, 14, 6) he addresses a daughter (when returning from a journey).

PĀṬALA 6, SECTION 16.

1. In the sixth month after the child's birth he serves food to Brāhmaṇas and causes them to pronounce auspicious wishes; then he should pour together curds, honey, ghee, and boiled rice, and should give (the mixture) to the boy to eat, with the next (four) Mantras (II, 14, 7-10);

2. (He should feed him) with partridge, according to some (teachers).

3. In the third year after his birth the K'aula (or tonsure is performed) under (the Nakshatra of) the two Punarvasus.

4. Brāhmaṇas are entertained with food as at the initiation (Upanayana).

5. The putting (of wood) on the fire, &c. (is performed) as at the Śimantonnayana.

6. He makes (the boy) sit down to the west of

12. Comp. above, Sūtra 1.

16, 4. See above, IV, 10, 5.

6. Comp. VI, 14, 3.

5. See above, VI, 14, 2.

the fire, facing the east, combs his hair silently with a porcupine's quill that has three white spots, with three Darbha blades, and with a bunch of unripe Udumbara fruits; and he arranges the locks in the fashion of his ancestral Rīshis,

7. Or according to their family custom.

8. The ceremonies beginning with the pouring together of (warm and cold) water and ending with the putting down of the hair are the same (as above; comp. M. II, 14, 11).

9. He puts down the razor after having washed it off.

10. The ceremony is (repeated) three days with the (same razor). (Then) the rite is finished.

11. (The father) gives an optional gift (to the Brāhmaṇa who has assisted).

12. The Godāna (or the ceremony of shaving the beard, is performed) in the sixteenth year, in exactly the same way or optionally under another constellation.

13. Or he may perform the Godāna sacred to Agni.

14. Some prescribe the keeping of a vow through one year in connection with the Godāna.

8. See IV, 10, 5-8.

10. I translate as if the words tena tryaham and karmani-vṛttiḥ formed two Sūtras.

13. 'Having performed the same rites as at the opening of the study of the Āgneya-kānda, he performs an Upasthāna to the deities as taught with regard to the Sukriyavrata.' Haradatta.—'After the ceremonies down to the Āgyabhāgas have been performed, one chief oblation of Āgya is offered with the formula, "To Agni, the Rīshi of the Kānda, svāhā!"' Sudarsanārya.

14. Comp. the statements given in the note on Gobhila III, I, 1.

15. The difference (between the Kāula and the Godāna) is that (at the Godāna) the whole hair is shaven (without leaving the locks).

16. According to the followers of the Sāma-veda he should 'touch water.'

PĀṬALA 7, SECTION 17.

1. The ground for building a house should be inclined towards the south-west. He elevates the surface and sweeps (the earth) with a broom of Palāsa wood or of Samī wood, with the next (verse, M. II, 15, 1), in the same (south-west) direction ;

2. In the same way three times.

3. He touches the ground, which has thus been prepared, with the next (verse, II, 15, 2). Then he has the pits for the posts dug from left to right, throws the earth (from the pits) towards the inside (of the building-ground), and erects the right door-post with the next two (verses, M. II, 15, 3. 4) ;

4. In the same way the other (door-post).

5. Having erected after (the door-posts) the other (posts) in the same order in which (the pits) have been dug, he recites the next Yagus (II, 15, 5) over the ridge-pole when it is placed (on the posts),

6. The next (six) (Yagus formulas, II, 15, 6-11) over the (house when it is) finished, according to the characteristics contained in the single formulas.

7. He sets a piece of Palāsa wood or of Samī wood on fire, takes the fire up (in a dish) with the next verse (II, 15, 12), carries it to the house with the next Yagus (II, 15, 13), and places the fire in the north-eastern part of the house with the next (II, 15, 14).

16. The udakopasparsana according to the rite of the Sāma-vedin is described by Gobhila, I, 2, 5 seqq. .

8. The place for the water-barrel is to the south of that spot.

9. He strews there Darbha grass, so that its points are turned in every direction, pours rice and barley-grains over the (grass) with the next (verse, II, 15, 15), and thereon he places the water-barrel.

10. With the next (Yagus, II, 15, 16) he pours four potfuls of water into it.

11. If (the barrel) breaks, he recites the next (verse, II, 15, 17) over it.

12. After the ceremonies from the putting of wood on the fire down to the Āgyabhāga oblations have been performed, he offers the (four) oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras; II, 15, 18–21); then he enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations.

13. Having performed (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), he should sprinkle (water) with a water-pot around the house or the resting-place on the inside, with the next Yagus (II, 15, 22) three times from left to right; then he should serve cakes, flour, and boiled rice to the Brāhmaṇas.

PĀṬALA 7, SECTION 18.

1. When a boy is attacked by the dog-demon (i. e. epilepsy), (the father or another performer of the ceremony), having devoted himself to austerities

(such as fasting), covers him with a net. Then he causes a gong to be beaten or a bell to be rung, takes (the boy) by another way than the door into the gambling-hall, raises (the earth in the middle of the hall) at the place in which they gamble, sprinkles it (with water), casts the dice, lays (the boy) on his back on the dice, and besprinkles him with his joined hands with curds and salt, with the next (eleven) (formulas, II, 16, 1-11), in the morning, at noon, and at night.

2. Then he will get well.

3. Over a boy who suffers from the 'Sañkha' disease, (the father, &c.) having devoted himself to austerities, should recite the next two (verses, II, 16, 12. 13), and should pour (water) on his head with a water-pot with the next (verse, II, 16, 14), in the morning, at noon, and at night.

4. Then he will get well.

5. On the day of the full moon of (the month) Srāvana after sunset a Sthālpāka (is offered).

6. After the ceremonies down to the Āgyabhāga oblations have been performed in the same way as at the fortnightly sacrifices, he sacrifices of the Sthālpāka, and with each of the next (formulas, II, 16, 15-17) he offers with his joined hands Kim-suka flowers.

7. With the next (three) verses (II, 17, 1-3) (he offers) pieces of Āragvadha wood (Cathartocarpus fistula);

3. 'Sañkhin is a person attacked by such a disease that he utters cries like the sound of a conch trumpet (sañkha).' Haradatta.

5. Here follows a description of the Sarpabali.

6. Comp. above, III, 7, 2-3.

8. Then the Âgya oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras, II, 17, 4-7).

9. Then he enters upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations.

10. Having performed (the rites) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), he silently takes the objects required (for the rites which he is going to perform), goes out in an easterly or northerly direction, prepares a raised surface, draws on it three lines directed towards the east and three towards the north, pours water on the (lines), and lays (an offering of) flour (for the serpents) on them, with the next (formula, II, 17, 8).

11. Silently (he lays down) unground (?) grain, roasted grain, collyrium, ointment, (the fragrant substance called) Sthagara, and Uśira root.

12. With the next (formulas, II, 17, 9-26) he should worship (the serpents), should sprinkle water round (the oblations), should return (to his house) silently without looking back, should sprinkle (water) with a water-pot from left to right, thrice around the house or the resting-place on the inside, with the two verses, 'Beat away, O white one, with thy foot' (II, 17, 27. 28), and should offer food to the Brâhmanas.

PATALA 7, SECTION 19.

1. The unground grain (which is left over, see above, VII, 18, 11) they give to the boys to eat.

2. Let him repeat in the same way this Bali-offering of whatever food he has got or of flour, from that day to full moon of (the month) Mârgaśrsha.

3. On the day of the full moon of Mārgasirsha after sunset a Sthâlpâka (is offered as above, VII, 18, 5).

4. In the Mantra for the Bali-offering he changes (the word 'I shall offer' into) 'I have offered.'

5. Then he does not offer (the Bali) any longer.

6. (Now follows) the Âgrayana sacrifice (or partaking of the first-fruits) of one who has not set up the (Srauta) fires.

7. He prepares a Sthâlpâka of the fresh fruits, sacrifices to the deities of the (Srauta) Âgrayana sacrifice with (Agni) Svishṭakṛit as the fourth, fills his mouth with grains, swallows them, sips water, forms a lump of the boiled (sacrificial) food, and throws it up with the next Yagus (II, 18, 1) to the summit of the house.

8. (Now follows) the 'redescent' in the winter.

9. With the next Yagus (II, 18, 2) they 'redescent' (or take as their sleeping-place a layer of straw instead of the high bedsteads which they have used before). With the next Yagus formulas (II, 18, 3-7) they lie down on a new layer (of straw) on their right sides,

10. The father to the south, the mother to the north (of him), and so the others, one after the other from the eldest to the youngest.

11. After he has arisen, he touches the earth with the next two (verses, II, 18, 8. 9).

12. In the same way the lying down, &c., is repeated thrice.

13. Having prepared a Sthâlpâka for Īsâna and

8. Comp. the note on Sâṅkhâya IV, 17, 1.

13. The description of the sūlagava sacrifice, which here follows, agrees in most points with the statements of Hiranyakesin II, 3, 8.

one for Kshetrapati, he goes out in an easterly or northerly direction, prepares a raised surface, (and then follow the ceremonies) beginning with the putting of wood on the fire.

14. To the west of the fire he builds two huts.

PATALA 7, SECTION 20.

1. With the next (verse, II, 18, 10) he has the Îsâna led to the southern (hut),

2. With worldly words the 'bountiful goddess' to the northern (hut),

3. To the middle (between the two huts) the 'conqueror.'

4. He gives them water to drink in the same order in which they have been led (to their places), takes three portions of boiled rice (from the Sthâlipâka prepared for Îsâna), takes (these portions of rice) to the fire, makes (the three gods) touch them with the next (formulas, II, 18, 11-13), sacrifices of these portions, to each god of the portion which belongs to him, with the next (formulas, II, 18, 14-30), cuts off (Avadânas) from all (portions), and sacrifices with the next Yagus (II, 18, 31) to Agni Svishtakrit.

5. Having worshipped (the god Îsâna) with the next Yagus (II, 18, 32), he distributes with the next (formulas, II, 18, 33-39) leaves together with portions of boiled rice, two (leaves) with each (Yagus), then ten to the divine hosts (II, 18, 40), and ten to the (divine hosts) that follow (and are referred to in the next Yagus, II, 18, 41).

20, 1-3. Comp. Hiraṇyak. II, 3, 8, 2-4. Haradatta explains the Îsâna, the mîḍkushî, and the gayanta as images of the three gods.

6. With the next (formulas, II, 18, 42-45) he does the same as before (i.e. he distributes two leaves with each Mantra).

7. Having formed a lump of boiled rice, he puts it into a basket of leaves, and with the next Yagus (II, 18, 46) hangs it up on a tree.

8. Here he should murmur the Rudra texts (Taitt. Samh. IV, 5),

9. Or the first and last (Anuvāka).

10. He places his cows around the fire so that the smoke (of the sacrifice) may reach them.

11. With his firmly shut fist full of Darbha grass he besprinkles (them) with scents; the bull first.

12. He should perform a sacrifice to Kshetrapati, without a fire, in the path used by his cows.

13. He has (the Kshetrapati) led to his place in the same way as the Īsāna (see above, Sūtra 1).

14. He puts (portions of boiled rice) into four or seven leaves, naming (the god).

15. Let him sacrifice quickly; the god has a strong digestion (?).

16. With the next two (verses, II, 18, 47. 48) he does worship (to Kshetrapati).

17. The Sthālīpāka (belonging to Īsāna) he gives to the Brāhmanas to eat;

18. That belonging to Kshetrapati his uterine relations eat,

19. Or as is the custom in their family.

11. On grumush/i, see the notes of the commentators, p. 93 of Dr. Winternitz's edition, and the commentary on Taitt. Samhitā V, 4, 5, 3 (Indische Studien, XII, 60).

15. I have translated here as in Hiranyak. II, 3, 9, 11. Haradatta and Sudarsanārya give another explanation of the words 'pāko devaḥ'; see p. 93 of the edition.

PATALA 8, SECTION 21.

1. The times for the monthly Srâddha are in the second fortnight (of the month), as they are stated.

2. Let him feed, without regard of (worldly) purposes, pure Brâhmanas, versed in the Mantras, who are not connected with himself by consanguinity or by their Gotra or by the Mantras (such as his teacher or his pupils), an odd number, at least three.

3. He makes oblations of the food (prepared for the Brâhmanas) with the next (verses, II, 19, 1-7);

4. Then the Âgya oblations (indicated by the next (Mantras, II, 19, 8-13).

5. Or invertedly (i. e. he offers Âgya with the verses referred to in Sûtra 3, and food with those referred to in Sûtra 4).

6. Let him touch the whole (food) with the next (formulas, II, 19, 14-16).

7. Or the (single) prepared (portions of food destined) for the single Brâhmanas.

8. Having caused them with the next (formula, II, 20, 1) to touch (the food, he gives it to them to eat).

9. When they have eaten (and gone away), he goes after them, circumambulates them, turning his right side towards them, spreads out southward-pointed Darbha grass in two different layers, pours water on it with the next (formulas, II, 20, 2-7), distributes the Pindas, ending in the south, with the next (formulas, II, 20, 8-13), pours out water as before with the next (formulas, 14-19), worships (the ancestors) with the next (formulas, II, 20, 20-23), sprinkles with the next (verse, 24) water three times from right to left round (the Pindās) with a water-pot, besprinkles the vessels, which are turned upside down, repeating the next Yagus (25) at least three times without taking breath, sets up the vessels two by two, cuts off (Avadānas) from all (portions of food), and eats of the remains at least one morsel with the next Yagus (26).

21, 1. Comp. Dharmasâstra II, 7, 16, 8 seq.; Sacred Books, vol. ii, p. 139. Comp. Professor Bühler's remarks, vol. ii, p. xiv.

10. Of the dark fortnight that follows after the full moon of Māgha, the eighth day falls under (the constellation of) Gyesh/hā: this day is called Ekāsh/hakā.

11. In the evening before that day (he performs) the preparatory ceremony.

12. He bakes a cake of four cups (of rice).

13. (The cake is prepared) in eight dishes (like a Puroḍāsa), according to some (teachers).

PATALA 8, SECTION 22.

1. After the ceremonies down to the Āgyabhāga oblations have been performed in the same way as at the fortnightly sacrifices, he makes with his joined hands oblations of the cake with the next (verse, II, 20, 27).

2. The rest (of the cake) he makes ready, divides (it) into eight parts and offers it to the Brāhmanas.

12, 13. Comp. Hiranyak. II, 5, 14, 3 seq.

22, 1. Comp. above, VII, 18, 6.

2. I believe that seshah means the rest of the cake. The word 'siddhaḥ' possibly refers to such preparations of the food as are indicated in Hiranyak. II, 5, 14, 7. Haradatta understands seshah as the rest of the rites (tantrasya seshah): 'The rest of the rites is

3. On the following day he touches a cow with a Darbha blade, with the words, 'I touch thee agreeable to the Fathers.'

4. Having silently offered five Āgya oblations, and having cooked the omentum of the (cow), and performed the 'spreading under' and the sprinkling over (of Āgya), he sacrifices (the omentum) with the next (verse, II, 20, 28) with a Palāsa leaf from the middle or the end (of the stalk).

5. (He sacrifices) boiled rice together with the meat (of the cow) with the next (verses, II, 20, 29-35),

6. Food prepared of meal with the next (verse, II, 21, 1),

7. Then the Āgya oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras, II, 21, 2-9).

8. (The rites) from the Svishtakṛit down to the offering of the Pindas are the same (as at the Srāddha).

9. Some (teachers) prescribe the Pinda offering for the day after the Ashṭakâ.

10. Here (follows) another (way for celebrating the Ashṭakâ sacrifice). He sacrifices curds with his joined hands in the same way as the cake.

11. Having left over from the meat of the (cow, see above, 3. 4) as much as is required, on the day after (the Ashṭakâ) (he performs) the rite of the Anvashṭakâ.

12. This rite has been explained in the description of the monthly Srāddha.

13. If he goes out in order to beg for something, the regular one, without alterations: it must be admitted that the expressions used by Hiranyak. II, 5, 14, 10 would agree well with this explanation.

4. See above, V, 13, 16.

let him murmur the next (Mantras, II, 21, 10-16) and then state his desire.

14. If he has obtained a chariot, he has the horses put to it, lets it face the east, and touches with the next (verse, II, 21, 17) the two wheels of the chariot or the two side-pieces.

15. With the next Yagus (II, 21, 18) he should mount, and drive with the next (verse, II, 21, 19) towards the east or north, and should then drive off on his business.

16. Let him mount a horse with the next (formulas, II, 21, 20-30),

17. An elephant with the next (formula, II, 21, 31).

18. If any harm is done him by these two (beasts), let him touch the earth as indicated above.

19. If he is going to a dispute, he takes the parasol and the staff in his left hand.

PĀṬALA 8, SECTION 23.

1. Having sacrificed, with his right hand, a fist full of chaff with the next (verse, II, 21, 32), he should go away and murmur the next (verse, 33).

2. Over an angry person let him recite the two next (formulas, II, 22, 1. 2); then his anger will be appeased.

3. One who wishes that his wife should not be touched by other men, should have big living centipedes ground to powder, and should insert (that powder) with the next (formula, II, 22, 3), while she is sleeping, into her secret parts.

4. For success (in the generation of children)

18. See VII, 19, 11. On reshane, comp. below, 23, 9.

23, 3. Comp. Hiranyak. I, 4, 14, 7.

let him wash (his wife) with the urine of a red-brown cow.

5. For success (in trade) let him sacrifice with the next (verse—II, 22, 4—some portion) from the articles of trade which he has in his house.

6. If he wishes that somebody be not estranged from him, let him pour his own urine into the horn of a living animal, and sprinkle (it) with the next two (verses, II, 22, 5. 6) three times from right to left around (the person) while he is sleeping.

7. In a path which servants or labourers use to run away, he should put plates (used for protecting the hands when holding a hot sacrificial pan) on (a fire), and should offer the oblations (indicated by the) next (Mantras, II, 22, 7-10).

8. If a fruit falls on him from a tree, or a bird befouls him, or a drop of water falls on him when no rain is expected, he should wipe that off with the next (Mantras, II, 22, 11-13), according to the characteristics (contained in these Mantras).

9. If a post of his house puts forth shoots, or if honey is made in his house (by bees), or if the footprint of a dove is seen on the hearth, or if diseases arise in his household, or in the case of other miracles or prodigies, let him perform in the new-moon night, at dead of night, at a place where he does not hear the noise of water, the rites from the putting (of wood) on the fire down to the Âgya-bhâga oblations, and let him offer the oblations (indicated in the) next (Mantras, II, 22, 14-23), and enter upon the performance of the Gaya and following oblations.

10. Having performed (the ceremonies) down to the sprinkling (of water) round (the fire), he puts up towards the south with the next (verse, II, 22, 24) a stone as a barrier for those among whom a death has occurred.

End of the Āpastambīya-Grihya-sūtra.

SYNOPTICAL SURVEY

OF THE

CONTENTS OF THE GRĪHYA-SŪTRAS.

1. The sacred Grīhya fire. S. I, 1; Â. I, 9; P. I, 2; G. I, 1; Kh. I, 5, 1 seq.; H. I, 22, 2 seq.; 26; Âp. 5, 13 seq.
 2. General division of Grīhya sacrifices. S. I, 5; 10; Â. I, 1, 2 seq. (comp. III, 1); P. I, 4, 1.
 3. Regular morning and evening oblations. S. I, 3, 8 seq. (comp. V, 4); Â. I, 2, 1 seq.; 9; P. I, 9; G. I, 1, 22 seq.; 3; 9, 13 seq.; Kh. I, 5, 6 seq.; H. I, 23, 8 seq.; Âp. 7, 19 seq.
 4. The Bali oblations. S. II, 14; Â. I, 2, 3 seq.; P. II, 9 (comp. I, 12); G. I, 4; Kh. I, 5, 20 seq.; Âp. 8, 4.
 5. Sacrifices on the days of the new and full moon. S. I, 3 (comp. V, 4); Â. I, 10; P. I, 12; G. I, 5 seq.; Kh. II, 1; 2, 1 seq.; H. I, 23, 7; Âp. 7, 17.
-
6. General outline of Grīhya sacrifices. S. I, 7 seq.; Â. I, 3; P. I, 1; G. I, 3 seq.; Kh. I, 1 seq.; H. I, 1, 9 seq.; Âp. 1, 1 seq.
 - a. The yagñopavīta, the prāñnāvīta, the touching of water. G. I, 2; Kh. I, 1, 4 seq.; Âp. 1, 3, 8.
 - b. Besmearing of the surface with cow-dung, drawing of the lines. S. I, 7, 2 seq.; Â. I, 3, 1; P. I, 1, 2; G. I, 1, 9; 5, 13; Kh. I, 2, 1 seq.
 - c. The fire is carried forward. S. I, 7, 9; Â. I, 3, 1; P. I, 1, 2; G. I, 1, 11; Kh. I, 2, 5; H. I, 1, 10.
 - d. The samūhana. S. I, 7, 11; Â. I, 3, 1; G. IV, 5, 5; Kh. I, 2, 6.
 - e. The strewing of grass around the sacred fire. S. I, 8, 1 seq.; Â. I, 3, 1; P. I, 1, 2; G. I, 5, 16 seq.; 7, 9 seq.; Kh. I, 2, 9 seq.; H. I, 1, 11 seq.; Âp. 1, 12 seq.
 - f. The purifiers. S. I, 8, 14 seq.; Â. I, 3, 2 seq.; P. I,

- 1, 2; G. I, 7, 21 seq.; Kh. I, 2, 12 seq.; H. I, 1, 23; Âp. 1, 19.
- g. Preparation of the Âgya for sacrifice. S. I, 8, 18 seq.; Â. I, 3, 3; P. I, 1, 2 seq.; G. I, 7, 19 seq.; Kh. I, 2, 14 seq.; H. I, 1, 27; Âp. 1, 22.
- h. The Âgya oblations. S. I, 9; Â. I, 3, 4 seq.; P. I, 1, 4; 5, 3 seq.; G. I, 8; 9, 26 seq.; Kh. I, 3, 12 seq.; H. I, 2, 12 seq.; 3; Âp. 2, 5 seq.
7. Sacrifices of cooked food. S. I, 3; Â. I, 10; G. I, 6, 13 seq.; 7 seq.; Kh. II, 1; Âp. 7.
8. Animal sacrifice (comp. Ash/akâ, Anvash/akya, Sûlagava). Â. I, 11; P. III, 11; G. III, 10, 18-IV, 1; Kh. III, 4; H. II, 15.
- a. The omentum. Â. I, 11, 10 (comp. II, 4, 13); IV, 8, 18; P. III, 11, 4, 6; G. III, 10, 30 seq.; IV, 4, 22 seq.; Kh. III, 4, 9 seq. 25 seq.; H. II, 15, 6 seq.
- b. The Avadânas. Â. I, 11, 12 (comp. II, 4, 14); P. III, 11, 6 seq.; G. IV, 1, 3, 9 &c.; Kh. III, 4, 14 seq.; H. II, 15, 9 seq.
-
9. Marriage. S. I, 5 seq.; Â. I, 5 seq.; P. I, 4 seq.; G. II, 1 seq.; Kh. I, 3 seq.; H. I, 19 seq.; Âp. 2, 12 seq.
- a. Different kinds of marriage (brâhma, daiva, &c.). Â. I, 6.
- b. Election of the bride. S. I, 5, 5 seq.; Â. I, 5; G. II, 1, 1 seq.; III, 4, 4 seq.; H. I, 19, 2; Âp. 3, 10 seq.
- c. The wooers go to the girl's house. S. I, 6; Âp. 2, 16; 4, 1 seq.
- d. Sacrifice when the bride's father has declared his assent. S. I, 7 seq.
- e. The bride is washed. S. I, 11; G. II, 1, 10, 17; Kh. I, 3, 6.
- f. Dance of four or eight women. S. I, 11, 5.
- g. The bridegroom goes to the girl's house. S. I, 12.
- h. He gives her a garment, anoints her, gives her a mirror, &c. S. I, 12, 3 seq.; P. I, 4, 12 seq.; G. II, 1, 18; Kh. I, 3, 6; Âp. 4, 8.
- i. Argha at the wedding. S. I, 12, 10; G. II, 3, 16 seq.; Kh. I, 4, 7 seq.; Âp. 3, 5 seq.
- k. Sacrifice with the Mahâvyâhritis and other formulas (Gaya, Abhyâtâna, &c., formulas). S. I, 12, 11;

- Â. I, 7, 3; P. I, 5, 3 seq.; G. II, 1, 24; Kh. I, 3, 8. 11; H. I, 19, 7 (comp. 3, 8 seq.; 20, 8); Âp. 5, 2. 11 (comp. 2, 7).
- l. Seizing of the bride's hand. S. I, 13, 2; Â. I, 7, 3 seq.; P. I, 7, 3; G. II, 2, 16; Kh. I, 3, 17. 31; H. I, 20, 1; Âp. 4, 11 seq.
- m. The formula, 'This am I, that art thou.' S. I, 13, 4; Â. I, 7, 6; H. I, 20, 2.
- n. The treading on the stone. S. I, 13, 10 seq.; Â. I, 7, 7; P. I, 7, 1; G. II, 2, 3; Kh. I, 3, 19; H. I, 19, 8; Âp. 5, 3.
- o. Circumambulation of the fire. S. I, 13, 13; Â. I, 7, 6; P. I, 5, 1; 7, 3; G. II, 2, 8; Kh. I, 3, 24; H. I, 20, 5; Âp. 5, 1. 7.
- p. Sacrifice of fried grain. S. I, 13, 15 seq.; Â. I, 7, 8; P. I, 6, 1 seq.; G. II, 2, 5 seq.; Kh. I, 3, 20 seq.; H. I, 20, 3 seq.; Âp. 5, 4 seq.
- q. The seven steps. S. I, 14, 5 seq.; Â. I, 7, 19; P. I, 8, 1; G. II, 2, 11; Kh. I, 3, 26; H. I, 20, 9 seq.; 21, 1 seq.; Âp. 4, 16.
- r. The bride is carried away to her new home. S. I, 15; Â. I, 7, 21; 8; P. I, 8, 10; 10; G. II, 2, 17 seq.; 4; Kh. I, 4, 1 seq.; H. I, 22, 1; Âp. 5, 12 seq.
- s. Ceremonies on entering the new home; looking at the polar star. S. I, 16, 17, comp. Â. I, 7, 22; comp. P. I, 8, 19; comp. G. II, 3, 5 seq.; 4, 6 seq.; comp. Kh. I, 4, 3; H. I, 22, 6 seq.; Âp. 6, 8 seq.
- t. The rites of the fourth day; the cohabitation. S. I, 18. 19; P. I, 11, 13; G. II, 5; Kh. I, 4, 12; H. I, 23, 11; 24, 25; Âp. 8, 8 seq.
-
10. The Pumsavana (i.e. the ceremony to secure the birth of a male child). S. I, 20; Â. I, 13; P. I, 14; G. II, 6; Kh. II, 2, 17 seq.; H. II, 2; Âp. 14, 9 seq.
11. A ceremony for the protection of the embryo. S. I, 21 (comp. Â. I, 13, 1).
12. The Sîmantonnayana (or parting of the pregnant wife's hair). S. I, 22 (comp. V, 4); Â. I, 14; P. I, 15; G. II, 7, 1 seq.; Kh. II, 2, 24 seq.; H. II, 1; Âp. 14, 1 seq.
Song of lute-players. S. I, 22, 11 seq.; Â. I, 14, 6 seq.; P. I, 15, 7 seq. (comp. H. II, 1, 3); Âp. 14, 4 seq.

13. Ceremony before the confinement. S. I, 23; P. I, 16, 1 seq.; G. II, 7, 13 seq.; Kh. II, 2, 28 seq.; H. II, 2, 8 seq.; Âp. 14, 13 seq.
14. The Gâtakarman (or ceremony for the new-born child) and similar rites. S. I, 24 (comp. V, 4); Â. I, 15; P. I, 16, 3 seq.; G. II, 7, 17 seq.; 8, 1 seq.; Kh. II, 2, 32; 3, 1 seq.; H. II, 3, 2 seq.; Âp. 15.
 - a. Name given to the child. S. I, 24, 4 seq.; Â. I, 15, 4 seq.; P. I, 17; G. II, 7, 15; 8, 8 seq.; Kh. II, 2, 30 seq. 3, 6 seq.; H. II, 4, 10 seq.; Âp. 15, 2 seq. 8 seq.
 - b. The 'production of intelligence.' S. I, 24, 9; Â. I, 15, 2; P. I, 16, 3; G. II, 7, 20; Kh. II, 2, 34; H. II, 3, 9.
 - c. Driving away demons and goblins from the child. P. I, 16, 23; H. II, 3, 7.
15. The getting up of the mother from childbed. S. I, 25 (with enumeration of the Nakshatras and their presiding deities, chap. 26); P. I, 17, 1; comp. H. II, 4, 6; Âp. 15, 8.
16. How the father should greet his children when returning from a journey. Â. I, 15, 9; P. I, 18; G. II, 8, 21; Kh. II, 3, 13; H. II, 4, 16; Âp. 15, 12.
17. The feeding of the child with solid food (Annaprâsana). S. I, 27; Â. I, 16; P. I, 19; H. II, 5; Âp. 16, 1 seq.
18. The tonsure of the child's head (Kûṣṭhakarman). S. I, 28; Â. I, 17; P. II, 1; G. II, 9; Kh. II, 3, 16 seq.; H. II, 6; Âp. 16, 3 seq.
19. The ceremony of shaving the beard (Godâna-Karman, Keśânta). S. I, 28, 18 seq.; Â. I, 18; P. II, 1, 3 seq.; G. III, 1; Kh. II, 5, 1 seq.; H. II, 6, 16 seq.; Âp. 16, 12 seq.
20. The initiation of the student. Studentship. The Samâvartana. S. II, 1 seq.; III, 1; IV, 5 seq.; VI; Â. I, 19 seq.; III, 5; 8-10; P. II, 2-6; 8; 10-12; G. II, 10-III, 4; Kh. II, 4-III, 1, 32; III, 2, 16-33; H. I, 1 seq.; II, 18-20; Âp. 10 seq.
 - a. Time of the initiation. The patitasâvitrika. S. II, 1, 1 seq.; Â. I, 19, 1 seq.; P. II, 2, 1 seq.; 5, 36 seq.; G. II, 10, 1 seq.; Kh. II, 4, 1 seq.; H. I, 1, 2 seq.; Âp. 10, 1 seq.
 - b. The skin, the girdle, and the staff belonging to the different castes. S. II, 1, 1 seq. 15 seq.; II, 13; Â. I, 19, 10 seq.; P. II, 5, 16 seq.; G. II, 10, 8 seq.; H. I, 1, 17; 4, 7; Âp. 11, 16 seq.

- c. Rite of the initiation. S. II, 1, 26 seq.; Â. I, 20, 2 seq.; P. II, 2, 5 seq.; G. II, 10, 15 seq.; Kh. II, 4, 7 seq.; H. I, 1, 5 seq.; 3, 14 seq.; Âp. 10, 5 seq.
- d. The standing duties of the student (begging, putting fuel on the fire, &c.). S. II, 4, 5; 6; 9; 10; Â. I, 20, 11 seq.; 22, 1 seq.; P. II, 2, 2; 4; 5; G. II, 10, 34. 42 seq.; Kh. II, 4, 19. 25 seq.; H. I, 5, 10; 7, 1 seq. 15 seq.; 8, 2. 8 seq.; Âp. 11, 22 seq.
- e. The Sāvitrī. S. II, 5 seq.; Â. I, 21, 5 seq.; 22, 29; P. II, 3, 3 seq.; G. II, 10, 38 seq.; Kh. II, 4, 20 seq.; H. I, 6, 6 seq.; Âp. 11, 8 seq.
- f. The study of the Veda. S. II, 7 seq.; IV, 8; Â. I, 22, 12 seq.; III, 5, 10 seq.; P. III, 16; Kh. III, 2, 22 seq.; H. I, 8, 16.
- g. Daily recitation of Vedic texts (svādhyāya). S. I, 4; Â. III, 2-4.
- h. Secret doctrines and special observances connected with them. S. II, 11-12; VI, 1-6; G. III, 1-2; Kh. II, 5.
- i. The opening of the annual course of study (Upākaraṇa). S. IV, 5; Â. III, 5; P. II, 10; G. III, 3; Kh. III, 2, 16 seq.; H. II, 18, 1 seq.; Âp. 8, 1.
- k. The end of the term (Utsarga). The Tarpana ceremony. S. IV, 6. 9-10 (comp. VI, 5. 6); Â. III, 5, 13. 19 seq. (comp. III, 4); P. II, 11, 10 seq.; 12; G. III, 3, 14 seq.; Kh. III, 2, 26 seq.; H. II, 18, 8 seq.; Âp. 8, 1.
- l. Interruptions of study. S. IV, 7; Â. IV, 4, 17 seq.; P. II, 11; G. III, 3, 9 seq. 16 seq.; Kh. III, 2, 27 seq.
- m. The student's setting out on a journey. S. II, 8; Â. III, 10.
- n. The bath taken at the end of studentship (Samāvartana). S. III, 1; Â. III, 8; 9; P. II, 6; 8; G. III, 4, 7 seq.; Kh. III, 1; H. I, 9 seq.; Âp. 12-13, 2.
21. Rules of conduct for a Snātaka. S. IV, 11-12; Â. III, 9, 6; P. II, 7; G. III, 5; Kh. III, 1, 33 seq.
-
22. House-building. S. III, 2 seq.; Â. II, 7 seq.; P. III, 4 seq.; G. IV, 7; Kh. IV, 2, 6 seq.; H. I, 27-28; Âp. 17.

- a. Election of the ground. Â. II, 7 seq.; G. IV, 7, 1 seq.; Kh. IV, 2, 6 seq.
 - b. Entering the new house. S. III, 4; Â. II, 9, 9; P. III, 4, 5 seq., 18.
 - c. The putting up of the water-barrel. P. III, 5; Âp. 17, 8 seq.
 - d. Leaving the house when travelling and returning to it. S. III, 5-7; Â. II, 10, 1 seq.; H. I, 29.
-
23. Ploughing. S. IV, 13; Â. II, 10, 3, 4; P. II, 13; G. IV, 4, 27 seq.
 24. Partaking of the first-fruits (Âgrayana). S. III, 8; Â. II, 2, 4 seq.; P. III, 1; G. III, 8, 9 seq.; Kh. III, 3, 16 seq.; Âp. 19, 6 seq.
 25. Sacrifice to Sîtâ. P. II, 17; comp. G. IV, 4, 29.
-
26. Ceremonies referring to cattle (comp. also the Âsvayuga sacrifice, below, No. 30).
 - a. The driving out of the cows, and other rites referring to the cows. S. III, 9; Â. II, 10, 5 seq.; G. III, 6; Kh. III, 1, 45 seq.; H. I, 18.
 - b. Making marks on the cattle. S. III, 10.
 - c. The Vṛṣhotsarga. S. III, 11; P. III, 9.
 - d. The Sūlagava ('spit-ox' offered to Rudra). Â. IV, 8; P. III, 8; H. II, 8-9; Âp. 19, 13-20, 19.
 - α. Distribution of Palāra leaves. P. III, 8, 11; H. II, 9, 1 seq.; Âp. 20, 5 seq.
 - β. Sacrifice to Kshetrapati. H. II, 9, 8 seq.; Âp. 20, 12 seq.
-
27. The Kaitra offerings. S. IV, 19.
 28. The Srāvana sacrifice to the Serpents. S. IV, 15; Â. II, 1; P. II, 14; G. III, 7 (comp. IV, 8, 1); Kh. III, 2, 1 seq.; H. II, 16; Âp. 18, 5-19, 2.
 29. The Praush/āpada sacrifice. P. II, 15.
 30. The Âsvayuga sacrifice. S. IV, 16; Â. II, 2, 1-3; P. II, 16; G. III, 8, 1 seq.; Kh. III, 3, 1 seq.
 31. The rites of the Âgrahāyanī (concluding ceremonies of the rites devoted to the Serpents). S. IV, 17, 18; Â. II, 3; P. III, 2; G. III, 9 (comp. IV, 8, 1); Kh. III, 3, 6 seq.; H. II, 17; Âp. 19, 3 seq. 8 seq.
 32. The Ashvakās. S. III, 12-14; Â. II, 4, 5; P. III, 3; G.

- III, 10 seq.; Kh. III, 3, 28 seq.; H. II, 14 seq.; Âp. 21, 10 seq.
- a. The first Ash/akâ. S. III, 12, 2 seq.; P. III, 3, 4; G. III, 10, 9 seq.; Kh. III, 3, 30 seq.
 - b. The second Ash/akâ (animal sacrifice). S. III, 13, 1 seq.; P. III, 3, 8; G. III, 10, 18-IV, 1; Kh. III, 4, 1 seq.
 - c. The third Ash/akâ. S. III, 14; G. IV, 4, 17 seq.; Kh. III, 3, 32 seq.
 - d. The Anvash/akya ceremony. S. III, 13, 7; Â. II, 5; P. III, 3, 10; G. IV, 2, 3; Kh. III, 5; H. II, 15; Âp. 22, 3 seq. 11.
-
33. Disease and death of a person who has set up the Srauta fires. Â. IV, 1.
 Burning the dead body. Â. IV, 2-4.
 The gathering of the bones. Â. IV, 5.
 Expiatory ceremonies after the death of a Guru or other misfortune. Â. IV, 6.
 Death. Burning dead bodies. P. III, 10.
-
34. Srâddha offerings to the Fathers. S. IV, 1-4; Â. II, 5, 10 seq.; IV, 7; G. IV, 4 (comp. chap. 2, 3); Kh. III, 5, 35; H. II, 10-13; Âp. 21, 1-9.
- a. The invited Brâhmanas. S. IV, 1, 2 seq.; Â. II, 5, 10 seq.; IV, 7, 2 seq.; G. IV, 2, 33 seq.; H. II, 10, 2 seq.; Âp. 21, 2 seq.
 - b. Offering of the Pindas. S. IV, 1, 9 seq.; Â. II, 5, 4 seq.; IV, 7, 28; P. III, 10, 50 seq.; G. IV, 3, 8 seq.; Kh. III, 5, 18 &c.; H. II, 12, 3 seq.; Âp. 21, 9.
 - c. The Ekoddish/a Srâddha. S. IV, 2 (comp. Â. IV, 7, 1); P. III, 10, 50 seq.
 - d. The Sapindîkarama. S. IV, 3; V, 9 (comp. P. III, 10, 51).
 - e. The Âbhyudayika Srâddha. S. IV, 4, comp. Â. II, 5, 13; IV, 7, 1; G. IV, 3, 35.
-
35. The Arghya reception (comp. Argha at the wedding, above, 9, i). S. II, 15-17; Â. I, 24; P. I, 3; G. IV, 10; Kh. IV, 4, 5 seq.; H. I, 12, 7 seq.; 13; Âp. 13, 3 seq.
- a. The persons to whom an Arghya reception is due.

- S. II, 15, 4 seq.; 16, 3; Â. I, 24, 1 seq.; P. I, 3, 1; G. IV, 10, 23 seq.; Kh. IV, 4, 21 seq.; Âp. 13, 2 seq.; 14. 19. 20.
- b. The cow offered to the guest. S. II, 15, 1 seq.; 16, 1; Â. I, 24, 30 seq.; P. I, 3, 26 seq.; G. IV, 10, 18 seq.; Kh. IV, 17 seq.; H. I, 13, 10 seq.; Âp. 13, 15 seq.
- c. Miscellaneous rules about the reception of guests. S. II, 17.

rites for the obtainment of special wishes, for averting misfortune; different expiations.

36. Longer sections are devoted to the description of ceremonies for the obtainment of special wishes by G. IV, 5-6; 8-9; Kh. IV, 1-4, 4. Comp. Â. III, 6, 1 seq.; Âp. 8, 4.
- a. Rites for procuring success and averting evil in disputes and on different other occasions. H. I, 14, 7-15, 8; Âp. 22, 19 seq.; 23, 2 seq. Entering a court of justice. P. III, 13.
- b. Mounting a chariot and similar acts. Â. II, 6; P. III, 14-15, 6; Âp. 22, 14.
- c. Rites when going out on business or on dangerous ways. Â. III, 7, 8-10.
- d. Sacrifice of a person menaced by unknown danger. Â. III, 11.
- e. Going out and begging. Âp. 22, 13 seq.
- f. Formulas to be pronounced on receiving gifts. P. III, 15, 22 seq.
- g. Crossing a river. S. IV, 14.
- h. Formulas to be pronounced at cross-roads and other different places. P. III, 15, 7 seq.; H. I, 16, 8 seq.
- i. Rites referring to battles. Â. III, 12.
- k. Rites in order that friends may not be estranged and servants may not run away. P. III, 7; H. I, 13, 19-14, 5; Âp. 23, 6. 7.
- l. Rite when first seeing the new moon. H. I, 16, 1.
- m. Rite for establishing concord between husband and wife. Âp. 9, 4 seq.
- n. Rite if one cannot pay a debt. G. IV, 4, 26.
- o. Oblations for sick persons. Â. III, 6, 3 seq.; for a - sick child. P. I, 16, 24 seq.; for a boy suffering from epilepsy. H. II, 7; Âp. 18, 1 seq. Cure for headache. P. III, 6.

- p. Penance of a student who has broken his vow of chastity. P. III, 12.
- q. Different expiations. S. V, 1, 8. 9; 5-6; 8; 10; 11; Â. III, 6, 5-7, 2; 7, 7; 10, 9 seq.; G. III, 3, 30 seq.; Kh. II, 5, 35 seq.; H. I, 16, 2 seq. 14 seq.-chap. 17, 6; Âp. 8, 5 seq.; 9, 2 seq.; 23, 9 seq.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTER.

37. Qualities of a Brâhmaṇa on whom gifts should be bestowed. S. I, 2.
38. The choosing of priests for officiating at a sacrifice. Â. I, 23.
39. The Kaitya sacrifice. Â. I, 12, 1 seq. (comp. Pâr. III, 11, 10 seq.).
40. The Dhanvantari sacrifice. Â. I, 12, 7.
41. Consecration of ponds. S. V, 2.
42. Consecration of gardens. S. V, 3.
43. Sandhyâ or twilight devotion. S. II, 9; Â. III, 7, 3 seq.
44. The sacrificer setting out on a journey makes the sacred fire enter him. S. V, 1, 1 seq.; H. I, 26, 12 seq.

ÂPASTAMBA'S
YAGÑA-PARIBHÂSHÂ-SÛTRAS.

INTRODUCTION.

AS Professor Oldenberg was unable to find any other texts connected with the Grihya-sûtras, I have tried to bring this volume to its proper size by adding a translation of Āpastamba's Yagñā-Paribhāshā-sûtras. These Sûtras give some general information about the performance of sacrifices, and may prove useful to the students both of the Srauta and the Grihya sacrifices. Paribhāshā is defined as a general rule or definition applicable throughout a whole system, and more binding than any particular rule. How well this sense of paribhāshā was understood in India, we may see from a passage in the Sisupālavadha XVI, 80 :

Paritakḥ pramitāksharāpi sarvaṃ vishayam prāptavati gatā pratishṭhām na khalu pratihanyate kutasṅkit paribhāsheva garīyaṣi yadāgñā.

‘Whose (the king’s) command, though brief, having reached the whole kingdom round about and obtained authority, is never defeated, being of the highest weight, like a Paribhāshā.’

These Paribhāshās are a very characteristic invention of ancient Indian authors, particularly during the Sûtra period. We find them as early as the Anukramanīs, and even at that early time they had been elaborated with many purely technical contrivances. Thus we are told in the Index to the Rig-veda that, as a general rule, if no deity is mentioned in the index of the hymns, Indra must be supposed to be the deity addressed ; when no metre is mentioned, the metre must be understood to be the Trishṭubh ; at the beginning of each Maṇḍala the hymns must be taken to be addressed to Agni, till we come to hymns distinctly addressed to Indra. Now it is clear that in this case these Paribhāshās or general instructions must have been laid down before the whole work was carried out. The same applies to other Paribhâshâs, such as those of the metrical Sûtras, but I feel more doubtful as to the Paribhâshâs in the grammatical Sûtras of Pânini. To judge from the Paribhâshendusekhara, it would seem that the Paribhâshâ-sûtras to Pânini's grammar also had been settled before a single Sûtra of Pânini was composed, and yet it seems almost incredible that this gigantic web of Sûtras should have been woven on so complicated a warp. This question ought to be settled once for all, as it would throw considerable light on the workmanship of Pânini's Sûtras, and there is no one better qualified to settle it for us than the learned editor of the Paribhâshendusekhara. It is different with our Paribhâshâs. There is no necessity to suppose that they were worked out first, before the Sûtras were composed. They look more like useful generalisations than like indispensable preliminary instructions. They give us a general idea of the sacrifice, and inculcate rules that ought to be observed throughout. But I doubt whether they are as essential for enabling the priest to carry out the instructions of the Sûtras in performing a sacrifice as the grammatical paribhâshâs are in carrying out the grammatical rules of Pânini.

The Âpastamba-sûtras for which our Paribhâshâs are intended are said to have comprised thirty Prasnas (see Burnell, Catalogue, p. 19, and p. xxix in Professor Oldenberg's Introduction). Burnell mentions that sometimes two Prasnas, treating of the Paitrimedhika rites, were counted as the thirty-first and thirty-second of the whole work. Of these thirty Prasnas fifteen have been edited with Rudradatta's commentary by Professor Garbe in the Bibliotheca Indica, 1882-1885. Rudradatta's commentary does not seem to have extended beyond the fifteenth Prasna ; some authorities, however, suppose that Haradatta, to whom commentaries on the later Prasnas are ascribed, was only another name for Rudradatta. According to Kaundappa's Prayogaratnamâlâ (see Burnell, Classified Index, I, p. 17 a), the Paribhâshâ-sûtras formed part of the twenty-fourth Prasna (katurvimse tatah prasne nyâyaprâ- varahautrakam). Here Nyāya in the sense of method, way, plan, seems to stand for Paribhāṣhā. Another name is Sāmānya-sūtra (see Burnell, Classified Index, p. 15 b, where it is mentioned as § 4 of Prasna XXIV). Kaundappā-kārya himself, who is said to have been minister of Virābhūpati, the son of the famous king Bukka of Vigayanagara, begins his work with a paribhāṣhā-parikkhedha.

I published a German translation of these Sūtras with notes many years ago, in the Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 1855. I here give the same translation, but I have shortened the notes and compared the translation once more with the MSS.

The principal MSS. used are MS. I. O. L. 1676 b, 259, and 1127. MS. 1676 b, now 308, is described in Professor Eggeling's Catalogue of the Sanskrit MSS. in the Library of the India Office, vol. i, p. 58 b. It is written in Devanāgarī, contains thirty leaves, and is called at the end iti Srikapardinā bhāshye uddhṛitasāram paribhāṣhāpaṭalam. MS. 259, now 309, contains twenty-seven leaves in Devanāgarī, and is called at the end iti Kapardisvāmi-bhāshye paribhāṣhāpaṭalam. MS. 1127, now 307, in Devanāgarī, is dated Samvat 1691, Sāka 1556, and contains on 220 leaves portions of Tālavṛindanivāsin's manual, the Āpastambasūtra-prayoga-vṛitti, and on pp. 75 a-116 a Kapardisvāmin's commentary on Āpastamba's Paribhāṣhāpaṭalam. Burnell mentions another copy of this work in his Classified Index, I, p. 17 b, and he states (Catalogue, p. 24) that, according to tradition, the author was a native of Southern India, called Andappillai, and that tālavṛinda or tālavṛinta is a translation of the Tamil panai-kkāṭu, a very common name for villages among palmyra trees (panai = palmyra, kāṭu = forest).

While preparing my new translation for the Press, I received a printed edition of the text and commentary published by 'Sṛī Satyavratasāmasramibhaṭṭākārya in his valuable Journal, the Ushā, beginning in the eighth fasciculus. He gives also a Bengālī translation, and some commentaries in the same language, which have proved useful in certain difficult passages.

ÂPASTAMBA'S YAGÑA-PARIBHÂSHÂ-SÛTRAS.

GENERAL RULES OF THE SACRIFICE.

SÛTRA I.

We shall explain the sacrifice.

Commentary.

Yagñā, sacrifice, is an act by which we surrender something for the sake of the gods. Such an act must rest on a sacred authority (āgama), and serve for man's salvation (sreyo-rtha). The nature of the gift is of less importance. It may be puroḍāsa, cake; karu, pulse; sāmñāyā, mixed milk; paśu, an animal; soma, the juice of the Soma-plant, &c.; nay, the smallest offerings of butter, flour, and milk may serve for the purpose of a sacrifice.

Yagñā, yāga, yagana, and ishṭi are considered as synonyms.

SÛTRA II.

The sacrifice is for the three colours or castes (varṇa), for Brāhmaṇas and Rāganyas, also for the Vaisya.

Commentary.

Though the sacrifice is meant for the three castes, here called varṇa, i.e. colour, the third caste, that of the Vaisya or citizen, is mentioned by itself, while the two castes, the Brāhmaṇas and Rāganyas (the Kshatriyas or nobles), are mentioned together. This is done because there are certain sacrifices (bahuyagamāna), performed by Brāhmaṇas and Rāganyas together, in which Vaisyas take no part. In the Sāṅkhāyana-sūtras, I, 1, 3, also the Vaisya is mentioned by himself. In Kâtyâyana's Sûtras, however, no such distinction is made, and we read, I, 6, Brâhmana-râganya-vaisyânâm sruteh. Women, if properly married, are allowed to participate in sacrifices, but no one is allowed to be accompanied by a Sûdrâ woman, even though she be his wife. Properly a Brâhmana should marry a wife of his own caste only. A Kshatriya may marry a woman of his own or of the Brâhmana caste. A Vaisya's proper wife should be taken from his own caste. See, however, Manu III, 12 seq.

The four castes, with the Sûdra as the fourth, are mentioned once in the Rig-veda, X, 90, 12. The opposition between Âryas and Sûdras occurs in the Atharva-veda, XIX, 62, &c., and in most of the Brâhmanas. In the Satapatha Brâhmana we read of the four castes, Brâhmana, Râganya, Vaisya, and Sûdra, and we are told that none of them vomits the Soma. Kâtyâyana excludes from the sacrifice the aṅgahîna, cripple, shanda, eunuch, and all asrotriyas, persons ignorant of the Veda, which would bar, of course, the whole class of the Sûdras, but they are also specially excluded. Concessions, however, had to be made at an early time, for instance, in the case of the Rathakâra, who is admitted to the Agnyâdhâna, &c. This name means chariot-maker, but Âpadeva, in his Mîmâmsâ-nyâya-prakâsa, remarks that, though rathakâra means a chariot-maker etymologically, it should be taken here as the name of a clan, namely that of the Saudhanvanas (MS. Mill 46, p. 13^b). Deva, in his commentary on the Kâtyâyana-sûtras, makes the same remark. See also Weber, Ind. Stud. X, 12 seq. These Saudhanvanas, often identified with the Rîbhus, are evidently the followers of Bribu, mentioned RV. VI, 45, 31; 33, and wrongly called Bridhu in Manu X, 107; see M. M., Hist. of A. S. L., p. 494. In the Sâṅkhâya-Srauta-sûtras, XVI, 11, 11 (ed. Hillebrandt), he is rightly called Bribu. In later times Rathakâra is the name of a caste, and its members are supposed to be the offspring of a marriage between a Mâhishya and a Karani. A Mâhishya is the son of a Kshatriya and a Vaisya, a Karāṇī the daughter of a Vaisya and a Sūdrā. Sudhanvan also is used in Manu, X, 23, as the name of a caste, namely the offspring of fallen (vrātya) Vaisyas.

Another exception is made in favour of a Nishâda-sthapati, a Nishâda chieftain. If it meant a chieftain of Nishâdas, it might be meant for a Kshatriya who happens to be a chieftain of Nishâdas. Here it is meant for a chieftain who is himself a Nishâda, a native settler. He is admitted to the Gavedhuka sacrifice.

Again, although, as a rule, the sacrificer must have finished his study of the Veda and be married, a sacrifice is mentioned which a Brahmaṭṭarin, a student, may perform. The case thus provided for is, yo brahmaṭṭarī striyam upeyât, sa gardabham pasum âlabheta. As these sacrificers are not upanīta, and therefore without the sacred fires, their sacrifices have to be performed with ordinary fires, and the sacrificial offerings, the puroḍâsas, are not cooked in kapâlas, jars, but on the earth, while the avadânas (cuttings), heart, tongue, &c, are sacrificed in water, and not in fire. The Nishâda chieftain has to learn the necessary Vedic verses by heart, without having passed through a regular course of Vedic study. The same applies to women, who have to recite certain verses during the sacrifice.

That certain women are admitted to the sacrifice, is distinctly stated by Kâtyâyana, I, 1, 7, strī kâvisheshât.

SŪTRA III.

The sacrifice is prescribed by the three Vedas.

Commentary.

In order to know the whole of the sacrifice, one Veda is not sufficient, still less one sâkhâ (recension) only. The sacrifice is conceived as a whole, and its members (aṅgas) are described in different parts of the three Vedas.

SŪTRA IV.

By the Rig-veda, the Yagur-veda, the Sâma-veda (is the sacrifice prescribed).

SÛTRA V.

The Darsa-pûrnamâsau, the new and full-moon sacrifices, are prescribed by the Rig-veda and the Yagur-veda.

SÛTRA VI.

The Agnihotra is prescribed by the Yagur-veda.

SÛTRA VII.

The Agnishṭoma is prescribed by all.

Commentary.

By saying all, the Atharva-veda is supposed to be included, at least according to one commentator.

The Agnishṭoma requires sixteen priests, the Paśu sacrifices six, the Kâturmâsyas five, the Darsa-pûrnamâsas four.

SÛTRA VIII.

With the Rig-veda and Sâma-veda the performance takes place with a loud voice (ukṛkaiḥ).

Commentary.

Even lines of the Yagur-veda, if they are contained in the Rig-veda and Sâma-veda, would have to be pronounced with a loud voice. Certain mantras, however, are excepted, viz. the gapa, abhimantrana, and anumantrana-mantras.

SÛTRA IX.

With the Yagur-veda the performance takes place by murmuring (upâmsu).

Commentary.

This murmuring, upâmsu, is described as a mere opus operatum, the words being repeated without voice and without thought. One may see the movements of the vocal organs in murmuring, but one should not hear them at a distance. If verses from the Rig-veda or Sâma-veda occur in the Yagur-veda, they also have to be murmured. See Kāty. I, 3, 10.

SŪTRA X.

With the exception of addresses, replies, choosing of priests (pravara), dialogues, and commands.

Commentary.

As all these are meant to be understood by others, they have therefore to be pronounced in a loud voice. The address (āsruta) is om srāvaya; the reply (pratyāsruta) is *astu srausha*¹; the choosing of priests (pravara) is agnir devo hotā; a dialogue (saṃvāda) is brahman prokshishyāmi, om proksha; a command (sampresha) is prokshaṇīr āśādaya.

SŪTRA XI.

In the Sāmidhent hymns the recitation is to be between (the high and the low tone).

Commentary.

The Sāmidhentis are the hymns used for lighting the fire. One commentator explains antarā, between, as between high tone (krushṭa) and the murmuring (upāṃsu). Another distinguishes three high tones, the krushṭa (also called tāra or krauñka), the madhyama, and the mandra, and assigns the madhyama to the Sāmidhent hymns. The mandra notes come from the chest, the madhyama notes from the throat, the uttama notes from the head.

SŪTRA XII.

Before the Āgyabhāgas (such as the Āgya-portions at the Darsa-pūṛṇamāsa), and at the morning Savana (oblation of Soma), the recitation is to be with the soft (mandra) voice.

¹ See Hillebrandt, Das Altind. Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 94.

Commentary.

The pronunciation is loud, uk̐kaiḥ, but soft, mandra. Satyavrata restricts this rule to the passages mentioned in Sûtra X. He also treats the second part of Sûtras XII, XIII, and XIV as separate Sûtras.

SÔTRA XIII.

Before the Svishtakṛit (at the Darsa-pûṛṇamâsa) sacrifice, and at the midday Savana, the recitation is to be with the middle voice.

SÔTRA XIV.

In the remainder and at the third Savana with the sharp (krushṭa) voice¹.

Commentary.

The remainder refers to the Darsa-pûṛṇamâsa sacrifice, the three Savanas to the Soma sacrifice. Satyavrata takes all these rules as referring to the cases mentioned in Sûtra X.

SÔTRA XV.

The movement of the voice is the same.

Commentary.

In the three cases mentioned before, the voice moves quickly, when the words are to be pronounced high; slowly, when low; and measuredly, when neither loud nor low.

SÔTRA XVI.

The Hotṛi-priest performs with the Rig-veda.

SÔTRA XVII.

The Udgâtri-priest with the Sâma-veda.

¹ See on this, Rig-veda Prâtisâkhya 13, 17; Âsval. I, 5, 27; Sâṅkh. I, 14; Hillebrandt, l. c. p. 103.

SŪTRA XVIII.

The Adhvaryu-priest with the Yagur-veda.

SŪTRA XIX.

The Brahma-priest with all.

Commentary.

‘With all’ means with the three Vedas, because the Brahma-priest, or superintendent of the whole sacrifice, must be acquainted with the three Vedas. Others would include the Atharva-veda.

SŪTRA XX.

When it is expressly said, or when it is rendered impossible, another priest also may act.

Commentary.

Vipratishedha is explained by asambhava and asakti.

SŪTRA XXI.

The priestly office (ârtvigya) belongs to the Brâhmanas.

Commentary.

Sacrifices may be performed for Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and, in certain cases, even for others, but never by any but Brâhmanas. The reason given for this is curious,—because Brâhmanas only are able to eat the remains of a sacrifice. See Satap. Br. II, 3, 1, 39; Kâtyâyana IV, 14, 11; also I, 2, 8, com.

SŪTRA XXII.

For all sacrifices the fires are laid once.

Commentary.

The sacrificial fires have to be arranged for the first time by a peculiar ceremony, called the Agnyâdhâna. They are generally three (Tretâ), the Gârhapatya, the father; the Dakshina, the son; and the Âhavanîya, the grandson. The first laying of the Gârhapatya fire-altar takes place in spring for a Brâhmana, in summer for a Râganya, in winter for a Vaisya.

SÔTRA XXIII.

If it is said, guhوتي, 'he sacrifices,' it should be known that sarpir âgya, melted butter, is meant.

Commentary.

Sarpis is here taken as an adjective, running; yad asarpat tat sarpir abhavat. Âgya is explained as navanîtavikâradravyagâtîyavaḥanaḥ sabdaḥ, i. e. a word signifying any kind of substance made of fresh butter.

In the Aitareya-Brâhmana I, 3, we read âgyam vai devânâṃ surabhi, ghrîtam manushyânâṃ, ayutam pitrînâṃ, navanîtam garbhânâṃ, 'Âgya is sweet or fragrant to the gods, ghrîta to men, ayuta to the manes, navanîta to children.' Here the commentator explains that âgya is butter, when melted (vilînam sarpis), ghrîta, when hardened. Ayuta, sometimes called astu, is butter, when slightly melted, nishpakva, when thoroughly melted. According to Kâtâyana I, 8, 37, âgya is of different kinds. It may be simple ghrîta, which, as a rule, should be made of the milk of cows. But in the absence of âgya, the milk of buffaloes (mâhisha), or oil (taila), or sesam-oil (gârtîla), or linseed oil (atasîsneha), &c., may be taken.

SÔTRA XXIV.

If it is said, guhوتي, it should be known that the Adhvaryu is meant as performer.

Commentary.

Though there is a man who offers the sacrifice, yet the actual homa, the throwing of butter &c. into the fire, has to be performed by the Adhvaryu priest.

SÔTRA XXV.

Likewise, the spoon (guhû) as the vessel.

Commentary.

Guhû, the spoon, is so called because it is used for pouring out (guhوتي, homa).

SÔTRA XXVI.

If the guhû has been elsewhere employed, let it be done with a ladle (sruva).

Commentary.

The guhû is a sruk, a spoon, the sruva, a ladle.

SÔTRA XXVII.

The offering is made in the Âhavantya fire.

SÔTRA XXVIII.

The sacrificial vessels are kept from the first laying of the fires (âdhâna) for the whole life.

Commentary.

All sacrificial vessels and instruments are to be kept, and most of them are burnt with the sacrificer at his death.

SÔTRA XXIX.

At every sacrifice these vessels are to be purified.

SÔTRA XXX.

The rule for the sacrifice are the Mantras and Brâhmanas.

SÔTRA XXXI.

The name Veda belongs both to the Mantras and Brâhmanas.

SÔTRA XXXII.

The Brâhmanas are the precepts for the sacrifice.

SÔTRA XXXIII.

The rest of the Brâhmana, that which does not contain precepts, consists of explanations, i. e. reproof, praise, stories, and traditions.

Commentary.

It is difficult to find words corresponding to technical terms in Sanskrit. Arthavâda, which I have translated by explanation, means not only the telling of the meaning, but likewise the telling of the object; parakṛiti, story, means literally the action of another; purâkalpa, traditions, means the former state. The difference between the two is stated to be that parakṛiti refers to the act of one person, purâkalpa to that of several. This subject is fully treated in the Pûrva-mîmâmsâ. Satyavrata begins a new Sûtra with 'reproof' (nindâ).

SÔTRA XXXIV.

All the rest are Mantras.

SÔTRA XXXV.

But passages which are not handed down, are not to be classed as Mantras, as, for instance, the pravarâ, the words used in choosing priests, divine or human; ûha, substitution of one word for another; and nâmadheya-grahana, the mentioning of the names of particular sacrificers.

Commentary.

The reason why such passages are not to be treated as Mantras is that they should not be subject to some of the preceding rules, as, for instance, the murmuring, enjoined in Sûtra IX. Those passages naturally vary in each sacrifice. With regard to the names a distinction is made between the gârhyam nâma, the domestic name of a person, such as Yagñasarman, and the astrological name, such as Rauhiṇa, derived from the star Rohiṇī.

SŪTRA XXXVI.

Likewise the sound of a carriage and the sound of a drum.

Commentary.

These sounds, though serving for the sacrifice, are not to be considered as liable to the rules given for the recitation of Mantras.

SŪTRA XXXVII.

The prohibition of reciting Mantras in the Svādhyâya does not apply to the sacrifice, because there is then a different object.

Commentary.

Svādhyâya, i. e. self-reading, is the name given to the study of the Veda, both in first learning and in afterwards repeating it. This study is under several restrictions, but these restrictions cease when the Veda is used for sacrificial purposes.

SŪTRA XXXVIII.

Sacrificial acts are accompanied by one Mantra.

Commentary.

If it is said that the priest cuts the plants with fourteen verses, that means that there are fourteen plants to be cut and that one verse is used for each plant.

SŪTRA XXXIX.

This applies also to sacrificial acts which have a number and are to be carried out by separate (repeated) acts.

Commentary.

If a rule is given, such as triḥ prokshati, he sprinkles thrice, the mantra which accompanies the act, is recited once only. Again in the case of acts that require repetitions, such as rubbing, pounding, &c., the hymns are recited once only.

SÛTRA XL.

The same applies to rubbing, sleeping, crossing a river, down-pours of rain, the conjuring of unlucky omens, unless they happened some time ago.

Commentary.

If several members of the body are to be rubbed, the verses required for the purpose are recited once only. A prayer is enjoined if one wakes during the night. If one wakes more than once that prayer is not to be repeated. In crossing a river the necessary verse is not to be repeated at every wave, nor during a down-pour, at every drop of rain. If some unlucky sight has to be conjured, the conjuring verse is spoken once and not repeated, unless some time has elapsed and a new unlucky sight presents itself.

SÛTRA XLI.

In case of a journey, however, one hymn is used till the object (of the journey) has been accomplished.

Commentary.

I read prayāṇe tu-â-arthanirvṛitteḥ. Another reading is arthanivṛittiḥ.

SÛTRA XLII.

It is the same also with regard to acts which do not produce an immediate effect.

Commentary.

The commentators distinguish between acts which produce a visible effect, such as pounding or sprinkling, and acts which do not, such as addressing, approaching, looking. The latter are called asamnīpātin. Thus when the stones used for the preparation of Soma are addressed, the hymn which is used for addressing them, is not repeated for each single stone, the same as in Sūtra XL. Sūtras XLI and XLII are sometimes joined.

SŪTRA XLIII.

Repetition takes place in the case of the Havish-*krī*t, Adhrigu, Puroṇuvākyā, and Manotā hymns, (because they have to be used) at different times.

Commentary.

Havish*krī*t-adhrigu-puroṇuvākyā-manotam is to be taken as a Dvandva compound.

The Havish*krī*t hymn is an invocation when the havis is made. The Adhrigu hymn is 'Daivyāḥ samitāraḥ,' &c. The Puroṇuvākyā hymn is that which precedes the Yāgyā, immediately after the Sampraisha. The Manotā hymn is 'Tvam hy agne prathamam manotā,' &c. These hymns are to be repeated, if the act which they accompany has to be repeated after a certain interval.

SŪTRA XLIV.

When it is expressly stated, one sacrificial act may be accompanied by many hymns.

Commentary.

Thus we read, 'He takes the Abhri, the hoe, with four Mantras.'

SŪTRA XLV.

One ought to let the beginnings of a sacrificial act coincide with the end of the Mantras.

Commentary.

The mantra which indicates the nature and purpose of a sacrificial act should come first, and as soon as it has been finished the act should follow. See Kâty. I, 3, 5.

SÛTRA XLVI.

In the case of the âghâra, sprinkling of clarified butter, and of dhârâ, pouring out of Soma, the beginning of the mantra and the act takes place at the same time.

SÛTRA XLVII.

Mantras are indicated by their first words.

Commentary.

These first words are often called Pratîkas, and rules are given in Âsvalâyana's Srauta-sûtras I, 1, 17-19, as to the number of words that should form such a pratîka, if it is meant for one verse, for three verses, or for a whole hymn. According to Âsvalâyana, if one foot is quoted, it is meant for a verse ; if an imperfect foot of an initial verse is quoted, it is meant for a whole hymn ; if more than a foot is quoted, it is meant for three verses.

SÛTRA XLVIII.

One should know that with the beginning of a following mantra, the former mantra is finished.

SÛTRA XLIX.

In the case of Hotrâ and Yâgamâna-mantras, an aggregation takes place.

Commentary.

Hotrâs are mantras recited by the Hotri-priest, Yâgamânâs are mantras recited by the sacrificer himself. They are hymns which accompany, but do not enjoin any sacrificial act.

SÔTRA L.

In the case of the Yâgyâs and Anuvâkyâs this (the aggregation) is optional.

Commentary.

The Yâgyâ is explained by praya~~kk~~hati yâgyayâ, the Anuvâkyâ by âhvayat~~y~~ anuvâkyayâ. Sometimes more than one are mentioned, but in that case the priest is free to do as he likes. According to the same principle, when we read that one should sacrifice with rice or with barley, that means that rice should be used after the rice-harvest, barley after the barley-harvest, and not that rice and barley should be used at the same time.

SÔTRA LI.

It is the same with numbers.

Commentary.

If we read that, as in the case of fees to be given to priests, two, seven, eleven, twelve, twenty-one, sixty, or a hundred, this means that either one or the other, not that all should be given at the same time.

SÔTRA LII.

But accumulation is meant in the buying (of Soma), in the redemption, and in initiation.

Commentary.

When it is said that Soma is bought for a goat, gold, &c., that it is re-bought from the priests by means of a fee, or that at the time of the Dîkshâ, the purification and initiation of a sacrificer, clothes, gold, grain, &c., should be given, these are cases not of aut-aut but of et-et.

The Soma-plant, which is supposed to be bought from northern barbarians, is botanically described in an Âyurvedic extract, quoted in the Dhûrtasvâmi-bhâshyañkā (MS. E. I. H. 531, p. 3^b), as syāmālāmlā ka nishpatrá kshirini tvaki māmśalā, sleshmalā vamanī vallī somākhyā khāgabhoganam. 'The creeper called Soma is dark, sour, without leaves, milky, fleshy on the surface, producing phlegm and vomiting, food for goats.'

This passage, quoted from some Âyur-vedic text, is still the only one which gives an approximative description of the Soma-plant. Dr. Hooker says that the predicates 'sour and milky' point to Sarcostemma, but the question is not decided yet. For further information see George Watt, The Soma Plant, an extract from the third volume of the Dictionary of Economic Products of India, and Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, pp. 14 seq.

SŪTRA LIII.

If one has performed an offering to Rudra, to the Rākshasas, to Nirṛiti, or to the Pitṛis, if one has cut or broken or thrown away anything, or rubbed oneself, &c., one should touch water.

Commentary.

The touching of water is for the sake of purification. Nirasana is left out in some MSS. The ka, inserted after abhimarsanāni, is explained, as usual, as including other acts also, corresponding to our etc.

SŪTRA LIV.

All priestly performances take place on the northern side of the Vihâra.

Commentary.

Uttarata-upakârah has to be taken as a compound. Vihâra is explained as vihriyante+gnayaḥ pātrāni ka yasmin dese, i.e. the sacrificial ground. Upakâra is explained as adhvaryvâdînām samkaraḥ, and this samkara, according to Kâtâyana I, 3, 42, is the path between the Kâtvâla and Utkara, the Utkara being on the west, the pranîtas on the east of the Vihâra. Kâtâyana I, 8, 26, expresses the same rule by uttarata-upakâro yagñah, the vihâra being the place where the yagña takes place.

SÔTRA LV.

The priest should never turn away from the fire,
i. e. should never turn his back on the altar.

SÔTRA LVI.

Nor from the Vihâra.

SÔTRA LVII.

Sacrificial utensils should be turned inside, the performers being outside.

Commentary.

The meaning is that the priest should carry such things as spoons, vessels, &c., holding them towards the altar.
The sacrificer and his wife should likewise be on the inside of the priest, and the priests should take precedence sideways according to their rank.

SÔTRA LVIII.

After a sacrificial object has been hallowed by a Mantra, the priest should not toss it about.

SÔTRA LIX.

Sacrificial acts intended for the gods, should be performed by the priest towards the east or towards the north, after he has placed the Brahmanic cord over the left and under the right arm (yagñopavī-tin), and turning towards the right.

SÔTRA LX.

Sacrificial acts intended for the Fathers should be performed by the priest towards the south, after he has placed the Brahmanic cord over the right and under the left arm (prâkñâvîtin), and turning towards the left.

SÛTRA LXI.

Ropes which have to be joined, should be joined by the priest from left to right, after having tied them from right to left.

SÛTRA LXII.

Ropes which are not joined (single ropes), should be tied by the priest from left to right.

Commentary.

The exact process here intended is not quite clear. The ropes seem to have been made of vegetable fibres. See Kâty. I, 3, 15-17.

SÛTRA LXIII.

Let a man sacrifice with the Amâvâsyâ sacrifice at the time of the Amâvâsyâ, new moon.

Commentary.

Amâ-vâsyâ is the dwelling together, i. e. the conjunction, of sun and moon, an astronomical expression which was adopted in the common language of the people at a very early time. It does not occur, however, in the Rig-veda. In our Sûtra amâvâsyâ is used in the sense both of new moon and new-moon sacrifice.

SÛTRA LXIV.

And let a man sacrifice with the Paurñamâsyâ sacrifice at the time of the Paurñamâst, full moon, thus it is said.

Commentary.

Here the full moon is called paurñamâst, the sacrifice paurñamâsyâ. Satyavrata joins the two Sûtras in one, and leaves out yageteti, which may have belonged to the commentary.

SŪTRA LXV.

Let a man observe that full-moon day as a day of abstinence on which the moon comes out full before.

Commentary.

The full moon (paurṇamāsī) is really the very moment on which the moon is full and therefore begins to decrease. That moment on which sun and moon are, as the Hindus said, at the greatest distance from each other, is called the parva-sandhi, the juncture of the two phases of the moon. Thus the name of paurṇamāsī belongs to the last day of the one and to the first day (pratipad) of the other phase, and both days might be called paurṇamāsī. If therefore the moon is full on the afternoon, the evening, or the twilight of one day, that day should be observed as a fast-day, and the next day should be the day of sacrifice.

The meaning of purastād, which I have translated by before, is doubtful. One commentator says it has no object, and should be dropped, purastād ity etat padam asmin sūtra idānim anvayaṁ nalabhate prayoga-nābhāvāt. Purastād, before, may, however, mean before the second day, on which the real sacrifice takes place, and the commentator mentions purastāt-paurṇamāsī as a name of the ĥaturdaśī-yuktā, i.e. the full moon beginning on the fourteenth day. The same kind of full moon is also called Anumati, Pūrvā-paurṇamāsī, and Sandhyā-paurṇamāsī, while that which takes place on the pratipad, the first day of the lunar phase, is called Rākā, Uttarā-paurṇamāsī, Astamitoditā, and Svāh-pūritā.

Corresponding to these two kinds of Paurṇamāsī there are also two kinds of Amāvāsyā. That which falls on the fourteenth day is called Pūrvā-amāvāsyā, or Sinivālī, the ἑνῇ καὶ νεία; that which falls on the pratipad, the first day of the new phase, is called Kuhū, Uttarā-amāvāsyā, Svoyuktā. See also Ait.-Brāhm. II, 4; Nir. XI, 31-32.

SÛTRA LXVI.

Or the day when one says, To-morrow it will be full.

Commentary.

In that case the day before should be observed as a day of abstinence. The real full moon would then take place in the fore-noon, pûrvâhne, of the next day. Abstinence, upavâsa, consists in abstaining from meat and from maithuna, in shaving beard and head, cutting the nails, and, what seems a curious provision, in speaking the truth. See Kâty.-Srauta-sûtras II, 1, 8-12.

SÛTRA LXVII.

The Vâgasaneyins mention a third, the Kharvikâ full moon.

Commentary.

Kharva means small. If one divides the night into twelve parts, and if in a portion of the twelfth part the greatest distance of sun and moon takes place, then the full moon is called kharvikâ, also kshîṇâ. Or, if on the sixteenth day, the full moon takes place before noon, that also is called kharvikâ paurnamâsî. In that case abstinence or fasting takes place on the sixteenth day (tasyâm shodase-hany upavâsah). Both paurnamâsîs are also called sadyaskâlâ.

SÛTRA LXVIII.

Let a man observe that new-moon day (amâvâsyâ) as a day of abstinence, on which the moon is not seen.

Commentary.

This Sûtra has to be connected with Sûtra LXV. The abstinence takes place on the day, if the actual new moon, the nearest approach of sun and moon, falls on the afternoon, at night, or at twilight. And this new moon, the junction of the fifteenth day and the pratipad, is called Kuhû. We should read amâvâsyâm.

SŪTRA LXIX.

Or the day when one says, To-morrow they will not see it.

Commentary.

In that case, when the real new moon takes place in the fore-noon, abstinence is observed on the day before, and the new moon is called Sinivālī. Satyavrata reads svo yukta iti vā instead of svo na drashṭāra iti vā. Dra-shṭāraḥ should be explained as īkshītāraḥ, 'they will not see it.' There is much difference of opinion on this subject among different Sākhās, Sūtrakāras, and their commentators; see Taitt. Samh. III, 4, 9; Weber, Ind. Stud., V, p. 228.

SŪTRA LXX.

The principal acts (pradhāna), prescribed in one (typical) performance, follow the same special rules (vidhāna).

Commentary.

This Sūtra is variously explained: Satyavrata's commentary, which I have followed in the translation, explains pradhānāni as āgneyādīni, i.e. the chief parts of such a sacrifice as the Darsa-pûṇamāsa; vidhānāni as āṅgāni. Kapardisvāmin's commentary also explains vidhānāni as the āṅgāni of a pradhānam; pradhānam as pûṇamāsa, &c. It would therefore mean that such ceremonies as the āgneya (ashṭa-kapāla), āgnīshomīya (ekādasa-kapāla), and upāmsu, which form the pradhānas of the Darsapûṇamāsa, retain throughout the same vidhānas or āṅgas as prescribed in one Prakarana, viz. the Darsapûṇamāsa. The Āṅgas or members are all the things used for sacrificial purposes, milk, butter, grains, animals, &c.

SŪTRA LXXI.

The special rules are limited by (the purpose of) the (typical) performance (prakarana).

Commentary.

Here the rules (vidhis) are again the Aṅgas, which belong to a sacrifice, as the members belong to the body.

SÛTRA LXXII.

If no special instruction is given (in the Sruti), the acts are general.

SÛTRA LXXIII.

If a special instruction is given, they are restricted.

Commentary.

Nirdeśa is explained as viśeṣa-sruti, and the meaning is supposed to be that unless such a special rule is given, the Aṅgas of all the Pradhâna acts remain the same, as, for instance, the Paryagnikarâṇa, the Prayâgas, &c. Special instructions are when it is said: payasâ maitravaruṇam sṛiṇâti, sruveṇa puroḍâsam anakti, he cooks the Maitravaruṇa with milk, he anoints the Puroḍâsa with the spoon, &c.

SÛTRA LXXIV.

The Aṣṭâ-kapâla for Agni, the Ekâdasa-kapâla for Agni-Shomau, and the Upâṃsu-yâga (the muttered offering of butter), form the principal acts at the Paurṇamâsî, the full moon.

Commentary.

The Aṣṭâ-kapâla is the cake baked in eight cups, the Ekâdasa-kapâla that baked in eleven cups, and respectively destined for Agni and Soma. What is meant are the sacrificial acts for which these cakes are used.

SÛTRA LXXV.

The other Homas are Aṅga.

Commentary.

The other acts, such as the prayâgas and anuyâgas, are auxiliary, and have no promise of reward by themselves.

SŪTRA LXXVI.

The Ashṭā-kapāla for Agni, the Ekādasa-kapāla or Dvādasa-kapāla for Indra-Agni, form the principal acts at the Amāvāsyā, the new moon, in the case of one who does not sacrifice with Soma.

SŪTRA LXXVII.

In the case of one who sacrifices with Soma, the second principal act is the Sāmnāyā (both at the full-moon and new-moon sacrifices).

Commentary.

The Sāmnāyā is a mixture of dadhi and payas, sour and sweet milk, and is intended for Indra or Mahendra¹. It takes the place of the second Puroḍāsa at the new-moon sacrifice.

SŪTRA LXXVIII.

In the case of a Brāhmaṇa, who does not sacrifice with Soma, the Agnīshomīya cake is omitted.

Commentary.

This rule does not seem to be accepted by all schools. It is not found in Kātyāyana, and Hiranyakesin observes: Nāsomayāgino brāhmaṇasyāgnīshomīyāḥ puroḍāso vidyate ekeshām. See Hillebrandt, l. c. p. iii.

SŪTRA LXXIX.

Without distinction of caste, the Aindrāgna offering is omitted for one who offers the Sāmnāyā.

Commentary.

Even though he be not a Somayāgin, says the commentary.

¹ Vaidya in his Dictionary explains it, however, as any substance mixed with clarified butter and offered as a burnt offering, which can hardly be right.

This whole matter is summed up in Kapardin's commentary : Amâvâsyâyâm asomayâgina aindrâgna-sâmnâyayor vikalpah. Paurṇamâsyâyam tv asomayâgino brâhmanasyâgnishomîyayâgâbhâvah. Tdrahitâpi paurṇamâsi purushârtham sâdhayati. Tatra dvayor eva hi yâgayoh paurṇamâsisrâbdavâkyatvam asti, pratyekam nâmayogât. Tasmâd agnishomîyayâgarahitâv evetarau purushârtham sâdhayatah.

SÛTRA LXXX.

The Pitri-yagña, the sacrifice to the fathers, is not Aṅga (auxiliary) because its own time is prescribed.

Commentary.

The text should be pitriyagñah svakâlavidhânâd anâgah syât. This sacrifice for the Manes, called also the Pinda-pitriyagña, falls under the new-moon sacrifice, but is to be considered as a pradhâna, a primary sacrifice, not as an aṅga, a member of the Darsa.

SÛTRA LXXXI.

Also, because it is enumerated like the Darsa-pûrṇamâsa sacrifice.

Commentary.

This refers to such passages from the Brâhmanas as : There are four great sacrifices, the Agnihotram, the Darsapûrṇamâsau, the Kâturmâsyâni, and the Pinda-pitriyagñah.

SÛTRA LXXXII.

Also, because, when the Amâvâsyâ sacrifice is barred, the Pitriyagña is seen to take place.

SÛTRA LXXXIII.

A principal act (pradhâna) is accompanied by auxiliary acts (aṅga).

Commentary.

This Sûtra forms sometimes part of the preceding Sûtra, and would then refer to the Pitriyagña only.

SÔTRA LXXXIV.

A principal act is what has its own name, and is prescribed with special reference to place, time, and performer.

Commentary.

This Sûtra is sometimes divided into two; the first, dese kâle kartarîti nirdisyate, the second, asvasabdam yat. The following are given as illustrations. If it is said that 'he should sacrifice with the Vaisvadeva on a slope inclined to the East,' we have the locality. If it is said that 'he should sacrifice with the Vâgapeya in autumn,' we have the time. If it is said that 'the sacrificer himself should offer the Agnihotra on a parvan (change of the moon),' we have the performer. In each of these cases, therefore, the prescribed sacrificial act is a pradhâna sângham, a principal act with auxiliary members.

SÔTRA LXXXV.

The Darvi-homa (libation from a ladle) stands by itself.

Commentary.

Apûrva is explained by the commentator, not in its usual sense of miraculous, but as not being subject to the former regulations.

SÔTRA LXXXVI.

They are ordered by the word guhoti, he pours out.

SÔTRA LXXXVII.

They are offered with the word Svâhâ.

Commentary.

According to Kâtyâyana I, 2, 6-7, the guhotis are offered sitting, the yagatis standing. See Sôtra XCII. The guhoti acts consist in pouring melted butter into the fire of the Âhavanîya altar, which is so called because 'âhû-yante-sminn âhutaya kshipyanta iti.'

SÔTRA LXXXVIII.

Taking (the butter) once.

SÔTRA LXXXIX.

Or, if there are several Âhuti, taking (the butter) for each Âhuti.

SÔTRA XC.

Or, doing as he likes in dividing (the butter).

Commentary.

These three Sôtras belong together. They teach that one slice (avadâna) of butter should be taken, melted, and poured on the Âhavanîya fire; or, if there are more than one âhuti, then one slice should be taken for each. This, however, is made optional again by the last Sôtra.

SÔTRA XCI.

There is no fuel (in the Darvi-homa), except at the Agnihotra.

Commentary.

In the case of the Agnihotra it is distinctly stated, dve samidhâv âdadhât, let him lay down two sticks.

SÔTRA XCII.

One pours out (guhoti) the Darvi-homas, sitting west of the Âhavanîya fire, and bending the right knee, or not bending it.

SÔTRA XCIII.

If it is distinctly stated, it is done in a different way.

Commentary.

The vidhi, contained in Sûtra XCII, is therefore called autsargika, general, and liable to exceptions, as when it is said, that he turns to the east.

SÔTRA XCIV.

One pours out (guhōti) all âhutis, west of the Âhavanīya fire, passing (the altar) southward, and then turning to the north.

SÔTRA XCV.

The Âsruta and Pratyâsruta, the Yâgyâ and Anuvâkyâ, the Upastarâna and Abhighârâna, with the slicings, the Katurgrîhîta also, and the Vashaṭkāra constitute the Darvi-homas.

Commentary.

The Âsruta is â srāvaya; the Pratyâsruta, astu sraushaṭ; Anuvâkyâ and Yâgyâ are verses, the first inviting the deity, the second accompanying the sacrifice. Whenever vegetable, animal, or sâmnâyya offerings have to be sliced, upastarâna, spreading, and abhighârâna, sprinkling with fat, take place. With âgya offerings there is Katurgrîhîta (taking four times), and the Vashaṭkāra.

SÔTRA XCVI.

With âhutis one should let the act (the pouring out) take place after the Vashaṭkāra has been made, or while it is being made.

Commentary.

The Vashaṭkāra consists in the word Vashaṭ, to be uttered by the Hotri-priest. The five sacrificial interjections are, svâhâ, sraushaṭ, vaushaṭ, vashaṭ, and svadhâ.

SÔTRA XCVII.

With the Grahas the act should be made to coincide with the Upayâma.

Commentary.

Grahas are offerings of Soma, and likewise the vessels (kamasa) in which the Soma is offered. The Soma is offered with the words upayâma-grîhîto-si, and while these words are being uttered, the fluid should be poured out (dhârâṃ srâvayet).

SÛTRA XCVIII.

With the Ishṭakâs, the act should be made to coincide with the words tayâ deva tena.

Commentary.

When the different ishṭakâs or bricks are placed together for building an altar, &c., the act itself begins with the first and ends with the last words of the accompanying verse.

SÛTRA XCIX.

When there is a number of Puroḍâsas, one should slice off one after another, saying for each portion vyâvartadhvam (separate)!

Commentary.

Puroḍâsa is a cake made of meal (pakvaḥ pishtapindah), different from kāru, which is more of a pulse consisting of grains of rice or barley, and clarified butter (ghrîtatandulo-bhayâtmakam). This puroḍâsa cake has to be divided for presentation to different deities. If there are more than two deities, the plural vyâvartadhvam, separate, has to be used.

SÛTRA C.

When the two last are sliced off, he should say for each portion, vyâvartethâm, separate ye two!

Commentary.

Each slice, avadâna, is said to be about a thumb's breadth. In the case of sâmnâyya, the mixture of sour and sweet milk, a kind of coagulated sour milk, each portion is to be of the same breadth, but, as it is fluid, it is taken out with a ladle (sruva) of a corresponding size ; see Kâtyâyana I, 9, 7.

SÔTRA CI.

For these two last portions he makes the indication of the deity.

Commentary.

With the earlier portions, there is a rule which of two gods should have the first or the second portion. With the last couple, however, the priest may himself assign whichever portion he likes to one or the other god. The commentary says, svayam eva idam asyâ iti saṅkalpayet.

SÔTRA CII.

When there is a number of Karus and Puroḍâsas, one separates what belongs to the Karus and what belongs to the Puroḍâsas, before the strewing.

Commentary.

Prâg adhvapanât, before the strewing, is explained by prâg adhvapanârthakṛishṇâginâdânât, before one takes the black skin which is used for the strewing.

SÔTRA CIII.

One then marks the two (the materials for the Karus and the Puroḍâsas) according to the deities (for whom they are intended).

SÔTRA CIV.

Let the word idam be the rule.

Commentary.

This means that the offering (havis) intended for each deity should be pointed out by the words idam, this, Agneḥ, is for Agni, &c. Thus we read with regard to the offerings intended for certain gods and goddesses: idam Dhâtur, idam Anumatyâ, Râkâyâḥ Sinîvâlyâḥ, Kuhvâḥ.

SÔTRA CV.

All this applies also to Karus and Purodâsas which are separated.

Commentary.

The commentary explains vyatishikta by anyonyam vyavahita, though it is difficult to see how it can have that meaning. It is said that in the Vaisvadeva the Karus and Purodâsas are vyatishikta, but that they also have to be divided before the adhivapana, and to be marked for each deity. Thus we read: Idam Agneḥ, Savituḥ, Pûshno, Marutâm, Dyâvâprithivyoḥ, &c.

SÔTRA CVI.

At the time when the Kapâlas are put on the fire, one puts on the karu with the first kapâla verse.

Commentary.

Karu is here used for the vessel for boiling the karu, the karusthâlî. The first of these verses is dhrishṭir asi. Kapâlas are the jars in which the rice is cooked.

SÔTRA CVII.

The verse is adapted and changed to dhruvoḥ si.

Commentary.

Samnâma means the same as ûha, i. e. the modification of a verse so as to adapt it to the object for which it is used. In our case, karu, being a masculine, dhrishṭi, a feminine, is replaced by dhruva, a masculine.

SÔTRA CVIII.

At the time when the meal is to be cleansed, one cleanses the grains.

Commentary.

This takes place after the karu-pot has been put on. The tandulas are the unhusked grains, pishṭa is the ground flour. In Sanskrit a distinction is made between sasya, the corn in the field, dhânya, corn with the husk, tandula, grains without husks, anna, roasted grains.

SÔTRA CIX.

At the time of cooking (adhisrapana) one throws the grains in with the cooking verse.

Commentary.

This verse is gharmo-si.

SÔTRA CX.

Without taking the karu (out of the sthâli) one puts it down.

SÔTRA CXI.

At the Darsa-pûrnamâsa sacrifices there are fifteen Sâmidhenis.

Commentary.

Sâmidhenis are particular verses recited while the fire is being kindled. The first and last verses are repeated thrice, so as to make fifteen in all.

SÔTRA CXII.

At the Ishî and Paśubandha sacrifices there are seventeen Sâmidhenis, when they are so handed down.

SÔTRA CXIII.

When it is said that wishful ishîs are performed in a murmur, this means that the names of the chief deities are pronounced in a murmur (likewise the yâgyâ and anuvâkyâ).

SÔTRA CXIV.

The Darsa-pûrnamâsa sacrifice is the Prakṛiti or norm for all ishîs.

Commentary.

The Sûtras, in describing the performance of certain sacrifices, treat some of them in full detail. These are called prakṛiti. Prakriyante=smin dharmâ iti prakaranam prakṛitih. They form the type of other sacrifices, which are therefore looked upon as mere modifications, vikṛiti, and in describing them those points only are fully described in which they differ from their prakṛiti. A sacrifice which is a vikṛiti, may again become the prakṛiti of another sacrifice. This system is no doubt compendious, but it is not free from difficulty, and, in some cases, from uncertainty. It shows how much system there is in the Indian sacrifices, and how fully and minutely that system must have been elaborated, before it assumed that form in which we find it in the Brâhmanas and Sûtras. It must not be supposed that the sacrifices which serve as prakṛiti, are therefore historically the most ancient.

SÛTRA CXV.

It is also the norm for the Agnîshomîya Pasu, the animal sacrifice for Agnî-Shomau.

SÛTRA CXVI.

And this is the norm for the Savanîya.

SÛTRA CXVII.

And the Savanîya is the norm for the Aikâ-dasinas.

SÛTRA CXVIII.

And the Aikâdasinas are the norm for the Pasuganas.

Commentary.

The rules for the Pasuganas are therefore to be taken over from the Aikâdasinas, the Savanîya, the Agnîshomîya-pasu, and the Darsa-pûrnamâsa, so far as they have been modified in each particular case, and are finally determined by the rules of each Paśugana, as, for instance, the Āditya-paśu.

SŪTRA CXIX.

The Vaisvadeva is the norm for the Varuna-praghâsa, Sâkamedha, and Sira.

Commentary.

The Vaisvadeva, beginning, like the Darsa-pûrnamâsa, with an Āgneya ashṭakapâla, takes certain rules from the Darsa-pûrnamâsa, and transfers these, together with its own, as, for instance, the nine prayâgas, to the Varuna-praghâsa, &c.

SŪTRA CXX.

The Vaisvadevika Ekakapâla is the norm for all Ekakapâlas.

Commentary.

The Ekakapâla is a puroḍâsa cake, baked in one kapâla. It is fully described in the Vaisvadeva, and then becomes the norm of all Ekakapâlas. An ekakapâla cake is not divided.

SŪTRA CXXI.

The Vaisvadevī Āmikshâ is the norm for the Āmikshâs (a preparation of milk).

SŪTRA CXXII.

Here the Vikâra, the modification, is perceived from similarity.

Commentary.

If it has once been laid down that the Darsa-pûrnamâsa is the prakṛiti or norm for all ishṭis, then similarity determines the modification in all details, such as the offerings and the gods to whom offerings are made. Thus Karu, being a vegetable offering, would rank as a vikâra of puroḍâsa, which occurs in the Darsa-pûrnamâsa sacrifice, and is likewise vegetable. Honey and water would be looked upon as most like the Âgya in the Darsa-pûrnamâsa. Âmikshâ, a preparation of milk, would come nearest to the Sâmnaÿya, which is a mixture of sour and sweet milk.

SÛTRA CXXIII.

Offerings for one deity are vikâras of the Âgneya.

Commentary.

In the Darsa-pûrnamâsa, which is the prakṛiti of the ishṭis, the purodâsa for Agni is meant for one deity. Hence all offerings to one deity in the vikṛitis follow the general rules of the Âgneya purodâsa, as described in the Darsa-pûrnamâsa, for instance, the karu for Sûrya, the Dvâdasa-kapâla for Savitṛi.

SÛTRA CXXIV.

Offerings for two deities are vikâras of the Agnîshomîya.

Commentary.

They must, however, be vegetable offerings, because the purodâsa for Agnî-Shomau is a vegetable offering. As an instance, the Âgnâvaishṇava Ekâdasakapâla is quoted. Agnîshomîya has a short a, but the first a in âgnavaishṇava is long.

SÛTRA CXXV.

Offerings for many deities are vikâras also of the Aindrâgna.

Commentary.

The ka in bahudevâtâs ka is explained by the commentary as intended to include the Âgnâvaishṇava also. Any offering intended for more than one deity may be considered as intended for many deities.

SÛTRA CXXVI.

They are optionally vikâras of the Aindrâgna.

Commentary.

Sometimes these two Sūtras are combined into one. The commentator, however, sees in the vā of aindrāgnavikārā vā a deeper meaning. Agnī-Shomau, he says, consists of four, Indrāgni of three syllables. Therefore if the name of more than one deity consists of four syllables, it should be treated as a vikāra of the Agnīshomīya, if of less than four syllables, as a vikāra of the Aindrāgna.

SŪTRA CXXVII.

An exception must be made in the case of the gods of the prakṛiti, as, for instance, the Aindra purodāsa, the Saumya karu.

Commentary.

The exception applies to cases where the offering in a vikṛiti sacrifice is meant for the same principal deities as those of the prakṛiti offering. For instance, in the Darsa-pūṛṇamāsa Agni and Soma are the deities of the Agnīshomīya, Indra and Agni of the Aindrāgna. If then in one of the secondary or vikṛiti sacrifices there occurs an Aindra purodāsa, or a Saumya karu, then the Aindra purodāsa is treated as a vikāra of the Aindrāgna, the Saumya karu as a vikāra of the Agnīshomīya. The Somendra karu also, as its principal deity is Soma, would follow the Agnīshomīya, the Indrāsomīya purodāsa, as its principal deity is Indra, would follow the Aindrāgna.

SŪTRA CXXVIII.

If there is sameness both in the offering and in the deity, then the offering prevails.

Commentary.

If a karu for Pragāpati occurs in a vikṛiti sacrifice, it would follow that, being offered to Pragāpati, it should be offered with murmuring, but, as it is a vegetable offering, it follows the norm of the purodāsa, though the purodāsa is intended for Agni.

SÛTRA CXXIX.

If there is contradiction with regard to the substance and the preparation of an offering, the substance prevails.

Commentary.

A puroḍāsa may be made of vr̥hi, rice, or of n̥ivāra, wild growing rice. The wild rice has to be pounded, but not the good rice. The preparation, however, has to yield in a vikṛiti, the important point being the substance.

SÛTRA CXXX.

If there is contradiction with regard to the substance, the object prevails.

Commentary.

An example makes the meaning of this Sûtra quite clear. Generally the yûpa or sacrificial post for fastening sacrificial animals is made of Khadira wood. But if a post made of wood is not strong enough to hold the animal, then an iron post is to be used, the object being the fastening of the animal, while the material is of less consequence.

SÛTRA CXXXI.

In a Prakṛiti sacrifice there is no Ūha, modification of the mantras.

Commentary.

Certain mantras of the Veda have to be slightly altered, when their application varies. In the normal sacrifices, however, no such alteration takes place.

SÛTRA CXXXII.

In a Vikṛiti sacrifice modification takes place, according to the sense, but not in an arthavâda.

Commentary.

Some mantras remain the same in the Vikṛiti as in the Prakṛiti. Others have to be modified so as to be adapted to anything new that has to be. If, for instance, there is a Purodâsa for Agni in the Prakṛiti, and in its place a Purodâsa for Sûrya in the Vikṛiti, then we must place Sûrya instead of Agni in the dedicatory mantra.

SÔTRA CXXXIII.

When we hear words referring to something else, that is arthavâda.

Commentary.

Arthavâda is generally explained as anything occurring in the Brâhmaṇas which is not vidhi or command. Here, however, it refers to Mantras or passages recited at the sacrifice. We saw how such passages, if they referred to some part of the sacrifice, had to be modified under certain circumstances according to the sense. Here we are told that passages which do not refer to anything special in the sacrifice, are arthavâda and remain unmodified. All this is expressed by the words paravâkyasṛavanât. Vâkya stands for padâni, words, such as are used in the nivâpa-mantra, &c. Some of these words are called samavetârthâni, because they tell of something connected with the performance of the sacrifice, as, for instance, Agnaye gushṭam nirvapâmi, I offer what is acceptable to Agni; others are asamavetârthâni, as, for instance, Devasya tvâ Savituḥ prasave. When such passages which are not connected with some sacrificial act occur (sṛavanât), they naturally remain unaltered.

SÔTRA CXXXIV.

If what is prescribed is absent, a substitute is to be taken according to similarity.

Commentary.

Here we have no longer modification, but substitution (pratinidhi). In cases where anything special that has been prescribed is wanting, a substitute must be chosen, as similar as possible, and producing a similar effect.

According to Mandana's Trikāṇḍa, the degrees of similarity are to be determined in the following order:

Kāryai rūpais tathā parnaiḥ kshīraiḥ pushpaiḥ phalair api,

Gandhai rasaiḥ sadrig grāhyam pūrvālābhe param param.

‘What is similar by effect, by shape, by leaves, by milk, by flowers, and by fruit, By smell, or by taste is to be taken one after the other, if the former cannot be found.’

SÛTRA CXXXV.

If there is nothing very like, something a little like may be substituted, only it must not be prohibited.

Commentary.

If in a karu of mudgas, kidney-beans, phaseolus mungo, these kidney-beans should fail, a substitute may be taken, but that substitute must not be māshas, phaseolus radiatus, because these māshas are expressly forbidden; for it is said, Ayagñiyā vai māshāḥ, ‘Māshas are not fit for sacrifice.’

SÛTRA CXXXVI.

The substitute should take the nature of that for which it is substituted.

Commentary.

Taddharma, having the same qualities. If, for instance, nīvāra has been substituted for vrīhi, it should be treated as if it were vrīhi. The name vrīhi should remain, and should not be replaced by nīvāra, just as Soma, if replaced by pūtikā, is still called Soma. Thus, when in the course of a sacrifice vrīhi has once been replaced by nīvāra, and vrīhi can be procured afterwards, yet nīvāra is then to be retained to the end. If, however, the substituted nīvāra also come to an end, and afterwards both nīvāra and vrīhi are forthcoming, then vrīhi has the preference. If neither be forthcoming, then some substitute is to be taken that approaches nearest to the substitute, the nīvāra, not to the original vr̥hi. Further, if a choice has been allowed between vr̥hi, rice, and yava, barley, and vr̥hi has been chosen, and afterwards, as substitute for vr̥hi, nīvāra, then, if nīvāra come to an end, and in the absence of vr̥hi, when a new supply of both nīvāra and yava has been obtained, the yava is to be avoided, and the original substitute for vr̥hi, the nīvāra, must be retained. In most of these cases, however, a certain penance also (prāyaścitta) is required.

SŪTRA CXXXVII.

If something is wanting in the measure, let him finish with the rest.

Commentary.

If it is said that a puroḍāsa should be as large as a horse's hoof, and there is not quite so much left, yet whatever is left should be used to finish the offering.

SŪTRA CXXXVIII.

Substitution does not apply to the master, the altar-fire, the deity, the word, the act, and a prohibition.

Commentary.

The master is meant for the sacrificer himself and his wife. Their place cannot, of course, be taken by anybody else. The altar-fire is supposed to have a supernatural power, and cannot be replaced by any other fire. Nothing can take the place of the invoked deities, nor of the words used in the mantras addressed to them, nor can the sacrifice itself be replaced by any other act. Lastly, when it is said that māshas, varakas, kodravas are not fit for sacrifice, or that a man ought not to sacrifice with what should not be eaten by Āryas, nothing else can be substituted for what is thus prohibited.

SŪTRA CXXXIX.

The Prakṛiti stops from three causes, from a corollary, from a prohibition, and from loss of purpose.

Commentary.

A corollary (pratyâmnâna) occurs, when it is said, 'instead of Kusa grass, let him make a barhis of reeds.' A prohibition (pratishedha) occurs, when it is said, 'he does not choose an Ârsheya.' Loss of purpose (arthalopa) occurs, when peshana, pounding, would refer to kharu, a pulse, that cannot be pounded, while grains can be.

SÔTRA CXL.

The Agnishôma is the Prakṛiti of the Ekâha sacrifices.

Commentary.

The Ekâha are sacrifices accomplished in one day.

SÔTRA CXLI.

The Dvâdasâha is the Prakṛiti of the Aharganas.

Commentary.

The Dvâdasâha lasts twelve days and is a Soma sacrifice. It is either an Ahîna or a Sattrâ. An Ahargana is a series of daily and nightly sacrifices. Those which last from two nights to eleven nights are called Ahîna. Those which last from thirteen to one hundred nights or more are called Sattras.

SÔTRA CXLII.

The Gavâmayana is the Prakṛiti of the Sâm-vatsarikas.

Commentary.

The Gavâmayana lasts three years, and it is the type of all Sâm-vatsarika sacrifices, whether they last one, two, three or more years. They all belong to the class of Sattras.

SÔTRA CXLIII.

Of the Nikâyi sacrifices the first serves as Prakṛiti.

Commentary.

Among the Nikāyi sacrifices, lit. those which consist of a number, all having the same name, but different rewards, the first is the prakṛiti of the subsequent ones. The commentator calls them sādyaaskra &c., and mentions as the first the Agnishōma. See Sūtra CXLVI, and Weber, Ind. Stud. XIII, p. 218.

SŪTRA CXLIV.

At the Agnishōma there is the Uttara-vedi.

Commentary.

The commentator explains this by saying that at the Soma sacrifices, i. e. at the Agnishōma, Ukthya, Shoḍasin, and Atirātra, the fire is carried from the Āhavanīya to the Uttara-vedi, which is also called the Soma altar.

SŪTRA CXLV.

The fire is valid for the successive sacrifices.

Commentary.

This fire refers to the fire on the Uttara-vedi, mentioned in the preceding Sūtra, and the object of the Sūtra seems to be to include the act of lighting the fire on the Uttara-vedi in the Prakṛiti, though properly speaking it does not form part of the Agnishōma. But I cannot quite understand the argument of the commentator.

SŪTRA CXLVI.

This does not apply to the Sādyaaskras, the Vāgapeya, the Shoḍasin, and the Sārasvata Sattra.

Commentary.

With regard to the Shoḍasin and its vikāra, the Vāgapeya, the laying of the fire is not mentioned. In the case of the Sādyaaskras, it becomes impossible, because they have to be quickly finished. In the case of the Sārasvata Sattra, there is the same difficulty on account of not remaining in the same place (anavasthāpān nāgnis kīyate).

SÔTRA CXLVII.

A sacrificer wishes the object of his sacrifice at the beginning of the sacrifice.

Commentary.

Some MSS. read kâmayeta, 'he should wish,' but the commentator explains that such a command (vidhi) is unnecessary, because it is natural to form a wish (svataḥ siddhatvât).

SÔTRA CXLVIII.

At the beginning of a special part of the sacrifice, one should wish the object of that part of the sacrifice.

Commentary.

The commentary, though objecting, and objecting rightly, to kâmayeta, 'he should wish,' in the preceding Sôtra, accepts kâmayeta as determining the present Sôtra, saying kâmayetety anuvartate. One should read yagñâṅgakâmam, not yagñakâmam, for the commentary explains it by yagñâṅgaphalasaṅkalpaḥ. Whether it was really intended that there should be a special wish for each part or subsidiary act of a sacrifice (yagñâṅga), is another question, but the commentator evidently thought so.

Kâtyâyana, who treats the same subject (1, 2, 10 seq.), states that there should be this desire for a reward for certain sacrifices which are offered for a certain purpose, as, for instance, the Dvâdasâha, but that there are no such motives for other sacrifices, and parts of sacrifices. He mentions, first of all, a niyama, a precept for the sacrifice, such as 'Speak the truth.' Then a nimitta, a special cause, as when some accident has taken place that must be remedied, for instance, when the house has been burnt down, &c. Thirdly, the Agnihotra, the morning and evening Homa; fourthly, the Darsa-pûrnamâsau; fifthly, the Dâkshâyana, a vikrîti of the Darsa-pûrnamâsau, the Âgrayana; sixthly, the Nirûdha-pasu, the animal sacrifice. All these have to be performed as a sacred duty, and without any view to special rewards. Thus we read in Vāsishṭha :

Avasyam brāhmaṇo-gnīn ādadhīta, darsapūrṇamāsāgrayaneshṭikāturmāsyaparusomais ka yageta, 'A Brāhmaṇa should without fail place his fires, and offer the Darsapūrṇamāsa, the Āgrayaneshṭi, the Kāturmāsyas, the Paśu, and the Soma sacrifices.'

Hārīta says: Pākayagñān yagen nityam haviryagñāms ka nityasaḥ, Somāms ka vidhipūrvena ya ikkheḍ dharmam avyayam, 'Let a man offer the Pākayagñas always, always also the Haviryagñas, and the Soma sacrifices, according to rule, if he wishes for eternal merit.' The object of these sacrifices is aparimitaniḥsreyasarūpamoksha, eternal happiness, and hence they have to be performed during life at certain seasons, without any special occasion (nimitta), and without any special object (kāma). According to most authorities, however, they have to be performed during thirty years only. After that the Agnihotra only has to be kept up. The proper seasons for these sacrifices are given by Manu, IV, 25-27 :

'A Brāhmaṇa shall always offer the Agnihotra at the beginning or at the end of the day and of the night, and the Darsa and Paurṇamāsa (ishṭis) at the end of each half-month ;

'When the old grain has been consumed the (Āgrayana) Ishṭi with new grain ; at the end of the (three) seasons the (Kāturmāsyas) sacrifices ; at the solstices an animal (sacrifice) ; at the end of the year Soma offerings ;

'A Brāhmaṇa, who keeps sacred fires, shall, if he desires to live long, not eat new grain or meat, without having offered the (Āgrayana) Ishṭi with new grain and an animal (sacrifice)¹.'

These Pākayagñas, Haviryagñas or ishṭis, and Soma sacrifices are enumerated by *Gautama*², as follows :

¹ See Manu, transl. by Bühler, S. B. E., XXV, who quotes to the same purpose Gaut. VIII, 19-20 ; Vās. XI, 46 ; Vi. LIX, 2-9 ; Baudh. II, 4, 23 ; Yāgyñ. I, 97, 124-125.

² Kātyāyana, p. 34.

Seven Pâkasamsthâs :	Seven Haviryagñasamsthâs :	Seven Somasamsthâs :
(1) Ashvakâ,	(1) Agnyâdheyam,	(1) Agnish/omañ,
(2) Pârvanam,	(2) Agnihotram,	(2) Atyagnish/omañ,
(3) Srâddham,	(3) Darsapûrnamâsau,	(3) Ukthyañ,
(4) Srâvani,	(4) Kâturmâsyâni ¹ ,	(4) Shodasî ² ,
(5) Âgrahâyanî,	(5) Âgrayaneshñ,	(5) Vâgapeyañ,
(6) Kairî,	(6) Nirûdhaparubandhañ,	(6) Atirâtrañ,
(7) Âsvayugî.	(7) Sautrâmanî.	(7) Aptoryâmañ.

In a commentary on Dhûrtasvâmin's Âpastambasûtra-bhâshya (MS. E. I. H. 137) another list is given :

Pâkayagñas :	Haviryagñas :	Somayagñas :
(1) Apûâsanahomañ,	Agnihotram,	Agnish/omañ,
(2) Vairvadevam,	Darsapûrnamâsau,	Atyagnish/omañ,
(3) Pârvanam,	Âgrayanam,	Ukthyañ,
(4) Ashvakâ,	Kâturmâsyâni,	Shodasî,
(5) Mâsîrâddham,	Nirûdhaparubandhañ,	Vâgapeyañ,
(6) Sarpabaliñ,	Sautrâmanî,	Atirâtrañ,
(7) Îsânabaliñ.	Pindapitriyagñañ.	Aptoryâmañ.

This list is nearly the same as one given by Satyavrata Sââmâsrami in the Ushâ. He gives, however, another list, which is :

Seven Pâkasamsthâs :	Seven Havihsamsthâs :	Seven Somasamsthâs :
(1) Sâyamhomañ,	Agnyâdheyam,	Agnish/omañ,
(2) Prâtarhomañ,	Agnihotram,	Atyagnish/omañ,
(3) Shâlipâka,	Darsa-	Ukthyañ,
(4) Navayagñañ,	Paurnamâsau,	Shodasî,
(5) Vairvadevam,	Âgrayana,	Vâgapeyañ,
(6) Pitriyagñañ,	Kâturmâsyâni,	Atirâtrañ,
(7) Ashvakâ.	Parubandhañ.	Aptoryâmañ.

According to the substances offered, sacrifices are sometimes divided into vegetable and animal sacrifices. The vegetable substances are, tanūlāḥ, pishṭāni, phalīkaraṇāḥ, puroḍāśaḥ, odanaḥ, yavâgûḥ, prithukâḥ, lâgâḥ, dhânâḥ, and aktavaḥ. The animal substances are, payāḥ, dadhi, âgyam, âmikshâ, vâginam, vapâ, tvakâḥ, mâmsam, lohitam, and pasurasaḥ.

¹ Vairvadevam parva, Varunapraghâsâñ, sâkamedhâñ.

² Agnish/oma, Ukthya, Atirâtra, sometimes Shodasin, are the original Soma sacrifices; Atyagnish/oma, Vâgapeya, and Aptoryâma are later. See Weber, Ind. Stud. X, pp. 352, 391.

SŪTRA CXLIX.

If there are fewer Mantras and more (sacrificial) acts, then after dividing them into equal parts, let him perform the former with the former, the latter with the latter.

Commentary.

It happens, for instance, in certain ishṭis that a pair of Yâgyâ and Anuvâkyâ mantras is given, but six acts. In that case one half of the mantras is used for one half of the acts, and the other half of the mantras for the other half of the acts.

SŪTRA CL.

If there are fewer acts and more Mantras, let him perform and act with one mantra, those which remain are optional, as the materials for the sacrificial post.

Commentary.

Kapardisvâmin seems to have divided this Sûtra into three, the second being avasishṭâ vikalpârthâḥ, the third yathâ yûpadravyâniti. But it is better to take it as one, as it is in MS. 1676.

If there are, for instance, fourteen vapanas, while there are many more mantras, let him select fourteen mantras and use them for each vapana, while the rest will be useful for another performance. A similar case occurs when different kinds of wood are recommended for making the sacrificial post, or when rice or barley are recommended for an offering. Here a choice has to be made. The iti at the end is explained as showing that there are other instances of the same kind.

SŪTRA CLI.

From the end there takes place omission or addition.

Commentary.

This refers again to the same subject, namely what has to be done if there are either more or less mantras than there are acts which they are to accompany. In that case it is here allowed to use as many mantras as there are acts, and to drop the rest of the mantras. Or, if there are less mantras than there are acts, then, after the mantras have been equally divided, the last verse is to be multiplied. For instance, in the Dvikapāla sacrifice for the two Asvins, the placing of the two kapālas is accompanied by two mantras. The rest of the mantras enjoined in the prakṛiti is left out. But if there are, for instance, twelve or more ishṭakās, bricks, to be placed, while there are only ten mantras, then the mantras are equally divided, and the fifth and tenth to be repeated, as many times as is necessary to equal the number of the ishṭakās.

SŪTRA CLII.

As the Prakṛiti has been told before, anything that has not been told before, should be at the end.

Commentary.

This seems to mean that anything new, peculiar to a Vikṛiti, and not mentioned in the Prakṛiti, should come in at the end, that is, after those portions of the sacrifice which are enjoined in the Prakṛiti.

SŪTRA CLIII.

The rule should stand on account of the fitness of the Kumbhī, a large pot, the Sūla, the spit for boiling the heart, and the two Vapâsrapanīs, the spits for roasting the vapâ.

Commentary.

Kumbhī is explained by sronyâdipâkasamarthā brīhatī sthālī; Sūla by hṛidayapākārthā yashīh, and Vapāsrapanī by vapāsrapanārthe yashī dve. The exact object of the Sūtra is not quite clear. Prabhutva is explained by samarthatva, that is, fitness. This would mean, that on account of their fitness, or because they can be used for the object for which they are intended, or, so long as they can be used, the rule applying to them should remain. The commentary explains tantram by tantratā or ekatā. It may mean that the same pots and spits should be used, so long as they fulfil their purpose. The next Sūtra would then form a natural limitation.

SŪTRA CLIV.

But if there is a different kind of animal, there is difference (in pots and spits), owing to the diversity of cooking.

Commentary.

If different animals are to be cooked, then there must be different pots for each (pratipasuṃ), because each requires a different kind of cooking. The commentary adds that, as the reason for using different pots is given, that reason applies also to young and old animals of the same kind (gāti), i. e. the young and small animal would require a different pot and a different kind of cooking.

SŪTRA CLV.

At the Vanaspati sacrifice, which is a modification (vikāra) of the Svishṭakṛit, the addresses (nigama) of the deities should take place in the Yāgyā, because they are included in the Prakṛiti.

Commentary.

These nigamas of the deities are not mentioned in the rules of the Vanaspati sacrifice, but they are mentioned in the rules for the Svishṭakṛit sacrifice of the Darsapūṛṇamāsa, which is the Prakṛiti, and should therefore be taken over. Here again, because a reason is given, it is understood that the same reason would apply to other portions of Svishṭakṛit also, such as the Dvir abhi-ghâraṇa, which is to be retained in the Vanaspati sacrifice.

SÛTRA CLVI.

The Anvârambhanīyâ or initiatory ceremony does not take place in a Vikṛiti, because the Vikṛitis would fall within the time of the Pra-kṛiti, and the Anvârambhanīyâ has but one object, namely (the initiation of) the Darsa-pûṛnamâsa sacrifice.

Commentary.

The Anvârambhanīyâ ceremony has to be performed by those who begin the Darsa-pûṛnamâsa sacrifice. It has thus one object only, and is never enjoined for any other cause. It is not therefore transferred to any Vikṛiti, such as the Saurya ceremony, &c. The Darsa-pûṛnamâsa sacrifice having to be performed during the whole of life, or during thirty years, the Vikṛitis would necessarily fall within the same space of time. The initiatory ceremony has reference to the Darsa-pûṛnamâsa sacrifice only, and thus serves as an introduction to all the Vikṛitis, without having to be repeated for each.

SÛTRA CLVII.

Or (according to others) the Anvârambhanīyâ should take place (in the Vikṛitis also), because the time (of the Darsa-pûṛnamâsa) does not form an essential part.

Commentary.

This Sûtra is not quite clear. It shows clearly enough that, according to some authorities, the Anvârambhanīyâ or initiatory ceremony of the Darsa-pûṛnamâsa sacrifice should take place in the Vikṛitis also; but why? Because the time has not the character of a śeṣa, which is said to be a synonym of aṅga, an essential part of a sacrifice.

When it is said that the Darsa-pûrnamâsa should be performed during life, this is not meant as determining the time of the sacrifice. It only means that so long as there is life a man should perform these sacrifices, and that their non-performance would constitute a sin. The former argument, therefore, that the time of the Vikṛiti sacrifices would fall within the time of the Prakṛiti sacrifice is not tenable.

SŪTRA CLVIII.

And again, because there is difference in the undertaking.

Commentary.

Ārambha, the beginning, is explained as the determination to perform a certain sacrifice (darsapûrnamâsâbhyām yakshya iti nistayapuraṅsaraḥ saṅkalpaḥ). The object of the undertaking in the case of the Darsa-pûrnamâsa sacrifice, as the Prakṛiti, is simply svarga, in the Vikṛitis it may be any kind of desire. Therefore the Anvârambhanīyâ ceremony of the Darsa-pûrnamâsas should be transferred to its Vikṛitis. This seems to have been the opinion of the same authorities who are referred to in Sūtra CLVII. The final outcome of the whole controversy, however, is clearly that our Ātārya is in favour of omitting the Anvârambhanīyâ in the Vikṛitis. Anayoḥ pakshayor anvârambhanīyâ-bhâvapakshasyaiva balavattvam ātāryâbhilashitam iti manyâmahe. The Anvârambhanīyâ is not to be considered as an ordinary Aṅga, but as a special act to fit the sacrificer to perform the Darsa-pûrnamâsa and to perform it through the whole of his life.

SŪTRA CLIX.

For every object (new sacrifice) let him bring forward the fire (let him perform the Agnipraṇayana, the fetching of the Āhavantya from the Gârhapatya fire). When the sacrifice is finished the fire becomes again ordinary fire, as when the (divine) fire has returned (to the firesticks).

Commentary.

The fire for a sacrifice is supposed to be set apart or consecrated (sâstrîya), but it is so for a special sacrifice only, and when that sacrifice is ended, it is supposed to become like ordinary fire again. Artha is prayoga na, the sacrifice for which the fire is intended (agnisâdhyavihitakarmânushihânām; tasya tasya vihitasya karma no-nushihânârtham gârhapatyâdibhya âhavanîyâdyagnim prarayet). The commentator remarks that there are two Agnis, the one who is visible, the other who is the god. Now while the divine Agni leaves the coals and ascends or is absorbed again in the two firesticks (arāṇī), the other remains like ordinary kitchen fire. See on Samârohana, Weber, Ind. Stud. IX, p. 311; Āsvalâyana-Srauta-sûtra III, 10, 4-5.

INDEX.

- agni, the (sacrificial) fire, Sûtra 55, 92 (Āhavanīya fire), 138, 145, 159; the (three) fires, 22.
- agniprayana, the fetching of the Āhavanīya from the Gârhapatya fire, 159.
- agnishoma, the Agnishoma, a Soma sacrifice, 7, 140, 143°, 144; p. 344.
- agnihotra, the Agnihotra, the morning and evening Homa, 6, 91, 148°; p. 344.
- agnishomīya, intended for Agni and Soma, 74, 78, 115, 124, 126°, 127°.
- agnyâdhâna, the (first) laying of the fires, 22°.
- agnyâdheya, p. 344.
- aṅga, member (of the sacrifice), auxiliary act, 3°, 70°, 71°, 73°, 75, 80 (anaṅga), 83 (sâṅga), 157°, 158°.
- aṅgahīna, cripple, 2°.
- atikram, to pass (the altar), 94.
- atirâtra, a Soma sacrifice, 144°; p. 344.
- atyagnishoma, p. 344.
- atharvaveda, the Atharva-veda, 7°, 19°.
- adhivapana, the strewing, 102, 105°.
- adhirapana, cooking, 109.
- adhirapana-mantra, the cooking verse (gharmosi), 109.
- adhrigu, the Adhrigu hymn (daivyaḥ samitârâb, &c.), 43.
- adhvaryu, the Adhvaryu priest, 18, 24.
- anaṅga, not an Aṅga, 80.
- anâdhyâya, prohibition of reciting, 37.
- anâmnâta, not handed down, 35.
- anirdeśa, without special instruction, 72.
- anumati, a kind of full moon, 65°.
- anumantrana, the Anumantrana-mantras, 8°.
- anuyâga, a certain auxiliary Homa, 75°.
- anuvâkyâ, Mantra used for invocation, 50, 95, (113), 149°.
- antarâ, turned inside, 57.
- antarâ, between (the high and the low tone), 11.
- anna, roasted grains, 108°.
- anvârambhanīyâ, initiatory ceremony, 156, 157°, 158°.
- apa~~tt~~bid, to slice off (the cake), 99.
- apaparyâvrit, to turn away from, 55.
- aparena, west, 92, 94.
- apûrva, standing by itself, 85; what has not been told before, 152.
- aptoryâma, p. 344.
- apratishiddha, not prohibited, 135.
- abhighârana, sprinkling with fat, 95.
- abhimantrana, the Abhimantrana-mantras, 8°.
- amantra, not to be classed as Mantras, 35.
- amâvâsyâ, new moon, new-moon day, 63, 65°, 68; new-moon sacrifice, 63, 76.
- amedhyapratimantrana, conjuring of unlucky omens, 40.
- ayagñīya, not fit for sacrifice, 135°.
- ayuta, butter when slightly melted, 23°.
- artha, object, 130, 159.
- arthanirvṛitti, accomplishment of the object, 41.
- arthalopa, loss of purpose, 139.
- arthavâda, explanation, 33; that part of the Mantra which does not refer to anything special in the sacrifice, 132, 133.
- avadâna, the slice or slicing of butter, 90°, 95, 100°.
- avavarshana, down-pour of rain, 40.
- asrotriya, person ignorant of the Veda, 2°.
- ashrakâ, p. 344.
- ashrakapâla, the cake baked in eight cups (at the full-moon and new-moon sacrifices), 74, 76.

- asannipâtin, not producing an immediate effect, 42.
 asamavetârtha, words (of a Mantra) not connected with the sacrifice, 133°.
 asomayâgin, one who does not sacrifice with Soma, 76, 78.
 astamitoditâ=râkâ, 65°.
 astu=ayuta, 23°.
 ahargana, a series of daily and nightly sacrifices, 141.
 ahîna, a series of sacrifices lasting from two nights to eleven nights (opp. sattra), 141°.
 âgnâvaishnava, for Agni and Vishnu, 124°, 125°.
 âgneya, intended for Agni, 74, 76, 123.
 âgrayana, the Âgrayaneshri, sacrifice with the new grain, 148°; p. 344.
 âgrahâyanî, p. 344.
 âghâra, sprinkling of clarified butter, 46.
 ât, to bend (one's knee), 92.
 âgya, melted butter, 23, 122°.
 âgyabhâgau, the Âgya-portions, 12.
 âtmâbhimarsana, rubbing oneself, 53.
 âdipradishra, indicated by the first words (Mantras), 47.
 âdhâna, the laying of the fires, 28.
 âmikshâ, a preparation of milk, 121, 122°.
 ârambha, the undertaking (of a sacrifice), 158.
 ârtvigya, the priestly office, 21.
 âvap, to throw (the grains) in, 109.
 âvritti, repetition, 43.
 âveshi, to tie (ropes), 61.
 âsruta, address, 10, 95.
 âsvayugî, p. 344.
 âsîna, sitting, 92.
 âhavanîya, the Âhavanîya fire (the grandson), 22°, 27, 94, 144°.
 âhuti, the offering at a Darvihoma, 94, 96, 89.
 idamabda, the word idam (to be used for assigning the havis to each deity), 104.
 indrâsomîya, intended for Indra and Soma, 127°.
 ishrakâ, brick (for building the altar, &c.), 98, 151°.
 ishri=yagñâ, sacrifice, 1°, 112, 113 (kâmyâ ishrayab), 114, 122°, 123°.
 îânabali, p. 344.
 îshatsadrisa, a little like, 135.
 ukthya, a Soma sacrifice, 144°; p. 344.
 uktaib, with a loud voice, 8, 12°.
 utkara, heap of rubbish, 54°.
 uttama, highest tone, 11°.
 uttara, successive, 145.
 uttarata-upâtâra, on the northern side of which the performances take place, 54.
 uttaravedi, the Soma altar, 144, 145°.
 Uttarâ-amâvâsyâ=Kuhû, 65°.
 Uttarâ-paurnamâsî=Râkâ, 65°.
 utpavana, cleansing, 108.
 utpû, to cleanse (the grains), 108.
 udagapavarga, performed towards the north, 59.
 udagâvritta, turning to the north 94.
 udgâtri, the Udgâtri priest, 17.
 upâtâra, priestly performance, 54.
 upadhâ, to put on the fire, 106.
 upadhâna, putting on the fire, 106.
 upabandha, belonging to, 155.
 upayâma, the Upayâma, the words upayâmagrîhîto-si, 97.
 upavas, to abstain, 65.
 upavâsa, abstaining from meat, &c., 66°.
 upastarana, spreading of fat, 95.
 upaspriś (apab), to touch water, 53.
 upâmsu, by murmuring, 9, 11°, 113.
 upâmsuyûga, the muttered offering of butter (at the full-moon sacrifice), 74.
 ūha, substitution of one word for another in a Mantra, 35, 107°, 131, 132.
 rigveda, the Rig-veda, 4, 5, 8, 9°, 16.
 ekakapâla, a puroḍâsa cake baked in one cup, 120.
 ekadevatâ, offering for one deity, 123.
 ekaprakarana, one (typical) performance, 70.
 ekamantra, accompanied by one Mantra, 38.

ekâdāśakapāla, cake baked in eleven cups (at the full-moon and new-moon sacrifices), 74, 76, 124°.
ekāha, sacrifice accomplished in one day, 140.

aikādasina, the Aikādasinas, 117, 118.
aindra, intended for Indra, 127.
aindrāgna, intended for Indra and Agni, 76, 79, 125, 126, 127°.

autsargika (vidhi), general (rule), 93°.
*aupāsana*homa, p. 344.

kandūyana, rubbing, 40.
kapāla, jar in which the rice is cooked, 106.
*kapāla*mantra, verse used for the Kapāla, 106.
kartri, the performer, 24, 57, 84.
karmatodanā, precept for the sacrifice, 32.

karman, sacrifice, sacrificial act, 37, 38, 44, 45 (karmādi), 59 (daivāni karmāni), 138, 149, 150, 159.
kāma, object, 147, 148.
kāmay, to wish, 147.

kāmya, wishful, 113 (kāmyā ishaya).

kāla, time, 80, 84, 157.
kumbhī, a large pot, 153.
Kuhū, the new moon on the first day of the lunar phase, 65°, 68°.
krishnāgina, black skin used for the strewing (adhivapana), 102°.
kratu, sacrifice, 22, 145, 147 (kratvādau).

kratukāma, object of the sacrifice, 147.

kraya, buying (of Soma), 52.
krushra, sharp voice, high tone, 11°, 14.
krauñka, high tone, 11°.
kshīnā = kharvikā, 67°.

kharvikā, the Kharvikā full moon, 67.

gavāmayana, 142.
gārhapatya, the Gārhapatya fire (the father), 22°.
gārhya (nāman), the domestic name, 35°.

grah, to take (the butter), 88, 89.
graha, offering of Soma, also Soma vessel, 97.

ghrīta, butter when hardened, 23°.

katurgṛhīta, the taking four times, 95.

katurdaśyuktā, the full moon beginning on the fourteenth day, 65°.

kandramas, moon, 65.

karu, a pulse consisting of grains of rice or barley, and clarified butter, 99°, 102, (103, 105), 110, 122°, 123°, 127, 128°.

karu = karusthālī, 106, 108°.

karupurodaśiya, belonging to the Karus and Purodāśas, 102.

karusthālī, vessel for boiling the karu, 106°, (110).

kāturmāsya, one of the seven Haviryagñas, 7°, 148°; p. 344.

kātvāla, a hole in the ground for the sacrifices, 54°.

keshapṛithaktvanirvartin, to be carried out by separate (repeated) acts, 39.

kaitrī, p. 344.

kodanā, precept, 32, 86.

kbedana, cutting, 53.

gapa, the Gapa-mantras, 8°.

gātibheda, difference of the kind (of animal), 154.

gānu, knee, 92.

guhū, spoon, 25, 26°.

guhōti, see hu.

guhōtikodana, ordered by the word guhōti, he pours out, 86.

tandula, grain, 108, 109.

taddharma, having the same qualities, 136.

tantra, rule, 104, 153. See prati-tantram.

tayā-deva-tena, the words for placing the bricks together, 98.

tāra, high tone, 11°.

tulyavat, like, 81.

trītiyasavana, the third oblation of Soma, 14.

dakshina, the Dakshina fire (the son), 22°.

dakshina, right, 92 (gānu).

dakshina, southward, 94.

dakshināpavarga, towards the south, 60.

- darvihoma, libation from a ladle, 85, (86 to 91), 92, 95.
- darsapūrnāmāsau, the new and full-moon sacrifices, 5, 7°, 14°, 111, 114, 122°, 123°, 127°, 148°, 155° to 158°; p. 344.
- dākshāyana, 148°.
- dundubhisabda, the sound of a drum, 36.
- devatā, deity, 128, 138.
- devatānigama, address of the deity, 155.
- devatopadesana, indication of the deity, 101.
- dera, place, 84.
- daiva, intended for the gods (karma), 59.
- dravya, substance (of an offering), 129, 130.
- dravyasamukāya, accumulation, 52.
- dvādarakapāla, the cake baked in twelve cups (at the new-moon sacrifice), 76, 123°.
- dvādarāha, a Soma sacrifice lasting twelve days, 141.
- dvikapāla, a cake baked in two cups, sacrifice for the two Āsvins, 151°.
- dvidevatā, offering for two deities, 124.
- dhānya, corn with the husk, 108°.
- dhārā, pouring out of Soma, 46.
- nadītarana, crossing a river, 40.
- navanīta, fresh butter, 23°.
- navayagñā, p. 344.
- nāmadheyagrahana, the mentioning of the name (of particular sacrificers), 35.
- nikāyin, a series of sacrifices, all having the same name, but different rewards, 143.
- nigama, address, 155.
- nindā, reproach, 33.
- nimitta, special cause, 148°.
- niyama, precept, 148°.
- nirasana, throwing away, 53.
- nirūdbapasu, the animal sacrifice, 148°; p. 344.
- nirdiś, to prescribe with special reference to, 84.
- nirdeśa, special instruction, 73. See anirdeśa.
- nivṛit, to stop, to cease to apply, 138, 139.
- Nishādasthapati, a Nishāda chieftain, 2°.
- nīvāra, wild growing rice, 129°, 136°.
- nairrita, offering to Nirriti, 53.
- pakti, cooking, 154.
- parakṛiti, story, 33.
- paravākya, words referring to something else, 133.
- parikraya, redemption, 52.
- parva-sandhi, the juncture of the two phases of the moon, 65°.
- pasu, animal sacrifice, 7°, 115.
- pasugana, 118.
- pasubandha, Pasubandha sacrifice, 112; p. 344.
- pākayagñā, domestic sacrifices, 148°; p. 344.
- pātra, sacrificial vessel, 25, 28.
- pārvaṇa, p. 344.
- pindapitriyagñā, the sacrifice to the Fathers, 80°; p. 344.
- pitri-yagñā, sacrifice to the Fathers, 80; p. 344.
- pitrya, intended for the Fathers, 60.
- pishṭa, pl., meal, 108.
- purastāt, before, 65.
- purastātpaurṇamāsī, the full moon beginning on the fourteenth day, 65°.
- purākalpa, tradition, 33.
- puroḍāsa, cake made of meal, 78, 99, 102, (103, 105), 122°, 123°, 124°, 127, 128°, 129°, 137°.
- puronuvākya, the Puronuvākya hymn (preceding the Yāgya, following after the Sampraisha), 43.
- pūrita, full (the moon), 66.
- pūrṇa, full (the moon), 65.
- pūrvā-amāvāsya, the new moon on the fourteenth day, 65°.
- pūrvā-paurṇamāsī = purastātpaurṇamāsī, 65°.
- paitrika, offering to the Pitris, 53.
- paurṇamāsī, full moon, full-moon day, 64, 65, 74.
- paurṇamāsya, full-moon sacrifice, 64.
- prakarana, typical performance, 70°, 71.
- prakṛiti, norm (for a sacrifice), 114, 122°, 123°, 127°, 131, 132°, 139, 140, 152, 155, 156, 157°, 158°.
- prakṛitidevatā, the deity of the prakṛiti, 127.
- prañī, to bring forward (the fire), 159.

pratitantram, at every sacrifice, 29.
 pratinidhâ, to substitute, 135.
 pratinidhi, substitute, 134, 138.
 pratipad, the first day of the lunar phase, 65°.
 pratimantrana, conjuring, 40.
 pratimantram, each (act) with one Mantra, 150.
 pratishidh, to bar, 82.
 pratishedha, prohibition, 138, 139.
 pratika, first words of a verse, 47°.
 pratyâmnâna, corollary, 139.
 pratyâruta, reply, 10, 95.
 pratyâhuti, for each Âhuti, 89.
 pradakshinam, turning towards the right, from left to right, 59, 61, 62.
 pradâna, offering, 87.
 pradhâna, principal act, 70, 74, 80°, 83, 113 (the name of the chief deities).
 prabhutva, fitness, 153.
 pramâna, rule, 30.
 prayâga, a certain auxiliary Homa, 75°.
 prayâna, journey, 41.
 pravara, the words used in choosing priests, 10, 35.
 prarâmsâ, praise, 33.
 prasamkhyâna, the being enumerated, 81.
 prasavyam, turning towards the left, from right to left, 60, 61.
 prâgapavarga, performed towards the east, 59.
 prâtinâvîtin, with the Brahmanic cord over the right and under the left arm, 60.
 prâtasavana, the morning-oblation of Soma, 12.
 prâtarhoma, p. 344.
 prâyaskitta, penance, 136°.
 bahudevâtâ, offering for many deities, 125.
 bahumantra, accompanied by many hymns, 44.
 Brîdhu = Brîbu, 2°.
 Brîbu, 2°.
 brahman, the Brahma-priest, 19.
 brâhmana, m., the Brâhmana (caste), 2, 21, 78.
 brâhmana, n., the Brâhmanas (sacred books), 30, 31, 32, 33.

bhedana, breaking, 53.
 madhyama, middle tone, 11°, 13.
 manotâ, the Manotâ hymn (tvaṃ hy agne prathamō manotâ, &c.), 43.
 mantra, verse, 30, 31, 34, 37, 44°, 45 (mantrânta), (46), 47, 107 (mantram samnamati), 133°, 149, 150, 151°. See ekamantra, bahumantra.
 mantravat, hallowed by a Mantra, 58.
 mandra, soft tone, 11°, 12.
 mâtârapâtâra, wanting of the measure, 137.
 mādhyandina, the midday-oblation of Soma, 13.
 mâsha, phaseolus radiatus, 135°.
 mâsîrâddha, p. 344.
 mudga, kidney bean, phaseolus mungo, 135°.
 moksha, eternal happiness, 148°.
 yag, to sacrifice, 63, 64, 87°.
 yagana = yagña, 1°.
 yagurveda, the Yagur-veda, 4, 5, 6, 8°, 9, 18.
 yagña, sacrifice, 1, 30, 54°.
 yagñânga, sacrificial utensil, 57, 58.
 yagñânga, special part of a sacrifice, 148.
 yagñâṅgakâma, object of part of a sacrifice, 148.
 yagñopavîtin, with the Brahmanic cord over the left and under the right arm, 59.
 yathâdevatam, according to the deities, 103.
 yathâbhâgam, for each portion, 99, 100.
 yathârtham, according to the sense, 132.
 yava, barley, 136°.
 yâga = yagña, 1°.
 yâgamânâ, Mantra recited by the sacrificer himself, 49.
 yâgyâ, Mantra used with the oblation, 43°, 50, 95, (113), 149°, 155.
 yûpa, the sacrificial post for fastening the animal, 130°.
 yûpadravya, material for the sacrificial post, 150.
 rathakâra, chariot-maker, or name of a clan, 2°.

bhid, bhidyate, there is difference, 154.

rathasabda, the sound of a carriage, 36.

Rākā, the full moon on the first day of the lunar phase, 65°.

rākshasa, offering to the Rākshasas, 53.

rāganya, the Rāganya (caste), 2.

raudra, offering to Rudra, 53.

lopa, omission, 151.

laukika (agni), ordinary (fire), 159.

vaṭana, the saying expressly, 20, 44, 93.

vanaspati, the Vanaspati sacrifice, 155.

vapārapaṇi, the two spits for roasting the omentum (vapā), 153.

varunapraghāsa, a certain sacrifice, 119.

varna, colour or caste, 2.

varṇāviśheṣa, without distinction of caste, 79.

vashakāra, the word Vashaḥ (to be uttered by the Hotri-priest), 95, 96.

vashakri, to utter the sacrificial interjection vashaḥ, 96.

vākya, words, 133.

vāksandrava, the movement of the voice, 15.

vāgapeya, a certain Soma sacrifice, 146; p. 344.

vāgasaneyin, pl., the Vāgasaneyins, 67.

vāhya, turned outside, 57.

vikalpa, optional, 50, 150.

vikāra, modification, 122, 123, 124, (125), 126, 127°, 146°, 155.

vikṛiti, modification (of the prakṛiti), 114°, 123°, 127°, 128°, 129°, 132, 152°, 156, 157°, 158°.

vidhāna, rule, prescription, 70 (samānavidhāna), 80 (svakālavidhāna).

vidhi, rule, 71, 93°, 133°, 147°.

vipratishedha, impossibility, 20.

virodha, contradiction, 129, 130.

vivṛiddhi, addition, 151.

vihāra, the sacrificial ground, 54, 56.

veda, the (three) Vedas, 3; Veda = Mantras and Brāhmanas, 31.

vaiśya, the Vaiśya (caste), 2.

vaiśvadeva, sacrifice for the Viśve Devās, 119, 120°, 121; p. 344.

vaiśvadevika, belonging to the Vaiśva deva, 120.

vaishamya, diversity, 154.

vaushaḥ, sacrificial interjection, 96°.

vyatishikta, separated, 105.

vyavasthā, to be restricted, 73.

vyāpṛita, employed elsewhere, 26.

vyāvṛit, to separate, 99, 100.

vṛihi, rice, 129°, 136°.

śabda, word, 138.

śasya, the corn of the field, 108°.

śākhā, recension, 3°.

śāstrīya, consecrated (fire), 159°.

śiṣha, what is prescribed, 134.

śulba, rope, 61.

śūdra, the Śūdra (caste), 2°.

śūla, spit for boiling the heart (of the sacrificial animal), 153.

śeṣa, essential part, 157.

śrāddha, p. 344.

śrāvaṇi, p. 344.

śraushaḥ, sacrificial interjection, 96°.

śvabpūritā = Rākā, 65°.

śvoyuktā = Kuhlī, 65°, 69°.

śanda, eunuch, 2°.

śodasin, a certain Soma sacrifice, 144°, 146; p. 344.

samvāda, dialogue, 10.

samskāra, purification, 29; preparation (of an offering), 129.

samskāra, initiation, 52.

sāṅkhyā, number, 51.

sāṅkhyāyukta, having a number, 39.

samkara, path between the Kātvala and Utkara, 54°.

sattra, a series of sacrifices lasting from thirteen to one hundred nights or more (opp. ahina), 141°, 142°, 146°.

sadyaskālā, name of the Kharvikā full moon and the corresponding day of abstinence, 67°.

sandhyā-paurṇamāsī = purastātpaurṇamāsī, 65°.

samnam, to adapt and change (a verse), 107.

samṇāma = ūha, modification of a verse, 107°.

samnīpat, Caus., to let coincide, 45, 96.

samni, to offer the Sāmṇāya, 79.

samavadyo, to divide (the butter), 90.

- samavetârtha, words (of a Mantra) connected with the sacrifice, 133°.
- samas, to join (ropes), 61, 62.
- samânavidhâna, having the same rule, 70.
- samâruh, to return (to the firesticks, the divine fire), 159.
- samâsa, joining, 61 (°am gakkbanti, they have to be joined).
- samidh, fuel, 91.
- samuktaya, aggregation, 49, 52.
- sampraisha, command, 10, 43°.
- sarpabali, p. 344.
- sarpis, Adj., running, in sarpir âgya, melted butter, 23.
- savanîya, the Soma sacrifice, 116, 117.
- sâmvatsarika, a sacrifice lasting one, two, or more years, 142.
- sâkamedha, a certain sacrifice, 119.
- sânga, accompanied by auxiliary acts, 83.
- sâdyaskra, 143°, 146.
- sâdhârana, general, 72.
- sâmnâyya, the mixture (of sour and sweet milk, intended for Indra and Mahendra, at the new-moon sacrifice), 77, 79°, 100°, 122°.
- sâmaveda, the Sâma-veda, 4, 8, 9°, 17.
- sâmânya, similarity, 122, 128, 134.
- sâmidhenî, the hymns or verses used for lighting the fire, 11, 111.
- sâyamhoma, p. 344.
- sârasvata (sattra), 146.
- Sinîvâlî = pûrvâ-amâvâsyâ, 65°, 69°.
- sîra, a certain sacrifice, 119.
- susadrîsa, very like, 135.
- somayâgin, one who sacrifices with Soma, 77, 79°.
- somasamsthâ, Soma sacrifices, 148°; p. 344.
- somendratârû, the târû intended for Soma and Indra, 127.
- sautrâmanî, p. 344.
- Saudhanvanas, 2°.
- saumya, intended for Soma, 127°.
- strî, woman (admitted to sacrifice), 2°.
- sthâlî, see târusthâlî.
- sthâlîpâka, p. 344.
- sruk, spoon, 26°.
- sruva, ladle, 26.
- svadhâ, sacrificial interjection, 96°.
- svapna, sleeping, 40.
- svasabda, having its own name, 84.
- svâdhyâya, self-reading (of the Veda), 37.
- svâmin, master, i. e. sacrificer, 138.
- svâhâ, sacrificial interjection, 96°.
- svâhâkârapradâna, (a sacrifice) which is offered with the word Svâhâ, 87.
- svishtrakrit, the sacrifice for Agni Svishtrakrit, 13, 155.
- haviryagña, a class of sacrifices, 148°; p. 344.
- havishkrit, the Havishkrit hymn, used when the havis is made, 43.
- havis, offering, 104°, 128.
- hu, to pour out, to sacrifice, 23, 25°, 86, 87°, 92, 94.
- hotri, the Hotri-priest, 16, 49°.
- hotrâ, Mantra recited by the Hotri-priest, 49.
- homa, the Homa, burnt-oblation, 25°, 75.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.									III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	..	..	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	..	..	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	..	..	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	...
4 " aspirata	gh	..	..	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	...
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	..	..	...	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	...
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	..	..	ङ	{ 𐬚 (ng) 𐬛 (N) }	...	...	...	...	...
7 Spiritus asper	h	..	..	ह	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	h, hs
8 " lenis	'	..	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
9 " asper faucalis	'h	..	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
10 " lenis faucalis	'h	..	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
11 " asper fricatus	..	'h	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
12 " lenis fricatus	..	'h	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
Gutturales modificatæ (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	..	k	..	...	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	k
14 " aspirata	..	kh	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	kh
15 Media	..	g	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
16 " aspirata	..	gh	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
17 " Nasalis	..	n̄	..	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	..	..	य	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	..	(y)	..	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
20 " lenis	..	(y)	..	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
21 " asper assibilatus	..	s	..	श	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
22 " lenis assibilatus	..	z	..	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	..	..	त	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	..	..	थ	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ת	ת	th
25 " assibilata	..	..	TH	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
26 Media	d	..	..	द	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ד	ד	..
27 " aspirata	dh	..	..	ध	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ד	ד	..
28 " assibilata	..	..	DH	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
29 Nasalis	n	..	..	न	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l	..	..	ल	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	..	l	..	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
32 " mollis 2	..	..	L	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	..	..	स	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2	..	s(s)	..	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	..
35 " lenis	z	..	..	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ز	ז	z
36 " asperimus 1	..	..	z (z)	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	z
37 " asperimus 2	..	..	z (z)	..	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	..	..	z

Dentales modificatae
(linguales, &c.)

38	Tennis	t		ت	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
39	" aspirata	th		ث	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
40	Media	d		د	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
41	" aspirata	dh		ذ	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
42	Nasalis	n		ن	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
43	Semivocalis	r		ر	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
44	" fricata	r		ر	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
45	" diacritica	R		ر	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
46	Spiritus asper	sh		ش	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
47	" lenis	zh		ز	.	.	.	.	.	ط	.	ط
Labiales.
48	Tennis	p		پ	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
49	" aspirata	ph		ف	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
50	Media	b		ب	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
51	" aspirata	bh		ب	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
52	Tenuissima	p		پ	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
53	Nasalis	m		م	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
54	Semivocalis	w		و	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
55	" aspirata	hw		ه	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
56	Spiritus asper	f		ف	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
57	" lenis	v		و	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
58	Anusvāra	m		م	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب
59	Visarga	h		ه	.	.	.	.	.	ب	.	ب

Labiales.

48	Tenuis	p	.	.	.	.	.	.	प	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
49	" aspirata	ph	.	.	.	.	.	.	फ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
50	Media	b	.	.	.	.	.	.	ब	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
51	" aspirata	bh	.	.	.	.	.	.	भ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
52	Tenuissima	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
53	Nasalis	m	.	.	.	.	.	.	म	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
54	Semivocalis	w	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
55	" aspirata	hw	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
56	Spiritus asper	f	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
57	" lenis	v	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
58	Anusvāra	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ
59	Visarga	h	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	.	ॐ	.	ॐ	.	ॐ

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		III Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	0									ā
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē									...
3 " labialis	ō									...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a									ā
5 " longa	ā	(a)								ā
6 Palatalis brevis	i									i
7 " longa	ī	(i)								ī
8 Dentalis brevis	ē									...
9 " longa	ī									...
10 Lingualis brevis	ri									...
11 " longa	ri									...
12 Labialis brevis	u									u
13 " longa	ū	(u)								ū
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e									e
15 " longa	ē (ai)	(e)								ē
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi	(ai)								āi
17 " "	ei (ēi)									ei, ēi
18 " "	oi (ōu)									...
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o									o
20 " longa	ō (au)	(o)								...
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu	(au)								āu
22 " "	eu (ēu)									...
23 " "	ou (ōu)									...
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä									...
25 Palatalis fracta	ī									...
26 Labialis fracta	ü									ü
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ö									...

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

THE RIGHT HON. F. MAX MÜLLER.

 * This Series is published with the sanction and co-operation of the Secretary of State for India in Council.*

REPORT presented to the ACADÉMIE DES INSCRIPTIONS, May 11, 1883, by M. HENRI RENAN.

'M. Renan présente trois nouveaux volumes de la grande collection des "Livres sacrés de l'Orient" (Sacred Books of the East), que dirige à Oxford, avec une si vaste érudition et une critique si sûre, le savant associé de l'Académie des Inscriptions, M. Max Müller. . . La première série de ce beau recueil, composée de 24 volumes, est presque achevée. M. Max Müller se propose d'en publier une seconde, dont l'intérêt historique et religieux ne sera pas moindre. M. Max Müller a su se procurer la collaboration des savans les plus éminens d'Europe et d'Asie. L'Université d'Oxford, que cette grande publication honore au plus haut degré, doit tenir à continuer dans les plus larges proportions une œuvre aussi philosophiquement conçue que savamment exécutée.'

EXTRACT from the QUARTERLY REVIEW.

'We rejoice to notice that a second series of these translations has been announced and has actually begun to appear. The stones, at least, out of which a stately edifice may hereafter arise, are here being brought together. Prof. Max Müller has deserved well of scientific history. Not a few minds owe to his enticing words their first attraction to this branch of study. But no work of his, not even the great edition of the Rig-Veda, can compare in importance or in usefulness with this English translation of the Sacred Books of the East, which has been devised by his foresight, successfully brought so far by his persuasive and organising power, and will, we trust, by the assistance of the distinguished scholars he has gathered round him, be carried in due time to a happy completion.'

Professor H. HARDY, Inaugural Lecture in the University of Freiburg, 1887.

'Die allgemeine vergleichende Religionswissenschaft datirt von jenem grossartigen, in seiner Art einzig dastehenden Unternehmen, zu welchem auf Anregung Max Müllers im Jahre 1874 auf dem internationalen Orientalistencongress in London der Grundstein gelegt worden war, die Übersetzung der heiligen Bücher des Ostens' (the Sacred Books of the East).

The Hon. ALBERT N. G. CANNING, 'Words on Existing Religions.'

'The recent publication of the "Sacred Books of the East" in English is surely a great event in the annals of theological literature.'

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

FIRST SERIES.

VOL. I. The Upanishads.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. The Khândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âranyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Upanishads contain the philosophy of the Veda. They have become the foundation of the later Vedânta doctrines, and indirectly of Buddhism. Schopenhauer, speaking of the Upanishads, says: 'In the whole world there is no study so beneficial and so elevating as that of the Upanishads. It has been the solace of my life, it will be the solace of my death.'

[See also Vol. XV.]

VOL. II. The Sacred Laws of the Âryas,

As taught in the Schools of Âpastamba, Gautama, Vâsishtha, and Baudhâyana. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part I. Âpastamba and Gautama. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Sacred Laws of the Âryas contain the original treatises on which the Laws of Manu and other lawgivers were founded.

[See also Vol. XIV.]

VOL. III. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part I. The Shû King, The Religious Portions of the Shih King, and The Hsiâo King. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Confucius was a collector of ancient traditions, not the founder of a new religion. As he lived in the sixth and fifth centuries B. C. his works are of unique interest for the study of Ethology.

[See also Vols. XVI, XXVII, XXVIII, XXXIX, and XL.]

VOL. IV. The Zend-Avesta.

Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. Part I. The Vendidad. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 14s.

The Zend-Avesta contains the relics of what was the religion of Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, and, but for the battle of Marathon, might have become the religion of Europe. It forms to the present day the sacred book of the Parsis, the so-called fire-worshippers.

[See also Vols. XXIII and XXXI.]

VOL. V. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part I. The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, and Shâyast lâ-shâyast. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The Pahlavi Texts comprise the theological literature of the revival of Zoroaster's religion, beginning with the Sassanian dynasty. They are important for a study of Gnosticism.

[See also Vols. XVIII, XXIV, XXXVII, and XLVII.]

VOLS. VI AND IX. The Qur'ân.

Parts I and II. Translated by E. H. PALMER. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation, carried out according to his own peculiar views of the origin of the Qur'ân, was the last great work of E. H. Palmer, before he was murdered in Egypt.

VOL. VII. The Institutes of Vishnu.

Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of legal aphorisms, closely connected with one of the oldest Vedic schools, the Kathas, but considerably added to in later time. Of importance for a critical study of the Laws of Manu.

VOL. VIII. The Bhagavadgitâ, with The Sanatsugâtiya, and The Anugîtâ.

Translated by KÂSHINÂTH TRIMBAK TELANG. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The earliest philosophical and religious poem of India. It has been paraphrased in Arnold's 'Song Celestial.'

VOL. X. The Dhammapada,

Translated from Pâli by F. MAX MÜLLER; and

The Sutta-Nipâta,

Translated from Pâli by V. FAUSBÖLL; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Dhammapada contains the quintessence of Buddhist morality. The Sutta-Nipâta gives the authentic teaching of Buddha on some of the fundamental principles of religion.

VOL. XI. Buddhist Suttas.

Translated from Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. 1. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta; 2. The Dhamma-kakka-ppavattana Sutta. 3. The Tevigga Suttanta; 4. The Ākaṅkheyya Sutta; 5. The Ketokhila Sutta; 6. The Mahā-sudassana Suttanta; 7. The Sabbāsava Sutta. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of the most important religious, moral, and philosophical discourses taken from the sacred canon of the Buddhists.

VOL. XII. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part I. Books I and II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

A minute account of the sacrificial ceremonies of the Vedic age. It contains the earliest account of the Deluge in India.

[See also Vols. XXVI, XLI, XLIII, and XLIV.]

VOL. XIII. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part I. The Pātimokkha. The Mahāvagga, I-IV. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Vinaya Texts give for the first time a translation of the moral code of the Buddhist religion as settled in the third century B.C.

[See also Vols. XVII and XX.]

VOL. XIV. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas,

As taught in the Schools of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vāsishṭha, and Baudhāyana. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part II. Vāsishṭha and Baudhāyana. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XV. The Upanishads.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part II. The Kaṭha-upanishad, The Mundaka-upanishad, The Taittirīyaka-upanishad, The Bṛhadāraṇyaka-upanishad, The Svetāśvatara-upanishad, The Prasāna-upanishad, and The Maitrāyaṇa-brāhmaṇa-upanishad. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XVI. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part II. The Yî King. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

[See also Vols. XXVII, XXVIII.]

VOL. XVII. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part II. The Mahāvagga, V-X. The Kullavagga, I-III. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XVIII. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part II. The Dâdistân-î Dinik and The Epistles of Mânûskîhar. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XIX. The Fo-sho-hing-tsan-king.

A Life of Buddha by Arvaghosha Bodhisattva, translated from Sanskrit into Chinese by Dharmaraksha, A.D. 420, and from Chinese into English by SAMUEL BEAL. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

This life of Buddha was translated from Sanskrit into Chinese, A.D. 420. It contains many legends, some of which show a certain similarity to the Evangelium infantiae, &c.

VOL. XX. Vinaya Texts.

Translated from the Pâli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS and HERMANN OLDENBERG. Part III. The Kullavagga, IV-XII. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXI. The Saddharma-pundarikâ ; or, The Lotus of the True Law.

Translated by H. KERN. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

'The Lotus of the True Law,' a canonical book of the Northern Buddhists, translated from Sanskrit. There is a Chinese translation of this book which was finished as early as the year 286 A.D.

VOL. XXII. Gaina-Sûtras.

Translated from Prâkrit by HERMANN JACOBI. Part I. The Âkârânga-Sûtra and The Kalpa-Sûtra. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The religion of the Gainas was founded by a contemporary of Buddha. It still counts numerous adherents in India, while there are no Buddhists left in India proper.

[See Vol. XLV.]

VOL. XXIII. The Zend-Avesta.

Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. Part II. The Sirôzahs, Yasts, and Nyâyis. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXIV. Pahlavi Texts.

Translated by E. W. WEST. Part III. Dînâ-î Mainôg-Khirad, Sikand-gûmânîk Vigâr, and Sad Dar. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SECOND SERIES.

VOL. XXV. Manu.

Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation is founded on that of Sir William Jones, which has been carefully revised and corrected with the help of seven native Commentaries. An Appendix contains all the quotations from Manu which are found in the Hindu Law-books, translated for the use of the Law Courts in India. Another Appendix gives a synopsis of parallel passages from the six Dharma-sûtras, the other Smritis, the Upanishads, the Mahābhārata, &c.

VOL. XXVI. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part II. Books III and IV: 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOLS. XXVII AND XXVIII. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Parts III and IV. The Lî Kî, or Collection of Treatises on the Rules of Propriety, or Ceremonial Usages. 8vo, cloth, 25s.

VOL. XXIX. The Gr̥hya-Sûtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part I. Sāṅkhāyana, Āsvalāyana, Pāraskara, Khādīra. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXX. The Gr̥hya-Sûtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part II. Gobhila, Hiranyakesin, Âpastamba. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. Âpastamba, Yagña-paribhāṣhâ-sûtras. Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

These rules of Domestic Ceremonies describe the home life of the ancient Āryas with a completeness and accuracy unmatched in any other literature. Some of these rules have been incorporated in the ancient Law-books.

VOL. XXXI. The Zend-Avesta.

Part III. The Yasna, Visparad, Âsrinagân, Gâhs, and Miscellaneous Fragments. Translated by L. H. MILLS. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXII. Vedic Hymns.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. 8vo, cloth, 18s. 6d.

[See also Vol. XLVI.]

VOL. XXXIII. The Minor Law-books.

Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. Part I. Nārada, Brīhaspati. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

- VOL. XXXIV. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with the Commentary by Saṅkarācārya. Part I.
Translated by G. THIBAUT. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
[See also Vol. XXXVIII.]
- VOLS. XXXV AND XXXVI. The Questions of King Milinda.
Translated from the Pāli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Part I. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. Part II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XXXVII. Pahlavi Texts.
Translated by E. W. WEST. Part IV. The Contents of the Nasks, as stated in the Eighth and Ninth Books of the Dinkard. 15s.
- VOL. XXXVIII. The Vedânta-Sûtras. Part II. 8vo, cloth, with full Index to both Parts, 12s. 6d.
- VOLS. XXXIX AND XL. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Tāoism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. 8vo, cloth, 21s.
- VOL. XLI. The Satapatha - Brāhmaṇa. Part III.
Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XLII. Hymns of the Atharva-veda.
Translated by M. BLOONFIELD. 8vo, cloth, 21s.
- VOL. XLIII. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa.
Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part IV. Books VIII, IX, and X. 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XLIV. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa.
Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part V. Books XI, XII, XIII, and XIV. 18s. 6d.
- VOL. XLV. The Gaiṇa-Sûtras.
Translated from Prakṛit, by HERMANN JACOBI. Part II. The Uttarādhyayana Sûtra, The Sûtrakṛitāṅga Sûtra. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
- VOL. XLVI. Vedic Hymns. Part II. 8vo, cloth, 14s.
- VOL. XLVII. Pahlavi Texts.
Translated by E. W. WEST. Part V. Marvels of Zoroastrianism. 8s. 6d.
- VOL. XLVIII. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with Rāmānuga's Sribhāshya.
Translated by G. THIBAUT. [In the Press.]
- VOL. XLIX. Buddhist Mahāyāna Texts. Buddhakarita, translated by E. B. COWELL. Sukhāvati-vyūha, Vagṛakkhedikā, &c., translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Amitāyur-Dhyāna-Sûtra, translated by J. TAKAKUSU. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Anecdota Oxoniensia.

ARYAN SERIES.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. I. Vagrakkhedikā ; The Diamond-Cutter.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A. Small 4to, 3s. 6d.

One of the most famous metaphysical treatises of the Mahāyāna Buddhists.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. II. Sukhāvati-Vyūha : Description of Sukhāvati, the Land of Bliss.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A., and BUNYIU NANJIO. With two Appendices : (1) Text and Translation of Saṅghavarman's Chinese Version of the Poetical Portions of the Sukhāvati-Vyūha ; (2) Sanskrit Text of the Smaller Sukhāvati-Vyūha. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

The editio princeps of the Sacred Book of one of the largest and most influential sects of Buddhism, numbering more than ten millions of followers in Japan alone.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. III. The Ancient Palm-Leaves containing the Prañā-Pāramitā-Hridaya-Sūtra and the Uśnīsha-Vigaya-Dhāraṇī.

Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER, M.A., and BUNYIU NANJIO, M.A. With an Appendix by G. BÜHLER, C.I.E. With many Plates. Small 4to, 10s.

Contains facsimiles of the oldest Sanskrit MS. at present known.

Dharma-Saṃgraha, an Ancient Collection of Buddhist Technical Terms.

Prepared for publication by KENJIU KASAWARA, a Buddhist Priest from Japan, and, after his death, edited by F. MAX MÜLLER and H. WENZEL. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

Kātyāyana's Sarvānukramanī of the R̥gveda.

With Extracts from Śaṅkara's Commentary entitled Vedārthadīpikā. Edited by A. A. MACDONELL, M.A., Ph.D. 16s.

The Buddha-Karita of Asvaghosha.

Edited, from three MSS., by E. B. COWELL, M.A. 12s. 6d.

The Mantrapāṭha, or the Prayer Book of the Āpastambins.

Edited, together with the Commentary of Haradatta, and translated by M. WINTERNITZ, Ph.D. First Part. Introduction, Sanskrit Text, Varietas Lectionis, and Appendices. Small quarto, 10s. 6d.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON : HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 021 332

REESE LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

Class

685

M246

v. 32

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London
HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE
SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XXXII

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1891

[All rights reserved]

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY MORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

VEDIC HYMNS

TRANSLATED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

PART I

HYMNS TO THE MARUTS, RUDRA, VÂYU, AND VÂTA

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1891

[All rights reserved]

Handwritten text: Handwritten Handwritten

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	ix
PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION	xxix
HYMNS, TRANSLATION AND NOTES:—
Mandala X, 121, The Unknown God	I →
I, 6, Indra and the Maruts	14
„ 19, Agni and the Maruts	53 ↗
„ 37, The Maruts	63 ↖
„ 38, „	81—
„ 39, „	97—
„ 64, „	106—
„ 85, „	126
„ 86, „	154
„ 87, „	159
„ 88, „	169
„ 165, The Maruts and Indra	179
„ 166, The Maruts	209
„ 167, „	272 ↗
„ 168, „	279
„ 170, Dialogue between Indra and Agastya	286
„ 171, The Maruts	289
„ 172, „	293
II, 34, „	295
V, 52, „	312
„ 53, „	319
„ 54, „	325
„ 55, „	333
„ 56, „	337
„ 57, „	340
„ 58, „	343
„ 59, „	347

	PAGE
Mandala V, 60, Agni and the Maruts	352
„ 61, The Maruts	356
„ 87, „	363
VI, 66, „	368
VII, 56, „	373
„ 57, „	379
„ 58, „	382
„ 59, The Maruts and Rudra	386
VIII, 7, The Maruts	390
„ 20, „	400
„ 94, „	408
X, 77, „	412
„ 78, „	416
I, 43, Rudra	419
„ 114, „	422
II, 33, Rudra, the Father of the Maruts	426
VI, 74, Soma and Rudra	434
VII, 46, Rudra	436
→ I, 2, Vāyu	440
„ 134, „	444
X, 168, Vāta	449
„ 186, „	451
APPENDICES :—
I. Index of Words	455
II. List of the more important Passages quoted in the Preface and in the Notes	530
III. A Bibliographical List of the more important Publications on the Rig-veda	540
Corrigenda	551

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	553
---	-----

INTRODUCTION.

I finished the Preface to the first volume of my translation of the Hymns to the Maruts with the following words :

‘ The second volume, which I am now preparing for Press, will contain the remaining hymns addressed to the Maruts. The notes will necessarily have to be reduced to smaller dimensions, but they must always constitute the more important part in a translation or, more truly, in a deciphering of Vedic hymns.’

This was written more than twenty years ago, but though since that time Vedic scholarship has advanced with giant steps, I still hold exactly the same opinion which I held then with regard to the principles that ought to be followed by the first translators of the Veda. I hold that they ought to be decipherers, and that they are bound to justify every word of their translation in exactly the same manner in which the decipherers of hieroglyphic or cuneiform inscriptions justify every step they take. I therefore called my translation the first traduction raisonnée. I took as an example which I tried to follow, though well aware of my inability to reach its excellence, the Commentaire sur le Yasna by my friend and teacher, Eugène Burnouf. Burnouf considered a commentary of 940 pages quarto as by no means excessive for a thorough interpretation of the first chapter of the Zoroastrian Veda, and only those unacquainted with the real difficulties of the Rig-veda would venture to say that its ancient words and thoughts required a less painstaking elucidation than those of the Avesta. In spite of all that has been said and written to the contrary, and with every wish to learn from those who think that the difficulties of a translation of Vedic hymns have been unduly exaggerated by me, I cannot in the least modify what I said twenty, or rather forty years ago, that a mere translation of the Veda, however accurate, intelligible, poetical, and even beautiful, is of absolutely no value for the advancement of Vedic scholarship, unless it is followed by pièces justificatives, that is, unless the translator gives his reasons why he has translated every word about which there can be any doubt, in his own way, and not in any other.

It is well known that Professor von Roth, one of our most eminent Vedic scholars, holds the very opposite opinion. He declares that a metrical translation is the best commentary, and that if he could ever think of a translation of the Rig-veda, he would throw the chief weight, not on the notes, but on the translation of the text. 'A translation,' he writes, 'must speak for itself. As a rule, it only requires a commentary where it is not directly convincing, and where the translator does not feel secure.'

Between opinions so diametrically opposed, no compromise seems possible, and yet I feel convinced that when we come to discuss any controverted passage, Professor von Roth will have to adopt exactly the same principles of translation which I have followed.

On one point, however, I am quite willing to agree with my adversaries, namely, that a metrical rendering would convey a truer idea of the hymns of the Vedic R̥shis than a prose rendering. When I had to translate Vedic hymns into German, I have generally, if not always, endeavoured to clothe them in a metrical form. In English I feel unable to do so, but I have no doubt that future scholars will find it possible to add rhythm and even rhyme, after the true meaning of the ancient verses has once been determined. But even with regard to my German metrical translations, I feel in honesty bound to confess that a metrical translation is often an excuse only for an inaccurate translation. If we could make sure of a translator like Rückert, even the impossible might become possible. But as there are few, if any, who, like him, are great alike as scholars and poets, the mere scholar seems to me to be doing his duty better when he produces a correct translation, though in prose, than if he has to make any concessions, however small, on the side of faithfulness in favour of rhythm and rhyme.

If a metrical, an intelligible, and, generally speaking, a beautiful translation were all we wanted, why should so many scholars clamour for a new translation, when they have that by Grassmann? It rests on Böhrtlingk and Roth's Dictionary, or represents, as we are told, even a more advanced stage of Vedic scholarship. Yet after the well-known contributors of certain critical Journals had repeated ever so many times all that could possibly be said in praise of Grassmann's, and in dispraise of Ludwig's translation, what is the result? Grassmann's metrical translation, the merits of which, considering the time when it was published, I have never been loth to acknowledge, is hardly ever appealed to, while Ludwig's prose rendering, with all its drawbacks, is universally considered as the only scholarlike translation of the Rig-veda now in existence. Time tries the troth in everything.

There is another point also on which I am quite willing to admit that my adversaries are right. 'No one who knows anything about the Veda,' they say, 'would think of attempting a translation of it at present. A translation of the Rig-veda is a task for the next century.' No one feels this more strongly than I do; no one has been more unwilling to make even a beginning in this arduous undertaking. Yet a beginning has to be made. We have to advance step by step, nay, inch by inch, if we ever hope to make a breach in that apparently impregnable fortress. If by translation we mean a complete, satisfactory, and final translation of the whole of the Rig-veda, I should feel inclined to go even further than Professor von Roth. Not only shall we have to wait till the next century for such a work, but I doubt whether we shall ever obtain it. In some cases the text is so corrupt that no conjectural criticism will restore, no power of divination interpret it. In other cases, verses and phrases seem to have been jumbled together by later writers in the most thoughtless manner. My principle therefore has always been, Let us translate what we can, and thus reduce the untranslatable portion to narrower and narrower limits. But in doing this we ought not to be too proud to take our friends, and even our adversaries, into our confidence. A translation on the sic volo sic jubeo principle does far more harm than good. It may be true that a judge, if he is wise, will deliver his judgment, but never propound his reasons. But a scholar is a pleader rather than a judge, and he is in duty bound to propound his reasons.

In order to make the difference between Professor von Roth's translations and my own quite clear, I readily accept the text which he has himself chosen. He took one of the hymns which I had translated with notes (the 165th hymn of the first Mandala), and translated it himself metrically, in order to show us what, according to him, a really perfect translation ought to be*. Let us then compare the results.

On many points Professor von Roth adopts the same renderings which I had adopted, only that he gives no reasons, while I do so, at least for all debatable passages. First of all, I had tried to prove that the two verses in the beginning, which the Anukramanî ascribes to Indra, should be ascribed to the poet. Professor von Roth takes the same view, but for the rest of the hymn adopts, like myself, that distribution of the verses among the singer, the Maruts, and Indra which the Anukramanî suggests. I mention this because Ludwig has defended the view of the author of the Anukramanî with very strong arguments. He quotes from the Taitt. Br. II, 7, 11, and from the Tândya Br. XXI, 14, 5, the old legend that Agastya made offerings to the Maruts, that, with or without Agastya's consent, Indra seized them, and that the Maruts then tried to frighten Indra away with lightning. Agastya and Indra, however, pacified the Maruts with this very hymn.

Verse 1.

The first verse von Roth translates as follows :

‘Auf welcher Fahrt sind insgemein begriffen
Die altersgleichen mitgebornen Marut?
Was wollen sie? woher des Wegs? Das Pfeifen
Der Männer klingt: sie haben ein Begehren.’

* Z. D. M. G., 1870, XXIV, p. 301.

Von Roth here translates subh by Fahrt, journey. But does subh ever possess that meaning? Von Roth himself in the Dictionary translates subh by Schönheit, Schmuck, Bereitschaft. Grassmann, otherwise a strict adherent of von Roth, does not venture even to give Bereitschaft, but only endorses Glanz and Pracht. Ludwig, a higher authority than Grassmann, translates subh by Glanz. I say then that to translate subh by Fahrt, journey, may be poetical, but it is not scholarlike. On the meanings of subh I have treated I, 87, 3, note 2. See also Gaedicke, Accusativ, p. 163.

But there comes another consideration. That mimikshire is used in the sense of being joined with splendour, &c. we see from such passages as I, 87, 6, bhānū-bhiḥ sám mimikshire, i. e. 'they were joined with splendour,' and this is said, as in our passage, of the Maruts. Prof. von Roth brings forward no passage where mimikshire is used in the sense in which he uses it here, and therefore I say again, his rendering may be poetical, but it is not scholarlike.

To translate arḥanti śúshmam by 'das Pfeifen klingt,' is, to say the least, very free. Sushma comes, no doubt, from svas, to breathe, and the transition of meaning from breath to strength is intelligible enough. In the Psalms we read (xviii. 15), 'At the blast of the breath of thy nostrils the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the earth were discovered.' Again (Job iv. 9), 'By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed;' Isaiah xi. 4, 'And with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.' Wrestlers know why breath or wind means strength, and even in the expression 'une œuvre de longue haleine,' the original intention of breath is still perceived. In most passages therefore in the Rig-veda where sushma occurs, and where it means strength, prowess, vigour, we may, if we like, translate it by breath, though it is clear that the poet himself was not always aware of the etymological meaning of the word. Where the sound of sushma is mentioned (IX, 50, 1; X, 3, 6, &c.), it means clearly breath. But when, as in VI, 19, 8, sushma has the adjectives dhanaspr̥t, sudáksha, we can hardly translate it by anything but strength. When, therefore, von Roth translates sushma by whistling, and arkānti by sounding, I must demur. Whistling is different from breathing, nor do I know of any passage where ark with sushma or with any similar word for sound means simply to sound a whistle. Why not translate, they sing their strength, i.e. the Maruts, by their breathing or howling, proclaim themselves their strength? We find a similar idea in I, 87, 3, 'the Maruts have themselves glorified their greatness.' Neither Grassmann nor Ludwig venture to take sushma in the sense of whistle, or arkānti in the sense of sounding. Bergaigne seems to take vrishanaḥ as a genitive, referring to Indra, 'ils chantent la force à Indra,' which may have been the original meaning, but seems hardly appropriate when the verse is placed in the mouth of Indra himself (Journ. Asiat. 1884, p. 199). Sushma never occurs as an adjective. The passages in which von Roth admits sushma as an adjective are not adequate. Does mitgeboren in German convey the meaning of sániḥ, 'of the same nest?'

Verse 2.

The second verse contains few difficulties, and is well rendered by von Roth :

'An wessen Sprüchen freuen sich die Jungen?
Wer lenkt die Marut her zu seinem Opfer?
Gleich Falken streichend durch den Raum der Lüfte—
Wie bringt man sie mit Wunscheskraft zum Stehen?'

Verse 3.

The third verse is rendered by von Roth :

'Wie kommt es, Indra, dass du sonst so munter,
Heut' ganz alleine fährst, sag an Gebieter!
Du pflegtest auf der Fahrt mit uns zu plaudern;
Was hast du wider uns, sprich, Rosselenker!'

Von Roth takes kútaḥ in a causal sense, why? I believe that kútaḥ never occurs in that sense in the Rig-veda. If it does, passages should be produced to prove it.

Māhinaḥ can never be translated by 'sonst so munter.' This imparts a modern idea which is not in the original.

Subhānaḥ does not mean auf der Fahrt, and plaudern, adopted from Grassmann, instead of sám prikkhase, introduces again quite a modern idea. Ludwig calls such an idea 'abgeschmackt,' insipid, which is rather strong, but not far wrong.

Verse 4.

Von Roth :

'Ich liebe Sprüche, Wünsche und die Tränke,
Der Duft steigt auf, die Presse ist gerüstet;
Sie flehen, locken mich mit ihrem Anruf,
Und meine Füchse führen mich zum Mahle.'

It is curious how quickly all difficulties which beset the first line seem to vanish in a metrical translation, but the scholar should face the difficulties, though the poet may evade them.

To translate śúshmaḥ iyarti by 'der Duft steigt auf,' the flavour of the sacrifices rises up, is more than even Grassmann ventures on. It is simply impossible. Benfey (Entstehung der mit r anlautenden Personalendungen, p. 34) translates: 'My thunderbolt, when hurled by me, moves mightily.'

Again, prábhṛitaḥ me ádriḥ does not mean die Presse ist gerüstet. Where does Indra ever speak of the stones used for pressing the Soma as my stone, and where does prábhṛitaḥ ever mean gerüstet?

Verse 5.

Von Roth :

'So werden wir und mit uns unsre Freunde (Nachbarn),
Die freien Männer, unsre Rüstung nehmen,
Und lustig unsre Schecken alsbald schirren.
Du kommst uns eben ganz nach Wunsch, o Indra.'

The first lines are unnecessarily free, and the last decidedly wrong. How can svadhām ánu hí naḥ babhútha mean 'Du kommst uns eben ganz nach Wunsch?' Svadhâ does not mean wish, but nature, custom, wont (see I, 6, 4, note 2; and Bergaigne, Journ. Asiat. 1884, p. 207). Babhútha means 'thou hast become,' not 'thou comest.'

Verse 6.

Von Roth :

‘Da war’s auch nicht so ganz nach Wunsch, o Maruts,
Als ihr allein mich gegen Ahi schicktet!

Ich aber kräftig, tapfer, unerschrocken,

Ich traf die Gegner alle mit Geschossen.’

The only doubtful line is the last. Von Roth’s former translation of nam, to bend away from, to escape from (cf. φεύγω and bhug), seems to me still the right one. He now translates ‘I directed my arrow on every enemy,’ when the genitive, as ruled by ánamam, requires confirmation. As to sam ádhatta I certainly think von Roth’s last interpretation better than his first. In the Dictionary he explained samdhâ in our passage by to implicate. Grassmann translated it by to leave or to desert, Ludwig by to employ. I took it formerly in the usual sense of joining, so that yát mām ékam samádhatta should be the explanation of svadhâ, the old custom that you should join me when I am alone. But the construction is against this, and I have therefore altered my translation, so that the sense is, Where was that old custom you speak of, when you made me to be alone, i. e. when you left me alone, in the fight with Ahi? The udâtta of ánamam is not irregular, because it is preceded by hi.

Verse 7.

Von Roth :

‘Gewaltiges hast du gethan im Bunde

Mit uns, o Held, wir mit vereinter Stärke,

Gewaltiges vermögen wir, du mächtiger

Indra, wenn es uns Ernst ist, ihr Gesellen.’

By this translation, the contrast between ‘thou hast done great things with us,’ and ‘Now let us do great things once more,’ is lost. Kṛinávâma expresses an exhortation, not a simple fact, and on this point Grassmann’s metrical translation is decidedly preferable.

Verse 8.

Von Roth :

‘Vṛitra schlug ich mit eigener Kraft, ihr Marut,

Und meine Wuth war’s, die so kühn mich machte,

Ich war's, der—in der Faust den Blitz—dem Menschen
Den Zugang bahnte zu den blinkenden Gewässern.'

This is a very good translation, except that there are some syllables too much in the last line. What I miss is the accent on the I. Perhaps this might become stronger by translating :

'Ich schlug mit eigner Kraft den Vṛitra nieder,
Ich, Maruts, stark durch meinen Zorn geworden ;
Ich war's, der blitzbewaffnet für den Menschen
Dem lichten Wasser freie Bahn geschaffen.'

Verse 9.

Von Roth :

'Gewiss, nichts ist was je dir widerstünde,
Und so wie du gibts keinen zweiten Gott mehr,
Nicht jetzt, noch künftig, der was du vermöchte :
Thu' denn begeistert was zu thun dich lüset.'

Here I doubt about begeistert being a true rendering of pravṛiddha, grown strong. As to karishyāh instead of karishyā, the reading of the MSS., Roth is inclined to adopt my conjecture, as supported by the analogous passage in IV, 30, 23. The form which Ludwig quotes as analogous to karishyam, namely, pravatsyam, I cannot find, unless it is meant for Āpast. Srauta S. VI, 27, 2, namo vo-stu prāvātsyam iti Bahvrikāh, where however prāvātsyam is probably meant for prāvātsam.

Grassmann has understood devātā rightly, while Roth's translation leaves it doubtful.

Verse 10.

Von Roth :

'So soll der Stärke Vorrang mir allein sein :
Was ich gewagt, vollführ' ich mit Verständniss.
Man kennt mich als den Starken wohl, ihr Marut,
An was ich rühre, Indra der bemeistert's.'

Von Roth has adopted the translation of the second line, which I suggested in a note ; Ludwig prefers the more abrupt construction which I preferred in the translation. It is difficult to decide.

Verse 11.

Von Roth :

‘Entzückt hat euer Rühmen mich, ihr Marut,
Das lobenswerthe Wort, das ihr gesprochen,
Für mich—den Indra—für den freud’gen Helden,
Als Freunde für den Freund, für mich—von selbst ihr.’

The last words für mich—von selbst ihr are not very clear, but the same may be said of the original tanvê tanûbhih. I still adhere to my remark that tanu, self, must refer to the same person, though I see that all other translators take an opposite view. Non liquet.

Verse 12.

Von Roth :

‘Gefallen find ich, wie sie sind, an ihnen,
In Raschheit und in Frische unvergleichlich.
So oft ich euch, Marut, im Schmuck erblickte,
Erfreut’ ich mich und freue jetzt an euch mich.’

This is again one of those verses which it is far easier to translate than to construe. Ākkhānta me may mean, they pleased me, but then what is the meaning of khadáyātha ka nūnām, ‘may you please me now,’ instead of what we should expect, ‘you do please me now.’ In order to avoid this, I took the more frequent meaning of khad, to appear, and translated, ‘you have appeared formerly, appear to me now.’

To translate ānedyah srāvaḥ ā śshah dādhānāḥ, by ‘in Raschheit und in Frische unvergleichlich,’ is poetical, but how does it benefit the scholar? I take ā dhā in the sense of bringing or giving, as it is often used; cf. II, 38, 5. This is more compatible with śshah, food, vigour. I am not certain that ānēdyāḥ can mean blameless. Roth s. v. derives ānedyā from a-nedyā, and nedyā from nid. But how we get from nid to nedyā, he does not say. He suggests anedyāḥ or anedyasravaḥ as emendations. I suggested anedyam. But I suspect there is something else behind all this. Anedīyah may have been intended for ‘having nothing coming nearer,’ and like an-uttama, might express excellence. Or anedyah may have been an adverb, not nearly.

Von Roth : Verse 13.

In this verse there is no difficulty, except the exact meaning of apivātáyantaḥ, on which I have spoken in note 1.

Von Roth:

Prof. von Roth admits that this is a difficult verse. He translates it, but again he does not help us to construe it. Grassmann also gives us a metrical translation, but it differs widely from von Roth's :

‘Wenn uns des Mānya Kunst zur Feier herzieht, Wie Dichter ja zu Festen gerne rufen,’ &c.

Von Roth: Verse 15.

b 2

How tanvê vayām is to mean 'mir selbst zur Stärkung' has not been explained by von Roth. No doubt tanvê may mean mir selbst, and vayām zur Stärkung; but though this may satisfy a poet, scholars want to know how to construe. It seems to me that Roth and Lanman (Noun-inflection, p. 552) have made the same mistake which I made in taking ishām for an accusative of ish, which ought to be ísham, and in admitting the masculine gender for vrigána in the sense of Flur.

I still take yásishṭa for the 3 p. sing. of the precative Ātmanepada, like ganishishṭa and vanishishṭa. With the preposition áva, yásishṭhāh in IV, 1, 4, means to turn away. With the preposition á therefore yásishṭa may well mean to turn towards, to bring. If we took yásishṭa as a 2 p. plur. in the sense of come, we could not account for the long î, nor for the accusative vayām. We thus get the meaning, 'May this your hymn of praise bring vayām,' i. e. a branch, an offshoot or offspring, tanvê, for ourselves, ishá, together with food. We then begin a new sentence: 'May we find an invigorating autumn with quickening rain.' It is true that ishá, as a name of an autumn month, does not occur again in the Rig-veda, but it is found in the Satapatha-bráhmaṇa. Vrigána, possibly in the sense of people or enemies, we have in VII, 32, 27, ágñâtāh vrigánāh, where Roth reads wrongly ágñâtā vrigánā; V, 44, 1 (?); VI, 35, 5. Gírádānu also would be an appropriate epithet to ishá.

Professor Oldenberg has sent me the following notes on this difficult hymn. He thinks it is what he calls an Ākhyāna-hymn, consisting of verses which originally formed part of a story in prose. He has treated of this class of hymns in the Zeitschrift der D. M. G. XXXIX, 60 seq. He would prefer to ascribe verses 1 and 2 to Indra, who addresses the Maruts when he meets them as they return from a sacrifice. In this case, however, we should have to accept rīramāma as a pluralis majestaticus, and I doubt whether Indra ever speaks of himself in the plural, except it may be in using the pronoun naḥ.

In verse 4 Professor Oldenberg prefers to take prá- bhr̥ito me ádriḥ in the sense of 'the stone for pressing the Soma has been brought forth,' and he adds that me need not mean 'my stone,' but 'brought forward for me.' He would prefer to read śúshma m iyarti, as in IV, 17, 12; X, 75, 3, though he does not consider this alteration of the text necessary.

Professor Oldenberg would ascribe vv. 13 and 14 to Indra. The 14th verse would then mean, 'After Mānya has brought us (the gods) hither, turn, O Maruts, towards the sage.' Of this interpretation I should like to adopt at all events the last sentence, taking varta for vart-ta, the 2 p. plur. imperat. of vr̥it, after the Ad class.

The text of the Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā, lately published by Dr. L. von Schröder, yields a few interesting various readings: v. 5, ekam instead of etāñ; v. 12, śravā instead of śrava; and v. 15, vayāmsi as a variant for vayām, which looks like a conjectural emendation.

A comparison like the one we have here instituted between two translations of the same hymn, will serve to show how useless any rendering, whether in prose or poetry, would be without notes to justify the meanings of every doubtful word and sentence. It will, no doubt, disclose at the same time the unsettled state of Vedic scholarship, but the more fully this fact is acknowledged, the better, I believe, it will be for the progress of our studies. They have suffered more than from anything else from that baneful positivism which has done so much harm in hieroglyphic and cuneiform researches. That the same words and names should be interpreted differently from year to year, is perfectly intelligible to every one who is familiar with the nature of these decipherments. What has seriously injured the credit of these studies is that the latest decipherments have always been represented as final and unchangeable. Vedic hymns may seem more easy to decipher than Babylonian and Egyptian inscriptions, and in one sense they are. But when we come to really difficult passages, the Vedic hymns often require a far greater effort of divination than the hymns addressed to Egyptian or Babylonian deities. And there is this additional difficulty that when we deal with inscriptions, we have at all events the text as it was engraved from the first, and we are safe against later modifications and interpolations, while in the case of the Veda, even though the text as presupposed by the Prâtisākhya may be considered as authoritative for the fifth century B.C., how do we know what changes it may have undergone before that time? Nor can I help giving expression once more to misgivings I have so often expressed, whether the date of the Prâtisākhya is really beyond the reach of doubt, and whether, if it is, there is no other way of escaping from the conclusion that the whole collection of the hymns of the Rig-veda, including even the Vāḷakhilya hymns, existed at that early time^a. The more I study the hymns, the more I feel staggered at the conclusion at which all Sanskrit scholars seem to have arrived, touching their age. That many of them are old, older than anything else in Sanskrit, their grammar, if nothing else, proclaims in the clearest way. But that some of them are modern imitations is a conviction that forces itself even on the least sceptical minds. Here too we must guard against positivism, and suspend our judgment, and accept correction with a teachable spirit. No one would be more grateful for a way out of the maze of Vedic chronology than I should be, if a more modern date could be assigned to some of the Vedic hymns than the period of the rise of Buddhism. But how can we account for Buddhism without Vedic hymns? In the oldest Buddhist Suttas the hymns of three Vedas are constantly referred to, and warnings are uttered even against the fourth Veda, the Āṭhabbana^b. The Upanishads also, the latest productions of the Brāhmaṇa period, must have been known to the founders of Buddhism. From all this there seems to be no escape, and yet I must confess that my conscience quivers in assigning such compositions as the Vāḷakhilya hymns to a period preceding the rise of Buddhism in India.

^a See Preface to the first edition, p. xxxii.

^b Tuvaśakasutta, ver. 927; Sacred Books of the East, vol. x, p. 176; Introduction, p. xiii.

I have often been asked why I began my translation of the Rig-veda with the hymns addressed to the Maruts or the Storm-gods, which are certainly not the most attractive of Vedic hymns. I had several reasons, though, as often happens, I could hardly say which of them determined my choice.

First of all, they are the most difficult hymns, and therefore they had a peculiar attraction in my eyes.

Secondly, as even when translated they required a considerable effort before they could be fully understood, I hoped they would prove attractive to serious students only, and frighten away the casual reader who has done so much harm by meddling with Vedic antiquities. Our grapes, I am glad to say, are still sour, and ought to remain so for some time longer.

Thirdly, there are few hymns which place the original character of the so-called deities to whom they are addressed in so clear a light as the hymns addressed to the Maruts or Storm-gods. There can be no doubt about the meaning of the name, whatever difference of opinion there may be about its etymology. Marut and maruta in ordinary Sanskrit mean wind, and more particularly a strong wind, differing by its violent character from vāyu or vāta ^a. Nor do the hymns themselves leave us in any doubt as to the natural phenomena with which the Maruts are identified. Storms which root up the trees of the forest, lightning, thunder, and showers of rain, are the background from which the Maruts in their personal and dramatic character rise before our eyes. In one verse the Maruts are the very phenomena of nature as convulsed by a thunderstorm; in the next, with the slightest change of expression, they are young men, driving on chariots, hurling the thunderbolt, and crushing the clouds in order to win the rain. Now they are the sons of Rudra and Prisni, the friends and brothers of Indra, now they quarrel with Indra and claim their own rightful share of praise and sacrifice. Nay, after a time the storm-gods in India, like the storm-gods in other countries, obtain a kind of supremacy, and are invoked by themselves, as if there were no other gods beside them. In most of the later native dictionaries, in the Medinî, Viśva, Hemaṅdra, Amara, and Anekārthadhvanimaṅgari, Marut is given as a synonym of deva, or god in general^a, and so is Maru in Pāli.

^a The Vāyus are mentioned by the side of the Maruts, Rv. II, 11, 14.

But while the hymns addressed to the Maruts enable us to watch the successive stages in the development of so-called deities more clearly than any other hymns, there is no doubt one drawback, namely, the uncertainty of the etymology of Marut. The etymology of the name is and always must be the best key to the original intention of a deity. Whatever Zeus became afterwards, he was originally conceived as Dyaus, the bright sky. Whatever changes came over Ceres in later times, her first name and her first conception was Sarad, harvest. With regard to Marut I have myself no doubt whatever that Mar-ut comes from the root MṚ, in the sense of grinding, crushing, pounding (Sk. mṛināti, himsâyām, part. mūrṇa, crushed, like mṛidita; āmúr and āmúri, destroyer). There is no objection to this etymology, either on the ground of phonetic rules, or on account of the meaning of Marut^b. Professor Kuhn's idea that the name of the Maruts was derived from the root MṚ, to die, and that the Maruts were originally conceived as the souls of the departed, and afterwards as ghosts, spirits, winds, and lastly as storms, derives no support from the Veda. Another etymology, proposed in Böhtlingk's Dictionary, which derives Marut from a root MṚ, to shine, labours under two disadvantages; first, that there is no such root in Sanskrit^c; secondly, that the lurid splendour of the lighting is but a subordinate feature in the character of the Maruts. No better etymology having been proposed, I still maintain that the derivation of Marut from MṚ, to pound, to smash, is free from any objection, and that the original conception of the Maruts was that of the crushing, smashing, striking, tearing, destroying storms.

^a Anundoram Borooah, Sanskrit Grammar, vol. iii, p. 323.

^b See Lectures on the Science of Language, vol. ii, p. 357 seq.

^c Marúti is a word of very doubtful origin.

It is true that we have only two words in Sanskrit formed by the suffix ut, marút and garút in garút-mat, but there are other suffixes which are equally restricted to one or two nouns only. This ut represents an old suffix vat, just as us presupposes vas, in vidus (vidushî, vidush-tara) for vid-vas, nom. vid-vân, acc. vidvâmsam. In a similar way we find side by side párus, knot, párvan, knot, and párvata, stone, cloud, presupposing such forms as parvat* and parut. If then by the side of parut*, we find Latin pars, partis, why should we object to Mars, Martis as a parallel form of Marut? I do not say the two words are identical, I only maintain that the root is the same, and the two suffixes are mere variants. No doubt Marut might have appeared in Latin as Marut, like the neuter cap-ut, capitis (cf. prae-ceps, prae-cipis, and prae-cipitis); but Mars, Martis is as good a derivation from MĀ as Fors, Fortis is from *GHĀ. Dr. von Bradke (Zeitschrift der D.M.G., vol. xl, p. 349), though identifying Marut with Mars, proposes a new derivation of Marut, as being originally Mavrit*, which would correspond well with Mavors. But Mavrit* has no meaning in Sanskrit, and seems grammatically an impossible formation.

If there could be any doubt as to the original identity of Marut and Mars, it is dispelled by the Umbrian name çerfo Martio, which, as Grassmann^b has shown, corresponds exactly to the expression sárdha-s māruta-s, the host of the Maruts. Such minute coincidences can hardly be accidental, though, as I have myself often remarked, the chapter of accidents in language is certainly larger than we suppose. Thus, in our case, I pointed out that we can observe the transition of the gods of storms into the gods of destruction and war, not only in the Veda, but likewise in the mythology of the Polynesians; and yet the similarity in the Polynesian name of Maru can only be accidental^c.

* Biographies of Words, p. 12.

^b Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xvi, p. 190; and note to Rv. I, 37, 1, p. 70.

^c M. M., Science of Religion, p. 255.

And I may add that in Estonian also we find storm-gods called Marutu uled or maro, plural marud^a.

Fourthly, the hymns addressed to the Maruts seemed to me to possess an interest of their own, because, as it is difficult to doubt the identity of the two names, Marut and Mars, they offered an excellent opportunity for watching the peculiar changes which the same deity would undergo when transferred to India on one side and to Europe on the other. Whether the Greek Ares also was an offshoot of the same root must seem more doubtful, and I contented myself with giving the principal reasons for and against this theory^b.

Though these inducements which led me to select the hymns to the Maruts as the first instalment of a translation of the Rig-veda could hardly prevail with me now, yet I was obliged to place them once more in the foreground, because the volume containing the translation of these hymns with very full notes has been used for many years as a text book by those who were beginning the study of the Rig-veda, and was out of print. In order to meet the demand for a book which could serve as an easy introduction to Vedic studies, I decided to reprint the translation of the hymns to the Maruts, and most of the notes, though here and there somewhat abbreviated, and then to continue the same hymns, followed by others addressed to Rudra, Vāyu, and Vāta. My task would, of course, have been much easier, if I had been satisfied with making a selection, and translating those hymns, or those verses only, which afford no very great difficulties. As it is, I have grappled with every hymn and every verse addressed to the Maruts, so that my readers will find in this volume all that the Vedic poets had to say about the Storm-gods.

In order to show, however, that Vedic hymns, though they begin with a description of the most striking phenomena of nature, are by no means confined to that narrow sphere, but rise in the end to the most sublime conception of a supreme Deity, I have placed one hymn, that addressed to the Unknown God, at the head of my collection. This will clear me, I hope, of the very unfair suspicion that, by beginning my translation of the Rig-veda with hymns celebrating the wild forces of nature only, I had wished to represent the Vedic religion as nature-worship and nothing else. It will give the thoughtful reader a foretaste of what he may expect in the end, and show how vast a sphere of religious thought is filled by what we call by a very promiscuous name, the Veda.

^a Bertram, Ilmatar, Dorpat, 1871, p. 98.

^b Lectures on the Science of Language, vol. ii, p. 357.

The MS. of this volume was ready, and the printing of it was actually begun in 1885. A succession of new calls on my time, which admitted of no refusal, have delayed the actual publication till now. This delay, however, has been compensated by one very great advantage. Beginning with hymn 167 of the first Mandala, Professor Oldenberg has, in the most generous spirit, lent me his help in the final revision of my translation and notes. It is chiefly due to him that the results of the latest attempts at the interpretation of the Veda, which are scattered about in learned articles and monographs, have been utilised for this volume. His suggestions, I need hardly say, have proved most valuable; and though he should not be held responsible for any mistakes that may be discovered, whether in the translation or in the notes, my readers may at all events take it for granted that, where my translation seems unsatisfactory, Professor Oldenberg also had nothing better to suggest.

Considering my advancing years, I thought I should act in the true interest of Vedic scholarship, if for the future also I divided my work with him. While for this volume the chief responsibility rests with me, the second volume will contain the hymns to Agni, as translated and annotated by him, and revised by me. In places where we really differ, we shall say so. For the rest, we are willing to share both blame and praise. Our chief object is to help forward a critical study of the Veda, and we are well aware that much of what has been done and can be done in the present state of Vedic scholarship, is only a kind of reconnaissance, if not a forlorn hope, to be followed hereafter by a patient siege of the hitherto impregnable fortress of ancient Vedic literature.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

OXFORD :
6th Dec. 1891.

PREFACE

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

WHEN some twenty years ago I decided on undertaking the first edition of the two texts and the commentary of the Rig-veda, I little expected that it would fall to my lot to publish also what may, without presumption, be called the first translation of the ancient sacred hymns of the Brahmins. Such is the charm of deciphering step by step the dark and helpless utterances of the early poets of India, and discovering from time to time behind words that for years seemed unintelligible, the simple though strange expressions of primitive thought and primitive faith, that it required no small amount of self-denial to decide in favour of devoting a life to the publishing of the materials rather than to the drawing of the results which those materials supply to the student of ancient language and ancient religion. Even five and twenty years ago, and without waiting for the publication of Sâyaṇa's commentary, much might have been achieved in the interpretation of the hymns of the Rig-veda. With the MSS. then accessible in the principal libraries of Europe, a tolerably correct text of the Samhitâ might have been published, and these ancient relics of a primitive religion might have been at least partially deciphered and translated in the same way in which ancient inscriptions are deciphered and translated, viz. by a careful collection of all grammatical forms, and by a complete intercomparison of all passages in which the same words and the same phrases occur. When I resolved to devote my leisure to a critical edition of the text and commentary of the Rig-veda rather than to an independent study of that text, it was chiefly from a conviction that the traditional interpretation of the Rig-veda, as embodied in the commentary of Sâyaṇa and other works of a similar character, could not be neglected with impunity, and that sooner or later a complete edition of these works would be recognised as a necessity. It was better therefore to begin with the beginning, though it seemed hard sometimes to spend forty years in the wilderness instead of rushing straight into the promised land.

What a translation of the Rig-veda ought to be.

It is well known to those who have followed my literary publications that I never entertained any exaggerated opinion as to the value of the traditional interpretation of the Veda, handed down in the theological schools of India, and preserved to us in the great commentary of Sâyaṇa. More than twenty years ago, when it required more courage to speak out than now, I expressed my opinion on that subject in no ambiguous language, and was blamed for it by some of those who now speak of Sâyaṇa as a mere drag in the progress of Vedic scholarship. Even a drag, however, is sometimes more conducive to the safe advancement of learning than a whip; and those who recollect the history of Vedic scholarship during the last five and twenty years, know best that, with all its faults and weaknesses, Sâyaṇa's commentary was a sine quâ non for a scholarlike study of the Rig-veda. I do not wonder that others who have more recently entered on that study are inclined to speak disparagingly of the scholastic interpretations of Sâyaṇa. They hardly know how much we all owe to his guidance in effecting our first entrance into this fortress of Vedic language and Vedic religion, and how much even they, without being aware of it, are indebted to that Indian Eustathius. I do not withdraw an opinion which I expressed many years ago, and for which I was much blamed at the time, that Sâyaṇa in many cases teaches us how the Veda ought not to be, rather than how it ought to be understood. But for all that, who does not know how much assistance may be derived from a first translation, even though it is imperfect, nay, how often the very mistakes of our predecessors help us in finding the right track? If now we can walk without Sâyaṇa, we ought to bear in mind that five and twenty years ago we could not have made even our first steps, we could never, at least, have gained a firm footing without his leading strings. If therefore we can now see further than he could, let us not forget that we are standing on his shoulders.

I do not regret in the least the time which I have devoted to the somewhat tedious work of editing the commentary of Sāyana, and editing it according to the strictest rules of critical scholarship. The Veda, I feel convinced, will occupy scholars for centuries to come, and will take and maintain for ever its position as the most ancient of books in the library of mankind. Such a book, and the commentary of such a book, should be edited once for all; and unless some unexpected discovery is made of more ancient MSS., I do not anticipate that any future Bekker or Dindorf will find much to glean for a new edition of Sāyana, or that the text, as restored by me from a collation of the best MSS. accessible in Europe, will ever be materially shaken *. It has taken a long time, I know; but those who find fault with me for the delay, should remember that few

* Since the publication of the first volume of the Rig-veda, many new MSS. have come before me, partly copied for me, partly lent to me for a time by scholars in India, but every one of them belonged clearly to one of the three families which I have described in my introduction to the first volume of the Rig-veda. In the beginning of the first Ashṭaka, and occasionally at the beginning of other Ashṭakas, likewise in the commentary on hymns which were studied by native scholars with particular interest, various readings occur in some MSS., which seem at first to betoken an independent source, but which are in reality mere marginal notes, due to more or less learned students of these MSS. Thus after verse 3 of the introduction one MS. reads: sa prāha nṛpatim, rāgan, sāyanāryo mamānugaḥ, sarvaṃ vetty esha vedānām vyākhyā-trītvena, yugyatām. The same MS., after verse 4, adds: ityukto mādhavāryeṇa vīrabukkamahāpatiḥ, anvarāt sāyanātārāyaṃ vedārthasya prakāśane.

I had for a time some hope that MSS. written in Grantha or other South-Indian alphabets might have preserved an independent text of Sāyana, but from some specimens of a Grantha MS. collated for me by Mr. Eggeling, I do not think that even this hope is meant to be realised. The MS. in question contains a few independent various readings, such as are found in all MSS., and owe their origin clearly to the jottings of individual students. When at the end of verse 6, I found the independent reading, vyutpannas tāvatā sarvā riko vyākhyātum arhati, I expected that other various readings of the same character might follow. But after a few additions in the beginning, and those clearly taken from other parts of Sāyana's commentary, nothing of real importance could be gleaned from that MS. I may mention as more important specimens of marginal notes that, before the first punaḥ kīdrīsam, on page 44, line 24 (1st ed.), this MS. reads: athavā yagñasya devam iti sambandhaḥ, yagñasya prakāśakam ityārthaḥ, purohitam iti prithagvīśhanam. And again, page 44, line 26, scholars, if any, have worked for others more than I have done in copying and editing Sanskrit texts, and that after all one cannot give up the whole of one's life to the collation of Oriental MSS. and the correction of proof-sheets. The two concluding volumes have long been ready for Press, and as soon as I can find leisure, they too shall be printed and published *.

In now venturing to publish the first volume of my translation of the Rig-veda, I am fully aware that the fate which awaits it will be very different from that of my edition of the text and commentary. It is a mere contribution towards a better understanding of the Vedic hymns, and though I hope it may give in the main a right rendering of the sense of the Vedic poets, I feel convinced that on many points my translation is liable to correction, and will sooner or later be replaced by a more satisfactory one. It is difficult to explain to those who have not themselves worked at the Veda, how it is that, though we may understand almost every word, yet we find it so difficult to lay hold of a whole chain of connected thought, and to discover expressions that will not throw a wrong shade on the original features of the ancient words of the Veda. We have, on the one hand, to avoid giving to our translations too modern a character, or paraphrasing instead of translating; while, on the other, we cannot retain expressions which, if literally rendered in English or any modern tongue, would have an air of quaintness or absurdity totally foreign to the intention of the ancient poets. There are, as all Vedic scholars know, whole verses which, as yet, yield no sense whatever. There are words the meaning of before punaḥ kīdrīṣam, this MS. adds: athavā rītvigam rītvigvid (vad) yagñā-nirvāhakam hotāraṁ devānām āhvātāram; tathā ratnadhātāmam. In the same line, after ratnānām, we read ramanīyadhanānām vā, taken from page 46, line 2. Various readings like these, however, occur on the first sheets only, soon after the MS. follows the usual and recognised text. [This opinion has been considerably modified after a complete collation of this MS., made for me by Dr. Winternitz.] For the later Ash/akas, where all the MSS. are very deficient, and where an independent authority would be of real use, no Grantha MS. has as yet been discovered.

* They have since been printed, but the translation has in consequence been delayed.

which we can only guess. Here, no doubt, a continued study will remove some of our difficulties, and many a passage that is now dark, will receive light hereafter from a happy combination. Much has already been achieved by the efforts of European scholars, but much more remains to be done; and our only chance of seeing any rapid progress made lies, I believe, in communicating freely what every one has found out by himself, and not minding if others point out to us that we have overlooked the very passage that would at once have solved our difficulties, that our conjectures were unnecessary, and our emendations wrong. True and honest scholars whose conscience tells them that they have done their best, and who care for the subject on which they are engaged far more than for the praise of benevolent or the blame of malignant critics, ought not to take any notice of merely frivolous censure. There are mistakes, no doubt, of which we ought to be ashamed, and for which the only amende honorable we can make is to openly confess and retract them. But there are others, particularly in a subject like Vedic interpretation, which we should forgive, as we wish to be forgiven. This can be done without lowering the standard of true scholarship or vitiating the healthy tone of scientific morality. Kindness and gentleness are not incompatible with earnestness,—far from it!—and where these elements are wanting, not only is the joy embittered which is the inherent reward of all bonâ fide work, but selfishness, malignity, aye, even untruthfulness, gain the upper hand, and the healthy growth of science is stunted. While in my translation of the Veda and in the remarks that I have to make in the course of my commentary, I shall frequently differ from other scholars, I hope I shall never say an unkind word of men who have done their best, and who have done what they have done in a truly scholarlike, that is, in a humble spirit. It would be unpleasant, even were it possible within the limits assigned, to criticise every opinion that has been put forward on the meaning of certain words or on the construction of certain verses of the Veda. I prefer, as much as possible, to vindicate my own translation, instead of examining the translations of other scholars, whether Indian or European. Sâyaṇa's translation, as rendered into English by Professor Wilson, is before the world. Let those who take an interest in these matters compare it with the translation here proposed. In order to give readers who do not possess that translation, an opportunity of comparing it with my own, I have for a few hymns printed that as well as the translations of Langlois and Benfey* on the same page with my own. Everybody will thus be enabled to judge of the peculiar character of each of these translations. That of Sâyaṇa represents the tradition of India; that of Langlois is the ingenious, but thoroughly uncritical, guess-work of a man of taste; that of Benfey is the rendering of a scholar, who has carefully worked out the history of some words, but who assigns to other words either the traditional meaning recorded by Sâyaṇa, or a conjectural meaning which, however, would not always stand the test of an inter-comparison of all passages in which these words occur. I may say, in general, that Sâyaṇa's translation was of great use to me in the beginning, though it seldom afforded help for the really difficult passages. Langlois' translation has hardly ever yielded real assistance, while I sincerely regret that Benfey's rendering does not extend beyond the first Mandala.

It may sound self-contradictory, if, after confessing the help which I derived from these translations, I venture to call my own the first translation of the Rig-veda. The word translation, however, has many meanings. I mean by translation, not a mere rendering of the hymns of the Rig-veda into English, French, or German, but a full account of the reasons which justify the translator in assigning such a power to such a word, and such a meaning to such a sentence. I mean by translation a real deciphering, a work like that which Burnouf performed in his first attempts at a translation of the Avesta,—a traduction raisonnée, if such an expression may be used. Without such a process, without a running commentary, a mere translation of the ancient hymns of the Brahmans will never lead to any solid results. Even if the translator has discovered the right meaning of a word or of a whole sentence, his mere translation does not help us much, unless he shows us the process by which he has arrived at it, unless he places before us the pièces justificatives of his final judgment. The Veda teems with words that require a justification ; not so much the words which occur but once or twice, though many of these are difficult enough, but rather the common words and particles, which occur again and again, which we understand to a certain point, and can render in a vague way, but which must be defined before they can be translated, and before they can convey to us any real and tangible meaning. It was out of the question in a translation of this character to attempt either an imitation of the original rhythm or metre, or to introduce the totally foreign element of rhyming. Such translations may follow by and by : at present a metrical translation would only be an excuse for an inaccurate translation.

* In the new edition, Langlois' translation has been omitted, and those of Ludwig and Grassmann have been inserted occasionally only.

While engaged in collecting the evidence on which the meaning of every word and every sentence must be founded, I have derived the most important assistance from the Sanskrit Dictionary of Professors Böhtlingk and Roth, which has been in course of publication during the last sixteen years. The Vedic portion of that Dictionary may, I believe, be taken as the almost exclusive work of Professor Roth, and as such, for the sake of brevity, I shall treat it in my notes. It would be ungrateful were I not to acknowledge most fully the real benefit which this publication has conferred on every student of Sanskrit, and my only regret is that its publication has not proceeded more rapidly, so that even now years will elapse before we can hope to see it finished. But my sincere admiration for the work performed by the compilers of that Dictionary does not prevent me from differing, in many cases, from the explanations of Vedic words given by Professor Roth. If I do not always criticise Professor Roth's explanations when I differ from him, the reason is obvious. A dictionary without a full translation of each passage, or without a justification of the meanings assigned to each word, is only a preliminary step to a translation. It represents a first classification of the meanings of the same word in different passages, but it gives us no means of judging how, according to the opinion of the compiler, the meaning of each single word should be made to fit the general sense of a whole sentence. I do not say this in disparagement, for, in a dictionary, it can hardly be otherwise ; I only refer to it in order to explain the difficulty I felt whenever I differed from Professor Roth, and was yet unable to tell how the meaning assigned by him to certain words would be justified by the author of the Dictionary himself. On this ground I have throughout preferred to explain every step by which I arrived at my own renderings, rather than to write a running criticism of Professor Roth's Dictionary. My obligations to him I like to express thus once for all, by stating that whenever I found that I agreed with him, I felt greatly assured as to the soundness of my own rendering, while whenever I differed from him, I never did so without careful consideration.

The works, however, which I have hitherto mentioned, though the most important, are by no means the only ones that have been of use to me in preparing my translation of the Rig-veda. The numerous articles on certain hymns, verses, or single words occurring in the Rig-veda, published by Vedic scholars in Europe and India during the last thirty years, were read by me at the time of their publication, and have helped me to overcome difficulties, the very existence of which is now forgotten. If I go back still further, I feel that in grappling with the first and the greatest of difficulties in the study of the Veda, I and many others are more deeply indebted than it is possible to say, to one whose early loss has been one of the greatest misfortunes to Sanskrit scholarship. It was in Burnouf's lectures that we first learnt what the Veda was, and how it should form the foundation of all our studies. Not only did he most liberally communicate to his pupils his valuable MSS., and teach us how to use these tools, but the results of his own experience were freely placed at our service, we were warned against researches which he knew to be useless, we were encouraged in undertakings which he knew to be full of promise. His minute analysis of long passages of Sāyana, his independent interpretations of the text of the hymns, his comparisons between the words and grammatical forms, the thoughts and legends of the Veda and Avesta, his brilliant divination checked by an inexorable sense of truth, and his dry logical method enlivened by sallies of humour and sparks of imaginative genius, though not easily forgotten, and always remembered with gratitude, are now beyond the reach of praise or blame. Were I to criticise what he or other scholars have said and written many years ago, they might justly complain of such criticism. It is no longer necessary to prove that Nābhānedishṭha cannot mean 'new relatives,' or that there never was a race of Etendhras, or that the angels of the Bible are in no way connected with the Aṅgiras of the Vedic hymns; and it would, on the other hand, be a mere waste of time, were I to attempt to find out who first discovered that in the Veda deva does not always mean divine, but sometimes means brilliant. In fact, it could not be done.

In a new subject like that of the interpretation of the Veda, there are certain things which everybody discovers who has eyes to see. Their discovery requires so little research that it seems almost an insult to say that they were discovered by this or that scholar. Take, for instance, the peculiar pronunciation of certain words, rendered necessary by the requirements of Vedic metres. I believe that my learned friend Professor Kuhn was one of the first to call general attention to the fact that semivowels must frequently be changed into their corresponding vowels, and that long vowels must sometimes be pronounced as two syllables. It is clear, however, from Rosen's notes to the first Ashṭaka (I, 1, 8), that he, too, was perfectly aware of this fact, and that he recognised the prevalence of this rule, not only with regard to semivowels (see his note to RV. I, 2, 9) and long vowels which are the result of Sandhi, but likewise with regard to others that occur in the body of a word. 'Animadvertē,' he writes, 'tres syllabas postremas vocis adhvarānām dipodiae iambicae munus sustinentes, penultima syllaba praeter iambi prioris arsin, thesin quoque sequentis pedis ferente. Satis frequentia sunt, in hac praesertim dipodiae iambicae sede, exempla syllabae naturae longae in tres moras productae. De qua re nihil quidem memoratum invenio apud Pingalam aliosque qui de arte metrica scripserunt: sed numeros ita, ut modo dictum est, computandos esse, taciti agnoscere videntur, quum versus una syllaba mancus non eos offendat.'

Now this is exactly the case. The ancient grammarians, as we shall see, teach distinctly that where two vowels have coalesced into one according to the rules of Sandhi, they may be pronounced as two syllables; and though they do not teach the same with regard to semivowels and long vowels occurring in the body of the word, yet they tacitly recognise that rule, by frequently taking its effects for granted. Thus in Sūtra 950 of the Prātisākhya, verse IX, 111, 1, is called an Atyashī, and the first pāda is said to consist of twelve syllables. In order to get this number, the author must have read, āyā rūkā hāṛinyā pūñānāh.

Immediately after, verse IV, 1, 3, is called a Dhr̥iti, and the first pāda must again have twelve syllables. Here therefore the author takes it for granted that we should read, śākhē śākhāyām ābh̥y ā vāvṛt̥svā*.

No one, in fact, with any ear for rhythm, whether Saunaka and Pingala, or Rosen and Kuhn, could have helped observing these rules when reading the Veda. But it is quite a different case when we come to the question as to which words admit of such protracted pronunciation, and which do not. Here one scholar may differ from another according to the view he takes of the character of Vedic metres, and here one has to take careful account of the minute and ingenious observations contained in numerous articles by Professors Kuhn, Bollensen, Grassmann, and others.

* See also Sūtra 937 seq. I cannot find any authority for the statement of Professor Kuhn (Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 114) that, according to the Rik-prātisākhya, it is the first semivowel that must be dissolved, unless he referred to the remarks of the commentator to Sūtra 973.

With regard to the interpretation of certain words and sentences too, it may happen that explanations which have taxed the ingenuity of some scholars to the utmost, seem to others so self-evident that they would hardly think of quoting anybody's name in support of them, to say nothing of the endless and useless work it would entail, were we obliged always to find out who was the first to propose this or that interpretation. It is impossible here to lay down general rules:—each scholar must be guided by his own sense of justice to others and by self-respect. Let us take one instance. From the first time that I read the fourth hymn of the Rig-veda, I translated the fifth and sixth verses :

utá bruvantu naḥ nīdaḥ nīḥ anyātaḥ kīṭ ārata, dādhanāḥ indre ít dūvaḥ,
 utá naḥ su-bhāgān arīḥ vokéyuh dasma kṛishṭāyaḥ, syāma ít indrasya sārmani.

1. Whether our enemies say, 'Move away elsewhere, you who offer worship to Indra only,'—

2. Or whether, O mighty one, all people call us blessed : may we always remain in the keeping of Indra.

About the general sense of this passage I imagined there could be no doubt, although one word in it, viz. arīḥ, required an explanation. Yet the variety of interpretations proposed by different scholars is extraordinary. First, if we look to Sāyana, he translates :

1. May our priests praise Indra ! O enemies, go away from this place, and also from another place ! Our priests (may praise Indra), they who are always performing worship for Indra.

2. O destroyer of enemies ! may the enemy call us possessed of wealth ; how much more, friendly people ! May we be in the happiness of Indra !

Professor Wilson did not follow Sāyana closely, but translated :

1. Let our ministers, earnestly performing his worship, exclaim: Depart, ye revilers, from hence and every other place (where he is adored).

2. Destroyer of foes, let our enemies say we are prosperous: let men (congratulate us). May we ever abide in the felicity (derived from the favour) of Indra.

Langlois translated:

1. Que (ces amis), en fêtant Indra, puissent dire: Vous, qui êtes nos adversaires, retirez-vous loin d'ici.

2. Que nos ennemis nous appellent des hommes fortunés, placés que nous sommes sous la protection d'Indra.

Stevenson translated:

1. Let all men again join in praising Indra. Avaunt ye profane scoffers, remove from hence, and from every other place, while we perform the rites of Indra.

2. O foe-destroyer, (through thy favour) even our enemies speak peaceably to us, the possessors of wealth; what wonder then if other men do so. Let us ever enjoy the happiness which springs from Indra's blessing.

Professor Benfey translated:

1. And let the scoffers say, They are rejected by every one else, therefore they celebrate Indra alone.

2. And may the enemy and the country proclaim us as happy, O destroyer, if we are only in Indra's keeping*.

Professor Roth, s.v. anyáta^h, took this word rightly in the sense of 'to a different place,' and must therefore have taken that sentence 'move away elsewhere' in the same sense in which I take it. Later, however, s.v. ar, he corrected himself, and proposed to translate the same words by 'you neglect something else.'

Professor Bollensen (Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 462),

* I add Grassmann's and Ludwig's renderings:

Grassmann: Mag spottend sagen unser Feind:

'Kein Andrer kümmert sich um sie;

Drum feiern Indra sie allein.'

Und glücklich mögen, Mächtiger!

Die Freundesstämme nennen uns,

Nur wenn wir sind in Indra's Schutz.

Ludwig: Mögen unsere tadler sagen: sogar noch anderes entgeht euch (dabei), wenn ihr dienst dem Indra tut.

Oder möge uns glückselige nennen der fromme, so nennen, o wundertäter, die (fünf) völker, in Indra's schutze mögen wir sein.

adopting to a certain extent the second rendering of Professor Roth in preference to that of Professor Benfey, endeavoured to show that the 'something else which is neglected,' is not something indefinite, but the worship of all the other gods, except Indra.

It might, no doubt, be said that every one of these translations contains something that is right, though mixed up with a great deal that is wrong; but to attempt for every verse of the Veda to quote and to criticise every previous translation, would be an invidious and useless task. In the case just quoted, it might seem right to state that Professor Bollensen was the first to see that arīh should be joined with krishṭāyāh, and that he therefore proposed to alter it to arīh, as a nom. plur. But on referring to Rosen, I find that, to a certain extent, he had anticipated Professor Bollensen's remark, for though, in his cautious way, he abstained from altering the text, yet he remarked: Possitne arih pluralis esse, contracta terminatione, pro arāyāh?

After these preliminary remarks I have to say a few

Plan of the words on the general plan of my translation.
work.

I do not attempt as yet a translation of the whole of the Rig-veda, and I therefore considered myself at liberty to group the hymns according to the deities to which they are addressed. By this process, I believe, a great advantage is gained. We see at one glance all that has been said of a certain god, and we gain a more complete insight into his nature and character. Something of the same kind had been attempted by the original collectors of the ten books, for it can hardly be by accident that each of them begins with hymns addressed to Agni, and that these are followed by hymns addressed to Indra. The only exception to this rule is the eighth Mandala, for the ninth being devoted to one deity, to Soma, can hardly be accounted an exception. But if we take the Rig-veda as a whole, we find hymns, addressed to the same deities, not only scattered about in different books, but not even grouped together when they occur in one and the same book. Here, as we lose nothing by giving up the old arrangement, we are surely at liberty, for our own purposes, to put together such hymns as have a common object, and to place before the reader as much material as possible for an exhaustive study of each individual deity.

I give for each hymn the Sanskrit original * in what is known as the Pada text, i.e. the text in which all words (pada) stand by themselves, as they do in Greek or Latin, without being joined together according to the rules of Sandhi. The text in which the words are thus joined, as they are in all other Sanskrit texts, is called the Samhitâ text. Whether the Pada or the Samhitâ text be the more ancient, may seem difficult to settle. As far as I can judge, they seem to me, in their present form, the product of the same period of Vedic scholarship. The Prâtisâkhyas, it is true, start from the Pada text, take it, as it were, for granted, and devote their rules to the explanation of those changes which that text undergoes in being changed into the Samhitâ text. But, on the other hand, the Pada text in some cases clearly presupposes the Samhitâ text. It leaves out passages which are repeated more than once, while the Samhitâ text always repeats these passages; it abstains from dividing the termination of the locative plural su, whenever in the Samhitâ text, i.e. according to the rules of Sandhi, it becomes shu; hence nadishu, agishu, but ap-su; and it gives short vowels instead of the long ones of the Samhitâ, even in cases where the long vowels are justified by the rules of the Vedic language. It is certain, in fact, that neither the Pada nor the Samhitâ text, as we now possess them, represents the original text of the Veda. Both show clear traces of scholastic influences. But if we try to restore the original form of the Vedic hymns, we shall certainly arrive at some kind of Pada text rather than at a Samhitâ text; nay, even in their present form, the original metre and rhythm of the ancient hymns of the Rîshis are far more perceptible when the words are divided, than when we join them together throughout according to the rules of Sandhi. Lastly, for practical purposes, the Pada text is far superior to the Samhitâ text in which the final and initial letters, that is, the most important letters of words, are constantly disguised, and liable therefore to different interpretations. Although in some passages we may differ from the interpretation adopted by the Pada text, and although certain Vedic words have, no doubt, been wrongly analysed and divided by Sākalya, yet such cases are comparatively few, and where they occur, they are interesting as carrying us back to the earliest attempts of Vedic scholarship. In the vast majority of cases the divided text, with a few such rules as we have to observe in reading Latin, nay, even in reading Pāli verses, brings us certainly much nearer to the original utterance of the ancient Rishis than the amalgamated text.

* This is left out in the second edition.

The critical principles by which I have been guided in editing for the first time the text of the Rig-veda, require a few words of explanation, as they have lately been challenged on grounds which, I think, rest on a complete misapprehension of my previous statements on this subject.

As far as we are able to judge at present, we can hardly speak of various readings in the Vedic hymns, in the usual sense of that word. Various readings to be gathered from a collation of different MSS., now accessible to us, there are none. After collating a considerable number of MSS., I have succeeded, I believe, in fixing on three representative MSS., as described in the preface to the first volume of my edition of the Rig-veda. Even these MSS. are not free from blunders,—for what MS. is?—but these blunders have no claim to the title of various readings. They are lapsus calami, and no more; and, what is important, they have not become traditional *.

* Thus X, 101, 2, one of the Pada MSS. (P 2) reads distinctly yagñām prā kriṇuta sakhāyaś, but all the other MSS. have nayata, and there can be little doubt that it was the frequent repetition of the verb kri in this verse which led the writer to substitute kriṇuta for nayata. No other MS., as far as I am aware, repeats this blunder. In IX, 86, 34, the writer of the same MS. puts ragasi instead of dhāvasi, because his eye was caught by rāgā in the preceding line. X, 16, 5, the same MS. reads sām gakkhasva instead of gakkhatām, which is supported by S 1, S 2, P 1, while S 3 has a peculiar and more important reading, gakkhatāt. X, 67, 6, the same MS. P 2 has vī ākartha instead of vī ākarta.

A number of various readings which have been gleaned from Pandit Tārā-

The text, as deduced from the best MSS. of the Samhitâ text, can be controlled by four independent checks. The first is, of course, a collation of the best MSS. of the Samhitâ text.

The second check to be applied to the Samhitâ text is a comparison with the Pada text, of which, again, I possessed at least one excellent MS., and several more modern copies.

The third check was a comparison of this text with Sâyana's commentary, or rather with the text which is presupposed by that commentary. In the few cases where the Pada text seemed to differ from the Samhitâ text, a note was added to that effect, in the various readings of my edition; and the same was done, at least in all important cases, where Sâyana clearly followed a text at variance with our own.

The fourth check was a comparison of any doubtful passage with the numerous passages quoted in the Prâtisâkhya.

These were the principles by which I was guided in the critical restoration of the text of the Rig-veda, and I believe I may say that the text as printed by me is more correct than any MS. now accessible, more trustworthy than the text followed by Sâyana, and in all important points identically the same with that text which the authors of the nâtha's Tûlâdânâdipaddhati (see Trübner's American and Oriental Literary Record, July 31, 1868) belong to the same class. They may be due either to the copyists of the MSS. which Pandit Târânâtha used while compiling his work, or they may by accident have crept into his own MS. Anyhow, not one of them is supported either by the best MSS. accessible in Europe, or by any passage in the Prâtisâkhya.

RV. IX, 11, 2, read devayu		instead of devayuh ^b .
IX, 11, 4,	„ arkata	„	arkate ^b .
IX, 14, 2,	„ yadî sabandhavaḥ	„	yaddiptabandhavaḥ ^b .
IX, 16, 3,	„ anaptam	„	anuplam ^b .
IX, 17, 2,	„ suvânâsa	„	stuvânâsa ^b .
IX, 21, 2,	„ pravrinvento	„	pravrinvato ^b .
IX, 48, 2,	„ samvrikta	„	samyukta ^b .
IX, 49, 1,	„ no *pâm	„	no yâm ^b .
IX, 54, 3,	„ sûryaḥ	„	sûryam ^b .
IX, 59, 3,	„ sîda ni	„	sîdati ^b .

^b As printed by Pandit Târânâtha.

Prâtisâkhya followed in their critical researches in the fifth or sixth century before our era. I believe that starting from that date our text of the Veda is better authenticated, and supported by a more perfect apparatus criticus, than the text of any Greek or Latin author, and I do not think that diplomatic criticism can ever go beyond what has been achieved in the constitution of the text of the Vedic hymns.

Far be it from me to say that the editio princeps of the text thus constituted was printed without mistakes.

Aufrecht's
Romanised Reprint of the Rig-veda.

But most of these mistakes are mistakes which no attentive reader could fail to detect. Cases like II, 35, 1, where gôgishat instead of gôshishat was printed three times, so as to perplex even Professor Roth, or II, 12, 14, where sasamânâm occurs three times instead of sasamânâm, are, I believe, of rare occurrence. Nor do I think that, unless some quite unexpected discoveries are made, there ever will be a new critical edition, or, as we call it in Germany, a new recension of the hymns of the Rig-veda. If by collating new MSS., or by a careful study of the Prâtisâkhya, or by conjectural emendations, a more correct text could have been produced, we may be certain that a critical scholar like Professor Aufrecht would have given us such a text. But after carefully collating several MSS. of Professor Wilson's collection, and after enjoying the advantage of Professor Weber's assistance in collating the MSS. of the Royal Library at Berlin, and after a minute study of the Prâtisâkhya, he frankly states that in the text of the Rig-veda, transcribed in Roman letters, which he printed at Berlin, he followed my edition, and that he had to correct but a small number of misprints. For the two Mandalas which I had not yet published, I lent him the very MSS. on which my edition is founded; and there will be accordingly but few passages in these two concluding Mandalas, which I have still to publish, where the text will materially differ from that of his Romanised transcript.

No one, I should think, who is at all acquainted with the rules of diplomatic criticism, would easily bring himself to touch a text resting on such authorities as the text of the Rig-veda. What would a Greek scholar give, if he could say of Homer that his text was in every word, in every syllable, in every vowel, in every accent, the same as the text used by Peisistratos in the sixth century B.C. ! A text thus preserved in its integrity for so many centuries, must remain for ever the authoritative text of the Veda.

To remove, for instance, the eleven hymns 49-59 in the eighth Māṇḍala from their proper place, or count them by themselves as Vāḷakhilya * hymns, seems to me, though no doubt perfectly harmless, little short of a critical sacrilege. Why Sāyana does not explain these hymns, I confess I do not know ^b ; but whatever the reason was, it was not because they did not exist at his time, or because he thought them spurious. They are regularly counted in Kātyāyana's Sarvānukrama, though here the same accident has happened. One commentator, Shadgurusishya, the one most commonly used, does not explain them ; but another commentator, Gagannātha, does explain them, exactly as they occur in the Sarvānukrama, only leaving out hymn 58. That these hymns had something peculiar in the eyes of native scholars, is clear enough. They may for a time have formed a separate collection, they

* The earliest interpretation of the name Vāḷakhilya is found in the Taittirīya-āraṇyaka, I, 23. We are told that Pragāpati created the world, and in the process of creation the following interlude occurs :

sa tapo = tapyata. sa tapas taptvā sarīram adhūnuta. tasya yan māṁsam āsīt tato = runāḥ ketavo vātarasānā rīshaya udatish/haṇ. ye nakhāḥ, te vaikhānasāḥ. ye bālāḥ, te bālakhilyāḥ.

He burned with emotion. Having burnt with emotion, he shook his body. From what was his flesh, the Rīshis, called Arunas, Ketus, and Vātarasanas, sprang forth. His nails became the Vaikhānasas, his hairs the Bālakhilyas.

The author of this allegory therefore took bāla or vāla in vāḷakhilya, not in the sense of child, but identified it with bāla, hair.

The commentator remarks with regard to tapas : nātra tapa upavāsādirūpam, kimtu srashāvyaṁ vastu kīdrīram iti paryālokanārūpam.

^b A similar omission was pointed out by Professor Roth. Verses 21-24 of the 53rd hymn of the third Māṇḍala, which contain imprecations against Vasishtha, are left out by the writer of a Pada MS., and by a copyist of Sāyana's commentary, probably because they both belonged to the family of Vasishtha. See my first edition of the Rig-veda, vol. ii, p. lvi, Notes.

may have been considered of more modern origin *. I shall go even further than those who remove these hymns from the place which they have occupied for more than two thousand years. I admit they disturb the regularity both of the Mandala and the Ashṭaka divisions, and I have pointed out myself that they are not counted in the ancient Anukramanīs ascribed to Saunaka ; (History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 220.) But, on the other hand, verses taken from these hymns occur in all the other Vedas^b; they are mentioned by name in the Brāhmaṇas (Ait. Br. V, 15 ; VI, 24), the Āraṇyakas (Ait. Ār. V, 10, p. 445), and the Sūtras (Āsv. Srauta Sūtras, VIII, 2, 3), while they are never included in the manuscripts of Parisishṭas or Khilas or apocryphal hymns, nor mentioned by Kātyāyana as mere Khilas in his Sarvānukrama. Eight^c of them are mentioned in the Bṛihaddevatā, without any allusion to their apocryphal character :

Parāṇy aṣṭau tu sūktāny riṣhīnām tigmategasām,
Aindrāṇy atra tu shadvimsaḥ pragātho bahudaivataḥ.
Rig antyāgner akety agniḥ sūryam antyapado gagau.
Praskanvas ka prishadhras ka prādād yad vastu kimkāna
Bhūrīd iti tu sūktābhyām akhilam parikīrtitam.
Aindrāṇy ubhayam ity atra sha āgneyāt parāṇi tu.

‘The next eight hymns belong to Riṣhis of keen intellect^d; they are addressed to Indra, but the 26th Pragātha

* Sāyana (RV. X, 88, 18) quotes these hymns as Vālakhilya-saṃhitā. In the Mahābhārata XII, 59 ; 110 seq. the Vālakhilyas are called the ministers of King Vainya, whose astrologer was Garga, and his domestic priest Sukra ; see Kern, Bṛihat-saṃhitā, transl. p. 11.

^b This is a criterion of some importance, and it might have been mentioned, for instance, by Professor Bollensen in his interesting article on the Dvīpadā Virāg hymns ascribed to Parāśara (I, 65-70) that not a single verse of them occurs in any of the other Vedas.

^c Sāyana in his commentary (RV. X, 27, 15) speaks of eight, while in the Ait. Ār. V, 10, the first six are quoted (containing fifty-six verses, comm.), as being used together for certain sacrificial purposes.

^d Lest Saunaka be suspected of having applied this epithet, tigmategas, to the Vālakhilyas in order to fill the verse (pādapūranārtham), I may point out that the same epithet is applied to the Vālakhilyas in the Maitry-upanishad 2, 3. The nom. plur. which occurs there is tigmategasāḥ, and the commentator remarks: tigmategasas tīvrategaso=tyūrgitaprabhāvāḥ ; tegasā ityevamvidha etakāḥkākāḥsāṅketapāḥ kāṇḍasaḥ sarvatra. See also Maitr. Up. VI, 29.

(VIII, 54, 3-4, which verses form the 26th couplet, if counting from VIII, 49, 1) is addressed to many gods. The last verse (of these eight hymns), VIII, 56, 5, beginning with the words akety agniḥ, is addressed to Agni, and the last foot celebrates Sūrya. Whatsoever Praskanva and Prishadhra gave (or, if we read prishadhrāya, whatever Praskanva gave to Prishadhra), all that is celebrated in the two hymns beginning with bhūrīt. After the hymn addressed to Agni (VIII, 60), there follow six hymns addressed to Indra, beginning with ubhayam.'

But the most important point of all is this, that these hymns, which exist both in the Pada and Samhitā texts, are quoted by the Prātisākhya, not only for general purposes, but for special passages occurring in them, and nowhere else. Thus in Sūtra 154, hetāyaḥ is quoted as one of the few words which do not require the elision of a following short a. In order to appreciate what is implied by this special quotation, it is necessary to have a clear insight into the mechanism of the Prātisākhya. Its chief object is to bring under general categories the changes which the separate words of the Pada text undergo when joined together in the Ārshī Samhitā, and to do this with the utmost brevity possible. Now the Sandhi rules, as observed in the Samhitā of the Rig-veda, are by no means so uniform and regular as they are in later Sanskrit, and hence it is sometimes extremely difficult to bring all the exceptional cases under more or less general rules. In our passage the author of the Prātisākhya endeavours to comprehend all the passages where an initial a in the Veda is not elided after a final e or o. In ordinary Sanskrit it would be always elided, in the Samhitā it is sometimes elided, and sometimes not. Thus the Prātisākhya begins in Sūtra 138 by stating that if the short a stands at the beginning of a pāda or foot, it is always elided. Why it should be always elided in the very place where the metre most strongly requires that it should be pronounced, does not concern the author of the Prātisākhya. He is a statistician, not a grammarian, and he therefore simply adds in Sūtra 153 the only three exceptional passages where the a, under these very circumstances, happens to be not elided. He then proceeds in Sûtra 139 to state that a is elided even in the middle of a pāda, provided it be light, followed by y or v, and these, y or v, again followed by a light vowel. Hence the Samhitā writes te •vādan, so •yām, but not śikshanto •vratam, for here the a of avratam is heavy; nor mitramaho •vadyât, for here the a following the v is heavy

Then follows again an extension of this rule, viz. in the case of words ending in āvo. After these, a short a, even if followed by other consonants besides y or v, may be elided, but the other conditions must be fulfilled, i. e. the short a must be light, and the vowel of the next syllable must again be light. Thus the Samhitā writes indeed gāvo •bhītaḥ, but not gāvo •gman, because here the a is heavy, being followed by two consonants.

After this, a more general rule is given, or, more correctly, a more comprehensive observation is made, viz. that under all circumstances initial a is elided, if the preceding word ends in aye, ayaḥ, ave, or avaḥ. As might be expected, however, so large a class must have numerous exceptions, and these can only be collected by quoting every word ending in these syllables, or every passage in which the exceptions occur. Before these exceptions are enumerated, some other more or less general observations are made, providing for the elision of initial a. Initial a, according to Sûtra 142, is to be elided if the preceding word is vaḥ, and if this vaḥ is preceded by â, na, pra, kva, kītraḥ, savitâ, eva, or kaḥ. There is, of course, no intelligible reason why, if these words precede vaḥ, the next a should be elided. It is a mere statement of facts, and, generally speaking, these statements are minutely accurate. There is probably no verse in the whole of the Rig-veda where an initial a after vaḥ is elided, unless these very words precede, or unless some other observation has been made to provide for the elision of the a. For instance, in V, 25, 1, we find vaḥ preceded by akkīa, which is not among the words just mentioned, and here the Samhitā does not elide the a of agnim, which follows after vaḥ. After all these more or less general observations as to the elision of an initial a are thus exhausted, the author of the Prātisākhya descends into particulars, and gives lists, first, of words the initial a of which is always elided; secondly, of words which, if preceding, require under all circumstances the elision of the initial a of the next word, whatever may have been said to the contrary in the preceding Sūtras. Afterwards, he gives a number of passages which defy all rules, and must be given on their own merits, and as they stand in the Samhitā. Lastly, follow special exceptions to the more or less general rules given before. And here, among these special exceptions, we see that the author of the Prātisākhya finds it necessary to quote a passage from a Vāḷakhilya hymn in which hetáyaḥ occurs, i.e. a word ending in ayaḥ, and where, in defiance of Sūtra 141, which required the elision of a following initial a under all circumstances (sarvathā), the initial a of asya is not elided; VIII, 50, 2, Samhitā, satánikā hetáyo asya. It might be objected that the Prātisākhya only quotes hetáyaḥ as an exceptional word, and does not refer directly to the verse in the Vāḷakhilya hymn. But fortunately hetáyaḥ occurs but twice in the whole of the Rig-veda; and in the other passage where it occurs, I, 190, 4, neither the rule nor the exception as to the elision of an initial a, could apply. The author of the Prātisākhya therefore makes no distinction between the Vāḷakhilya and any other hymns of the Rig-veda, and he would have considered his phonetic statistics equally at fault, if it had been possible to quote one single passage from the hymns VIII, 49 to 59, as contravening his observations, as if such passages had been alleged from the hymns of Vasishtha or Viśvámitra.

It would lead me too far, were I to enter here into similar cases in support of the fact that the Prātisākhya makes no distinction between the Vāḷakhilya and any other hymns of the Rig-veda-samhitā *. But I doubt whether the bearing of this fact has ever been fully realised. Here we see that the absence of the elision of a short a which follows after a word ending in ayaḥ, was considered of sufficient importance to be recorded in a special rule, because in most cases the Samhitā elides an initial a, if preceded by a word ending in ayaḥ. What does this prove? It proves, unless all our views on the chronology of Vedic literature are wrong, that in the fifth century B.C. at least, or previously rather to the time when the Prātisākhya was composed, both the Pada and the Samhitā texts were so firmly settled that it was impossible, for the sake of uniformity or regularity, to omit one single short a; and it proves à fortiori, that the hymn in which that irregular short a occurs, formed at that time part of the Vedic canon. I confess I feel sometimes frightened by the stringency of this argument, and I should like to see a possibility by which we could explain the addition, not of the Vālakhilya hymns only, but of other much more modern sounding hymns, at a later time than the period of the Prātisākhyas. But until that possibility is shown, we must abide by our own conclusions; and then I ask, who is the critic who would dare to tamper with a canon of scripture of which every iota was settled before the time of Cyrus, and which we possess in exactly that form in which it is described to us by the authors of the Prātisākhyas? I say again, that I am not free from misgivings on the subject, and my critical conscience would be far better satisfied if we could ascribe the Prātisākhya and all it presupposes to a much later date. But until that is done, the fact remains that the two divergent texts, the Pada and Samhitā, which we now possess, existed, as we now possess them, previous to the time of the Prātisākhya. They have not diverged nor varied since, and the vertex to which they point, starting from the distance of the two texts as measured by the Prātisākhya, carries us back far beyond the time of Saunaka, if we wish to determine the date of the first authorised collection of the hymns, both in their Pada and in their Samhitā form.

* The Prātisākhya takes into account both the Sākala and Bāṣkala sākhās, as may be seen from Sūtra 1057.

Instances abound, if we compare the Pada and Samhitā texts, where, if uniformity between the two texts had been the object of the scholars of the ancient Parishads, the lengthening or shortening of a vowel would at once have removed the apparent discordance between the two traditional texts. Nor should it be supposed that such minute discordances between the two, as the length or shortness of a vowel, were always rendered necessary by the requirements of the metre, and that for that reason the ancient students or the later copyists of the Veda abstained from altering the peculiar spelling of words, which seemed required by the exigencies of the metre in the Samhitā text, but not in the Pada text. Though this may be true in some cases, it is not so in all. There are short vowels in the Samhitā where, according to grammar, we expect long vowels, and where, according to metre, there was no necessity for shortening them. Yet in these very places all the MSS. of the Samhitā text give the irregular short, and all the MSS. of the Pada text the regular long vowel, and the authors of the *Prātisākhya*s bear witness that the same minute difference existed at their own time, nay, previous to their own time. In VII, 60, 12, the Samhitā text gives :

iyám deva puróhitir yuvábhyaṁ yagnéshu mitrávarunāv akāri.

This primacy, O (two) gods, was made for you two, O Mitra and Varuna, at the sacrifices !

Here it is quite clear that deva is meant for a dual, and ought to have been devā or devau. The metre does not require a short syllable, and yet all the Samhitā MSS. read devā, and all the Pada MSS. read devā ; and what is more important, the authors of the Prātisākhyā had to register this small divergence of the two texts, which existed in their time as it exists in our own *.

Nor let it be supposed, that the writers of our MSS. were so careful and so conscientious that they would, when copying MSS., regulate every consonant or vowel according to the rules of the Prātisākhyā. This is by no means the case. The writers of Vedic MSS. are on the whole more accurate than the writers of other MSS., but their learning does not seem to extend to a knowledge of the minute rules of the Prātisākhyā, and they will commit occasionally the very mistakes against which they are warned by the Prātisākhya. Thus the Prātisākhya (Sūtra 799) warns the students against a common mistake of changing vaiyasva into vayyasva, i. e. by changing ai to a, and doubling the semivowel y. But this very mistake occurs in S 2, and another MS. gives vaiyyasva. See p. lvi.

* See Prātisākhyā, Sūtra 309 seqq., where several more instances of the same kind are given. I should prefer to take devapurohiti as one word, but that was not the intention of the authors of the Samhitā and Pada texts.

If these arguments are sound, and if nothing can be said against the critical principles by which I have been guided mistakes.

Aufrecht's

in editing the text of the Rig-veda, if the fourfold check, described above, fulfils every requirement that could be made for restoring that text which was known to Sāyana, and which was known, probably 2000 years earlier, to the authors of the Prātisākhyas, what can be the motives, it may fairly be asked, of those who clamour for a new and more critical edition, and who imagine that the editio princeps of the Rig-veda will share the fate of most of the editiones principes of the Greek and Roman classics, and be supplanted by new editions founded on the collation of other MSS.? No one could have rejoiced more sincerely than I did at the publication of the Romanised transliteration of the Rig-veda, carried out with so much patience and accuracy by Professor Aufrecht. It showed that there was a growing interest in this, the only true Veda; it showed that even those who could not read Sanskrit in the original Devanāgarī, wished to have access to the original text of these ancient hymns; it showed that the study of the Veda had a future before it like no other book of Sanskrit literature. My learned friend Professor Aufrecht has been most unfairly charged with having printed this Romanised text me insciente vel invito. My edition is publici juris, like any edition of Homer or Plato, and anybody might, with proper acknowledgment, have reprinted it, either in Roman or Devanāgarī letters. But far from keeping me in ignorance of his plan, Professor Aufrecht applied to me for the loan of the MSS. of the two Mandalas which I had not yet published, and I lent them to him most gladly, because, by seeing them printed at once, I felt far less guilty in delaying the publication of the last volumes of my edition of the text and commentary. Nor could anything have been more honourable than the way in which Professor Aufrecht speaks of the true relation of his Romanised text to my edition. That there are misprints, and I, speaking for myself, ought to say mistakes also, in my edition of the Rig-veda, I know but too well; and if Professor Aufrecht, after carefully transcribing every word, could honestly say that their number is small, I doubt whether other scholars will be able to prove that their number is large. I believe I may with the same honesty return Professor Aufrecht's compliment, and considering the great difficulty of avoiding misprints in Romanised transcripts, I have always thought and I have always said that his reprint of the hymns of the Veda is remarkably correct and accurate. What, however, I must protest against, and what, I feel sure, Professor Aufrecht himself would equally protest against, is the supposition, and more than supposition of certain scholars, that wherever this later Latin transcript differs from my own Devanâgarî text, Professor Aufrecht is right, and I am wrong; that his various readings rest on the authority of new MSS., and constitute in fact a new recension of the Vedic hymns. Against this supposition I must protest most strongly, not for my own sake, but for the sake of the old book, and, still more, for the sake of the truth. No doubt it is natural to suppose that where a later edition differs from a former edition, it does so intentionally; and I do not complain of those who, without being able to have recourse to MSS. in order to test the authority of various readings, concluded that wherever the new text differed from the old, it was because the old text was at fault. In order to satisfy my own conscience on this point, I have collated a number of passages where Professor Aufrecht's text differs from my own, and I feel satisfied that in the vast majority of cases, I am right and he is wrong, and that his variations do not rest on the authority of MSS. I must not shrink from the duty of making good this assertion, and I therefore proceed to an examination of such passages as have occurred to me on occasionally referring to his text, pointing out the readings both where he is right, and where he is wrong. The differences between the two texts may appear trifling, but I shall not avail myself of that plea. On the contrary, I quite agree with those scholars who hold that in truly critical scholarship there is nothing trifling. Besides, it is in the nature of the case that what may, by a stretch of the word, be called various readings in the Veda, must be confined to single letters or accents, and can but seldom extend to whole words, and never to whole sentences. I must therefore beg my readers to have patience while I endeavour to show that the text of the Rig-veda, as first published by me, though by no means faultless, was nevertheless not edited in so perfunctory a manner as some learned critics seem to suppose, and that it will not be easy to supplant it either by a collation of new MSS., such as are accessible at present, or by occasional references to the Prâtisākhya.

I begin with some mistakes of my own, mistakes which I might have avoided, if I had always consulted the Prâtisākhya, where single words or whole passages of the Veda are quoted. Some of these mistakes have been removed by Professor Aufrecht, others, however, appear in his transcript as they appear in my own edition.

I need hardly point out passages where palpable misprints in my edition have been repeated in Professor Aufrecht's text. I mean by palpable misprints, cases where a glance at the Pada text or at the Samhitā text or a reference to Sāyana's commentary would show at once what was intended. Thus, for instance, in VI, 15, 3, vṛidhé, as I had printed in the Samhitā, was clearly a misprint for vṛidhó, as may be seen from the Pada, which gives vṛidhák, and from Sāyana. Here, though Professor Aufrecht repeats vṛidhé, I think it hardly necessary to show that the authority of the best MSS. (S 2 alone contains a correction of vṛidhó to vṛidhé) is in favour of vṛidhák, whatever we may think of the relative value of these two readings. One must be careful, however, in a text like that of the Vedic hymns, where the presence or absence of a single letter or accent begins to become the object of the most learned and painstaking discussions, not to claim too large an indulgence for misprints. A misprint in the Samhitā, if repeated in the Pada, or if admitted even in the commentary of Sāyana, though it need not be put down to the editor's deplorable ignorance, becomes yet a serious matter, and I willingly take all the blame which is justly due for occasional accidents of this character. Such are, for instance, II, 12, 14, sasamānām instead of sasamānām; I, 124, 4, sudhyúvaḥ, in the Pada, instead of sundhyúvaḥ; and the substitution in several places of a short u instead of a long û in such forms as sûsāvāma, when occurring in the Pada; cf. I, 166, 14; 167, 9.

It is clear from the Prātisākhya, Sûtra 819 and 163, 5, that the words ûtī́ndra in IV, 29, 1, should not be joined together, but that the hiatus should remain. Hence ûtī́ndra, as printed in my edition and repeated in Professor Aufrecht's, should be corrected, and the hiatus be preserved, as it is in the fourth verse of the same hymn, ûtī́ itthā́. MSS. S 1, S 3 are right; in S 2 the words are joined.

It follows from Sûtra 799 that to double the y in vaiyasva is a mistake, but a mistake which had to be pointed out and guarded against as early as the time of the Prātisākhya. In VIII, 26, 11, therefore, vaiyyasvāsya, as printed in my edition and repeated in Professor Aufrecht's, should be changed to vaiyasvāsya. MSS. S 1, S 3 are right, likewise P 1, P 2; but S 2 has the double mistake vayyasvāsya, as described in the Prātisākhya; another MS. of Wilson's has vaiyy. The same applies to VIII, 23, 24, and VIII, 24, 23. P 1 admits the mistaken spelling vaiyasva.

Some corrections that ought to be made in the Pada-pāṭha only, as printed in my edition, are pointed out in a note to Sûtra 738 of the Prātisākhya. Thus, according to Sûtra 583, 6, srûyāḥ in the Pada text of II, 10, 2, should be changed to sruyāḥ. MSS. P 1, P 2 have the short u.

In V, 7, 8, I had printed súkiḥ shma, leaving the a of shma short in accordance with the Prâtisākhya, Sūtra 514, where a string of words is given before which sma must not be lengthened, and where under No. 11 we find yāsmāi. Professor Aufrecht has altered this, and gives the ā as long, which is wrong. The MSS. S 1, S 2, S 3 have the short a.

Another word before which sma ought not to be lengthened is māvate. Hence, according to Sūtra 514, 14, I ought not to have printed in VI, 65, 4, shmā māvate, but shma māvate. Here Professor Aufrecht has retained the long ā, which is wrong. MSS. S 1, S 2, S 3 have the short a.

It follows from Sūtra 499 that in I, 138, 4, we should not lengthen the vowel of sú. Hence, instead of asyā ū shū na úpa sātāye, as printed in my edition and repeated by Professor Aufrecht, we should read asyā ū shú na úpa sātāye. S 1, S 2, S 3 have short u*.

In VII, 31, 4, I had by mistake printed viddhī instead of viddhī. The same reading is adopted by Professor Aufrecht (II, p. 24), but the authority of the Prâtisākhya, Sūtra 445, can hardly be overruled. S 1, S 2, S 3 have viddhī.

While in cases like these, the Prâtisākhya is an authority which, as far as I can judge, ought to overrule the authority of every MS., however ancient, we must in other cases depend either on the testimony of the best MSS. or be guided, in fixing on the right reading, by Sāyana and the rules of grammar. I shall therefore, in cases where I cannot consider Professor Aufrecht's readings as authoritative improvements, have to give my reasons why I adhere to the readings which I had originally adopted.

In V, 9, 4, I had printed by mistake purú yó instead of purī yó. I had, however, corrected this misprint in my edition of the Prâtisākhya, 393, 532. Professor Aufrecht decides in favour of purú with a short u, but against the authority of the MSS., S 1, S 2, S 3, which have purī.

* In the same verse, I, 138, 4, the shu in ó shú tvā should not be lengthened, for there is no rule, as far as I can see, in the Prâtisākhya that would require the lengthening of sú before tvā. See Prâtisākhya, 491.

It was certainly a great mistake of mine, though it may seem more excusable in a Romanised transcript, that I did not follow the writers of the best MSS. in their use of the Avagraha, or, I should rather say, of that sign which, as far as the Veda is concerned, is very wrongly designated by the name of Avagraha. Avagraha, according to the Prâtisâkhya, never occurs in the Samhitâ text, but is the name given to that halt, stoppage, or pause which in the Pada text separates the component parts of compound words. That pause has the length of one short vowel, i.e. one mâtrâ. Of course, nothing is said by the Prâtisâkhya as to how the pause should be represented graphically, but it is several times alluded to as of importance in the recitation and accentuation of the Veda. What we have been in the habit of calling Avagraha is by the writers of certain MSS. of the Samhitâ text used as the sign of the Vivṛtti or hiatus. This hiatus, however, is very different from the Avagraha, for while the Avagraha has the length of one mâtrâ, the Vivṛtti or hiatus has the length of $\frac{1}{4}$ mâtrâ, if the two vowels are short; of $\frac{1}{2}$ mâtrâ, if either vowel is long; of $\frac{3}{4}$ mâtrâ, if both vowels are long. Now I have several times called attention to the fact that though this hiatus is marked in certain MSS. by the sign $\ast$, I have in my edition omitted it, because I thought that the hiatus spoke for itself and did not require a sign to attract the attention of European readers; while, on the contrary, I have inserted that sign where MSS. hardly ever use it, viz. when a short initial a is elided after a final e or o; (see my remarks on pp. 36, 39, of my edition of the Prâtisâkhya.) Although I thought, and still think, that this use of the sign $\ast$ is more useful for practical purposes, yet I regret that, in this one particular, I should have deviated from the authority of the best MSS., and caused some misunderstandings on the part of those who have made use of my edition. If, for instance, I had placed the sign of the Vivṛtti, the $\ast$, in its proper place, or if, at least, I had not inserted it where, as we say, the initial a has been elided after e or o, Professor Bollensen would have seen at once that the authors of the Prâtisâkhyas fully agree with him in looking on this change, not as an elision, but as a contraction. If, as sometimes happens, final o or e remain unchanged before initial short a, this is called the Pañikāla and Prākya padavṛtti (Sūtra 137). If, on the contrary, final o or e become one (ekibhavati) with the initial short a, this is called the Abhinihita sandhi (Sūtra 138). While the former, the hiatus of the Pañikāla and Eastern schools, is marked by the writers of several MSS. by the sign *, the Abhinihita sandhi, being a sandhi, is not marked by any sign *.

I, 3, 12. rāgati (Aufr. p. 2) instead of rāgati (M. M. vol. i, p. 75) is wrong.

I, 7, 9. ya ékaḥ (Aufr. p. 5) should be yá ékaḥ (M. M. vol. i, p. 110), because the relative pronoun is never without an accent. The relative particle yathā may be without an accent, if it stands at the end of a pāda; and though there are exceptions to this rule, yet in VIII, 21, 5, where Professor Aufrecht gives yáthā, the MSS. are unanimous in favour of yathā (M. M. vol. iv, p. 480). See Phit-sūtra, ed. Kielhorn, p. 54.

I, 10, 11. ā tū (Aufr. p. 7) should be á tū (M. M. vol. i, p. 139), because ā is never without the accent.

I, 10, 12. gúshṭāḥ, which Professor Aufrecht specially mentions as having no final Visarga in the Pada, has the Visarga in all the MSS., (Aufr. p. 7, M. M. vol. i, p. 140.)

I, 11, 4. kávīr (Aufr. p. 7) should be kavír (M. M. vol. i, p. 143).

I, 22, 8, read rādhāmsi.

I, 40, 1 and 6. There is no excuse for the accent either on tvémahe or on vókema, while sákāñ in I, 51, 11, ought to have the accent on the first syllable.

I, 49, 3. Rosen was right in not eliding the a in divó ántebhyaḥ. S 1, S 2, S 3 preserve the initial a, nor does the Prātisākhya anywhere provide for its suppression.

I, 54, 8. kshátram (Aufr. p. 46) is a mere misprint for kshatrám.

* As to the system or want of system, according to which the Abhinihita sandhi takes place in the Saṃhitā, see p. xlviii seq.

I, 55, 7. vandanasrúd (Auf. p. 47) instead of vandanasrud (M. M. vol. i, p. 514) is wrong.

I, 57, 2. samásita instead of samásita had been corrected in my reprint of the first Mandala, published at Leipzig. See Bollensen, Zeitschrift der D. M. G., vol. xxii, p. 626.

I, 61, 7, read vishnuh ; I, 64, 2, read súkayah ; I, 64, 5, read dhūtayah.

I, 61, 16. Rosen had rightly printed hāriyoganā with a long ā both in the Samhitā and Pada texts, and I ought not to have given the short a instead. All the MSS., S 1, S 2, S 3, P 1, and P 2, give the long ā. Professor Aufrecht gives the short a in the Pada, which is wrong.

I, 67, 2 (4). vidántim (M. M. vol. i, p. 595) is perfectly right, as far as the authority of the MSS. and of Sāyana is concerned, and should not have been altered to vindántim (Auf. p. 57).

I, 72, 2, read vatsám ; I, 72, 6, read parśñ ; I, 76, 3, read dhákshy ; I, 82, 1, read yadá.

I, 83, 3. Rosen was right in giving ásamyattah. I gave ásamyatah on the authority of P 1, but all the other MSS. have tt.

I, 84, 1. indra (Auf. p. 68) cannot have the accent on the first syllable, because it does not stand at the beginning of a pāda (M. M. vol. i, p. 677). The same applies to indra, VI, 41, 4, (Auf. p. 429) instead of indra (M. M. vol. iii, p. 734) ; to ágne, I, 140, 12, (Auf. p. 130) instead of agne (M. M. vol. ii, p. 133). In III, 36, 3, on the contrary, indra, being at the head of a pāda, ought to have the accent on the first syllable, indra (M. M. vol. ii, p. 855), not indra (Auf. p. 249). The same mistake occurs again, III, 36, 10 (Auf. p. 250) ; IV, 32, 7, (Auf. p. 305) ; IV, 32, 12, (Auf. p. 305) ; VIII, 3, 12, (Auf. vol. ii, p. 86). In V, 61, 1, narah should have no accent ; whereas in VII, 91, 3, it should have the accent on the first syllable. In VIII, 8, 19, vipanyû should have no accent, and Professor Aufrecht gives it correctly in the notes, where he has likewise very properly removed the Avagraha which I had inserted.

I, 88, 1, read yâta (M. M. vol. i, p. 708), not yâtha (Auf. p. 72).

I, 90, 1, read rigunítĩ; I, 94, 11, read yavasádo (M. M. vol. i, p. 766), not yayasádo (Aufr. p. 80).

I, 118, 9. abhibhūtim (Aufr. p. 105) instead of abhíbhūtim (M. M. vol. i, p. 957) cannot be right, considering that in all other passages abhíbhūti has the accent on the second syllable. S 1, S 2, S 3 have the accent on the i.

I, 128, 4. ghrītasrīr (Aufr. p. 117) instead of ghrītasrīr (M. M. vol. ii, p. 52) is wrong.

I, 144, 2, read pārivritāh (M. M. vol. ii, p. 155) instead of parīvritāh (Aufr. p. 133).

I, 145, 5. Professor Aufrecht (p. 134) gives upamasyām, both in the Saṃhitā and Pada texts, as having the accent on the last syllable. I had placed the accent on the penultimate, (Pada, upa-māsyām, vol. ii, p. 161,) and whatever may be the reading of other MSS., this is the only possible accentuation. S 1, S 2, S 3 have the right accent.

I, 148, 4. pūrūni (Aufr. p. 136) instead of purūni (M. M. vol. ii, p. 170) does not rest, as far as I know, on the authority of any MSS. S 1, S 2, S 3 have purūni.

I, 151, 7. gakkhatho (Aufr. p. 137) should be gákkhatho (M. M. vol. ii, p. 181).

I, 161, 12. All the Pada MSS. read prá ábravīt, separating the two words and accentuating each. Though the accent is irregular, yet, considering the peculiar construction of the verse, in which prá and pró are used as adverbs rather than as prepositions, I should not venture with Professor Aufrecht (p. 144) to write prá abravīt. The MSS. likewise have á ágagan, I, 161, 4; and prá ágāh, VIII, 48, 2, not prá agāh, as Aufrecht gives in his second edition.

I, 163, 11. dhrágīman (Aufr. p. 147) instead of dhrágīmān (M. M. vol. ii, p. 245) is wrong.

I, 163, 13. gamyā (Aufr. p. 148) instead of gamyā (M. M. vol. ii, p. 246) is wrong.

I, 164, 17, read párena (M. M. vol. ii, p. 259) instead of paréna (Aufr. p. 149).

I, 164, 38. The first kikyúh ought to have the accent, and has it in all the MSS., (Aufr. p. 151, M. M. vol. ii, p. 278.)

I, 165, 5. A mere change of accent may seem a small matter, yet it is frequently of the highest importance in the interpretation of the Veda. Thus in I, 165, 5, I had, in accordance with the MSS. S 1, S 2, S 3, printed étân (vol. ii, p. 293) with the accent on the first syllable. Professor Aufrecht alters this into etân (p. 153), which, no doubt, would be the right form, if it were intended for the accusative plural of the pronoun, but not if it is meant, as it is here, for the accusative plural of éta, the speckled deer of the Maruts.

I, 165, 15. yâsishṭa (Aufr. p. 154) instead of yâsishṭa (M. M. vol. ii, p. 298) is not supported by any MS.

I, 169, 7, instead of patayánta (Aufr. p. 158), read patáyanta (M. M. vol. ii, p. 322).

I, 174, 7. kúyâvâkam (Aufr. p. 162) should be kúyavâkam (M. M. vol. ii, p. 340).

I, 177, 1. yuktá, which I had adopted from MS. S 3 (prima manu), is not supported by other MSS., though P 2 reads yuttká. Professor Aufrecht, who had retained yuktá in the text, has afterwards corrected it to yuktvá, and in this he was right. In I, 177, 2, gâhi for yâhi is wrong.

I, 188, 4. astrinan (Aufr. p. 171) instead of astrinan (M. M. vol. ii, p. 395) can only be a misprint.

II, 29, 6. kártâd (Aufr. p. 203) instead of kartâd (M. M. vol. ii, p. 560) is wrong.

II, 40, 4. ḥakra (Aufr. p. 214) instead of ḥakrá (M. M. vol. ii, p. 614) is wrong.

III, 7, 7. guh (Aufr. p. 226) instead of gúh (M. M. vol. ii, p. 666) is wrong; likewise III, 30, 10, gáh (Aufr. p. 241) instead of gáh (M. M. vol. ii, p. 792).

III, 17, 1. igyate (Aufr. p. 232) instead of agyate (M. M. vol. ii, p. 722) is impossible.

III, 47, 1. Professor Aufrecht (p. 256) puts the nominative índro instead of the vocative indra, which I had given (vol. ii, p. 902). I doubt whether any MSS. support that change (S 1, S 2, S 3 have indra), but it is clear that Sâyana takes indra as a vocative, and likewise the Nirukta.

III, 50, 2. Professor Aufrecht (p. 258) gives asya, both in the Samhitâ and Pada, without the accent on the last syllable. But all the MSS. that I know (S 1, S 2, S 3, P 1, P 2) give it with the accent on the last syllable (M. M. vol. ii, p. 912), and this no doubt is right. The same mistake occurs again in III, 51, 10, (Aufr. p. 259); IV, 5, 11, (Aufr. p. 281); IV, 36, 2, (Aufr. p. 309); V, 12, 3, (Aufr. p. 337); while in VIII, 103, 9, (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 195) the MSS. consistently give asya as unaccented, whereas Professor Aufrecht, in this very passage, places the accent on the last syllable. On the same page (p. 259) amandan, in the Pada, is a misprint for ámandan.

III, 53, 18. asi (Aufr. p. 262) instead of ási (M. M. vol. ii, p. 934) is wrong, because hí requires that the accent should remain on ási. S 1, S 2, S 3, P 1, P 2 have ási.

IV, 4, 7. svá áyushe (Aufr. p. 279) instead of svá áyushi (M. M. vol. iii, p. 37) is not supported by any good MSS., nor required by the sense of the passage. S 1, S 2, S 3, P 1, P 2 have áyushi.

IV, 5, 7. árupitam, in the Pada, (Aufr. p. 280) instead of árupitam (M. M. vol. iii, p. 45) is right, as had been shown in the Prātisākhya Sūtra 179, though by a misprint the long ā of the Samhitā had been put in the place of the short a of the Pada.

IV, 5, 9. read gaúh (M. M. vol. iii, p. 46) instead of góh (Aufr. p. 281).

IV, 15, 2. yāti, with the accent on the first syllable, is supported by all MSS. against yāti (Aufr. p. 287). The same applies to yāti in IV, 29, 2, and to várante in IV, 31, 9.

IV, 18, 11. amī, without any accent (Aufr. p. 293), instead of amī (M. M. vol. iii, p. 105) is wrong, because amī is never unaccented.

IV, 21, 9. no, without an accent (Aufr. p. 296), instead of nó (M. M. vol. iii, p. 120) is wrong.

IV, 26, 3. átithigvam (Aufr. p. 300) instead of atithigvam (M. M. vol. iii, p. 140) and VI, 47, 22, átithigvasya (Aufr. p. 437) instead of atithigvásyā (M. M. vol. iii, p. 776) are wrong, for atithigvá never occurs again except with the accent on the last syllable. The MSS. do not vary. Nor do they vary in the accentuation of kútsa: hence kútsam (Aufr. p. 300) should be kútsam (M. M. vol. iii. p. 139).

IV, 36, 6. Professor Aufrecht (p. 309) has altered the accent of āvishuḥ into āvishúḥ, but the MSS. are unanimous in favour of āvishuḥ (M. M. vol. iii, p. 181).

Again in IV, 41, 9, the MSS. support the accentuation of ágman (M. M. vol. iii, p. 200), while Professor Aufrecht (p. 313) has altered it to agman.

IV, 42, 9. ádâsat, being preceded by hí, ought to have the accent; (Aufrecht, p. 314, has adâsat without the accent.) For the same reason, V, 29, 3, ávindat (M. M. vol. iii, p. 342) ought not to have been altered to avindat (Aufr. p. 344).

IV, 50, 4. vyóman is a misprint for vyòman.

V, 15, 5. Professor Aufrecht (p. 338) writes dirghám instead of dógham (M. M. vol. iii, p. 314). This, no doubt, was done intentionally, and not by accident, as we see from the change of accent. But dógham, though it occurs but once, is supported in this place by all the best MSS., and has been accepted by Professor Roth in his Dictionary.

V, 34, 4. práyato (Aufr. p. 351) instead of práyatâ (M. M. vol. iii, p. 371) is wrong.

V, 42, 9. visármānam (Aufr. p. 358) instead of visarmānam (M. M. vol. iii, p. 402) is wrong.

V, 44, 4. parvané (Aufr. p. 360) instead of pravané (M. M. vol. iii, p. 415) is wrong.

V, 83, 4. vānti (Aufr. p. 389) instead of vānti (M. M. vol. iii, p. 554) is supported by no MSS.

V, 85, 6. āsiñkāntiḥ (Aufr. p. 391) instead of āsiñkāntiḥ (M. M. vol. iii, p. 560) is not supported either by MSS. or by grammar, as siñk belongs to the Tud-class. On the same grounds isháyantaḥ, VI, 16, 27 (M. M. vol. iii, p. 638), ought not to have been changed to ishayántaḥ (Aufr. p. 408), nor VI, 24, 7, avakarsáyanti (M. M. vol. iii, p. 687) into avakársayanti (Aufr. p. 418).

VI, 46, 10, read girvanas (M. M. vol. iii, p. 763) instead of gírvanas (Aufr. p. 435).

VI, 60, 10. krinoti (Aufr. p. 450) instead of krinóti (M. M. vol. iii, p. 839) is wrong.

VII, 40, 4. aryamá āpah (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 35), in the Pada, instead of aryamá āpaḥ (M. M. vol. iv, p. 81) is wrong.

VII, 51, 1. âdityânām (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 40) instead of adityânām (M. M. vol. iv, p. 103) is wrong.

VII, 64, 2. iām (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 50) instead of iām (M. M. vol. iv, p. 146) is wrong. In the same verse gopāk in the Pada should be changed in my edition to gopā.

VII, 66, 5. yó (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 51) instead of yé (M. M. vol. iv, p. 151) is indeed supported by S 3, but evidently untenable on account of atiprati.

VII, 72, 3. In abudhran Professor Aufrecht has properly altered the wrong spelling abudhnan; and, as far as the authority of the best MSS. is concerned (S 1, S 2, S 3), he is also right in putting a final ñ, although Professor Bollensen prefers the dental n; (Zeitschrift der D. M. G., vol. xxii, p. 599.) The fact is that Vedic MSS. use the Anusvâra dot for final nasals before all class-letters, and leave it to us to interpret that dot according to the letter which follows. Before I felt quite certain on this point, I have in several cases retained the dot, as given by the MSS., instead of changing it, as I ought to have done according to my system of writing Devanâgarî, into the corresponding nasal, provided it represents an original n. In I, 71, 1, S 2, S 3 have the dot in agushran, but S 1 has dental n. In IX, 87, 5, asrigran has the dot; i.e. S 1 has the dot, and nkh, dental n joined to kh; S 2 has nkh without the dot before the n; S 3 has the dot, and then kh. In IV, 24, 6, the spelling of the Samhitâ âvivenam tām would leave it doubtful whether we ought to read âvivenan tām or âvivenam tām; S 1 and S 3 read âvivenam tām, but S 2 has âvivenan tām; P 2 has âvi-venan tām, and P 1 had the same originally, though a later hand changed it to âvi-venam tām. In IV, 25, 3, on the contrary, S 1 and S 3 write âvivenam; S 2, âvivenam; P 1 and P 2, âvi-venam. What is intended is clear enough, viz. âvi-venan in IV, 24, 6; âvi-venam in IV, 25, 3. [In the new edition âvivenam has been left in both passages.]

VII, 73, 1. arvinâ (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 56) instead of arvinâ (M. M. vol. iv, p. 176) is wrong. On the same page, dhîshnye, VII, 72, 3, should have the accent on the first syllable.

VII, 77, 1. In this verse, which has been so often discussed (see Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 472 ; Böhlingk and Roth, Dictionary, vol. ii, p. 968 ; Bollensen, Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 463), all the MSS. which I know, read karāyai, and not either karāthai nor garāyai.

VIII, 2, 29. kirīnam (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 84) instead of kārīnam (M. M. vol. iv, p. 308) does not rest on the authority of any MSS., nor is it supported by Sāyana.

VIII, 9, 9. Professor Aufrecht has altered the very important form ākukyuvimāhi (M. M. vol. iv, p. 389) to ākukyavimāhi (vol. ii, p. 98). The question is whether this was done intentionally and on the authority of any MSS. My own MSS. support the form ākukyuvimāhi, and I see that Professor Roth accepts this form.

VIII, 32, 14. āyāntāram (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 129) instead of āyantāram (M. M. vol. iv, p. 567) is wrong.

VIII, 47, 15. dushvāpnyam (Aufr. vol. ii, p. 151) is not so correct as duśshvāpnyam (M. M. vol. iv, p. 660), or, better, dushshvāpnyam (Prātisākhya, Sūtras 255 and 364), though it is perfectly true that the MSS. write dushvāpnyam.

[I ought to state that all these errata have been corrected by Professor Aufrecht in his second edition.]

In the ninth and tenth Mandalas I have not to defend myself, and I need not therefore give a list of the passages where I think that Professor Aufrecht's text is not supported by the best MSS. My own edition of these Mandalas will soon be published, and I need hardly say that where it differs from Professor Aufrecht's text, I am prepared to show that I had the best authorities on my side.

Professor Aufrecht writes in the second edition of his Romanised text of the Rig-veda (p. iv): 'Um den Herren,

My own mistakes. die diese Druckfehler in majorem gloriam suam mit so grosser Schonung hervor-gehoben haben, einen Gegendienst zu erweisen, bemerke ich einige derselben.' Dieser Gegendienst, so gut er gemeint war, ist leider nicht sehr bedeutend ausgefallen, auch nicht immer in majorem gloriam Catonis.

In I, 161, 2, Professor Aufrecht objects to katuras krinotana. I felt doubtful about it, and in the commentary I printed katurah krinotana. In IV, 33, 5, the reading ātus kara is sanctioned by the authority of the Prātisākhya, Sūtra 281, 4.

In I, 181, 5, Aufrecht prefers mathrā; Sāyana, Böhtlingk and Roth, and I prefer mathnā.

In II, 11, 10, he has discovered that gûrvît was meant for gûrvât. Whitney still quotes gûrvît.

In III, 9, 4, he has discovered that apsu should be -psu; but this had been already corrected.

In III, 25, 2, the final a of vaha ought to be long in the Samhitā.

In IV, 19, 4, instead of drilhā ni read drilhāni.

In VII, 33, 2, instead of avrinītā read -vrinītā.

In VII, 35, 13, the Visarga in devagopāh should be deleted.

In VII, 42, 2, the Anusvāra in yumkshvā should be deleted.

In VIII, 2, 30, the anudāttatara should be shifted from the ultimate to the penultimate, dadhīré, not dadhīre.

In VIII, 51, 3, avishyanta was meant for arishyantam.

In VIII, 55, 5, for na read ā. The MSS. vary in both cases.

In IX, 108, 7, in vanakraksha, the kra was printed as ri. Professor Aufrecht might have seen it correctly printed in the index. Sāyana read vanarīksha.

In X, 28, 11, Professor Aufrecht thinks that the Pada should have godhāh instead of godhā. I think godhā is right, in spite of Professor Aufrecht's appeal to the silence of the Prātisākhya. The fact is that godhāh never occurs, while godhā occurs in the preceding verse, and again VIII, 69, 9.

After such a flourish of trumpets, we expected more from Professor Aufrecht; still we must learn to be grateful even for small mercies.

Having said so much in vindication of the text of the Rig-veda as published by me, and in defence of my principles of criticism which seem to me so self-evident as hardly to deserve the name of canones critici, I feel bound at the same time both to acknowledge some inaccuracies that have occurred in the index at the end of each volume, and to defend some entries in that index which have been challenged without sufficient cause.

It has been supposed that in the index at the end of my fourth volume, the seventeenth verse of the 34th hymn in the seventh Mandala has been wrongly assigned to Ahi Budhnya, and that one half only of that verse should have been reserved for that deity. I do not deny that we should be justified in deriving that sense from the words of the Anukramanikâ, but I cannot admit that my own interpretation is untenable. As Sâyana does not speak authoritatively on the subject, I followed the authority of Shadgurusishya. This commentator of the Anukramanikâ says: atra ka abgâm ukthair ahim grinisha ity ardharko • bganâmno * devasya stutiḥ; mâ no • hir budhnya ity ardharko • hribudhnyanâmno devasya ^b. Another commentator says: abgâm ukthair ardharko • hiḥ; uttaro mâ no • hir ity ahir budhnyaḥ. From this we learn that both commentators looked upon the Dvipadâs as ardharkas or half-verses, and ascribed the whole of verse 16 to Ahir abgâḥ, the whole of verse 17 to Ahir budhnyaḥ. It will be seen from an accurate examination of Sâyana's commentary on verse 17, that in the second interpretation of the second half of verse 17, he labours to show that in this portion, too, Ahir budhnyaḥ may be considered as the deity.

It is perfectly right to say that the words of the Anukramanikâ, abgâm aheḥ, signify that the verse beginning with abgâm, belongs to Ahi. But there was no misprint in my index. It will be seen that Shadgurusishya goes even beyond me, and calls that deity simply Abga, leaving out Ahi altogether, as understood. I was anxious to show the distinction between Abgâ Ahiḥ and Ahir Budhnyaḥ, as the deities of the two successive verses, and I did not expect that any reader could possibly misinterpret my entry ^c.

With regard to hymns 91 and 92 of the seventh Mandala, it is true, that in the index I did not mention that certain verses in which two deities are mentioned (91, 2 ;

* I find that Mr. Macdonell in his edition of the Sarvânukramanî reads ardharko • hinâmno. If this is right, part of my argument would fall.

^b MS. Wilson 379 has, ardharko nâmano daivatasya, and in the margin • hi. Ahirbudhnya seems to have been taken as one word.

^c The editor of the Bombay edition of the text of the Rig-veda assigns verse 16 to Ahi, verse 17 to Ahirbudhnya.

4-7; 92, 2), must be considered as addressed not to Vāyu alone, but to Vāyu and Indra. It will be seen from Sāyana's introduction to hymn 90, that he, too, wrongly limits the sentence of the Anukramanikā, aindryas ka yā dvivaduktāḥ, to the fifth and following verses of hymn 90, and that he never alludes to this proviso again in his introductory remarks to hymn 91 and 92, though, of course, he explains the verses, in which a dual occurs, as addressed to two deities, viz. Indra and Vāyu. The same omission, whether intentional or unintentional, occurs in Shadgurusishya's commentary. The other commentary, however, assigns the verses of the three hymns rightly. The subject has evidently been one that excited attention in very early days, for in the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, V, 20, we actually find that the word vām which occurs in hymn 90, 1, and which might be taken as a dual, though Sāyana explains it as a singular, is changed into te *.

In hymn VII, 104, rakshohavau might certainly be added as an epithet of Indrā-Somau, and Shadgurusishya clearly takes it in that sense. The Anukramanikā says: indrāsoma paññādhikaindrāsomam rākshoghnām śāpābhisāpaprāyam.

In hymn VIII, 67, it has been supposed that the readings Samada and Sāmada instead of Sammada and Sāmmada were due to a misprint. This is not the case. That I was aware of the other spelling of this name, viz. Sammada and Sāmmada, I had shown in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature (2nd ed.), p. 39, where I had translated the passage of the Sāṅkhāyana-sūtras in which Matsya Sāmmada occurs, and had also called attention to the Āsvalāyana-sūtras X, 7, and the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa XIII, 3, 1, 1,

* The interpunction of Dr. Haug's edition (p. 128) should be after te. Shadgurusishya says: ata eva brāhmaṇasūtrayoḥ praūge vāyavyatvāya prāvīraya sukāyo dadrire^b vām iti dvivaṭanasthāne ta ity ekavaṭanapāḥ/kaḥ kritāḥ, vām ity uktam^b ked aindratvam ka syād iti. Possibly the same change should be made in Āsvalāyana's Śrauta Sūtras, VIII, 11, and it has been made by Rāma Nārāyaṇa Vidyāratna. The remark of the commentator, however, dadrire ta iti prayogapāḥ/kaḥ, looks as if vām might have been retained in the text. The MSS. I have collated are in favour of te.

^b Mr. Macdonell (Sarvānukramanī, p. 133) inserts ta iti after dadrire.

where the same passage is found. I there spelt the name Sâmmada, because the majority of the MSS. were in favour of that spelling. In the edition of the Āsvalāyana-sûtras, which has since been published by Râma Nârâyana Vidyâranya, the name is spelt Sâmada. My own opinion is that Sâmmada is the right spelling, but that does not prove that Sâyana thought so; and unless I deviated from the principles which I had adopted for a critical restoration of Sâyana's text, I could not but write Sâmada in our passage. B 1 and B 4 omit sâmada, but both give samadâkhyasya; Ca. gives likewise samadâkhyasya, and A. semadâkhyasya. This, I believe, was meant by the writer for sammadâkhyasya, for in the passage from the Anukramanî both A. and Ca. give sâmmado. I then consulted the commentary of Shadgurusishya, and there again the same MS. gave twice sâmmada, once sâmada, which is explained by samadâkhyamahâmînarâgaputra. A better MS. of Shadgurusishya, MS. Wilson 379, gives the readings sâmmado, sâmmada, and sammadâkhyasya. The other commentary gives distinctly sâmanda. [I have adopted sammada in the new edition.]

In IX, 68, Professor Aufrecht adopts what he considers the bold reading Vatsapri; I prefer to be timid and allow Sâyana his own reading Vatsapri; see Sarvânukramanî, ed. Macdonell, pp. 34, 146.

It will be seen from these remarks that many things have to be considered before one can form an independent judgment as to the exact view adopted by Sâyana in places where he differs from other authorities, or as to the exact words in which he clothed his meaning. Such cases occur again and again. Thus in IX, 86, I find that Professor Aufrecht ascribes the first ten verses to the Akrishṭas, whereas Sâyana calls them Ākrishṭas. It is perfectly true that the best MSS. of the Anukramanîkā have Akrishṭa, it is equally true that the name of these Akrishṭas is spelt with a short a in the Harivamśa, 11,533, but an editor of Sâyana's work is not to alter the occasional mistakes of that learned commentator, and Sâyana certainly called these poets Ākrishṭas.

Verses 21-30 of the same hymn are ascribed by Professor Aufrecht to the Prisniyah. Here, again, several MSS. support that reading; and in Shadgurusishya's commentary, the correction of prisniyah into prisnayah is made by a later hand. But Sâyana clearly took prisnayah for a nominative plural of prisni, and in this case he certainly was right. The Dictionary of Böhtlingk and Roth quotes the Mahâbhârata, VII, 8728, in support of the peculiar reading of prisniyah, but the published text gives prisnayah. Professor Benfey, in his list of poets (Ind. Stud. vol. iii, p. 223), gives prisniyoga as one word, not prisniyogâ, as stated in the Dictionary of Böhtlingk and Roth, but this is evidently meant for two words, viz. prisnayo-gâh. However, whether prisniyah or prisnayah be the real name of these poets, an editor of Sâyana is bound to give that reading of the name which Sâyana believed to be the right one, i. e. prisnayah.*

Again, in the same hymn, Professor Aufrecht ascribes verses 31-40 to the Atris. We should then have to read tritiye-trayah. But Sâyana read tritiye trayah, and ascribes verses 31-40 to the three companies together of the Rishis mentioned before. On this point the MSS. admit of no doubt, for we read: katurthasya ka dasarkasya âkrishâtâ mâshâ ityâdinvinâmânas trayo ganâ drashâtârah. I do not say that the other explanation is wrong; I only say that, whether right or wrong, Sâyana certainly read trayah, not atrayah; and an editor of Sâyana has no more right to correct the text, supported by the best MSS., in the first and second, than in the third of these passages, all taken from one and the same hymn.

But though I insist so strongly on a strict observance of the rules of diplomatic criticism with regard to the text of the Rig-veda, nay, even of Sâyana, I insist equally strongly on the right of independent criticism, which ought to begin where diplomatic criticism ends. Considering the startling antiquity which we can claim for every letter and accent of our MSS., so far as they are authenticated by the Prâtisākhya, to say nothing of the passages of many hymns which are quoted verbatim in the Brāhmaṇas, the Kalpa-sūtras, the Nirukta, the Bṛihaddevatā, and the Anukramanis, I should deem it reckless to alter one single letter or one single accent in an edition of the hymns of the Rig-veda. As the text has been handed down to us, so it should remain; and whatever alterations and corrections we, the critical Mlekkhas of the nineteenth century, have to propose, should be kept distinct from that time-hallowed inheritance. Unlikely as it may sound, it is true nevertheless that we, the scholars of the nineteenth century, are able to point out mistakes in the text of the Rig-veda which escaped the attention of the most learned among the native scholars of the sixth century B.C. No doubt, these scholars, even if they had perceived such mistakes, would hardly have ventured to correct the text of their sacred writings. The authors of the Prâtisākhya had before their eyes or ears a text ready made, of which they registered every peculiarity, nay, in which they would note and preserve every single irregularity, even though it stood alone amidst hundreds of analogous cases. With us the case is different. Where we see a rule observed in 99 cases, we feel strongly tempted and sometimes justified in altering the 100th case in accordance with what we consider to be a general rule. Yet even then I feel convinced we ought not to do more than place our conjectural readings below the textus receptus of the Veda,—a text so ancient and venerable that no scholar of any historical tact or critical taste would venture to foist into it a conjectural reading, however plausible, nay, however undeniable.

* Professor Aufrecht in his new edition of the text (1877) adopts the more timid reading prisnayah. See also Bṛhat-Samhitâ, transl. by Kern, p. 2: Sikâtââ prisnayo gargâ vâ lakhilyâ marîpââ bhrîgavo-âgirasaḥ kaiva sūksmâs kânye maharshayah.

There can be no clearer case of corruption in the traditional text of the Rig-veda than, for instance, in I, 70, 4, where the Pada text reads:

vārdhān yām pūrvīḥ kshapāḥ ví-rûpāḥ sthātúḥ ka rátham ritá-pravitam.

All scholars who have touched on this verse, Professors Benfey, Bollensen, Roth, and others, have pointed out that instead of ka rátham, the original poet must have said karátham. The phrase sthátúh karátham, what stands and moves, occurs several times. It is evidently an ancient phrase, and hence we can account for the preservation in it of the old termination of the nom. sing. of neuters in ri, which here, as in the Greek μάρ-τυρ or μάρ-τυς, masc., appears as ur or us, while in the ordinary Sanskrit we find ri only. This nom. sing. neut. in us, explains also the common genitives and ablatives, pituh, mātuḥ, &c., which stand for pitur-s, mátur-s. This phrase sthátúh karátham occurs :

I, 58, 5. sthátúh karátham bhayate patatrínah.

What stands and what moves is afraid of Agni.

I, 68, 1. sthátúh karátham aktún ví ūrnot.

He lighted up what stands and what moves during every night.

I, 72, 6. pasún ka sthâtrñ karátham ka páhi.

Protect the cattle, and what stands and moves !

Here it has been proposed to read sthátúh instead of sthâtrñ, and I confess that this emendation is very plausible. One does not see how pasú, cattle, could be called immobilia or fixtures, unless the poet wished to make a distinction between cattle that are kept fastened in stables, and cattle that are allowed to roam about freely in the homestead. This distinction is alluded to, for instance, in the Satapatha-brâhmaṇa, XI, 8, 3, 2. saurya evaisha pasuḥ syâd iti, tasmâd etasminn astamite paravo badhyante ; badhnanty ekân yathâgoshtam, eka upasamâyanti.

I, 70, 2. gârbhaḥ ka sthâtâm gârbhaḥ karátham, (read sthâtrâm, and see Bollensen, Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 462.)

He who is within all that stands and all that moves.

The word karátha, if it occurs by itself, means flock, movable property :

III, 31, 15. ât ít sâkhi-bhyaḥ karátham sám airat.

He brought together, for his friends, the flocks.

VIII, 33, 8. puru-trâ karátham dadhe.

He bestowed flocks on many people.

X, 92, 13. prâ naḥ pûshâ karátham—avatu.

May Pûshan protect our flock !

Another idiomatic phrase in which sthâtúh occurs is sthâtúh gágatah, and here sthâtúh is really a genitive :

IV, 53, 6. gágatah sthâtúh ubháyasya yáh vaś.

He who is lord of both, of what is movable and what is immovable.

VI, 50, 7. vísvasya sthâtúh gágatah gánitríh.

They who created all that stands and moves.

VII, 60, 2. vísvasya sthâtúh gágatah ka gopáh.

The guardians of all that stands and moves. Cf. X, 63, 8.

I, 159, 3. sthâtúh ka satyám gágatah ka dhármani pu-trásya páthah padám ádvayávinah.

Truly while you uphold all that stands and moves, you protect the home of the guileless son. Cf. II, 31, 5.

But although I have no doubt that in I, 70, 4, the original poet said sthâtúh karátham, I should be loath to suppress the evidence of the mistake and alter the Pada text from ka rátham to karátham. The very mistake is instructive, as showing us the kind of misapprehension to which the collectors of the Vedic text were liable, and enabling us to judge how far the limits of conjectural criticism may safely be extended.

A still more extraordinary case of misunderstanding on the part of the original compilers of the Vedic texts, and likewise of the authors of the *Prātisākhya*s, the Niruktas, and other Vedic treatises, has been pointed out by Professor Kuhn. In an article of his, 'Zur ältesten Geschichte der Indogermanischen Völker' (Indische Studien, vol. i, p. 351), he made the following observation: 'The Lithuanian laukas, Lett. lauks, Pruss. laukas, all meaning field, agree exactly with the Sk. lokas, world, Lat. locus, Low Germ. (in East-Frisia and Oldenburg) louch, lôch, village. All these words are to be traced back to the Sk. uru, Gr. εὐρύς, broad, wide. The initial u is lost, as in Goth. rûms, O. H. G. rûmi, rûmin (Low Germ. rûme, an open uncultivated field in a forest), and the r changed into l. In support of this derivation it should be observed that in the Veda loka is frequently preceded by the particle u, which probably was only separated from it by the Diaskeuastæ, and that the meaning is that of open space.' Although this derivation has met with little favour, I confess that I look upon this remark, excepting only the Latin locus^a, i. e. stlocus, as one of the most ingenious of this eminent scholar. The fact is that this particle u before loka is one of the most puzzling occurrences in the Veda. Professor Bollensen says that loka never occurs without a preceding u in the first eight Mandalas, and this is perfectly true with the exception of one passage which he has overlooked, VIII, 100, 12, dyaúh dehí lokám vágrāya vi-skábhe, Dyu! give room for the lightning to step forth! Professor Bollensen (l. c. p. 603) reads vritráya instead of vágrāya, without authority. He objects to dyaúh as a vocative, which should be dyaŭh; but dyaúh may be dyóh, a genitive belonging to vágrāya, in which case we should translate, Make room for the lightning of Dyu to step forth!

But what is even more important is the fact that the occurrence of this unaccented u at the beginning of a pāda is against the very rules, or, at least, runs counter to the very observations which the authors of the Prātisākhya have made on the inadmissibility of an unaccented word in such a place, so that they had to insert a special provision, Prāt. 978, exempting the unaccented u from this observation: anudāttam tu pādādaṁ novargam vidyate padam, 'no unaccented word is found at the beginning of a pāda except u!' Although I have frequently insisted on the fact that such statements of the Prātisākhya are not to be considered as rules, but simply as more or less general statistical accumulations of facts actually occurring in the Veda, I have also pointed out that we are at liberty to found on these collected facts inductive observations which may assume the character of real rules. Thus, in our case, we can well understand why there should be none, or, at least, very few instances, where an unaccented word begins a pāda. We should not begin a verse with an enclitic particle in any other language either; and as in Sanskrit a verb at the beginning of a pāda receives ipso facto the accent, and as the same applies to vocatives, no chance is left for an unaccented word in that place, except it be a particle. But the one particle that offends against this general observation is u, and the very word before which this u causes this metrical offence, is loka. Can any argument be more tempting in favour of admitting an old form uloka instead of u loka? Lokám is preceded by u in I, 93, 6; II, 30, 6; (asmín bhayá-sthe kṛinutam u lokám, make room for us, grant an escape to us, in this danger!) IV, 17, 17; VI, 23, 3; 7 (with urúm); 47, 8 (urúm naḥ lokám, or ulokám?); 73, 2; VII, 20, 2; 33, 5 (with urúm); 60, 9 (with urúm); 84, 2 (with urúm); 99, 4 (with urúm); IX, 92, 5; X, 13, 2; 16, 4 (sukṛítām u lokám); 30, 7; 104, 10; 180, 3 (with urúm). Loké is preceded by u in III, 29, 8; V, 1, 6; loka-kṛt, IX, 86, 21; X, 133, 1. In all remaining passages u loká is found at the beginning of a pāda: lokáḥ, III, 37, 11; lokám, III, 2, 9 (u lokám u dvé (íti) úpa gāmím iyatuḥ); V, 4, 11; loka-kṛtnúm, VIII, 15, 4; IX, 2, 8. The only passages in which loka occurs without being preceded by u, are lokám, VI, 47, 8 (see above); VIII, 100, 12; X, 14, 9; 85, 20 (amṛtasya); lokáḥ, IX, 113, 9; lokán, X, 90, 14; loké, IX, 113, 7²; X, 85, 24.

^a On locus, see Corssen, Krit. Beitr. p. 463, and Aussprache, 2nd ed., p. 810. Corssen does not derive it from a root stā or sthā, but identifies it with Goth. strik-s, Engl. stroke, strecke.

It should be remembered that in the Gáthás the u of words beginning with urv° does not count metrically (Hübschmann, Ein Zoroastrisches Lied, p. 37), and that in Páli also uru must be treated as monosyllabic, in such passages as Mahāv., p. 2, line 5. The same applies to passages in the Ríg-veda, such as I, 138, 3; VII, 39, 3, where the metre requires uru to be treated as one syllable. In IX, 96, 15, the original reading may have been urur iva, instead of uru-iva.

Considering all this, I feel as convinced as it is possible to be in such matters, that in all the passages where u loká occurs and where it means space, carrière ouverte, freedom, we ought to read uloká; but in spite of this I could never bring myself to insert this word, of which neither the authors of the Bráhmaṇas nor the writers of the Prátrísákhyas or even later grammarians had any idea, into the text. On the contrary, I should here, too, consider it most useful to leave the traditional reading, and to add the corrections in the margin, in order that, if these conjectural emendations are in time considered as beyond the reach of doubt, they may be used as evidence in support of conjectures which, without such evidence, might seem intolerable in the eyes of timid critics.

There remains one difficulty about this hypothetical word uloká, which it is but fair to mention. If it is derived from uru, or, as Professor Bollensen suggests, from urvaḥ or urvak, the change of va into o would require further support. Neither maghon for maghavan, nor duroṇa for dura-vaṇa are strictly analogous cases, because in each we have an a preceding the va or u. Strictly speaking, uroka presupposes uravaka, as ślóka presupposes sravaka, or óka, house, avaka (from av, not from uḥ). It should also be mentioned that a compound such as RV. X, 128, 2, urúlokam (scil. antáriksham) is strange, and shows how completely the origin of loka was forgotten at the time when the hymns of the tenth Mandala were composed. But all this does not persuade us to accept Ascoli's conjecture (Lezioni di Fonologia Comparata, p. 235), that as uloga (but not uloka) is a regular Tamil form of loka, uloka in the Veda might be due to a reaction of the aboriginal dialects on the Vedic Sanskrit. We want far more evidence before admitting such a reaction during the Vedic period.

The most powerful instrument that has hitherto been applied to the emendation of Vedic texts, is the metre.

Metrical criticism.	Metre means measure, and uniform measure, and hence its importance for critical purposes, as second only to that of grammar. If our knowledge of the metrical system of the Vedic poets rests on a sound basis, any deviations from the general rule are rightly objected to; and if by a slight alteration they can be removed, and the metre be restored, we naturally feel inclined to adopt such emendations. Two safeguards, however, are needed in this kind of conjectural criticism. We ought to be quite certain that the anomaly is impossible, and we ought to be able to explain to a certain extent
---------------------	--

how the deviation from the original correct text could have occurred. As this subject has of late years received considerable attention, and as emendations of the Vedic texts, supported by metrical arguments, have been carried on on a very large scale, it becomes absolutely necessary to re-examine the grounds on which these emendations are supposed to rest. There are, in fact, but few hymns in which some verses or some words have not been challenged for metrical reasons, and I feel bound, therefore, at the very beginning of my translation of the Rîg-veda, to express my own opinion on this subject, and to give my reasons why in so many cases I allow metrical anomalies to remain which by some of the most learned and ingenious among Vedic scholars would be pronounced intolerable.

Even if the theory of the ancient metres had not been so carefully worked out by the authors of the *Prâtisākhya*s and the *Anukramanī*s, an independent study of the Veda would have enabled us to discover the general rules by which the Vedic poets were guided in the composition of their works. Nor would it have been difficult to show how constantly these general principles are violated by the introduction of phonetic changes which in the later Sanskrit are called the euphonic changes of Sandhi, and according to which final vowels must be joined with initial vowels, and final consonants adapted to initial consonants, until at last each sentence becomes a continuous chain of closely linked syllables.

It is far easier, as I remarked before, to discover the original and natural rhythm of the Vedic hymns by reading them in the Pada than in the Samhitā text, and after some practice our ear becomes sufficiently schooled to tell us at once how each line ought to be pronounced. We find, on the one hand, that the rules of Sandhi, instead of being generally binding, were treated by the Vedic poets as poetical licences only; and, on the other, that a greater freedom of pronunciation was allowed even in the body of words than would be tolerated in the later Sanskrit. If a syllable was wanted to complete the metre, a semivowel might be pronounced as a vowel, many a long vowel might be protracted so as to count for two syllables, and short vowels might be inserted between certain consonants, of which no trace exists in the ordinary Sanskrit. If, on the contrary, there were too many syllables, then the rules of Sandhi were observed, or two short syllables contracted by rapid pronunciation into one ; nay, in a few cases, a final m or s, it seems, was omitted. It would be a mistake to suppose that the authors of the *Prātisākhya*s were not aware of this freedom allowed or required in the pronunciation of the Vedic hymns. Though they abstained from introducing into the text changes of pronunciation which even we ourselves would never tolerate, if inserted in the texts of Homer and Plautus, in the Pāli verses of Buddha, or even in modern English poetry, the authors of the Prātisākhya were clearly aware that in many places one syllable had to be pronounced as two, or two as one. They were clearly aware that certain vowels, generally considered as long, had to be pronounced as short, and that in order to satisfy the demands of the metre, certain changes of pronunciation were indispensable. They knew all this, but they did not change the text. And this shows that the text, as they describe it, enjoyed even in their time a high authority, that they did not make it, but that, such as it is, with all its incongruities, it had been made before their time. In many cases, no doubt, certain syllables in the hymns of the Veda had been actually lengthened or shortened in the Samhitā text in accordance with the metre in which they are composed. But this was done by the poets themselves, or, at all events, it was not done by the authors of the Prātisākhya. They simply register such changes, but they do not enjoin them, and in this we, too, should follow their example. It is, therefore, a point of some importance in the critical restoration and proper pronunciation of Vedic texts, that in the rules which we have to follow in order to satisfy the demands of the metre, we should carefully distinguish between what is sanctioned by ancient authority, and what is the result of our own observations. This I shall now proceed to do.

First, then, the authors of the Prātisākhya distinctly admit that, in order to uphold the rules they have themselves laid down, certain syllables are to be pronounced as two syllables.

We read in Sûtra 527: 'In a deficient pāda the right number is to be provided for by protraction of semivowels (which were originally vowels), and of contracted vowels (which were originally two independent vowels).' It is only by this process that the short syllable which has been lengthened in the Samhitā, viz. the sixth, or the eighth, or the tenth, can be shown to have occupied and to occupy that place where alone, according to a former rule, a short syllable is liable to be lengthened. Thus we read :

I, 161, 11. $\bar{u}dv\bar{a}tsv\bar{a}sm\bar{a} \check{a}kr\bar{i}\check{n}\bar{o}t\bar{a}n\bar{a} tr\bar{i}nam.$

This would seem to be a verse of eleven syllables, in which the ninth syllable na has been lengthened. This, however, is against the system of the Prātisākhya. But if we protract the semivowel v in udvatsv, and change it back into u, which it was originally, then we gain one syllable, the whole verse has twelve syllables, na occupies the tenth place, and it now belongs to that class of cases which is included in a former Sûtra, 523.

The same applies to X, 103, 13, where we read :

$\bar{p}r\bar{e}t\bar{a} \check{g}\check{a}y\bar{a}t\bar{a} n\bar{a}r\bar{a}h.$

This is a verse of seven syllables, in which the fifth syllable is lengthened, without any authority. Let us protract pretā by bringing it back to its original component elements pra itā, and we get a verse of eight syllables, the sixth syllable now falls under the general observation, and is lengthened in the Samhitā accordingly.

The same rules are repeated in a later portion of the Prātisākhya. Here rules had been given as to the number of syllables of which certain metres consist, and it is added (Sûtras 972, 973) that where that number is deficient, it should be completed by protracting contracted vowels, and by separating consonantal groups in which semivowels (originally vowels) occur, by means of their corresponding vowel.

The rules in both places are given in almost identically the same words, and the only difference between the two passages is this, that, according to the former, semivowels are simply changed back into their vowels, while, according to the latter, the semivowel remains, but is separated from the preceding consonant by its corresponding vowel.

These rules therefore show clearly that the authors of the Prātisākhya, though they would have shrunk from altering one single letter of the authorised Samhitā, recognised the fact that where two vowels had been contracted into one, they might yet be pronounced as two; and where a vowel before another vowel had been changed into a semivowel, it might either be pronounced as a vowel, or as a semivowel preceded by its corresponding vowel. More than these two modifications, however, the Prātisākhya does not allow, or, at least, does not distinctly sanction. The commentator indeed tries to show that by the wording of the Sūtras in both places, a third modification is sanctioned, viz. the vocalisation, in the body of a word, of semivowels which do not owe their origin to an original vowel. But in both places this interpretation is purely artificial. Some such rule ought to have been given, but it was not given by the authors of the Prātisākhya. It ought to have been given, for it is only by observing such a rule that in I, 61, 12, gōr nā pārvā vī rādā tīrāskā, we get a verse of eleven syllables, and thus secure for dā in radā the eighth place, where alone the short a could be lengthened. Yet we look in vain for a rule sanctioning the change of semivowels into vowels, except where the semivowels can rightly be called kshaipra-varṇa (Sūtra 974), i.e. semivowels that were originally vowels. The independent (svābhāvika) semivowels, as e.g. the v in parva, are not included; and to suppose that in Sūtra 527 these semivowels were indicated by varṇa is impossible, particularly if we compare the similar wording of Sūtra 974*.

* It will be seen from my edition of the Prātisākhya, particularly from the extracts from Uvaṣa, given after Sūtra 974, that the idea of making two syllables out of goḥ, never entered Uvaṣa's mind. M. Regnier was right, Professor Kuhn (Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 187) was wrong. Uvaṣa, no doubt, wishes to show that original (svābhāvika) semivowels are liable to vyūha, or at least

We look in vain, too, in the Prâtisâkhya for another rule according to which long vowels, even if they do not owe their origin to the coalescence of two vowels, are liable to be protracted. However, this rule, too, though never distinctly sanctioned, is observed in the Prâtisâkhya, for unless its author observed it, he could not have obtained in the verses quoted by the Prâtisâkhya the number of syllables which he ascribes to them. According to Sûtra 937, the verse, RV. X, 134, 1, is a Mahâpañkti, and consists of six pâdas, of eight syllables each. In order to obtain that number, we must read :

sāmragām kārshānām.

We may therefore say that, without allowing any actual change in the received text of the Samhitâ, the Prâtisâkhya distinctly allows a lengthened pronunciation of certain syllables, which in the Pada text form two syllables; and we may add that, by implication, it allows the same even in cases where the Pada text also gives but one instead of two syllables. Having this authority in our favour, I do not think that we use too much liberty if we extend this modified pronunciation, recognised in so many cases by the ancient scholars of India themselves, to other cases where it seems to us required as well, in order to satisfy the metrical rules of the Veda.

Secondly, I believe it can be proved that, if not the authors of the Prâtisâkhya, those at least who constituted Shortening of the Vedic text which was current in the long vowels. ancient schools and which we now have before us, were fully aware that certain long vowels and diphthongs could be used as short. The authors of the Prâtisâkhya remark that certain changes which can take place before a short syllable only, take place likewise before the word no, although the vowel of this 'no' is by them supposed to be long. After having stated in Sûtra 523 that the eighth syllable of hendecasyllabics and dodecasyllabics, if short, is lengthened, provided a short syllable to vyavâya; but though this is true in fact, Uvaṭa does not succeed in his attempt to prove that the rules of the Prâtisâkhya sanction it.

follows, they remark that for this purpose naḥ or no is treated as a short syllable :

X, 59, 4. dyū-bhīḥ hītaḥ gāṛimā sū naḥ āstū, (Samh. sū nō āstū.)

Again, in stating that the tenth syllable of hendecasyllabics and dodecasyllabics, if short, is lengthened, provided a short syllable follows, the same exception is understood to be made in favour of naḥ or no, as a short syllable :

VII, 48, 4. nū devāsāḥ vāṛivāḥ kārtaṇā nāḥ, (Samh. kartāṇā no, bhūta no, &c.)

With regard to e being shortened before a short a where, according to rule, the a should be elided, we actually find that the Samhitā gives a instead of e in RV. VIII, 72, 5. vēti stótave ambyām, Samh. vēti stótava ambyām. (Prātis. 177, 5.)

I do not ascribe very much weight to the authority which we may derive from these observations with regard to our own treatment of the diphthongs e and o as either long or short in the Veda, yet in answer to those who are incredulous as to the fact that the vowels e and o could ever be short in Sanskrit, an appeal to the authority of those who constituted our text, and in constituting it clearly treated o as a short vowel, may not be without weight. We may also appeal to the fact that in Pāli and Prākṛit every final o and e can be treated as either long or short*. Starting from this we may certainly extend this observation, as it has been extended by Professor Kuhn, but we must not extend it too far. It is quite clear that in the same verse e and o can be used both as long and short. I give the Samhitā text :

I, 84, 17. ka īshate | tugyate kō bibhāyā
ko mamsate | santam indrām kō āntī,
kas tokāya | ka ibhāyotā rāyē
adhi bravat | tanve kō gānāyā.

* See Lassen, Inst. Linguae Præcriticæ, pp. 145, 147, 151; Cowell, Vararuchi, Introduction, p. xvii. Kedārabhaṭṭa says: Pāṇinir bhagavān prākṛitalakṣhaṇam api vakti samskrīṭād anyat, dīrghākṣhaṇam ka kutraṭid ekām mātrām upaitīti. Secundum d'Alwisium commentator docet sermonem esse de litteris Sanscriticis e et o. Cf. Pischel, De Grammaticis prakriticis, 1874.

But although there can be no doubt that e and o, when final, or at the end of the first member of a compound, may be treated in the Veda as anceps, there is no evidence, I believe, to show that the same licence applies to a medial or initial e or o. In IV, 45, 5, we must scan usrāḥ garante prati vastōḥ āsvinā, ending the verse with an epitritus tertius instead of the usual dijambus^a.

Thirdly, the fact that the initial short a, if following upon a word ending in o or e, is frequently not to be elided, is clearly recognised by the authors of the Prātisākhya (see p. xlviii). Nay, that they wished it to be pronounced even in passages where, in accordance with the requirements of the Prātisākhya, it had to disappear in the Saṃhitā text, we may conclude from Sūtra 978. It is there stated that no pāda should ever begin with a word that has no accent. The exceptions to this rule are few, and they are discussed in Sūtras 978-987. But if the initial a were not pronounced in I, 1, 9, sāḥ naḥ pitā-iva sūnāve āgne su-upāyanāḥ bhava, the second pāda would begin with āgne, a word which, after the elision of the initial a, would be a word without an accent^b.

Fourthly, the fact that other long vowels, besides e and o, may under certain circumstances be used as short in the Veda, is not merely a modern theory, but rests on no less an authority than Pāṇini himself.

^a See Professor Weber's pertinent remarks in Kuhn's Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 394. I do not think that in the verses adduced by Professor Kuhn, in which final o is considered by him as an iambus or trochee, this scanning is inevitable. Thus we may scan the Saṃhitā text:

I, 88, 2. rūkmō na śītraḥ svadhītīvān.

I, 141, 8. rāthō na yātaḥ śikvabhiḥ krīto.

I, 174, 3. sīmho na damē apāmsi vastōḥ.

VI, 24, 3. aksho na śakryoḥ sūra brīhan

X, 3, 1. inō rāgann aratiḥ samiddho.

This leaves but one of Professor Kuhn's examples (Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 192) unexplained: I, 191, 1. kaṅkato na kaṅkato, where iva for na would remove the difficulty.

^b This subject, the shortness of e and o in the Veda, has been admirably treated by Mr. Maurice Bloomfield, 'Final as before Sonants,' Baltimore, 1882. Reprinted from the American Journal of Philology, vol. iii, No. 1.

Pāṇini says, VI, 1, 127, that i, u, ri (see RV. Bh. IV, 1, 12) at the end of a pada (but not in a compound*) may remain unchanged, if a different vowel follows, and that, if long, they may be shortened. He ascribes this rule, or, more correctly, the first portion of it only, to Śākalya, Prāṭisākhya 155 seq.^b Thus ḥakri atra may become ḥakri atra or ḥakry atra. Madhū atra may become madhū atra or madhv atra. In VI, 1, 128, Pāṇini adds that a, i, u, ri may remain unchanged before ri, and, if long, may be shortened, and this again according to the teaching of Śākalya, i. e. Prāṭisākhya 136°. Hence brahmā rishih becomes brahmā rishih or brahmarshih; kumārī risyah becomes kumārī risyah or kumāry risyah. This rule enables us to explain a number of passages in which the Samhitā text either changes the final long vowel into a semivowel, or leaves it unchanged, when the vowel is a pragṛhya vowel. To the first class belong such passages as I, 163, 12; IV, 38, 10, vāgī árvā, Samh. vāgyárvā; VI, 7, 3, vāgī agne, Samh. vāgyāgne; VI, 20, 13, pakthī arkaḥ, Samh. pakthyārkaḥ; IV, 22, 4, sushmī ā góh, Samh. sushmyā góh. In these passages i is the termination of a nom. masc. of a stem ending in in. Secondly, IV, 24, 8, pātnī ákkha, Samh. pātnyákkha; IV, 34, 1, devī áhnām, Samh. devyáhnām; V, 75, 4, vānikī ā-hitā, Samh. vānikyāhitā; VI, 61, 4, avitrī avatu, Samh. avitryāvatu. In these passages the i is the termination of feminines. In X, 15, 4, ūtī arvāk, Samh. ūtyārvāk, the final i of the instrumental ūtī ought not to have been changed into a semivowel, for, though not followed by iti, it is to be treated as pragṛhya; (Prātis. 163, 5.) It is, however,

* There are certain compounds in which, according to Professor Kuhn, two vowels have been contracted into one short vowel. This is certainly the opinion of Hindu grammarians, also of the compiler of the Pada text. But most of them would admit of another explanation. Thus dhānu-arnasaḥ, which is divided into dhānu-arnasaḥ, may be dhānu-arnasaḥ (RV. V, 45, 2). Dhānarṇam, divided into dhāna-arnam, may have been dhāna-riṇam (RV. X, 46, 5). Satārṇasam (RV. VII, 100, 3) may be taken as satā-riṇasam instead of satā-arnasam.

^b In the Prāṭisākhya the rule which allows vowel before vowel to remain unchanged, is restricted to special passages, and in some of them the two vowels are savarṇa; cf. Sūtra 163.

^c Cf. Vāgasan. Prāṭisākhya, IV, 48; Indische Studien, vol. ix, 309; vol. x, 406.

mentioned as an exception in Sûtra 174, 9. The same applies to II, 3, 4, védî iti asyām, Samh. védyasyām. The pragr̥hya î ought not to have been changed into a semivowel, but the fact that it had been changed irregularly, was again duly registered in Sûtra 174, 5. These two pragr̥hya î therefore, which have really to be pronounced short, were irregularly changed in the Samhitā into the semivowel; and as this semivowel, like all semivowels, may take vyavāya, the same object was attained as if it had been written by a short vowel. With regard to pragr̥hya û, no such indication is given by the Samhitā text; but in such passages as I, 46, 13, sambhû iti sam-bhû ā gatam, Samh. sambhû ā gatam; V, 43, 4, bāhû iti ādrim, Samh. bāhû ādrim, the pragr̥hya û of the dual can be used as short, like the û of madhû atra, given as an example by the commentators of Pāṇini.

To Professor Kuhn, I believe, belongs the merit of having extended this rule to final ā. That the ā of the dual may become short, was mentioned in the Prātisākhya, Sûtra 309, though in none of the passages there mentioned is there any metrical necessity for this shortening (see p. lii). This being the case, it is impossible to deny that where this ā is followed by a vowel, and where Sandhi between the two vowels is impossible, the final ā may be treated as short. Whether it must be so treated, depends on the view which we take of the Vedic metres, and will have to be discussed hereafter. I agree with Professor Kuhn when he scans:

VI, 63, 1. kvā tyā vālgū pūru-hūtā ādyā, (Samh. puru-hūtādyā); and not kvā tyā vālgū pūruhūtādyā, although we might quote other verses as ending with an epitritus primus.

IV, 3, 13. mā vēsasyā prā-minātāh mā āpēh, (Samh. mapeh,) although the dispondeus is possible.

I, 77, 1. kāthā dāsemā āgnāyē kā āsmai, (Samh. kāsmai.)

VI, 24, 5. āryāh vāsasya pāri-ētā asti.

Even in a compound like tvā-ūta, I should shorten the first vowel, e. g.

X, 148, 1. tmanā tanā sānūyāmā tvā-ūtāh, although the passage is not mentioned by the Prātisākhya among those where a short final vowel in the eighth place is not lengthened when a short syllable follows*.

But when we come to the second pāda of a Gâyatri, and find there a long ā, and that long ā not followed by a vowel, I cannot agree with Professor Kuhn, that the long ā, even under such circumstances, ought to be shortened. We may scan :

V, 5, 7. vātasyā patmān īlītā dāivyā hotārā mānushāḥ.

The same choriambic ending occurs even in the last pāda of a Gâyatri, and is perfectly free from objection at the end of the other pādas.

So, again, we may admit the shortening of au to o in sāno avye and sāno avyaye, as quoted in the Prâtisākhya, 174 and 177, but this would not justify the shortening of au to av in Anushūbh verses, such as

V, 86, 5. mārtaṃyā devāu ādabhā, āmsā-ivā devāu ārvātē,

while, with regard to the Trishūbh and Gagatī verses, our views on these metres must naturally depend on the difficulties we meet with in carrying them out systematically.

There is no reason for shortening ā in

V, 5, 10. devānām guhyā nāmānī.

It is the second pāda of a Gâyatri here; and we shall see that, even in the third pāda, four long syllables occur again and again.

For the same reason I cannot follow Dr. Kuhn in a number of other passages where, for the sake of the metre, he proposes to change a long ā into a short one. Such passages are in the Pada text :

VI, 46, 11. dīdyāvāḥ tigma-mūrdhānāḥ, not mūrdhānāḥ.

I, 15, 6. rītunā yagñām āsāthe, not āsāthe.

V, 66, 2. sāmyak āsūryam āsāte, not āsāte.

V, 67, 1. vārshishām kshatram āsāthe, not āsāthe. See Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 122.

I, 46, 6. tām āsmē rāsāthām īshām, not rāsāthām īshām.

* I see that Professor Kuhn, vol. iv, p. 186, has anticipated this observation in esh/au, to be read ā-ish/au.

IV, 32, 23. bābhrū yāmes̄hū s̄obhetē, not s̄obhetē.

IV, 45, 3. ūtā priyām mād̄hunē yūṅgāthām rāthām, not yūṅgāthām rāthām.

V, 74, 3. kām ākkhā yūṅgāthē rāthām, not yūṅgāthē rāthām.

IV, 55, 1. dyāvābhūmī (iti) ādītē trāsīthām nāh, not trāsīthām nāh.

V, 41, 1. r̄tasyā vā sādasi trāsīthām nāh, not trāsīthām nāh.

I must enter the same protest against shortening other long vowels in the following verses which Professor Kuhn proposes to make metrically correct by this remedy :

I, 42, 6. hīranyāvāsīmāt-tāmā, not vāsīmāt-tāmā.

Here the short syllable of ganasrī-bhih in V, 60, 8, cannot be quoted as a precedent, for the i in ganasrī, walking in companies, was never long, and could therefore not be shortened. Still less can we quote nāri-bhyaḥ as an instance of a long i being shortened, for nāri-bhyaḥ is derived from nārih, not from nāri, and occurs with a short i even when the metre requires a long syllable; I, 43, 6. nri-bhyaḥ nāri-bhyāḥ gāvē. The fact is, that in the Rig-veda the forms nārishu and nāri-bhyaḥ never occur, but always nārishu, nāri-bhyaḥ; while from vāsī we never find any forms with short i, but always vāsishu, vāsī-bhih.

Nor is there any justification for change in I, 25, 16. gāvāḥ nā gāvīyūtiḥ ānū, the second pāda of a Gâyatrī. Nor in V, 56, 3. rīkshāḥ nā vāḥ mārūtāḥ śimī-vān āmāḥ. In most of the passages mentioned by Professor Kuhn on p. 122, this peculiarity may be observed, that the eighth syllable is short, or, at all events, may be short, when the ninth is long :

VI, 44, 21. vrīshnē tē īndūḥ vrīshabhā' pīpāyā.

I, 73, 1. syōnā-sīḥ ātithīḥ nā' prīnānāḥ.

VII, 13, 1. bhārē haviḥ nā barhishī' prīnānāḥ.

II, 28, 7. ēnāḥ krinvāntām āsurā bhrīnāntī.

Before, however, we can settle the question whether in these and other places certain vowels should be pronounced as either long or short, we must settle the more general

Metre and question, what authority we have for requiring a long or a short syllable in certain places of the Vedic metres.

If we declare ourselves free from all authority, either grammatical or metrical, we may either sacrifice all grammar to metre, or all metre to grammar. We may introduce the strictest rules of metre, determining the length or shortness of every syllable, and then ignore all rules of grammar and quantity, treat short syllables as long, or long ones as short, and thus secure the triumph of metre. Or, we may allow great latitude in Vedic metres, particularly in certain pādas, and thus retain all the rules of grammar which determine the quantity of syllables. It may be said even that the result would really be the same in either case, and that the policy of 'thorough' might perhaps prove most useful in the end. It may be so hereafter, but in the present state of Vedic scholarship it seems more expedient to be guided by native tradition, and to study the compromise which the ancient students of the Veda have tried to effect between grammar on one side and metre on the other.

Now it has generally been supposed that the Prātisākhya teaches that there must be a long syllable in the eighth or tenth place of Traishubha and Gāgata, and in the sixth place of Anushubha pādas. This is not the case. The Prātisākhya, no doubt, says, that a short final vowel, but not any short syllable, occupying the eighth or tenth place in a Traishubha and Gāgata pāda, or the sixth place in a Gāyatra pāda, is lengthened, but it never says that it must be lengthened; on the contrary, it gives a number of cases where it is not so lengthened. But, what is even more important, the Prātisākhya distinctly adds a proviso which shows that the ancient critics of the Veda did not consider the trochee as the only possible foot for the sixth and seventh syllables of Gāyatra, or for the eighth and ninth, or tenth and eleventh syllables of Traishubha and Gāgata pādas. They distinctly admit that the seventh and the ninth and the eleventh syllables in such pādas may be long, and that in that case the preceding short vowel is not lengthened. We thus get the iambus in the very place which is generally occupied by the trochee. According to the Prātisākhya, the general scheme for the Gāyatra would be, not only

$$+ + + + | + \overset{6}{-} \overset{7}{\cup} +,$$

but also

$$+ + + + | + \overset{6}{\cup} \overset{7}{-} +;$$

and for the Traishṭubha and Gāgata, not only

$$+ + + + | + + + \overset{8}{-} \overset{9}{\cup} + + (+),$$

but also

$$+ + + + | + + + \overset{8}{\cup} \overset{9}{-} + + (+).$$

And again, for the same pādas, not only

$$+ + + + | + + + + | \overset{10}{+} \overset{11}{-} \cup (+),$$

but also

$$+ + + + | + + + + | \overset{10}{+} \overset{11}{\cup} - (+).$$

Before appealing, however, to the Prātisākhya for the establishment of such a rule as that the sixth syllable of Ānushṭubha and the eighth or tenth syllable of Traishṭubha and Gāgata pādas must be lengthened, provided a short syllable follows, it is indispensable that we should have a clear appreciation of the real character of the Prātisākhya. If we carefully follow the thread which runs through these books, we shall soon perceive that, even with the proviso that a short syllable follows, the Prātisākhya never teaches that certain final vowels must be lengthened. The object of the Prātisākhya, as I pointed out on a former occasion, is to register all the facts which possess a phonetic interest. In doing this, all kinds of plans are adopted in order to bring as large a number of cases as possible under general categories. These categories are purely technical and external, and they never assume, with the authors of the Prātisākhya, the character of general rules. Let us now, after these preliminary remarks, return to the Sūtras 523 to 535, which we discussed before. The Prātisākhya simply says that certain syllables which are short in the Pada, if occupying a certain place in a verse, are lengthened in the Samhitā, provided a short syllable follows. This looks, no doubt, like a general rule which should be carried out under all circumstances. But this idea never entered the minds of the authors of the Prātisākhya. They only give this rule as the most convenient way of registering the lengthening of certain syllables which have actually been lengthened in the text of the Samhitā, while they remain short in the Pada; and after having done this, they proceed to give a number of verses where the same rule might be supposed to apply, but where in the text of the Samhitā the short syllable has not been lengthened. After having given a long string of words which are short in the Pada and long in the Samhitā, and where no intelligible reason of their lengthening can be given, at least not by the authors of the Prātisākhya, the Prātisākhya adds in Sūtra 523, 'The final vowel of the eighth syllable is lengthened in pādas of eleven and twelve syllables, provided a syllable follows which is short in the Samhitā.' As instances the commentator gives (Samhitā text):

I, 32, 4. tādītñā sātṛum nā kīlā vivītse.

I, 94, 1. āgnē sākhyē mā rishāmā vāyām tāvā.

Then follows another rule (Sūtra 525) that 'The final vowel of the tenth syllable in pādas of eleven and twelve syllables is lengthened, provided a syllable follows which is short in the Samhitā.' As instances the commentator gives:

III, 54, 22. āhā vīsvā sumānā dīdihī nāh.

II, 34, 9. āva rudrā asāsō hantānā vādhaḥ.

Lastly, a rule is given (Sūtra 526) that 'The final vowel of the sixth syllable is lengthened in a pāda of eight syllables, provided a syllable follows which is short:'

I, 5, 10. īśānō yāvāyā vādham.

If the seventh syllable is long no change takes place:

IX, 67, 30. ā pāvāsvā devā sōmā.

While we ourselves should look upon these rules as founded in the very nature of the metre, which, no doubt, to a certain extent they are, the authors of the Prātisākhya use them simply as convenient nets for catching as many cases as possible of lengthened syllables actually occurring in the text of the Samhitā. For this purpose, and in order to avoid giving a number of special rules, they add in this place an observation, very important to us as throwing light on the real pronunciation of the Vedic hymns at the time when our Samhitā text was finally settled, but with them again a mere expedient for enlarging the preceding rules, and thus catching more cases of lengthening at one haul. They say in Sūtra 527, that in order to get the right number of syllables in such verses, we must pronounce sometimes one syllable as two. Thus only can the lengthened syllable be got into one of the places required by the preceding Sūtra, viz. the sixth, the eighth, or the tenth place, and thus only can a large number of lengthened syllables be comprehended under the same general rule of the Prātisākhya. In all this we ourselves can easily recognise a principle which guided the compilers of the Samhitā text, or the very authors of the hymns, in lengthening syllables which in the Pada text are short, and which were liable to be lengthened because they occupied certain places on which the stress of the metre would naturally fall. We also see quite clearly that these compilers, or those whose pronunciation they tried to perpetuate, must have pronounced certain syllables as two syllables, and we naturally consider that we have a right to try the same expedient in other cases where to us, though not to them, the metre seems deficient, and where it could be rendered perfect by pronouncing one syllable as two. Such thoughts, however, never entered the minds of the authors of the Prātisākhyas, who are satisfied with explaining what is, according to the authority of the Samhitā, and who never attempt to say what ought to be, even against the authority of the Samhitā. While in some cases they have ears to hear and to appreciate the natural flow of the poetical language of the Rishis, they seem at other times as deaf as the adder to the voice of the charmer.

A general rule, therefore, in our sense of the word, that the eighth syllable in hendecasyllabics and dodecasyllabics, the tenth syllable in hendecasyllabics and dodecasyllabics, and the sixth syllable in octosyllabics should be lengthened, rests in no sense on the authority of ancient grammarians. Even as a mere observation, they restrict it by the condition that the next syllable must be short, in order to provoke the lengthening of the preceding syllable, thereby sanctioning, of course, many exceptions; and they then proceed to quote a number of cases where, in spite of all, the short syllable remains short*. In some of these quotations they are no doubt wrong, but in most of them their statement cannot be disputed.

As to the eighth syllable being short in hendecasyllabics and dodecasyllabics, they quote such verses as,

VI, 66, 4. āntār (īti) śāntāḥ āvādyānī pūnānāḥ.

Thus we see that in VI, 44, 9, vārshīyāḥ vāyāḥ krīṇūhī śakībhīḥ, hi remains short; while in VI, 25, 3, gāhī vrīṣṇyānī krīṇūhī pārākāḥ, it is lengthened in the Samhitā, the only difference being that in the second passage the accent is on hī.

As to the tenth syllable being short in a dodecasyllabic, they quote

II, 27, 14. āditē mītrā vāruṇā ūtā mrīḷā.

As to the tenth syllable being short in a hendecasyllabic, they quote

II, 20, 1. vāyām tē vāyāḥ īndrā viddhī sū nāḥ.

As to the sixth syllable being short in an octosyllabic, they quote

VIII, 23, 26. māhāḥ vīśvān ābhī sātāḥ.

A large number of similar exceptions are collected from

* 'Wo die achtsilbigen Reihen mit herbeigezogen sind, ist es in der Regel bei solchen Liedern geschehen, die im Ganzen von der regelmässigen Form weniger abweichen, und für solche Fälle, wo auch das Prātisākhya die Längung der sechsten Silbe in achtsilbigen Reihen vorschreibt, nämlich wo die siebente von Natur kurz ist. Die achtsilbigen Reihen bedürfen einer erneuten Durchforschung, da es mehrfach schwer fällt, den Samhitāttext mit der Vorschrift der Prātisākhya in Übereinstimmung zu bringen.' Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 450; and still more strongly, p. 458.

528, 3 to 534, 94, and this does not include any cases where the ninth, the eleventh, or the seventh syllable is long, instead of being short, while it does include cases where the eighth syllable is long, though the ninth is not short, or, at least, is not short according to the views of the collectors of these passages. See Sûtra 522, 6.

Besides the cases mentioned by the Prâtisâkhya itself, where a short syllable, though occupying a place which would seem to require lengthening, remains short, there are many others which the Prâtisâkhya does not mention, because, from its point of view, there was no necessity for doing so. The Prâtisâkhya has been blamed^a for omitting such cases as I, 93, 6, urum yagñāya kakrathūr u lokam; or I, 96, 1, devā agnim dhârayan drāvinodām. But though occupying the eighth place, and though followed by a short syllable, these syllables could never fall under the general observation of the Prâtisâkhya, because that general observation refers to final vowels only, but not to short syllables in general. Similar cases are I, 107, 1^a; 122, 9; 130, 10; 152, 6; 154, 1; 158, 5^a; 163, 2; 167, 10^a; 171, 4; 173, 6; 179, 1^a; 182, 8^a; 186, 6, &c.

If, therefore, we say that, happen what may, these metrical rules must be observed, and the text of the Veda altered in order to satisfy the requirements of these rules, we ought to know at all events that we do this on our own responsibility, and that we cannot shield ourselves behind the authority of Saunaka or Kâtyâyana. Now it is well known that Professor Kuhn^b has laid down the rule that the Traishṭubha pādas must end in a bacchius or amphibrachys ∪-∪, and the Gāgata pādas in a dijambus or pæon secundus ∪-∪∪. With regard to Ānushṭubha pādas, he requires the dijambus or pæon secundus ∪-∪∪ at the end of a whole verse only, allowing greater freedom in the formation of the preceding pādas. In a later article, however, the final pāda, too, in Ânushṭubha metre is allowed greater freedom, and the rule, as above given, is strictly maintained with regard to the Traishṭubha and Gāgata pādas only.

^a 'Dazu kommt, dass der uns vorliegende Samhitātēxt vielfältig gar nicht mit Saunaka's allgemeiner Regel übereinstimmt, indem die Verlängerung kurzer Silben nicht unter den Bedingungen eingetreten ist, die er vorschreibt.' Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 459.

^b Beiträge zur Vergleichenden Sprachforschung, vol. iii, p. 118.

This subject is so important, and affects so large a number of passages in the Veda, that it requires the most careful examination. The Vedic metres, though at first sight very perplexing, are very simple, if reduced to their primary elements. The authors of the Prātisākhya have elaborated a most complicated system. Counting the syllables in the most mechanical manner, they have assigned nearly a hundred names to every variety which they discovered in the hymns of the Rig-veda*. But they also observed that the constituent elements of all these metres were really but four, (Sûtras 988, 989):

1. The Gâyatra pāda, of eight syllables, ending in ॐ -.
2. The Vairāga pāda, of ten syllables, ending in --.
3. The Traishṭubha pāda, of eleven syllables, ending in --.
4. The Gāgata pāda, of twelve syllables, ending in ॐ -.

Then follows an important rule, Sûtra 990: 'The penultimate syllable,' he says, 'in a Gâyatra and Gāgata pāda is light (laghu), in a Vairāga and Traishṭubha pāda heavy (guru).' This is called their vr̥tta.

This word vr̥tta, which is generally translated by metre, had evidently originally a more special meaning. It meant the final rhythm, or if we take it literally, the turn of a line, for it is derived from vr̥t, to turn. Hence vr̥tta is the same word as the Latin versus, verse; but I do not wish to decide whether the connection between the two words is historical, or simply etymological. In Latin, versus is always supposed to have meant originally a furrow, then a line, then a verse. In Sanskrit the metaphor that led to the formation of vr̥tta, in the sense of final rhythm, has nothing to do with ploughing. If, as I have tried to prove (Chips from a German Workshop, vol. i, p. 84), the names assigned to metres and metrical language were derived from words originally referring to choregic movements, vr̥tta must have meant the turn, i. e. the last step of any given movement; and this turn, as determining the general character of the whole movement, would naturally be regulated by more severe rules, while greater freedom would be allowed for the rest.

* See Appendix to my edition of the Prātisākhya, p. cccvi.

Having touched on this subject, I may add another fact in support of my view. The words Trishṭubh and Anushṭubh, names for the most common metres, are generally derived from a root stubbh, to praise. I believe they should be derived from a root stubbh, which is preserved in Greek, not only in στυφελός, hard, στυφελίζω, to strike hard, but in the root στεμφ, from which στέμφυλον, stamped or pressed olives or grapes, and ἀστεμφής, untrodden (grapes), then unshaken; and in στέμβω, to shake, to ram, στοβέω, to scold, &c. In Sanskrit this root is mentioned in the Dhātupāṭha X, 34, shtubhu stambhe, and it exists in a parallel form as stambh, lit. to stamp down, then to fix, to make firm, with which Bopp has compared the German stampfen, to stamp; (Glossarium, s. v. stambh.) I therefore look upon Trishṭubh as meaning originally tripudium, (supposing this word to be derived from tri and pes, according to the expression in Horace, pepulisse ter pede terram, Hor. Od. iii. 18,) and I explain its name ‘Three-step,’ by the fact that the three last syllables ṭ – ṭ, which form the characteristic feature of that metre, and may be called its real vr̥tta or turn, were audibly stamped at the end of each turn or strophe. I explain Anushṭubh, which consists of four equal pādas, each of eight syllables, as the ‘After-step,’ because each line was stamped regularly after the other, possibly by two choruses, each side taking its turn. There is one passage in the Veda where Anushṭubh seems to have preserved this meaning:

X, 124, 9. anu-stúbham ánu karkûryámānam índram ní kikyuh kaváyah manishá.

Poets by their wisdom discovered Indra dancing to an Anushṭubh.

In V, 52, 12, khandah-stúbhah kubhanyávaḥ útsam á kīrīṇaḥ nṛītuḥ, in measured steps (i.e. stepping the metre) and wildly shouting the gleemen have danced toward the spring.

Other names of metres which point to a similar origin, i.e. to their original connection with dances, are Pada-paṅkti, 'Step-row;' Nyāṅku-sāriṇī, 'Roe-step;' Abhisāriṇī, 'Contre-danse,' &c.

If now we return to the statement of the Prātisākhya in reference to the vṛittas, we should observe how careful its author is in his language. He does not say that the penultimate is long or short, but he simply states, that, from a metrical point of view, it must be considered as light or heavy, which need not mean more than that it must be pronounced with or without stress. The fact that the author of the Prātisākhya uses these terms, laghu and guru, instead of hrasva, short, and dīrgha, long, shows in fact that he was aware that the penultimate in these pādas is not invariably long or short, though, from a metrical point of view, it is always heavy or light.

It is perfectly true that if we keep to these four pādas, (to which one more pāda, viz. the half Vairāga, consisting of five syllables, might be added,) we can reduce nearly all the hymns of the Rig-veda to their simple elements which the ancient poets combined together, in general in a very simple way, but occasionally with greater freedom. The most important strophes, formed out of these pādas, are,

1. Three Gāyatra pādas=the Gāyatrī, (24 syllables.)
2. Four Gāyatra pādas=the Anuṣṭubh, (32 syllables.)
3. Four Vairāga pādas=the Virāg, (40 syllables.)
4. Four Traishṭubha pādas=the Trishṭubh, (44 syllables.)
5. Four Gāgata pādas=the Gagatī, (48 syllables.)

Between the Gāyatrī and Anuṣṭubh strophes, another strophe may be formed, by mixture of Gāyatra and Gāgata pādas, consisting of 28 syllables, and commonly called Uṣṇih; likewise between the Anuṣṭubh and the Virāg, a strophe may be formed, consisting of 36 syllables, and commonly called Bṛīhatī.

In a collection of hymns, however, like that of the Rig-veda, where poems of different ages, different places, and different families have been put together, we must be prepared for exceptions to many rules. Thus, although the final turn of the hendecasyllabic Traishṭubha is, as a rule, the bacchius, ◡ — —, yet if we take, for instance, the 77th hymn of the tenth Maṇḍala, we clearly perceive another hendecasyllabic pāda of a totally different structure, and worked up into one of the most beautiful strophes by an ancient poet. Each line is divided into two halves, the first consisting of seven syllables, being an exact counterpart of the first member of a Saturnian verse (fate Romae Metelli); the second a dijambus, answering boldly to the broken rhythm of the first member*. We have, in fact, a Trishṭubh where the turn or the three-step, ◡ — —, instead of being at the end, stands in the middle of the line.

X, 77, 1-5, in the Pada text :

1. ābhṛā-prūṣhāḥ nā vākā' prūṣhā vāsū,
hāvishmāntāḥ nā yāgñāḥ' vī-gānūṣhāḥ | &c.

Another strophe, the nature of which has been totally misapprehended by native metrists, occurs in IV, 10. It is there called Padapañkti and Mahāpadapañkti; nay, attempts have been made to treat it even as an Ushnih, or as a kind of Gāyatrī. The real character of that strophe is so palpable that it is difficult to understand how it could have been mistaken. It consists of two lines, the first embracing three or four feet of five syllables each, having the ictus on the first and the fourth syllables, and resembling the last line of a Sapphic verse. The second line is simply

* Professor Kuhn (vol. iii, p. 450) is inclined to admit the same metre as varying in certain hymns with ordinary Traishṭubha pādas, but the evidence he brings forward is hardly sufficient. Even if we object to the endings ◡ — ◡ — and — — ◡ —, V, 33, 4, may be a Gāgata, with vyūha of dāsa, the remark quoted from the Prātisākhya being of no consequence on such points; and the same remedy would apply to V, 41, 5, with vyūha of eshe. In VI, 47, 31, vyūha of arvaparnaiḥ; in I, 33, 9, vyūha of indra and rodasī; in II, 24, 5, vyūha of mād̥bhiḥ would produce the same effect; while in I, 121, 8, we must either admit the Traishṭubha vṛtta — ◡ — or scan dhukshān. In III, 58, 6, I should admit vyūha for narā; in IV, 26, 6, for māṇḍram; in I, 100, 8, for g̃yotīḥ, always supposing that we consider the ending — — ◡ — incompatible with a Trishṭubh verse.

a Trishūbh. It is what we should call an asynartete strophe, and the contrast of the rhythm in the first and second lines is very effective. I am not certain whether Professor Bollensen, who has touched on this metre in an article just published (Zeitschrift der D. M. G., vol. xxii, p. 572), shares this opinion. He has clearly seen that the division of the lines, as given in the MSS. of the Samhitā text, is wrong; but he seems inclined to admit the same rhythm throughout, and to treat the strophe as consisting of four lines of five syllables each, and one of six syllables, which last line is to submit to the prevailing rhythm of the preceding lines. If we differ, however, as to the internal architecture of this strophe, we agree in condemning the interpretation proposed by the Prātisākhya; and I should, in connection with this, like to call attention to two important facts: first, that the Samhitā text, in not changing, for instance, the final t of martāt, betrays itself as clearly later than the elaboration of the ancient theory of metres, later than the invention of such a metre as the Padapañkti; and secondly, that the accentuation, too, of the Samhitā is thus proved to be posterior to the establishment of these fanciful metrical divisions, and hence cannot throughout claim so irrefragable an authority as certainly belongs to it in many cases. I give the Samhitā text:

1. Āgnē tam ādyā | āsvām nā stōmāiḥ | krātūm nā bhādrām, hrīdisprīṣām rīdhīyāmā tā ōhāiḥ.
2. Ādhā hy āgnē | krātōr bhādrāsyā | dākshāsyā sādhoḥ, rāthīr rītāsyā brīhātō bābhūtha, &c.

Now it is perfectly true that, as a general rule, the syllables composing the vṛtta or turn of the different metres, and described by the Prātisākhya as heavy or light, are in reality long or short. The question, however, is this, have we a right, or are we obliged, in cases where that syllable is not either long or short, as it ought to be, so to alter the text, or so to change the rules of pronunciation, that the penultimate may again be what we wish it to be?

If we begin with the Gāyatra pāda, we have not to read long before we find that it would be hopeless to try to crush the Gāyatrī verses of the Vedic R̥ishis on this Procrustean bed. Even Professor Kuhn very soon perceived that this was impossible. He had to admit that in the Gāyatrī the two first pādas, at all events, were free from this rule, and though he tried to retain it for the third or final pāda, he was obliged after a time to give it up even there. Again, it is perfectly true, that in the third pāda of the Gāyatrī, and in the second and fourth pādas of the Anushūbh strophe, greater care is taken by the poets to secure a short syllable for the penultimate, but here, too, exceptions cannot be entirely removed. We have only to take such a single hymn as I, 27, and we shall see that it would be impossible to reduce it to the uniform standard of Gāyatrī pādas, all ending in a dijambus.

But what confirms me even more in my view that such strict uniformity must not be looked for in the ancient hymns of the R̥ishis, is the fact that in many cases it would be so very easy to replace the irregular by a regular dipodia. Supposing that the original poets had restricted themselves to the dijambus, who could have put in the place of that regular dijambus an irregular dipodia? Certainly not the authors of the Prātisākhya, for their ears had clearly discovered the general rhythm of the ancient metres; nor their predecessors, for they had in many instances preserved the tradition of syllables lengthened in accordance with the requirements of the metre. I do not mean to insist too strongly on this argument, or to represent those who handed down the tradition of the Veda as endowed with anything like apaurusheyatva. Strange accidents have happened in the text of the Veda, but they have generally happened when the sense of the hymns had ceased to be understood; and if anything helped to preserve the Veda from greater accidents, it was due, I believe, to the very fact that the metre continued to be understood, and that oral tradition, however much it might fail in other respects, had at all events to satisfy the ears of the hearers. I should have been much less surprised if all irregularities in the metre had been smoothed down by the flux and reflux of oral tradition, a fact which is so apparent in the text of Homer, where the gaps occasioned by the loss of the digamma, were made good by the insertion of unmeaning particles; but I find it difficult to imagine by what class of men, who must have lived between the original poets and the age of the Prâtisâkhyas, the simple rhythm of the Vedic metres should have been disregarded, and the sense of rhythm, which ancient people possess in a far higher degree than we ourselves, been violated through crude and purposeless alterations. I shall give a few specimens only. What but a regard for real antiquity could have induced people in VIII, 2, 8, to preserve the defective foot of a Gâyatrî verse, śamānē ādhī bhārmān? Any one acquainted with Sanskrit would naturally read śamānē ādhī bhārmānī. But who would have changed bhārmāni, if that had been there originally, to bhārmān? I believe we must scan śamānē ādhī bhārmān, or śamānē ādhī bhārmān, the pæon tertius being a perfectly legitimate foot at the end of a Gâyatrî verse. In X, 158, 1, we can understand how an accident happened. The original poet may have said : Śūryō nō dīvas pātu pātu vātō āntārikshāt, āgnīr nāḥ pārthivēbhyaḥ. Here one of the two pātu was lost. But if in the same hymn we find in the second verse two feet of nine instead of eight syllables each, I should not venture to alter this except in pronunciation, because no reason can be imagined why any one should have put these irregular lines in the place of regular ones.

In V, 41, 10, grīṇīte āgnīr ētārī nā sūshāih, sōḥīshkēso nī rīnātī vanā, every modern Pandit would naturally read vanāni instead of vanā, in order to get the regular Trishubh metre. But this being the case, how can we imagine that even the most ignorant member of an ancient Parishad should wilfully have altered vanāni into vanā? What surprises one is, that vanā should have been spared, in spite of every temptation to change it into vanāni, for I cannot doubt for one moment that vanā is the right reading, only that the ancient poets pronounced it vāṇā. Wherever we alter the text of the Rig-veda by conjecture, we ought to be able, if possible, to give some explanation how the mistake which we wish to remove came to be committed. If a passage is obscure, difficult to construe, if it contains words which occur in no other place, then we can understand how, during a long process of oral tradition, accidents may have happened. But when everything is smooth and easy, when the intention of the poet is not to be mistaken, when the same phrase has occurred many times before, then to suppose that a simple and perspicuous sentence was changed into a complicated and obscure string of words, is more difficult to understand. I know there are passages where we cannot as yet account for the manner in which an evidently faulty reading found its way into both the Pada and Samhitā texts, but in those very passages we cannot be too circumspect. If we read VIII, 40, 9, pūrvīṣh ṛā indrō-pamātāyāḥ pūrvīr ūtā prāsastāyāḥ, nothing seems more tempting than to omit indra, and to read pūrvīṣh ṛā ūpamātāyāḥ. Nor would it be difficult to account for the insertion of indra; for though one would hardly venture to call it a marginal gloss that crept into the text—a case which, as far as I can see, has never happened in the hymns of the Rig-veda—it might be taken for an explanation given by an Ātārya to his pupils, in order to inform them that the ninth verse, different from the eighth, was addressed to Indra. But however plausible this may sound, the question remains whether the traditional reading could not be maintained, by admitting synizesis of opa, and reading pūrvīṣh ṛā indropamātāyāḥ. For a similar synizesis of — u, see III, 6, 10. prākī adhvarēva tasthātūḥ, unless we read prākya adhvarēva.

Another and more difficult case of synizesis occurs in

VII, 86, 4. āvā tvānēnā nāmāsā tura(h) iṃyām.

It would be easy to conjecture tvareyām instead of tura iṃyām, but tvareyām, in the sense of 'let me hasten,' is not Vedic. The choriambic ending, however, of a Trishubh can be proved to be legitimate, and if that is the case, then even the synizesis of tura, though hard, ought not to be regarded as impossible.

In II, 18, 5, ā vimsatyā trimsatā yāh̄y ārvān̄, ā k̄atvārim̄satā haribh̄ir yūgān̄aḥ,
ā pāṇk̄asatā sūrathebh̄ir īndrā,
ā shash̄tyā saptatyā sōmapēyam,

Professor Kuhn proposes to omit the ā at the beginning of the second line, in order to have eleven instead of twelve syllables. By doing so he loses the uniformity of the four pādas, which all begin with ā, while by admitting synizesis of haribhiḥ all necessity for conjectural emendation disappears.

If the poets of the Veda had objected to a pæon quartus (— — — —) at the end of a Gâyatrī, what could have been easier than to change IV, 52, 1, divo adarsī duhitā, into adarsi duhitā divaḥ? or X, 118, 6, ādābhyām gr̄ihāpatim, into gr̄ihāpatim ādābhyām?

If an epitritus secundus (— — —) had been objectionable in the same place, why not say VI, 61, 10, stōmyā bhūt sārāsvatī, instead of sārāsvatī stōmyā bhūt? Why not VIII, 2, 11, rēvantām hī sr̄inōmī tvā, instead of rēvantām hī tvā sr̄inōmī?

If an ionicus a minore (— — —) had been excluded from that place, why not say I, 30, 10, gar̄itr̄ibhyaḥ sakhē vāso, instead of sakhē vāso gar̄itr̄ibhyaḥ? or I, 41, 7, vārunasya māhī psārāḥ, instead of māhī psārō vārunasya?

If a dispondeus (— — —) was to be avoided, then V, 68, 3, māhī vām kshātrām devēshū, might easily have been replaced by deveshu vām kshātrām māhī, and VIII, 2, 10, sukrā āsirām yāk̄antē, by sukrā yāk̄antā āsirām.

If no epitritus primus (— — —) was allowed, why not say VI, 61, 11, nīdās pātu sārāsvatī, instead of sārāsvatī nīdās pātu, or VIII, 79, 4, dvēshō yāvīr āghāsyā k̄it, instead of yāvīr āghāsyā k̄id dvēshāḥ?

Even the epitritus tertius (— — —) might easily have been avoided by dropping the augment of apām in X, 119, 1-13, kuvit somasyāpām itī. It is, in fact, a variety of less frequent occurrence than the rest, and might possibly be eliminated with some chance of success.

Lastly, the choriambus (— — —) could have been removed in III, 24, 5, śīśīhī nāh sūnūmātāh, by reading sūnūmātāh śīśīhī nāh, and in VIII, 2, 31, sānād āmrīktō dāyātē, by reading āmrīktō dāyātē sānāt.

But I am afraid the idea that regularity is better than irregularity, and that in the Veda, where there is a possibility, the regular metre is to be restored by means of conjectural emendations, has been so ably advocated by some of the most eminent scholars, that a merely general argument would now be of no avail. I must therefore give as much evidence as I can bring together in support of the contrary opinion; and though the process is a tedious one, the importance of the consequences with regard to Vedic criticism leaves me no alternative. With regard, then, to

Seven the final dipodia of Gāyatrī verses, I still Gāyatra Vṛttas. hold and maintain, that, although the dijambus is by far the most general metre, the following seven varieties have to be recognised in the poetry of the Veda*:

1. — — —, 2. — — —, 3. — — —, 4. — — —, 5. — — —,
6. — — —, 7. — — —, 8. — — —.

I do not pretend to give every passage in which these varieties occur, but I hope I shall give a sufficient number in support of every one of them. I have confined myself almost entirely to the final dipodia of Gāyatrī verses, as the Ānushṭubha verses would have swelled the lists too much.

§ 2. — — — —.

I, 12, 9. tasmai pāvākā mṛīyā. (Instead of mṛīlaya, it has been proposed to read mardāya.)

I, 18, 9. divo na sadmāmākṣāṣām.

I, 42, 4; 46, 2; 97, 1-8; III, 11, 3; 27, 10; IV, 15, 7;

* See some important remarks on these varieties in Mr. J. Boxwell's article 'On the Triśṭubh Metre,' Journal Asiat. Soc. Beng., 1885, p. 79.

32, 4; 52, 1; V, 5, 9; 7, 4; 7, 5; 7, 7; 9, 4; 53, 12; 61, 3;
61, 11; 64, 5; 65, 4; 82, 9; VI, 16, 17; 16, 18; 16, 45;
45, 17; 61, 4; VII, 15, 14; 66, 2; VIII, 6, 35; 6, 42;
32, 10; 44, 28; 45, 31; 72, 6; 72, 13; 80, 1; 83, 3; 93,
27; IX, 61, 5; 64, 1; X, 118, 6.

§ 3. — ∪ — —.

I, 22, 11. akkhinnapatrāḥ saṅkātām.

I, 30, 13. kshumanto yābhīr mādēmā.

I, 41, 8; 90, 1; 90, 4; 120, 1; V, 19, 1; 70, 3; VI, 61, 10; VIII, 2, 2; 2, 4; 2, 5; 2, 11; 2, 12; 2, 13; 2, 14;
2, 15; 2, 16; 2, 17; 2, 29; 2, 30; 2, 32; 2, 33; 2, 36;
2, 37; 7, 30; 7, 33; 11, 2; 11, 3; 11, 4; 16, 3; 16, 4;
16, 5; 16, 7; 46, 2; 71, 2; 81, 1; 81, 3; 81, 4; 81, 7;
81, 9; 94, 2; IX, 62, 5; X, 20, 4; 20, 7.

§ 4. ∪ ∪ — —.

I, 3, 8. usrā iva svāsārāṇī.

I, 27, 4. agne deveshū prā vōkāḥ.

I, 30, 10; 30, 15; 38, 7; 38, 8; 41, 7; 43, 7; II, 6, 2;
III, 27, 3; V, 82, 7; VI, 16, 25; 16, 26; 61, 12; VIII, 2,
1; 2, 3; 2, 8; 2, 18; 2, 19; 2, 21; 2, 22; 2, 23; 2, 26;
2, 35; 16, 2; 16, 6; 16, 8; 71, 9; 79, 3; IX, 21, 5; 62, 6;
66, 21; X, 20, 5; 185, 1; 185, 2; 185, 3.

§ 5. — — — —.

I, 2, 7. dhiyam ghrītākīm sādhanā.

I, 3, 4. anvibhis tanā pūtāsāḥ.

I, 27, 3; 90, 2; II, 6, 4; III, 41, 8; V, 68, 3; 68, 4;
VIII, 2, 10; 2, 24; 16, 1; 16, 12; 79, 2; IX, 66, 17; X, 20, 6; 20, 8.

§ 6. ∪ — — —.

I, 15, 6. ritunā yagnām āsāthē.

I, 38, 2. kva vo gāvo nā rānyānti (see note to I, 38, 2).

I, 38, 9; 86, 9; III, 27, 2; 41, 3; IV, 32, 23; V, 68, 5; 70, 2; VI, 61, 11; VIII, 2, 20; 2, 25; 7, 32; 26, 19; 79, 4;
79, 5; 81, 6; X, 158, 4.

§ 7. — — — —.

I, 10, 8. sām gā āsmābhyām dhūnuhī.

I, 12, 5. āgnē tvām rakshasvināh.

I, 37, 15; 43, 8; 46, 6; III, 62, 7; IV, 30, 21; V, 86, 5; VIII, 5, 32; 5, 35; X, 119, 1-13; 144, 4.

§ 8. — — — —.

I, 2, 9. daksham dadhātē āpāsām (or § 2).

I, 6, 10. indram maho vā rāgasāh.

I, 27, 6; 30, 21; 41, 9; 90, 5; III, 24, 5; V, 19, 2; 70, 1; 70, 4; 82, 8; VIII, 2, 27; 2, 31; 16, 9; 55, 4; 67, 19; 81, 5; 81, 8; IX, 47, 2.

But although with regard to the Gāyatra, and I may add, the Ānushūbha pādas, the evidence as to the variety Traishūbha and of their vr̥ttas is such that it can hardly be Gāyata Pādas.

resisted, a much more determined stand has been made in defence of the vr̥tta of the Traishūbha and Gāyata pādas. Here Professor Kuhn and those who follow him maintain that the rule is absolute, that the former must end in — —, the latter in — — —, and that the eighth syllable, immediately preceding these syllables, ought, if possible, to be long. Nor can I deny that Professor Kuhn has brought forward powerful arguments in support of his theory, and that his emendations of the Vedic text recommend themselves by their great ingenuity and simplicity. If his theory could be carried out, I should readily admit that we should gain something. We should have throughout the Veda a perfectly uniform metre, and wherever we found any violation of it, we should be justified in resorting to conjectural criticism.

The only question is at what price this strict uniformity can be obtained. If, for instance, in order to have the regular vr̥ttas at the end of Traishūbha and Gāyata lines, we were obliged to repeal all rules of prosody, to allow almost every short vowel to be used as long, and every long vowel to be used as short, whether long by nature or by position, we should have gained very little, we should have robbed Peter to pay Paul, we should have removed no difficulty, but only ignored the causes which created it. Now, if we examine the process by which Professor Kuhn establishes the regularity of the vr̥ittas or final syllables of Traishṭubha and Gāgata pādas, we find, in addition to the rules laid down before, and in which he is supported, as we saw, to a great extent by the Prātisākhya and Pāṇini, viz. the anceps nature of e and o, and of a long final vowel before a vowel, the following exceptions or metrical licences, without which that metrical uniformity at which he aims, could not be obtained :

Prosodial
Licences. 1. The vowel o in the body of a word is to be treated as optionally short :

II, 39, 3. prāṭi vāstor ūsrā (see Trishṭ. § 5).

Here the o of vasto is supposed to be short, although it is the Guṇa of u, and therefore very different from the final e of sarve or āste, or the final o of sarvo for sarvas or mano for manas *. It should be remarked that in Greek, too, the final diphthongs corresponding to the e of sarve and āste are treated as short, as far as the accent is concerned. Hence ἀποικοι, τύπτεται, and even γνώμαι, nom. plur. In Latin, too, the old terminations of the nom. sing. o and u, instead of the later us, are short. (Neue, Formenlehre, § 23 seq.)

VI, 51, 15. gopā āmā.

Here the o of gopā is treated as short, in order to get o—o— instead of —o—, which is perfectly legitimate at the end of an Ushnih.

2. The long ī and ū are treated as short, not only before vowels, which is legitimate, but also before consonants.

VII, 62, 4. dyāvābhūmī ādīte trāsīthām nāh (see Trishṭ. § 5).

The forms īsiyā and rāsiyā in VII, 32, 18, occur at the end of octosyllabic or Gāyatra pādas, and are therefore perfectly legitimate, yet Professor Kuhn would change them too, into īṣiṃyā and rāṣiṃyā. In VII, 28, 4, even māyī is treated as māyī (see Trishṭ. § 5); and in VII, 68, 1, vītām as vītām. If, in explanation of this shortening of vītām, vīhi is quoted, which is identified with vīhi, this can hardly be considered as an argument, for vīhi occurs where no short syllable is required, IV, 48, 1; II, 26, 2; and where, therefore, the shortening of the vowel cannot be attributed to metrical reasons.

* A very strong divergence of opinion is expressed on this point by Professor Bollensen. He says: 'O und E erst später in die Schrifttafel aufgenommen, bewahren ihre Länge durch das ganze indische Schriftenthum bis ins Apabhramsa hinab. Selbstverständlich kann kurz o und e im Veda erst recht nicht zugelassen werden.' Zeitschrift der D. M. G., vol. xxii, p. 574.

3. Final m followed by an initial consonant is allowed to make no position, and even in the middle of a word a nasal followed by a liquid is supposed to make positio debilis. Several of the instances, however, given in support, are from Gāyatra pādas, where Professor Kuhn, in some of his later articles, has himself allowed greater latitude; others admit of different scanning, as for instance,

I, 117, 8. māhāh kshōṃāsyā āsvinā kāṇvāyā.

Here, even if we considered the dispondeus as illegitimate, we might scan kāṇvāyā, for this scanning occurs in other places, while to treat the first a as short before nv seems tantamount to surrendering all rules of prosody.

4. Final n before semivowels, mutes, and double n before vowels make no position^a. Ex. III, 49, 1. yāsmīn vīṣvā (Trishṭ. § 5); I, 174, 5. yāsmiñ kākān; I, 186, 4. sāsmīn(n) ūdhan^b.

5. Final Visarga before sibilants makes no position^c. Ex. IV, 21, 10. sātyāh sāmṛāt (Trishṭ. § 5). Even in I, 63, 4.

^a Professor Kuhn has afterwards (Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 207) modified this view, and instead of allowing a final nasal vowel followed by a mute to make positio debilis, he thinks that the nasal should in most cases be omitted altogether.

^b Here a distinction should be made, I think, between an n before a consonant, and a final n following a short vowel, which, according to the rules of Sandhi, is doubled, if a vowel follows. In the latter case, the vowel before the n remains, no doubt, short in many cases, or, more correctly, the doubling of the n does not take place, e.g. I, 63, 4; 186, 4. In other places, the doubling seems preferable, e.g. I, 33, 11, though Professor Kuhn would remove it altogether. Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 125.

^c Here, too, according to later researches, Professor Kuhn would rather omit the final sibilant altogether, loc. cit. vol. iv, p. 207.

kōdīh sakhā (probably a Gāgata), and V, 82, 4. sāvīh sāubhāgam (a Gāy. § 7), the long i is treated as short, and the short a of sakhā is lengthened, because an aspirate follows.

6. S before mutes makes no position. Ex. VI, 66, 11. ūgrā āspridhran (Trishṭ. § 3).

7. S before k makes no position. Ex. vīsvāskāndrāh, &c.

8. Mutes before s make no position. Ex. rākshās, according to Professor Kuhn, in the seventh Mandala only, but see I, 12, 5; kūtsa, &c.

9. Mutes before r or v make no position. Ex. sūṣiprā, dīrghāsrūt.

10. Sibilants before y make no position. Ex. dāsyūn.

11. R followed by mutes or sibilants makes no position. Ex. āyūr gīvase, kārdīh, vārshishthām.

12. Words like smāddīshñ, &c. retain their vowel short before two following consonants.

We now proceed to consider a number of prosodial rules which Professor Kuhn proposes to repeal in order to have a long syllable where the MSS. supply a short :

1. The vowel ri is to be pronounced as long, or rather as ar. Ex. I, 12, 9. tāsmāi pāvākā mriṣyā is to be read mārdāyā; V, 33, 10. sāmvāranāsyā rishēh is to be read arsheh. But why not sāmvāranāsyā rishēh (i. e. siarsheh)?

2. The a privativum may be lengthened. Ex. āgārāh, āmritāh.

3. Short vowels before liquids may be long. Ex. nārah, tārutā, tāratī, mārutām, hāriṣāh, ārushi, dadhur iha, sūvitā (p. 471).

4. Short vowels before nasals may be lengthened. Ex. ganān, sanitar, tānūh, ūpā nāh.

5. Short vowels before the ma of the superlative may be lengthened. Ex. nrītama.

6. The short a in the roots sam and yam, and in am (the termination of the accusative) may be lengthened.

7. The group $\check{a}v\check{a}$ is to be pronounced $\bar{a}u\bar{a}$. Ex. $\check{a}v\check{a}s\bar{e}$ becomes $\bar{a}u\bar{a}s\bar{e}$; $\check{s}a\check{v}i\check{t}\bar{a}$ becomes $\bar{s}a\bar{u}i\bar{t}\bar{a}$; $\check{n}a\check{v}\bar{a}$ becomes $\bar{n}a\bar{u}\bar{a}$.

8. The group $\check{a}y\check{a}$ is to be changed into $\bar{a}i\bar{a}$ or $\bar{e}\bar{a}$. Ex. $\check{n}a\check{y}\check{a}s\bar{i}$ becomes $\bar{n}a\bar{i}\bar{a}s\bar{i}$.

9. The group $v\check{a}$ is to be changed into ua , and this ua to be treated as a kind of diphthong and therefore long. Ex. $\check{k}a\check{r}v\check{a}t\bar{a}m\bar{a}h$ becomes $\check{k}a\check{r}u\bar{a}t\bar{a}m\bar{a}h$; $\check{v}\bar{a}r\check{u}n\bar{a}h$ becomes $\bar{u}\bar{a}r\check{u}n\bar{a}h$.

10. The short vowel in the reduplicated syllable of perfects is to be lengthened. Ex. $\check{t}\bar{a}t\bar{a}n\bar{a}h$, $\check{d}\bar{a}d\check{h}i\bar{r}\bar{e}$.

11. Short vowels before all aspirates may be lengthened. Ex. $\check{r}\bar{a}th\bar{a}h$ becomes $\bar{r}\bar{a}th\bar{a}h$; $\check{s}\bar{a}kh\bar{a}$ becomes $\bar{s}\bar{a}kh\bar{a}$.

12. Short vowels before h and all sibilants may be lengthened. Ex. $\check{m}\bar{a}h\check{i}n\bar{i}$ becomes $\bar{m}\bar{a}h\check{i}n\bar{i}$; $\check{u}\check{s}\check{g}\bar{a}m$ becomes $\bar{u}\bar{s}\check{g}\bar{a}m$; $\check{r}i\check{s}h\bar{a}t\bar{e}$ becomes $\bar{r}i\check{s}h\bar{a}t\bar{e}$; $\check{d}\bar{a}s\bar{a}t$ becomes $\bar{d}\bar{a}s\bar{a}t$.

13. The short vowel before t may be lengthened. Ex. $\check{v}\bar{a}g\check{a}v\bar{a}t\bar{a}h$ becomes $\bar{v}\bar{a}g\bar{a}v\bar{a}t\bar{a}h$; $\check{a}t\check{i}th\bar{i}h$ becomes $\bar{a}t\check{i}th\bar{i}h$.

14. The short vowel before d may be lengthened. Ex. $\check{u}d\bar{a}r\bar{a}m$ becomes $\bar{u}d\bar{a}r\bar{a}m$; $\check{u}d\bar{a}v\bar{a}$ becomes $\bar{u}d\bar{a}v\bar{a}$.

15. The short vowel before p may be lengthened. Ex. $\check{a}p\bar{a}m$ becomes $\bar{a}p\bar{a}m$; $\check{t}\bar{a}p\check{u}sh\bar{i}m$ becomes $\bar{t}\bar{a}p\check{u}sh\bar{i}m$; $\check{g}r\check{i}h\bar{a}p\bar{a}t\bar{i}m$ becomes $\bar{g}r\check{i}h\bar{a}p\bar{a}t\bar{i}m$.

16. The short vowel before g and g may be lengthened. Ex. $\check{s}\bar{a}n\check{u}sh\bar{a}g\bar{a}s\bar{a}t$ becomes $\bar{s}\bar{a}n\check{u}sh\bar{a}g\bar{a}s\bar{a}t$; $\check{y}u\check{n}\bar{a}g\bar{a}n$ becomes $\bar{y}u\check{n}\bar{a}g\bar{a}n$.

Let us now turn back for one moment to look at the slaughter which has been committed! Is there one single rule of prosody that has been spared? Is there one single short syllable that must always remain short, or a long syllable that must always remain long? If all restrictions of prosody are thus removed, our metres, no doubt, become perfectly regular. But it should be remembered that these metrical rules, for which all this carnage has been committed, are not founded upon any a priori principles, but deduced by ancient or modern metricians from those very hymns which seem so constantly to violate them. Neither ancient nor modern metricians had, as far as we know, any evidence to go upon besides the hymns of the Rig-veda ; and the philosophical speculations as to the origin of metres in which some of them indulge, and from which they would fain derive some of their unbending rules, are, as need hardly be said, of no consequence whatever. I cannot understand what definite idea even modern writers connect with such statements as that, for instance, the Trishṭubh metre sprang from the Gāgātī metre, that the eleven syllables of the former are an abbreviation of the twelve syllables of the latter. Surely, metres are not made artificially, and by addition or subtraction. Metres have a natural origin in the rhythmic sentiment of different people, and they become artificial and arithmetical in the same way as language with its innate principles of law and analogy becomes in course of time grammatical and artificial. To derive one metre from another is like deriving a genitive from a nominative, which we may do indeed for grammatical purposes, but which no one would venture to do who is at all acquainted with the natural and independent production of grammatical forms. Were we to arrange the Trishṭubh and Gāgātī metres in chronological order, I should decidedly place the Trishṭubh first, for we see, as it were before our eyes, how sometimes one foot, sometimes two and three feet in a Trishṭubh verse admit an additional syllable at the end, particularly in set phrases which would not submit to a Trishṭubh ending. The phrase sam no bhava dvipade sam katushpade is evidently a solemn phrase, and we see it brought in without hesitation, even though every other line of the same strophe or hymn is Trishṭubh, i.e. hendecasyllabic, not dodecasyllabic. See, for instance, VI, 74, 1; VII, 54, 1; X, 85, 44; 165, 1. However, I maintain by no means that this was the actual origin of Gāgātī metres; I only refer to it in order to show the groundlessness of metrical theories which represent the component elements, a foot of one or two or four syllables as given first, and as afterwards compounded into systems of two, three or four such feet, and who therefore would wish us to look upon the hendecasyllabic Trishṭubh as originally a dodecasyllabic Gāgātī, only deprived of its tail. If my explanation of the name of Trishṭubh, i. e. Three-step, is right, its origin must be ascribed to a far more natural process than that of artificial amputation. It was to accompany a choros, i. e. a dance, which after advancing freely for eight steps in one direction, turned back (vṛtta) with three steps, the second of which was strongly marked, and would therefore, whether in song or recitation, be naturally accompanied by a long syllable. It certainly is so in the vast majority of Trishṭubhs which have been handed down to us. But if among these verses we find a small number in which this simple and palpable rhythm is violated, and which nevertheless were preserved from the first in that imperfect form, although the temptation to set them right must have been as great to the ancient as it has proved to be to the modern students of the Veda, are we to say that nearly all, if not all, the rules that determine the length and shortness of syllables, and which alone give character to every verse, are to be suspended? Or, ought we not rather to consider, whether the ancient choregic poets may not have indulged occasionally in an irregular movement? We see that this was so with regard to Gâyatrî verses. We see the greater freedom of the first and second pādas occasionally extend to the third; and it will be impossible, without intolerable violence, to remove all the varieties of the last pāda of a Gâyatrî of which I have given examples above, pages civ seqq.

It is, of course, impossible to give here all the evidence that might be brought forward in support of similar freedom Traishṭubha Vṛtta. in Trishṭubh verses, and I admit that the number of real varieties with them is smaller than with the Gâyatrîs. In order to make the evidence which I have to bring forward in support of these varieties as unassailable as possible, I have excluded nearly every pāda that occurs only in the first, second, or third line of a strophe, and have restricted myself, with few exceptions, and those chiefly referring to pādas that had been quoted by other scholars in support of their own theories, to the final pādas of Trishṭubh verses. Yet even with this limited evidence, I think I shall be able to establish at least three varieties of Trishṭubh. Preserving the same classification which I adopted before for the Gāyatrī, so as to include the important eighth syllable of the Trishṭubh, which does not properly belong to the vṛtta, I maintain that class 4. ॐ — —, class 5. — — —, and class 8. — ॐ — must be recognised as legitimate endings in the hymns of the Veda, and that by recognising them we are relieved from nearly all, if not all, the more violent prosodial licences which Professor Kuhn felt himself obliged to admit in his theory of Vedic metres.

§ 4. ॐ ॐ — —.

The verses which fall under § 4 are so numerous that after those of the first Mandala, mentioned above, they need not be given here in full. They are simply cases where the eighth syllable is not lengthened, and they cannot be supposed to run counter to any rule of the Prātisākhya, for the simple reason that the Prātisākhya never gave such a rule as that the eighth syllable must be lengthened, if the ninth is short. Examples will be found in the final pāda of Trishṭubhs: II, 30, 6; III, 36, 4; 53, 15; 54, 12; IV, 1, 16; 2, 7; 9; 11; 4, 12; 6, 1; 2; 4; 7, 7; 11, 5; 17, 3; 23, 6; 24, 2; 27, 1; 28, 5; 55, 5; 57, 2; V, 1, 2; VI, 17, 10; 21, 8; 23, 7; 25, 5; 29, 6; 33, 1; 62, 1; 63, 7; VII, 21, 5; 28, 3; 42, 4; 56, 15; 60, 10; 84, 2; 92, 4; VIII, 1, 33; 96, 9; IX, 92, 5; X, 61, 12; 13; 74, 3; 117, 7.

In support of § 5. — — —, the number of cases is smaller, but it should be remembered that it might be considerably increased if I had not restricted myself to the final pāda of each Trishṭubh, while the first, second, and third pādas would have yielded a much larger harvest:

§ 5. — — — —.

I, 89, 9. mā no madhyā rīrīshatāyūr gāntōh.

I, 92, 6. supratikā saumanasāyāgīgāh.

I, 114, 5; 117, 2; 122, 1; 122, 8; 186, 3; II, 4, 2; III, 49, 2; IV, 3, 9; 26, 6; V, 41, 14; VI, 25, 2; 66, 11; VII, 8, 6; 28, 4; 68, 1; 71, 2; 78, 1; 93, 7^b; IX, 90, 4; X, 11, 8.

I do not wish to deny that in several of these lines it would be possible to remove the long syllable from the ninth place by conjectural emendation. Instead of áyur in I, 89, 9, we might read áyu; in I, 92, 6, we might drop the augment of agár; in II, 4, 2, we might admit synizesis in áratir, and then read gírā-āsvāh, as in I, 141, 12. In VI, 25, 2, after eliding the a of ava, we might read dāsīh. But even if, in addition to all this, we were to admit the possible suppression of final m in asmabhyam, mahyam, and in the accusative singular, or the suppression of s in the nominative singular, both of which would be extreme measures, we should still have a number of cases which could not be righted without even more violent remedies. Why then should we not rather admit the occasional appearance of a metrical variation which certainly has a powerful precedent in the dispondeus of Gâyatrī? I am not now acquainted with the last results of metrical criticism in Virgil, but, unless some new theories now prevail, I well recollect that spondaic hexameters, though small in number, much smaller than in the Veda, were recognised by the best scholars, and no emendations attempted to remove them. If then in Virgil we read,

‘Cum patribus populoque, penatibusque et magnis dis,’ why not follow the authority of the best MSS. and the tradition of the Prātisākhyas and admit a dispondeus at the end of a Trishūbh rather than suspend, in order to meet this single difficulty, some of the most fundamental rules of prosody?

I now proceed to give a more numerous list of Traishūbha pādas ending in a choriambus, — ∪ ∪ —, again confining myself, with few exceptions, to final pādas:

§ 8. — ∪ ∪ —.

I, 62, 3. sam usriyābhir vāvasāntā nārāh.

I, 103, 4. yad dha sūnuh sravase nāmā dādhe.

I, 121, 9; 122, 10^b; 173, 8; 186, 2; II, 4, 3; 19, 1; 33, 14; IV, 1, 19^a; 25, 4; 39, 2; V, 30, 12; 41, 4; 41, 15;

* ‘Nur eine Stelle habe ich mir angemerkt, wo das Metrum āam verlangt.’

VI, 4, 7; 10, 5; 11, 4; 13, 1^b; 13, 1^d; 20, 1^b; 20, 1^d; 29, 4; 33, 3; 33, 5; 44, 11; 49, 12; 68, 5; 68, 7; VII, 19, 10; 62, 4; IX, 97, 26; X, 55, 8; 99, 9; 108, 6; 169, 1.

It is perfectly true that this sudden change in the rhythm of Trishūbh verses, making their ending iambic instead of trochaic, grates on our ears. But, I believe, that if we admit a short stop after the seventh syllable, the intended rhythm of these verses will become intelligible. We remarked a similar break in the verses of hymn X, 77, where the sudden transition to an iambic metre was used with great effect, and the choriambic ending, though less effective, is by no means offensive. It should be remarked also, that in many, though not in all cases, a cæsura takes place after the seventh syllable, and this is, no doubt, a great help towards a better delivery of these choriambic Trishūbhs.

While, however, I contend for the recognition of these three varieties of the normal Trishūbh metre, I am quite willing to admit that other variations besides these, which occur from time to time in the Veda, form a legitimate subject of critical discussion.

§ 2. ∪ ∪ ∪ —.

Trishūbh verses, the final pāda of which ends in ∪ ∪ ∪ —, I should generally prefer to treat as ending in a Gāgata pāda, in which this ending is more legitimate. Thus I should propose to scan:

I, 122, 11. prāsastāyē māhinā[~] rāthāvātē.

III, 20, 5. vāsūn rūdrāñ ādityāñ[~] ihā hūvē.

V, 2, 1. pūrāñ pāsyānti nihitam[~] (tām) āratāu.

VI, 13, 5. vāyō vrīkāyārayē[~] gāsūrayē.

§ 1. ∪ — ∪ —.

I should propose the same medela for some final pādas of Trishūbhs apparently ending in ∪ — ∪ —. We might indeed, as has been suggested, treat these verses as single instances of that peculiar metre which we saw carried out in the whole of hymn X, 77, but at the end of a verse the admission of an occasional Gāgata pāda is more in accordance with the habit of the Vedic poets. Thus I should scan :

Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 180; Bollensen, Zeitschrift der D. M. G., vol. xxii, p. 587.

V, 33, 4. *vṛṣhā sāmatṣū dāsasyā nāmā kīt.

V, 41, 5^b. rāyā ēshe vāse dādhitā dhīh.

After what I have said before on the real character of the teaching of the Prātisākhya, I need not show again that the fact of Uvata's counting ta of dadhīta as the tenth syllable is of no importance in determining the real nature of these hymns, though it is of importance, as Professor Kuhn remarks (Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 451), in showing that Uvata considered himself at perfect liberty in counting or not counting, for his own purposes, the elided syllable of avase.

VII, 4, 6. māpsavāh pari shādāmā mādūvāh.

§ 6. ∪ — — —.

Final pādas of Trishṭubhs ending in ∪ — — — are very scarce. In VI, 1, 4, bhadrāyām te ranayantā samdrīshṭau, it would be very easy to read bhadrāyām te samdrīshṭau rānāyāntā; and in X, 74, 2, dṵaur nā vārebhīh krīṇavāntā svāih,

we may either recognise a Gāgata pāda, or read

dṵaur nā vārebhīh krīṇavāntā svāih, which would agree with the metre of hymn X, 77.

§ 7. — — ∪ —.

Pādas ending in — — ∪ — do not occur as final in any Traishṭubha hymn, but as many Gāgata pādas occur in the body of Traishṭubha hymns, we have to scan them as dodecasyllabic :

I, 63, 4^a. tṵām hā tyād īndrā kōdīh sakhā.

IV, 26, 6^b. pārāvātāh sakunō māndram mādam.

The adjective pāvaka which frequently occurs at the end of final and internal pādas of Trishṭubh hymns has always to be scanned ṣāvākā. Cf. IV, 51, 2; VI, 5, 2; 10, 4; 51, 3; VII, 3, 1; 9; 9, 1^b; 56, 12; X, 46, 7^b.

* Professor Kuhn has finally adopted the same scanning, Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 184.

I must reserve what I have to say about other metres of the Veda for another opportunity, but I cannot leave this subject without referring once more to a Omission of final m and s. metrical licence which has been strongly advocated by Professor Kuhn and others, and by the admission of which there is no doubt that many difficulties might be removed, I mean the occasional omission of a final m and s, and the subsequent contraction of the final and initial vowels. The arguments that have been brought forward in support of this are very powerful. There is the general argument that final s and m are liable to be dropt in other Aryan languages, and particularly for metrical purposes. There is the stronger argument that in some cases final s and m in Sanskrit may or may not be omitted, even apart from any metrical stress. In Sanskrit we find that the demonstrative pronoun sa appears most frequently as sa (sa dadāti), and if followed by liquid vowels, it may coalesce with them even in later Sanskrit. Thus we see saisha for sa esha, sendraḥ for sa indraḥ sanctioned for metrical purposes even by Pāṇini, VI, 1, 134. We might refer also to feminines which have s in the nominative singular after bases in ū, but drop it after bases in ī. We find in the Samhitā text, V, 7, 8, svādhitiṣa, instead of svādhitiḥ-iva in the Pada text, sanctioned by the Prātisākhya 259; likewise IX, 61, 10, Samhitā, bhūmy ā dade, instead of Pada, bhūmiḥ ā dade. But before we draw any general conclusions from such instances, we should consider whether they do not admit of a grammatical instead of a metrical explanation. The nominative singular of the demonstrative pronoun was sa before it was sas; by the side of bhūmiḥ we have a secondary form bhūmī; and we may conclude from svādhiti-vān, I, 88, 2, that the Vedic poets knew of a form svādhiti, by the side of svādhitiḥ.

As to the suppression of final m, however, we see it admitted by the best authorities, or we see at least alternate forms with or without m, in tūbhya, which occurs frequently instead of túbhyam^a, and twice, at least, without apparently any metrical reason^b. We find asmáka instead of asmákam (I, 173, 10), yushmáka instead of yushmákam (VII, 59, 9-10), yágadhva instead of yágadvam (VIII, 2, 37) sanctioned both by the Samhitâ and Pada texts^c.

If then we have such precedents, it may well be asked why we should hesitate to adopt the same expedient, the omission of final m and s, whenever the Vedic metres seem to require it. Professor Bollensen's remark, that Vedic verses cannot be treated to all the licences of Latin scanning^d, is hardly a sufficient answer; and he himself, though under a slightly different form, would admit as much, if not more, than has been admitted on this point by Professors Kuhn and Roth. On a priori grounds I should by no means feel opposed to the admission of a possible elision of final s or m, or even n; and my only doubt is whether it is really necessary for the proper scanning of Vedic metres.

My own opinion has always been, that if we admit on a larger scale what in single words can hardly be doubted by anybody, viz. the pronunciation of two syllables as one, we need not fall back on the elision of final consonants in order to arrive at a proper scanning of Vedic metres. On this point I shall have to say a few words in conclusion, because I shall frequently avail myself of this licence, for the purpose of righting apparently corrupt verses in the hymns of the Rig-veda; and I feel bound to explain, once for all, why I avail myself of it in preference to other emendations which have been proposed by scholars such as Professors Benfey, Kuhn, Roth, Bollensen, and others.

The merit of having first pointed out some cases where ^a I, 54, 9; 135, 2; III, 42, 8; V, 11, 5; VII, 22, 7; VIII, 51, 9; 76, 8; 82, 5; IX, 62, 27; 86, 30; X, 167, 1.

^b II, 11, 3; V, 30, 6.

^c See Bollensen, Orient und Occident, vol. iii, p. 459; Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 199.

^d Orient und Occident, vol. iv, p. 449.

two syllables must be treated as one, belongs, I believe, to Professor Bollensen in his article, 'Zur Herstellung des Veda,' published in Benfey's Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 461. He proposed, for instance, to write hyāná instead of hiyāná, IX, 13, 6; dhyānó instead of dhiyānó, VIII, 49, 5; sáhyase instead of sáhiyase, I, 71, 4; yānó instead of iyānó, VIII, 50, 5, &c. The actual alteration of these words seems to me unnecessary; nor should we think of resorting to such violent measures in Greek where, as far as metrical purposes are concerned, two vowels have not unfrequently to be treated as one.

That iva counts in many passages as one syllable is admitted by everybody. The only point on which I differ is that I do not see why iva, when monosyllabic, should be changed to va, instead of being pronounced quickly, or, to adopt the terminology of Greek grammarians, by synizesis^a. Synizesis is well explained by Greek scholars as a quick pronunciation of two vowels so that neither should be lost, and as different thereby from synalœphe, which means the contraction of two vowels into one^b. This synizesis is by no means restricted to iva and a few other words, but seems to me a very frequent expedient resorted to by the ancient Rishis.

Originally it may have arisen from the fact that language allows in many cases alternate forms of one or two syllables. As in Greek we have double forms like ἀλγεινός and ἀλγεινός, γαλακτοφάγος and γλακτοφάγος, πηγνός and πηγνός, πυκνός and πυκνός^c, and as in Latin we have the shortening

^a Synizesis in Greek applies only to the quick pronunciation of two vowels, if in immediate contact; and not, if separated by consonants. Samprasāraṇa might seem a more appropriate term, but though the grammatical process designated in Sanskrit by Samprasāraṇa offers some analogies, it could only by a new definition be applied to the metrical process here intended.

^b A. B. p. 835, 30. ἐστὶ δὲ ἐν τοῖς κοινοῖς μέτροις καὶ ἡ καλουμένη συνεκφώνησις ἢ καὶ συνίησις λέγεται. Ὅταν γὰρ φωνηέντων ἐπ' ἀλλήλους γένηται ἡ προφορά, τότε γίνεται ἡ συνίησις εἰς μίαν συλλαβὴν. Διαφέρει δὲ συναλοιφῆς· ἡ μὲν γὰρ γραμμάτων ἐστὶ κλοπή, ἡ δὲ χρόνων· καὶ ἡ μὲν συναλοιφή, ὡς λέγεται, φαίνεται, ἡ δὲ οὐ. Mehlhorn, Griechische Grammatik, § 101. Thus in Ἄσπετόλεμος we have synizesis, in Ἄσπετόλεμος synæresis.

^c Cf. Mehlhorn, Griechische Grammatik, § 57.

or suppression of vowels carried out on the largest scale*, we find in Sanskrit, too, such double forms as pr̥ithvi or pr̥ithivī, adhi and dhi, api and pi, ava and va. The occurrence of such forms which have nothing to do with metrical considerations, but are perfectly legitimate from a grammatical point of view, would encourage a tendency to treat two syllables—and particularly two short syllables—as one, whenever an occasion arose. There are, besides, in the Vedic Sanskrit a number of forms where, as we saw, a long syllable has to be pronounced as two. In some of these cases this pronunciation is legitimate, i.e. it preserves an original dissyllabic form which in course of time had become monosyllabic. In other cases the same process takes place through a mistaken sense of analogy, where we cannot prove that an original dissyllabic form had any existence even in a prehistoric state of language. The occurrence of a number of such alternate forms would naturally leave a general impression in the minds of poets that two short syllables and one long syllable were under certain circumstances interchangeable. So considerable a number of words in which a long syllable has to be pronounced as two syllables has been collected by Professors Kuhn, Bollensen, and others, that no doubt can remain on this subject. Vedic poets, being allowed to change a semivowel into a vowel, were free to say nāsātyā and nāsātýā, VIII, 5, 32; pr̥ithivyās and pr̥ithivýāḥ; pitrōḥ and pitrōḥ, I, 31, 4. They could separate compound words, and pronounce ghr̥itānnāḥ or ghr̥ita-ānnāḥ, VII, 3, 1. They could insert a kind of shewa or svarabhakti in words like sāmne or sāmñe, VIII, 6, 47; dhāmne or dhāmñe, VIII, 92, 25; ārāvnāḥ and ārāvñāḥ, IX, 63, 5. They might vary between pānti and pāntī, I, 41, 2; yāthana and yāthāna, I, 39, 3; nidhātōḥ and nidhātōḥ, I, 41, 9; tredhā and tredhā, I, 34, 8; dēvāḥ and dēvāḥ (besides devāsaḥ), I, 23, 24; rōdasī and rōdasī, I, 33, 9; 59, 4; 64, 9; and rōdāsyōḥ, I, 33, 5; 59, 2; 117, 10;

* See the important chapters on 'Kürzung der Vokale' and 'Tilgung der Vokale' in Corssen's 'Aussprache des Lateinischen,' and more especially his remarks on the so-called irrational vowels in Plautus, ibid. vol. ii, p. 70.

VI, 24, 3; VII, 6, 2; X, 74, 1^a. Need we wonder then if we find that, on the other hand, they allowed themselves to pronounce pr̥ithivī as pr̥ithivī, I, 191, 6; VII, 34, 7; 99, 3; dhr̥ishṇāvā as dhr̥ishṇāva, V, 52, 14; śuvānā as śuvānā? There is no reason why we should change the spelling of śuvānā into svānā. The metre itself tells us at once where śuvānā is to be pronounced as two or as three syllables. Nor is it possible to believe that those who first handed down and afterwards wrote down the text of the Vedic hymns, should have been ignorant of that freedom of pronunciation. Why, there is not one single passage in the whole of the ninth Māṇḍala, where, as far as I know, śuvānā should not be pronounced as dissyllabic, i.e. as śuvānā; and to suppose that the scholars of India did not know how that superfluous syllable should be removed, is really taking too low an estimate of men like Vyāḍi or Saunaka.

But if we once admit that in these cases two syllables separated by a single consonant were pronounced as one and were metrically counted as one, we can hardly resist the evidence in favour of a similar pronunciation in a large number of other words, and we shall find that by the admission of this rapid pronunciation, or of what in Plautus we should call irrational vowels, many verses assume at once their regular form without the necessity of admitting the suppression of final s, m, n, or the introduction of other prosodial licences. To my mind the most convincing passages are those where, as in the Atyashī and similar hymns, a poet repeats the same phrase twice, altering only one or two words, but without endeavouring to avoid an excess of syllables which, to our mind, unless we resort to synizesis, would completely destroy the uniformity of the metre. Thus we read:

I, 133, 6. āpūr̥ṣhāghno • pratītā sūrā sātvaḥhī, trīsāptaiḥ sūrā sātvaḥhī.

* Professor Bollensen in some of these passages proposes to read rodasios. In I, 96, 4, no change is necessary if we read vīrām. Zeitschrift der D. M. G., vol. xxii, p. 587.

Here no *pra must be pronounced with one ictus only, in order to get a complete agreement between the two iambic diameters.

I, 134, 5. ūgrā īṣhaṇāntā bhurvāni, āpām īṣhāntā bhurvāni.

As ishanta never occurs again, I suspect that the original reading was ishanta in both lines, and that in the second line ishanta, pronounced rapidly, was mistaken for ishanta. Is not bhurvāni a locative, corresponding to the datives in vāne which are so frequently used in the sense of infinitives? See note to I, 6, 8, page 47 seq. In I, 138, 3, we must read :

āheṭāmānā ūrusāmsā sārī bhāvā, vāge-vāge sārī bhāvā.

In I, 129, 11,

ādḥā hī tvā gānitā gīganād vāsō, rākshōhanam tvā gīganād vāsō,

we might try to remove the difficulty by omitting vāsō at the end of the refrain, but this would be against the general character of these hymns. We want the last word vāsō, if possible, at the end of both lines. But, if so, we must admit two cases of synizesis, or, if this seems too clumsy, we must omit tvā.

I shall now proceed to give a number of other examples in which the same consonantal synizesis seems necessary in order to make the rhythm of the verses perceptible to our ears as it was to the ears of the ancient Rishis.

The preposition anu takes synizesis in

I, 127, 1. ghrītasyā vibhrāshām ānu vāshāi sōkīshā. Cf. X, 14, 1.

The preposition abhi :

I, 91, 23. rāyō bhāgam sāhasāvān abhi yūdhyā.

Here Professor Kuhn changes sahasāvan into sahasva/, which, no doubt, is a very simple and very plausible emendation. But in altering the text of the Veda many things have to be considered, and in our case it might be objected that sahasva/ never occurs again as an epithet of Soma.

As an invocation sahasvaḥ refers to no deity but Agni, and even in its other cases it is applied to Agni and Indra only. However, I do not by any means maintain that sahasvaḥ could not be applied to Soma, for nearly the same arguments could be used against sahasāvan, if conjecturally put in the place of sahasvaḥ; I only wish to point out how everything ought to be tried first, before we resort in the Veda to conjectural emendations. Therefore, if in our passage there should be any objection to admitting the synizesis in abhi, I should much rather propose synizesis of sahasāvan, than change it into sahasvaḥ. There is synizesis in maha, e.g. I, 133, 6. āvār māha īndrā dādrīḥi sṛdhī nāḥ. Although this verse is quoted by the Prātisākhya, Sūtra 522, as one in which the lengthened syllable dhī of sṛdhī does not occupy the tenth place, and which therefore required special mention, the original poet evidently thought otherwise, and lengthened the syllable, being a syllable liable to be lengthened, because it really occupied the tenth place, and therefore received a peculiar stress.

The preposition pari:

VI, 52, 14. mā vō vākāmsi parīkākshyāni vōkām, sūmneshv īd vō āntāmā mādēmā.

Here Professor Kuhn (Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 197) begins the last pāda with vōkām, but this is impossible, unless we change the accent of vōkām, though even then the separation of the verb from mā and the accumulation of two verbs in the last line would be objectionable.

Hārī is pronounced as hārī:

VII, 32, 12. yā īndrō harivān nā dābhānti tām ripāḥ.

II, 18, 5. ā kātvarīmsatā haribhīr yugānāḥ.

Hence I propose to scan the difficult verse I, 167, 1, as follows:

sāhasrām tā īndrā-ūtāyō nāḥ,
*sāhasrām īshō harivō gūrtatāmāḥ,

* As to the scanning of the second line see p. cxiv.

sāhāsraṁ rāyo mādayādhyai, sāhāsriṇā ūpā nō yāntu vāgāḥ.

That the final o instead of as is treated as a short syllable we saw before, and in I, 133, 6, we observed that it was liable to synizesis. We see the same in

I, 175, 6. māyā ivāpō na trīshyātē bābhūthā.

V, 61, 16. ā yāgñiyāso vavṛittānā.

The pragrīhya ī of the dual is known in the Veda to be liable in certain cases to Sandhi. If we extend this licence beyond the limits recognised by the Prātisākhya, we might scan

VI, 52, 14. ūbhē rōdāsy āpām nāpāk kṛ mānmā, or we might shorten the ī before the a, and admitting synizesis, scan :

ubhē rōdāsī āpām nāpāk kṛ mānmā.

In III, 6, 10, we must either admit Sandhi between prākī and adhvaréva, or contract the first two syllables of adhvaréva.

The o and e of vocatives before vowels, when changed into av or a(y), are liable to synizesis :

IV, 48, 1. vāyāv ā kandrēnā rāthēnā (Anushubh, c.)

IV, 1, 2. sā bhrātārām varuṇām āgna ā vāvṛitsvā.

The termination avaḥ also, before vowels, seems to count as one syllable in V, 52, 14, divō vā dhrīshnāvā ōgasā, which would render Professor Bollensen's correction (Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 480), dhrīshnúogasā, unnecessary.

Like ava and iva, we find aya and iya, too, in several words liable to be contracted in pronunciation ; e.g. vayam, VI, 23, 5 ; ayam, I, 177, 4 ; iyam, VII, 66, 8² ; I, 186, 11 (unless we read vo+sme) ; X, 129, 6. Professor Bollensen's proposal to change iyam to im, and ayam to am (Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 461), would only cause obscurity, without any adequate gain, while other words would by a similar suppression of vowels or consonants become simply irrecongnisable. In I, 169, 6, for instance, ádha has to be pronounced with one ictus; in VI, 26, 7, sādhāvīrā is trisyllabic. In VI, 10, 1, we must admit synizesis in adhvaré; in I, 161, 8, either in udakām or in abravitana; I, 110, 9, in ṛibhumān; VIII, 79, 4, in diváh; V, 4, 6, in nṛitama (unless we read so-gne); I, 164, 17, in paráh; VI, 15, 14, in pāvaka; I, 191, 6; VII, 34, 7; 99, 3, in prithivī; II, 20, 8, in púraḥ; VI, 10, 1, in prayatí; VI, 17, 7, in brīhát; IX, 19, 6, in bhiyásam; I, 133, 6, in maháh; II, 28, 6; IV, 1, 2; VI, 75, 18, in varuna; III, 30, 21, in vṛishabha; VII, 41, 6, in vágínah; II, 43, 2, in sísumatíḥ; VI, 51, 2, in sanutár; VI, 18, 12, in sthávirasya, &c.

These remarks will, I hope, suffice in order to justify the principles by which I have been guided in my treatment of the text and in my translation of the Rig-veda. I know I shall seem to some to have been too timid in retaining whatever can possibly be retained in the traditional text of these ancient hymns, while others will look upon the emendations which I have suggested as unpardonable temerity. Let everything be weighed in the just scales of argument. Those who argue for victory, and not for truth, can have no hearing in our court. There is too much serious work to be done to allow time for wrangling or abuse. Any dictionary will supply strong words to those who condescend to such warfare, but strong arguments require honest labour, sound judgment, and, above all, a genuine love of truth.

The second volume, which I am now preparing for Press, will contain the remaining hymns addressed to the Maruts. The notes will necessarily have to be reduced to smaller dimensions, but they must always constitute the more important part in a translation or, more truly, in a deciphering of Vedic hymns.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

PARKS END, OXFORD:
March, 1869.

VEDIC HYMNS.

VEDIC HYMNS.

MANDALA X, HYMN 121.

ASHTAKA VIII, ADHYĀYA 7, VARGA 3-4.

TO THE UNKNOWN GOD.

1. In the beginning there arose the Golden Child (Hiranya-garbha¹); as soon as born, he alone was the lord of all that is. He stablished the earth and this heaven:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

2. He who gives breath, he who gives strength, whose¹ command all the bright gods revere, whose shadow² is immortality, whose shadow is death:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

3. He who through his might became the sole king of the breathing and twinkling¹ world, who governs all this, man and beast:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

4. He through whose might¹ these snowy mountains are, and the sea, they say, with the distant river (the Rasâ²), he of whom these regions are indeed the two arms:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

5. He through whom the awful heaven and the earth were made fast¹, he through whom the ether was stablished, and the firmament; he who measured the air in the sky²:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

6. He to whom heaven and earth¹, standing firm by his will, look up, trembling in their mind; he over whom the risen sun shines forth:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

7. When the great waters¹ went everywhere, holding the germ (Hiranya-garbha), and generating light, then there arose from them the (sole²) breath of the gods:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

8. He who by his might looked even over the waters which held power (the germ) and generated the sacrifice (light¹), he who alone is God above all gods²:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

9. May he not hurt us, he who is the begetter of the earth, or he, the righteous, who begat the heaven; he who also begat the bright and mighty waters:—Who is the God to whom we shall offer sacrifice?

[10¹. Pragâpati, no other than thou embraces all these created things. May that be ours which we desire when sacrificing to thee: may we be lords of wealth!]

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Hiranyagarbha Prāgāpatya, and is supposed to be addressed to Ka, Who, i.e. the Unknown God.

First translated in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, 1859, p. 569; see also Hibbert Lectures, 1882, p. 301; Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, IV, p. 15.

Verse 1=VS. XIII, 4; XXIII, 1; XXV, 10; TS. IV, 1, 8, 3; 2, 8, 2; AV. IV, 2, 7.

Verse 2=VS. XXV, 13; TS. IV, 1, 8, 4; VII, 5, 17, 1; AV. IV, 2, 1; XIII, 3, 24.

Verse 3=VS. XXIII, 3; XXV, 11; TS. IV, 1, 8, 4; VII, 5, 16, 1; AV. IV, 2, 2.

Verse 4=VS. XXV, 12; TS. IV, 1, 8, 4; AV. IV, 2, 5.

Verse 5=VS. XXXII, 6; TS. IV, 1, 8, 5; AV. IV, 2, 4.

Verse 6=VS. XXXII, 7; TS. IV, 1, 8, 5; AV. IV, 2, 3.

Verse 7=VS. XXVII, 25; XXXII, 7; TS. II, 2, 12, 1; IV, 1, 8, 5; TA. I, 23, 8; AV. IV, 2, 6.

Verse 8=VS. XXVII, 26; XXXII, 7; TS. IV, 1, 8, 6.

Verse 9=VS. XII, 102; TS. IV, 2, 7, 1.

Verse 10=VS. X, 20; XXIII, 65; TS. I, 8, 14, 2; III, 2, 5, 6; TB. II, 8, 1, 2; III, 5, 7, 1; AV. VII, 79, 4; 80, 3.

This is one of the hymns which has always been suspected as modern by European interpreters. The reason is clear. To us the conception of one God, which pervades the whole of this hymn, seems later than the conception of many individual gods, as recognised in various aspects of nature, such as the gods of the sky, the sun, the storms, or the fire. And in a certain sense we may be right, and language also confirms our sentiment. In our hymn there are several words which do not occur again in the Rig-veda, or which occur in places only which have likewise been suspected to be of more modern date. Hiranyagarbhā itself is an ἀπαξ λεγόμενον. Sám avartata is found only in the last Mandala, X, 90, 14; 129, 4. Bhûta also, in the sense of what is, occurs in the tenth Mandala only. It is used three times (X, 55, 2; 58, 12; 90, 2) as opposed to bháva, i. e. what is and what will be; and once more in the sense of all that is (X, 85, 17). Ātmadāh, in the sense of giving life, is another ἀπαξ λεγόμενον. Prasīsh is restricted to Mandalas I (I, 145, 1), IX (IX, 66, 6; 86, 32), and our passage. Himāvat, ἀπαξ λεγόμενον. The repetition of the relative pronoun in verses 2 and 4 is unusual. In the tenth verse the compound yāt-kāmaḥ is modern, and the insertion of etāni between tvāt and anyāḥ is at all events exceptional. The passage V, 31, 2 is not parallel, because in tvāt indra vásyah anyāt, the ablative tvāt is governed by vásyah. In VI, 21, 10, ná tvāvān anyāḥ amṛita tvāt asti, anyāḥ is separated from tvāt by a vocative only, as in VIII, 24, 11.

But when we say that a certain hymn is modern, we must carefully consider what we mean. Our hymn, for instance, must have existed not only previous to the Brāhmaṇa period, for many Brāhmaṇas presuppose it, but previous to the Mantra period also. It is true that no verse of it occurs in the Sāma-veda, but in the Sāma-veda-brāhmaṇa IX, 9, 12, verse 1 at least is mentioned^a. Most of its verses, however, occur in the Vāgasaneyi-saṃhitā, in the Taittirīya-saṃhitā, and in the Atharva-veda-saṃhitā, nay, the last verse, to my mind the most suspicious of all, occurs most frequently in the other Samhitās and Brāhmaṇas.

But though most of the verses of our hymn occur in other Samhitās, they do not always occur in the same order.

In the Vāg. Samh. we have the first verse in XIII, 4, but no other verse of our hymn follows. We have the first verse again in XXIII, 1, but not followed by verse 2, but by verse 3 (XXIII, 3)^b. Then we have verse 1 once more in XXV, 10, followed by verse 3 (XXV, 11), by verse 4 (XXV, 12), and then by verse 2 (XXV, 13).

^a The last line is here, tasmai ta indo havishā vidhema, let us sacrifice to him with thy oblation, O Soma!

^b Var. lect. nimeshatāḥ.

We have verses 5, 6, 7, 8 in VS. XXXII, 6 and 7, and verses 7 and 8 in VS. XXVII, 25 and 26, while verse 9 is found in XII, 102 only^a, and the last verse in X, 20^b, and XXIII, 65.

In the Taitt. Saṃhitā the verses follow more regularly, still never quite in the same order as in the Rig-veda. In TS. IV, 1, 8, 3^c, we have verses 1 to 8, but verse 3 before verse 2, and verse 6 before verse 5, while verse 9 follows in IV, 2, 7, 1.

In TS. v. 3 stands before v. 2, in VII, 5, 16, 1, and VII, 5, 17, 1.

In TS. II, 2, 12, the pratikas of verses 1, 7, 10 are quoted in succession.

Verse 7 occurs with important various readings in TA. I, 23, 8, āpo ha yád brīhatīr gārbham āyan dāksham dādhanā ganāyantiḥ svayambhūm, tāta imé-dhyāsrīgryanta sárgāḥ.

Lastly in the AV. we find verses 1 to 7 from IV, 2, 1, to IV, 2, 7, but arranged in a different order, viz. as 2, 3, 6, 5, 4, 7, 1, and with important various readings.

Verse 2, yó 3 syése dvipádo yás kátushpadaḥ, as third páda; also in XIII, 3, 24.

Verse 3, ekó rāgā; yásya khāyāmrītam yásya mrityúḥ, as third páda.

Verse 4, yásya vírve; samudré yásya rasām íd āhúḥ; imās ka.

Verse 5, yásya dyaúr urvī prīthivī ka mahī yasyádá urvá-1 ntáriksham, yasyásaú sūro vítato mahitvā.

Verse 6, ávatas kaskabhāné bhiyásāne ródasī áhvayethām (sic), yasyásaú panthā rāgaso vimānaḥ.

Verse 7, āpo ágre vísvam áván gārbham dādhanā amrītá ritagñāḥ, yāsu devīshv ádhi devá ásit.

Verse 10, vísvā rūpāni paribhūr gagāna, see VII, 79, 4, and 80, 3.

We are justified, therefore, in looking upon the verses, composing this hymn, as existing before the final arrangement of the four Samhitās, and if we persist in calling a hymn, dating from that period, a modern hymn, we must make it quite clear that, according to the present state of our knowledge, such a hymn cannot well be more modern than 1000 B.C. Besides the variations in the arrangement of the verses of our hymn, the very considerable various readings which we find in the VS., TS., and AV. are highly instructive, as showing the frequent employment of our hymn for sacrificial purposes. In several cases these various readings are of great importance, as we shall see.

^a Var. lect. mā má, satyádharma vyānaḥ, prathamó for brīhatīḥ.

^b Var. lect. rūpāni for bhūtāni.

^c Var. lect., ver. 5, dridhé, dual for drīhā; ver. 6, úditau vyéti for údito vibhāti; ver. 8, agnīm for yagnām.

Verse 1.

MUIR: Hiranyagarbha arose in the beginning; born, he was the one lord of things existing. He established the earth and this sky: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Hiranyagarbha hat zuerst sich gebildet, er ward geboren als einziger herr alles gewordenen, diese erde und diesen himel hält er; Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. Hiranyagarbha^a has been translated in different ways, and it would perhaps be best to keep it as a proper name, which it is in later times. It means literally the golden embryo, the golden germ or child, or born of a golden womb, and was no doubt an attempt at naming the sun. Soon, however, that name became mythological. The golden child was supposed to have been so called because it was Pragâpati, the lord of creation, when dwelling as yet in the golden egg, and Hiranyagarbha became in the end a recognised name of Pragâpati, see Sây. on X, 121, 1. All this is fully explained by Sâyana, TS. IV, 1, 8, 3; IV, 2, 8, 2; by Mahîdhara, VS. XIII, 4.

Verse 2.

MUIR: He who gives breath, who gives strength, whose command all, [even] the gods, reverence, whose shadow is immortality, whose shadow is death: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

^a M. M., India, What can it teach us? pp. 144, 162.

LUDWIG: Geber des lebendigen hauches, geber der kraft, zu des unterweisung alle götter sich einfinden, des glanz die unsterblichkeit, dessen der tod ist, Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. In order to account for the repetition of yasya, Sâyana and Mahidhara take visve for men, and devâh for gods.

Note 2. It is difficult to say what is meant by khâyâ, shadow. I take it in the sense of what belongs to the god, as the shadow belongs to a man, what follows him, or is determined by him. In that sense Sâyana also takes it, TS. IV, 1, 8, 4, yasya pragâpates khâyâvat svâdhînam amṛitam, moksharûpam, mṛityuh, prâninâm maranam api, yasya khâyeva svâdhînah; and, though not quite so clearly, in RV. X, 121, 2. Mahidhara on the contrary takes khâyâ in the sense of refuge, and says, whose shadow, i.e. whose worship, preceded by knowledge, is amṛita, immortality, a means of deliverance^a, while ignorance of him is death, or leads to samsâra.

Verse 3.

MUIR: Who by his might became the sole king of the breathing and winking world, who is the lord of this two-footed and four-footed [creation]: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Der des atmenden, augenbewegenden lebendigen durch seine grösze der einzige könig geworden; der verfügt über disz zwei- und vier-füszige, Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. It is difficult to say whether nimishatah means twinkling or sleeping. It has both meanings as to wink has in English. Sâyana (X, 121, 3; TS. IV, 1, 8, 4) and Mahidhara (VS. XXIII, 3^b) explain it by winking. This may be right as expressing sensuous perception, in addition to mere breathing. In X, 190, 2, visvasya mishatô vaśī means, lord of all that winks, i.e.

^a muktihetu, not yuktihetu, as Weber prints.

^b Is nimeshâto in XXIII, 3, a varia lectio, or an arudha? In XXV, 13, we read nimishato.

lives. The later idea, that the gods do not wink, has nothing to do with our passage.

Verse 4.

MUIR: Whose greatness these snowy mountains, and the sea with the Rasâ (river), declare,—of whom these regions, of whom they are the arms: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Dessen die schneebedeckten (berge, die Hima-vân) vermöge seiner grösze, als des eigentum man ocean und Rasâ nennt, des dise himelsgegenden, des arme sie, Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. Muir's translation, which suggests itself very naturally to a European mind, is impossible, because mahitvâ cannot be either mahitvâm (as Sâyana also and Mahîdhara suggest), or mahitvâni; and because âhúh does not mean declare. Otherwise nothing could be better than his rendering: 'Whose greatness these snowy mountains, and the sea with the Rasâ (river), declare.'

Mahitvâ, as Sâyana also rightly perceives, TS. IV, 1, 8, 4, is a very common instrumental (see Lanman, Noun-inflection, pp. 335-6), and the same mahitvâ must be supplied for samudrâm. We might make the whole sentence dependent on âhuh without much change of meaning. The Atharva-veda text supplies a lectio faciliior, but not therefore melior.

Note 2. The Rasâ is a distant river, in some respects like the Greek Okeanos. Dr. Aufrecht takes it as a name of the milky way, Z. D. M. G. XIII, 498: see Muir, S. T. II, p. 373, n. 19.

Verse 5.

MUIR: By whom the sky is fiery, and the earth fixed, by whom the firmament and the heaven were established, who in the atmosphere is the measurer of the aerial space: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Durch den gewaltig der himel und fest die erde, durch den gestützt Svar, und das gewölbe, der die räume im mittelgebiete ausgemessen, Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. In this verse I decidedly prefer the reading of the Atharva-veda, yena dyaus ugrā prithivī ka drilhe. It seems not a lectio faciliior, and we avoid the statement that the heaven has been made ugrā. Ugrā, as applied to dyaus, means awful and grand, as an inherent quality rather, and not simply strong. See Ludwig, Notes, p. 441.

Note 2. Rāgaso vimānaḥ has been fully discussed by Muir, S. T. IV, p. 71, but it is difficult to find a right translation for it, because the cosmography of the Veda is so different from our own (see I, 6, 9, note 1, and I, 19, 3, note 1). I think we may translate it here by the air, or even by space, particularly the bright air in the sky, the sky (antariksha or nabhas) being between heaven (dyu) and earth (prithivī), while svaḥ and nāka are still higher than the heaven (dyu), svaḥ being sometimes explained as the abode of the sun, the ether, or empyrean, nāka, the firmament, as svarga (Mahīdhara); or svaḥ as svarga, and nāka as āditya (Sāyana). Vimāna is here simply the measurer, though vimā, from meaning to measure, is apt to take the meaning of to make, which is an excuse for Sāyana's rendering, 'who makes the rain in the sky.'

The Atharva-veda rendering is very free, and certainly no improvement.

Verse 6.

MUIR: To whom two contending armies, sustained by his succour, looked up, trembling in mind; over whom the risen sun shines: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Auf den die beiden Schlachtreihen durch (ihre) Begriffe aufgestellt in Ordnung ihren Blick richten, zitternd, im Geiste, wo darüber hin aufgegangen Sūra ausstrahlt, Ka, dem Gotte, möchten wir mit Havis aufwarten.

Note 1. It would be well to read rōdasī for krāndasī (which B. R. explain by 'two armies'), and the various reading in AV. IV, 2, 3 decidedly points in that direction. But even if krāndasī stands, it must be taken in the same sense as rōdasī. Uditau vyeti in TS. IV, 1, 8, 5 is explained by udayavishaye vividham gakkhati.

Verse 7.

MUIR: When the great waters pervaded the universe containing an embryo, and generating fire, thence arose the one spirit (asu) of the gods: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Als die groszen waszer kamen, die allen keim in sich faszten, zeugend den Agni, da kam zu stande der götter einziger lebensgeist; Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. The waters here referred to have to be understood as the waters in the beginning of the creation, where, as we read (RV. X, 129, 3), 'everything was like a sea without a light,' or, as the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa (XI, 1, 6, 1) says, 'everything was water and sea.' These waters held the germ^a, and produced the golden light, the sun^b, whence arose the life of all the gods, viz. Pragāpati. The Atharva-veda adds a verse which repeats the same idea more clearly: āpo vatsām ganāyantīr gārbham āgre sāmairayan, tāsytotā gāyamānasyólba āsīd dhiranyāya, 'In the beginning the waters, producing a young, brought forth an embryo, and when it was being born, it had a golden covering.' The sunrise serves here as elsewhere as an image of the creation.

Note 2. Grassmann proposes to omit eka, because it is absent in the Maitráyaṇī Sākhā. The metre shows the same.

Verse 8.

MUIR: He who through his greatness beheld the waters which contained power, and generated sacrifice, who was the one god above the gods: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Der in seiner grösze sogar die waszer über-schaute, wie sie die fähigkeit besitzend erzeugten das opfer, der der einzige gott war über den göttern, Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Note 1. In dāksham dādhanā ganāyantīr yagnām, we have a repetition of what was said in the preceding verse,

^a See RV. X, 82, 5-6.

^b See RV. X, 72, 7.

dáksham standing for gárbham, yagnám for agním, which is actually the reading of TS. The Atharva-veda does not contain this verse, which is used as an anyâ vikalpitâ yâgyâ in TS.

Note 2. It is curious that one of the most important sentences in the Rig-veda, yo deveshv adhi deva eka âsît, should have been changed in the Atharva-veda IV, 2, 6 into yâsu devîshv adhi deva âsît, 'over which divine waters there was the god.' See Ludwig, Notes, p. 441.

Verse 9.

MUIR: May he not injure us, he who is the generator of the earth, who, ruling by fixed ordinances, produced the heavens, who produced the great and brilliant waters: to what god shall we offer our oblation?

LUDWIG: Nicht schädige uns, der der erde erzeuger, oder der den himel bereitet mit warhafter satzung, der auch die wasser, die hellen, die mächtigen erzeugt hat, Ka, dem gotte, möchten wir mit havis aufwarten.

Verse 10.

MUIR: Pragâpati, no other than thou is lord over all these created things: may we obtain that, through desire of which we have invoked thee: may we become masters of riches.

LUDWIG: Pragâpati, kein anderer als du hat umfasst die wesen alle, der wunsch, um deswillen wir dir opfern, der werde uns zu teil, besitzer von reichthümern mögen wir sein.

Note 1. This verse is certainly extremely weak after all that preceded, still, to judge from its frequent occurrence, we cannot well discard it. All we can say is that nowhere, except in the Rig-veda, does it form the final verse of our hymn, and thus spoil its whole character.

That character consists chiefly in the burden of the nine verses, Kasmai devâya havishâ vidhema, 'To what god shall we offer sacrifice?' This is clearly meant to express a desire of finding out the true, but unknown god, and to do so, even after all has been said that can be said of a supreme god. To finish such a hymn with a statement that Pragâpati is the god who deserves our sacrifice, may be very natural theologically, but it is entirely uncalled for poetically. The very phrase Kasmai devâya havishâ vidhema must have been a familiar phrase, for we find in a hymn addressed to the wind, X, 168, 4, after all has been said that can be said of him, the concluding line: ghóshâ/ it asya srinvire ná rûpâm tásmâi vâtâya havishâ vidhema, 'his sound indeed is heard, but he is not seen—to that Vâta let us offer sacrifice.'

But more than this, on the strength of hymns like our own in which the interrogative pronoun ka, 'who,' occurs, the Brâhmanas actually invented a god of the name of Ka. I pointed this out many years ago in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature (1860, p. 433), where I said: 'In accordance with the same system, we find that the authors of the Brâhmanas had so completely broken with the past that, forgetful of the poetical character of the hymns, and the yearning of the poets after the unknown god, they exalted the interrogative pronoun into a deity, and acknowledged a god 'Ka, or Who.' In the Taittiriya-samhitâ (I, 7, 6, 6), in the Kaushîtaki-brâhmana (XXIV, 4), in the Tândya-brâhmana (XV, 10), and in the Satapatha-brâhmana ^a, whenever interrogative verses occur, the author states, that Ka is Pragâpati, or 'the Lord of Creatures' (Pragâpatir vai Ka/). Nor did they stop there. Some of the hymns in which the interrogative pronoun occurred were called Kadvat, i.e. having kad or quid. But soon a new adjective was formed, and not only the hymns, but the sacrifices also, offered to the god, were called Kâya, or who-ish ^b. This word, which is not to be identified with the Latin cujus, cuja, cujum, but is merely the artificial product of an effete mind, is found in the Taittiriya-samhitâ (I, 8, 3, 1), and in the Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ (XXIV, 15). At the time of Pânini

^a Satap. Brâhm. I, 1, 1, 13; II, 5, 2, 13; IV, 5, 6, 4; also Aitar. Brâhm. III, 21.

^b Âsv. Sr. Sûtra II, 17, 14; Kâty. Sr. Sûtra V, 4, 23; Vait. Sûtra VIII, 22, ed. Garbe.

this word had acquired such legitimacy as to call for a separate rule explaining its formation (Pân. IV, 2, 25). The commentator there explains Ka by Brahman. After this we can hardly wonder that in the later Sanskrit literature of the Purâṇas, Ka appears as a recognised god, as the supreme god, with a genealogy of his own, perhaps even with a wife; and that in the Laws of Manu, one of the recognised forms of marriage, generally known by the name of Pragâpati-marriage, occurs under the monstrous title of 'Kâya.' Stranger still, grammarians who know that ka forms the dative kasmai only if it is an interrogative pronoun, consider kasmai in our hymn as irregular, because, as a proper name, Ka ought to form the dative Kâya.

MANDALA I, HYMN 6.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 11-12.

TO INDRA AND THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. Those who stand around ² him while he moves on, harness the bright red (steed)¹; the lights in heaven shine forth³.

2. They harness to the chariot on each side his (Indra's)¹ two favourite bays, the brown, the bold, who can carry the hero.

3. Thou who createst light where there was no light, and form, O men¹! where there was no form, hast been born together with the dawns².

4. Thereupon¹ they (the Maruts), according to their wont², assumed again the form of new-born babes³, taking their sacred name.

5. Thou, O Indra, with the swift Maruts¹, who break even through the stronghold², hast found even in their hiding-place the bright ones³ (days or clouds).

6. The pious singers¹ (the Maruts) have, after their own mind², shouted towards the giver of wealth, the great, the glorious (Indra).

7. Mayest thou¹ (host of the Maruts) be verily seen² coming together with Indra, the fearless: you are both happy-making, and of equal splendour.

8. With the beloved hosts of Indra, with the blameless, hasting² (Maruts), the sacrificer¹ cries aloud.

9. From yonder, O traveller (Indra), come hither, or from the light^a of heaven¹; the singers all yearn for it;—

10. Or we ask Indra for help from here, or from heaven, or from above the earth, or from the great sky.

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Kaṇva, the son of Ghora. The metre is Gâyatrî throughout.

Verse 1=SV. II, 818; VS. XXIII, 5; AV. XX, 26, 4; 47, 10; 69, 9; TS. VII, 4, 20, 1; TB. III, 9, 4, 1.

Verse 2=SV. II, 819; VS. XXIII, 6; AV. XX, 26, 5; 47, 11; 69, 10; TS. VII, 4, 20, 1.

Verse 3=SV. II, 820; VS. XXIX, 37; AV. XX, 26, 6; 47, 12; 69, 11; TS. VII, 4, 20, 1; TB. III, 9, 4, 3.

Verse 4=SV. II, 101; AV. XX, 40, 3; 69, 12.

Verse 5=SV. II, 202; AV. XX, 70, 1.

Verse 6=AV. XX, 70, 2.

Verse 7=SV. II, 200; AV. XX, 40, 1; 70, 3.

Verse 8=AV. XX, 40, 2; 70, 4.

Verse 9=AV. XX, 70, 5.

Verse 10=AV. XX, 70, 6.

Verse 1.

WILSON: The circumstationed (inhabitants of the three worlds) associate with (Indra), the mighty (Sun), the indestructive (fire), the moving (wind), and the lights that shine in the sky.

BENFEY: Die rothe Sonne schirr'n sie an, die wandelt um die stehenden, Strahlen strahlen am Himmel auf.

LUDWIG: Sie spannen an den hellen, den roten, den vom feststehenden hinwegwandelnden; heller glanz erstrahlt am Himmel.

Note 1. The poet begins with a somewhat abrupt description of a sunrise. Indra is taken as the god of the bright day, whose steed is the sun, and whose companions the Maruts, or the storm-gods. Arushá, meaning originally red, is used as a proper name of the horse or of the rising sun, though it occurs more frequently as the name of the red horses or flames of Agni, the god of fire, and also of the morning light. In our passage, Arushá, a substantive, meaning the red of the morning, has taken bradhná as an adjective,—bradhná meaning, as far as can be made out, bright in general, though, as it is especially applied to the Soma-juice, perhaps bright-brown or yellow. Names of colour are difficult to translate from one language into another, for their shades vary, and withdraw themselves from sharp definition. We shall meet with this difficulty again and again in the Veda; see RV. X, 20, 9.

As it has actually been doubted whether bradhná arushá can be meant for the sun, and whether the Vedic poets ever looked upon the sun as a horse, I may quote Vāg. Samh. XXIII, 4, where the same verse occurs and is declared to be addressed to the sun; and Satap. Br. XIII, 2, 6, 1, where we read, yuñgānti bradhnām arushām karan-tam iti, asau vā ādityo bradhno-rusho-mum evāsmā ādityam yunakti svargasya lokasya samashṭyai. Ludwig remarks justly that the sun has been conceived as a chariot also, and that bradhná arushá may have been thus understood here. Delbrück translates quite boldly: Sie schirren die rothe Sonne an. See also Tait. Br. III, 7, 7, 4; Tāndya Br. XXIII, 3, 5; Sāṅkh. Br. II, 17, 3; Ludwig, Comm. ii. p. 173. M. Bergaigne (Rél. Ved. iii. p. 324) remarks very truly: 'Le soleil est tantôt une roue, tantôt un char, tantôt un cheval, trainant le char, tantôt un héros monté sur le char et dirigeant les chevaux.'

The following passages will illustrate the principal meaning of arushá, and justify the translation here adopted.

ARUSHÁ, AS AN ADJECTIVE.

Arushá is used as an adjective in the sense of red:

VII, 97, 6. tām sagmāsaḥ arushāsaḥ āsvāḥ brīhaspátim saha-vāhaḥ vahanti,—nábhaḥ ná rūpām arushám vāsānāḥ.

Powerful red horses, drawing together draw him, Brīhaspati: horses clothed in red colour, like the sky.

III, 1, 4. svetām gaghānām arushām mahi-tvā.

Agni, the white, when born; the red, by growth.

III, 15, 3. krishnāsu agne arushāḥ ví bhāhi.

Shine, O Agni, red among the dark ones.

III, 31, 21; VI, 27, 7.

VII, 75, 6. prāti dyutânām arushāsah āsvāh kētrāh adri-sran ushāsam vāhantaḥ.

The red horses, the beautiful, were seen bringing to us the bright dawn.

V, 43, 12; I, 118, 5; IV, 43, 6; V, 73, 5; I, 36, 9; VII, 3, 3; 16, 3; X, 45, 7; I, 141, 8.

II, 2, 8. sáh idhânáh ushāsah rāmyāh ānu svāh ná dīdet arushéna bhânúnā.

He (Agni), lit after the lovely dawns, shone like the sky with his red splendour.

III, 29, 6; IV, 58, 7; I, 114, 5; V, 59, 5; 12, 2; 12, 6; VI, 8, 1.

VI, 48, 6. syāvāsu arusháh vṛśhā.

In the dark (nights) the red hero (Agni). Cf. III, 7, 5.

In one passage vṛśhan arushá is intended for fire in the shape of lightning.

X, 89, 9. ní amítreshu vadhám indra túmram vṛśhan vṛśhānam arushám sísihi.

Whet, O strong Indra, the heavy strong red weapon, against the enemies.

X, 43, 9. út gāyatām parasúh gyótishā sahā—ví rokatām arusháh bhânúnā súkīh.

May the axe (the thunderbolt) appear with the light—may the red one blaze forth, bright with splendour.

X, 1, 6; VI, 3, 6.

X, 20, 9. kṛishnāh svetáh arusháh yāmaḥ asya bradhnáh rigráh utá sōnah.

His (Agni's) path is black, white, red, bright, reddish, and yellow.

Here it is extremely difficult to keep all the colours distinct.

Arushá is frequently applied to Soma, particularly in the 9th Māṇḍala. There we read :

IX, 8, 6. arusháh hárih. IX, 71, 7. arusháh diváh kavíh vṛśhā. IX, 74, 1. vāgī arusháh. IX, 82, 1. arusháh vṛśhā hárih. IX, 89, 3. hárim arushám.

IX, 111, 1. arusháh hárih. See also IX, 25, 5; 61, 21. In IX, 72, 1, arushá seems used as a substantive in the sense of red-horse.

Professor Spiegel, in his important review of my translation (Heidelberger Jahrbücher, 1870, p. 104), points out that aurusha in Zend means white, so that it would seem as if the original meaning of arusha had been bright, bright like fire, and thus red.

ARUSHÁ, AS AN APPELLATIVE.

Arushá is used as an appellative, and in the following senses :

1. The one red-horse of the Sun, the two or more red-horses of Agni.

I, 6, 1. yuñgānti bradhnám arushám.

They yoke the bright red-horse (the Sun).

I, 94, 10. yát áyuktháh arusháh róhitá ráthe.

When thou (Agni) hadst yoked the two red-horses and the two ruddy horses to the chariot. I, 146, 2.

II, 10, 2. srúyáh agníh—hávam me—syáváh rátham vaha-táh róhitá vá utá arusháh.

Mayest thou, Agni, hear my call, whether the two black, or the two ruddy, or the two red-horses carry you.

Here three kinds of colours are clearly distinguished, and an intentional difference is made between róhita and arushá. IV, 2, 3.

IV, 6, 9. táva tyé agne harítah—róhitásah—arushásah vríshanañ.

To thee (Agni) belong these bays, these ruddy, these red-horses, the stallions.

Here, again, three kinds of horses are distinguished—Haríts, Róhitas, and Arushás.

VIII, 34, 17. yé rigráh vāta-ramhasah arushásah raghu-syádah.

Here arushá may be the subject, and the rest adjectives ; but it is also possible to take all the words as adjectives, referring them to áśu in the next verse. The fact that rigrá likewise expresses a peculiar red colour, is no objection, as may be seen from I, 6, 1 ; 94, 10.

VII, 42, 2. yuñkshvá—harítah róhitah ka yé vá sádman arusháh.

Yoke (O Agni) the bays, and the ruddy horses, or the red-horses which are in thy stable. VII, 16, 2.

2. The cloud, represented as one of the horses of the Maruts.

I, 85, 5. utá arushásya ví syanti dhārāk.

(When you go to the battle, O Maruts), the streams of the red (horse) flow off.

V, 56, 7. utá syāh vāgī arushāk.

This strong red-horse,—meant for one of the horses of the Maruts, but, at the same time, as sending rain.

ARUSHÁ, AS THE PROPER NAME OF A SOLAR DEITY.

Besides the passages in which arushá is used either as an adjective, in the sense of red, or as an appellative, meaning some kind of horse, there are others in which, as I pointed out in my Essay on Comparative Mythology^a, Arushá occurs as a proper name, as the name of a solar deity, as the bright deity of the morning (Morgenroth). My interpretation of some of these passages has been contested, nor shall I deny that in some of them a different interpretation is possible, and that in looking for traces of Arushá, as a Vedic deity, representing the morning or the rising sun, and containing, as I endeavoured to show, the first germs of the Greek name of Eros, I may have seen more indications of the presence of that deity in the Veda than others would feel inclined to acknowledge. Yet in going over the same ground again, I think that even verses which for a time I felt inclined to surrender, yield a better sense, if we take the word arushá, which occurs in them as a substantive, as the name of a matutinal deity, than if we look upon it as an adjective or a mere appellative. It might be said that wherever this arushá occurs, apparently as the name of a deity, we ought to supply Agni or Indra or Sūrya. This is true to a certain extent, for the sun, or the light of the morning, or the bright sky form no doubt the substance and subject-matter of this deity. But the same applies to many other names originally intended for these conceptions, but which, nevertheless, in the course of time, became independent names of independent deities. In our passage I, 6, 1, yuṅgānti bradhnám arushám, we may retain for arushá the appellative power of steed or red-steed, but if we could ask the poet what he meant by this red-steed, or if we ask ourselves what we can possibly understand by it, the answer would be, the morning sun, or the light of the morning. In other passages, however, this meaning of red-steed is really no longer applicable, and we can only translate Arushá by the Red, understanding by this name the deity of the morning or of the morning sun, the later Aruṇa.

^a Chips from a German Workshop, 2nd ed., vol. ii, p. 137 seq. Selected Essays, vol. i, p. 444.

VII, 71, 1. ápa svásuḥ ushásaḥ nák gihíte rinákti krishnā arushāya pánthām.

The Night retires from her sister, the Dawn; the Dark one yields the path to the Red one, i. e. the red morning.

Here Arushá shares the same half-mythological character as Ushas. Where we should speak of dawn and morning as mere periods of time, the Vedic poet speaks of them as living and intelligent beings, half human, half divine, as powers of nature capable of understanding his prayers, and powerful enough to reward his praises. I do not think therefore that we need hesitate to take Arushá in this passage as a proper name of the morning, or of the morning sun, to whom the dark goddess, the Night, yields the path when he rises in the East.

VI, 49, 2. diváh śísum sáhasaḥ sūnúm agnīm yagñásya ketúm arushám yágadhyai.

To worship the child of Dyu, the son of strength, Agni, the light of the sacrifice, the Red one (Arushá).

In this verse, where the name of Agni actually occurs, it would be easier than in the preceding verse to translate arushá as an adjective, referring it either to Agni, the god of fire, or to yagñásya ketúm, the light of the sacrifice. I had myself yielded* so far to these considerations that I gave up my former translation, and rendered this verse by 'to worship Agni, the child of the sky, the son of strength, the red light of the sacrifice^a.' But I return to my original translation, and I prefer to see in Arushá an independent name, intended, no doubt, for Agni, as the representative of the rising sun and, at the same time, of the sacrificial fire of the morning, but nevertheless as having in the mind of the poet a personality of his own. He is the child of Dyū, originally the offspring of heaven. He is the son of strength, originally generated by the strong rubbing of the aravis, i. e. the wood for kindling fire. He is the light of the sacrifice, whether as reminding man that the time for the morning sacrifice has come, or as himself lighting the sacrifice on the Eastern altar of the sky. He is Arushá, originally as clothed in bright red colour, but gradually changed into the representative of the morning. We see at once, if examining these various expressions, how some of them, like the child of Dyū, are easily carried away into mythology, while others, such as the son of strength, or the light of the sacrifice, resist that unconscious metamorphosis. That Arushá was infected by mythology, that it had approached at least that point where nomina become changed into numina, we see by the verse immediately following:

* Chips from a German Workshop, vol. ii, p. 139.

VI, 49, 3. arushásya duhitārā vīrūpe (iti vī-rūpe) str/bhiḥ anyā pipisē sūrah anyā.

There are two different daughters of Arushá; the one is clad in stars, the other belongs to the sun, or is the wife of Svar.

Here Arushá is clearly a mythological being, like Agni or Savitar or Vaisvânara; and if Day and Night are called his daughters, he, too, can hardly have been conceived otherwise than as endowed with human attributes, as the child of Dyū, as the father of Day and Night, and not as a mere period of time, not as a mere cause or effect.

IV, 15, 6. tām ārvantam ná sânasīm arushám ná diváh śsum marmṛigyānte divé-dive.

^a Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1867, p. 204.

They trim the fire day by day, like a strong horse, like Arushá, the child of Dyu.

Here, too, Arushá, the child of Dyu, has to be taken as a personal character, and, if the ná after arushám is right, a distinction is clearly made between Agni, the sacrificial fire, to whom the hymn is addressed, and Arushá, the child of heaven, the pure and bright morning, here used as a simile for the cleaning or trimming of the fire on the altar.

V, 47, 3. arusháh su-parnáh.

Arushá, the morning sun, with beautiful wings.

THE FEMININE ÁRUSHÎ, AS AN ADJECTIVE.

Árushî, like arushá, is used as an adjective, in the same sense as arushá, i. e. red :

III, 55, 11. syávi ka yát árushî ka svásárau.

As the dark and the red are sisters.

I, 92, 1 and 2. gávah árushîh and árushîh gáh.

The red cows of the dawn.

I, 92, 2. rúrantam bhânúm árushîh asirayuh.

The red dawns obtained bright splendour.

Here ushása^h, the dawns, occur in the same line, so that we may take árushî^h either as an adjective, referring to the dawns, or as a substantive, as a name of the dawn or of her cows.

I, 30, 21. ásve ná kître arushi.

Thou beautiful red dawn, thou, like a mare.

Here, too, the vocative arushi is probably to be taken as an adjective, particularly if we consider the next following verse :

IV, 52, 2. ásvā-iva kitrā árushî mātā gávām ritā-vari sákhā abhūt arvíno^h ushā^h.

The dawn, beautiful and red, like a mare, the mother of the cows (days), the never-failing, she became the friend of the Asvins.

X, 5, 5. saptá svásrî^h árushî^h.

The seven red sisters.

THE FEMININE ÁRUSHÎ, AS A SUBSTANTIVE.

If used as a substantive, árushî seems to mean the dawn. It is likewise used as a name of the horses of Agni, Indra, and Soma ; also as a name for mare in general.

It means dawn in X, 8, 3, though the text points here so clearly to the dawn, and the very name of dawn is mentioned so immediately after, that this one passage seems hardly sufficient to establish the use of árushî as a recognised name of the dawn. Other passages, however, would likewise gain in perspicuity, if we took árushî by itself as a name of the dawn, just as we had to admit in several passages arushá by itself as a name of the morning. Cf. I, 71, 1.

Árushî means the horses of Agni, in I, 14, 12 :

yukshvá hí árushîḥ ráthe harítaḥ deva rohítaḥ.

Yoke, O god (Agni), the red-horses to the chariot, the bays, the ruddy.

I, 72, 10. prá nṛkîḥ agne árushîḥ agānan.

They knew the red-horses, Agni, coming down. VIII, 69, 5.

Soma, as we saw, was frequently spoken of as arusháḥ háriḥ.

In IX, 111, 2, tridhātubhiḥ árushîbhiḥ seems to refer to the same red-horses of Soma, though this is not quite clear.

The passages where árushî means simply a mare, without any reference to colour, are VIII, 68, 18, and VIII, 55, 3.

It is curious that Arushá, which in the Veda means red, should, as pointed out before, in its Zend form aurusha, mean white. That in the Veda it means red, and not white, is shown, for instance, by X, 20, 9, where svetá, the name for white, is mentioned by the side of arushá. Most likely arushá meant originally brilliant, and became fixed with different shades of brilliancy in Sanskrit and Persian. Arushá presupposes a form ar-vas, and is derived from a root ar in the sense of running or rushing. See Chips from a German Workshop, vol. ii, pp. 135, 137.

Having thus explained the different meanings of arushá and árushí in the Rig-veda, I feel it incumbent, at least for once, to explain the reasons why I differ from the classification of Vedic passages as given in the Dictionary published by Boehtlingk and Roth. Here, too, the passages in which arushá is used as an adjective are very properly separated from those in which it appears as a substantive. To begin with the first, it is said that 'arushá means ruddy, the colour of Agni and his horses; he (Agni) himself appears as a red-horse.' In support of this, the following passages are quoted:

III, 1, 4. ávardhayan su-bhágam saptá yahvíh svetám gagñánám arushám mahi-tvā, śsum ná gátám abhí áruh árváh. Here, however, it is only said that Agni was born brilliant-white^a, and grew red, that the horses came to him as they come to a new-born foal. Agni himself is not called a red-horse.

III, 7, 5. Here, again, vr̥shnah arushásya is no doubt meant for Agni. But vr̥shan by itself does not mean horse, though it is added to different names of horses to qualify them as male horses; cf. VII, 69, 1, ā vām ráthah vr̥shabhih yātu árvaih, may your chariot come near with powerful horses, i. e. with stallions. See note to I, 85, 12. We are therefore not justified in translating arushá vr̥shan by red-horse, but only by the red male, or the red hero.

In III, 31, 3, agnih gagñe guhvā régamānah maháh putrán arushásya pra-yákshe, I do not venture to say who is meant by the maháh putrán arushásya, whether Ādityas or Maruts, but hardly the sons of Agni, as Agni himself is mentioned as only born. But, even if it were so, the father of these sons (putra) could hardly be intended here for a horse.

IV, 6, 9. táva tyé agne harítah ghrita-snāh róhitāsah rigu-āñkah su-āñkah, arushāsah vr̥shanah rigu-mushkáh. Here, so far from Agni being represented as a red-horse, his different horses, the Haríts or bays, the Róhitas or ruddy, and the arushāsaḥ vrīṣhanah, the red stallions, are distinctly mentioned. Here vrīṣhan may be translated by stallion, instead of simply by male, because arushā is here a substantive, the name of a horse.

^a See V, 1, 4. svetáh vāgī gāyate ágre áhnám. X, 1, 6. arusháh gátáh padé ślāyáh.

V, 1, 5. gānishṭa hí gēnyaḥ āgre áhnām hitáh hitēshu arusháh vāneshu. Here arusháh is simply an adjective, red, referring to Agni, who is understood throughout the hymn to be the object of praise. He is said to be kind to those who are kind to him, and to be red in the woods, i. e. brilliant in the wood which he consumes; cf. III, 29, 6. Nothing is said about his equine nature.

In V, 12, 2 and 6, VI, 48, 6, we have again simply arushā vrīṣhan, which does not mean the red-horse, but the red male, the red hero, i. e. Agni.

In VI, 49, 2, diváh śśum sáhasaḥ sūnúm agním yagñásya ketúm arushám yágadhyai, there is no trace of Agni being conceived as a horse. He is called the child of the sky or of Dyū, the son of strength (who is produced by strong rubbing of wood), the light or the beacon of the sacrifice, and lastly Arushā, which, for reasons stated above, I take to be used here as a name.

Next follow the passages in which, according to Professor Roth, arushā, as an adjective, is said to be applied to the horses, cows, and other teams of the gods, particularly of the dawn, the Asvins, and Bṛihaspati.

I, 118, 5. pári vām ásváh vāpushaḥ patangāḥ váyaḥ vahantu arushāḥ abhīke. Here we find the váyah arushāḥ of the Asvins, which it is better to translate by red birds, as immediately before the winged horses are mentioned. In fact, whenever arushā is applied to the vehicle of the Asvins, it is to be understood of these red birds, IV, 43, 6.

In I, 92, 1 and 2 (not 20), árushī occurs three times, referring twice to the cows of the dawn, once to the dawn herself.

In IV, 15, 6, tám árvantam ná sânasīm arushám ná diváh śśum marmṛigyānte divé-dive, arushā does not refer to the horse or any other animal of Agni. The verse speaks of a horse by way of comparison only, and says that the sacrificers clean or trim Agni, the fire, as people clean a horse. We cannot join arushám in the next páda with árvantam in the preceding páda, for the second ná would then be without any construction. The construction is certainly not easy, but I think it is safer to translate: they trim him (Agni), day by day, as they clean a strong horse, as they clean Arushá, the child of Dyu. In fact, as far as I know, arushá is never used as the name of the one single horse belonging to Agni, but always of two or more.

In III, 31, 21, antár (íti) krishnān arushaḥ dhāma bhiḥ gāt, dhāma bhiḥ is said to mean flames of lightning. But dhāman in the Rig-veda does not mean flames, and it seems better to translate, with thy red companies, scil. the Maruts.

That arushá in one or two passages means the red cloud, is true. But in X, 43, 9, arushá refers to the thunderbolt mentioned in the same verse; and in I, 114, 5, everything refers to Rudra, and not to a red cloud, in the proper sense of the word.

Further on, where the meanings attributable to árushî in the Veda are collected, it is said that árushî means a red mare, also the teams of Agni and Ushas. Now, here, surely, a distinction should have been made between those passages in which árushî means a real horse, and those where it expresses the imaginary steeds of Agni. The former, it should be observed, occur in one Mandala only, and in places of somewhat doubtful authority, in VIII, 55, 3, a Váľakhilya hymn, and in VIII, 68, 18, a dānastuti or panegyric. Besides, no passage is given where árushî means the horses of the dawn, and I doubt whether such a passage exists, while the one verse where árushî is really used for the horses of Indra, is not mentioned at all. Lastly, two passages are set apart where árushî is supposed to mean flames. Now, it may be perfectly true that the red-horses of Agni are meant for flames, just as the red-horses of Indra may be the rays of the sun. But, in that case, the red-horses of Agni should always have been thus translated, or rather interpreted, and not in one passage only. In IX, 111, 2, árushî is said to mean flames, but no further light is thrown upon that very difficult passage.

Note 2. Pári tasthúshaḥ. I take this form as a nominative plural like ábibhyushaḥ, I, 11, 5, tvām devāḥ ábibhyushaḥ tugyámânâsaḥ ávishuḥ, 'the gods, stirred up, came to thee, not fearing ;' and like dadúshaḥ, I, 54, 8, yé te indra dadúshaḥ vardháyanti máhi kshatrám, 'who giving or by their gifts increase thy great power, O Indra.' Here we might possibly take it as a gen. sing. referring to te, but dadivân is far more appropriate as an epithet of the sacrificer than of the god. (See Benfey, Vocativ, p. 24; and Hermes, p. 16.) It is well known among Sanskrit scholars that Professor Whitney, in reviewing my translation, declared that the participial form tasthushaḥ had no right to be anything but an accusative plural or a genitive or ablative singular. (See Chips from a German Workshop, vol. iv, p. 508.) Dr. Kern, however, in his translation of the Bṛihat-Samhitâ had shown long before that nom. plur. such as vidushaḥ are by no means rare, even in the Mahâbhârata and kindred works. Dr. Lanman (Journ. Americ. Or. Soc. X, p. 513) has now entered abibhyushaḥ as a nom. plur., but he prefers to take tasthushaḥ as an acc. plural, so that we should have to translate kárantam pári tasthúshaḥ by 'walking round those who stand.' This may be grammatically possible; but who could be meant by tasthushaḥ, standing ones? And, secondly, is it usual in Vedic Sanskrit to say karati pári tam, 'he walks round him?' We find pári tam yâti, or tam pári yâti, but hardly yâti pári tam, 'he goes round him,' except when pári stands independent of the verb and means 'around,' e.g. IX, 72, 8, pavasva pári pârthivam rágat. It is more difficult to decide whether we should adopt Ludwig's interpretation, who takes pári tasthushaḥ in the sense of 'away from what is firm.' This is correct grammatically, and tasthivat, as opposed to gágat, is often used in the sense of what is immovable. But is it ever used in that sense by itself? I doubt it, though I may add in support of it such a passage as I, 191, 9, út apaptat asaú sūryaḥ . . . âdityáḥ párvatebhyāḥ, a verse where the expression visvâdrishṭaḥ adrishṭahā is analogous to our ketúm kṛinván aketáve. I therefore retain pári tasthushaḥ as a nom. plural in the sense of standing around, circumstantes, possibly of parikāra, attendants. Parishthāna or sthāna comes to mean an abode, and paritasthivantas would be bystanders, attendants, the people, in fact, who are supposed to harness the horse.

Though I do not assign great weight to interpretations of hymns, as given by the Brāhmanas, I may mention that in the Taitt. Br. III, 9, 4, 1, paritasthushaḥ is explained as a nom. plur., ime vai lokāḥ paritasthushaḥ, while Sāyana in his commentary (Sāma-veda II, 6, 3, 12, 1) has parito·va·sthitā lokatrayavartināḥ prāninaḥ.

Note 3. Rōkante rokanā. A similar expression occurs III, 61, 5, where it is said of Ushas, the dawn, that she lighted the lights in the sky, prá rokanā ruruke ranvá-sandrík.

Verse 2.

WILSON: They (the charioteers) harness to his car his two desirable coursers, placed on either hand, bay-coloured, high-spirited, chief-bearing.

BENFEY: Die lieben Falben schirren sie zu beiden Seiten des Wagens an, braune, kühne, held-tragende.

LUDWIG: Sie spannen seine lieblichen falben an den wagen mit auseinandergehenden seiten, die blutroten, mutigen, helden-bringenden.

Note 1. Although no name is given, the pronoun asya clearly refers to Indra, for it is he to whom the two bays belong. The next verse, therefore, must likewise be taken as addressed to Indra, and not to the sun or the morning-red, spoken of as a horse or a chariot in the first verse.

Vipakshasā is well explained by Sāyana, vividhe pakshasṭ rathasya pārsvau yayos tau vipakshasau, rathasya dvayorḥ pārsvayor yogitāv ity arthaḥ. The only doubt is whether it refers to the two sides of the chariot, or of the principal horse. That horses were sometimes yoked so that one should act as leader, and two should be harnessed on each side, we see in I, 39, 6, note.

Verse 3.

WILSON : Mortals, you owe your (daily) birth (to such an Indra), who, with the rays of the morning, gives sense to the senseless, and to the formless, form.

BENFEY : Licht machend—Männer!—das Dunkele und kenntlich das Unkenntliche, entsprangst du mit dem Morgenroth.

LUDWIG : Sichtbarkeit schaffend dem unsichtbaren, gestalt o schmuckreiche (Marut) dem gestaltlosen, wurdet ihr mit den Ushas zusammen geboren.

Note 1. In the TB. III, 9, 4, several of these mantras are enjoined for the Asvamedha. When the banner (dhvaga) is fastened, this verse is to be used, because ketu was supposed to mean a banner. The vocative maryâh, which I have translated by O men, had evidently become a mere exclamation at a very early time. Even in our passage it is clear that the poet does not address any men in particular, for he addresses Indra, nor is marya used in the general sense of men. It means males, or male offspring. It sounds more like some kind of asseveration or oath, like the Latin mehercle, or like the English O ye powers, and it is therefore quoted as a nipâta or particle in the Vâg. Prâtis. II, 16. It can hardly be taken here as addressed to the Maruts, though the Maruts are the subject of the next verse. Kluge in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xxv, p. 309, points out that maryâh as an interjection does not occur again in the Rig-veda. But the Rig-veda contains many words which occur once only, and the author of Vâg. Prâtisâkhya is no mean authority. See also Tândya Brâhm. VII, 6, 5. If Dr. Kluge proposes to read mâryâi as a dative (like λύκῳ) he knows, of course, that such a form does not only never occur again in the Rig-veda, but never in the whole of Sanskrit literature. Grassmann and Lanman (N. I., p. 339) both seem to imagine that the Pada text has marya, but it has maryâh, and no accent. If maryâh had the accent, we might possibly translate, 'the youths, i. e. the Maruts, made,' taking krinvan for akrinvan, or the more usual akurvan; but in that case the transition to agâyathâh would be very sudden. See, however, I, 6, 7.

Sāyana explains it maryāḥ, manushyāḥ ! idam āstaryam paryata. Another explanation of this verse, which evidently troubled the ancient commentators as much as us, is, 'O mortal, i. e. O sun (dying daily), thou hast been born with the dawn.'

Note 2. Ushādbhiḥ, an instrumental plural which attracted the attention of the author of the Vārttika to Pāṇ. VII, 4, 48. It occurs but, once, but the regular form, ushobhiḥ, does not occur at all in the Rig-veda. The same grammarian mentions mās, month, as changing the final s of its base into d before bhis. This, too, is confirmed by RV. II, 24, 5, where mādbhiḥ occurs. Two other words, svavas, offering good protection, and svatavas, of independent strength, mentioned together as liable to the same change, do not occur with bhiḥ in the Rig-veda, but the forms svavadbhiḥ and svatavadbhiḥ probably occurred in some other Vedic writings. Svatavadbhyaḥ has been pointed out by Professor Aufrecht in the Vāgasan. Samhitā XXIV, 16, and svatavobhyaḥ in Satap. Br. II, 5, 1, 14. That the nom. svavân, which is always trisyllabic, is not to be divided into sva-vân, as proposed by Sākalya, but into su-avân, is implied by Vārttika to Pāṇ. VIII, 4, 48, and distinctly stated in the Siddhānta-Kaumudī. That the final n of the nom. su-avân disappeared before semi-vowels is confirmed by the Sākala-prātisākhya, Sūtra 287; see also Vāgasan. Prātis. III, Sūtra 135 (Weber, Ind. Stud. vol. iv, p. 206). On the proper division of su-avas, see Aufrecht, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, vol. xiii, p. 499.

Verse 4.

WILSON: Thereafter, verily, those who bear names invoked in holy rites (the Maruts), having seen the rain about to be engendered, instigated him to resume his embryo condition (in the clouds).

BENFEY: Sodann von freien Stücken gleich erregen wieder Schwangerschaft die heiligen Namen tragenden.

LUDWIG: Da haben nämlich in ihrer göttlichen weise diese der Prisni leibesfrucht gebracht, opfer verdienenden namen erwerbend.

Note 1. Ât must here take vyûha and be pronounced as an iambus. This is exceptional with ât, but there are at least two other passages where the same pronunciation is necessary. I, 148, 4, ât rokate vâne â vi-bhâ-vâ, though in the line immediately following it is monosyllabic. Also in V, 7, 10, ât agne âprinatak.

Note 2. Svadhâ, literally one's own place, afterwards, one's own nature. It was a great triumph for the science of Comparative Philology that, long before the existence of such a word as svadhâ in Sanskrit was known, it should have been postulated by Professor Benfey in his Griechisches Wurzellexicon, published in 1839, and in the appendix of 1842. Svadhâ was known, it is true, in the ordinary Sanskrit, but there it only occurred as an exclamation used on presenting an oblation to the manes. It was also explained to mean food offered to deceased ancestors, or to be the name of a personification of Mâyâ or worldly illusion, or of a nymph. But Professor Benfey, with great ingenuity, postulated for Sanskrit a noun svadhâ, as corresponding to the Greek ἔθος and the German sitte, O. H. G. sit-u, Gothic sid-u. The noun svadhâ has since been discovered in the Veda, where it occurs very frequently; and its true meaning in many passages where native tradition had entirely misunderstood it, has really been restored by means of its etymological identification with the Greek ἔθος or ἦθος. See Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. ii, p. 134; vol. xii, p. 158.

The expressions ânu svadhâm and svadhâm ânu are of frequent occurrence. They mean, according to the nature or character of the persons spoken of, and may be translated by as usual, or according to a person's wont. Thus in our passage we may translate, The Maruts are born again, i. e. as soon as Indra appeared with the dawn, according to their wont; they are always born as soon as Indra appears, for such is their nature.

I, 165, 5. indra svadhâm ânu hí na^h babhûtha.

For, Indra, according to thy wont, thou art with us.

VIII, 20, 7. svadhâm ânu sríyam nára^h—vâhante.

According to their wont, the men (the Maruts) carry splendour.

Thou hast grown (Indra) according to thy nature.

IV, 33, 6. ánu svadhā́m r̥ibhávaḥ gāgmuh̥ eṭām.

According to their nature, the R̥ibhus went to her, scil. the cow; or, according to this their nature, they came.

IV, 52, 6; I, 33, 11; I, 88, 6; VII, 56, 13; III, 51, 11.

In all these passages svadhā́ may be rendered by manner, habit, usage, and ánu svadhā́m would seem to correspond to the Greek ἐξ ἑθους. Yet the history of these words in Sanskrit and Greek has not been exactly the same. First of all we observe in Greek a division between ἑθός and ἦθος, and whereas the former comes very near in meaning to the Sanskrit svadhā́, the latter shows in Homer a much more primitive and material sense. It means in Homer, not a person's own nature, but the own place, for instance, of animals, the haunts of horses, lions, fish; in Hesiod, also of men. Hom. Il. XV, 268, μετὰ τ' ἦθεα καὶ νομόν ἱππων, loca consueta et pascua. Svadhā́ in the Veda does not occur in that sense, although etymologically it might take the meaning of one's own place: cf. dhā-man, familia, &c. Whether in Greek ἦθος, from meaning lair, haunt, home, came, like νόμος and νόμος, to mean habit, manner, character, which would be quite possible, or whether ἦθος in that meaning represents a second start from the same point, which in Sanskrit was fixed in svadhā́, is impossible to determine. In Sanskrit svadhā́ clearly shows the meaning of one's own nature, power, disposition. It does not mean power or nature in general, but always the power of some one, the peculiarity, the individuality of a person. This will appear from the following passages:

II, 3, 8. tisráḥ devīḥ svadháyā barhīḥ ā́ idám ákēhidram pántu.

May the three goddesses protect by their power the sacred pile unbroken.

IV, 13, 5. káyā yāti svadháyā.

By what inherent power does he (the Sun) move on?

IV, 26, 4. ā́kākṛáyā svadháyā.

By a power which requires no chariot, i.e. by himself without a chariot.

The same expression occurs again X, 27, 19.

In some places the verb mad, to delight, joined with svadháyâ, seems to mean to revel in his strength, to be proud of his might.

V, 32, 4. svadháyâ mādantam.

Vṛitra who delights in his strength.

VII, 47, 3. svadháyâ mādantiḥ.

The waters who delight in their strength. See X, 124, 8.

In other passages, however, as we shall see, the same phrase (and this is rather unusual) requires to be taken in a different sense, so as to mean to rejoice in food.

I, 164, 38; III, 17, 5.

III, 35, 10. Índra píba svadháyâ kṛit sutásya agnéḥ vā pāhi gihváyâ yagatra.

Indra drink of the libation by thyself (by thy own power), or with the tongue of Agni, O worshipful.

To drink with the tongue of Agni is a bold but not unusual expression. V, 51, 2. agnéḥ pibata gihváyâ. X, 15, 3.

I, 165, 6. kvā syā vaḥ marutaḥ svadhā́āsīt yát mām ékam sam-ádhatta ahi-hátye.

Where was that custom of yours, O Maruts, when you left me alone in the killing of Ahi?

VII, 8, 3. káyâ naḥ agne ví vasaḥ su-vrīktīm kām ūm (íti) svadhām rinavaḥ sasyámānaḥ.

In what character dost thou light up our work, and what character dost thou assume, when thou art praised?

IV, 58, 4; IV, 45, 6.

I, 64, 4. sākám gagāire svadháyâ.

They (the Maruts) were born together, according to their nature; very much like ánu svadhām, I, 6, 4. One can hardly render it here by 'they were born by their own strength,' or 'by spontaneous generation.'

In other passages, however, svadháyâ, meaning originally by its own power, or nature, comes to mean, by itself, sponte suâ.

VII, 78, 4. ā asthāt rátham svadháyâ yugyámānam.

She, the dawn, mounted the chariot which was harnessed by itself, by its own power, without requiring the assistance of people to put the horses to.

X, 129, 2. ānīt avātām svadháyā tát ékam.

That only One breathed breathlessly (or freely) by its own strength, i. e. by itself.

In the same sense svadhābhiḥ is used in several passages :

I, 113, 13. amṛitā karati svadhābhiḥ.

The immortal Dawn moves along by her own strength, i. e. by herself.

VIII, 10, 6. yāt vā svadhābhiḥ adhi-tīshṭhathaḥ rátham.

Or whether ye mount your chariot by your own strength, ye Asvins.

I, 164, 30. gíváḥ mṛitásya karati svadhābhiḥ ámartyaḥ mártvena sá-yoniḥ.

The living moves by the powers of the dead, the immortal is the brother of the mortal. III, 26, 8 ; V, 60, 4.

There are doubtful passages, such as I, 180, 6, in which the meaning of svadhābhiḥ, too, is doubtful. In VI, 2, 8, svadhā looks like an adverb, instead of svadháyā, and would then refer to párigmā. The same applies to VIII, 32, 6.

But svadhā means also food, lit. one's own portion, the sacrificial offering due to each god, and lastly, food in general.

I, 108, 12. yāt indrágnī (íti) út-itā súryasya mádhya diváḥ svadháyā mādáyethe (íti).

Whether you, Indra and Agni, delight in your food at the rising of the sun or at midday.

X, 15, 12. tvám agne ílitāḥ gāta-vedaḥ ávāt havyāni surabhīni kṛtvī, prá adāḥ pitṛi-bhyaḥ svadháyā té akshan addhī tvám deva prá-yatā havīmshi. 13. yé ka íhá pitáraḥ yé ka ná íhá yān ka vidmā yān ūm (íti) ka ná pra-vidmā, tvám vettha yāti té gāta-vedaḥ svadhābhiḥ yagnām sú-kṛitam gushasva. 14. yé agni-dagdhāḥ yé ánagni-dagdhāḥ mádhya diváḥ svadháyā mādáyante, tébhiḥ sva-rāt ásunītim etām yathā-vasám tanvām kalpayasva.

12. Thou, O Agni Gātavedas, hast carried, when implored, the offerings which thou hast rendered sweet : thou hast given them to the fathers, they fed on their share. Eat thou, O god, the proffered oblations. 13. Our fathers who are here, and those who are not here, our fathers whom we know and those whom we do not know, thou knowest how many they are, O Gâtavedas, accept the well-made sacrifice with the sacrificial portions. 14. They who, whether burnt by fire or not burnt by fire, rejoice in their offering in the midst of heaven, give to them, O king, that life, and thy (their) own body, according to thy will.

III, 4, 7. saptá prikskhāsaḥ svadhāyā madanti.

The seven horses delight in their food.

X, 14, 7. ubhā rāgānā svadhāyā mādantā.

The two kings delighting in their food.

IX, 113, 10. yātra kāmāḥ ni-kāmāḥ ka, yātra bradhnāsyā vishrāpam, svadhā ka yātra trīptiḥ ka tātra mām amṛitam kridhī.

Where wishes and desires are, where the cup of the bright Soma is (or, where the highest place of the sun is), where there is food and rejoicing, there make me immortal.

I, 154, 4. yāsyā trī pūrṇā mādhunā padāni ākshīyamānā svadhāyā mādanti.

He (Vishnu) whose three places, full of sweet, imperishable, delight or abound in food.

V, 34, 1; II, 35, 7; I, 168, 9; I, 176, 2.

In the tenth book svadhā is used very much as it occurs in the later Sanskrit, as the name of a peculiar sacrificial rite.

X, 14, 3. yān ka devāḥ vavridhūḥ ye ka devān svāhā anye svadhāyā anye madanti.

Those whom the gods cherish, and those who cherish the gods, the one delight in Svāhā, the others in Svadhā; or, in praise and food.

NOTE 3. The expression garbha-tvām ā-irire is matched by that of III, 60, 3, saudhanvanāsaḥ amṛita-tvām ā-irire, the Saudhanvanas (the Ribhus) obtained immortality, or became immortal. I do not think that punar erire can mean, as Ludwig supposes, they pushed away their state of garbha. The idea that the Maruts assumed the form of a garbha, lit. of an embryo or a new-born child, is only meant to express that they were born, or that the storms burst forth from the womb of the sky as soon as Indra arises to do battle against the demon of darkness. Thus we read, I, 134, 4, āganayaḥ marūtaḥ vakshānābhyah, Thou, Vāyu, hast produced the Maruts from the bowels (of the sky).

As assisting Indra in this battle, the Maruts, whose name retained for a long time its purely appellative meaning of storms, attained their rank as deities by the side of Indra, or, as the poet expresses it, they assumed their sacred name. This seems to be the whole meaning of the later legend that the Maruts, like the R̥ibhus, were not originally gods, but became deified for their works. See also Kern, Translation of Bṛihat-saṃhitā, p. 117, note.

Other explanations are: they made that which was born within the cloud into a garbha or embryo; or, they arose with Āditya, proceeded with Savitar, and when Savitar set, they became again garbhas; see Sāma-veda II, 2, 7, 2, comm.

VÁHNI.

Verse 5.

WILSON: Associated with the conveying Maruts, the traversers of places difficult of access, thou, Indra, hast discovered the cows hidden in the cave.

BENFEY: Mit den die Festen brechenden, den Stürmenden fandst, Indra, du die Kühe in der Grotte gar.

LUDWIG: Und mit denen, die das feste sogar anbrechen, selbst im versteck, o Indra, mit den priesterlichen, fandest du die morgenstralen auf.

Note 1. Sāyana explains vāhni in the sense of Marúdbhiḥ, and he tells the oft-repeated story how the cows were carried off by the Paṇis from the world of the gods, and thrown into darkness, and how Indra with the Maruts conquered them and brought them back. Everybody seems to have accepted this explanation of Sāyana, and I myself do not venture to depart from it. Yet it should be stated that the use of vāhni as a name of the Maruts is by no means well established. Vāhni is in fact a most difficult word in the Veda. In later Sanskrit it means fire, and is quoted also as a name of Agni, the god of fire, but we do not learn why a word which etymologically means carrier, from vah, to carry, should have assumed the meaning of fire. It may be that vah, which in Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin means chiefly to carry, expressed originally the idea of moving about (the German be-wegen), in which case váh-ni, fire, would have been formed with the same purpose as ag-ní, ig-nis, fire, from Sk. ag, âγ-ω, ag-o. In Alvis-mal, V, 94, we read, kalla Vág Vanir, the Wanæs call fire Vág, i.e. wavy. But in Sanskrit Agni is so constantly represented as the carrier of the sacrificial oblation, that something may also be said in favour of the Indian scholastic interpreters who take váhni, as applied to Agni, in the sense of carrier. However that may be, it admits of no doubt that váhni, in the Veda, is distinctly applied to the bright fire or light. In some passages it looks very much like a proper name of Agni, in his various characters of terrestrial and celestial light. It is used for the sacrificial fire :

V, 50, 4. yátra váhniḥ abhí-hitaḥ.

Where the sacrificial fire is placed.

It is applied to Agni :

VII, 7, 5. ásâdi vritáḥ váhniḥ â-gaganvân agniḥ brahmâ.

The chosen light came nigh, and sat down, Agni, the priest.

Here Agni is, as usual, represented as a priest, chosen like a priest, for the performance of the sacrifice. But, for that very reason, váhni may here have the meaning of priest, which, as we shall see, it has in many places, and the translation would then be more natural : He, the chosen minister, came near and sat down, Agni, the priest.

VIII, 23, 3. váhniḥ vindate vásu.

Agni finds wealth (for those who offer sacrifices?).

More frequently váhni is applied to the celestial Agni, or other solar deities, where it is difficult to translate it in English except by an adjective :

III, 5, 1. ápa dvârâ támasaḥ váhniḥ âvar (ity âvaḥ).

Agni opened the two doors of darkness.

I, 160, 3. sáḥ váhniḥ putráḥ pitróḥ pavitra-vân punâti dhîraḥ bhúvanâni mâyáyâ.

That light, the son of the two parents, full of brightness, the wise, brightens the world by his power.

Agni is even called váhni-tama (IV, 1, 4), which hardly means more than the brightest.

II, 17, 4. āt ródasī (iti) gyótishā váhniḥ ā atanot.

Then the bright (Indra) stretched out or filled heaven and earth with his light.

II, 38, 1. út ūm (iti) syáh deváh savitā—váhniḥ asthāt.

The divine Savitar, the luminous, arose.

Besides this meaning of light or fire, however, there are clearly two other meanings of váhni which must be admitted in the Veda, first that of a carrier, vehicle, and, it may be, horse; secondly that of minister or priest.

VI, 57, 3. agāḥ anyásya váhnayaḥ hárī (iti) anyásya sám-bhrítā.

The bearers of the one (Pūshan) are goats, the bays are yoked for the other (Indra).

I, 14, 6. ghritá-prishthāḥ manaḥ-yúgaḥ yé tvā váhanti váhnayaḥ.

The horses with shining backs, obedient to thy will, which carry thee (Agni).

VIII, 3, 23. yásmai anyé dása práti dhúram váhanti váhnayaḥ.

A horse against whom other ten horses carry a weight; i. e. it requires ten horses to carry the weight which this one horse carries. (See X, 11, 7. vāhamānaḥ āsvaiḥ.)

II, 37, 3. médyantu te váhnayaḥ yébhiḥ ŷyase.

May thy horses be fat on which thou goest. II, 24, 13.

I, 44, 13. srudhī srut-karna váhni-bhiḥ.

Agni, who hast ears to hear, hear, on thy horses. Unless váhni-bhiḥ is joined with the words that follow, devaḥ sayāva-bhiḥ.

III, 6, 2. vaḥyántām te váhnayaḥ saptá-gihvāḥ^a.

May thy seven-tongued horses be called. Here váhna-yaḥ is clearly meant for the flames of Agni, yet I doubt whether we should be justified in dropping the simile, as the plural of váhni is nowhere used in the bald sense of flames.

In one passage váhni is supposed to be used as a feminine, or at all events applied to a feminine subject:

VIII, 94, 1. yuktā váhniḥ ráthânām.

^a Cf. I, 58, 7. saptá guhvāḥ.

She is yoked as the drawer of the chariots. Probably, however, váhniḥ should here be changed into váhni.

The passages in which váhni is applied to Soma in the ninth and tenth Mandalas throw little light on the subject. (IX, 9, 6; 20, 5; 6; 36, 2; 64, 19; 89, 1; X, 101, 10.)

Instead of visām vispátih, lord of men (VII, 7, 4), we find IX, 108, 10. visām váhniḥ ná vispátih. One feels inclined to translate here váhniḥ by leader, but it is more likely that váhni is here again the common name of Soma, and that it is inserted between visām ná vispátih, which is meant to form one phrase.

In IX, 97, 34. tisráḥ vākaḥ ṭrayati prá váhniḥ, we may take váhni as the common appellation of Soma. But it may also mean minister or priest, as in the passages which we have now to examine. Cf. X, 11, 6.

For besides these passages in which váhni clearly means vector, carrier, drawer, horse, there is a large class of verses in which it can only be translated by minister, i. e. officiating minister, and, as it would seem, chiefly singer or reciter^a.

The verb vah was used in Sanskrit in the sense of carrying out (ud-vah, ausführen), or performing a rite, particularly as applied to the reciting of hymns. Hence such compounds as ukthá-vâhas or stóma-vâhas, offering hymns of praise, and yagná-vâhas. Thus we read:

V, 79, 4. abhí yé tvâ vibhâ-vari stómairḥ grínānti váhnayah.

The ministers who praise thee, splendid Dawn, with hymns.

I, 48, 11. yé tvâ grínānti váhnayah.

The ministers who praise thee.

VII, 75, 5. ushāḥ ukkhati váhni-bhiḥ grínānā.

The dawn lights up, praised by the ministers.

VI, 39, 1. mandráśya kavéh divyásya váhneh.

Of the sweet poet, of the heavenly priest . . .

VII, 82, 4. yuvām ít yut-sú prítanâsu váhnayah yuvām kshémasya pra-savé mitá-gñavah, írānā vásvah ubháyasya káravah índrávarunā su-hávā havāmahe.

^a See Taitt. Bráhm. I, 1, 6, 10. vahnir vá anadvân, vahnir adhvaryuḥ.

We, as ministers, invoke you only in fights and battles; we, as suppliants, (invoke) you for the granting of treasure; we, as poets, (invoke) you, the lords of twofold wealth, you, Indra and Varuṇa, who listen to our call.

VI, 32, 3. sáh váhni-bhiḥ ríkva-bhiḥ góshu sásvat mitá-gñu-bhiḥ puru-krítvā gígāya.

He (Indra) was victorious often among the cows, always with celebrating and suppliant ministers.

I have placed these two passages together because they seem to me to illustrate each other, and to show that although in the second passage the celebrating and suppliant ministers may be intended for the Maruts, yet no argument could be drawn from this verse in favour of váhni by itself meaning the Maruts. See also VIII, 6, 2; 12, 15; X, 114, 2.

IV, 21, 6. hótā yáh naḥ mahān sam-várāṇeshu váhniḥ.

The Hotar who is our great priest in the sanctuaries.

I, 128, 4. váhniḥ vedhāḥ ágāyata.

Because the wise priest (Agni) was born.

The same name which in these passages is applied to Agni, is in others, and, as it will be seen, in the same sense, applied to Indra.

II, 21, 2. tuvi-gráye váhnaye.

To the strong-voiced priest or leader.

The fact that váhni is followed in several passages by ukthaḥ would seem to show that the office of the váhni was chiefly that of recitation or of addressing prayers to the gods.

III, 20, 1. agním ushásam asvínā dadhi-krām ví-usháishu havate váhniḥ ukthaḥ.

The priest at the break of day calls with his hymns Agni, Ushas, the Asvins, and Dadhikrá.

I, 184, 1. tā vām adyá tau aparám huvema ukhāntyām ushási váhniḥ ukthaḥ.

Let us invoke the two Asvins to-day and to-morrow, the priest with his hymns is there when the dawn appears.

In a similar sense, it would seem, as váhniḥ ukthaḥ, the Vedic poets frequently use the words váhniḥ áśā. This áśā is the instrumental singular of ás, mouth, and it is used in other phrases also of the mouth as the instrument of praise.

VI, 32, 1. vagrīne sām-tamāni vākāmsi āsā sthāvīrāya taksham.

I have shaped with my mouth blessed words to the wielder of the thunderbolt, the strong Indra.

X, 115, 3. āsā vāhniṃ nā sokīśhā vi-rapsīnam.

He who sings with his flame as the poet with his mouth. See also I, 38, 14. mimīhī ślókam āsyē, make a song in thy mouth.

Thus we find vāhniḥ āsā in the same place in the sixth and seventh Mandalas (VI, 16, 9 ; VII, 16, 9), in the phrase vāhniḥ āsā vidúh-tarah, applied to Agni in the sense of the priest wise with his mouth, or taking vāhniḥ āsā as it were one word, the wise poet.

I, 129, 5. vāhniḥ āsā, vāhniḥ nah ākkha.

Indra, as a priest by his lips, as a priest coming towards us.

From the parallelism of this passage it would seem that Professor Roth concluded the meaning of *āsā to be near,

* Ās, mouth, the Latin os, oris, has been derived from a root as, to breathe, preserved in the Sanskrit as-u, spirit, asu-ra, endowed with spirit, living, the living god. Though I agree with Curtius in admitting a primitive root as, to breathe, from which as-u, breath, must have sprung, I have always hesitated about the derivation of ās and āsyā, mouth, from the same root. I do not think, however, that the lengthening of the vowel in ās is so great a difficulty as has been supposed (Kuhn, Zeitschrift, vol. xvii, p. 145). Several roots lengthen their vowel a, when used as substantives without derivative suffixes. In some cases this lengthening is restricted to the Āṅga base, as in anaḍvāh; in others to the Āṅga and Pada base, as in visvavāh, visvavādbhiḥ, &c.; in others again it pervades the whole declension, as in turāśhāt: (see Sanskrit Grammar, §§ 210, 208, 175.) Among ordinary words vāk offers a clear instance of a lengthened vowel. In the Veda we find rūtīśhāham, VI, 14, 4, and rūtīśhāham (Samhitā), I, 64, 15. In X, 71, 10 the Samhitā has sabhāsāhēna, the Pada sabhāsahēna. We find vāh in apsu-vāh (Sām. Ved.), indra-vāh, havya-vāh. Sah at the end of compounds, such as nri-sah, prītanā-sah, bhūri-sah, satrā-sah, vibhā-sah, sadā-sah, varies between a long and short ā: (see Regnier, Étude sur l'idiome du or coram. In the Nighantū, II, 16, the right reading is evidently âsât, not âsâ; see Nirukta, ed. Satyavrata Sâma-srami, vol. i, p. 264. Âsâ, however, is an old variant, as may be seen from Rig-veda-bhâshya I, 127, 8; X, 115, 3.

I, 76, 4. pragâ-vatâ vâkasâ vâhniâ âsâ â ka huvé ní ka satsi ihâ devaiâ.

With words in which my people join, I, the poet, invoke, and thou (Agni) sittest down with the gods.

VI, 11, 2. pâvakâyâ guhvâ vâhniâ âsâ.

Thou, a poet with a bright tongue, O Agni!

Grassmann thinks that vahnir âsâ can always be translated by 'vor das Angesicht bringend,' but this does not appear to be the case in his translation.

The question now arises in what sense vâhni is used when applied without further definition to certain deities. Most deities in the Veda are represented as driving or driven, and many as poets or priests. When the Asvins are called vâhni, VIII, 8, 12; VII, 73, 4, it may mean riders. But when the Viśve Devâs are so called, I, 3, 9, or the Rîbhus, the exact meaning is more doubtful. The Maruts are certainly riders, and whatever other scholars may say to the contrary, it can be proved that they were supposed to sit astride on horseback, and to have the bridle through the horse's nostrils (V, 61, 2). But if in our verse I, 6, 5, we translate vâhni as an epithet, rider, and not only as an epithet, but as a name of the Maruts, we cannot support our translation by independent evidence, but must rely partly on the authority of Sâyana, partly on the general tenor of the text before us, where the Maruts are mentioned in the preceding verse, and, if I am right, in the verse following also. On the other hand, if vâhni can thus be used as a name of Vêdas, p. 111.) At all events no instance has yet been pointed out in Sanskrit, showing the same contraction which we should have to admit if, as has been proposed, we derived âs from av-as, or from an-as. From 'an' we have in the Veda ânâ, mouth or face, I, 52, 15. From as, to breathe, the Latin omen, originally os-men, a whisper, might likewise be derived. See Bopp, Comp. Gr. par. 909; Kuhn in Ind. Stud. I, 333.

the Maruts, there is at least one other passage which would gain in clearness by the admission of that meaning, viz.

X, 138, 1. táva tyé indra sakhyéshu váhnayaḥ—ví adar-diruḥ valám.

In thy friendship, Indra, these Maruts tore asunder the cloud.

Note 2. I have translated viśú by stronghold, though it is only an adjective, meaning firm. Dr. Oscar Meyer, in his able essay Quaestiones Homericae, specimen prius, Bonnae, 1867, has tried to show that this viśú is the original form of ῥῆϊος, and he has brought some further evidence to show that the siege and conquest of Troy, as I pointed out in my Lectures on the Science of Language, vol. ii, p. 470, was originally described in language borrowed from the siege and conquest of the dark night by the powers of light, or from the destruction of the cloud by the weapons of Indra. It ought to be considered, however, that viśú in the Veda has not dwindled down as yet to a mere name, and that therefore it may have originally retained its purely appellative power in Greek as well as in Sanskrit, and from meaning a stronghold in general, have come to mean the stronghold of Troy.

Note 3. The bright cows are here the cows of the morning, the dawns, or the days themselves, which are represented as rescued at the end of each night by the power of Indra, or similar solar gods. Indra's companions in that daily rescue are here the Maruts, the storms, the same companions who act even a more prominent part in the battle of Indra against the dark clouds. These two battles are often mixed up together, so that possibly usríyāḥ may have been meant for clouds.

Verse 6.

WILSON: The reciters of praises praise the mighty (troop of Maruts), who are celebrated, and conscious of the power of bestowing wealth in like manner as they (glorify) the counsellor (Indra).

BENFEY: Nach ihrer Einsicht verherrlichend besingen Sänger den Schätzeheern, den berühmten, gewaltigen.

LUDWIG : Als fromme heran zum liede haben die sänger ihn, der trefliches findet, berühmten gesungen.

Note 1. The reasons why I take gírah as a masculine in the sense of singer or praiser, may be seen in a note to I, 37, 10.

Note 2. yáthâ matím, lit. according to their mind, according to their heart's desire. Cf. II, 24, 13.

Verse 7.

WILSON : May you be seen, Maruts, accompanied by the undaunted (Indra); both rejoicing, and of equal splendour.

BENFEY : So lass mit Indra denn vereint, dem furchtlosen, erblicken dich, beide erfreu'nd und glanzesgleich.

LUDWIG : Mit Indra zusammen wirst du gesehn zusammengehend mit dem furchtlosen, mild ihr zwei, von gleichem glanze.

Note 1. The sudden transition from the plural to the singular is strange, but the host of the Maruts is frequently spoken of in the singular, and nothing else can here be intended. It may be true, as Professor Benfey suggests, that the verses here put together stood originally in a different order, or that they were taken from different sources. Yet though the Sâma-veda would seem to sanction a small alteration in the order of the verses, the alteration of verses 7, 4, 5, as following each other, would not help us much. The Atharva-veda sanctions no change in the order of these verses.

The transition to the dual at the end of the verse is likewise abrupt, not more so, however, than we are prepared for in the Veda. The suggestion of the Nirukta (IV, 12) that these duals might be taken as instrumentals of the singular, is of no real value.

Note 2. Dr̥kshase, a very valuable form, well explained by dr̥isyethâh, a second person singular conjunctive of the First Aorist Âtmanepada, the termination 'sase' corresponding to Greek σῆ, as the conjunctive takes the personal terminations of the present in both languages. Similar forms, viz. prīkshase, X, 22, 7, mamsase, X, 27, 10; Ath. Veda VII, 20, 2-6, and possibly vīvakshase, X, 21, 1-8, 24, 1-3, 25, 1-11, will have to be considered hereafter. (Nirukta, ed. Roth, p. 30, Notes.) As Ludwig has pointed out, the Tāndya-brāhmaṇa XII, 2, 6, 7, reads drikshuse, and explains it by ime lokā dadṛisire. Sāyana, however, explains dṛisidhātoḥ karmāṇi madhyamaikavaṭane vyatyayena sepratyaye drikshusa iti rūpam. See Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen, I, p. 111. The story of Indra's being forsaken by all the gods in his battle against Vṛitra, but being helped by the Maruts, is often mentioned; see RV. VIII, 96, 7; SV. I, 4, 1, 4, 2; Ait. Br. III, 20.

Verse 8.

WILSON: This rite is performed in adoration of the powerful Indra, along with the irreproachable, heavenward-tending, and amiable bands (of the Maruts).

BENFEY: Durch Indra's liebe Schaaren, die untadligen, himmelstürmenden, strahlet das Opfer mächtiglich.

LUDWIG: Mit den tadellosen, morgens erscheinenden singt der kämpfer sighaft, mit des Indra zu liebenden scharen.

NOTE 1. Arkati, which I have here translated by he cries aloud, means literally, he celebrates. I do not know of any passage where arkati, when used, as here, without an object, means to shine, as Professor Benfey translates it. The real difficulty, however, lies in makhá, which Sāyana explains by sacrifice, and which I have ventured to translate by priest or sacrificer. Makhá, as an adjective, means, as far as we can judge, strong or vigorous, and is applied to various deities, such as Pūshan I, 138, 1, Savitri VI, 71, 1, Soma XI, 20, 7, Indra III, 34, 2, the Maruts I, 64, 11; VI, 66, 9. By itself, makhá is never used as the name of any deity, and it cannot therefore, as Professor Roth proposes, be used in our passage as a name of Indra, or be referred to Indra as a significant adjective. In I, 119, 3, makhá is applied to men or warriors, but it does not follow that makhá by itself means warriors, though it may be connected with the Greek μαχος in σύμμαχος. See Curtius, Grundzüge, p. 293 ; Grassmann, in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xvi, p. 164.

There are two passages where makhá refers to an enemy of the gods, IX, 101, 13 ; X, 171, 2.

Among the remaining passages there is one where makhá is used in parallelism with váhni, X, 11, 6. vívakti váhniḥ, su-apasyáte makháḥ. Here I propose to translate, The poet speaks out, the priest works well. The same meaning seems applicable likewise to the phrase makhásya dāvane, to the offering of the priest, though I should prefer to translate 'to share in the sacrifice.'

I, 134, 1. ā yāhi dāvane, vāyo (iti), makhásya dāvane.

Come, Vāyu, to the offering, to the offering of the priest.

VIII, 7, 27. ā naḥ makhásya dāvane—dévāsaḥ úpa gan-tana.

Come, gods, to the offering of our priest.

Professor Roth proposes to render makhá in these passages by 'attestation of joy, celebration, praise,' and he takes dāvane as a dative of dāván, a nomen actionis, meaning, the giving. There are some passages where one feels inclined to admit a noun dāvāna, and to take dāvane as a locative sing.

VI, 71, 2. devásya vayám savitúḥ sávīmani sréshṭhe syāma vásunaḥ ka dāvane.

May we be in the favour of the god Savitar, and in the best award of his treasure.

In II, 11, 1, and II, 11, 12, the locative would likewise be preferable ; but there is a decided majority of passages in which dāvane occurs and where it is to be taken as a dative*, nor is there any other instance in the Veda of a nomen actionis being formed by vana. It is better, therefore, in VI, 71, 2, to refer sréshṭhe to sávīmani, and to make allowance in the other passages for the idiomatic use of such phrases as dāvane vásûnām or râyāḥ dāvane, whether from dā or from do. See De Infinitivi forma et usu, by E. Wilhelm, 1873, p. 17.

* RV. I, 61, 10 ; 122, 5 ; 134, 2 ; 139, 6 ; II, 1, 10 ; IV, 29, 5 ; 32, 9 ; V, 59, 1 ; 4 ; 65, 3 ; VIII, 25, 20 ; 45, 10 ; (92, 26) ; 46, 25 ; 27 ; 63, 5 ; 69, 17 ; 70, 12 ; IX, 93, 4 ; X, 32, 5 ; 44, 7 ; 50, 7.

The termination váne explains, as has been shown by Professor Benfey, Greek infinitives such as δοῦναι, i. e. δοεναί or δοφεναι = Sanskrit dā-váne. The termination mane in dā-mane, for the purpose of giving, explains, as the same scholar has proved, the ancient infinitives in Greek, such as δό-μεναι. It may be added that the regular infinitives in Greek, ending in εναί, as λελοιπ-έναι, are likewise matched by Vedic forms such as IX, 61, 30. dhūrv-ane, or VI, 61, 13. vibhv-áne, and turv-áne (Delbrück in K. Z. XVIII, p. 82 ; Bopp, Accent, §§ 106, 113, 117). It is hardly right to say that vibhváne in VI, 61, 13, should be taken as an instrumental, for it does not refer to the chariot, but to Sarasvatī. In the termination ευ, which stands for ενι, like εις for εσι, we have, on the contrary, not a dative, but a locative of an abstract noun in an, both cases, as we see from their juxta-position in VI, 71, 2, being equally applicable to express the relation which we are accustomed to call infinitive. See RV. I, 134, 5. ugrāḥ ishananta bhurváni, apām ishanta bhurváni.

Note 2. Abhidyū I now translate by hastening, and derive it from div, dīvyati, in its original meaning of to throw forth, to break forth, to shine. As from this root we have didyú, weapon, what is thrown, pl. didyavaḥ, and possibly didyut, the weapon, particularly Indra's weapon or thunderbolt, abhidyū might mean breaking forth, rushing forth towards us, something like prakrīḥ/naḥ, another name of the Maruts. How abhidyū could mean conquérant, maître du jour, as M. Bergaigne maintains, I do not see. Abhidyūn, I, 33, 11 ; 190, 4, does not differ much from ānu-dyūn, i. e. it is used vipsāyām.

Verses 9, 10.

WILSON: Therefore circumambient (troop of Maruts), come hither, whether from the region of the sky, or from the solar sphere ; for, in this rite, (the priest) fully recites your praises.

BENFEY: Von hier, oder vom Himmel komm ob dem Æther, Umkreisender ! zu dir streben die Lieder all.

LUDWIG: Von hierher, o Parigman, kom, oder von des himels glanzfirmamente her; zu disem streben unsere lieder auf.

WILSON: We invoke Indra,—whether he come from this earthly region, or from the heaven above, or from the vast firmament,—that he may give (us) wealth.

BENFEY: Von hier, oder vom Himmel ob der Erde begehren Spende wir, oder, Indra! aus weiter Luft.

LUDWIG: Von hier zu empfangen verlangen wir, oder vom himel, oder vom irdischen raume her, oder aus dem grossen luftkreis den Indra.

Note 1. Although the names for earth, sky, and heaven vary in different parts of the Veda, yet the expression diváh roṇánám occurs so frequently that we can hardly take it in this place in a sense different from its ordinary meaning. Professor Benfey thinks that roṇáná may here mean ether, and he translates 'come from heaven above the ether;' and in the next verse, 'come from heaven above the earth.' At first, every reader would feel inclined to take the two phrases, diváh vá roṇánāt ádhi, and diváh vá páṛthivát ádhi, as parallel; yet I believe they are not quite so.

The following passages will show that the two words roṇánám diváh belong together, and that they signify the light of heaven, or the bright place of heaven.

VIII, 98, 3. ágakṣhah roṇánám diváh.

Thou (Indra) wentest to the light of heaven. I, 155, 3.

III, 6, 8. uraú vá yé antárikṣhe—diváh vá yé roṇané.

In the wide sky, or in the light of heaven.

VIII, 82, 4. upamé roṇané diváh.

In the highest light of heaven.

IX, 86, 27. trīṣṭhe prishṭhé ádhi roṇané diváh.

On the third ridge, in the light of heaven. See also I, 105, 5; VIII, 69, 3.

The very phrase which we find in our verse, only with ṛit instead of vá, occurs again, I, 49, 1; VIII, 8, 7; and the same sense must probably be assigned to VIII, 1, 18, ádha gṃáh ádha vá diváh bṛihatáh roṇánāt ádhi.

Either from the earth, or from the light of the great heaven, increase, O Indra!

Roṇáná also occurs in the plural:

I, 146, 1. vísṡá diváh roṇánā.

All the bright regions of heaven.

Sáyana: 'All the bright palaces of the gods.' See III, 12, 9.

The same word roṇáná, and in the same sense, is sometimes joined with sūrya and nāka.

Thus, I, 14, 9. sūryasya roṇánāt vísṡān devān—hótā ihá vakshati.

May the Hotar bring the Visve Devas hither from the light of the sun, or from the bright realm of the sun.

III, 22, 3. yáh roṇané parástāt sūryasya.

The waters which are above, in the bright realm of the sun, and those which are below.

I, 19, 6. yé nākasya ádhi roṇané, diví devāsaḥ āsate.

They who in the light of the firmament, in heaven, are enthroned as gods.

Here diví, in heaven, seems to be the same as the light of the firmament, nākasya roṇané.

Thus roṇáná occurs also frequently by itself, when it clearly has the meaning of heaven.

It is said of the dawn, I, 49, 4; of the sun, I, 50, 4; and of Indra, III, 44, 4.

vísṡam ā bhāti roṇánám, he lights up the whole sky.

We also read of three roṇanas, where, though it is difficult to say what is really meant, we must translate, the three skies. The cosmography of the Veda is, as I said before, somewhat vague and varying. There is, of course, the natural division of the world into heaven and earth (dyú and bhūmí), and the threefold division into earth, sky, and heaven, where sky is meant for the region intermediate between heaven and earth (pr̥thivī, antáríksha, dyú). There is also a fourfold division, for instance,

VIII, 97, 5. yát vā ási roṇané diváh samudrasya ádhi vishṡápi, yát p̥rthive sádane vr̥trahan-tama, yát antáríkshe ā gahi.

Whether thou, O greatest killer of Vṛātra, art in the light of heaven, or in the basin of the sea, or in the place of the earth, or in the sky, come hither!

V, 52, 7. yé vavridhānta pārthivāḥ yé urāú antárikṣhe ā, vṛigāne vā nadīnām sadhá-sthe vā mahāḥ divāḥ.

The Maruts who grew, being on the earth, those who are in the wide sky, or in the realm of the rivers, or in the abode of the great heaven.

But very soon these three or more regions are each spoken of as threefold. Thus,

I, 102, 8. tisráḥ bhūmih trīṇi roṇāṇ.

The three earths, the three skies.

II, 27, 9. trī roṇāṇ divyā dhārayanta.

The Ādityas support the three heavenly skies.

V, 69, 1. trī roṇāṇ varuṇa trīn utá dyūn trīṇi mitra dhārayathaḥ rágāṃsi.

Mitra and Varuṇa, you support the three lights, and the three heavens, and the three skies.

Here there seems some confusion, which Sāyana's commentary makes even worse confounded. What can roṇāṇ mean as distinct from dyú and rágas? The fourth verse of the same hymn throws no light on the subject, and I should feel inclined to take divyā-pārthivasya as one word, though even then the cosmic division here adopted is by no means clear. However, there is a still more complicated division alluded to in IV, 53, 5:

trīḥ antárikṣham savitā mahi-tvaṇā trī rágāṃsi pari-bhūḥ trīṇi roṇāṇ, tisráḥ divāḥ prithivīḥ tisráḥ invati.

Here we have the sky thrice, three welkins, three lights, three heavens, three earths.

A careful consideration of all these passages will show, I think, that in our passage we must take divāḥ vā roṇāṇā ádhi in its usual sense, and that we cannot separate the two words.

In the next verse, on the contrary, it seems equally clear that divāḥ and pārthivāt must be separated. At all events there is no passage in the Rig-veda where pārthiva is joined as an adjective with dyú. Pārthiva as an adjective is frequently joined with rágas, never with dyú. See I, 81, 5; 90, 7; VIII, 88, 5; IX, 72, 8: in the plural, I, 154, 1; V, 81, 3; VI, 31, 2; 49, 3.

Pārthivāni also occurs by itself, when it refers to the earth, as opposed to the sky and heaven.

X, 32, 2. vī indra yāsi divyāni roṇāṇā vī pārthivāni rāgasā.

Indra thou goest in the sky between the heavenly lights and the earthly.

VIII, 94, 9. ā yé vīsvā pārthivāni paprāthan roṇāṇā divāḥ.

The Maruts who stretched out all the earthly lights, and the lights of heaven.

VI, 61, 11. ā-paprūshī pārthivāni urú rāgaḥ antāriksham.

Sarasvatī filling the earthly places, the wide welkin, the sky. This is a doubtful passage.

Lastly, pārthivāni by itself seems to signify earth, sky, and heaven, if those are the three regions which Vishṇu measured with his three steps; or east, the zenith, and west, if these were intended as the three steps of that deity. For we read:

I, 155, 4. yāḥ pārthivāni tri-bhīḥ it vīgāma-bhīḥ urú krāmishā.

He (Vishṇu) who strode wide with his three strides across the regions of the earth.

These two concluding verses might also be taken as containing the actual invocation of the sacrificer, which is mentioned in verse 8. In that case the full stop at the end of verse 8 should be removed.

MANDALA I, HYMN 19.

ASHṬAKA I, ADHYĀYA 1, VARGA 36-37.

TO AGNI (THE GOD OF FIRE) AND THE MARUTS
(THE STORM-GODS).

1. Thou art called forth to this fair sacrifice for a draught of milk¹; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

2. No god indeed, no mortal, is beyond the might¹ of thee, the mighty one; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

3. They who know of the great sky¹, the Visve Devas² without guile³; with those Maruts come hither, O Agni!

4. The strong ones who sing their song¹, unconquerable by force; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

5. They who are brilliant, of terrible designs, powerful, and devourers of foes; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

6. They who in heaven are enthroned as gods, in the light of the firmament¹; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

7. They who toss the clouds¹ across the surging sea²; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

8. They who shoot with their darts (lightnings) across the sea with might; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

9. I pour out to thee for the early draught¹ the sweet (juice) of Soma; with the Maruts come hither, O Agni!

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Medhâtithi, of the family of Kaṇva. Verse I=SV. I, 16.

Verse 1.

WILSON : Earnestly art thou invoked to this perfect rite, to drink the Soma juice ; come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY : Zu diesem schönen Opfer wirst du gerufen, zum Trank der Milch!—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG : Her zu diesem schönen opfer, gerufen wirst zum milchtrank du, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. Gopîthá is explained by Yâska and Sâyana as drinking of Soma. I have kept to the literal signification of the word, a draught of milk. In the last verse of our hymn the libation offered to Agni and the Maruts is said to consist of Soma, but Soma was commonly mixed with milk. The other meaning assigned to gopîthá, protection, would give the sense : 'Thou art called for the sake of protection.' But pîtha has clearly the sense of drinking in soma-pîthá, RV. I, 51, 7, and may therefore be taken in the same sense in gopîthá.

Verse 2.

WILSON : No god nor man has power over a rite (dedicated) to thee, who art mighty : come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY : Denn nicht ein Gott, kein Sterblicher ragt über dein, des Grossen, Macht—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG : Es überragt kein gott, kein sterblicher die einsicht dein des grossen, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. The Sanskrit krátu expresses power both of body and mind. Paraś governs the accusative.

Verse 3.

WILSON : Who all are divine, and devoid of malignity, and who know (how to cause the descent) of great waters : come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Die guten Götter, welche all bestehen in dem weiten Raum—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Die wissen um den grossen raum, alle götter truges bar, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. The sky or welkin (rāgas) is the proper abode of the Maruts, and 'they who know of' means simply 'they who dwell' in the great sky. The Vedic poets distinguish commonly between the three worlds, the earth, pr̥thivī, f., or pārthiva, n.; the sky, rāgas; and the heaven, dyú: see I, 6, 9, note 1. The phrase mahāh rāgasah occurs I, 6, 10; 168, 6, &c. Sāyana takes rāgas for water or rain: see on this my article in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xii, p. 28. In some passages rāgas means 'darkness,' and might be identified with the Greek ἑρεβος; Ath. Veda VIII, 2, 1. pārāyāmi tvā rāgasa út tvā mr̥tyór apīparam, 'I bring thee out of darkness, out of death I brought thee.' The identification of rāgas with ἑρεβος (Leo Meyer, in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. vi, p. 19) must however remain doubtful, until stronger evidence has been brought forward in support of a Greek β representing a Sanskrit g, even in the middle of a word. See my article in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xv, p. 215; Curtius, Grundzüge (fifth edition), p. 480.

Note 2. The appellation Vīśve devāḥ, all gods together, or, more properly, host-gods, is often applied to the Maruts; cf. I, 23, 8; 10. Benfey connects this line with the preceding verse, considering Vīśve devāḥ, it seems, inappropriate as an epithet of the Maruts.

Note 3. On adrūh, without guile or deceit, without hatred, see Kuhn's excellent article, Zeitschrift für die Vergleichende Sprachforschung, vol. i, pp. 179, 193. Adrūh is applied to the Maruts again in VIII, 46, 4, though in connection with other gods. It is applied to the Vīśve Devas, RV. I, 3, 9; IX, 102, 5: the Ādityas, RV. VIII, 19, 34; 67, 13: the Rudras, RV. IX, 73, 7: to Heaven and Earth, RV. II, 41, 21; III, 56, 1; IV, 56, 2; VII, 66, 18: to Mitra and Varuna, RV. V, 68, 4: to Agni, RV. VI, 15, 7; VIII, 44, 10. The form adhrūk occurs in the sixth Mandala only.

Verse 4.

WILSON: Who are fierce, and send down rain, and are unsurpassed in strength: come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Die schrecklich-unbesiegbaren, die mächtiglich Licht angefacht—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Die singen, die gewaltigen, ihr lied unange-griffen durch (ihre) kraft, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. Sâyana explains arká by water. Hence Wilson: 'Who are fierce and send down rain.' But arká has only received this meaning of water in the artificial system of interpretation first started by the authors of the Brâhmanas, who had lost all knowledge of the natural sense of the ancient hymns. The passages in which arká is explained as water in the Brâhmanas are quoted by Sâyana, but they require no refutation. On the singing of the Maruts, see note to I, 38, 15; also Bergaigne, Journ. As. 1884, p. 194. The perfect in the Veda, like the perfect in Homer, has frequently to be rendered in English by the present.

Verse 5.

WILSON: Who are brilliant, of terrific forms, who are possessors of great wealth, and are devourers of the malevolent: come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Die glänzend-grau'ngestaltigen, hochherrschend feindvernichtenden — Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Die glanzvollen, von schrecklicher gestalt, von grosser herschaft, feindverzerer, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Verse 6.

WILSON: Who are divinities abiding in the radiant heaven above the sun: come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Die Götter die im Himmel sind ob dem Lichtkreis des Göttersitz's—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Die ob der himmelswölbung glanz, am himel die götter sitzen, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. Nâka must be translated by firmament, as there is no other word in English besides heaven, and that is wanted to render dyú. Like the Jewish firmament, the Indian nāka, too, is adorned with stars; cf. I, 68, 10. pipésa nākam str̥bhiḥ. Dyú, heaven, is supposed to be above the rāgas, sky or welkin. Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xii, p. 28.

Sāyana: 'In the radiant heaven above the sun.' See note 1 to I, 6, 9; p. 49.

Verse 7.

WILSON: Who scatter the clouds, and agitate the sea (with waves): come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Welche über das wogende Meer hinjagen die Wolkenschaar—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Die die berge wiegend hindurch durchs wogenmeer bewegen, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. That pārvata (mountain) is used in the sense of cloud, without any further explanation, is clear from many passages:

I, 57, 6. tvám tám indra pārvatam mahāṁ urúm vāgreṇa vagrin parva-sāḥ kakartitha.

Thou, Indra, hast cut this great broad cloud to pieces with thy lightning. Cf. I, 85, 10.

We actually find two similes mixed up together, such as V, 32, 2. ūdhaḥ pārvatasya, the udder of the cloud. All we can do is to translate pārvata by mountain, but always to remember that mountain means cloud. In the Edda, too, the rocks, said to have been fashioned out of Ymir's bones, are supposed to be intended for clouds. In Old Norse klakkr means both cloud and rock; nay, the English word cloud itself has been identified with the Anglo-Saxon clūd, rock. See Justi, Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 62. See Grimm, Deutsche Grammatik, I³, 398, 424; also Kuhn, Weisse Frau, p. 12.

Note 2. Whether the surging sea is to be taken for the sea or for the air, depends on the view which we take of the earliest cosmography of the Vedic Rishis. Sāyana explains: 'They who make the clouds to go, and stir the watery sea.' Wilson remarks that the influence of the winds upon the sea, alluded to in this and the following verse, indicates more familiarity with the ocean than we should have expected from the traditional inland position of the early Hindus, and it has therefore been supposed by others that, even in passages like our own, samudrá was meant for the sky, the waters above the firmament. But although there are passages in the Rig-veda where samudrá must be taken to mean the welkin (RV. I, 95, 3. samudrá ékam diví ékam ap-sú), this word shows in by far the larger number of passages the clear meaning of ocean. There is one famous passage, VII, 95, 2, which proves that the Vedic poets, who were supposed to have known the upper courses only of the rivers of the Penjáb, had followed the greatest and most sacred of their rivers, the Sarasvatî, as far as the Indian ocean. It is well known that, as early as the composition of the laws of the Mânavas, and possibly as early as the composition of the Sûtras on which these metrical laws are based, the river Sarasvatî had changed its course, and that the place where that river disappeared under ground was called Vinasana^a, the loss. This Vinasana forms, according to the laws of the Mânavas, the western frontier of Madhyadesa, the eastern frontier being formed by the confluence of the Gangâ and Yamunâ. Madhyadesa is a section of Âryâvarta, the abode of the Âryas in the widest sense. Âryâvarta shares with Madhyadesa the same frontiers in the north and the south, viz. the Himâlâya and Vindhya mountains, but it extends beyond Madhyadesa to the west and east as far as the western and eastern seas. A section of Madhyadesa, again, is the country described as that of the Brahmarshis, which comprises only Kurukshetra, the countries of the Matsyas, Pañkâlas (Kânyakubga, according to Kullûka), and Sûrasenas (Mathurâ, according to Kullûka). The most sacred spot of all, however, is that section of the Brahmarshi country which lies between the rivers Drishadvatî and Sarasvatî, and which in the laws of the Mānavas is called Brahmāvarta. In the Sūtras which supplied the material to the authors of the metrical law-books, the Vinasana is mentioned for the first time in the Baudhāyana Sūtras, I, 2, 9, 'Āryāvarta lies to the east of the region where (the Sarasvatī) disappears, to the west of the Black-forest, to the north of the Pāripātra (mountains), to the south of the Himālaya.' The name of the Sarasvatī is not mentioned, but no other river can be understood. What is curious, however, is, that in the Vasishṭha Sūtras where the same frontiers of Āryāvarta are given (I, 8), the MSS. read originally prāḡ ādarsāt, i. e. east of the Ādarsa mountains, which was afterwards changed into prāḡ adarsanāt, and interpreted 'east of the invisibility, or of the disappearance of the Sarasvatī.' Vasishṭha quotes another authority, a Gāthā of the Bhāllavins, which says : 'In the west the boundary river,' i. e. sindhur vidhārāṇī. This sindhur vidhārāṇī is another name of the old Sarasvatī, and in Baudhāyana I, 2, 12, the same verse is quoted, though the reading of vidhārāṇī varies with viṭarāṇī and visarāṇī. See Bühler, l. c. Madhyadesa is mentioned in one of the Parisishṭas (MS. 510, Wilson) as a kind of model country, but it is there described as lying east of Dasārṇa^a, west of Kāmpilya^b, north of Pāriyātra^c, and south of the Himavat, or again, in a more general way, as the Duāb of the Gangā and Yamunā^d.

^a Mentioned in Lâty. Srauta Sûtras, X, 15, 1; Pañkavimsa Brâhm. XXV, 10, 1; see Hist. A. S. L., p. 12.

It is 'very curious that while in the later Sanskrit lite-

^a See Wilson's Vishṇu-purāṇa, ed. Hall, pp. 154, 155, 159, 160.

^b See Wilson's Vishṇu-purāṇa, ed. Hall, p. 161.

^c L. c., pp. 123, 127. Instead of Pāriyātra, other MSS. read Pāripātra; see Bühler, Vasishṭha I, 8.

^d Prāḡ dasārṇāt pratyak kāmpilyād udak pāriyātrād, dakshinena himavataḥ. Gangāyamunayor antaram eke madhyadesam ity ātakshate. Medhātithi says that Madhyadesa, the middle country, was not called so because it was in the middle of the earth, but because it was neither too high nor too low. Albiruny, too, remarks that Madhyadesa was between the sea and the northern mountains, between the hot and the cold countries, equally distant from the eastern and western frontiers. See Reinaud, Mémoire sur l'Inde, p. 46.

rature the disappearance of the Sarasvatî in the desert is a fact familiar to every writer, no mention of it should occur during the whole of the Vedic period, and it is still more curious that in one of the hymns of the Rig-veda we should have a distinct statement that the Sarasvatî fell into the sea :

VII, 95, 1-2. prá kshódasâ dhāyasâ sasre eshā sárasvatî dharúnam āyasi pūh, pra-bābadhānā rathyā-iva yāti vīsvāh apāh mahinā sīndhuḥ anyāh. ékā aketat sárasvatî nadīnām rúkiḥ yatī giri-bhyaḥ ā samudrāt, rāyāh kētantī bhūvanasya bhūreḥ ghrítam páyaḥ duduhe nāhushāya.

1. 'With her fertilising stream this Sarasvatî comes forth— (she is to us) a stronghold, an iron gate. Moving along as on a chariot, this river surpasses in greatness all other waters. 2. Alone among all rivers Sarasvatî listened, she who goes pure from the mountains as far as the sea. She who knows of the manifold wealth of the world, has poured out to man her fat milk.'

Here we see samudrá used clearly in the sense of sea, the Indian sea, and we have at the same time a new indication of the distance which separates the Vedic age from that of the later Sanskrit literature. Though it may not be possible to determine by geological evidence the time of the changes which modified the southern area of the Penjáb and caused the Sarasvatî to disappear in the desert, still the fact remains that the loss of the Sarasvatî is later than the Vedic age, and that at that time the waters of the Sarasvatî reached the sea. Professor Wilson had observed long ago in reference to the rivers of that part of India, that there have been, no doubt, considerable changes here, both in the nomenclature and in the courses of the rivers, and this remark has been fully confirmed by later observations. I believe it can be proved that in the Vedic age the Sarasvatî was a river as large as the Sutlej, that it was the last of the rivers of the Penjáb, and therefore the iron gate, or the real frontier against the rest of India. At present the Sarasvatî is so small a river that the epithets applied to the Sarasvatî in the Veda have become quite inapplicable to it. The Vedic Rishis, though acquainted with numerous rivers, including the Indus and Ganges, call the Sarasvatî the mother of rivers (VII, 36, 6. sârasvatî saptâthî sîndhu-mâtâ), the strongest of rivers (VI, 61, 13. apâsâm apâh-tamâ), and in our passage, VII, 95, 2, we have, as far as I can judge, conclusive evidence that the old Sarasvatî reached in its course the Indian sea, either by itself, or united with the Indus^a.

But this passage, though important as showing the application of samudrâ, i. e. confluviæ, to the Indian sea, and proving the acquaintance of the Vedic Rishis with the southern coast of India, is by no means the only one in which samudrâ must be translated by sea. Thus we read, VII, 49, 2 :

yâh âpah divyâh utâ vâ srâvanti khanîtrimâh utâ vâ yâh svayam-gâh, samudrâ-arthâh yâh sûtayaâh pâvakâh tâh âpah devîh ihâ mām avantu.

The waters which are from heaven, or those which flow after being dug, or those which spring up by themselves, the bright, pure waters that tend to the sea, may those divine waters protect me here !

I, 71, 7. agnîm vîsvâh abhî prîkshaâh sakante samudrâm nâ sravâtaâh saptâ yahvîh.

All kinds of food go to Agni, as the seven rivers go to the sea.

Cf. I, 190, 7. samudrâm nâ sravâtaâh ródha-kakrâh.

V, 78, 8. yâthâ vâtaâh yâthâ vânam yâthâ samudrâh égati.

As the wind moves, as the forest moves, as the sea moves (or the sky).

In hymn X, 58, the same expression occurs which we have in our hymn, and samudrâm arnavâm there as here admits but of one explanation, the surging sea.

Samudrâ in many passages of the Rig-veda has to be taken as an adjective, in the sense of watery or flowing :

VI, 58, 3. yâs te pûshan nâvaâh antâh samudré hiranyâyîh antârikshe kâranti.

Thy golden ships, O Pûshan, which move within the watery sky.

^a See 'India, what can it teach us?' pp. 170, 171.

VII, 70, 2. yáḥ vām samudrāṇ sarītaḥ pīparti.

He who carries you across the watery rivers.

I, 161, 14. at-bhīḥ yāti vārunaḥ samudraḥ.

Varuṇa moves in the flowing waters.

In both these passages samudrá, as an adjective, does not conform to the gender of the noun. See Bollensen, Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 467.

II, 16, 3. ná samudraḥ párvataiḥ indra te ráthaḥ (ná pari-bhvē).

Thy chariot, O Indra, is not to be overcome by the watery clouds.

Verse 8.

WILSON: Who spread (through the firmament), along with the rays (of the sun), and, with their strength, agitate the ocean: come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Die mit Blitzen schleudern mächtig über das Meer hinaus—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Die mit stralen ihre richtung nemen mit gewalt durchs mer, mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Verse 9.

WILSON: I pour out the sweet Soma juice for thy drinking, (as) of old: come, Agni, with the Maruts.

BENFEY: Ich giesse zu dem ersten Trank für dich des Soma Honig aus—Mit diesen Marut's, Agni! komm!

LUDWIG: Ich giesze dir zum ersten trunk madhu mit dem soma zu; mit den Marut, Agni, kom.

Note 1. Pûrvapîti, the early draught, implies at the same time the priority of the god to whom it is given.

MANDALA I, HYMN 37.

ASHṬAKA I, ADHYĀYA 3, VARGA 12-14.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. Sing forth, O Kaṁvas, to the sportive host of your Maruts, brilliant on their chariots, and unscathed¹,—

2. They who were born together, self-luminous, with the spotted deer (the clouds)¹, the spears, the daggers, the glittering ornaments².

3. I hear their¹ whips, almost close by, when they crack them in their hands; they gain splendour² on their way³.

4. Sing forth the god-given prayer to the wild¹ host of your Maruts, endowed with terrible vigour² and strength.

5. Celebrate the bull among the cows (the storm among the clouds)¹, for it is the sportive host of the Maruts; he grew as he tasted the rain².

6. Who, O ye men, is the strongest among you here, ye shakers of heaven and earth, when you shake them like the hem of a garment¹?

7. At your approach the son of man holds himself down; the gnarled cloud¹ fled at your fierce anger.

8. They at whose racings¹ the earth, like a hoary king, trembles for fear on their ways,

9. Their birth is strong indeed: there is strength to come forth from their mother, nay, there is vigour twice enough for it¹.

10. And these sons, the singers¹, stretched out the fences in their racings²; the cows had to walk knee-deep.

11. They cause this long and broad unceasing rain¹ to fall on their ways.

12. O Maruts, with such strength as yours, you have caused men to tremble¹, you have caused the mountains to tremble.

13. As the Maruts pass¹ along, they talk together on the way : does any one hear them?

14. Come fast on your quick steeds ! there are worshippers¹ for you among the Kaṇvas : may you well rejoice among them.

15. Truly there is enough for your rejoicing. We always are their servants, that we may live even the whole of life.

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Kaṇva, the son of Ghora.

Verse 1=TS. IV, 3, 13, 6.

Verse 3=SV. I, 135.

Verse 10=SV. I, 221.

Verse 1.

WILSON: Celebrate, Kaṇvas, the aggregate strength of the Maruts, sportive, without horses, but shining in their car.

BENFEY: Kaṇviden, auf! begrüsst mit Sang, die muntre Heerschaar der Marut's, die rasch'ste, wagenglänzende.

LUDWIG: Eurer spilenden schar, der Marutschar, der unangreifbaren, die auf wagen glänzt, der singt, o Kaṇvās, zu.

Note 1. Wilson translates anarvānam by without horses, though the commentator distinctly explains the word by without an enemy. A Brāhmaṇa passage explains: bhrātrivyo vā arvā, ity śrutyantarāt. See TS. IV, 3, 13, 6. Wilson considers it doubtful whether arvan can ever mean enemy. The fact is, that in the Rig-veda an-arvān never means without horses, but always without hurt or free from enemies; and the commentator is perfectly right, as far as the sense is concerned, in rendering the word by without an enemy, or unopposed (apraty-rīta). An-arvān is not formed from arvat, horse, racer, but from arvan; and this is derived from the same root which yields arus, n. a wound, rīti (see I, 64, 15, note), &c. The accusative of anarvat, without a horse, would be anarvantam, not anarvānam.

The root ar, in the sense of hurting, is distantly connected with the root mar: see Lectures on the Science of Language, Second Series, p. 323. It exists in the Greek ἄλλυμι, corresponding to Sanskrit rinomi, i. e. arnomi, I hurt, likewise in οὐλή, wound, which cannot be derived from δλη; in οὐλος, οὐλιος, hurtful, and δλοός, destructive : see Curtius, Grundzüge der Griechischen Etymologie (fünfte Ausgabe), p. 372. In the Veda ar has the sense of offending or injuring, particularly if preceded by upa.

X, 164, 3. yát ā-sāsā nih-sāsā abhi-sāsā upa-ārimā gā-gratah yát svapántah, agnīh vīsvāni āpa duk-kritāni āgushāni āré asmāt dadhātu.

If we have offended, or whatever fault we have committed, by bidding, blaming, or forbidding, while waking or while sleeping, may Agni remove all wicked misdeeds far from us.

Hence upārā, injury, VII, 86, 6. ásti gyāyān kántyasaḥ upa-aré, the older man is there to injure, to offend, to mislead, the young : (History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, second edition, p. 541.) Roth translates upārā by Verfehlung, missing. Ari, enemy, too, is best derived from this root, and not from rā, to give, with the negative particle, as if meaning originally, as Sāyana supposes, a man who does not give. In ārarivān, gen. ārarushaḥ, hostile, Rosen recognised many years ago a participle of a really reduplicated perfect of ar, and he likewise traced arāru, enemy, back to the same root : see his note to I, 18, 3.

From this root ar, to hurt, ārvan, hurting, as well as ārus, wound, are derived in the same manner as both dhānvan and dhānus, bow, are formed from dhan; yāgvān and yāgus from yag, pārvan and pārus from par. See Kuhn, Zeitschrift, vol. ii, p. 233.

Anarvān, then, is the same as ānarus, Sat. P. Brāhmaṇa III, 1, 3, 7; and from meaning originally without a wound or without one who can wound, it takes the more general sense of uninjured, invulnerable, perfect, strong, (cf. integer, intact, and entire.) This meaning is applicable to I, 94, 2; 136, 5; II, 6, 5; V, 49, 4; VII, 20, 3; 97, 5; X, 61, 13; 65, 3. In I, 116, 16, anarvān seems to be used as an adverb; in I, 51, 12, as applied to ślōka, it may have the more general meaning of irresistible, powerful.

There are two passages in which the nom. sing. ārvān, and one in which the acc. sing. ārvānam, occur, apparently meaning horse. But in I, 163, 13, and IX, 97, 25, árvān stands in the Pada text only, the Samhitā has árvā ákka and árvā iva. In X, 46, 5, the text hlri-smasrum ná árvānam dhāna-arkam is too doubtful to allow of any safe induction, particularly as the Sāma-veda gives a totally different reading. I do not think, therefore, that árvat, horse, admits in the nom. and acc. sing. of any forms but árvā and árvānam^a. Pāṇini (VI, 4, 127) allows the forms árvān and árvānam, but in anarvan only, which, as we saw, has nothing in common with árvat, horse. Benfey: 'die rascheste (keinen Renner habend, uneinholbar),' the quickest (having no racer, hence not to be reached). M. Bergaigne (Journ. As. 1884, p. 188) tries to defend anarvan in the sense of anasva, without considering the grammatical objections. In VI, 66, 7 (not I, 6, 7) anasváḥ does not refer to yāmaḥ.

The masculine anarvānam after the neuter sárdhas is curious; sárdhas means might, but it is here used to express a might or an aggregate of strong men or gods, and the nom. plur. yé, who, in the next verse, shows the same transition of thought, not only from the singular to the plural, but also from the neuter to the masculine, which must be admitted in anarvānam^b. It would be possible, if necessary, to explain away the irregularity of anarvānam by admitting a rapid transition from the Maruts to Indra, the eldest among the Maruts (cf. I, 23, 8. Indra-gyeshthāḥ mārut-ganāḥ), and it would be easier still to alter sárdhas into sárdham, as an accusative singular of the masculine noun sárdha, which has the same meaning as the neuter sárdhas. There is one passage, V, 56, 9, which would seem to give ample countenance to such a conjecture:

tām vaḥ sárdham rathe-rúbham—ā huve.

I call hither this your host, brilliant on chariots.

Again, II, 30, 11, we read:

tām vaḥ sárdham mārutam—girā úpa bruve.

I call with my voice on this your host of Maruts.

^a See Bugge, K. Z. XIX, p. 403.

^b Bollensen (Z. D. M. G. XXII, 603) calls it a vulgar Donatus; see, however, Lanman, Noun-Inflection, pp. 330, 526.

VIII, 93, 16. srutám vaḥ vrítrahán-tamam prá sárdham karshanínám, á sushe.

I pant for the glorious, victorious, host of the quick Maruts.

From this sárdha we have also the genitive sárdhasya, VII, 56, 8 (4):

subhráh vaḥ sūshmaḥ krúdhmī mánāmsi dhúniḥ múnī-iva sárdhasya dhrishnóḥ.

Your prowess is brilliant, your minds furious; the shout of the daring host is like one possessed.

We have likewise the dative sárdhāya, the instrumental sárdhena, and the acc. plur. sárdhān; and in most cases, except in two or three where sárdha seems to be used as an adjective, meaning strong, these words are applied to the host of the Maruts.

But the other word sárdhas is equally well authenticated, and we find of it, not only the nominative, accusative, and vocative sing. sárdhas, but likewise the nom. plur. sárdhāmsi.

The nominative singular occurs in our very hymn:

I, 37, 5. kríám yát sárdhaḥ mǎrutam.

Which is the sportive host of the Maruts.

I, 127, 6. sáḥ hí sárdhaḥ ná mǎrutam tuvi-svániḥ.

For he (Agni) is strong-voiced like the host of the Maruts.

IV, 6, 10. tuvi-svanásaḥ mǎrutam ná sárdhaḥ.

Thy flames (Agni) are strong-voiced like the host of the Maruts.

V, 46, 5. utá tyát naḥ mǎrutam sárdhaḥ á gamat.

May also that host of the Maruts come to us.

II, 1, 5. tvám narām sárdhaḥ asi puru-vásuḥ.

Thou (Agni), full of riches, art the host of the men.

This host of men seems to me intended again for the Maruts, although it is true that in thus identifying Agni with different gods, the poet repeats himself in the next verse:

II, 1, 6. tvám sárdhaḥ mǎrutam.

Thou art the host of the Maruts.

If this repetition seems offensive, the first narām sárdhas might be taken for some other company of gods. Thus we find:

VII, 44, 5. srinótu naḥ daśvyam sárdhaḥ agníḥ srinvántu víśve mahishāḥ ámûrāḥ.

May the divine host, may Agni, hear us, may the Visve hear us, the strong, the wise.

Or III, 19, 4. sáḥ ā vaha devá-tātim yavishṭha sárdhaḥ yát adyá divyám yágâsi.

Bring thou hither, O Agni, the gods, that you may sacrifice to-day to the divine host.

Or I, 139, 1. ā nú tát sárdhaḥ divyám vrinímahe.

We chose for us now that divine host.

As in these last, so in many other passages, sárdhas is used as a neuter in the accusative. For instance,

I, 106, 1; II, 11, 14. mārutam sárdhaḥ.

II, 3, 3; VI, 3, 8. sárdhaḥ marútām.

The vocative occurs,

V, 46, 2. ágne índra váruṇa mítra dévāḥ sárdhaḥ prá yanta māruta utá vishṇo (iti).

Agni, Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, gods, host of the Maruts, come forth, and Vishṇu!

We see how throughout all these passages those in which sárdha and sárdhas are applied to the Maruts, or to some other company of gods, preponderate most decidedly. Yet passages occur in the Rig-veda where both sárdha and sárdhas are applied to other hosts or companies. Thus V, 53, 10, sárdha refers to chariots, while in I, 133, 3, sárdhas is applied to evil spirits.

If the passages hitherto examined were all that occur in the Rig-veda, we might still feel startled at the construction of our verse, where sárdhas is not only followed by masculine adjectives in the singular, but, in the next verse, by a pronoun in the plural. But if we take the last irregularity first, we find the same construction, viz. sárdhas followed by yé, in III, 32, 4:

índrasya sárdhaḥ marútaḥ yé āsan.

The host of Indra, that was the Maruts.

As to the change of genders, we find adjectives in the masculine after sárdhas, in

V, 52, 8. sárdhaḥ mārutam út samsa satyá-savasam r/bh-vasam.

Celebrate the host of the Maruts, the truly vigorous, the brilliant.

Here, too, the poet afterwards continues in the plural, though as he uses the demonstrative, and not, as in our passage, the relative pronoun, we cannot quote this in support of the irregularity which has here to be explained. Anyhow the construction of our verse, though bold and unusual, is not so unusual as to force us to adopt conjectural remedies. In V, 58, 2, we find yé after ganáh. On the Umbrian Çerfo Martio, as possibly the same as sárdha-s máruta-s, see Grassman, Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xvi, p. 190. The Zend saredha, kind, species, is the same word.

Verse 2.

WILSON: Who, borne by spotted deer, were born self-radiant, with weapons, war-cries, and decorations.

BENFEY: Die mit Hirschen und Speeren gleich mit Donnern und mit Blitzen auch—selbststrahlende—geboren sind.

LUDWIG: Die mit vilfarbigen speeren, mit der schwerter glanze, sichtbar wurden mit eigenem leuchten.

NOTE 1. The spotted deer (prīshatī) are the recognised animals of the Maruts, and were originally, as it would seem, intended for the rain-clouds. Sāyana is perfectly aware of the original meaning of prīshatī, as clouds. The legendary school, he says, takes them for deer with white spots, the etymological school for many-coloured lines of clouds: (RV. BH. I, 64, 8.) This passage shows that although prīshatī, as Roth observes, may mean a spotted cow or a spotted horse,—the Maruts, in fact, are called sometimes prīshat-asvāh, having piebald horses, or, having prīshats for their horses, VII, 40, 3,—yet the later tradition in India had distinctly declared in favour of spotted deer. The Vedic poets, however, admitted both ideas, and they speak in the same hymn, nay, in the same verse, of the fallow deer and of the horses of the Maruts. Thus V, 58, 1, the Maruts are called āśú-asvāh, possessed of quick horses; and in V, 58, 6, we read yát prá áyāsishta prīshatībhiḥ āsvaiḥ—ráthebhiḥ, where the gender of prīsha- tībhiḥ would hardly allow us to join it with ásvaiḥ, but where we must translate: When you come with the deer, the horses, the chariots, or with your deer, as horses. Ludwig joins prishatībhiḥ with rishābhiḥ, and again in I, 64, 8; see note 1 to I, 87, 4.

Note 2. The spears and daggers of the Maruts are meant for the thunderbolts, and the glittering ornaments for the lightning. Sāyana takes vāśī in this passage for war-cries on the authority of the Nirukta, where vāśī is given among the names of the voice. From other passages, however, it becomes clear that vāśī is a weapon of the Maruts; and Sāyana, too, explains it sometimes in that sense: cf. V, 53, 4; 57, 2. Thus I, 88, 3, the vāśīs are spoken of as being on the bodies of the Maruts. In V, 53, 4, the Maruts are said to shine in their ornaments and their vāśīs. Here Sāyana, too, translates vāśī rightly by weapon; and in his remarks on I, 88, 3, he says that vāśī was a weapon commonly called ārá, which is a shoemaker's awl. See Dhammapada, ver. 401. This reminds one of framea, which at one time was supposed to be connected with the German pfrieme. See, however, Grimm (Deutsche Grammatik, vol. i, p. 128) and Leo Meyer (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. vi, p. 424). In VIII, 29, 3, the god Tvashṭar is said to carry an iron vāśī in his hand. Grassman (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xvi, p. 163) translates vāśī by axe. That aṅgī is to be taken in the sense of ornament, and not in the sense of ointment, is shown by passages like VIII, 29, 1, where a golden ornament is mentioned, aṅgī añkte hiraṇyáyam. Sákám, together, is used with reference to the birth of the Maruts; see I, 64, 4. It should not be connected with vāśībhiḥ.

Verse 3.

WILSON: I hear the cracking of the whips in their hands, wonderfully inspiring (courage) in the fight.

BENFEY: Schier hier erschallt der Peitsche Knall, wenn sie in ihrer Hand erklingt; leuchtend fahr'n sie im Sturm herab.

LUDWIG: Als wäre es hier, so hört man es, wenn die geisseln in ihren händen knallen; wunderbar strecken sie auf ihrer fart sich nieder.

Note 1. Eshâm should be pronounced as a creticus; also in verses 9, 13, 15. This is a very common vyûha. On the whips as lightning, see Grimm, Donner, p. 27.

Note 2. I should have taken kitrâm as an adverb, like Benfey, if ni riñg were not usually construed with an accusative. Riñg in the 3rd pers. plur. pres. Âtm. is treated like a verb of the Ad-class. The SV. seems to read yâmam, and the commentator explains it by ratham.

Note 3. The locative yâman is frequently used of the path on which the gods move and approach the sacrifice; hence it sometimes means, as in our passage, in the sky. Yâmam in BR., s. v. arg, is wrong.

We might also translate: 'Here, close by, I hear what the whips in their hands say; they drive forth the beautiful (chariot) on the road.' See SV. I, 2, 1, 5, 1, comm.

Verse 4.

WILSON: Address the god-given prayer to those who are your strength, the destroyers of foes, the powerful, possessed of brilliant reputation.

BENFEY: Singt eurer Schaar, der wühlenden, der strahlenreichen, kräftigen ein gotterfülletes Gebet!

LUDWIG: Eurer kûnen schar, von blendender herlichkeit, der kraftvollen, soll ein von den gôttern eingegebenes brahma gesungen werden.

Note 1. Benfey translates ghrîshvi by burrowing, and refers it to the thunderbolt that uproots the earth. He points out that ghrîshvi means also, for the same reason, the boar, as proved by Kuhn (Die Herabkunft des Feuers, S. 202). Ghrîshî is evidently a common name for boar, the Norse gríss, and the god of the wind, Grimnir or Grimr, is conceived as a boar, shaking the cornfield, in such phrases as 'Der Eber geht ins Korn' (Gentha, l. c. p. 14). I prefer, however, in this place the general sense assigned to the adjective ghrîshu and ghrîshvi, exuberant, brisk, wild. See Kuhn in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xi, p. 385. Wilson, after Sâyana, translates destroyers of foes. On the representation of the clouds as boars, see Nir. V, 4.

Note 2. Tveshá-dyumna is difficult to render. Both tveshá and dyumná are derived from roots that mean to shine, to be bright, to glow. Derivatives from tvish express the idea of fieriness, fierceness, and fury. In IV, 17, 2, tvish is used correlatively, with manyú, wrath. Derivatives from dyu convey the idea of brightness and briskness. Both qualities are frequently applied to the Maruts.

Verse 5.

WILSON: Praise the sportive and resistless might of the Maruts, who were born amongst kine, and whose strength has been nourished by (the enjoyment of) the milk.

BENFEY: Preist hoch die muntre Marutschaar die unbesiegbare in den Kühen, im Schlund des Safts wuchs sie heran.

LUDWIG: Preise wie unter kühlen den stier, (so) der Marut spilende schar, beim verschlingen des saftes ist sie gross geworden.

Note 1. This translation is merely conjectural. I suppose that the wind driving the clouds before him, is here compared to a bull among cows, cf. V, 52, 3:

té syandrāsaḥ ná ukshānaḥ āti skandanti sārvarīḥ.

They, the Maruts, like rushing bulls, mount on the dark cows.

The last sentence states that the wind grows even stronger after it has tasted the rain (I, 85, 2. té ukshitāsaḥ mahimānam ārata).

Note 2. I take gāmbhe in the sense of gāmbhane. (On the root gabh and its derivatives, see Kuhn, Zeitschrift für vergleichende Sprachwissenschaft, vol. i, p. 123 seq.) It would be better to read mukhe, instead of sukhe, in the commentary. The Maruts were not born of milk for Prisni, as Wilson says in a note, but from the milk of Prisni. Prisni is called their mother, Rudra their father: (V, 52, 16; 60, 5.)

Benfey takes the cows for clouds in which the lightnings dwell; and the abyss of the sap is by him supposed to be again the clouds.

Verse 6.

WILSON : Which is chief leader among you, agitators of heaven and earth, who shake all around, like the top (of a tree)?

BENFEY : Wer, Helden ! ist der erste euch—ihr Erd- und Himmel-schütterer !—wenn ihr sie schüttelt Wipfeln gleich ?

LUDWIG : Wer ist der grösste bei euch, helden, wenn vom himel und der erde, schütteler, ihr am saume gleichsam rüttelt !

Note 1. Āntam ná, literally, like an end, is explained by Sāyana as the top of a tree. Wilson, Langlois, and Benfey accept that interpretation. Roth proposes, like the hem of a garment, which I prefer ; for vastrānta, the end of a garment, is a common expression in later Sanskrit, while anta is never applied to a tree in the sense of the top of a tree. Here agra would be more appropriate.

Verse 7.

WILSON : The householder, in dread of your fierce and violent approach, has planted a firm (buttress) ; for the many-ridged mountain is shattered (before you).

BENFEY : Vor eurem Gange beuget sich, vor eurem wilden Zorn der Mann ; der Hügel weicht und der Berg.

LUDWIG : Vor eurem anzug, eurem gewaltigen eifer, niederduckte sich der mensch, wich der festgeknотete [wolken]berg.

Note 1. Sāyana translates : 'Man has planted a firm buttress to give stability to his dwelling.' The reading ná for ní, which Aufrecht adopted, is untenable, as Ludwig shows. It has been altered in the second edition. See also VIII, 7, 5, ní yemiré. Nidadhré is the perfect Ātmanepada, and expresses the holding down of the head or the cowering attitude of man. I have taken ugrāya manyāve over to ghīta, because these words could hardly form an apposition to yāmāya. As the Vedic poets speak of the very mountains as shaken by the storms, we might translate pārvato girīḥ by the gnarled or rocky mount ;

but there is no authority for translating gñhita by it is shattered, and we should have to translate, the mountain yielded or bent before your anger. Cf. V, 57, 3 :

ní vañ vāñā gihate yāmanāñ bhiyāñ.

The forests get out of your way from fear.

V, 60, 2. vāñā kit ugrāñ gihate ní vañ bhiyāñ prithivī kit regate párvatañ kit.

Even the forests, ye fearful Maruts, yield from fear of you ; even the earth trembles, even the mountain.

In I, 166, 5, yát tveshá-yāmāñ nadáyanta párvatāñ, we may translate 'when they on their fiery course made the parvatas (clouds) to sound or thunder,' but it is more likely that nādayati here means to cause to shake or vibrate, and that parvata stands for mountain. We ought to remember such poetical expressions as I Kings xix. 11, 'and a great, strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord.'

Verse 8.

WILSON : At whose impetuous approach earth trembles ; like an enfeebled monarch, through dread (of his enemies).

BENFEY : Bei deren Lauf bei deren Sturm die Erde zittert voller Furcht, wie ein altergebeugter Mann.

LUDWIG : Bei deren märschen zitterte wie ein gealtet stammeshaupt die erd vor furcht auf ihren wegen.

Note 1. Ágma seems to express the act of racing or running (like ági, race, battle), while yāma is the road itself where the racing takes place. A very similar passage occurs in I, 87, 3. The comparison of the earth (fem.) to a king (masc.) would be considered a grave offence in the later Sanskrit literature. In I, 87, 3, vithurāñ takes the place of vispāti.

Verse 9.

WILSON : Stable is their birthplace, (the sky) ; yet the birds (are able) to issue from (the sphere of) their parent : for your strength is everywhere (divided) between two (regions,—or, heaven and earth).

BENFEY: Kaum geboren sind sie so stark, dass ihrer Mutter sie entfliehn: ist ja doch zwiefach ihre Kraft.

LUDWIG: Denn fest ist ihr geburtsort, vögel (sind sie) von der mutter fortzugehn, nach dem, wie von altersher ihre kraft.

Oder, Denn fest ist ihre kraft geworden von der mutter sich zu trennen, da schon von alters her ihre kraft diss wollte.

Note 1. A very difficult verse. The birth of the Maruts is frequently alluded to, as well as their surpassing strength, as soon as born. Hence the first sentence admits of little doubt. But what follows is very abrupt. Váyas may be the plural of vi, bird, or it may be váyas, the neuter, meaning vital strength: see Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xv, p. 217. The Maruts are frequently compared to birds (cf. I, 87, 2; 88, 1), but it is usual to indicate the comparison by ná or iva. I therefore take váyas as a nom. sing. neut., in the sense of vigour, life. They are called br̥hadvayasah in a Nivid; see Ludwig, p. 226. Nir-i is used with particular reference to the birth of a child (cf. V, 78, 7; 9).

Verse 10.

WILSON: They are the generators of speech: they spread out the waters in their courses: they urge the lowing (cattle) to enter (the water), up to their knees, (to drink.)

BENFEY: In ihrem Lauf erheben dann diese Söhne Getös und Fluth, die bis zum Knie den Kühen geht.

LUDWIG: Und dise söne, die sänger, denten auf ihren zügen ihre banen aus, so dass brüllend sie uns ganz nahe kamen.

Note 1. If we could take sûnávaḥ gíraḥ in the sense of the sons of voice, i. e. of thunder, which would remove many difficulties, the accent of gíraḥ would have to be changed. The commentator takes sûnu in the sense of utpádaka, producers of sound. Gíraḥ, however, occurs at least once more, in the sense of singers or poets, IX, 63, 10, where gíraḥ can only be a vocative, O ye singers! In I, 6, 6, the translation of gíraḥ by singers, i. e. the Maruts, may be contested, but if we consider that gíraḥ, in the sense of hymns, is feminine, and is followed by the very word which is here used, viz. devayántaḥ, as a feminine, viz. devayántīḥ, VII, 18, 3, we can hardly doubt that in I, 6, 6, gṛāḥ is a masculine and means singers. The same applies to VI, 63, 10. In VI, 52, 9, úpa naḥ sūnávaḥ gṛāḥ srinvantu amṛtasya yé, the construction is, of course, quite different.

Note 2. The expression that the Maruts enlarged or extended the fences of their race-course (RV. IV, 58, 7), can only mean that they swept over the whole sky, and drove the clouds away from all the corners. Kāshthā may mean the wooden enclosures (carceres) or the wooden poles that served as turning and winning-posts (metae). The Sāma-veda has yagñeshu instead of agmeshu. That the translation of this verse is purely tentative, and far from satisfactory, was known to all Vedic scholars, but I doubt whether they will consider the interpretation which M. Bergaigne proposes with so much assurance, as less tentative and more satisfactory. He translates (Journ. As. 1884, p. 239), 'des fils ont, dans leur marche, allongé leurs chants comme des chemins, pour y marcher à genoux (sur les genoux) en mugissant (en chantant).' I shall content myself with shortly pointing out the misgivings which every Vedic scholar would feel at once in proposing such a rendering. First as to the conception itself. Can a poet say, 'The Maruts have stretched out their songs in order to march on them on their knees?' 'The roads,' as M. Bergaigne shows himself, are only a simile, and no one walks on a simile. Secondly, the idea that these Maruts widened the roads on which they march, is common enough, but that they lengthened their songs, like paths, is never said by the Vedic Rishis, nor would they in such a case have left out the particle na or iva. Lastly, though many things are said of the Maruts, I do not remember that they ever appear on their knees. I do not think, therefore, that M. Bergaigne's infallible method helps us much beyond where we were before. Conjectures are easy, but for that very reason, one does not like to bring them forward. One might propose to read sūnávaḥ diváḥ, a very common name of the Maruts. One might go a step further, identify gih with bhâratî, and point out that the Maruts are called the sons of Bharata, II, 36, 2. But all this leaves us in utter uncertainty, and where a scholar feels the ground so uncertain beneath his feet, he hesitates to speak with papal authority. M. Bergaigne's strong point is that abhigñû means on their knees, not up to their knees. Here again, I ask, does abhi in prepositional compounds ever mean on? If abhigñû is used in the same sense in which we use 'on our knees,' it would in Sanskrit mean only 'bowing up to the knees.' Now in I, 72, 5, abhigñû seems to express a positive expression of reverence. With regard to the other passages where abhigñû occurs, M. Bergaigne has not shown how they ought to be translated so as to give a clear sense. I do not pretend to solve the difficulties, but I think it is better to confess our difficulties than to hide them under the veil of a so-called systematic interpretation. Abhigñû, like mitagñû, may have expressed a position of the knees, expressive of strength, but on such points very little information is to be gained from Indian commentators.

The last sentence expresses the result of this race, viz. the falling of so much rain that the cows had to walk up to their knees in water. This becomes still clearer from the next verse.

SÂYANA: These, the producers of speech, have spread water in their courses, they cause the cows to walk up to their knees in order to drink the water.

Verse 11.

WILSON: They drive before them, in their course, the long, vast, uninjurable, rain-retaining cloud.

BENFEY: Dann treiben sie im Sturm heran jenen langen und breiten Spross der Wolke unerschöpflichen.

LUDWIG: Sogar diesen langen, breiten, das kind der wolke, den unfriendly, schleudern auf ihren zügen sie vorwärts.

Note 1. Rain is called the offspring of the cloud, mihó nâpât, and is then treated as a masculine; cf. apâm nâpât, &c.

Verse 12.

WILSON: Maruts, as you have vigour, invigorate mankind: give animation to the clouds.

BENFEY: O Marut's! mit der Kraft, die ihr besitzt, werft ihr Geschöpfe um, die Berge werft ihr um sogar.

LUDWIG: O Marut, so wie eure kraft ist, warft ihr die leute nieder, warft ihr die berge nieder.

Note 1. In VIII, 72, 8, akūkyavit is explained by vya-dārayat, he tore open. Akūkyavitana is the Vedic form of the 2nd pers. plur. of the reduplicated aorist.

Verse 13.

WILSON: Wherever the Maruts pass, they fill the way with clamour: every one hears their (noise).

BENFEY: Wenn die Marut's des Weges ziehn, dann sprechen mit einander sie und mancher mag sie hören.

LUDWIG: Wenn die Marut wandern, sprechen auf dem weg sie mit einander, es höret sie ein jeder.

Note 1. Yānti has to be pronounced as an amphibrachys.

Verse 14.

WILSON: Come quickly, with your swift (vehicles). The offerings of the Kaṇvas are prepared. Be pleased with them.

BENFEY: Auf schnellen kommet schnell herbei, bei Kaṇva's Spross sind Feste euch: da wollt euch schön ergötzen.

LUDWIG: Brecht rasch auf mit raschen rossen, bei den Kaṇva's ist euer dienst, dort eben erfreuet euch.

Note 1. Benfey supposes that dúvaḥ stands in the singular instead of the plural. But why should the plural have been used, as the singular (asti) would have created no kind of difficulty? It is better to take dúvaḥ as a nominative plural of a noun dū, worshipper, derived from the same root which yielded dúvaḥ, worship. We certainly find á-duvaḥ, as a nom. plur., in the sense of not-worshipping:

VII, 4, 6. mā tvā vayām sahasā-van avīrāh mā āpsavaḥ pāri sadāma mā āduvaḥ.

May we not, O hero, sit round thee like men without strength, without beauty (cf. VIII, 7, 7), without worship.

Here Sâyana explains āduvaḥ very well by parikarāṇa-hīnāḥ, which seems better than Roth's explanation 'zögernd, ohne Eifer.'

Verse 15.

WILSON : The offering is prepared for your gratification : we are your (worshippers), that we may live all our life.

BENFEY : Gerüstet ist für euren Rausch und wir gehören, traun ! euch an für unser ganzes Lebelang.

LUDWIG : Er ist euch zur trunkesfreude, und wir gleichfalls euer hier, dass unsere ganze dauer wir erleben.

MANDALA I, HYMN 38.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 3, VARGA 15-17.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. What then now? When¹ will you take (us) as a dear father takes his son by both hands, O ye gods, for whom the sacred grass has been trimmed²?

2. Where now? On what errand of yours are you going, in heaven, not on earth¹? Where are your cows sporting?

3. Where are your newest favours¹, O Maruts? Where the blessings? Where all delights?

4. If you, sons of Prisni, were mortals, and your praiser an immortal¹,—

5. Then never¹ should your praiser be unwelcome, like a deer in pasture grass², nor should he go on the path of Yama³.

6. Let not one sin¹ after another, difficult to be conquered, overcome us; may it depart² together with greed.

7. Truly they are terrible and powerful; even to the desert the Rudriyas bring rain that is never dried up¹.

8. The lightning lows like a cow, it follows as a mother follows after her young, when the shower (of the Maruts) has been let loose¹.

9. Even by day the Maruts create darkness with the water-bearing cloud¹, when they drench the earth.

10. Then from the shouting of the Maruts over the whole space of the earth¹, men reeled forward.

11. Maruts on your strong-hoofed never-wearying³ steeds¹ go after those bright ones (the clouds), which are still locked up².

12. May your fellies be strong, the chariots, and their horses, may your reins¹ be well-fashioned.

13. Speak forth for ever with thy voice to praise the Lord of prayer¹, Agni, who is like a friend², the bright one.

14. Fashion a hymn in thy mouth! Expand like the cloud¹! Sing a song of praise.

15. Worship the host of the Maruts, the terrible, the glorious, the musical¹. May they be magnified here among us².

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Kaṁva, the son of Ghora. The metre is Gâyatrî throughout. Several verses, however, end in a spondee instead of the usual iambus. No attempt should be made to improve such verses by conjecture, for they are clearly meant to end in spondees. Thus in verses 2, 7, 8, and 9, all the three pâdas alike have their final spondee. In verse 7, the ionicus a minore is with an evident intention repeated thrice. No verse of the hymn occurs in SV., VS., AV.; but verse 8 = TS. III, 1, 11, 5; verse 9 = TS. II, 4, 8, 1.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Kadha-priya is taken in the Padapāṭha as one word, and Sâyana explains it by delighted by or delighting in praise, a nominative plural. A similar compound, kadha-priya, occurs in I, 30, 20, and there too the vocative sing. fem., kadhapriye, is explained by Sâyana as fond of praise. In order to obtain this meaning, kadha has to be identified with kathâ, story, which is simply impossible. There is another compound, adha-priyâ, nom. dual, which occurs VIII, 8, 4, and which Sâyana explains either as delighted here below, or as a corruption of kadha-priyâ.

In Boehtlingk and Roth's Dictionary, kadha-priya and kadha-prî are both taken as compounds of kadha, an interrogative adverb, and priya or prî, to love or delight, and they are explained as meaning kind or loving to whom? In the same manner adha-priya is explained as kind then and there.

It must be confessed, however, that a compound like kadha-prî, kind to whom?, is somewhat strange, and it seems preferable to separate the words, and to write kádha priyâ and ádha priyâ.

It should be observed that the compounds kadha-prî and kadha-priya occur always in sentences where there is another interrogative pronoun. The two interrogatives kát—kádha, what—where, and kás—kádha, who—where, occurring in the same sentence, an idiom so common in Greek, may have puzzled the author of the Pada text, and the compound being once sanctioned by the authority of Sākalya, Sāyana would explain it as best he could. But if we admit the double use of the interrogative in Sanskrit, as in Greek, then, in our passage, priyāk would be an adjective belonging to pitā, and we might translate: 'What then now? When will you take (us), as a dear father takes his son by both hands, O ye Maruts?' In the same manner we ought to translate I, 30, 20:

kāk te ushāk kádha priye bhugé mārtaḥ amartye.

Who and where was there a mortal to be loved by thee, O beloved, immortal Dawn?

In VIII, 7, 31, where the same words are repeated as in our passage, it is likewise better to write:

kát ha nūnám kádha priyāk yát índram ágahātana, kāk vaḥ sakhi-tvé ohate.

What then now? Where is there a friend, now that you have forsaken Indra? Who watches for your friendship?

Why in VIII, 8, 4, adha priyā should have been joined into one word is more difficult to say, yet here, too, the compound might easily be separated.

Kádha does not occur again, but would be formed in analogy with ádha. It occurs in Zend as kadha.

Kuhn, Beiträge IV, p. 186, has shown that kūshthak (RV. V, 74, 1) is a similar monster, and stands for ku shthak.

The words kát ha nūnám commonly introduce an interrogative sentence, literally, What then now? cf. X, 10, 4.

Note 2. Vrikta-barhis is generally a name of the priest, so called because he has to trim the sacrificial grass. 'The sacred Kusa grass (Poa cynosuroides), after having had the roots cut off, is spread on the Vedi or altar, and upon it the libation of Soma-juice, or oblation of clarified butter, is poured out. In other places, a tuft of it in a similar position is supposed to form a fitting seat for the deity or deities invoked to the sacrifice. According to Mr. Stevenson, it is also strewn over the floor of the chamber in which the worship is performed.'

Cf. VI, 11, 5. vriṅgé ha yát námasā barhīḥ agnaú, áyāmi srúk ghrítá-vatī su-vrīktīḥ.

When I reverentially trim the truss for Agni, when the well-trimmed ladle, full of butter, is stretched forth.

In our passage, unless we change the accent, it must be taken as an epithet of the Maruts, they for whom the grass-altar has been prepared. They are again invoked by the same name, VIII, 7, 20 :

kvā nūnām su-dānavaḥ mādatha vṛikta-barhishaḥ.

Where do ye rejoice now, you gods for whom the altar is trimmed?

Otherwise, vṛikta-barhishaḥ might, with a change of accent, supply an accusative to dadhidhve: 'Will you take the worshippers in your arms?' This, though decidedly better, is not absolutely necessary, because to take by the hand may be used as a neuter verb.

WILSON: Maruts, who are fond of praise, and for whom the sacred grass is trimmed, when will you take us by both hands as a father does his son?

BENFEY: Wo weilt ihr gern? was habt ihr jetzt—gleichwie ein Vater seinen Sohn—in Händen, da das Opfer harret?

Verse 2.

Note 1. The idea of the first verse, that the Maruts should not be detained by other pursuits, is carried on in the second. The poet asks, what they have to do in the sky, instead of coming down to the earth. The last sentence seems to mean 'where tarry your herds?' viz. the clouds. Sâyana translates: 'Where do worshippers, like lowing cows, praise you?' Wilson: 'Where do they who worship you cry to you, like cattle?' Benfey: 'Wo jauchzt man euch, gleich wie Stiere? (Ihre Verehrer brüllen vor Freude über ihre Gegenwart, wie Stiere.)' The verb ranyati, however, when followed by an accusative, means to love, to accept with pleasure. The gods accept the offerings and the prayers:

V, 18, 1. visvāni yāḥ āmartyaḥ havyā mārteshu ranyati.

The immortal who deigns to accept all offerings among mortals.

V, 74, 3. kāsya brāhmāni ranyathaḥ.

Whose prayers do ye accept?

Followed by a locative raṇyati means to delight in. Both the gods are said to delight in prayers (VIII, 12, 18; 33, 16), and prayers are said to delight in the gods (VIII, 16, 2). I therefore take raṇyanti in the sense of tarrying, disporting, and ná, if it is to be retained, in the sense of not; where do they not sport? meaning that they are to be found everywhere, except where the poet desires them to be. We thus get rid of the simile of singing poets and lowing cows, which, though not too bold for Vedic bards, would here come in too abruptly. It would be much better, however, if the negative particle could be omitted altogether. If we retain it, we must read: kvā vāḥ | gāvāḥ | na rān | yantí | . But the fact is that through the whole of the Rig-veda kvā has always to be pronounced as two syllables, kuva. There is only one passage, V, 61, 2, where, before a vowel, we have to read kva: kuva vo 'svāḥ, kvābhisavaḥ. In other passages, even before vowels, we always have to read kuva, e.g. I, 161, 4. kuvet=kva it; I, 105, 4. kuvartam=kva rītam. In I, 35, 7, we must read either kuvedānīm sūryaḥ, making sūryaḥ trisyllabic, or kuva idānīm, leaving a hiatus. In I, 168, 6, kvāvaram is kuvāvaram: Sākalya, forgetting this, and wishing to improve the metre, added na, thereby, in reality, destroying both the metre and the sense. Kva occurs as dissyllabic in the Rig-veda at least forty-one times.

Verse 3.

Note 1. The meanings of sumná in the first five Mandalas are well explained by Professor Aufrecht in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. iv, p. 274. As to suvitā in the plural, see X, 86, 21, and VIII, 93, 29, where Indra is said to bring all suvitas. It frequently occurs in the singular:

X, 148, 1. ā naḥ bhara suvitām yāsya kākān.

Verse 4.

Note 1. One might translate: 'If you, sons of Prisni, were mortals, the immortal would be your worshipper.' But this seems almost too deep and elaborate a compliment for a primitive age. Langlois translates: 'Quand vous ne seriez pas immortels, (faites toutefois) que votre panégyriste jouisse d'une longue vie.' Wilson's translation is obscure : 'That you, sons of Prisni, may become mortals, and your panegyrist become immortal.' Sâyana translates : 'Though you, sons of Prisni, were mortal, yet your worshipper would be immortal.' Ludwig has, 'Wenn ihr, o kinder der Prisni, sterbliche wäret, der unsterbliche wäre euer sänger dann. Nicht werde euch unlieb der sänger, wie ein wildes tier auf der weide, nicht des Yama Pfad betrete er.' I think it best to connect the fourth and fifth verses, and I feel justified in so doing by other passages where the same or a similar idea is expressed, viz. that if the god were the poet and the poet the god, then the poet would be more liberal to the god than the god is to him. Whether syât should have the udâtta, I cannot tell. Thus I translated a passage, VII, 32, 18, in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 545 : 'If I were lord of as much as thou, I should support the sacred bard, thou scatterer of wealth, I should not abandon him to misery. I should award wealth day by day to him who magnifies, I should award it to whosoever it be.' Another parallel passage is pointed out by Mr. J. Muir, (On the Interpretation of the Veda, p. 79 ; see also Sanskrit Texts, V, 303.) VIII, 19, 25 : 'If, Agni, thou wert a mortal, and I were an immortal, I should not abandon thee to malediction or to wretchedness ; my worshipper should not be miserable or distressed.' Still more to the point is another passage, VIII, 44, 23 : 'If I were thou, and thou wert I, then thy wishes should be fulfilled.' See also VIII, 14, 1, 2.

As to the metre it is clear that we ought to read martāsaḥ syātāna.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Mā, though it seems to stand for nā, retains its prohibitive sense.

Note 2. Yávasa is explained by Sâyana as grass, and Wilson's Dictionary, too, gives to it the meaning of meadow or pasture grass, whereas yava is barley. The Greek ζῆα or ζεία is likewise explained as barley or rye, fodder for horses. See I, 91, 13. gāvaḥ ná yāvaseshu, like cows in meadows.

Note 3. The path of Yama can only be the path first followed by Yama, or that leads to Yama, as the ruler of the departed.

X, 14, 8. sám gakkhasva pitṛī-bhiḥ sám yaména.

Meet with the fathers, meet with Yama (X, 14, 10; 15, 8).

X, 14, 7. yamám paryâsi várūnam ka devám.

Thou wilt see (there) Yama and the divine Varuna.

X, 165, 4. tásmāi yamāya námaḥ astu mrityáve.

Adoration to that Yama, to Death!

WILSON: Never may your worshipper be indifferent to you, as a deer (is never indifferent) to pasture, so that he may not tread the path of Yama.

BENFEY: Wer euch besingt, der sei euch nicht gleichgültig, wie das Wild im Gras, nicht wandl' er auf des Yama Pfad.

Āgoshya is translated insatiable by Professor Goldstücker.

Verse 6.

Note 1. One of the meanings of nīrrīti is sin. It is derived from the same root which yielded ritá, in the sense of right. Nīrrīti was conceived, it would seem, as going away from the path of right, the German Vergehen. Nīrrīti was personified as a power of evil and destruction.

VII, 104, 9. áhaye vā tñ pra-dádātu sómaḥ ā vā dadhātu nīh-riteh upá-sthe.

May Soma hand them over to Ahi, or place them in the lap of Nīrrīti.

I, 117, 5. susupvāmsam ná nīh-riteh upá-sthe.

Like one who sleeps in the lap of Nīrrīti.

Here Sāyana explains Nīrrīti as earth, and he attaches the same meaning to the word in other places which will have to be considered hereafter. Cf. Lectures on the Science of Language, Second Series, p. 562.

Wilson treats Nīrrīti as a male deity, and translates the last words, 'let him perish with our evil desires.'

Note 2. Paḍīśhtá is formed as an optative of the Ātmanepada, but with the additional s before the t, which, in the ordinary Sanskrit, is restricted to the so-called benedictive (Grammar, § 385; Bopp, Kritische Grammatik, ed. 1834, § 329, note). Pad means originally to go. Thus RV. IX, 73, 9, átra kartám áva padāti áprabhuḥ, may the impotent go down into the pit. In certain constructions it gradually assumed the meaning of to perish, and native commentators are inclined to explain it by pat, to fall. One can watch the transition of meaning from going into perishing in such phrases as VS. XI, 46, mâ pādy áyushaḥ purā, literally, 'may he not go before the time,' but really intended for 'may he not die before the time.' In the Rig-veda padīshṭá is generally qualified by some words to show that it is to be taken in malam partem. Thus in our passage, and in III, 53, 21; VII, 104, 16; 17. In I, 79, 11, however, padīshṭá sáḥ is by itself used in a maledictory sense, pereat, may he perish! In another, VI, 20, 5, pādi by itself conveys the idea of perishing. This may have some weight in determining the origin of the Latin pestis (Corssen, Kritische Beiträge, p. 396), for it shows that, even without prepositions, such as á or vi, pad may have an ill-omened meaning. In the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa VII, 14 (History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 471), pad, as applied to a child's teeth, means to go, to fall out. With sam, however, pad has always a good meaning, and this shows that originally its meaning was neutral. Another translation, suggested by Ludwig, might be: 'Let not one dreadful Nirṛiti (sin) after another strike us.'

Verse 7.

Note 1. The only difficult word is avâtām. Sāyana explains it, 'without wind.' But it is hardly possible to understand how the Maruts, themselves the gods of the storm, the sons of Rudra, could be said to bring clouds without wind. Langlois, it is true, translates without any misgivings: 'Ces dieux peuvent sur un sol desséché faire tomber la pluie sans l'accompagner de vent.' Wilson: 'They send down rain without wind upon the desert.' Benfey saw the incongruous character of the epithet, and explained it away by saying that the winds bring rain, and after they have brought it, they moderate their violence in order not to drive it away again; hence rain without wind. Yet even this explanation, though ingenious, and, as I am told, particularly truthful in an eastern climate, is somewhat too artificial. If we changed the accent, ávâtâm, unchecked, unconquered, would be better than avâtām, windless. But ávâta, unconquered, does not occur in the Rig-veda, except as applied to persons. It occurs most frequently in the phrase vanván ávâtáḥ, which Sâyana explains well by himsan ahimsitáḥ, hurting, but not hurt: (VI, 16, 20; 18, 1; IX, 89, 7.) In IX, 96, 8, we read prít-sú vanván ávâtáḥ, in battles attacking, but not attacked, which renders the meaning of ávâta perfectly clear. In VI, 64, 5, where it is applied to Ushas, it may be translated by unconquerable, intact.

There are several passages, however, where avâta occurs with the accent on the last syllable, and where it is accordingly explained as a Bahuvrīhi, meaning either windless or motionless, from vâta, wind, or from vâta, going (I, 62, 10). In some of these passages we can hardly doubt that the accent ought to be changed, and that we ought to read ávâta. Thus in VI, 64, 4, avâte is clearly a vocative applied to Ushas, who is called ávâtâ, unconquerable, in the verse immediately following. In I, 52, 4, the Maruts are called avâtáḥ, which can only be ávâtáḥ, unconquerable; nor can we hesitate in VIII, 79, 7, to change avâtáḥ into ávâtáḥ, as an epithet applied to Soma, and preceded by ádriptakratuḥ, of unimpaired strength, unconquerable.

But even then we find no evidence that ávâta, unconquered, could be applied to rain or to a cloud, and I therefore propose another explanation, though equally founded on the supposition that the accent of avâtām in our passage should be on the first syllable.

I take vâta as a Vedic form instead of the later vâna, the past participle of vai, to wither. Similarly we find in the Veda gîta, instead of gîna, the latter form being sanctioned by Pāṇini. Vâ means to get dry, to flag, to get exhausted; ávâta therefore, as applied to a cloud, would mean not dry, not withered, as applied to rain, not dried up, but remaining on the ground. It is important to remark that in one passage, VI, 67, 7, Sâyana, too, explains ávâta, as applied to rivers, by asushka, not dry; and the same meaning would be applicable to avâtām in I, 62, 10. In this sense of not withered, not dry, avâtām in our passage would form a perfectly appropriate epithet of the rain, while neither windless nor unconquered would yield an appropriate sense. In the famous passage, X, 129, 2, ānīt avâtām svadháyâ tát ékam, that only One breathed breathless by itself, avâtām might be taken, in accordance with its accent, as windless or breathless, and the poet may have wished to give this antithetical point to his verse. But avâtām, as an adverb, would here be equally appropriate, and we should then have to translate, 'that only One breathed freely by itself.' Ludwig translates, 'Als treue die blendenden, die stürmenden Rudriya auf öder fläche sogar, als brunnen die wolke schaffen.' This presupposes the conjectural reading ava-tām.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The peculiar structure of the metre in the seventh and eighth verses should be noted. Though we may scan

-----uú--- | ---u---ú--- | u-----uú--- |
 ---u---ú--- | ---u---ú--- | u-----uú---

by throwing the accent on the short antepenultimate, yet the movement of the metre becomes far more natural by throwing the accent on the long penultimate, thus reading

-ú-úúú- | -úúúú- | uú-úúú-
 -úúú-uú- | -úúú-u--- | uú-úúú-

SÂYANA : Like a cow the lightning roars, (the lightning) attends (on the Maruts) as the mother cow on her calf, because their rain is let loose at the time of lightning and thunder.

WILSON : The lightning roars like a parent cow that bellows for its calf, and hence the rain is set free by the Maruts.

BENFEY : Es blitzt—wie eine Kuh brüllt es—die Mutter folgt dem Kalb gleichsam—wenn ihr Regen losgelassen. (Der Donner folgt dem Blitz, wie eine Kuh ihrem Kalbe.)

Vāsrā as a masculine means a bull, and it is used as a name of the Maruts in some passages, VIII, 7, 3 ; 7. As a feminine it means a cow, particularly a cow with a calf, a milch cow. Hence also a mother, X, 119, 4. The lowing of the lightning must be intended for the distant thunder, and the idea that the lightning goes near or looks for the rain is not foreign to the Vedic poets. See I, 39, 9: 'Come to us, Maruts, with your entire help, as lightnings (come to, i. e. seek for) the rain!'

Verse 9.

Note 1. That pargánya here and in other places means cloud has been well illustrated by Dr. Bühler, Orient und Occident, vol. i, p. 221. It is interesting to watch the personifying process which is very palpable in this word, and by which Parganya becomes at last a friend and companion of Indra. See now, 'India, what can it teach us?' p. 183 seq.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Sádma, as a neuter, means originally a seat, and is frequently used in the sense of altar: IV, 9, 3. sáh sádma pári niyate hótâ; VII, 18, 22. hótâ-iva sádma pári emi rébhan. It soon, however, assumed the more general meaning of place, as X, 1, 1. agnih bhânúnâ rúsatâ vísvâ sádmâni aprâh.

Agni with brilliant light thou filledst all places.

It is lastly used with special reference to heaven and earth, the two sádmanî, I, 185, 6; III, 55, 2. In our passage sádma pârthivam is the same as pârthive sádane in VIII, 97, 5. Here the earth is mentioned together with heaven, the sea, and the sky. Sâyana takes sádma as 'dwelling,' so do Wilson and Langlois. Benfey translates 'der Erde Sitz,' and makes it the subject of the sentence, which may be right: 'From the roaring of the Maruts the seat of the earth trembles, and all men tremble.' Sadman, with the accent on the last syllable, is also used as a masculine in the Rig-veda, I, 173, 1; VI, 51, 12. sadmānam divyām.

Verse 11.

Note 1. I have translated vi/ṇu-pāṇibhiḥ, as if it were vi/ṇupāṇibhiḥ, for this is the right accent of a Bahuvrīhi compound. Thus the first member retains its own accent in prīthú-pāni, bhūri-pāni, vṛśha-pāni, &c. It is possible that the accent may have been changed in our passage, because the compound is used, not as an adjective, but as a kind of substantive, as the name of a horse. Pāni, hand, means, as applied to horses, hoof :

II, 31, 2. prīthivyāḥ sánau gáṅghananta pāni-bhiḥ.

When they strike with their hoofs on the summit of the earth.

This meaning appears still more clearly in such compounds as dravát-pāni :

VIII, 5, 35. híran̄yáyena ráthena dravátpāni-bhiḥ ásvaiḥ.

On a golden chariot, on quick-hoofed horses.

The horses of the Maruts, which in our verse are called vīu-pāni, strong-hoofed, are called VIII, 7, 27. híran̄ya-pāni, golden-hoofed :

ásvaiḥ híran̄yapāni-bhiḥ dévāsaḥ úpa gantana.

On your golden-hoofed horses come hither, O gods.

Those who retain the accent of the MSS. ought to translate, 'Maruts, with your strong hands go after the clouds.'

Note 2. Ródhasvatī is explained by Sâyana as river. It does not occur again in the Rig-veda. Ródhas is enclosure or fence, the bank of a river ; but it does not follow that ródhasvat, having enclosures or banks, was applicable to rivers only. II, 15, 8, it is said that he emptied or opened the artificial enclosures of Bala, these being the clouds conquered by Indra. Hence I take ródhasvatī in the sense of a cloud yet unopened, which is followed or driven on by the Maruts.

Kitrá, bright or many-coloured, is applied to the clouds, V, 63, 3. kitrébhiḥ abhráḥ.

Note 3. Roth and Ludwig take ákhidrayāman for a name of horse, which seems right. The word does not occur again in the Rig-veda.

WILSON: Maruts, with strong hands, come along the beautifully-embanked rivers with unobstructed progress.

BENFEY: Mit euren starken Händen folgt den hehren eingeschlossnen nach in unermüd'tem Gang, Maruts.

Verse 12.

Note 1. Abhīsu, rein, does not mean finger in the Rīg-veda, though Sāyana frequently explains it so, misled by Yāska, who gives abhīsu among the names of finger. Wilson: 'May your fingers be well skilled (to hold the reins).'

Verse 13.

Note 1. Agni is frequently invoked together with the Maruts, and is even called marút-sakhā, the friend of the Maruts, VIII, 92, 14. It seems better, therefore, to refer bráhmaṇas pátim to Agni, than, with Sāyana, to the host of the Maruts (marúdganam). Bráhmaṇaspáti and Br̥has-páti are both varieties of Agni, the priest and purohita of gods and men, and as such he is invoked together with the Maruts in other passages, I, 40, 1. Tánā is an adverb, meaning constantly, always, for ever. Cf. II, 2, 1; VIII, 40, 7.

WILSON: Declare in our presence (priests), with voice attuned to praise Brahmanaspati, Agni, and the beautiful Mitra.

BENFEY: Lass schallen immerfort das Lied zu grüssen Brahmanaspati, Agni, Mitra, den herrlichen.

Note 2. Mitra is never, as far as I know, invoked together with the Maruts, and it is better to take mitráṃ as friend. Besides ná cannot be left here untranslated. Ludwig translates, 'beautiful like Mitra,' that is, bright like the sun.

Verse 14.

Note 1. The second sentence is obscure. Sāyana translates: 'Let the choir of priests make a hymn of praise, let them utter or expand it, like as a cloud sends forth rain.' Wilson similarly: 'Utter the verse that is in your mouth, spread it out like a cloud spreading rain.' Benfey: 'Ein Preislied schaffe in dem Mund, ertöne dem Parganya gleich.' He takes Parganya for the god of thunder, and supposes the hymn of praise to be compared to it on account of its loudness. Tatanaḥ can only be the second person singular of the conjunctive of the reduplicated perfect, of which we have also tatánat, tatánâma, tatánan, and tatánanta. Tatana can be addressed either to the host of the Maruts, or to the poet. I take it in the latter sense, for a similar verse occurs VIII, 21, 18. It is said there of a patron that he alone is a king, that all others about the river Sarasvatî are only small kings, and the poet adds: 'May he spread like a cloud with the rain,' giving hundreds and thousands (par-gányah-iva tatánat hí vṛishṭyā). Ludwig takes tan in the sense of thundering; thunder like Parganya!

Verse 15.

Note 1. It is difficult to find an appropriate rendering for arkín. It means praising, celebrating, singing, and it is in the last sense only that it is applicable to the Maruts. Wilson translates, 'entitled to adoration'; Benfey, 'flaming.' Boehtlingk and Roth admit the sense of flaming in one passage, but give to arkín in this place the meaning of praising. If it simply meant, possessed of arká, i. e. songs of praise, it would be a very lame epithet after panasyú. But other passages, like I, 19, 4; 52, 15, show that the conception of the Maruts as singers was most familiar to the Vedic Rishis (I, 64, 10; Kuhn, Zeitschrift, vol. i, p. 521, note); and arká is the very name applied to their songs (I, 19, 4). In the Edda, too, 'storm and thunder are represented as a lay, as the wondrous music of the wild hunt. The dwarfs and Elbs sing the so-called Alb-leich which carries off everything, trees and mountains.' See Justî in Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 62; Genthe, Windgottheiten, p. 4; 11. There is no doubt therefore that arkín here means musician, and that the arká of the Maruts is the music of the winds.

Note 2. Vṛiddhá, literally grown, is used in the Veda as an honorific epithet, with the meaning of mighty, great, or magnified:

III, 32, 7. yágâma it námasâ vṛiddhám índram bṛihántam rishvám agáram yúvânam.

We worship with praise the mighty Indra, the great, the exalted, the immortal, the vigorous.

Here neither is vṛiddhá intended to express old age, nor yúvan young age, but both are meant as laudatory epithets. See Darmesteter, Ormazd et Ahriman, p. 91 seq.

Asan is the so-called Let of as, to be. This Let is properly an imperative, which gradually sinks down to a mere subjunctive, and is generally called so. Of as, we find the following Let forms: belonging to the present, we have ásasi, II, 26, 2; ásati, VI, 23, 9; ásathaḥ, VI, 63, 1; and ásatha, V, 61, 4: belonging to the imperfect, ásaḥ, VIII, 100, 2; ásat, I, 9, 5; ásâma, I, 173, 9; ásan, I, 89, 1. Ásam, a form quoted by Roth from Rig-veda X, 27, 4, is really ásam.

We find, for instance, ásaḥ, with an imperative or optative meaning, in

VIII, 100, 2. ásaḥ ka tvám dakshinatáḥ sákhâ me ádha vritráṇi gaṅghanâva bhûri.

And be thou my friend on my right hand, and we shall kill many enemies.

Here we see the transition of meaning from an imperative to the conditional. In English, too, we may say, 'Do this and you shall live,' which means nearly the same as, 'If you do this, you will live.' Thus we may translate this passage: 'And if thou be my friend on my right side, then we shall kill many enemies.'

X, 124, 1. imám naḥ agne úpa yagñám â ihi—ásaḥ havya-vât utá naḥ purah-gâḥ.

Here we have the imperative ihi and the Let ásaḥ used in the same sense.

Far more frequently, however, ásaḥ is used in relative sentences, such as,

VI, 36, 5. ásaḥ yáthâ naḥ sávasâ kakánâḥ.

That thou mayest be ours, delighting in strength.

VII, 24, 1. ásaḥ yáthâ naḥ avitâ vridhé ka.

That thou mayest be our helper and for our increase.

See also X, 44, 4; 85, 26; 36.

WILSON: May they be exalted by this our worship.

BENFEY: Mögen die Hohen hier bei uns sein.

MANDALA I, HYMN 39.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 8, VARGA 18-19.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. When you thus from afar cast forwards your measure¹, like a blast of fire, through whose wisdom is it, through whose design²? To whom do you go, to whom, ye shakers (of the earth)?

2. May your weapons be firm to attack, strong also to withstand. May yours be the more glorious power, nor that of the deceitful mortal.

3. When you overthrow what is firm, O ye men, and whirl about what is heavy, you pass¹ through the trees of the earth, through the clefts of the rocks².

4. No real foe of yours is known in heaven, nor on earth, ye devourers of foes! May power be yours, together with your race¹! O Rudras, can it be defied²?

5. They make the rocks tremble, they tear asunder the kings of the forest¹. Come on, Maruts, like madmen, ye gods, with your whole tribe.

6. You have harnessed the spotted deer to your chariots, a red one draws as leader¹; even the earth listened² at your approach, and men were frightened,

7. O Rudras, we quickly desire your help for our race. Come now to us with help, as of yore; thus now for the sake of the frightened *Kaṇva*¹.

8. Whatever fiend, roused by you or roused by men, attacks us, deprive him of power, of strength, and of your favours¹.

9. For you, chasing and wise Maruts, have wholly protected¹ Kanva. Come to us, Maruts, with your whole favours, as lightnings² (go in quest of) the rain.

10. Bounteous givers, you carry whole strength, whole power, ye shakers (of the world). Send, O Maruts, against the wrathful enemy of the poets an enemy, like an arrow¹.

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Kaṁva, the son of Ghora. The metre varies between Bṛihatī and Satobṛihatī, the odd verses being composed in the former, the even verses in the latter metre. Each couple of such verses is called a Bārḥata Pragātha. The Bṛihatī consists of $8+8+12+8$, the Satobṛihatī of $12+8+12+8$ syllables. No verse of this hymn occurs in SV., VS., AV.; verse 5=TB. II, 4, 4, 3.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Māna, which I translate by measure, is explained by Sāyana as meaning strength. Wilson: 'When you direct your awful vigour downwards from afar, as light (descends from heaven).' Benfey: 'Wenn ihr aus weiter Ferne so wie Strahlen schleudert euren Stolz (das worauf ihr stolz seid: euren Blitz).' Langlois: 'Lorsque vous lancez votre souffle puissant.' I doubt whether māna is ever used in the Rig-veda in the sense of pride, which no doubt it has, as a masculine, in later Sanskrit: cf. Halāyudha, ed. Aufrecht, iv, 37. Māna, as a masculine, means frequently a poet in the Rig-veda, viz. a measurer, a thinker or maker; as a neuter it means a measure, or what is measured or made. Thus V, 85, 5, we read:

mānena-iva tasthi-vān antárikṣhe ví yáḥ mamé prithivīm sūryena.

He (Varuṇa) who standing in the welkin has measured the earth with the sun, as with a measure.

In this passage, as well as in ours, we must take measure, not in the abstract sense, but as a measuring line, which is cast forward to measure the distance of an object,—a simile, perfectly applicable to the Maruts, who seem with their weapons to strike the trees and mountains when they themselves are still far off. Another explanation might be given, if māna could be taken in the sense of measure, i. e. shape or form, but this is doubtful.

Note 2. Várpas, which has generally been translated by body or form, is here explained by praise. Benfey puts Werk (i.e. Gesang, Gebet); Langlois, maison. Várpas, which, without much reason, has been compared to Latin corpus, must here be taken in a more general sense. Thus VI, 44, 14, asyá máde purú várpāmsi vidvān, is applied to Indra as knowing many schemes, many thoughts, many things, when he is inspired by the Soma-juice; see I, 19, 5.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Benfey takes ví yāthana in a causative sense, you destroy, you cause the trees to go asunder. But even without assigning to yā a causative meaning, to go through, to pierce, would convey the idea of destruction. In some passages, however, vi-yā is certainly used in the simple sense of passing through, without involving the idea of destruction:

VIII, 73, 13. ráthaḥ viyāti ródasi (iti).

Your chariot which passes through or between heaven and earth.

In other passages the mere passing across implies conquest and destruction:

I, 116, 20. vi-bhindúnā....ráthena ví párvatān....ayātam.

On your dissevering chariot you went across, or, you rent, the mountains (the clouds).

In other passages, however, a causative meaning seems equally, and even more applicable:

VIII, 7, 23. ví vṛitrām parva-sáḥ yayuḥ ví párvatān.

They passed through Vṛitra piecemeal, they passed through the mountains (the clouds); or, they destroyed Vṛitra, cutting him to pieces, they destroyed the clouds.

Likewise I, 86, 10. ví yāta vīsvam atrīnam.

Walk athwart every evil spirit, or destroy every evil spirit! See before, I, 19, 7; 37, 7.

We must scan ví yāthana vanināḥ prīthivyāḥ.

Note 2. It might seem preferable to translate āśāḥ párvatānām by the spaces of the clouds, for párvata means clouds in many places. Yet here, and still more clearly in verse 5, where párvata occurs again, the object of the poet is to show the strength of the Maruts. In that case the mere shaking or bursting of the clouds would sound very tame by the side of the shaking and breaking of the forest trees. Vedic poets do not shrink from the conception that the Maruts shake even mountains, and Indra is even said to have cut off the mountain tops : IV, 19, 4. áva abhinat kakú-bhaḥ párvatânām. In the later literature, too, the same idea occurs : Mahābh. Vana-parva, ver. 10974, dyauḥ svit patati kim bhûmir dīryate parvato nu kim, does the sky fall? is the earth torn asunder, or the mountain?

Verse 4.

Note 1. Sāyana was evidently without an authoritative explanation of tánā yugā. He tries to explain it by 'through the union of you may strength to resist be quickly extended.' Wilson : 'May your collective strength be quickly exerted.' Benfey takes tánā as adverb and leaves out yugā : 'Zu allen Zeiten, O Furchtbare!—sei im Nu zu überwält'gen euch die Macht.' Yugā, an instrumental, if used together with another instrumental, becomes in the Veda a mere preposition : cf. VII, 43, 5; 95, 4. râyā yugā; X, 83, 3. tápasā yugā; X, 102, 12. vádhriṇā yugā; VII, 32, 20. púram-dhyā yugā; VI, 56, 2. sákhyā yugā; VIII, 68, 9. tvā yugā. As to the meaning of tán, see B. R. s. v., where tán in our passage is explained as continuation. The offspring or race of the Maruts is mentioned again in the next verse.

Note 2. I take nú kit á-dhr̥she as an abrupt interrogative sentence, viz. Can it be defied? Can it be resisted? See V, 87, 2 :

tát vaḥ marutaḥ ná á-dhr̥she sávaḥ.

Your strength, O Maruts, is not to be defied.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Large trees of the forest are called the kings or lords of the forest. Instead of pró ārata, the Taitt. Br. II, 4, 4, 2, reads pró varata, which Sāyana explains by pro, prakarsheṇa, avārata dhāvata.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Práshñi is explained by Sâyana as a sort of yoke in the middle, when three horses or other animals are harnessed to a car; róhita as a kind of red deer. Hence Wilson remarks that the sense may be, 'The red deer yoked between them aids to drag the car.' But he adds that the construction of the original is obscure, and apparently rude and ungrammatical. Benfey translates, 'Sie führt ein flammenrothes Joch,' and remarks against Wilson that Sâyana's definition of práshñi as yoke is right, but that of róhita as deer, wrong. If Sâyana's authority is to be invoked at all, one might appeal from Sâyana in this place to Sâyana VIII, 7, 28, where práshñi is explained by him either by quick or by pramukhe yugyamānaḥ, harnessed in front. The verse is yát eshām prishatīḥ ráthe práshñīḥ váhati róhitaḥ.

When the red leader draws or leads their spotted deer in the chariot.

VI, 47, 24. práshñīḥ is explained as tripada ádhāraḥ; tadvad vahantīti prashñayo=svāḥ. In I, 100, 17, práshñibhiḥ, as applied to men, means friends or supporters, or, as Sâyana explains, pārsvasthair anyair rishibhiḥ.

Ludwig (IV, ad 25, 8) adds some useful information. He quotes from the comm. on Taitt. S. I, 7, 8; vāmadakshinayor asvayor madhya ishādvayam prasārya tayor madhye saptyākhyagātivisheshopetam asvam yuñgyāt. The right horse is said to be the arvā, the left vāgī, the middle saptīḥ. Lātyāyana II, 7, 23, calls the two side-horses prashñi. According to Sâyana (Taitt. S. I, 7, 8, p. 1024) prashñi means originally a tripod for holding a pot (see above), and afterwards a chariot with three horses. In that case we should have to translate, the red chariot moves along.

Note 2. Aufrecht derives asrot from sru, to shake, without necessity, however; see Muir's Sanskrit Texts, IV, p. 494.

Ludwig also remarks that asrot might be translated by the earth trembled or vibrated. Similar passages occur RV. I, 127, 3. vílú kīṭ yásya sám-rītau srúvat vánā-iva yát sthirám, at whose approach even what is firm and strong will shake, like the forests. Roth translates, the earth yielded, got out of your way.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Kaṇva, the author of the hymn.

Verse 8.

Note 1. The abhva, fiend, or, as Benfey translates it very happily, Ungethüm, may have been sent by the Maruts themselves, or by some mortal. With reference to yushmé-shita it is said afterwards that the Maruts are to withdraw their help from him. I have adopted Wilson's and Ludwig's interpretation of vi yuyota, with the instrumental.

Verse 9.

Note 1. The verb dadá is the second pers. plur. of the perfect of dā, and is used here in the sense of to keep, to protect, as is well shown by B. and R. s. v. dā 4, base dad. Śāyana did not understand the word, and took it for an irregular imperative; yet he assigned to the verb the proper sense of to keep, instead of to give. Hence Wilson: 'Uphold the sacrificer Kaṇva.' Benfey, less correctly, 'Den Kaṇva gabt ihr,' as if Kaṇva had been the highest gift of the Maruts.

Note 2. The simile, as lightnings go to the rain, is not very telling. It may have been suggested by the idea that the lightnings run about to find the rain, or the tertium comparationis may simply be the quickness of lightning. Wilson: 'As the lightnings bring the rain.' Benfey: '(So schnell) gleichwie der Blitz zum Regen kömmt.' Lightning precedes the rain, and may therefore be represented as looking about for the rain. Ludwig proposes some bold conjectures. He would change káṇvam to raṇvam, and take the words from asámibhiḥ to ganta as a parenthesis. He translates: 'For nothing imperfect, you highly to be revered Maruts, no, something delightful you gave—(with perfect aids, Maruts, come to us)—as lightnings give rain.'

Verse 10.

Note 1. Wilson: 'Let loose your anger.' Śāyana: 'Let loose a murderer who hates.'

Pari-manyú, which occurs but once in the Rig-veda, corresponds as nearly as possible to the Greek περίθυμος. Manyú, like θυμός, means courage, spirit, anger; and in the compound parimanyú, as in περίθυμος, the preposition pári seems to strengthen the simple notion of the word. That pári is used in that sense in later Sanskrit is well known; for instance, in parilaghu, perlevis, parikshâma, withered away: see Pott, Etymologische Forschungen, second edition, vol. i, p. 487. How pári, originally meaning round about, came to mean excessive, is difficult to explain with certainty. It may have been, because what surrounds exceeds, but it may also have been because what is done all around a thing is done thoroughly. See Curtius, Grundzüge, fifth edition, p. 274. Thus we find in the Veda, VIII, 75, 9, pári-dveshas, lit. one who hates all around, then a great hater:

mā naḥ . . . pári-dveshasaḥ amhatíḥ, ūrmíḥ ná nāvam ā vadhīt.

May the grasp of the violent hater strike us not, as the wave strikes a ship.

Again, pari-sprídh means literally one who strives round about, then an eager enemy, a rival (fem.):

IX, 53, 1. nudásva yāḥ pari-sprídhah.

Drive away those who are rivals.

Pari-krosá means originally one who shouts at one from every side, who abuses one roundly, then an angry reviler. This word, though not mentioned in B. R.'s Dictionary, occurs in

I, 29, 7. sárvam pari-krosám gahi.

Kill every reviler!

The same idea which is here expressed by pari-krosá, is in other places expressed by pari-ráp, lit. one who shouts round about, who defies on every side, a calumniator, an enemy, one who 'be-rattles.'

II, 23, 3. ā vi-bādhya pari-rápah.

Having struck down the enemies.

II, 23, 14. ví pari-rápah ardaya.

Destroy the enemies.

In the same way as the words meaning to hate, to oppose, to attack, are strengthened by this preposition, which conveys the idea of round about, we also find words expressive of love strengthened by the same preposition. Thus from prítāḥ, loved, we have pári-prītaḥ, lit. loved all round, then loved very much: I, 190, 6. pári-prītaḥ ná mitráḥ; cf. X, 27, 12. We also find IX, 72, 1. pari-prīyaḥ, those who love fully or all around, which may mean great lovers, or surrounding friends.

In all these cases the intensifying power of pári arises from representing the action of the verb as taking place on every side, thoroughly, excessively; but in other cases, mentioned by Professor Pott, particularly where this preposition is joined to a noun which implies some definite limit, its magnifying power is no doubt due to the fact that what is around, is outside, and therefore beyond. Thus in Greek περίμετρος expresses the same idea as ὑπέρμετρος (loc. cit. p. 488), but I doubt whether pári ever occurs in that sense in Sanskrit compounds.

MANDALA I, HYMN 64.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 5, VARGA 6-8.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. For the manly host, the joyful, the wise, for the Maruts bring thou, O Nodhas¹, a pure offering². I prepare songs, like as a handy priest³, wise in his mind, prepares the water, mighty at sacrifices.

2. They are born, the tall bulls of Dyū¹ (heaven), the manly youths² of Rudra, the divine, the blameless, pure, and bright like suns; scattering rain-drops, full of terrible designs, like giants³.

3. The youthful Rudras, they who never grow old, the slayers of the demon¹, have grown irresistible like mountains. They throw down with their strength all beings, even the strongest, on earth and in heaven.

4. They deck themselves with glittering ornaments¹ for a marvellous show; on their chests they fastened gold (chains) for beauty²; the spears on their shoulders pound to pieces³; they were born together by themselves⁴, the men of Dyū.

5. They who confer power¹, the roarers², the devourers of foes, they made winds and lightnings by their powers. The shakers milk the heavenly udders (clouds), they sprinkle the earth all round with milk (rain).

6. The bounteous¹ Maruts pour forth² water, mighty at sacrifices, the fat milk (of the clouds). They seem to lead³ about the powerful horse, the cloud, to make it rain; they milk the thundering, unceasing spring⁴.

7. Mighty they are, powerful, of beautiful splendour, strong in themselves¹ like mountains, (yet) swiftly gliding along;—you chew up forests, like wild elephants², when you have assumed your powers among the red flames³.

8. Like lions they roar, the wise Maruts, they are handsome like gazelles¹, the all-knowing. By night² with their spotted deer (rain-clouds) and with their spears (lightnings) they rouse the companions together, they whose ire through strength is like the ire of serpents.

9. You who march in companies, the friends of man, heroes, whose ire through strength is like the ire of serpents¹, salute heaven and earth²! On the seats on your chariots, O Maruts, the lightning stands, visible like light³.

10. All-knowing, surrounded with wealth, endowed with powers, singers¹, men of endless prowess, armed with strong rings², they, the archers, have taken the arrow in their fists.

11. The Maruts who with the golden tires of their wheels increase the rain, stir up the clouds like wanderers on the road. They are brisk, indefatigable¹, they move by themselves; they throw down what is firm, the Maruts with their brilliant spears make (everything) to reel².

12. We invoke with prayer¹ the offspring of Rudra, the brisk, the pure, the worshipful², the active. Cling³ for happiness-sake to the strong company of the Maruts, the chasers of the sky⁴, the powerful, the impetuous⁵.

13. The mortal whom ye, Maruts, protected, he indeed surpasses people in strength through your protection. He carries off booty with his horses, treasures with his men; he acquires honourable¹ wisdom, and he prospers².

14. Give, O Maruts, to our lords strength glorious, invincible in battle, brilliant, wealth-acquiring, praiseworthy, known to all men¹. Let us foster our kith and kin during a hundred winters.

15. Will¹ you then, O Maruts, grant unto us wealth, durable, rich in men, defying all onslaughts²?—wealth a hundred and a thousand-fold, always increasing?—May he who is rich in prayers³ (the host of the Maruts) come early and soon!

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Nodhas, of the family of Gotama. No verse of this hymn occurs in SV., VS., AV.; but verse 6=TS. III, I, 11, 7.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The first line is addressed by the poet to himself.

Note 2. Suvṛikṭi is generally explained by a hymn of praise, and it cannot be denied that in this place, as in most others, that meaning would be quite satisfactory. Etymologically, however, suvṛikṭi means the cleaning and trimming of the grass on which, as on a small altar, the oblation is offered: cf. vṛikṭabarhis, I, 38, 1, note 2, page 84. Hence, although the same word might be metaphorically applied to a carefully trimmed, pure, and holy hymn of praise, yet wherever in the Veda the primary meaning is applicable, it seems safer to retain it: cf. III, 61, 5; VI, 11, 5.

Prof. Roth, in the Mélanges Asiatiques, vii, p. 612, calls the derivation, which he himself discovered, a 'Columbus-Egg.' He derives suvṛikṭi from su + ṛikṭi, and translates it by excellent praise. He supports the insertion of v, by the analogy of su-v-ita, for su-ita. This derivation is certainly very ingenious, but there are some difficulties which have still to be accounted for. That the substantive ṛikṭi does not occur by itself would not be fatal, because other words in the Veda occur as uttarapadas only. But there is the compound námovṛikṭi in X, 131, 2, which shows that vṛikṭi existed as a substantive, though it is true that the Vāgasaneyins (X, 32) read namaukti instead. Taitt. S. I, 8, 21; Taitt. Br. II, 6, 1, 3; and Ath. V. XX, 125, 2, have all namovṛikṭi. There is also the compound svāvṛikṭi in RV. X, 21, 1. Are these to be separated from su-vṛikṭi, and ought we not to take into consideration also the Zend hvarsta, as pointed out by M. Darmesteter (Ormazd, p. 10, note), meaning well performed, perfect in a liturgical sense?

Note 3. Apás, with the accent on the last syllable, is the accusative plural of ap, water, and it is so explained by Sáyana. He translates: 'I show forth these hymns of praise, like water, i. e. everywhere, as Parganya sends down rain at once in every place.' Benfey explains: 'I make these hymns smooth like water, i. e. so that they run smooth like water.' He compares ῥυθμός, as derived from ῥέω. Ludwig translates: 'Als ein kunstfertiger das werk im geiste, auch geschickt mit der hand mach ich schön die in der opferversammlungen mächtig wirkenden lieder.' I thought formerly that we ought either to change the accent, and read ápaḥ, or the last vowel, and read apāḥ. In the former case the meaning would be, 'As one wise in mind and clever performs his work, so do I compose these hymns.' In the second case we should translate: 'Like a workman, wise in mind and handy, I put together these hymns.'

Still there is one point which has hitherto been overlooked by all translators, namely, that apāḥ vidátheshu ábhúvaḥ, occurring in the first and sixth verses, ought to be taken in the same sense in both passages. Now apāḥ vidátheshu ábhúvaḥ seems to mean water efficacious at sacrifices. In the sixth verse I now translate: 'The bounteous Maruts pour down water, mighty or efficacious at sacrifices, the fat milk (of the clouds).' Hence in the first verse I should now like to translate: 'I prepare my songs, like as a handy priest, wise in his mind, prepares the water mighty or efficacious at sacrifices.' Roth assigns to vidátha a too exclusively political meaning. Vidátha may be an assembly, a public meeting, a witenagemot, or an ἐκκλησία, but public meetings at that time had always a religious character, so that vidátha must often be translated by sacrifice.

Verse 2.

Note 1. It is difficult to say in passages like this, whether Dyu should be taken as heaven or as a personified deity. When the Maruts are called Rudrásya máryāḥ, the boys of Rudra (VII, 56, 1), the personification is always preserved. Hence if the same beings are called Diváh máryáh, this too, I think, should be translated the boys of Dyu (III, 54, 13; V, 59, 6), not the sons of heaven. The bulls of Dyu is a more primitive and more vigorous expression for what we should call the fertilising winds of heaven.

Note 2. Márya is a male, particularly a young male, a young man, a bridegroom (I, 115, 2; III, 33, 10; IV, 20, 5; V, 61, 4, with vira).

The Maruts have grown strong like well-grown manly youths. See also V, 59, 3.

V, 59, 5. máryáh-iva su-vrídhaḥ vavridhuḥ nárah.

The men have grown strong like well-grown stallions.

In some passages it has simply the meaning of man :

I, 91, 13. máryáh-iva své okyě.

Like a man in his own house.

Note 3. The simile, like giants, is not quite clear. Sátvan means a strong man, but it seems intended here to convey the idea of supernatural strength. Benfey translates, 'like brave warriors;' Wilson, 'like evil spirits.' Ghorávarpas is an adjective belonging to the Maruts rather than to the giants, and may mean of awful aspect, I, 19, 5, or of cruel mind; cf. I, 39, 1, note 2.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Abhog-ghánaḥ, the slayers of the demon, are the slayers of the clouds, viz. of such clouds as do not yield rain. Abhog, not nurturing, seems to be a name of the rainless cloud, like Námuḥi (na-muḥ, not delivering rain), the name of another demon, killed by Indra; see Benfey, Glossar, s. v. The cloud which sends rain is called bhugmán :

VIII, 50, 2. girlḥ ná bhugmāḥ maghávāt-su pinvate.

Like a feeding cloud he showers his gifts on the worshippers.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The ornaments of the Maruts are best described V, 54, 11 :

āmseshu vah rishtāyah pat-sú khādāyah vākshah-su rukmāḥ.

On your shoulders are the spears, on your feet rings, on your chests gold ornaments. See also I, 166, 10, &c.

Rukmā as a masc. plur. is frequently used for ornaments which are worn on the breast by the Maruts. The Maruts are actually called rukmāvākshasaḥ, gold-breasted (II, 34, 2; V, 55, 1; 57, 5). In the Āsval. Srauta-sūtra IX, 4, rukma is mentioned as an ornament to be given to the Hotri priest; it is said to be round.

Note 2. Vāpushe and subhé, as parallel expressions, occur also VI, 63, 6. Cf. Delbrück, K. Z. xviii, 96.

Note 3. Ní mimrikshur does not occur again in the Rig-veda, and Roth has suggested to read ní mimikshur instead; see ní + marg. He does not, however, give our passage under myaḥ, but under mraksh, and this seems indeed preferable. No doubt, there is ample analogy for mimikshuḥ, and the meaning would be, their spears stick firm to their shoulders. But as the MSS. give mimrikshuḥ, and as it is possible to find a meaning for this, I do not propose to alter the text. The question is only, what does mimrikshuḥ mean? Mraksh means to grind, to rub, and Roth proposes to render our passage by 'the spears rub together on our shoulders.' The objections to this translation are the preposition ní, and the active voice of the verb. I take mraksh in the sense of grinding, pounding, destroying, which is likewise appropriate to mraksha-kṛtvān (VIII, 61, 10), and tuvi-mrakshá (VI, 18, 2), and I translate, 'the spears on their shoulders pound to pieces.'

Note 4. The idea that the Maruts owe everything, if not their birth, at least their strength (svá-tavasaḥ, svá-bhānavah, sva-sṛtaḥ), to themselves is of frequent occurrence in these hymns. See verse 7, note 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. They are themselves compared to kings (I, 85, 8), and called iśáná, lords (I, 87, 4).

Note 2. Dhúni is connected with root dhvan, to dun or to din. Sāyana explains it by bending or shaking, and Benfey, too, translates it by Erschütterer. Roth gives the right meaning.

Verse 6.

Note 1. I translate sudānavaḥ by bounteous, or good givers, for, if we have to choose between the two meanings of bounteous or endowed with liquid drops or dew, the former is the more appropriate in most passages. We might, of course, admit two words, one meaning, possessed of good water, the other, bounteous; the former derived from dānu, neuter, water, or rain, the other from dānú, giving. It cannot be denied, for instance, that whenever the Maruts are called sudānavaḥ, the meaning, possessed of good rain, would be applicable: I, 40, 1; 44, 14; 64, 6; 85, 10; II, 34, 8; III, 26, 5; V, 52, 5; 53, 6; 57, 5; VIII, 20, 18; X, 78, 5; I, 15, 2; 23, 9; 39, 10. Yet, even in these passages, while sudānavaḥ in the sense of possessed of good rain is possible throughout, that of good giver would sometimes be preferable, for instance, I, 15, 2, as compared with I, 15, 3. Though sudānu, in the sense of possessed of good water, sounds as strange as would suvrīṣhī in the sense of possessed of good rain, or sumegha, possessed of good clouds, yet it is difficult to separate sudānavaḥ and gīrādānavaḥ, both epithets of the Maruts.

When the same word is applied to Indra, VII, 31, 2; X, 23, 6; to Vishnu, VIII, 25, 12; to the Asvins, I, 112, 11; to Mitra and Varuṇa, V, 62, 9; to Indra and Varuṇa, IV, 41, 8, the meaning of giver of good rain might still seem natural. But with Agni, VI, 2, 4; the Ādityas, V, 67, 4; VIII, 18, 12; 19, 34; 67, 16; the Vasus, I, 106, 1; X, 66, 12; the Viśve, X, 65, 11, such an epithet would not be appropriate, while sudānavaḥ, in the sense of bounteous givers, is applicable to all. The objection that dānu, giver, does not occur in the Veda, is of no force, for many words occur at the end of compounds only, and we shall see passages where sudānu must be translated by good giver. Nor would the accent of dānú, giver, be an obstacle, considering that the author of the Unādi-sūtras had no Vedic authority to guide him in the determination of the accent of dānú. Several words in nu have the accent on the first syllable. But one might go even a step further, and find a more appropriate meaning for sudānu by identifying it with the Zend hudānu, which means, not a good giver, but a good knower, wise. True, this root dā, to know, does not occur in the ordinary Sanskrit; and Hübschmann (Ein Zoroastrisches Lied, 1872, p. 48) tries to prove that the root dā, to know, does not exist in Zend either. But even thus we might have the derivation in Sanskrit and Zend, while the root was kept alive in Greek only (δάμναι, δαίειν). This, however, is only a conjecture; what is certain is this, that apart from the passages where sudānu is thus applied to various deities, in the sense of bounteous or wise, it also occurs as applied to the sacrificer, where it can only mean giver. This is clear from the following passages:

I, 47, 8. su-kríte su-dānave.

To him who acts well and gives well.

VII, 96, 4. gani-yántaḥ nú ágravaḥ putri-yántaḥ su-dānavaḥ, sárasvantam havāmahe.

We, being unmarried, and wishing for wives and wishing for sons, offering sacrifices, call now upon Sarasvat.

VIII, 103, 7. su-dānavaḥ deva-yávaḥ.

Offering sacrifices, and longing for the gods. Cf. X, 172, 2; 3; VI, 16, 8.

IV, 4, 7. sáḥ ít agne astu su-bhágaḥ su-dānuḥ yáḥ tvā nītyena havíṣhā yáḥ ukthaḥ píprīṣhati.

O Agni, let the liberal sacrificer be happy, who wishes to please thee by perpetual offerings and hymns. See also VI, 16, 8; 68, 5; X, 172, 2, 3.

It must be confessed that even the meaning of dānu is by no means quite clear. It is clear enough where it means demon, II, 11, 18; 12, 11; IV, 30, 7; X, 120, 6, the seven demons. In I, 32, 9; III, 30, 8, dānu, demon, is applied to the mother of Vṛtra, the dark cloud. From this dānu we have the derivative dānavá, meaning again demon. Why the demons, conquered by Indra, were called dānu, is not clear, unless they were conceived originally as dark clouds, like Dānu, the mother of Indra. Dānu might mean wise, or even powerful, for this meaning also is ascribed to dānu by the author of the Unādi-sūtras. If the latter meaning is authentic, and not only deduced ex post from the name of Dānu and Dānava, it might throw light on the Celtic dána, fortis, from which Zeuss derives the name of the Danube.

Sometimes dānu, as a neuter, is explained as Soma :

X, 43, 7. āpaḥ nā śīndhum abhī yāt sam-āksharan sómāsaḥ īndram kulyāḥ-iva hradām, vārdhanti viprāḥ mahaḥ asya sādane yāvam nā vṛishṭīḥ divyēna dānunā.

When the Somas run together to Indra, like water to the river, like channels to the lake, then the priests increase his greatness in the sanctuary, as rain the corn, by the heavenly Soma-juice, or by heavenly moisture.

In the next verse gīrādānu is explained as the sacrificer whose Soma is always alive, always ready.

In VI, 50, 13, however, dānu pāpriḥ is doubtful. As an epithet to Apām nāpāt, it may mean he who wishes for Soma, or he who grants Soma ; but in neither case is there any tangible sense, unless Soma is taken as a name of the fertilising rain or dew. Again, VIII, 25, 5, Mitra and Varuṇa are called sriprā-dānū, which may mean possessed of flowing rain. And in the next verse, sām yā dānūni yemāthuḥ may be rendered by Mitra and Varuṇa, who brought together rain.

The fact that Mitra-Varuṇau and the Asvins are called dānunaspatī does not throw much more light on the subject, and the one passage where dānu occurs as a feminine, I, 54, 7, dānuḥ asmai úparā pivate divāḥ, may be translated by rain pours forth for him, below the sky, but the translation is by no means certain.

Dānuḥitra, applied to the dawn, the water of the clouds, and the three worlds (V, 59, 8 ; 31, 6 ; I, 174, 7), means most likely bright with dew or rain ; and dānumat vásu, the treasure conquered by Indra from the clouds, can be translated by the treasure of rain. Taking all the evidence together, we can hardly doubt that dānu existed in the sense of liquid, rain, dew, and also Soma ; yet it is equally certain that dānu existed in the sense of giver, if not of gift, and that from this, in certain passages, at all events, sudānu must be derived, as a synonym of sudāvan, sudāman, &c.

Spiegel admits two words dānu in the Veda and Avesta, the one meaning enemy, the other river. Darmesteter (Ormazd, p. 220) takes dānu as a cloud, water, or river. Ludwig translates sudānu by possessed of excellent gifts.

Note 2. I thought formerly that pinvanti was here construed with two accusatives, in the sense of 'they fill the water (with) fat milk.'

Cf. VI, 63, 8. dhenúm naḥ ísham pinvatam ásakrām.

You filled our cow (with) constant food.

Similarly duh, to milk, to extract, is construed with two accusatives : Pāṇ. I, 4, 51. gām dogdhi payaḥ, he milks the cow milk.

RV. IX, 107, 5. duhánáḥ ūdhaḥ divyám mádhu priyám.

Milking the heavenly udder (and extracting from it) the precious sweet, i.e. the rain.

But I now prefer to translate pínvanti apáḥ by they pour out water, and I take páyaḥ ghrítavat as a description of the water, namely, the fat milk of the clouds. After that parenthesis, vidátheshu ábhúvaḥ is again an epithet of apáḥ, as it was in the first verse.

Note 3. The leading about of the clouds is intended, like the leading about of horses, to tame them, and make them obedient to the wishes of their riders, the Maruts. Átyaḥ vâgī is a strong horse, possibly a stallion; but this horse is here meant to signify the clouds. Thus we read :

V, 83, 6. diváḥ naḥ vrishṭīm marutaḥ raridhvam prá pinvata vrishnaḥ ásvasya dhārāḥ.

Give us, O Maruts, the rain of heaven, pour forth the streams of the stallion (the cloud).

In the original the simile is quite clear, and no one required to be told that the átyaḥ vâgī was meant for the cloud. Vâgīn by itself means a horse, as I, 66, 2; 69, 3. vâgī ná prítáḥ, like a favourite horse; I, 116, 6. paidváḥ vâgī, the horse of Pedu. But being derived from vâga, strength, vâgīn retained always something of its etymological meaning, and was therefore easily and naturally transferred to the cloud, the giver of strength, the source of food. Even without the ná, i. e. as if, the simile would have been understood in Sanskrit, while in English it is hardly intelligible without a commentary. Benfey discovers some additional idea in support of the poet's comparison: 'Ich bin kein Pferdekennner,' he says, 'aber ich glaube bemerkt zu haben, dass man Pferde, welche rasch gelaufen sind, zum Uriniren zu bewegen sucht. So lassen hier die Maruts die durch ihren Sturm rasch fortgetriebenen Wolken Wasser herab strömen.'

Note 4. Útsa, well, is meant again for cloud, though we should hardly be justified in classing it as a name of cloud, because the original meaning of útsa, spring, is really retained, as much as that of avatá, well, in I, 85, 10-11. The adjectives stanáyantam and ákshitam seem more applicable to cloud, yet they may be applied also to a spring. Yáska derives utsa from ut-sar, to go forth; ut-sad, to go out; ut-syand, to well out; or from ud, to wet. In V, 32, 2, the wells shut up by the seasons are identified with the udder of the cloud.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Svátavas means really having their own independent strength, a strength not derived from the support of others. The yet which I have added in brackets seems to have been in the poet's mind, though it is not expressed. In I, 87, 4, the Maruts are called sva-srít, going by themselves, i. e. moving freely, independently, wherever they list. See I, 64, 4, note 4.

Note 2. Mrigāh hastínah, wild animals with a hand or a trunk, must be meant for elephants, although it has been doubted whether the poets of the Veda were acquainted with that animal. Hastín is the received name for elephant in the later Sanskrit, and it is hardly applicable to any other animal. If they are said to eat the forests, this may be understood in the sense of crushing or chewing, as well as of eating.

Note 3. The chief difficulty of the last sentence has been pointed out in B. and R.'s Dictionary, s. v. āruṇi. Āruṇi does not occur again in the whole of the Rig-veda. If we take it with Sáyana as a various reading of aruṇi, then the Arunîs could only be the ruddy cows of the dawn or of Indra, with whom the Maruts, in this passage, can have no concern. Nor would it be intelligible why they should be called ārunî in this one place only. If, as suggested by B. and R., the original text had been yadā arunîshu, it would be difficult to understand how so simple a reading could have been corrupted.

Another difficulty is the verb áyugdhvam, which is not found again in the Rîg-veda together with távishî. Távishî, vigour, is construed with dhâ, to take strength, V, 32, 2. adhatthâh; V, 55, 2. dadhîdve; X, 102, 8. adhâtta; also with vas, IV, 16, 14; with pat, X, 113, 5, &c. But it is not likely that to put vigour into the cows could be expressed in Sanskrit by 'you join vigour in the cows.' If távishî must be taken in the sense which it seems always to possess, viz. vigour, it would be least objectionable to translate, 'when you joined vigour, i. e. when you assumed vigour, while being among the Ārunîs.' The Ārunîs being the cows of the dawn, ārunîshu might simply mean in the morning. Considering, however, that the Maruts are said to eat up forests, ārunî, in this place, is best taken in the sense of red flames, viz. of fire or forest-fire (dāvāgni), so that the sense would be, 'When you, Storms, assume vigour among the flames, you eat up forests, like elephants.' Benfey: 'Wenn mit den rothen eure Kraft ihr angeschirrt. Die rothen sind die Antilopen, das Vehikel der Maruts, wegen der Schnelligkeit derselben.'

Verse 8.

Note 1. As píśā does not occur again in the Rîg-veda, and as Sāyana, without attempting any etymological arguments, simply gives it as a name of deer, it seems best to adopt that sense till something better can be discovered. Supîś, too, does not occur again. In VII, 18, 2, píś is explained by gold, &c.; VII, 57, 3, the Maruts are called visvapîś.

Note 2. Kshápaḥ can only be the accusative plural, used in a temporal sense. It is so used in the expression kshápaḥ usráḥ ka, by night and by day, lit. nights and days (VII, 15, 8). In VI, 52, 15, we find kshápaḥ usráḥ in the same sense.

IV, 53, 7. kshapābhiḥ āha-bhiḥ, by night and by day. I, 44, 8, the loc. plur. vyúshṭishu, in the mornings, is followed by kshāpaḥ, the acc. plur., by night, and here the genitive kshapāḥ would certainly be preferable, in the sense of at the brightening up of the night. The acc. plur. occurs again in I, 116, 4, where tisráḥ is used as an accusative (II, 2, 2; VIII, 41, 3). Kshapāḥ, with the accent on the last, must be taken as a genitivus temporalis, like the German Nachts (I, 79, 6). In VIII, 19, 31. kshapāḥ vástushu means at the brightening up of the night, i. e. in the morning. Thus, in III, 50, 4, Indra is called kshapām vastā ganitā sūryasya, the lighter up of nights, the parent of the sun. In VIII, 26, 3, āti kshapāḥ, the genitive may be governed by āti. In IV, 16, 19, however, the accusative kshāpaḥ would be more natural, nor do I see how a genitive could here be accounted for:

dyāvaḥ ná dyumnāḥ abhi sántaḥ aryāḥ kshapāḥ madema sarādaḥ ka pūrvīḥ.

May we rejoice many years, overcoming our enemies as the days overcome the nights by splendour.

The same applies to I, 70, 4, where kshapāḥ occurs with the accent on the last syllable, whereas we expect kshāpaḥ as nom. or acc. plural. Here B. and R. in the Sanskrit Dictionary, s. v. kshap, rightly, I believe, suppose it to be a nom. plur. in spite of the accent.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Āhimanyu comes very near to Angra-mainyu; cf. Darmesteter, Ormazd, p. 94.

Note 2. Ródasī, a dual, though frequently followed by ubhé (I, 10, 8; 33, 9; 54, 2), means heaven and earth, excluding the antáriksha or the air between the two. Hence, if this is to be included, it has to be added: I, 73, 8. āpatri-vān ródasī antáriksham. Cf. V, 85, 3. We must scan ródasī. See Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 193. Should rodasī stand for rodasīm, as elsewhere? She is certainly intended by what follows in the next line.

Note 3. The comparison is not quite distinct. Amāti means originally impetus, then power, e. g. V, 69, 1:

vavṛidhānāu amátim kshatríyasya.

Increasing the might of the warrior.

But it is most frequently used of the effulgence of the sun, (III, 38, 8; V, 45, 2; 62, 5; VII, 38, 1; 2; 45, 3.) See also V, 56, 8, where the same companion of the Maruts is called Rodasī. The comparative particle ná is used twice.

Verse 10.

Note 1. See I, 38, 14, p. 95.

Note 2. In vṛśha-khâdi the meaning of khâdi is by no means clear. Sâyana evidently guesses, and proposes two meanings, weapon or food. In several passages where khâdi occurs, it seems to be an ornament rather than a weapon, yet if derived from khad, to bite, it may originally have signified some kind of weapon. Roth translates it by ring, and it is certain that these khâdis were to be seen not only on the arms and shoulders, but likewise on the feet of the Maruts. There is a famous weapon in India, the ṭakra or quoit, a ring with sharp edges, which is thrown from a great distance with fatal effect. Bollensen (Orient und Occident, vol. ii, p. 46) suggests for vṛśhan the meaning of hole in the ear, and then translates the compound as having earrings in the hole of the ear. But vṛśhan does not mean the hole in the lap of the ear, nor has vṛśhabhá that meaning either in the Veda or elsewhere. Wilson gives for vṛśhabha, not for vṛśhan, the meaning of orifice of the ear, but this is very different from the hole in the lap of the ear. Benfey suggests that the khâdis were made of the teeth of wild animals, and hence their name of biters. Vṛśhan conveys the meaning of strong, though possibly with the implied idea of rain-producing, fertilising. See p. 138. In RV. V, 87, 1, Osthoff translates sukhādāye by jucunde praeibenti, Benfey by schönverzehrendem; Muir, Sanskrit Texts, IV, 70, has the right rendering. Cf. note to I, 166, 9.

Verse 11.

Note 1. Formerly explained as 'zum Kampfe wandelnd.' See Kuhn, Zeitschrift, vol. iv, p. 19.

Note 2. WILSON: Augmenters of rain, they drive, with golden wheels, the clouds asunder; as elephants (in a herd, break down the trees in their way). They are honoured with sacrifices, visitants of the hall of offering, spontaneous assailers (of their foes), subverters of what are stable, immovable themselves, and wearers of shining weapons.

BENFEY: Weghemmnissen gleich schleudern die Fluthmehrer mit den goldnen Felgen das Gewölk empor, die nie müden Kämpfer, frei schreitend-festesstürzenden, die schweres thu'nden, lanzenstrahlenden Maruts.

Verse 12.

Note 1. Havásá, instead of what one should expect, hávasá, occurs but once more in another Marut hymn, VI, 66, 11.

Note 2. Vanín does not occur again as an epithet of the Maruts. It is explained by Sâyana as a possessive adjective derived from vana, water, and Benfey accordingly translates it by fluthversehn. This, however, is not confirmed by any authoritative passages. Vanín, unless it means connected with the forest, a tree, in which sense it occurs frequently, is only applied to the worshippers or priests in the sense of venerating or adoring (cf. venero, venustus, &c.):

III, 40, 7. abhí dyumnāni vanínah índram sakante ákshitā.

The inexhaustible treasures of the worshipper go towards Indra.

VIII, 3, 5. índram vanínah havāmahe.

We, the worshippers, call Indra.

Unless it can be proved by independent evidence that vanín means possessed of water, we must restrict vanín to its two meanings, of which the only one here applicable, though weak, is adoring. The Maruts are frequently represented as singers and priests, yet the epithets here applied to them stand much in need of some definite explanation, as the poet could hardly have meant to string a number of vague and ill-connected epithets together. If one might conjecture, svānínam instead of vanínam would be an improvement. It is a scarce word, and occurs but once more in the Veda, III, 26, 5, where it is used of the Maruts, in the sense of noisy, turbulent.

Note 3. Saskata, which I have here translated literally by to cling, is often used in the sense of following or revering (colere):

II, 1, 13. tvām rāti-sākaḥ adhvarēshu saskire.

The gods who are fond of offerings cling to thee, follow thee, at the sacrifices.

The Soma libation is said to reach the god :

II, 22, 1. sāḥ enam saskat devāḥ devām. The gods too are said to cling to their worshippers, i. e. to love and protect them : III, 16, 2 ; VII, 18, 25. The horses are said to follow their drivers : VI, 36, 3 ; VII, 90, 3, &c. It is used very much like the Greek ἀπείλω.

Note 4. Ragastūḥ may mean rousing the dust of the earth, a very appropriate epithet of the Maruts. Sâyana explains it thus, and most translators have adopted his explanation. But as the epithets here are not simply descriptive, but laudatory, it seems preferable, in this place, to retain the usual meaning of rāgas, sky. When Soma is called ragastūḥ, IX, 108, 7, Sâyana too explains it by tegasām prerakam, and IX, 48, 4, by udakasya prerakam.

Note 5. Rigishín, derived from rigisha. Rigisha is what remains of the Soma-plant after it has once been squeezed, and what is used again for the third libation. Now as the Maruts are invoked at the third libation, they were called rigishín, as drinking at their later libation the juice made of the rigisha. This, at least, is the opinion of the Indian commentators. But it is much more likely that the Maruts were invoked at the third libation, because originally they had been called rigishín by the Vedic poets, this rigishín being derived from rigisha, and rigisha from rig, to strive, to yearn, like purisha from pr̥t, manishâ from man ; (see Unâdi-sûtras, p. 273.) This rig is the same root which we have in ῥέγειν, to reach, ῥογή, emotion, and ῥογία, furious transports of worshippers. Thus the Maruts from being called rigishín, impetuous, came to be taken for drinkers of rigisha, the fermenting and overflowing Soma, and were assigned accordingly to the third libation at sacrifices.

Rigishín, as an epithet, is not confined to the Maruts; it is given to Indra, with whom it could not have had a purely ceremonial meaning (VIII, 76, 5).

Verse 13.

Note 1. Âprikkhya, literally, to be asked for, to be inquired for, to be greeted and honoured. A word of an apparently modern character, but occurring again in the Rig-veda as applied to a prince, and to the vessel containing the Soma.

Note 2. Púshyati might be joined with krátu and taken in a transitive sense, he increases his strength. But púshyati is also used as an intransitive, and means he prospers :

I, 83, 3. ásam-yatah vraté te ksheti púshyati.

Without let he dwells in thy service and prospers.

Roth reads asamyattah, against the authority of the MSS.

Verse 14.

Note 1. The difficulty of this verse arises from the uncertainty whether the epithets dhanasprítam, ukthyām, and visvákarshanim belong to súshma, strength, or to toká, kith and kin. Roth and Benfey connect them with toká. Now dhanasprít is applicable to toká, yet it never occurs joined with toká again, while it is used with súshma, VI, 19, 8. Ukthyā, literally, to be praised with hymns, is not used again as an epithet of toká, though it is quite appropriate to any gift of the gods. Lastly, visvákarshani is never applied to toká, while it is an epithet used, if not exactly of the strength, súshma, given by the gods, yet of the fame given by them :

X, 93, 10. dhátam víréshu visvá-karshani srávah.

Give to these men world-wide glory. Cf. III, 2, 15.

The next difficulty is the exact meaning of visvá-karshani, and such cognate words as visvá-krishñi, visvá-manusha. The only intelligible meaning I can suggest for these words is, known to all men; originally, belonging to, reaching to all men; as we say, world-wide or European fame, meaning by it fame extending over the whole of Europe, or over the whole world. If Indra, Agni, and the Maruts are called by these names, they mean, as far as I can judge, known, worshipped by all men. Benfey translates allverständig.

Verse 15.

NOTE 1. Riti, the first element of riti-sāham, never occurs by itself in the Rig-veda. It comes from the root ar, to hurt, which was mentioned before (p. 65) in connection with ār-van, hurting, ārus, wound, and āri, enemy. Sām-riti occurs I, 32, 6. Riti therefore means hurting, and riti-sāh means one who can stand an attack. In our passage rayīm virā-vantam riti-sāham means really wealth consisting in men who are able to withstand all onslaughts.

The word is used in a similar sense, VI, 14, 4 :

agnih apsam riti-sāham viram dadāti sāt-patim, yasya trāsanti sāvasaḥ sam-kākshi sāt-ravaḥ bhiyā.

Agni gives a strong son who is able to withstand all onslaughts, from fear of whose strength the enemies tremble when they see him.

In other passages riti-sāh is applied to Indra :

VIII, 45, 35. bibhāya hī tvā-vataḥ ugrāt abhi-prabhaṅgī-naḥ dasmāt ahām riti-sāhaḥ.

For I stand in fear of a powerful man like thee, of one who crushes his enemies, who is strong and withstands all onslaughts.

VIII, 68, 1. tuvi-kūrmīm riti-sāham indra sāvishtha sāt-pate.

Thee, O most powerful Indra, of mighty strength, able to withstand all onslaughts.

VIII, 88, 1. tām vaḥ dasmām riti-sāham—īndram gih-bhīḥ navāmahe.

We call Indra the strong, the resisting, with our songs.

NOTE 2. The last sentence finishes six of the hymns ascribed to Nodhas. It is more appropriate in a hymn addressed to single deities, such as Agni or Indra, than in a hymn to the Maruts. We must supply sardha, in order to get a collective word in the masculine singular.

Nū, as usual, should be scanned nū.

NOTE 3. Dhiyā-vasu, as an epithet of the gods, means rich in prayers, i. e. invoked by many worshippers. It does not occur frequently. Besides the hymns of Nodhas, it only occurs independently in I, 3, 10 (Śarasvatī), III, 3, 2, III, 28, 1 (Agni), these hymns being all ascribed to the family of Visvāmitra. In the last verse, which forms the burden of the hymns of Nodhas, it may have been intended to mean, he who is rich through the hymn just recited, or he who rejoices in the hymn, the god to whom it is addressed.

Nodhas, the poet, belongs, according to the Anukramanī, to the family of Gotama, and in the hymns which are ascribed to him, I, 58-64, the Gotamas are mentioned several times :

I, 60, 5. tām tvā vayām pátim agne rayínām prá samsāmaḥ matī-bhiḥ gótamāsaḥ.

We, the Gotamas, praise thee with hymns, Agni, the lord of treasures.

I, 61, 16. evā te hāri-yogana su-vṛiktī indra bráhmāṇi gótamāsaḥ akran.

Truly the Gotamas made holy prayers for thee, O Indra with brilliant horses! See also I, 63, 9.

In one passage Nodhas himself is called Gotama :

I, 62, 13. sanā-yaté gótamaḥ indra návyam átakshat bráhma hari-yóganāya, su-nīthāya naḥ savasāna nodhāḥ—prátāḥ makshú dhiyā-vasuḥ gagamyāt.

Gotama made a new song for the old (god) with brilliant horses, O Indra! May Nodhas be a good leader to us, O powerful Indra! May he who is rich in prayers (Indra) come early and soon!

I feel justified therefore in following the Anukramanī and taking Nodhas as a proper name. It occurs so again in

I, 61, 14. sadyāḥ bhuvat víryāya nodhāḥ.

May Nodhas quickly attain to power!

In I, 124, 4. nodhāḥ-iva may mean like Nodhas, but more likely it has the general meaning of poet.

MANDALA I, HYMN 85.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 6, VARGA 9-10.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. Those who glance forth like wives and yoke-fellows¹, the powerful sons of Rudra on their way, they, the Maruts, have indeed made heaven and earth to grow²; they, the strong and wild, delight in the sacrifices.

2. When grown up¹, they attained to greatness; the Rudras have established their seat in the sky. While singing their song and increasing their vigour, the sons of Prisni have clothed themselves in beauty².

3. When these sons of the cow (Prisni)¹ adorn themselves with glittering ornaments, the brilliant² ones put bright weapons on their bodies³. They drive away every adversary⁴; fatness (rain) streams along their paths;—

4. When you¹, the powerful, who shine with your spears, shaking even what is unshakable by strength,—when you, O Maruts, the manly hosts², had yoked the spotted deer, swift as thought, to your chariots;—

5. When you had yoked the spotted deer before your chariots, hurling¹ the stone (thunderbolt) in the fight, then the streams of the red-(horse)² rush forth: like a skin³ with water they water the earth.

6. May the swiftly-gliding, swift-winged horses carry you hither! Come forth with your arms¹! Sit down on the grass-pile; a wide seat has been made for you. Rejoice, O Maruts, in the sweet food².

7. Strong in themselves, they grew¹ with might; they stepped to the firmament, they made their seat wide. When Vishṇu² saved the enrapturing Soma, the Maruts sat down like birds on their beloved altar.

8. Like¹ heroes indeed thirsting for fight they rush about; like combatants eager for glory they have striven in battles. All beings are afraid of the Maruts; they are men terrible to behold, like kings.

9. When the clever Tvashṭar¹ had turned the well-made, golden, thousand-edged thunderbolt, Indra takes it to perform his manly deeds²; he slew Vṛitra, he forced out the stream of water.

10. By their power they pushed the well¹ aloft, they clove asunder the rock (cloud), however strong. Blowing forth their voice² the bounteous Maruts performed, while drunk of Soma, their glorious deeds.

11. They pushed the well (cloud) athwart this way, they poured out the spring to the thirsty Gotama. The Maruts with beautiful splendour approach him with help, they in their own ways satisfied the desire of the sage.

12. The shelters which you have for him who praises you, grant them threefold¹ to the man who gives! Extend the same to us, O Maruts! Give us, ye heroes², wealth with valiant offspring!

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Gotama. No verse of this hymn occurs in SV., VS.; verse 6=AV. XX, 13, 2; verse 7=TS. IV, 1, 11, 3; verse 12=TS. I, 5, 11, 5; TB. II, 8, 5, 6.

Verse 1.

Note 1. The phrase gánayaḥ ná sáptayaḥ is obscure. As gáni has always the meaning of wife, and sápti in the singular, dual, and plural means horse, it might be supposed that gánayaḥ could be connected with sáptayaḥ, so as to signify mares. But although gáni is coupled with patnī, I, 62, 10, in the sense of mother-wife, and though sápti is most commonly joined with some other name for horse, yet gánayaḥ sáptayaḥ never occurs, for the simple reason that it would be too elaborate and almost absurd an expression for vaḍavāḥ. We find sápti joined with vāgīn, I, 162, 1; with ráthya, II, 31, 7; átyam ná sáptim, III, 22, 1; sáptī hárī, III, 35, 2; ásvā sáptī-iva, VI, 59, 3.

We might then suppose the thought of the poet to have been this: What appears before us like race-horses, viz. the storms coursing through the sky, that is really the host of the Maruts. But then gánayaḥ remains unexplained, and it is impossible to take gánayaḥ ná sáptayaḥ as two similes, like unto horses, like unto wives.

I believe, therefore, that we must here take sápti in its original etymological sense, which would be ju-mentum, a yoked animal, a beast of draught, or rather a follower, a horse that will follow. Sápti, therefore, could never be a wild horse, but always a tamed horse, a horse that will go in harness. Cf. IX, 21, 4. hitāḥ ná sáptayaḥ ráthe, like horses put to the chariot; or in the singular, IX, 70, 10. hitāḥ ná sáptiḥ, like a harnessed horse. The root is sap, which in the Veda means to follow, to attend on, to worship. But if sápti means originally animals that will go together, it may in our passage have retained the sense of yoke-fellow (σύνυγος), and be intended as an adjective to gánayaḥ, wives. There is at least one other passage where this meaning would seem to be more appropriate, viz.

VIII, 20, 23. yûyám sakhâyaḥ saptayaḥ.

You (Maruts), friends and followers! or you, friends and comrades!

Here it is hardly possible to assign to sápti the sense of horse, for the Maruts, though likened to horses, are never thus barely invoked as saptayaḥ!

If then we translate, 'Those who glance forth like wives and yoke-fellows,' i.e. like wives of the same husband, the question still recurs how the simile holds good, and how the Maruts rushing forth together in all their beauty can be compared to wives. In answer to this we have to bear in mind that the idea of many wives belonging to one husband (sapatnī) is familiar to the Vedic poet, and that their impetuously rushing into the arms of their husbands, and appearing before them in all their beauty, are frequent images in their poetry. In such phrases as pátim ná gánayaḥ and gánayaḥ ná gárbbham, the ganis, the wives or mothers, are represented as running together after their husbands or children. This impetuous approach the poet may have wished to allude to in our passage also, but though it might have been understood at once by his hearers, it is almost impossible to convey this implied idea in any other language.

Wilson translates: 'The Maruts, who are going forth, decorate themselves like females: they are gliders (through the air), the sons of Rudra, and the doers of good works, by which they promote the welfare of earth and heaven. Heroes, who grind (the solid rocks), they delight in sacrifices.'

Ludwig translates: 'Die ganz besonders sich schmücken wie frauen, die renner, zu ihrem zuge,' &c. This is possible, yet the simile sounds somewhat forced.

Note 2. The meaning of this phrase, which occurs very frequently, was originally that the storms by driving away the dark clouds, made the earth and the sky to appear larger and wider. It afterwards takes a more general sense of increasing, strengthening, blessing.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Ukshita is here a participle of vaksh or uksh, to grow, to wax; not of uksh, to sprinkle, to anoint, to inaugurate, as explained by Sāyana. Thus it is said of the Maruts, V, 55, 3. sākām gātāh—sākām ukshitāh, born together, and grown up together.

Note 2. The same expression occurs VIII, 28, 5. saptó (iti) ādhi srīyāh dhire. See also I, 116, 17; IX, 68, 1.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Gó-mātri, like gó-gāta, a name of the Maruts, who are also called prīṣni-mātaraḥ, sīndhu-mātaraḥ.

Note 2. Subhrā is applied to the Maruts, I, 19, 5. Otherwise, no doubt, it might refer, as Ludwig remarks, to virúk-mataḥ, always supposing that virúkmat is a feminine. Whether tanúshu subhrāḥ can stand for tanúshu subhrāsu is more doubtful.

Note 3. Virúk-mataḥ must be an accusative plural. It occurs I, 127, 3, as an epithet of ógas; VI, 49, 5, as an epithet of the chariot of the Asvins. In our place, however, it must be taken as a substantive, signifying something which the Maruts wear, probably armour or weapons. This follows chiefly from X, 138, 4. sátrūn asrināt virúkmatā, Indra tore his enemies with the bright weapon. In VIII, 20, 11, where rukmā occurs as a masculine plural, ví bhrāgante rukmāsaḥ ādhi bāhúshu, their bright things shine on their arms, it seems likewise to be meant for weapons; according to Sāyana, for chains. In V, 55, 3; X, 78, 3, the Maruts are called vi-rokīnaḥ, bright like the rays of the sun or the tongues of fire.

Note 4. Observe the short syllable in the tenth syllable of this Pāda; Benfey, Védica, p. 124; Lanman, Noun-Inflection, pp. 378, 543.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The sudden transition from the third to the second person is not unusual in the Vedic hymns, the fact being that where we in a relative sentence should use the same person as that of the principal verb, the Vedic poets frequently use the third.

Note 2. Vṛsha-vrāta is untranslatable for reasons stated p. 138 seq.; it means consisting of companies of vṛśhans, in whatever sense that word be taken. Wilson in his translation mistakes ákyutā for ákyutāḥ, and vrāta for vrata. He translates the former by 'incapable of being overthrown,' the latter by 'entrusted with the duty of sending rain,' both against the authority of Sāyana. Vṛsha-vrāta occurs twice in the Rig-veda as an epithet of Soma only, IX, 62, 11; 64, 1.

Verse 5.

Note 1. If we take ádri for cloud, then ramh might have the meaning of stirring up.

V, 32, 2. tvám útsán rítú-bhiḥ badbadhânñ áramhaḥ.

Thou madest the springs to run that had been shut up by the seasons.

VIII, 19, 6. tásya ít árvantaḥ ramhayante áśávaḥ.

His horses only run quick.

But ádri often means stone, in the sense of weapon, or bolt (cf. adrivaḥ, voc., wielder of the thunderbolt), and ramhayati would then have the meaning of hurling. This is the meaning adopted by Benfey and Ludwig.

Note 2. The red may be the dark red cloud, but arushá has almost become a proper name, and its original meaning of redness is forgotten. Nay, it is possible that arushá, as applied to the same power of darkness which is best known by the names of Vṛitra, Dasyu, &c., may never have had the sense of redness, but been formed straight from ar, to hurt, from which arvan, arus, &c. (see p. 65 seq.). It would then mean simply the hurter, the enemy. It is possible also to take arushá in the sense of the red horse, the leader between the two Haris, when we ought to remember that the Maruts pour forth the streams of the stallion, RV. V, 83, 6. prá pinvata vṛśhnaḥ ásvasya dhāráḥ, and that they lead about the horse to make it rain, RV. I, 64, 6. átyam ná mihé ví nayanti vâgínam.

NOTE 3. Sāyana explains: 'They moisten the whole earth like a hide,' a hide representing a small surface which is watered without great effort. Wilson: 'They moisten the earth, like a hide, with water.' Langlois: 'Alors les gouttes d'eau, perçant comme la peau de ce (nuage) bien-faisant viennent inonder la terre.' Benfey: 'Dann stürzen reichlich aus der rothen (Gewitterwolke) Tropfen, mit Fluth wie eine Haut die Erde netzend. (Dass die Erde so durchnässt wird, wie durchgeregnetes Leder.)' If the poet had intended to compare the earth, before it is moistened by rain, to a hide, he might have had in his mind the dryness of a tanned skin, or, as Professor Benfey says, of leather. If, on the contrary, the simile refers to the streams of water, then kārma-iva, like a skin, might either be taken in the technical acceptation of the skin through which, at the preparation of the Soma, the streams (dhârâh) of that beverage are squeezed and distilled, or we may take the word in the more general sense of water-skin. In that case the comparison, though not very pointedly expressed, as it would have been by later Sanskrit poets, would still be complete. The streams of the red-(horse), i. e. of the cloud, rush forth, and they, whether the streams liberated by the Maruts, or the Maruts themselves, moisten the earth with water, like a skin, i. e. like a skin in which water is kept and from which it is poured out. The cloud itself being called a skin by Vedic poets (I, 129, 3) makes the comparison still more natural.

One other explanation might suggest itself, if the singular of kārma should be considered objectionable on account of the plural of the verb. Vedic poets speak of the skin of the earth. Thus:

X, 68, 4. bhūmyâh udnâ-iva ví tvákam bibheda.

He (Br̥haspati) having driven the cows from the cave, cut the skin of the earth, as it were, with water, i. e. saturated it with rain.

The construction, however, if we took kārma in the sense of surface, would be very irregular, and we should have to translate: They moisten the earth with water like a skin, i. e. skin-deep.

We ought to scan kārmēvōdābhīḥ vī ūdāntī bhūmā, for kārmēvā ūdābhīḥ vyūndāntī bhūmā would give an unusual cæsure.

Verse 8.

Note 1. AV. XX, 13, 2. With your arms, i. e. according to Sāyana, with armfuls of gifts. Though this expression does not occur again so baldly, we read I, 166, 10, of the Maruts, that there are many gifts in their strong arms, bhūrīni bhadraṁ nāryeshu bāhūshu; nor does bāhū, as used in the plural, as far as I am able to judge, ever convey any meaning but that of arms. The idea that the Maruts are carried along by their arms as by wings, does not rest on Vedic authority, otherwise we might join raghupátvānaḥ with bāhūbhiḥ, come forth swiftly flying on your arms! As it is, and with the accent on the antepenultimate, we must refer raghupátvānaḥ to sáptayaḥ, horses.

Note 2. The sweet food is Soma.

Verse 7.

Note 1. The initial 'a' of avardhanta must be elided, or 'té a' be pronounced as two short syllables equal to one long.

Note 2. Taitt. S. IV, 1, 11, 3. Vishṇu, whose character in the hymns of the Veda is very different from that assumed by him in later periods of Hindu religion, must here be taken as the friend and companion of Indra. Like the Maruts, he assisted Indra in his battle against Vṛitra and the conquest of the clouds. When Indra was forsaken by all the gods, Vishṇu came to his help.

IV, 18, 11. utā mātā mahishám ānu avenat amī (īti) tvā gahati putra devāḥ, ātha abravīt vṛitrām índraḥ hanishyān sákhe vishṇo (īti) vi-tarám ví kramasva.

The mother also called after the bull, these gods forsake thee, O son; then, when going to kill Vṛitra, Indra said, Friend, Vishṇu, step forward!

This stepping of Vishṇu is emblematic of the rising, the culminating, and setting of the sun; and in VIII, 12, 27, Vishṇu is said to perform it through the power of Indra. In VI, 20, 2, Indra is said to have killed Vṛitra, assisted by Vishṇu (vishṇunā saśānāḥ). Vishṇu is therefore invoked together with Indra, VI, 69, 8; VII, 99; with the Maruts, V, 87; VII, 36, 9. In VII, 93, 8, Indra, Vishṇu, and the Maruts are called upon together. Nay, māruta, belonging to the Maruts, becomes actually an epithet of Vishṇu, V, 46, 2. māruta utā vishṇo (īti); and in I, 156, 4. mārutasya vedhāsaḥ has been pointed out by Roth as an appellation of Vishṇu. The mention of Vishṇu in our hymn is therefore by no means exceptional, but the whole purport of this verse is nevertheless very doubtful, chiefly owing to the fact that several of the words occurring in it lend themselves to different interpretations.

The translations of Wilson, Benfey, and others have not rendered the sense which the poet intends to describe at all clear. Wilson says: 'May they for whom Vishṇu defends (the sacrifice), that bestows all desires and confers delight, come (quickly) like birds, and sit down upon the pleasant and sacred grass.' Benfey: 'Wenn Vishṇu schützt den rauschtriefenden tropfenden (Soma), sitzen wie Vögel sie auf der geliebten Streu.' Langlois: 'Quand Vichnou vient prendre sa part de nos enivrantes libations, eux, comme des oiseaux, arrivent aussi sur le couda qui leur est cher.' Ludwig: 'Als Vishṇu half dem zum rauschtrank eilenden stiere, setzten sie sich wie vögel aufs liebe barhis.'

Whence all these varieties? First, because āvat may mean, he defended or protected, but likewise, it is supposed, he descried, became aware. Secondly, because vṛtshan is one of the most vague and hence most difficult words in the Veda, and may mean Indra, Soma, or the cloud: (see the note on Vṛtshan, p. 138.) Thirdly, because the adjective belonging to vṛtshan, which generally helps us to determine which vṛtshan is meant, is here itself of doubtful import, and certainly applicable to Indra as well as to Soma and the Asvins, possibly even to the cloud. Mada-kyút is readily explained by the commentators as bringing down pride, a meaning which the word might well have in modern Sanskrit, but which it clearly has not in the Veda. Even where the thunderbolt of Indra is called mada-kyút, and where the meaning of 'bringing down pride' would seem most appropriate, we ought to translate 'wildly rushing down.'

VIII, 96, 5. ā yát vágram bāhvóh indra dhátse mada-kyútam áhaye hántavá ūm (íti).

When thou tookest the wildly rushing thunderbolt in thy arms in order to slay Ahi.

When applied to the gods, the meaning of mada-kyút is by no means certain. It might mean rushing about fiercely, reeling with delight, this delight being produced by the Soma, but it may also mean sending down delight, i. e. rain or Soma. The root kyu is particularly applicable to the sending down of rain; cf. Taitt. Samh. II, 4, 9, 2; 10, 3; III, 3, 4, 1; and Indra and his horses, to whom this epithet is chiefly applied, are frequently asked to send down rain. However, mada-kyút is also applied to real horses (I, 126, 4) where givers of rain would be an inappropriate epithet. I should therefore translate mada-kyút, when applied to Indra, to his horses, to the Asvins, or to horses in general by furiously or wildly moving about, as if 'made or madena kyavate,' he moves in a state of delight, or in a state of intoxication, such as was not incompatible with the character of the ancient gods. Here again the difficulty of rendering Vedic thought in English, or any other modern language, becomes apparent, for we have no poetical word to express a high state of mental excitement produced by drinking the intoxicating juice of the Soma or other plants, which has not something opprobrious mixed up with it, while in ancient times that state of excitement was celebrated as a blessing of the gods, as not unworthy of the gods themselves, nay, as a state in which both the warrior and the poet would perform their highest achievements. The German Rausch is the nearest approach to the Sanskrit mada.

VIII, 1, 21. vśveshām tarutāram mada-kyútam máde hí sma dádāti nah.

Indra, the conqueror of all, who rushes about in rapture, for in rapture he bestows gifts upon us. Cf. I, 51, 2.

The horses of Indra are called mada-kyút, I, 81, 3; VIII, 33, 18; 34, 9. Ordinary horses, I, 126, 4.

It is more surprising to see this epithet applied to the Asvins, who are generally represented as moving about with exemplary steadiness. However we read:

VIII, 22, 16. mánaḥ-gavasā vrishanā mada-kyútā.

Ye two Asvins, quick as thought, powerful, wildly moving; or, as Sâyana proposes, liberal givers, humblers of your enemies. See also VIII, 35, 19.

Most frequently mada-kyút is applied to Soma, X, 30, 9; IX, 32, 1; 53, 4; 79, 2; 108, 11; where particularly the last passage deserves attention, in which Soma is called mada-kyútam saḥsra-dhâram vrishabhâm.

Lastly, even the wealth itself which the Maruts are asked to send down from heaven, most likely rain, is called, VIII, 7, 13, rayīm mada-kyútam puru-kshúm visvá-dhâyasam.

In all these passages we must translate mada-kyút by bringing delight, showering down delight.

We have thus arrived at the conclusion that vrishanam mada-kyútam, as used in our passage I, 85, 7, might be meant either for Indra or for Soma. If the Asvins can be called vrishanau mada-kyútā, the same expression would be even more applicable to Indra. On the other hand, if Soma is called vrishabhāḥ mada-kyút, the same Soma may legitimately be called vrishā mada-kyút. In deciding whether Indra or Soma be meant, we must now have recourse to other hymns, in which the relations of the Maruts with Vishnu, Soma, and Indra are alluded to.

If Indra were intended, and if the first words meant 'When Vishnu perceived the approach of Indra,' we should expect, not that the Maruts sat down on the sacrificial pile, but that they rushed to the battle. The idea that the Maruts come to the sacrifice, like birds, is common enough:

VIII, 20, 10. vrishanasvéna marutaḥ vrishā-psunā ráthena vrishā-nābhinā, ā syenāsaḥ ná pakshínāḥ vrithā naraḥ havyā naḥ vítāye gata.

Come ye Maruts together, to eat our offerings, on your strong-horsed, strong-shaped, strong-naved chariot, like winged hawks!

But when the Maruts thus come to a sacrifice it is to participate in it, and particularly in the Soma that is offered by the sacrificer. This Soma, it is said in other hymns, was prepared by Vishṇu for Indra (II, 22, 1), and Vishṇu is said to have brought the Soma for Indra (X, 113, 2). If we keep these and similar passages in mind, and consider that in the preceding verse the Maruts have been invited to sit down on the sacrificial pile and to rejoice in the sweet food, we shall see that the same train of thought is carried on in our verse, the only new idea being that the saving or, possibly, the descrying of the Soma is ascribed to Vishṇu. See, however, Bergaigne, Journ. Asiat. 1884, p. 472.

Verse 8.

Note 1. On na and iva together, see Bollensen, Orient und Occident, II, 470.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Tváshṭar, the workman of the gods, frequently also the fashioner and creator.

Note 2. Nári, the loc. sing. of nri, but, if so, with a wrong accent, occurs only in this phrase as used here, and as repeated in VIII, 96, 19. nári ápāmsi kártā sáh vṛitra-hā. Its meaning is not clear. It can hardly mean 'on man,' without some more definite application. If nri could be used as a name of Vṛitra or any other enemy, it would mean, to do his deeds against the man, on the enemy. Nri, however, is ordinarily an honorific term, chiefly applied to Indra, IV, 25, 4. náre náryāya nri-tamáya nṛinām, and hence its application to Vṛitra would be objectionable. Sāyana explains it in the sense of battle. I believe that nári stands for náryā, the acc. plur. neut. of nárya, manly, and the frequent epithet of ápas, and I have translated accordingly. Indra is called nárya-apas, VIII, 93, 1. See also Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xxv, p. 601.

Verse 10.

Note 1. Avatá, a well, here meant for cloud, like útsa, I, 64, 6.

Note 2. Dhámantaḥ vānám is translated by Sâyana as playing on the lyre, by Benfey as blowing the flute. Such a rendering, particularly the latter, would be very appropriate, but there is no authority for vānā meaning either lyre or flute in the Veda. Vānā occurs five times only. In one passage, VIII, 20, 8. góbhiḥ vānāḥ agyate, it means arrow; the arrow is sent forth from the bow-strings. The same meaning seems applicable to IX, 50, 1. vānāsya kodaya pavīm. In another passage, IX, 97, 8. prá vadanti vānám, they send forth their voice, is applied to the Maruts, as in our passage; in IV, 24, 9, the sense is doubtful, but here too vānā clearly does not mean a musical instrument. See III, 30, 10. Spiegel compares the Huzvareh and Armenian vāng (Pers. bānig), voice. M. Senart (Journal Asiatique, 1874, p. 281) is in favour of taking vāna for flute.

Verse 12.

Note 1. In the Taitt. S. I, 5, 11, we have sasamānāya, and in the Taitt. Br. II, 8, 5, 6, samsamānāya, but Sâyana explains sasamānāya, samsanam kurvate. He explains tridhâtûni by asanam, pānam, khâdanam.

Vrīshan.

Note 2. In vrīshan we have one of those words which it is almost impossible to translate accurately. It occurs over and over again in the Vedic hymns, and if we once know the various ideas which it either expresses or implies, we have little difficulty in understanding its import in a vague and general way, though we look in vain for corresponding terms in any modern language. In the Veda, and in ancient languages generally, one and the same word is frequently made to do service for many. Words retain their general meaning, though at the same time they are evidently used with a definite purpose. This is not only a peculiar phase of language, but a peculiar phase of thought, and as to us this phase has become strange and unreal, it is very difficult to transport ourselves back into it, still more to translate the pregnant terms of the Vedic poets into the definite languages which we have to use. Let us imagine a state of thought and speech in which virtus still meant manliness, though it might also be applied to the virtue of a woman ; or let us try to speak and think a language which expressed the bright and the divine, the brilliant and the beautiful, the straight and the right, the bull and the hero, the shepherd and the king by the same terms, and we shall see how difficult it would be to translate such terms without losing either the key-note that was still sounding, or the harmonics which were set vibrating by it in the minds of the poets and their listeners.

I. Vṛiśhan, male.

Vṛiśhan, being derived from a root vrish, spargere, meant no doubt originally the male, whether applied to animals or men. In this sense vrīśhan occurs frequently in the Veda, either as determining the sex of the animal which is mentioned, or as standing by itself and meaning the male. In either case, however, it implies the idea of strength and eminence, which we lose whether we translate it by man or male.

Thus ásva is horse, but VII, 69, 1, we read :

ā vām ráthak—vrīśha-bhiḥ yātu ásvaiḥ.

May your chariot come near with powerful horses, i. e. with stallions.

The Háris, the horses of Indra, are frequently called vrīshanā :

I, 177, 1. yuktvā hárī (iti) vrīshanā.

Having yoked the bay stallions.

Vṛishabhá, though itself originally meaning the male animal, had become fixed as the name of the bull, and in this process it had lost so much of its etymological import that the Vedic poet did not hesitate to define vrīshabhá itself by the addition of vrīśhan. Thus we find :

VIII, 93, 7. sák vrīshá vrīshabhák bhuvat.

May he (Indra) be a strong bull.

I, 54, 2. vrīshá vrīsha-tvā vrīshabhák.

Indra by his strength a strong bull ; but, literally, Indra by his manliness a male bull.

Even vrīshabhá loses again its definite meaning ; and as bull in bull-calf means simply male, or in bull-trout, large, so vrishabhá is added to átya, horse, to convey the meaning of large or powerful :

I, 177, 2. yé te vrīṣhanāḥ vrishabhāsaḥ indra—átyāḥ.

Thy strong and powerful horses ; literally, thy male bull-horses.

When vrīṣhan and vrishabhá are used as adjectives, for instance with súshma, strength, they hardly differ in meaning :

VI, 19, 8. ā naḥ bhara vrīṣhanam súshmam indra.

Bring us thy manly strength, O Indra.

And in the next verse :

VI, 19, 9. ā te súshmaḥ vrishabhāḥ etu.

May thy manly strength come near.

Vámsaga, too, which is clearly the name for bull, is defined by vrīṣhan, I, 7, 8 :

vrīṣhā yúthā-iva vámsagaḥ.

As the strong bull scares the herds.

The same applies to varāha, which, though by itself meaning boar, is determined again by vrīṣhan :

X, 67, 7. vrīṣha-bhiḥ varāhaiḥ.

With strong boars.

In III, 2, 11, we read :

vrīṣhā—nānadat ná simhāḥ.

Like a roaring lion.

If used by itself, vrīṣhan, at least in the Rig-veda, can hardly be said to be the name of any special animal, though in later Sanskrit it may mean bull or horse. Thus if we read, X, 43, 8, vrīṣhā ná kruddhāḥ, we can only translate like an angry male, though, no doubt, like a wild bull, would seem more appropriate.

I, 186, 5. yéna nāpātam apām guṇāma manāḥ-gúvaḥ vrīṣhanāḥ yám váhanti.

That we may excite the son of the water (Agni), whom the males, quick as thought, carry along.

Here the males are no doubt the horses or stallions of Agni. But, though this follows from the context, it would be wrong to say that vrīṣhan by itself means horse.

If used by itself, vr̥shan most frequently means man, and chiefly in his sexual character. Thus :

I, 140, 6. vr̥shā-iva pátñih abhī eti rōruvat.

Agni comes roaring like a husband to his wives.

I, 179, 1. ápi ūm (liti) nú pátñih vr̥shanah gagamyuh.

Will the husbands now come to their wives?

II, 16, 8. sakrīt sú te sumatī-bhih—sám pátñibhih ná vr̥shanah nasímahi.

May we for once cling firmly to thy blessings, as husbands cling to their wives.

V, 47, 6. upa-prakshé vr̥shanah módamânâh diváh pathā vadhvāh yanti ákkha.

The exulting men come for the embrace on the path of heaven towards their wives.

In one or two passages vr̥shan would seem to have a still more definite meaning, particularly in the formula sūrah dr̥śike vr̥shanah ka paúmsye, which occurs IV, 41, 6; X, 92, 7. See also I, 179, 1.

In all the passages which we have hitherto examined vr̥shan clearly retained its etymological meaning, though even then it was not always possible to translate it by male.

The same meaning has been retained in other languages in which this word can be traced. Thus, in Zend, arshan (the later gushan) is used to express the sex of animals in such expressions as aspahé arshnô, gen. a male horse; varāzahe arshnô, gen. a male boar; géus arshnô, gen. a male ox; but likewise in the sense of man or hero, as arsha husrava, the hero Husrava. In Greek we find ἀρσην and ἀρρήν used in the same way to distinguish the sex of animals, as ἀρσενες ἵπποι, βούν ἀρσενα. In Latin the same word may be recognised in the proper name Varro, and in vâro and bâro.

We now come to another class of passages in which vr̥shan is clearly intended to express more than merely the masculine gender. In some of them the etymological meaning of spargere, to pour forth, seems to come out again, and it is well known that Indian commentators are very fond of explaining vr̥shan by giver of rain, giver of good gifts, bounteous. The first of these meanings may indeed be admitted in certain passages, but in others it is more than doubtful.

II. Vṛśhan, fertilising.

I, 181, 8. vṛśhā vām meghāḥ may be translated, your raining cloud.

I, 129, 3. dasmāḥ hī sma vṛśhanam pīnvasi tvākam.

Thou art strong, thou fillest the rainy skin, i. e. the cloud.

See also IV, 22, 6; and possibly V, 83, 6.

It may be that, when applied to Soma too, vṛśhan retained something of its etymological meaning, that it meant gushing forth, poured out, though in many places it is impossible to render vṛśhan, as applied to Soma, by anything but strong. All we can admit is that vṛśhan, if translated by strong, means also strengthening and invigorating, an idea not entirely absent even in our expression, a strong drink.

III. Vṛśhan, strong.

I, 80, 2. sāḥ tvā amadat vṛśhā madaḥ, sómah—sutāḥ.

This strong draught inspirited thee, the poured out Soma-juice.

I, 91, 2. tvām vṛśhā vṛsha-tvébhiḥ.

Thou, Soma, art strong by strength.

I, 175, 1. vṛśhā te vṛśhne induh vāgī sahasra-sātamaḥ.

For thee, the strong one, there is strong drink, powerful, omnipotent.

In the ninth Mandala, specially dedicated to the praises of Soma, the inspiriting beverage of gods and men, the repetition of vṛśhan, as applied to the juice and to the god who drinks it, is constant. Indo vṛśhā or vṛśhā indo are incessant invocations, and become at last perfectly meaningless.

IV. Vṛśhan, epitheton ornans.

There can be no doubt, in fact, that already in the hymns of the Veda, vṛśhan had dwindled away to a mere epitheton ornans, and that in order to understand it correctly, we must, as much as possible, forget its etymological colouring, and render it by hero or strong. Indra, Agni, the Asvins, Vishnu, the R̥ibhus (IV, 35, 6), all are vr̥tshan, which means no longer male, but manly, strong.

In the following passages vr̥tshan is thus applied to Indra :

I, 54, 2. yák dhr̥ishnúnā sávasā ródasí (íti) ubhé (íti) vr̥tshā vr̥tsha-tvā vr̥tshabhāh ni-r̥iṅgáte.

(Praise Indra) who by his daring strength conquers both heaven and earth, a bull, strong in strength.

I, 100, 1. sák yák vr̥tshā vr̥tshnye bhih sám-okāh mahāh divāh pr̥ithivyāh ka sam-r̥āt satínā-satvá hávyah bháreshu marútvān nah bhavatu índrah ūtī.

He who is strong, wedded to strength, who is the king of the great sky and the earth, of mighty might, to be invoked in battles,—may Indra with the Maruts come to our help!

I, 16, 1. ā tvā vahantu hárayah vr̥tshanam sóma-pítaye, índra tvā sūra-kakshasah.

May the bays bring thee hither, the strong one, to the Soma-draught, may the sunny-eyed horses (bring) thee, O Indra!

IV, 16, 20. evā ít índrāya vr̥tshabhāya vr̥tshne bráhma akarma bhr̥t̥gavah ná rátham.

Thus we have made a hymn for Indra, the strong bull, as the Bhr̥igus make a chariot.

X, 153, 2. tvām vr̥tshan vr̥tshā ít asi.

Thou, O hero, art indeed a hero; and not, Thou, O male, art indeed a male; still less, Thou, O bull, art indeed a bull.

I, 101, 1. avasyávaḥ vr̥tshanam vágra-dakshinam marút-vantam sakhyāya havāmahe.

Longing for help we call as our friend the hero who wields the thunderbolt, who is accompanied by the Maruts.

VIII, 6, 14. ní sushne indra dharmasīm vágram gaghantha dásyavi, vr̥tshā hí ugra sr̥invishé.

Thou, O Indra, hast struck the strong thunderbolt against Sushna, the fiend; for, terrible one, thou art called hero!

VIII, 6, 40. vavridhánah úpa dyávi vr̥tshā vagrī aroravit vr̥itra-hā soma-pātamah.

Growing up by day, the hero with the thunderbolt has roared, the Vṛitra-killer, the great Soma-drinker.

V, 35, 4. vṛīshā hí ási rādhase gagñishé vṛīshni te sávak.

Thou (Indra) art a hero, thou wast born to be bounteous ; in thee, the hero, there is might.

V. Vārshishtā, strongest, best, oldest.

It is curious to watch the last stage of the meaning of vṛīshan in the comparative and superlative vārshiyas and vārshishtā. In the Veda, vārshishtā still means excellent, but in later Sanskrit it is considered as the superlative of vṛiddha, old, so that we see vṛīshan, from meaning originally manly, vigorous, young, assuming in the end the meaning of old. (M. M., Sanskrit Grammar, § 252.)

Yet even thus, when vṛīshan means simply strong or hero, its sexual sense is not always forgotten, and it breaks out, for instance, in such passages as,

I, 32, 7. vṛīshnah vādhriḥ prati-mānam búbhūshan puru-trā vṛitrāḥ asayat ví-astak.

Vṛitra, the eunuch, trying to be like unto a man (like unto Indra), was lying, broken to many pieces.

The next passages show vṛīshan as applied to Agni :

III, 27, 15. vṛīshanam tvā vayám vṛīshan vṛīshanah sám idhimahi.

O, strong one, let us the strong ones kindle thee, the strong !

V, 1, 12. ávoḥāma kaváye médhyāya vātak vandāru vṛīshabhāya vṛīshne.

We have spoken an adoring speech for the worshipful poet, for the strong bull (Agni).

Vishnu is called vṛīshan, I, 154, 3 :

prá víshnave sūshám etu mánma giri-kshíte uru-gâyāya vṛīshne.

May this hymn go forth to Vishnu, he who dwells in the mountain (cloud), who strides wide, the hero !

Rudra is called vṛīshan :

II, 34, 2. rudráḥ yát vak marutak rukma-vakshasak vṛīshā ágani prīsnýak sukré ūdhani.

When Rudra, the strong man, begat you, O Maruts with bright ornaments on your chests, in the bright lap of Prisni.

That the Maruts, the sons of Rudra, are called vr̥ṣhan, we have seen before, and shall see frequently again (I, 165, 1; II, 33, 13; VII, 56, 20; 21; 58, 6). The whole company of the Maruts is called vr̥ṣhā gaṇāḥ, the strong or manly host, i. e. the host of the Maruts, without any further qualification.

VI. Vr̥ṣhan, name of various deities.

Here lies, indeed, the chief difficulty which is raised by the common use of vr̥ṣhan in the Veda, that when it occurs by itself, it often remains doubtful who is meant by it, Indra, or Soma, or the Maruts, or some other deity. We shall examine a few of these passages, and first some where vr̥ṣhan refers to Indra :

IV, 30, 10. āpa ushāḥ ānasaḥ sarat sám-pishāt āha mibhyúshī, ní yāt sīm sīmáthat vr̥ṣhā.

Ushas went away from her broken chariot, fearing lest the hero should do her violence.

Here vr̥ṣhan is clearly meant for Indra, who, as we learn from the preceding verse, was trying to conquer Ushas, as Apollo did Daphne; and it should be observed that the word itself, by which Indra is here designated, is particularly appropriate to the circumstances.

I, 103, 6. bhūri-karmane vr̥ṣhabhāya vr̥ṣhne satyá-sushmāya sunavāma sómam, yáḥ ā-dr̥ṣtya paripanthī-iva sūrah áyagvanah vi-bhāgan éti védah.

Let us pour out the Soma for the strong bull, the performer of many exploits, whose strength is true, the hero who, watching like a footpad, comes to us dividing the wealth of the infidel.

Here it is clear again from the context that Indra only can be meant.

But in other passages this is more doubtful :

III, 61, 7. ritásya budhné ushásām ishanyán vr̥ṣhā mahī (īti) ródasī (īti) ā vivesa.

The hero in the depth of the heaven, yearning for the dawns, has entered the great sky and the earth.

The hero who yearns for the dawns, is generally Indra; here, however, considering that Agni is mentioned in the preceding verse, it is more likely that this god, as the light of the morning, may have been meant by the poet. That Agni, too, may be called vr̥ṣhan, without any other epithet to show that he is meant rather than any other god, is clear from such passages as,

VI, 3, 7. vr̥ṣhā ruksháh óshadhīshu nūnot.

He the wild hero shouted among the plants.

In VII, 60, 9, vr̥ṣhanau, the dual, is meant for Mitra and Varuna; in the next verse, vr̥ṣhanah, the plural, must mean the same gods and their companions.

That Soma is called simply vr̥ṣhan, not only in the ninth Mandala, but elsewhere, too, we see from such passages as,

III, 43, 7. īndra p̥ība vr̥ṣha-dhūtasya vr̥ṣnah (ā yām te syenáh usatē gabhāra), yāsya mādē kyaváyasi prā krishāh yāsya mādē āpa gotrā vavārtha.

Indra drink of the male (the strong Soma), bruised by the males (the heavy stones), inspirited by whom thou makest the people fall down, inspirited by whom thou hast opened the stables.

Here Sāyana, too, sees rightly that 'the male bruised by the males' is the Soma-plant, which, in order to yield the intoxicating juice, has to be bruised by stones, which stones are again likened to two males. But unless the words, enclosed in brackets, had stood in the text, words which clearly point to Soma, I doubt whether Sāyana would have so readily admitted the definite meaning of vr̥ṣhan as Soma.

I, 109, 3. mā khedma rasmīn iti nādhmānāh pitrīnām saktīh anu-yākkhamānāh, indrāgni-bhyām kām vr̥ṣhanah madanti tā hī ādrī (īti) dhishānāyāh upā-sthe.

We pray, let us not break the cords (which, by means of the sacrifices offered by each generation of our forefathers, unite us with the gods); we strive after the powers of our fathers. The Somas rejoice for Indra and Agni; for the two stones are in the lap of the vessel.

First, as to the construction, the fact that participles are thus used as finite verbs, and particularly when the subject changes in the next sentence, is proved by other passages, such as II, 11, 4. The sense is that the new generation does not break the sacrificial succession, but offers Soma, like their fathers. The Soma-plants are ready, and, when pressed by two stones, their juice flows into the Soma-vessel. There may be a double entendre in dhishānāyāh upā-sthe, which Sanskrit scholars will easily perceive.

When vrīshan is thus used by itself, we must be chiefly guided by the adjectives or other indications before we determine on the most plausible translation. Thus we read :

I, 55, 4. sáh ít váne namasyú-bhih vakasyate káru gáneshu pra-bruvānāh indriyám, vrīshā khānduh bhavati haryatáh vrīshā kshémēna dhénām maghá-vā yát ínvati.

In the first verse the subject may be Indra or Soma : 'He alone is praised by worshippers in the forest (or in the wooden vessel), he who shows forth among men his fair power.' But who is meant to be the subject of the next verse? Even Sāyana is doubtful. He translates first : 'The bounteous excites the man who wishes to sacrifice; when the sacrificer, the rich, by the protection of Indra, stirs up his voice.' But he allows an optional translation for the last sentences : 'when the powerful male, Indra, by his enduring mind reaches the praise offered by the sacrificer.'

According to these suggestions, WILSON translated : He (Indra) is the granter of their wishes (to those who solicit him); he is the encourager of those who desire to worship (him), when the wealthy offerer of oblations, enjoying his protection, recites his praise.

BENFEY : The bull becomes friendly, the bull becomes desirable, when the sacrificer kindly advances praise.

LANGLOIS : When the noble Maghavan receives the homage of our hymns, his heart is flattered, and he responds to the wishes of his servant by his gifts.

As far as I know, the adjective khāndu does not occur again, and can therefore give us no hint. But haryatá, which is applied to vrīshan in our verse, is the standing epithet of Soma. It means delicious, and occurs very frequently in the ninth Mandala. It is likewise applied to Agni, Pūshan, the Haris, the thunderbolt, but wherever it occurs our first thought is of Soma. Thus, without quoting from the Soma-Mandala, we read, X, 96, 1, haryatám mādām, the delicious draught, i. e. Soma.

X, 96, 9. pítvā mādasya haryatāsyā āndhasaḥ, means having drunk of the draught of the delicious Soma.

VIII, 72, 18. padām haryatāsyā ni-dhānyām, means the place where the delicious Soma resides.

III, 44, 1. haryatāḥ sōmaḥ.

Delicious Soma.

II, 21, 1. bhara īndrāya sōmam yagatāya haryatām.

Bring delicious Soma for the holy Indra.

I, 130, 2. mādāya haryatāya te tuvíḥ-tamāya dhāyase.

That thou mayest drink the delicious and most powerful draught, i. e. the Soma.

If, then, we know that vr̥ṣhan by itself is used in the sense of Soma, haryatā vr̥ṣhan can hardly be anything else. Vaḥasyate also is peculiar to Soma in the sense of murmuring, or as it were talking, and never occurs as a passive. I therefore should prefer to assign the whole verse to Soma, and translate: He indeed, when in the wooden vessel, talks with his worshippers, proclaiming his fair power among men; the strong Soma is pleasing, the strong Soma is delicious, when the sacrificer safely brings the cow, i. e. the milk to be mixed with the Soma.

That Indra was thirsting for Soma had been said in the second verse, and he is again called the Soma-drinker in the seventh verse. A verse dedicated to Soma therefore seems to come in quite naturally, though the Anukramanī does not sanction it.

That the Maruts are called vr̥ṣhan, without further explanations, will appear from the following passages:

I, 85, 12. rayīm naḥ dhatta vr̥ṣhanah su-vīram.

Give us wealth, ye heroes, consisting of good offspring.

VIII, 96, 14. śhyāmi vaḥ vr̥ṣhanah yúdhyaata āgaú.

I wish for you, heroes (Maruts), fight in the race!

In all the passages which we have hitherto examined, vr̥ṣhan was always applied to living beings, whether animals, men, or gods. But as, in Greek, ἀσπην means at last simply strong, and is applied, for instance, to the crash of the sea, κρύπος ὄρησιν πόντου, so in the Veda vr̥ṣhan is applied to the roaring of the storms and similar objects.

V, 87, 5. svanáḥ vr̥ṣhā.

Your powerful sound (O Maruts).

X, 47, 1. gagrībhṃá te dákshinam indra hástam vasu-yávaḥ vasu-pate vásūnām, vidmá hí tvā gó-patim sūra gónām asmábhyam kītrám vr̥ṣhanam rayīm dāḥ.

We have taken thy right hand, O Indra, wishing for treasures, treasurer of treasures, for we know thee, O hero, to be the lord of cattle; give us bright and strong wealth.

Should kītrá here refer to treasures, and vr̥ṣhan to cattle?

X, 89, 9. nī amítreshu vadhám indra túmram vr̥ṣhan vr̥ṣhānam arushám sīsihi.

Whet, O hero, the heavy strong red weapon against the enemies.

The long ā in vr̥ṣhānam is certainly startling, but it occurs once more, IX, 34, 3, where there can be no doubt that it is the accusative of vr̥ṣhan. Professor Roth takes vr̥ṣhan here in the sense of bull (s. v. tumra), but he does not translate the whole passage.

III, 29, 9. krinóta dhūmám vr̥ṣhanam sakhāyaḥ.

Make a mighty smoke, O friends!

Strength itself is called vr̥ṣhan, if I am right in translating the phrase vr̥ṣhanam sūshmam by manly strength. It occurs, IV, 24, 7. tásmin dadhat vr̥ṣhanam sūshmam indraḥ.

Indra may give to him manly strength.

VI, 19, 8. ā naḥ bhara vr̥ṣhanam sūshmam indra.

Bring to us, O Indra, manly strength.

VII, 24, 4. asmé (īti) dádhat vr̥ṣhanam sūshmam indra.

Giving to us, O Indra, manly strength.

See also VI, 19, 9, sūshmaḥ vr̥ṣhabháḥ, used in the same sense.

VII. Vr̥ṣhan, general and empty term of praise.

This constant play on the word vr̥ṣhan, which we have observed in the passages hitherto examined, and which give by no means a full idea of the real frequency of its occurrence in the Veda, has evidently had its influence on the Vedic Rīshis, who occasionally seem to delight in the most silly and unmeaning repetitions of this word, and its compounds and derivatives. Here no language can supply any adequate translation ; for though we may translate words which express thoughts, it is useless to attempt to render mere idle play with words. I shall give a few instances :

I, 177, 3. ā tishtha rátham vrīshanam vrīshā te sūtāḥ sōmah pári-siktā mádhūni, yuktvá vrīsha-bhyām vrīshabha kshitínām hári-bhyām yāhi pra-vátā úpa madrik.

Mount the strong car, the strong Soma is poured out for thee, sweets are sprinkled round ; come down towards us, thou bull of men, with the strong bays, having yoked them.

But this is nothing yet compared to other passages, when the poet cannot get enough of vrīshan and vrīshabhā.

II, 16, 6. vrīshā te vágrah utá te vrīshā ráthah vrīshanā hári (iti) vrīshabhāni āyudhá, vrīshnah mādasya vrīshabha tvám isishe índra sómasya vrīshabhásya trīpmuhi.

Thy thunderbolt is strong, and thy car is strong, strong are the bays, the weapons are powerful, thou, bull, art lord of the strong draught, Indra rejoice in the powerful Soma !

V, 36, 5. vrīshā tvā vrīshanam vardhatu dyaúh vrīshā vrīsha-bhyām vahase hári-bhyām, sáh nah vrīshā vrīsha-rathah su-sipra vrīsha-krato (iti) vrīshā vagrin bhāre dhāh.

May the strong sky increase thee, the strong ; a strong one thou art, carried by two strong bays ; do thou who art strong, with a strong car, O thou of strong night, strong holder of the thunderbolt, keep us in battle !

V, 40, 2-3. vrīshā grāvā vrīshā mādah vrīshā sōmah ayám sūtāḥ, vrīshan indra vrīsha-bhih vritrahan-tama, vrīshā tvā vrīshanam huve.

The stone is strong, the draught is strong, this Soma that has been poured out is strong, O thou strong Indra, who killest Vritra with the strong ones (the Maruts), I, the strong, call thee, the strong.

VIII, 13, 31-33. vrīshā ayám indra te ráthah utó (iti) te vr̥ṣhanā hārī (īti), vr̥ṣhā tvām sata-krato (īti) vr̥ṣhā hāvah. vr̥ṣhā grāvā vr̥ṣhā mādah vr̥ṣhā sōmah ayām sutāh, vr̥ṣhā yagnāh yām īnvasi vr̥ṣhā hāvah. vr̥ṣhā tvā vr̥ṣhanam huve vāgrin kītrābhih ūtī-bhih, vavānthā hī prāti-stutim vr̥ṣhā hāvah.

This thy car is strong, O Indra, and thy bays are strong; thou art strong, O omnipotent, our call is strong. The stone is strong, the draught is strong, the Soma is strong, which is here poured out; the sacrifice which thou orderest is strong, our call is strong. I, the strong, call thee, the strong, thou holder of the thunderbolt, with manifold blessings; for thou hast desired our praise; our call is strong.

There are other passages of the same kind, but they are too tedious to be here repeated. The commentator, throughout, gives to each vr̥ṣhan its full meaning either of showering down or bounteous, or male or bull; but a word which can thus be used at random has clearly lost its definite power, and cannot call forth any definite ideas in the mind of the listener. It cannot be denied that here and there the original meaning of vr̥ṣhan would be appropriate even where the poet is only pouring out a stream of majestic sound, but we are not called upon to impart sense to what are verba et praeterquam nihil. When we read, I, 122, 3, vātah apām vr̥ṣhan-vân, we are justified, no doubt, in translating, 'the wind who pours forth water;' and X, 93, 5, apām vr̥ṣhan-vasû (īti) sūryāmāsā, means 'Sun and Moon, givers of water.' But even in some passages where vr̥ṣhan is followed by the word vr̥ṣh, it is curious to observe that vr̥ṣh is not necessarily used in the sense of raining or pouring forth, but rather in the sense of drinking.

VI, 68, 11. īndrāvarunā mādhumat-tamasya vr̥ṣhnaḥ sōmasya vr̥ṣhanā * ā vr̥ṣhethām.

* The dual vr̥ṣhanau occurs only when the next word begins with a vowel. Before an initial a, ā, i, the au is always changed into āv in the Samhitā (I, 108, 7-12; 116, 21; 117, 19; 153, 2; 157, 5; 158, 1; 180, 7; VII, 61, 5). Before u the preceding au becomes ā in the Samhitā, but the Pada gives au, in order to show that no Sandhi can take place between the two vowels (VII, 60, 9;

Indra and Varuṇa, you strong ones, may you drink of the sweetest strong Soma.

That â-vrîsh means to drink or to eat, was known to Sâyana and to the author of the Satapatha-brâhmana, who paraphrases â vrîshâyadhvam by asnîta, eat.

The same phrase occurs I, 108, 3.

I, 104, 9. uru-vyâkâḥ gathâre â vrîshasva.

Thou of vast extent, drink (the Soma) in thy stomach.

The same phrase occurs X, 96, 13.

VIII, 61, 3. â vrîshasva—sutâsya indra ândhasaḥ.

Drink, Indra, of the Soma that is poured out.

In conclusion, a few passages may be pointed out in which vrîshan seems to be the proper name of a pious worshipper :

I, 36, 10. yâm tvâ devâsaḥ mânave dadhûḥ ihâ yâgishtham havya-vâhana, yâm kâṇvaḥ médhya-atithiḥ dhana-sprîtam yâm vrîshâ yâm upa-stutâḥ.

Thee, O Agni, whom the gods placed here for man, the most worthy of worship, O carrier of oblations, thee whom Kaṇva, thee whom Medhyâtithi placed, as the giver of wealth, thee whom Vrîshan placed and Upastuta.

Here the commentator takes Vrîshan as Indra, but this would break the symmetry of the sentence. That Upa-stutâḥ is here to be taken as a proper name, as Upastuta, the son of Vrîshîhavya, is clear from verse 17 :

agnîḥ pra âvat mitrâ utâ médhya-atithim agnîḥ sâtâ upa-stutâm.

Agni protected also the two friends, Medhyâtithi and Upastuta, in battle.

The fact is that whenever upastutâ has the accent on the last syllable, it is intended as a proper name, while, if used as a participle, in the sense of praised, it has the accent on the first.

X, 66, 7). Before consonants the dual always ends in â, both in the Samhitâ and Pada. But there are a few passages where the final â occurs before initial vowels, and where the two vowels are allowed to form one syllable. In four passages this happens before an initial â (I, 108, 3 ; VI, 68, 11 ; I, 177, 1 ; II, 16, 5). Once, and once only, it happens before u, in VIII, 22, 12.

VIII, 5, 25. yáthā kit kánvam āvatam priyá-medham upa-stutám.

As you have protected Kanva, Priyamedha, Upastutá. Cf. I, 112, 15.

VIII, 103, 8. prá mámhishthāya gāyata—úpa-stutāsa*h* agnáye (accent of the vocative).

Sing, O Upastutás, to the worthiest, to Agni !

X, 115, 9. Iti tvā agne vrishī-hávyasya putráh upa-stutāsa*h* rishayah avokan.

By these names, O Agni, did the sons of Vrishihavya, the Upastutás, the Rishis, speak to you.

Vrishan occurs once more as a proper name in VI, 16, 14 and 15 :

tám ūm (Iti) tvā dadhyañ rishi putrá*h* idhe átharva*nah*, vrītra-hánam puram-darám.

tám ūm (Iti) tvā páthyá*h* vrishá sám idhe dasyuhán-tamam, dhanam-gayám ráne-rane.

Thee, O Agni, did Dadhyak kindle, the Rishi, the son of Atharvan, thee the killer of Vrītra, the destroyer of towns ;

Thee, O Agni, did Vrishan Páthya kindle, thee the best killer of enemies, the conqueror of wealth in every battle.

Here the context can leave no doubt that Dadhyak and Vrishan were both intended as proper names. Yet as early as the composition of the Satapatha-bráhmaṇa, this was entirely misunderstood. Dadhyak, the son of Atharvan, is explained as speech, Vrishan Páthya as mind (Sat. Br. VI, 3, 3, 4). On this Mahīdhara, in his remarks on Vāg. Samh. XI, 34, improves still further. For though he allows his personality to Dadhyak, the son of Atharvan, he says that Páthya comes from pathin, path, and means he who moves on the right path ; or it comes from páthas, which means sky, and is here used in the sense of the sky of the heart. He then takes vrishan as mind, and translates the mind of the heart. Such is a small chapter in the history of the rise and fall of the Indian mind !

MANDALA I, HYMN 86.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 6, VARGA 11-12.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. O Maruts, that man in whose dwelling you drink (the Soma), ye mighty (sons) of heaven, he indeed has the best guardians¹.

2. You who are propitiated¹ either by sacrifices or from the prayers of the sage, hear the call, O Maruts!

3. Aye, the powerful man to whom you have granted a sage, he will live in a stable rich in cattle¹.

4. On the altar of this strong man (here)¹ Soma is poured out in daily sacrifices; praise and joy are sung.

5. To him let the mighty¹ Maruts listen, to him who surpasses all men, as the flowing rain-clouds² pass over the sun.

6. For we, O Maruts, have sacrificed at many harvests, through the mercies¹ of the swift gods (the storm-gods).

7. May that mortal be blessed, O chasing Maruts, whose offerings you carry off¹.

8. You take notice either of the sweat of him who praises you, ye men of true strength, or of the desire of the suppliant¹.

9. O ye of true strength, make this manifest with might! strike the fiend¹ with your lightning!

10. Hide the hideous darkness, destroy¹ every tusky² fiend. Make the light which we long for!

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Gotama.

Verse 1=VS. VIII, 31; AV. XX, 1, 2; TS. IV, 2, 11, 1.

Verse 2=TS. IV, 2, 11, 2.

Verse 6=TS. IV, 3, 13, 5.

Verse 8=SV. II, 944.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Vímahas occurs only once more as an epithet of the Maruts, V, 87, 4. Being an adjective derived from máhas, strength, it means very strong. The strong ones of heaven is an expression analogous to I, 64, 2. diváh rish-vāsaḥ ukshánah; I, 64, 4. diváh nárah. The Ait. Brāhmaṇa VI, 10, takes gopā, guardian, as Indra.

Verse 2.

Note 1. The construction of this verse is not clear. Yagnā-vāhas has two meanings in the Veda. It is applied to the priest who carries or performs the sacrifice:

III, 8, 3, and 24, 1. várkaḥ dhāḥ yagnā-vāhase.

Grant splendour to the sacrificer!

But it is also used of the gods who carry off the sacrifice, and in that case it means hardly more than worshipped or propitiated; I, 15, 11 (Asvinau); IV, 47, 4 (Indra and Vāyu); VIII, 12, 20 (Indra). In our verse it is used in the latter sense, and it is properly construed with the instrumental yagnāḥ. The difficulty is the gen. plur. matīnām, instead of matībhiḥ. The sense, however, seems to allow of but one construction, and we may suppose that the genitive depends on the yagnā in yagnāvāhas, 'accepting the worship of the prayers of the priest.' Benfey refers yagnāḥ to the preceding verse, and joins hávam to víprasya matīnām: 'Durch Opfer—Opferförderer ihr!—oder ihr hört—Maruts—den Ruf der Lieder, die der Priester schuf.'

The Samhitā text lengthens the last syllable of srinutá, as suggested by the metre.

If the accent allowed yagñavâhasaḥ to be taken as a genitive, the translation, as suggested by Ludwig, might be, 'Either for the sake of the sacrifices of the sacrificer, or because of the prayers of the sage, O Maruts, hear the call.'

Verse 3.

Note 1. The genitive yâsya vâgīnaḥ depends on vīpra. Anu-taksh, like anu-grah, anu-gñā, seems to convey the meaning of doing in behalf or for the benefit of a person. Gántā might also be translated in a hostile sense, he will go into, he will conquer many a stable full of cows.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Ludwig has pointed out that asyā may refer to the present sacrificer.

Verse 5.

Note 1. I have altered ā bhúvaḥ into ābhúvaḥ, for I do not think that bhúvaḥ, the second pers. sing., even if it were bhúvat, the third pers., could be joined with the relative pronoun yáḥ in the second pada. The phrase vīsvāḥ yáḥ karshanīḥ abhí occurs more than once, and is never preceded by the verb bhuvah or bhuvat. Ābhúvaḥ, on the contrary, is applied to the Maruts, I, 64, 6, vidátheshu ābhúvaḥ; and as there can be no doubt who are the deities invoked, ābhúvaḥ, the strong ones, is as appropriate an epithet as vīmahas in the first verse.

Note 2. Sasrúshiḥ śshaḥ, as connected with sūra, the sun, can only be meant for the flowing waters, the rain-clouds, the givers of ish or vigour. They are called divyāḥ śshaḥ :

VIII, 5, 21. utá naḥ divyāḥ śshaḥ utá śíndhūn varshathaḥ.

You rain down on us the heavenly waters and the rivers.

WILSON translates: May the Maruts, victorious over all men, hear (the praises) of this (their worshipper); and may (abundant) food be obtained by him who praises them.

BENFEY: Ihn, der ob allen Menschen ragt, sollen hören die Labungen, und nahn, die irgend Weisen nahn.

LUDWIG: Hören sollen von ihm, der über allen menschen ist, die erden, seine bis zur sonne gelangten kräfte. In his notes he would prefer: Von ihm sollen sie gegenwärtig hören, von ihm der alle menschen übertrifft (und die in die sonne wegegangenen), die darbringungen.

Sroshantu does not occur again; but we find sróshan, I, 68, 5; sróshamāna, III, 8, 10; VII, 51, 1; VII, 7, 6.

Verse 6.

Note 1. The expression ávobhiḥ, with the help, the blessings, the mercies, is generally used with reference to divine assistance; (I, 117, 19; 167, 2; 185, 10; 11; IV, 22, 7; 41, 6; V, 74, 6; VI, 47, 12; VII, 20, 1; 35, 1, &c.) It seems best therefore to take karshaní as a name or epithet of the Maruts, although, after the invocation of the Maruts by name, this repetition is somewhat unusual. I should have preferred, 'with the help of our men, of our active and busy companions,' for karshaní is used in that sense also. Only ávobhiḥ would not be in its right place then. The same applies to the various reading in TS. IV, 3, 13, 5, where instead of ávobhiḥ we find máhobhiḥ. This too is used with reference to gods, and particularly to the Maruts; see I, 165, 5, note.

Verse 7.

Note 1. Par, with ati, means to carry over (I, 97, 8; 99, 1; 174, 9; III, 15, 3; 20, 4; IV, 39, 1; V, 25, 9; 73, 8; VII, 40, 4; 97, 4; VIII, 26, 5; 67, 2, &c.); with apa, to remove (I, 129, 5); with niḥ, to throw down. Hence, if used by itself, unless it means to overrun, as frequently, it can only have the general sense of carrying, taking, accepting, or accomplishing.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Vidá as second pers. plur. perf. is frequent, generally with the final 'a' long in the Samhitā, I, 156, 3; V, 41, 13; 55, 2.

Verse 9.

Note 1. Observe the long penultimate in rákshaḥ, instead of the usual short syllable. Cf. I, 12, 5, and see Kuhn, Beiträge, vol. iii, p. 456.

Verse 10.

Note 1. See note 1 to I, 39, 3.

Note 2. Atrín, which stands for attrín, is one of the many names assigned to the powers of darkness and mischief. It is derived from atrá, which means tooth or jaw, and therefore meant originally an ogre with large teeth or jaws, a devourer. Besides atrá, we also find in the Veda átra, with the accent on the first syllable, and meaning what serves for eating, or food :

X, 79, 2. átrāni asmai paṭ-bhīk sám bharanti.

They bring together food for him (Agni) with their feet.

With the accent on the last syllable, atrá in one passage means an eater or an ogre, like atrín :

V, 32, 8. apādam atrām—mṛidhrá-vākam.

Indra killed the footless ogre, the babbler.

It means tooth or jaw :

I, 129, 8. svayám sã rishayádhyai yã naḥ upa-īshé atrāḥ.

May she herself go to destruction who attacks us with her teeth.

It is probably from atrá in the sense of tooth (cf. δδόντες = ēdóntes) that atrín is derived, meaning ogre or a devouring devil. In the later Sanskrit, too, the Asuras are represented as having large tusks, Mahābh. V, 3572, damshīrino bhīmavegās ka.

Thus we read I, 21, 5, that Indra and Agni destroy the Rakshas, and the poet continues :

āpragāḥ santu atrīnaḥ.

May the ogres be without offspring !

IX, 86, 48. gahí vísvān rakshásāḥ indo (īti) atrīnaḥ.

Kill, O Soma, all the tusky Rakshas. Cf. IX, 104, 6; 105, 6.

VI, 51, 14. gahí ní atrīnam pañīm.

Kill, O Soma, the tusky Pani.

I, 94, 9. vadhāḥ duḥ-sāmsān āpa duḥ-dhyāḥ gahí dûré vā yé ānti vā ké kīṭ atrīnaḥ.

Strike with thy blows, O Agni, the evil-spoken, evil-minded (spirits), the ogres, those who are far or who are near.

See also I, 36, 14; 20; VI, 16, 28; VII, 104, 1; 5; VIII, 12, 1; 19, 15; X, 36, 4; 118, 1.

MANDALA I, HYMN 87.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYĀYA 6, VARGA 13.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. Endowed with exceeding vigour and power, the singers, the never flinching, the immovable, the impetuous, the most beloved and most manly, have decked themselves with their glittering ornaments, a few only¹, like the heavens with the stars.

2. When you have seen your way through the clefts, like birds, O Maruts, on whatever road it be¹, then the casks (clouds) on your chariots trickle everywhere, and you pour out the honey-like fatness (the rain) for him who praises you.

3. At their racings the earth shakes, as if broken¹, when on the (heavenly) paths they harness (their deer) for victory². They the sportive, the roaring, with bright spears, the shakers (of the clouds) have themselves glorified their greatness.

4. That youthful company (of the Maruts), with their spotted horses¹, moves by itself; hence² it exercises lordship, invested with powers. Thou indeed art true, thou searchest out sin³, thou art without blemish. Therefore the manly host will help this prayer.

5. We speak after the kind of our old father, our tongue goes forth at the sight¹ of the Soma: when the singers (the Maruts) had joined Indra in deed², then only they took their holy names;—

6. These Maruts, armed with beautiful rings, obtained splendours for their glory¹, they obtained² rays, and men to celebrate them; nay, armed with daggers, speeding along, and fearless, they found the beloved domain of the Maruts³.

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Gotama. No verse in SV., VS., AV.

Verse 2 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 7.

Verse 3 = TS. IV, 3, 13, 7.

Verse 6 = TS. II, 1, 11, 2; IV, 2, 11, 2.

Verse 1.

Note 1. Ké kit refers to the Maruts, who are represented as gradually rising or just showing themselves, as yet only few in number, like the first stars in the sky. Ké kit, some, is opposed to sarve, all. The same expression occurs again, V, 52, 12, where the Maruts are compared to a few thieves. B. and R., and those who follow them, translate usrāḥ iva strī-bhiḥ by 'like cows marked with stars on their foreheads.' Such cows no doubt exist, but they can hardly be said to become visible by these frontal stars, as the Maruts by their ornaments. We must take usrāḥ here in the same sense as dyāvāḥ; II, 34, 2, it is said that the Maruts were perceived dyāvāḥ ná strī-bhiḥ, like the heavens with the stars.

I, 166, 11. dûre-drīsaḥ yé divyāḥ-iva strī-bhiḥ.

Who are visible far away, like the heavens (or heavenly beings) by the stars.

And the same is said of Agni, II, 2, 5. dyaúḥ ná strī-bhiḥ kitayat ródasī (īti) ánu. Strībhiḥ occurs I, 68, 5; IV, 7, 3; VI, 49, 3; 12. It always means stars, and the meaning of rays (strahl) rests, as yet, on etymological authority only. The evening sky would, no doubt, be more appropriate than usrāḥ, which applies chiefly to the dawn. But in the Indian mind, the two dawns, i. e. the dawn and the gloaming, are so closely united and identified, that their names, too, are frequently interchangeable.

Verse 2.

Note 1. I translate yayī not by a goer, a traveller, i. e. the cloud (this is the explanation proposed by Sâyana, and adopted by Professor Benfey), but by path. Sâyana (TS. IV, 3, 13, 7) renders yayim by gatim. Etymologically yayí may mean either, and in some passages I feel doubtful as to which is the more appropriate meaning. But in parallel passages yayí is clearly replaced by yāma. Thus :

VIII, 7, 2. yát—yāmam subhrāḥ ákidhvam.

When you, bright Maruts, have seen your way.

See also VIII, 7, 4. yát yāmam yānti vāyú-bhiḥ.

When they (the Maruts) go on their path with the winds.

VIII, 7, 14. ádhi-iva yát girīnām yāmam subhrāḥ ákidhvam.

When you, bright Maruts, had seen your way, as it were, from above the mountains.

The same phrase occurs, even without yāma or yayí, in

V, 55, 7. ná párvatāḥ ná nadyāḥ varanta vaḥ yātra ákidhvam marutaḥ gákkhata ít u tát.

Not mountains, not rivers, keep you back ; where you have seen (your way), there you go.

Though yayí does not occur frequently in the Rig-veda, the meaning of path seems throughout more applicable than that of traveller.

V, 87, 5. tveshāḥ yayíḥ.

Your path, O Maruts, is blazing.

V, 73, 7. ugrāḥ vām kakuhāḥ yayíḥ.

Fearful is your pass on high.

I, 51, 11. ugrāḥ yayīm níḥ apāḥ srótasā asrigat.

The fearful Indra sent the waters forth on their way streaming.

X, 92, 5. prá—yayínā yanti síndhavaḥ.

The waters go forth on their path.

Ludwig takes kósa as buckets on the chariots of the Maruts, which seems right.

Verse 3.

Note 1. Cf. I, 37, 8, page 75. There is no authority for Sâyana's explanation of vithurā-iva, the earth trembles like a widow. Vithurā occurs several times in the Rig-veda, but never in the sense of widow. Thus :

I, 168, 6. yát kyaváyatha vithurā-iva sám-hitam.

When you, Maruts, throw down what is compact, like brittle things.

I, 186, 2 ; VI, 25, 3 ; 46, 6 ; VIII, 96, 2 ; X, 77, 4 (vi-thuryáti). The Maruts themselves are called ávithura in verse 1. Spiegel compares the Zend aiwithura. As to ágma and yāma, see I, 37, 8, page 75.

Note 2. Súbh is one of those words to which it is very difficult always to assign a definite special meaning. Being derived from subh, to shine, the commentator has no difficulty in explaining it by splendour, beauty ; sometimes by water. But although súbh means originally splendour, and is used in that sense in many passages, yet there are others where so vague a meaning seems very inappropriate. In our verse Sáyana proposes two translations, either, 'When the Maruts harness the clouds,' or, 'When the Maruts harness their chariots, for the bright rain-water.' Now the idea that the Maruts harness their chariots in order to make the clouds yield their rain, can hardly be expressed by the simple word subhé, i. e. for brightness' sake. As the Maruts are frequently praised for their glittering ornaments, their splendour might be intended in this passage, as it certainly is in others. Thus :

I, 85, 3. yát subháyante añgī-bhiḥ tanūshu subhrāḥ dadhire virúkmataḥ.

When the Maruts adorn themselves with glittering ornaments, the brilliant ones put bright weapons on their bodies.

VII, 56, 6. subhā sóbhishthāḥ, sriyā sám-mislāḥ, ógah-bhiḥ ugrāḥ.

The most brilliant by their brilliancy, united with beauty, terrible by terrors.

In I, 64, 4, I have translated vákshaḥ-su rukmān ádhi yetire subhé by 'they fix gold (chains) on their chests for beauty.' And the same meaning is applicable to I, 117, 5, subhé rukmám ná darsatám ní-khátam, and other passages : IV, 51, 6 ; VI, 63, 6.

But in our verse and others which we shall examine, beauty and brilliancy would be very weak renderings for subhé. 'When they harnessed their chariots or their deer for the sake of beauty,' means nothing, or, at least, very little. I take, therefore, subhé in this and similar phrases in the sense of triumph or glory or victory. 'When they harness their chariots for to conquer,' implies brilliancy, glory, victory, but it conveys at the same time a tangible meaning. Let us now see whether the same meaning is appropriate in other passages :

I, 23, 11. gáyatām-iva tanyatúḥ marútām eti dhrishṇu-yā yāt súbham yāthána naráḥ.

The thundering voice of the Maruts comes fiercely, like that of conquerors, when you go to conquer, O men !

Sáyana : 'When you go to the brilliant place of sacrifice.'

Wilson : 'When you accept the auspicious (offering).'

Benfey : 'Wenn ihr euren Schmuck nehmt.'

V, 57, 2. yāthana súbham, you go to conquer. Cf. V, 55, 1.

Sáyana : 'For the sake of water, or, in a chariot.'

V, 52, 8. sárdhaḥ mārutam út samsa—utá sma té subhé naráḥ prá syandrāḥ yugata tmánā.

Praise the host of the Maruts, whether they, the men, the quickly moving, have by themselves harnessed (the chariots) for conquest.

Sáyana : 'For the sake of water.' Cf. X, 105, 3.

V, 57, 3. subhé yāt ugrāḥ prīshatīḥ áyugdhvam.

When you have harnessed the deer for conquest.

Sáyana : 'For the sake of water.'

III, 26, 4. subhé—prīshatīḥ ayukshata.

They had harnessed the deer for victory.

Sáyana : 'They had harnessed in the water the deer together (with the fires).'

V, 63, 5. rātham yuṅgate marútaḥ subhé su-khám sūraḥ ná—gó-ishṇishu.

The Maruts harness the chariot meet for conquest, like a hero in battles.

Sáyana : 'For the sake of water.'

I, 88, 2. subhé kám yānti—ásvaiḥ.

The Maruts go on their horses towards conquest.

Sáyana : 'In order to brighten the worshipper, or, for the sake of water.'

I, 119, 3. sám yát mitháḥ paspridhânāsaḥ ágmata subhé makhāḥ ámitāḥ gāyávaḥ ráne.

When striving with each other they came together, for the sake of glory, the brisk (Maruts), immeasurable (in strength), panting for victory in the fight.

Sâyana : 'For the sake of brilliant wealth.'

VII, 82, 5. marút-bhiḥ ugráḥ súbham anyáḥ íyate.

The other, the fearful (Indra), goes with the Maruts to glory.

Sâyana : 'He takes brilliant decoration.'

I, 167, 6. ā asthāpayanta yuvatīm yúvānaḥ subhé nímislām.

The Maruts, the youths, placed the maid (lightning on their chariot), their companion for victory (subhé nímislām).

Sâyana : 'For the sake of water, or, on the brilliant chariot.' Cf. I, 127, 6; 165, 1.

VI, 62, 4. súbham pr̥ksham ísham ūrgam váhantā.

The Asvins bringing glory, wealth, drink, and food.

VIII, 26, 13. subhé kákrâte, you bring him to glory.

Subham-yāvan is an epithet of the Maruts, I, 89, 7; V, 61, 13. Cf. subhra-yāvāná, VIII, 26, 19 (Asvinau).

Subham-yā, of the wind, IV, 3, 6.

Subham-yú, of the rays of the dawn, X, 78, 7.

Verse 4.

Note 1. Sâyana : 'With spotted deer for their horses.' See I, 37, 2, note 1, page 70; as Pûshan is called agâsra, having goats for his horses, RV. V, 58, 2.

That the Maruts have not only pr̥ishatī, but horses for their chariots, we have seen before. In I, 88, 1, we have ásvaparnaiḥ ráthebhiḥ.

Note 2. Ayā is a word of very rare occurrence in the Rig-veda. It is the instrum. sing. of the feminine pronominal base ā or ī, and as a pronoun followed by a noun it is frequently to be met with; V, 45, 11. ayā dhiyā, &c. But in our verse it is irregular in form as not entering into Sandhi with íśanáḥ. This irregularity, however, which might have led us to suppose an original ayāḥ, indefatigable, corresponding with the following ási, is vouched for by the Pada text, in such matters a better authority than the Samhitā text, and certainly in this case fully borne out by the Prātisākhya, I, 163, 10. Unless we read ayāh, we must take ayā as an adverb, in the sense of thus or hence; cf. VI, 66, 4. In some passages where ayā seems thus to be used as an adverb, it would be better to supply a noun from the preceding verse. Thus in II, 6, 2, ayā refers to samīdham in II, 6, 1. In VI, 17, 15, a similar noun, samīdhā or girā, should be supplied. But there are other passages where, unless we suppose that the verse was meant to illustrate a ceremonial act, such as the placing of a samīdh, and that ayā pointed to it, we must take it as a simple adverb, like the Greek τῷ: RV. III, 12, 2; IX, 53, 2; 106, 14. In X, 116, 9, the Pada reads áyāh-iva, not áyā, as given by Roth; in VI, 66, 4, áyā nú, the accent is likewise on the first.

Note 3. Rina-yāvan is well explained by B. and R. as going after debt, searching out sin. Sāyana, though he explains rina-yāvan by removing sin, derives it nevertheless correctly from rina and yā, and not from yu. The same formation is found in subham-yāvan, &c.; and as there is rina-yā besides rina-yāvan, so we find subham-yā besides subham-yāvan. Ludwig prefers the derivation from yu.

Verse 5.

Note 1. The Soma-juice inspires the poet with eloquence.

Note 2. Sāmi occurs again in II, 31, 6; III, 55, 3; VIII, 45, 27; X, 40, 1. Grassmann has shown that it may be taken as an instrum. of sāmi, meaning work, but with special reference to the toil of the battle-field or the sacrifice. It is used in the former sense in VIII, 45, 27. vī ānaṣ turvāne sāmi.

He (Indra) was able to overcome, lit. he reached to, or he arrived at the overcoming or at victory by toil.

But, like other words which have the general meaning of working or toiling, sāmi is used both in a general sense, and in the more special sense of sacrifice.

X, 40, 1. vāstoḥ-vastoḥ váhamānam dhiyā sāmi.

Your chariot, O Asvins, driven along every morning by thought and deed.

II, 31, 6. apām nāpāt āsu-hémā dhiyā sámi.

Apām nāpāt (Agni) moving quickly by thought and deed.

In these two passages it might be possible, with a slight alteration of the accent, to read dhiyā-sámi as one word. Dhiyā-sám would mean the sacrificer who is engaged in prayer; cf. dhiyā-gúr, V, 43, 15. Thus we read:

VI, 2, 4. yák te su-dānave dhiyā mártak sāsámate.

The mortal who toils for thee, the liberal god, with prayer.

There is no necessity, however, for such a change, and the authority of the MSS. is against it. See also IX, 74, 7.

In III, 55, 3, sámi ákka didye pūrvyāni, Roth takes sámi as an acc. plur. neut., Lanman as an instrum., Grassmann as a locative.

I glance back at the former sacrifices. See B. R. s.v. dī and sámi.

In other passages the feminine sámī seems to mean work, sacrificial work, but, as far as we can see, not simply sacrifice. Thus the R̥ibhus and others are said to have acquired immortality by their work or works, sámī or sámibhih, I, 20, 2; 110, 4; III, 60, 3; IV, 33, 4. Cf. IV, 22, 8; 17, 18; V, 42, 10; 77, 4; VI, 52, 1; VIII, 75, 14; IX, 74, 7; X, 28, 12. In VI, 3, 2, we read:

igé yagnēbhih sāsámé sámibhih.

I have sacrificed with sacrifices, I have worked with pious works.

Here the verb sam must be taken in the sense of working, or performing ceremonial worship, while in other places (III, 29, 16; V, 2, 7) it may be perhaps taken in the more special sense of singing songs of praise. The Greek κᾶμ-νω, to work, to labour, to tire (Sanskrit sāmyati), the Greek κομιδή and κομίζω, to labour for or take care of a person, and possibly even the Greek κῶμος, a song or a festival (not a village song), may all find their explanation in the Sanskrit root sam.

The idea that the Maruts did not originally enjoy divine honours will occur again and again : cf. I, 6, 4 ; 72, 3. A similar expression is used of the Ribhus, I, 20, 8, &c. But while originally the expression of obtaining sacred names meant no more than obtaining a sacred or divine character, it was soon taken literally, and a number of names were invented for the Maruts which even in the Vāgasan. Samhitā XVII, 80–85 amount to 49, i.e. 7×7 . Yagnīya, properly 'worthy of sacrifice,' has the meaning of divine or sacred. The Greek ἄγιος has been compared with yāgya, sacrificio colendus, which is not a Vedic word.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Sriyāse kām seems to be the same as the more frequent sriyé kām. Sriyāse only occurs twice more, V, 59, 3. The chief irregularity consists in the absence of Guna, which is provided for by Pāṇini's kasēn (III, 4, 9). Similar infinitives, if they may so be called, are bhiyāse, V, 29, 4 ; vridhāse, V, 64, 5 ; dhruvāse, VII, 70, 1 ; tugāse, IV, 23, 7 ; riñgāse, VIII, 4, 17 ; vriñgāse, VIII, 76, 1 ; rikāse, VII, 61, 6. In VI, 39, 5, rikāse may be a dat. sing. of the masculine, to the praiser.

Note 2. Mimikshire from myaksh, to be united with. Rasmī, rays, after bhānū, splendour, may seem weak. It might be possible to assign to rasmī the meaning of reins, and take rikvabhir in the sense of sounding or tinkling. In V, 79, 8, arśī is used in juxtaposition with rasmī.

Note 3. The bearing of this concluding verse is not quite clear, unless we take it as a continuation of the preceding verse. It was there said that the Maruts (the rikvānah) obtained their holy names after having joined Indra in his work, which means that they then and there became what they are. Having thus obtained their true character and a place among the gods, they may be said to have won at the same time splendour, and worshippers to sing their praises, and to have established themselves in what became afterwards known as their own domain, their own place among the gods who are invoked at the sacrifice. See VII, 58, 1.

The metre requires that we should read dhāmanāḥ.

BENFEY translates : Gedeih'n zu spenden woll'n die schöngeschmücketen mit Lichtern, Strahlen mit Lobsängern regenen ; die brüllenden, furchtlosen, stürmischen, sie sind bekannt als Glieder des geliebten Marutstamms.

WILSON : Combining with the solar rays, they have willingly poured down (rain) for the welfare (of mankind), and, hymned by the priests, have been pleased partakers of the (sacrificial food). Addressed with praises, moving swiftly, and exempt from fear, they have become possessed of a station agreeable and suitable to the Maruts.

LUDWIG : Zu herlichkeit haben dise sich mit liechtglanz versehen, mit sausenden zügeln die schönberingten, schwertbewaffnet die kraftvollen, ohne furcht besitzen sie die freundliche Marutmacht.

MANDALA I, HYMN 88.

ASHTAKA I, ADHYÂYA 6, VARGA 14.

TO THE MARUTS (THE STORM-GODS).

1. Come hither, Maruts, on your chariots charged with lightning, resounding with beautiful songs¹, stored with spears, and winged with horses! Fly³ to us like birds, with your best food², you mighty ones!

2. They come gloriously on their red, or, it may be, on their tawny horses which hasten their chariots. He who holds the axe¹ is brilliant like gold;— with the tire² of the chariot they have struck the earth.

3. On your bodies there are daggers for beauty; may they stir up our minds¹ as they stir up the forests. For yourselves, O well-born Maruts, the vigorous (among you) shake² the stone (for distilling Soma).

4. Days went round you and came back¹, O hawks, back to this prayer, and to this sacred rite; the Gotamas making prayer with songs, pushed up the lid of the well (the cloud) for to drink.

5. No such hymn¹ was ever known as this which Gotama sounded for you, O Maruts, when he saw you on golden wheels, wild boars² rushing about with iron tusks.

6. This comforting speech rushes sounding towards you, like the speech of a suppliant: it rushed freely from our hands as our speeches are wont to do.

NOTES.

This hymn is ascribed to Gotama, the son of Rahûgana. The metre varies. Verses 1 and 6 are put down as Prastâra-paṅkti, i. e. as 12 + 12 + 8 + 8. By merely counting the syllables, and dissolving semivowels, it is just possible to get twenty-four syllables in the first line of verses 1 and 6. The old metricians must have scanned verse 1 :

ā vīdyunmāt-bhīh mārūtāh sū-ārkaīh
rāthēbhīh yāta-rishmat-bhīh āsvā-pārnaīh.

Again verse 6 : ēshā syā vāh mārūtāh anū-bhārtrī
prātī stobhātī vāghātāh nā vānī.

But the general character of these lines shows that they were intended for hendecasyllabics, each ending in a bacchius, though even then they are not free from irregularities. The first verse would scan :

ā vīdyunmāt-bhīh mārūtāh sū-ārkaīh
rāthēbhīh yāta-rishmat-(bhīh) āsvā-pārnaīh.

And verse 6 : ēshā syā vāh mārūtāh-anū-bhārtrī
prātī stobhātī vāghātāh nā vānī.

Our only difficulty would be the termination bhīh of rishmat-bhīh. I cannot adopt Professor Kuhn's suggestion to drop the Visarga of bhīh and change i into y (Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 198), for this would be a license without any parallel. It is different with sah, originally sa, or with feminines in ih, where parallel forms in ī are intelligible. The simplest correction would be to read rāthēbhīh yāta-rishmat-māntāh-āsvā-pārnaīh. One might urge in support of this reading that in all other passages where rishmat occurs, it refers to the Maruts themselves, and never to their chariots. Yet the difficulty remains, how could so simple a reading have been replaced by a more difficult one?

In the two Gâyatrî pâdas which follow I feel equally reluctant to alter. I therefore scan ā varshishīthāyā nāḥ īshā vāyāḥ nā pāptatā sū-māyāḥ, taking the dactyl of paptata as representing a spondee, and admitting the exceptional bacchius instead of the amphimacer at the end of the line.

The last line of verse 6 should be scanned :

āstobhāyāt vrīthāśām ānū svādhām gābhāstyōḥ.

There are two other verses in this hymn where the metre is difficult. In the last pâda of verse 5 we have seven syllables instead of eleven. Again, I say, it would be most easy to insert one of the many tetrasyllabic epithets of the Maruts. But this would have been equally easy for the collectors of the Veda. Now the authors of the Anukramanis distinctly state that this fifth verse is virādrûpā, i. e. that one of its pâdas consists of eight syllables. How they would have made eight syllables out of vi-dhāvataḥ varāhûn does not appear, but at all events they knew that last pâda to be imperfect. The rhythm does not suffer by this omission, as long as we scan vī-dhāvātāḥ varāhûn.

Lastly, there is the third pâda of the second verse, rukmaḥ na kītraḥ svadhiti-vân. It would not be possible to get eleven syllables out of this, unless we admitted vyūha not only in svādhītivân or svādhītī-vân, but also in kītrāḥ. Kuhn (Beiträge, vol. iv, p. 192) proposes to scan rukmaū na kītarāḥ svadhītivân. Nothing would be easier than to insert eshām after kītraḥ, but the question occurs again, how could eshām be lost, or why, if by some accident it had been lost, was not so obvious a correction made by Saunaka and Kātyāyana?

No verse of this hymn occurs in SV., VS., AV., TS., TB.

Verse 1

Note 1. Alluding to the music of the Maruts, and not to the splendour of the lightning which is mentioned before. See Wolf, Beiträge zur Deutschen Mythologie, vol. ii, p. 137. 'Das Ross und den Wagen des Gottes begleitet munterer Hörnerschall, entweder stösst er selbst ins Horn, oder sein Gefolge. Oft vernimmt man auch eine liebliche Musik, der keine auf Erden gleich kommt (Müllenhof, 582). Das wird das Pfeifen und Heulen des Sturmes sein, nur in idealisirter Art.' Ibid. p. 158.

Note 2. Várshishtā, which is generally explained as the superlative of vriddha, old (Pân. VI, 4, 157), has in most passages of the Rig-veda the more general meaning of strong or excellent: VI, 47, 9. isham ā vakshi ishām várshishtām; III, 13, 7 (vásu); III, 26, 8 (rátna); III, 16, 3 (raí); IV, 31, 15; VIII, 46, 24 (srávaḥ); IV, 22, 9 (nrimná); V, 67, 1 (kshatrā); VI, 45, 31 (mûrdhán). In some passages, however, it may be taken in the sense of oldest (I, 37, 6; V, 7, 1), though by no means necessarily. Várshishtā is derived in reality from vr̥shan, in the sense of strong, excellent. See note to I, 85, 12, page 144.

Note 3. Paptata, the second person plural of the imperative of what is commonly, though without much reason, called the aorist of the causative of pat. It is curiously like the Greek πίπτει, but it has the meaning of flying rather than falling; see Curtius, Grundzüge, p. 190. Two other forms formed on the same principle occur in the Rig-veda, paptaḥ and paptan:

II, 31, 1. prá yát váyaḥ ná páptan.

That they may fly to us like birds.

VI, 63, 6. prá vâm váyaḥ—ánu paptan.

May your birds fly after you.

X, 95, 15. púrûravaḥ mã mrithâḥ mã prá paptaḥ.

Purûravas, do not die, do not go away!

Verse 2.

Note 1. Though svadhiti-vân does not occur again, it can only mean he who holds the axe, or, it may be, the sword or the thunderbolt, the latter particularly, if Indra is here intended. Svadhiti signifies axe:

III, 2, 10. svá-dhitim ná tégase.

They adorned Agni like an axe to shine or to cut.

The svádhiti is used by the butcher, I, 162, 9; 18; 20; and by the wood-cutter or carpenter, III, 8, 6; 11; X, 89, 7, &c. Roth (s.v.) takes svadhiti as meaning also a tree, possibly the oak, and he translates svadhiti^{vān} in our passage by a chariot made of the wood of the Svadhiti tree. In RV. IX, 96, 6, svádhiti^r vānānām may well mean 'the strong axe among woods,' the axe being naturally made of the strongest wood. In V, 32, 10, a devī svádhiti^ḥ is mentioned, possibly the lightning, the companion of Indra and the Maruts.

Note 2. The tire of the chariot of the Maruts is frequently mentioned. It was considered not only as an essential part of their chariot, but likewise as useful for crushing the enemy :

V, 52, 9. utá pavyā^ḥ ráthānām ádrim bhindanti ógasā.

They cut the mountain (cloud) with the tire of their chariots.

I, 166, 10. pavíshu kshurā^ḥ ádhi.

On their tires are sharp edges.

In V, 31, 5, tires are mentioned without horses and chariot, which were turned by Indra against the Dasyus (I, 64, 11). I doubt, however, whether in India or elsewhere the tires or the wheels of chariots were ever used as weapons of attack, as detached from the chariot ; (see M. M., On Pavírava, in Beiträge zur Vergleichenden Sprachforschung, vol. iii, p. 447.) If we translate the figurative language of the Vedic poets into matter-of-fact terms, the tires of the chariots of the Maruts may be rendered by thunderbolts ; yet by the poets of the Veda, as by the ancient people of Germany, thunder was really supposed to be the noise of the chariot of a god, and it was but a continuation of the same belief that the sharp wheels of that chariot were supposed to cut and crush the clouds ; (see M. M., loc. cit., p. 444.)

Verse 3.

Note 1. That the vāśis are small weapons, knives or daggers, we saw before, p. 71. Sāyana here explains vāśi by a weapon commonly called āra, or an awl. In X, 101, 10, vāśis are mentioned, made of stone, asman-máyī.

The difficulty begins with the second half. Medhā, as here written in the Pada text, could only be a plural of a neuter medhá, but such a neuter does nowhere exist in the Veda. We only find the masculine médha, sacrifice, which is out of the question here, on account of its accent. Hence the passage III, 58, 2, ūrdhvā^h bhavanti pitārā-iva médhā^h, is of no assistance, unless we alter the accent. The feminine medhā means will, thought, prayer: I, 18, 6; II, 34, 7; IV, 33, 10; V, 27, 4; 42, 13; VII, 104, 6; VIII, 6, 10; 52, 9; IX, 9, 9; 26, 3; 32, 6; 65, 16; 107, 25; X, 91, 8. The construction does not allow us to take medhā as a Vedic instrumental instead of medháyā, nor does such a form occur anywhere else in the Rig-veda. Nothing remains, I believe, but to have recourse to conjecture, and the addition of a single Visarga in the Pada would remove all difficulty. In the next line, if tuvi-dyum-nāsa^h be the subject, it would signify the priests. This, however, is again without any warrant from the Rig-veda, where tuvi-dyumná is always used as an epithet of gods. I therefore take it as referring to the Maruts, as an adjective in the nominative, following the vocatives maruta^h su-gātā^h. The conception that the Maruts stir up the forests is not of unfrequent occurrence in the Rig-veda: cf. I, 171, 3. That ūrdhvā is used of the mind, in the sense of roused, may be seen in I, 119, 2; 134, 1; 144, 1; VII, 64, 4. The idea in the poet's mind seems to have been that the thunderbolts of the Maruts rouse up men to prayer as they stir the tops of the forest trees. Ludwig takes medha, masc., in the sense of lance, comparing it with Icelandic meidhr, but the two words cannot well be the same. Possibly vana may be meant for lances: 'May they raise our minds, like lances;' see note to I, 171, 3.

Note 2. On dhan in the sense of to agitate, see B. and R. s. v. The shaking of the stone may be the shaking of the stone for distilling the heavenly Soma or the rain; but adri may also be meant for the thunderbolt. I now take tuvidyumna for an adjective referring to the Maruts, because it is a divine rather than a human epithet. Still, the passage is doubtful.

Verse 4.

Note 1. The first question is, which is the subject, áhāni or gr̥dhrah? If gr̥dhrah were the subject, then we should have to translate it by the eager poets, and take áhāni in the sense of visvā ahāni. The sense then might be: 'Day by day did the eager poets sing around you this prayer.' There would be several objections, however, to this rendering. First, gr̥dhrah, though metaphorically applicable to poets, never occurs again as signifying poets or priests. One passage only could be quoted in support, IX, 97, 57, kavayah ná gr̥dhrah (not gr̥dhrah), like greedy poets. But even here, if indeed the translation is right, the adjective is explained by kaví, and does not stand by itself. Secondly, áhāni by itself is never used adverbially in the sense of day after day. The only similar passage that might be quoted is III, 34, 10, and that is very doubtful. To take áhāni as a totally different word, viz. as á+hāni, without ceasing, without wearying, would be too bold in the present state of Vedic interpretation. If then we take áhāni as the subject, gr̥dhrah would have to be taken as a vocative, and intended for the Maruts. Now, it is perfectly true, that by itself gr̥dhra, hawk, does not occur again as a name of the Maruts, but syenā, hawk, and particularly a strong hawk (IX, 96, 6), is not only a common simile applied to the Maruts, but is actually used as one of their names:

VII, 56, 3. abhí sva-pūbhiḥ mithāḥ vapanta vāta-svanasaḥ syenāḥ aspridhran.

They plucked each other with their beaks (?), the hawks, rushing like the wind, strove together.

Aguḥ might be the aorist of gai, to sing, or of gā, to go:

I, 174, 8. sánā tã te indra návyāḥ ā aguḥ.

New poets, O Indra, sang these thy old deeds.

III, 56, 2. gāvaḥ ā aguḥ.

The cows approached.

If then the sense of the first line is, 'Days went and came back to you,' the next question is whether we are to extend the construction to the next words, imām dhīyam vārkāryām ka devīm, or whether these words are to be joined to krinvántaḥ, like bráhma. The meaning of vārkāryā is, of course, unknown. Sāyana's interpretation as 'what is to be made by means of water' is merely etymological, and does not help us much. It is true that the object of the hymn, which is addressed to the Maruts, is rain, and that literally vārkāryā might be explained as 'that the effect of which is rain.' But this is far too artificial a word for Vedic poets. Possibly there was some other word that had become unintelligible and which, by a slight change, was turned into vārkāryā, in order to give the meaning of rain-producing. It might have been kārkārya, glorious, or the song of a poet called Vārkara, or, as Ludwig suggests, Vrikāri. The most likely supposition is that vārkāryā was the name given to some famous hymn, some pæan or song of triumph belonging to the Gotamas, possibly to some verses of the very hymn before us. In this case the epithet devī would be quite appropriate, for it is frequently used for a sacred or sacrificial song: IV, 43, 1. devīm su-stutīm; III, 18, 3. imām dhīyam sata-séyāya devīm. See, however, the note to verse 6.

The purport of the whole line would then be that many days have gone for the Maruts as well as for the famous hymn once addressed to them by Gotama, or, in other words, that the Gotamas have long been devoted to the Maruts, an idea frequently recurring in the hymns of the Veda, and, in our case, carried on in the next verse, where it is said that the present hymn is like one that Gotama composed when he saw the Maruts or spoke of them as wild boars with iron tusks. The pushing up the lid of the well for to drink, means that they obtained rain from the cloud, which is here, as before, represented as a covered well.

See another explanation in Haug, Über die ursprüngliche Bedeutung des Wortes Brahma, 1868, p. 5.

Verse 5.

Note 1. Yōgana commonly means a chariot:

VI, 62, 6. areṇú-bhiḥ yōganebhiḥ bhugántā.

You who possess dustless chariots.

VIII, 72, 6. āśva-vat yōganam br̥hāt.

The great chariot with horses.

It then became the name for a distance to be accomplished without unharnessing the horses, just as the Latin jugum, a yoke, then a juger of land, 'quod uno jugo boum uno die exarari posset,' Pliny XVIII, 3, 3, 9.

In our passage, however, yógana means a hymn, lit. a composition, which is clearly its meaning in VIII, 90, 3. bráhma te indra girvanah kriyánte ánatidbhutá, imá gushasva hari-asva yóganá índra yá te ámanmahi.

Unequalled prayers are made for thee, praiseworthy Indra; accept these hymns which we have devised for thee, O Indra with bright horses!

Note 2. Varāhu has here the same meaning as varāhá, wild boar (VIII, 77, 10; X, 28, 4). It occurs once more, I, 121, 11, as applied to Vritra, who is also called varāhá, I, 61, 7; X, 99, 6. In X, 67, 7, vṛisha-bhiḥ varāhaiḥ (with the accent on the penultimate) is intended for the Maruts^a. Except in this passage, varāha has the accent on the last syllable. In IX, 97, 7, varāhá is applied to Soma.

Verse 6.

This last verse is almost unintelligible to me. I give, however, the various attempts that have been made to explain it.

WILSON: This is that praise, Maruts, which, suited (to your merits), glorifies every one of you. The speech of the priest has now glorified you, without difficulty, with sacred verses, since (you have placed) food in our hands.

BENFEY: Dies Lied—Maruts!—das hinter euch emporstrebt, es klingt zurück gleich eines Beters Stimme. Mühlos schuf solche Lieder er, entsprechend eurer Arme Kraft. (Note: Der zum Himmel schallende Lobgesang findet seinen Widerhall (wirklich, 'bebt zurück') in dem Sturm-

^a See Genthe, Die Windgottheiten, 1861, p. 14; Grimm, Deutsche Mythologie, p. 689. Grimm mentions eburðrung (boar-throng) as a name of Orion, the star that betokens storm.

geheul der Maruts, welches mit dem Geheul des Betenden verglichen wird.)

LUDWIG: Dises lied, o Marut, euch unterstützend (aufnemen) als eines priesters braust euch entgegen, nachbrausen hat es gemacht ohne mühe in (die) der nähe die göttliche weise (ihrer) arme.

My own translation is to a great extent conjectural. It seems to me from verse 3, that the poet offers both a hymn of praise and a libation of Soma. Possibly vârkâryâ in verse 4 might be taken in the sense of Soma-juice, and be derived from valkala, which in later Sanskrit means the bark of trees. In that case verse 5 would again refer to the hymn of Gotama, and verse 6 to the libation which is to accompany it. Anu-bhartrî does not occur again, but it can only mean what supports or refreshes, and therefore would be applicable to a libation of Soma which supports the gods. The verb stobhati would well express the rushing sound of the Soma, as in I, 168, 8, it expresses the rushing noise of the waters against the felines of the chariots. The next line adds little beyond stating that this libation of Soma rushes forth freely from the hands, the gabhastis being specially mentioned in other passages where the crushing of the Soma-plant is described :

IX, 71, 3. âdri-bhiḥ sutâḥ pavate gâbhastyoḥ.

The Soma squeezed by the stones runs from the hands.

The translation would then be : O Maruts, this comforting draught (of Soma) rushes towards you, like the speech of a suppliant ; it rushed freely from our hands, as our draughts (of Soma) are wont to do.

On svadhâ, see p. 32.

MANDALA I, HYMN 165.

ASHTAKA II, ADHYĀYA 3, VARGA 24-26.

TO THE MARUTS AND INDRA.

The Prologue.

The sacrificer speaks :

1. To what splendour do the Maruts all equally¹ cling², they who are of the same age, and dwell in the same nest? With what thoughts?—from whence are they come³? Do these heroes sing forth their (own) strength⁴, wishing for wealth?

2. Whose prayers have the youths accepted? Who has turned the Maruts to his own sacrifice? By what strong desire¹ may we arrest them, they who float through the air like hawks?

The Dialogue.

The Maruts speak :

3. From whence¹, O Indra, dost thou come alone, thou who art mighty? O lord of men², what has thus happened to thee? Thou greetest (us)³ when thou comest together with (us), the bright (Maruts)⁴. Tell us then, thou with thy bay horses, what thou hast against us!

Indra speaks :

4. The sacred songs are mine, (mine are) the prayers¹; sweet² are the libations! My strength rises³, my thunderbolt is hurled forth. They call for me, the hymns yearn for me. Here are my horses, they carry me hither.

The Maruts speak :

5. From thence, in company with our strong friends¹, having adorned our bodies, we now harness our fallow deer² with all our might³;—for, Indra, according to custom, thou hast come to be with us.

Indra speaks :

6. Where, O Maruts, was that custom with you, when you left me alone in the killing of Ahi? I indeed am terrible, powerful, strong,—I escaped from the blows of every enemy¹.

The Maruts speak :

7. Thou hast achieved much with us as companions¹. With equal valour, O hero! let us achieve then many things, O thou most powerful, O Indra! whatever we, O Maruts, wish with our mind².

Indra speaks :

8. I slew Vṛitra, O Maruts, with (Indra's) might, having grown powerful through my own vigour; I, who hold the thunderbolt in my arms, have made these all-brilliant waters to flow freely for man¹.

The Maruts speak :

9. Nothing, O mighty lord, is strong¹ before thee; no one is known among the gods² like unto thee. No one who is now born³ comes near, no one who has been born. Do what thou wilt do⁴, thou who art grown so strong.

Indra speaks :

10. Almighty strength be mine alone, whatever I may do, daring in my heart¹; for I indeed, O Maruts, am known as terrible: of all that I threw down, I, Indra, am the lord.

Indra speaks :

11. O Maruts, now your praise has pleased me, the glorious hymn which you have made for me, ye men!—for me, for Indra, for the joyful hero, as friends for a friend, for your own sake, and by your own efforts¹.

Indra speaks:

12. Truly, there they are, shining towards me, bringing blameless glory, bringing food. O Maruts, wherever I have looked for you, you have appeared to me in bright splendour: appear to me also now!

The Epilogue.

The sacrificer speaks:

13. Who has magnified you here, O Maruts? Come hither, O friends, towards your friends. Ye brilliant Maruts, welcoming¹ these prayers, be mindful² of these my rites.

14. The wisdom of Mânya has brought us hither, that he should help as the poet helps the performer of a sacrifice¹: turn hither quickly²! Maruts, on to the sage! the singer has recited these prayers for you.

15. May this your praise, O Maruts, this song of Mândârya, the son of Mâna¹, the poet, bring offspring² for ourselves with food. May we have an invigorating autumn, with quickening rain³.

NOTES.

A critical examination of Professor von Roth's remarks on this hymn, together with some supplementary notes of my own, will be found in the Preface to this volume.

According to the Anukramanikâ this hymn is a dialogue between Agastya, the Maruts, and Indra. A careful consideration of the hymn would probably have led us to a similar conclusion, but I doubt whether it would have led us to adopt the same distribution of the verses among the poet, the Maruts, and Indra, as that adopted by the author of the Anukramanikâ. He assigns the first two verses to Indra, the third, fifth, seventh, and ninth to the Maruts, the fourth, sixth, eighth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth to Indra, and the three concluding verses to Agastya. I think that the two verses in the beginning, as well as the three concluding verses, belong certainly to Agastya or to whoever else the real performer of the sacrifice may have been. The two verses in the beginning cannot be ascribed to Indra, who, to judge from his language, would never say: 'By what strong desire may we arrest the Maruts?' It might seem, in fact, as if the three following verses too should be ascribed to the sacrificer, so that the dialogue between Indra and the Maruts would begin only with the sixth verse. The third verse might well be addressed to Indra by the sacrificer, and in the fourth verse we might see a description of all that he had done for Indra. What is against this view, however, is the phrase prábhṛita me ádri. If used by the sacrificer, it might seem to mean, 'my stone, i.e. the stone used for squeezing the Soma, has been brought forth.' But though Professor Roth assigns this meaning to prábhṛita in our passage, I doubt whether, in connection with ádri, or with vágra, prábhṛita can mean anything but hurled. Thus we read:

I, 61, 12. asmaí ít úm (íti) prá bhara—vritrāya vágram.

Hurl thou, Indra, the thunderbolt against this Vritra.

V, 32, 7. yát im vágrasya prá-bhritau dadābha.

When Indra conquered him in the hurling of the thunderbolt.

I therefore suppose the dialogue to begin with verse 3, and I find that Langlois, though it may be from different reasons, arrived at the same conclusion.

There can be little doubt that the other verses, to verse 12, are rightly apportioned between Indra and the Maruts. Verse 12 might perhaps be attributed again to the worshipper of the Maruts, but as there is no absolute necessity for assigning it to him, it is better to follow the tradition and to take it as the last verse of Indra's speech. It would seem, in fact, as if these ten verses, from 3 to 12, formed an independent poem, which was intended to show the divine power of the Maruts. That their divine power was sometimes denied, and that Indra's occasional contempt of them was well known to the Vedic poets, will become evident from other hymns. This dialogue seems therefore to have been distinctly intended to show that, in spite of occasional misunderstandings between the Maruts and the all-powerful Indra, Indra himself had fully recognised their power and accepted their friendship. If we suppose that this dialogue was repeated at sacrifices in honour of the Maruts, or that possibly it was acted by two parties, one representing Indra, the other the Maruts and their followers, then the two verses in the beginning and the three at the end ought to be placed in the mouth of the actual sacrificer, whoever he was. He begins by asking, Who has attracted the Maruts to his sacrifice, and by what act of praise and worship can they be delighted? Then follows the dialogue in honour of the Maruts, and after it the sacrificer asks again, 'Who has magnified the Maruts, i.e. have not we magnified them?' and he implores them to grant him their friendship in recognition of his acts of worship. If then we suppose that the dialogue was the work of Mândārya Mānya, the fourteenth verse, too, would lose something of its obscurity. Coming from the mouth of the actual sacrificer, it would mean, 'the wisdom, or the poetical power, of Mānya has brought us to this, has induced us to do this, i.e. to perform this dialogue of Mānya, so that he, Mānya, should assist, as a poet assists the priest at a sacrifice.' Of course all this is and can only be guess-work.

We do not know the age of Mānya nor that of Agastya. We do not know whether they were contemporaries or not. But supposing that Mānya was present at the sacrifice, vīpra might be meant for Mānya; and in the last words, too, 'the singer has recited these prayers for you,' the singer (garitā) might again be Mānya, the powerful poet whose services the sacrificer had engaged, and whose famous dialogue between Indra and the Maruts was considered a safe means of winning their favour. It would be in keeping with all this, if in the last verse the sacrificer once more informed the Maruts that this hymn of praise was the work of the famous poet Māndārya, the son of Māna, and if he then concluded with the usual prayer for safety, food, and progeny.

No verse of this hymn occurs in the Sāma-veda; verse 3 = VS. XXXIII, 27; verse 4 = VS. XXXIII, 78; verse 6 = TB. II, 8, 3, 5; verse 8 = TB. II, 8, 3, 6; verse 9 = VS. XXXIII, 79.

Verse 1.

Note 1. As saṁānī occurs in the Veda as the feminine of saṁāna (cf. IV, 51, 9; X, 191, 3; 4), saṁānyā might, no doubt, be taken as an instrumental, belonging to subhā. We should then have to translate: 'With what equal splendour are the Maruts endowed?' Sāyana adopts the same explanation, while Wilson, who seems to have read saṁānyāḥ, translates 'of one dignity.' Professor Roth, s. v. myaksh, would seem to take saṁānyā as some kind of substantive, and he refers to another passage, I, 167, 4, sādhāraṇyā-iva marútaḥ mimikshuḥ, without, however, detailing his interpretation of these passages.

It cannot be said that Sāyana's explanation is objectionable, yet there is something awkward in qualifying by an adjective, however indefinite, what forms the subject of an interrogative sentence, and it would be possible to avoid this, by taking saṁānyā as an adverb. It is clearly used as an adverb in III, 54, 7; VIII, 83, 8.

Note 2. Mimikshuḥ is the perfect of myaksh, in the sense of to be firmly joined with something. It has therefore a more definite meaning than the Latin miscere and the Greek μίσγειν, which come from the same source, i. e.

from a root mik or mig, in Sanskrit also mis in mis-ra ; (see Curtius, Grundzüge, p. 300.) There may be indeed one or two passages in the Veda where myaksh seems to have the simple meaning of mixing, but it will be seen that they constitute a small minority compared with those where myaksh has the meaning of holding to, sticking to ; I mean X, 104, 2. mimikshúh yám ádraya^h indra túbhyam.

The Soma which the stones have mixed for thee.

This form cannot be derived from mimiksh, but is the 3rd pers. plur. perf. Parasm. of myaksh. It may, however, be translated, 'This Soma which the stones have grasped or squeezed for thee,' as may be seen from passages quoted hereafter, in which myaksh is construed with an accusative.

II, 3, 11. ghrítám mimikshe.

The butter has been mixed.

This form cannot be derived from mimiksh, but is the 3rd pers. sing. perf. Átm. of myaksh. If the meaning of mixing should be considered inadmissible, we might in this verse also translate, 'The butter has become fixed, solid, or coagulated.'

Leaving out of consideration for the present the forms which are derived from mimiksh, we find the following passages in which myaksh occurs. Its original meaning must have been to be mixed with, to be joined to, and in many passages that original sense is still to be recognised, only with the additional idea of being firmly joined, of sticking to, or, in an active sense, laying hold of, grasping firmly.

1. Without any case :

I, 169, 3. ámyak sã te indra risht^h asmé (Iti).

This thy spear, O Indra, sat firm for us.

This would mean that Indra held his weapon well, as a soldier ought to hold his spear. Ámyak is the 3rd pers. sing. of a second aor. Parasm., ámyaksham, ámyak(sh + t) ; (Sây. prâpnoti.) Cf. VIII, 61, 18.

2. With locative :

X, 44, 2. mimyáksha vágra^h nri-pate gabhátau.

In thy fist, O king, the thunderbolt rests firmly.

I, 167, 3. mimyaksha yéshu sú-dhitâ—rishth.

To whom clings the well-grasped spear.

VI, 50, 5. mimyaksha yéshu rodasî nú devî.

To whom the goddess Rodasî clings. (Sây. samgakkhate.)

VI, 11, 5. ámyakshi sádma sádane prithivyâh.

The seat was firmly set on the seat of the earth. (Sây. gamyate, parigrhyate.) It is the 3rd pers. sing. aor. pass.

VI, 29, 2. â yásmin háste náryâh mimikshúh â ráthe hiranyáye rathe-sthâh, â rasmáyah gâbhastyoh sthûráyoh â ádhvan árvâsah vrishanah yugânâh.

To whose hand men cling, in whose golden chariot the drivers stand firm, in whose strong fists the reins are well held, on whose path the harnessed stallions hold together. (Sây. âsikyante, âpûryante; or âsiñkanti, pôrayanti.)

X, 96, 3. indre ní rûpâ háritâ mimikshire.

Bright colours stuck or clung or settled on Indra. (Sây. nishiktâni babhûvu; miheh sanantât karmâni rûpam.)

3. With instrumental:

I, 165, 1. kâyâ subhâ marútaḥ sám mimikshuh.

To what splendour do the Maruts cling; or, what splendour clings to them?

V, 58, 5. svâyâ matyâ marútaḥ sám mimikshuh. (See also I, 165, 1.)

The Maruts cling to their own thought or will. (Sây. vrishyâ samyak siñkanti.)

I, 167, 4. yavyâ sâdhâraṇyâ-iva marútaḥ mimikshuh.

The Maruts cling to the young maid, as if she belonged to all. See I, 173, 12; VIII, 98, 8; or VI, 27, 6.

I, 87, 6. bhânú-bhiḥ sám mimikshire.

The Maruts were joined with splendour. (Sây. medhum ikkhanti.)

4. With accusative:

VIII, 61, 18. ní yâ vágram mimikshátuḥ.

Thy two arms which have firmly grasped the thunderbolt. (Sây. parigrhñitaḥ.)

Here I should also prefer to place VII, 20, 4, if we might read mimikshe or mimyaksha, for it is impossible to take mimikshan for anything but a participle of the desiderative of mih, which does not yield an appropriate meaning.

ní vágram índraḥ mīmikshan.

Grasping firmly the thunderbolt. (Sây. satrushu prâ-payan.)

VI, 29, 3. sriyê te pâdâ dūvaḥ ā mīmikshuḥ.

Thy servants embrace thy feet for their happiness. (Sây. āsiṅkanti, samarpayanti.)

Like other verbs which mean to join, myaksh, if accompanied by prepositions expressive of separation, means to separate. (Cf. vi-yukta, se-junctus.)

II, 28, 6. āpo (īti) sū myaksha varuṇa bhiyāsam māt.

Remove well from me, O Varuṇa, terror. (Sây. apagamaya.)

Quite distinct from this is the desiderative or inchoative verb mīmiksh, from mih, in the sense of to sprinkle, or to shower, chiefly used with reference to the gods who are asked to sprinkle the sacrifice with rain. Thus we read :

I, 142, 3. mādhvā yagñām mīmikshati.

(Narāsa) sprinkles the sacrifice with rain.

IX, 107, 6. mādhvā yagñām mīmiksha naḥ.

Sprinkle (O Soma) our sacrifice with rain.

I, 34, 3. tríḥ adyā yagñām mādhunā mīmikshatam.

O Asvins, sprinkle the sacrifice with rain thrice to-day!

I, 47, 4. mādhvā yagñām mīmikshatam.

O Asvins, sprinkle the sacrifice with rain!

5. Without mādhu :

I, 22, 13. mahī dyaúḥ prithivī ka naḥ imām yagñām mīmikshatām.

May the great heaven and earth sprinkle this our sacrifice.

6. With mādhu in the accusative :

VI, 70, 5. mādhu naḥ dyāvāprithivī (īti) mīmikshatām.

May heaven and earth shower down rain for us.

Very frequently the Asvins are asked to sprinkle the sacrifice with their whip. This whip seems originally, like the whip of the Maruts, to have been intended for the cracking noise of the storm, preceding the rain. Then as whips had possibly some similarity to the instruments used for sprinkling butter on the sacrificial viands, the Asvins are asked to sprinkle the sacrifice with their whip, i. e. to give rain :

I, 157, 4. mādhu-matyā naḥ kāsayaḥ mimikshatam.

O Asvins, sprinkle us with your rain-giving whip.

I, 22, 3. táyā yagnām mimikshatam.

O Asvins, sprinkle the sacrifice with it (your whip).

7. Lastly, we find such phrases as,

I, 48, 16. sám naḥ râyā—mimikshvá.

Sprinkle us with wealth, i. e. shower wealth down upon us. Here mih is really treated as a Hu-verb in the Ātmanepada, though others take it for mimikshasva.

As an adjective, mimikshú is applied to Indra (III, 50, 3), and mimikshá to Soma (VI, 34, 4).

Note 3. I do not see how étāsaḥ can here be taken in any sense but that suggested by the Pada, ā-itāsaḥ, come near. Professor Roth thinks it not impossible that it may be meant for étāḥ, the fallow deer, the usual team of the Maruts. These Etas are mentioned in verse 5, but there the Pada gives quite correctly étān, not ā-itān, and Sāyana explains it accordingly by gantūn.

Note 4. The idea that the Maruts proclaim their own strength occurred before, I, 87, 3. It is a perfectly natural conception, for the louder the voice of the wind, the greater its strength, and vice versa.

Verse 2.

Note 1. Mānas here, as elsewhere, is used in the sense of thought preceding speech, desire, or devotion not yet expressed in prayer. See Taitt. Samh. V, 1, 3, 3. yat purusho manasābhigakḥhati tad vākā vadati, what a man grasps in his mind, that he expresses by speech. Professor Roth suggests an emendation which is ingenious, but not necessary, viz. mahā nāmasā, with great adoration, an expression which occurs, if not in VI, 52, 17, at least in VII, 12, 1. We find, however, the phrase mahā mānasā in

VI, 40, 4. ā yāhi śāsvat usatā yayātha īndra mahā mānasā soma-péyam, úpa bráhmāni sṛinavaḥ imā naḥ átha te yagnāḥ tanvė váyaḥ dhāt.

Come hither, thou hast always come, Indra, to our libation through our yearning great desire. Mayest thou hear these our prayers, and may then the sacrifice put vigour in thy body.

It is curious to observe that throughout the Rig-veda the instrumental singular mahā is always used as an adjective belonging to some term or other for praise and prayer. Besides the passages mentioned, we find :

II, 24, 1. ayā vidhema nāvayā mahā girā.

Let us sacrifice with this new great song.

VI, 52, 17. su-uktēna mahā nāmasā ā vivāse.

I worship with a hymn with great adoration, or I worship with a great hymn in adoration. VIII, 46, 14. gāya girā mahā ví-ketasam. Celebrate the wise Indra with a great song. Otherwise we might translate, Thou hast always come with a great yearning desire.

Verse 3.

Note 1. We ought to scan kūṭāḥ tvām īndrā māhīnāḥ sām, because yāsi, being anudatta, could not begin a new pāda. It would be more natural to translate kūṭāḥ by why? for the Maruts evidently wish to express their surprise at Indra's going to do battle alone and without their assistance. I do not think, however, that in the Rig-veda, even in the latest hymns, kūṭāḥ has as yet a causal meaning, and I have therefore translated it in the same sense in which it occurs before in the poet's address to the Maruts.

Note 2. Sat-pati, lord of men, means lord of real men, of heroes, and should not be translated by good lord. Sat by itself is frequently used in the sense of heroes, of men physically rather than morally good :

II, 1, 3. tvām agne īndraḥ vṛishabhāḥ satām asi.

Thou, Agni, art Indra, the hero among heroes.

I, 173, 7. samāt-su tvā sūra satām urānām.

Thee, O hero, in battles the protector of (good and true) men.

Note 3. The meaning of sám prikkhase is very much the same as that of sám vadasva in I, 170, 5.

Note 4. Subhāná is evidently meant as a name for the Maruts, who thus speak of themselves in the third person, which is by no means unusual in the Rig-veda.

Mahidhara explains subhânaiḥ by sobhanair vaṭanaiḥ.

Verse 4.

Indra certainly addresses his old friends, the Maruts, very unceremoniously, but this, though at first startling, was evidently the intention of the poet. He wished to represent a squabble between Indra and the Maruts, such as they were familiar with in their own village life, and this was to be followed by a reconciliation. The boorish rudeness, selfishness, and boastfulness here ascribed to Indra may seem offensive to those who cannot divest themselves of the modern meaning of deities, but looked upon from the right point of view, it is really full of interest.

Note 1. Bráhmâni and matáyah are here mentioned separately in the same way as a distinction is made between bráhman, stóma, and ukthá, IV, 22, 1; VI, 23, 1; between bráhmâni and gírah, III, 51, 6; between bráhma, gírah, and stómah, VI, 38, 3; between bráhma, gírah, ukthá, and mánma, VI, 38, 4, &c.

Note 2. Sám, which I have here translated by sweet, is a difficult word to render. It is used as a substantive, as an adjective, and as an adverb; and in several instances it must remain doubtful whether it was meant for one or the other. The adverbial character is almost always, if not always, applicable, though in English there is no adverb of such general import as sám, and we must therefore render it differently, although we are able to perceive that in the mind of the poet it might still have been conceived as an adverb, in the sense of 'well.' I shall arrange the principal passages in which sám occurs according to the verbs with which it is construed.

1. With bhû:

VIII, 79, 7. bháva nah soma sám hridé.

Be thou, Soma, well (pleasant) to our heart. Cf. VIII, 82, 3.

VIII, 48, 4. sám nah bhava hridé á pítáh indo (íti).

Be thou well (sweet) to our heart, when drunk, O Soma !
Cf. X, 9, 4.

I, 90, 9. sám naḥ bhavatu aryamā.

May Aryaman be well (kind) to us !

VI, 74, 1. sám naḥ bhûtam dvi-páde sám kátuk-pade.

May Soma and Rudra be well (kind) to our men and cattle.

Here sám might be rendered as an adverb, or as an adjective, or even as a substantive, in the sense of health or blessing.

Cf. VII, 54, 1; IX, 69, 7. The expression dvipád and kátuk-pad is curiously like what occurs in the prayers of the Eugubian tables, Fisovie Sansie, ditu ocre Fisi, tote Jovine, ocrer Fisie, totar Jovinar dupursus, peturpursus fato fito (Umbrische Sprachdenkmäler, ed. Aufrecht, p. 198); and also in the edicts of Piyadasi, dupada-katupadesu pakhivâlikalesu, 'aux bipèdes, aux quadrupèdes, aux volatiles, aux animaux qui se meuvent dans les eaux.' See Burnouf, Lotus, p. 667.

II, 38, 11. sám yát stotri-bhyaḥ âpáye bhávâti.

What may be well (a pleasure) for the praisers, for the friend.

X, 37, 10. sám naḥ bhava kákshasâ.

Be kind to us with thy light !

2. With as :

VIII, 17, 6. sómaḥ sám astu te hridé.

May the Soma be well (agreeable) to thy heart !

I, 5, 7. sám te santu prá-ketase.

May the Somas be well (pleasing) to thee, the wise !

V, 11, 5. túbhyam manîshâ iyám astu sám hridé.

May this prayer be well (acceptable) to thy heart !

I, 114, 1. yáthâ sám ásat dvi-páde kátuk-pade.

That it may be well for our men and cattle. Cf. X, 165, 1 ; 3.

VII, 86, 8. sám naḥ kshéme sám ûm (íti) yóge naḥ astu.

May it be well with us in keeping and acquiring !

V, 7, 9. â yáḥ te—agne sám ásti dhāyase.

He who is lief to thee to support, i.e. he whom thou likest to support.

V, 74, 9. sám ûm (íti) sú vām—asmākam astu karkrit/ḥ.

Let there be happiness to you—glory to us !

3. With as or bhû understood :VI, 45, 22. sám yát gáve ná sákíne.

A song which is pleasant to the mighty Indra, as food to an ox.

VIII, 13, 11. sám ít hí te.

For it is well for thee.

X, 86, 15. mantháh te indra sám hridé.

The mixture is pleasant to thy heart, O Indra !

X, 97, 18. áram kāmāya, sám hridé.

Enough for love, pleasant to the heart.

VI, 34, 3. sám tát asmai.

That is pleasant to him.

VI, 21, 4. káh te yagnáh mánase sám várāya.

What sacrifice seems to thy mind pleasant to select ?

4. With kar :I, 43, 6. sám nah karati árvate.

May he do well to our horse, i.e. may he benefit our horses.

IV, 1, 3. tokāya tugé—sám kridhi.

Do good to our children and progeny, or bless us for the procreation of children.

VIII, 18, 8. sám nah karatah asvínā.

May the two Asvins do us good !

5. With vah :I, 157, 3. sám nah ā vakshat dvi-pāde kátuḥ-pade.

May he bring blessing to us for man and cattle.

VIII, 5, 20. téna nah—párve tokāya sám gáve, váhatam pīvarīh íshah.

Bring to us rich food, a blessing to cattle, to children, and to the ox.

6. With verbs, such as pû, vâ, and others, where it is clearly used as an adverb :IX, 11, 3. sáh nah pavasva sám gáve sám gánāya sám árvate, sám rāgan óshadhibhyah.

Do thou, king Soma, stream upon us, a blessing for the ox, a blessing for man, a blessing for the horse, a blessing for the plants. Cf. IX, 11, 7 ; 60, 4 ; 61, 15 ; 109, 5.

VII, 35, 4. sám nah ishiráh abhí vātu vātah.

May the brisk wind blow kindly upon us, or blow a blessing upon us!

VII, 35, 6. sám nah tváshṭā gnābhiḥ ihá sṛinotu.

May Tvashṭar with the goddesses hear us here well, i. e. auspiciously!

VII, 35, 8. sám nah sūryah—út etu.

May the sun rise auspiciously for us!

VIII, 18, 9. sám nah tapatu sūryah.

May the sun warm us well!

III, 13, 6. sám nah soka—ágne.

Shine well for us, O Agni!

Sám Yóh.

Sám also occurs in a phrase that has puzzled the interpreters of the Veda very much, viz. sám yóh. These are two words, and must both be taken as substantives, though originally they may have been adverbs. Their meaning seems to have been much the same, and in English they may safely be rendered by health and wealth, in the old acceptance of these words:

I, 93, 7. dhattam yágamánāya sám yóh.

Give, Agni and Soma, to the sacrificer health and wealth.

I, 106, 5. sám yóh yát te mánuh-hitam tát ímahe.

Bṛihaspati, we ask for health and wealth which thou gavest to Manu.

I, 114, 2. yát sám ka yóh ka mánuh á-yegé pitā tát asyāma táva rudra prá-nītishu.

Rudra, the health and wealth which Manu, the father, obtained, may we reach it under thy guidance.

II, 33, 13. yāni mánuh ávrinīta pitā nah tā sám ka yóh ka rudrāsya varmi.

The medicines which our father Manu chose, those I desire, the health and wealth of Rudra.

I, 189, 2. bháva tokāya tánayāya sám yóh.

Be to our offspring health and wealth!

IV, 12, 5. yákkha tokāya tánayāya sám yóh.

Give to our offspring health and wealth!

V, 69, 3. īte tokāya tánayāya sám yóh.

I ask for our offspring health and wealth.

VI, 50, 7. dhāta tokāya tānayāya sām yóh.

Give to our offspring health and wealth !

X, 182, 1. átha karat yágamānáya sām yóh.

May he then produce for the sacrificer health and wealth.

VII, 69, 5. téna nah sām yóh—ní arvinā vahatam.

On that chariot bring to us, Asvins, health and wealth.

III, 17, 3. átha bhava yágamānáya sām yóh.

Then, Agni, be health and wealth to the sacrificer.

III, 18, 4. bṛihát váyah saramānéshu dhehi, revát agne visvāmitreshu sām yóh.

Give, Agni, much food to those who praise thee, give to the Visvāmitras richly health and wealth.

X, 15, 4. átha nah sām yóh arapáh dadhāta.

And give us health and wealth without a flaw! Cf. X, 59, 8.

X, 37, 11. tát asmé sām yóh arapáh dadhātana.

And give to us health and wealth without a flaw!

V, 47, 7. tát astu mitra-varunā tát agne sām yóh asmá-bhyam idám astu sastám.

Let this, O Mitra-Varuna, let this, O Agni, be health and wealth to us ; may this be auspicious !

V, 53, 14. vṛishtvī sām yóh āpah usrí bhesagám syāma marutáh sahá.

Let us be together with you, O Maruts, after health, wealth, water, and medicine have been showered down in the morning.

VIII, 39, 4. sám ka yóh ka máyah dadhe.

He gave health, wealth, and happiness.

VIII, 71, 15. agním sām yóh ka dātave.

We ask Agni to give us health and wealth.

X, 9, 4. sám yóh abhí sravantu nah.

May the waters come to us, as health and wealth, or may they run towards us auspiciously.

Note 3. If we retain the reading of the MSS. súshmaḥ iyarti, we must take it as an independent phrase, and translate it by 'my strength rises.' For súshma, though in this and other places it is frequently explained as an adjective, meaning powerful, is, as far as I can see, always a substantive, and means breath, strength. There may be a few passages in which, as there occur several words for strength, it might be possible to translate súshma by strong. But even there it is better to keep to the general meaning of súshma, and translate it as a substantive.

Iyarti means to rise and to raise. It is particularly applied to prayers raised by the poet in honour of the gods, and the similes used in connection with this, show clearly what the action implied by iyarti really is. For instance,

I, 116, 1. stómân iyarmi abhriyâ-iva vâtaḥ.

I stir up hymns as the wind stirs the clouds.

X, 116, 9. su-vakasyām iyarmi sīndhau-iva prā īrayam nāvam arkaḥ.

I stir up sweet praise, as if I rowed a ship on the river with hymns.

In the sense of rising it occurs,

X, 140, 2. pāvakā-varṇāḥ sukrā-varṇāḥ ānūna-varṇāḥ út iyarshi bhānūnā.

Thou risest up with splendour, Agni, thou of bright, resplendent, undiminished majesty.

We might therefore safely translate in our verse 'my strength rises,' although it is true that such a phrase does not occur again, and that in other passages where iyarti and súshma occur together, the former governs the latter in the accusative. Cf. IV, 17, 12; X, 75, 3.

Mahādhara translates, 'my held-up thunderbolt moves on destroying everything,' but he admits another rendering in which adri would mean the stone used for pressing the Soma.

Verse 5.

Note 1. If, as we can hardly avoid, we ascribe this verse to the Maruts, we must recognise in it the usual offer of help to Indra on the part of the Maruts. The question then only is, who are the strong friends in whose company they appear? It would be well if one could render antamébhiḥ by horses, as Sāyana does, but there is no authority for it. Svá-kshatra is an adjective, meaning endowed with independent strength, synonymous with svá-tavas, I, 166, 2. It is applied to the mind of Indra, I, 54, 3; V, 35, 4; to the Maruts, V, 48, 1, but never to horses. As it stands, we can only suppose that a distinction is made between the Maruts and their followers, and that after calling together their followers, and adorning themselves for battle, they proceed to harness their chariots. Cf. I, 107, 2.

Note 2. Etán, in all MSS. which I consulted, has here the accent on the first syllable, and Professor Aufrecht ought not to have altered the word into etán. If the accent had not been preserved by the tradition of the schools, the later interpreters would certainly have taken etán for the demonstrative pronoun. As it is, in spite of accent and termination, Sâyana in I, 166, 10, seems to take étâh for eté. In other passages, however, Sâyana, too, has perceived the difference, and in I, 169, 6, he explains the word very fully as prishadvarnâ gantâro vâ asvâ vâ. In this passage the Etas are clearly the deer of the Maruts, the Prishatis:

I, 169, 6. ádha yát eshâm prîthu-budhnâsañ étâh.

In the next verse, however, éta seems applied to the Maruts themselves:

I, 169, 7. práti ghorānām étānām ayāsām marútām srinve â-yatām upabdhî.

The sound of the terrible, speckled, indefatigable Maruts is heard, as they approach; unless we translate:

The noise of the terrible deer of the indefatigable Maruts is heard, as they approach.

In I, 166, 10, ámseshu étâh, I adopt Professor Roth's conjecture, that étâh means the skins of the fallow deer, so that we should have to translate: On their shoulders are the deer-skins.

In the other passages where éta occurs it is used as a simile only, and therefore throws no light on the relation of the Etas to the Maruts. In both passages, however (V, 54, 5; X, 77, 2), the simile refers to the Maruts, though to their speed only, and not to their colour.

Note 3. Máhañ-bhiñ, which I have translated 'with all our might,' seems to be used almost as an adverb, mightily or quickly (makshu), although the original meaning, with our powers, through our might, is likewise applicable. The original meaning is quite perceptible in passages like

V, 62, 3. ádhárayatam prîthivīm utá dyāñ mîtra-rāgāñ varunâ máhañ-bhiñ.

Kings Mitra and Varuna, you have supported heaven and earth by your powers.

VII, 3, 7. tébhiḥ naḥ agne ámitaiḥ máhaḥ-bhiḥ satám pûrbhiḥ áyasibhiḥ ní páhi.

With those immeasurable powers, O Agni, protect us, with a hundred iron strongholds.

I, 90, 2. té—máhaḥ-bhiḥ, vratā rakshante visvāḥ.

They always protect the laws by their powers.

VII, 71, 1. tvám naḥ agne máhaḥ-bhiḥ páhi.

Protect us, Agni, with thy power.

In other passages, however, we see máhaḥ-bhiḥ used of the light or of the flames of Agni and of the dawn :

IV, 14, 1. devāḥ rókamānaḥ máhaḥ-bhiḥ.

Agni, the god, brilliant with his powers.

VI, 64, 2. devi rókamānā máhaḥ-bhiḥ.

O goddess, brilliant with thy powers.

The powers of the Maruts are referred to by the same name in the following passages :

V, 58, 5. prá-pra gāyante—máhaḥ-bhiḥ.

The Maruts are born with their powers.

VII, 58, 2. prá yé máhaḥ-bhiḥ ógasā utá sánti.

The Maruts who excel in power and strength. Cf. III, 4, 6.

Verse 6.

Note 1. Indra in this dialogue is evidently represented as claiming everything for himself alone. He affects contempt for the help proffered by the Maruts, and seems to deny that he was at any time beholden to their assistance. By asking, Where was that custom that I should be with you and you with me in battle? he implies that it was not always their custom, and that he can dispense with their succour now. He wants to be alone, as in his former battle with Ahi, and does not wish that they should join him (cf. I, 33, 4). Professor Roth takes sam-ádhatta in the sense of implicating, but it can hardly be said that the Maruts ever implicated Indra in his fight against Ahi. Certainly this is not in keeping with the general tenor of this dialogue where, on the contrary, Indra shuns the company of the Maruts. But while on this point I differ from Professor Roth, I think he has rightly interpreted the meaning of ánamam. Out of the four passages in which badhasnañ occurs, it is three times joined with nam, and every time has the sense of to bend away from, to escape from. See also Sonne, in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, vol. xii, p. 348.

Verse 7.

Note 1. See VII, 39, 6. sakshímáhi yúgyebhiñ nú devañ.

Note 2. The last words leave no doubt as to their meaning, for the phrase is one of frequent occurrence. The only difficulty is the vocative marutañ, where we should expect the nominative. It is quite possible, however, that the Maruts should here address themselves, though, no doubt, it would be easy to alter the accent. As to the phrase itself, see

VIII, 61, 4. táthá ít asat índra krátvá yáthá vásañ.

May it be so, O Indra, as thou mayest desire by thy mind.

VIII, 66, 4. vagríñ—ít karat índrañ krátvá yáthá vásat.

May Indra with the thunderbolt act as he may desire in his mind. Cf. VIII, 20, 17; 28, 4, &c.

Verse 8.

Note 1. Here again Indra claims everything for himself, denying that the Maruts in any way assisted him while performing his great deeds. These deeds are the killing of Vṛitra, who withholds the waters, i. e. the rain from the earth, and the consequent liberation of the waters, so that they flow down freely for the benefit of Manu, that is, of man.

When Indra says that he slew Vṛitra indriyēna, he evidently chooses that word with a purpose, and we must therefore translate it here, not only by might, but by Indra's peculiar might. Indriyá, as derived from índra, means originally Indra-hood, then power in general, just as verethraghna in Zend means victory in general, though originally it meant the slaying of Vṛitra.

On bádhñ, see Bollensen, Z. D. M. G. XXII, p. 594.

He takes bádhiṃ for a contraction of badhisham, in analogy with badhiś and badhīt. He refers to akramiṃ, X, 166, 5, and badhiṃ, X, 28, 7.

Verse 9.

